Responded to [REDACTED] and spoke with [REDACTED]

and her son [REDACTED] (family only calls him [REDACTED] Ex girlfriends and family are aware of that nickname, but he only calls himself [REDACTED] to outsiders now. He was wearing a New Town 2025 Call of Duty Black Ops limited edition t-shirt. Their home phone is [REDACTED] His family is devoutly, overtly Christian and were outraged that anyone may have even used a curse word, much less uttered a threat.

[REDACTED] is a gamer kid, plays the on-line games Call of Duty Black Ops2 and Hitman. The email address [REDACTED] is his X-Box live account but claims he has not used it in six months, but the actual truth is he has not logged onto that email in six months, but he was logged on last night playing on that account. He played BlackOps last night in his gamer [REDACTED] with the X-Box Live gamertag [REDACTED] His has Instagram photos of himself on his Instagram account of [REDACTED] smoking a mj cigarette...not a bright kid. He uses the word, F*CK on Twitter a lot for a good quiet kid. [REDACTED] is his Twitter address, has a picture showing him accurately as a light complexioned heavy set kid.

When I explained why we were here and about the threats, his mother and sister nearly swooned and he was shaking pretty badly. When asked how anyone might have known how to access his account to do anything like this he quickly provided the name of an online ex-girlfriend [REDACTED] in [REDACTED] [REDACTED] and states that she had been corresponding with him up until October of 2012 wherein she continued to send increasingly strange mentally disturbed communications including a request for him to kill himself.

His statements regarding his gameplay hours and activities did not ring true. I brought my own online game expert with me who tore him up a little on cross exam as it were....further MY gamer indicated that if they traced the verbal communications back to his individual IP (Internet Provider) then there is no chance it was anyone other than this kid that did it. We've seen this before...its even got a slang term for it, "Nerd Rage" describes a kid in a repressed home environment that escapes into the fantasy of online gaming and gets overly wrapped up in his gaming and doesn't pay attention to how the casual threats uttered during gameplay may be perceived. No doubts about it, this kid Nerd Raged and said whatever NJ thinks he said....but he has no weapons, no vehicle, no job, and no money for transportation outside what his family provides and is of ZERO potential threat to NJ schools.

I brought 5 large members of the RIP team into their living room with me and [REDACTED] was shaking, sweating, and looking like a deer in headlights the whole time we had our interview. He will likely be more cautious in the future and not do this again.
