

Why Do Republicans in Congress Want to Abandon Our Responsibility to Help Every Child Succeed?

Republican leaders in Congress are pushing the so-called Student Success Act this week, which would starve our schools and our children of the resources and supports they need, does nothing to address the poor quality of standards and tests in our schools, and walks away from the expectation that all students be served well. This agenda is draining the joy from teaching and learning.

This bill represents a historic abandonment of our commitment to leveling the playing field for disadvantaged children.

The promise of a high-quality public education is a promise we make to every child—that every child matters and that we have a collective responsibility to help all children dream their dreams and achieve them.

The Student Success Act not only falls far short of this promise, the Republican agenda abandons this promise.

Tell Congress: We need to reclaim the promise of public education, not abandon it.
