

REDACTION LOG

Location (Page #)	Applicable Exemptions	DESCRIPTION	OBJECTION
1	N/A	Nature, substance, and location of crime	N/A
2	S.C. Code Ann. § 30-4-40(a)(3)(A), (E)	The redacted information provides details about the manner in which the crime of committed.	The release of such information would unquestionably interfere with a prospective law enforcement proceeding and risk disclosure of techniques and procedures used by law enforcement in ongoing investigations and risk circumvention of the law. Moreover, information about how the crime occurred must remain confidential to aid police with interviewing potential witnesses about the facts of the crime as these details are critical to determine the veracity of potential witnesses. Further, the release of such information risks leaks from potential witnesses that could damage the investigation. Lastly, there is a high likelihood that this information would also be misconstrued by the general public and impede the investigation.
3	S.C. Code Ann. § 30-4-40(a)(3)(A), (C), (E)	The redacted information provides details about the vehicles found at the crime scene, as well as who found the victims.	The release of such information would unquestionably interfere with a prospective law enforcement proceeding, invade the personal privacy of individuals that were associated with the crime scene, and risk disclosure of techniques and procedures used by law enforcement in ongoing investigations and risk circumvention of the law. Moreover, information about how the crime occurred must remain confidential to aid police with interviewing potential witnesses about the facts of the crime as these details are critical to determine the veracity of potential witnesses. Further, the release of such information risks leaks from potential witnesses that could damage the investigation. Lastly, there is a high likelihood that this information would also be misconstrued by the general public and impede the investigation.

4	S.C. Code Ann. § 30-4-40(a)(3)(A)	The redacted information provides details about the firearm seized from the crime scene.	The release of such information would unquestionably interfere with a prospective law enforcement proceeding. Moreover, information about how the crime occurred must remain confidential to aid police with interviewing potential witnesses about the facts of the crime as these details are critical to determine the veracity of potential witnesses. Further, the release of such information risks leaks from potential witnesses that could damage the investigation. Lastly, there is a high likelihood that this information would also be misconstrued by the general public and impede the investigation.
5	S.C. Code Ann. § 30-4-40(a)(3)(A), (C), (E)	The redacted information provides details about the evidence seized from the crime scene, as well as which individuals were present at the incident location.	The release of such information would unquestionably interfere with a prospective law enforcement proceeding, invade the personal privacy of individuals that were associated with the crime scene, and risk disclosure of techniques and procedures used by law enforcement in ongoing investigations and risk circumvention of the law. Moreover, information about how the crime occurred must remain confidential to aid police with interviewing potential witnesses about the facts of the crime as these details are critical to determine the veracity of potential witnesses. Further, the release of such information risks leaks from potential witnesses that could damage the investigation. Lastly, there is a high likelihood that this information would also be misconstrued by the general public and impede the investigation.

6	S.C. Code Ann. § 30-4-40(a)(3)(A), (C), (E)	The redacted information provides details about the evidence seized from the crime scene, as well as which individuals were present at the incident location.	The release of such information would unquestionably interfere with a prospective law enforcement proceeding, invade the personal privacy of individuals that were associated with the crime scene, and risk disclosure of techniques and procedures used by law enforcement in ongoing investigations and risk circumvention of the law. Moreover, information about how the crime occurred must remain confidential to aid police with interviewing potential witnesses about the facts of the crime as these details are critical to determine the veracity of potential witnesses. Further, the release of such information risks leaks from potential witnesses that could damage the investigation. Lastly, there is a high likelihood that this information would also be misconstrued by the general public and impede the investigation.
7	S.C. Code Ann. § 30-4-40(a)(3)(A), (C), (E)	The redacted information provides details about the evidence seized from the crime scene, as well as which individuals were present at the incident location.	The release of such information would unquestionably interfere with a prospective law enforcement proceeding, invade the personal privacy of individuals that were associated with the crime scene, and risk disclosure of techniques and procedures used by law enforcement in ongoing investigations and risk circumvention of the law. Moreover, disclosing information about how the crime occurred must remain confidential to aid police with interviewing potential witnesses about the facts of the crime as these details are critical to determine the veracity of potential witnesses. Further, the release of such information risks leaks from potential witnesses that could damage the investigation. Lastly, there is a high likelihood that this information would also be misconstrued by the general public and impede the investigation.

8	S.C. Code Ann. § 30-4-40(a)(3)(A), (E)	The redacted information provides details about the location of a body at the crime scene.	The release of such information would unquestionably interfere with a prospective law enforcement proceeding and risk disclosure of techniques and procedures used by law enforcement in ongoing investigations and risk circumvention of the law. Moreover, information about how the crime occurred must remain confidential to aid police with interviewing potential witnesses about the facts of the crime as these details are critical to determine the veracity of potential witnesses. Further, the release of such information risks leaks from potential witnesses that could damage the investigation. Lastly, there is a high likelihood that this information would also be misconstrued by the general public and impede the investigation.
9	S.C. Code Ann. § 30-4-40(a)(3)(A), (C), (E)	The redacted information provides details about the canvas performed by law enforcement, which contains information about which homes had video cameras.	The release of such information would provided personal addresses, contact information for potential witnesses, and which homes potentially have video cameras. As such, the release of such information would unquestionably interfere with a prospective law enforcement proceeding, invade the personal privacy of individuals that are potential witnesses or contain information relevant to this investigation, and risk disclosure of techniques and procedures used by law enforcement in ongoing investigations. Moreover, information about how the crime occurred must remain confidential to aid police with interviewing potential witnesses about the facts of the crime as these details are critical to determine the veracity of potential witnesses. Further, the release of such information risks leaks from potential witnesses that could damage the investigation. Lastly, there is a high likelihood that this information would also be misconstrued by the general public and impede the investigation.

10	S.C. Code Ann. § 30-4-40(a)(3)(A), (C), (E)	The redacted information provides details about the canvas performed by law enforcement, which contains information about whether a home had a video camera.	The release of such information would provided personal addresses, contact information for potential witnesses, and which homes potentially have video cameras. As such, the release of such information would unquestionably interfere with a prospective law enforcement proceeding, invade the personal privacy of individuals that are potential witnesses or contain information relevant to this investigation, and risk disclosure of techniques and procedures used by law enforcement in ongoing investigations. Moreover, information about how the crime occurred must remain confidential to aid police with interviewing potential witnesses about the facts of the crime as these details are critical to determine the veracity of potential witnesses. Further, the release of such information risks leaks from potential witnesses that could damage the investigation. Lastly, there is a high likelihood that this information would also be misconstrued by the general public and impede the investigation.
----	---	--	---

11	S.C. Code Ann. § 30-4-40(a)(3)(A), (C), (E)	The redacted information provides details about the canvas performed by law enforcement, which contains information about which homes had video cameras.	The release of such information would provided personal addresses, contact information for potential witnesses, and which homes potentially have video cameras. As such, the release of such information would unquestionably interfere with a prospective law enforcement proceeding, invade the personal privacy of individuals that are potential witnesses or contain information relevant to this investigation, and risk disclosure of techniques and procedures used by law enforcement in ongoing investigations. Moreover, information about how the crime occurred must remain confidential to aid police with interviewing potential witnesses about the facts of the crime as these details are critical to determine the veracity of potential witnesses. Further, the release of such information risks leaks from potential witnesses that could damage the investigation. Lastly, there is a high likelihood that this information would also be misconstrued by the general public and impede the investigation.
12	S.C. Code Ann. § 30-4-40(a)(3)(A), (E)	The redacted information provides details about the location of a body from the crime scene.	The release of such information would unquestionably interfere with a prospective law enforcement proceeding and risk disclosure of techniques and procedures used by law enforcement in ongoing investigations and risk circumvention of the law. Moreover, disclosing information about how the crime occurred must remain confidential to aid police with interviewing potential witnesses about the facts of the crime as these details are critical to determine the veracity of potential witnesses. Further, the release of such information risks leaks from potential witnesses that could damage the investigation. Lastly, there is a high likelihood that this information would also be misconstrued by the general public and impede the investigation.

13	S.C. Code Ann. § 30-4-40(a)(3)(A), (C)	The redacted information provides details about steps taken by law enforcement to interview a potential witness/subject to this double homicide.	The release of such would provide information about a seemingly unrelated individual's contact information. As such, the release of such information would unquestionably interfere with a prospective law enforcement proceeding and invade the personal privacy of person(s). Further, the release of such information risks leaks from potential witnesses that could damage the investigation. Lastly, there is a high likelihood that this information would also be misconstrued by the general public and impede the investigation.
14	S.C. Code Ann. § 30-4-40(a)(3)(A), (C), (E)	The redacted information provides details about the vehicles found at the crime scene, the manner of injury to the victims, and the firearms seized.	The release of such information would unquestionably interfere with a prospective law enforcement proceeding, invade the personal privacy of individuals that were associated with the crime scene, and risk disclosure of techniques and procedures used by law enforcement in ongoing investigations and risk circumvention of the law. Moreover, information about how the crime occurred must remain confidential to aid police with interviewing potential witnesses about the facts of the crime as these details are critical to determine the veracity of potential witnesses. Further, the release of such information risks leaks from potential witnesses that could damage the investigation. Lastly, there is a high likelihood that this information would also be misconstrued by the general public and impede the investigation.

15	S.C. Code Ann. § 30-4-40(a)(3)(A), (C), (E)	The redacted information provides details about the vehicles found at the crime scene, the manner of injury to the victims, and the firearms seized.	The release of such information would unquestionably interfere with a prospective law enforcement proceeding, invade the personal privacy of individuals that were associated with the crime scene, and risk disclosure of techniques and procedures used by law enforcement in ongoing investigations and risk circumvention of the law. Moreover, information about how the crime occurred must remain confidential to aid police with interviewing potential witnesses about the facts of the crime as these details are critical to determine the veracity of potential witnesses. Further, the release of such information risks leaks from potential witnesses that could damage the investigation. Lastly, there is a high likelihood that this information would also be misconstrued by the general public and impede the investigation.
16	S.C. Code Ann. § 30-4-40(a)(3)(A), (C), (E)	The redacted information provides details about the canvas performed by law enforcement, which contains information about which homes had video cameras.	The release of such information would provided personal addresses, contact information for potential witnesses, and which homes potentially have video cameras. As such, the release of such information would unquestionably interfere with a prospective law enforcement proceeding, invade the personal privacy of individuals that are potential witnesses or contain information relevant to this investigation, and risk disclosure of techniques and procedures used by law enforcement in ongoing investigations. Moreover, information about how the crime occurred must remain confidential to aid police with interviewing potential witnesses about the facts of the crime as these details are critical to determine the veracity of potential witnesses. Further, the release of such information risks leaks from potential witnesses that could damage the investigation. Lastly, there is a high likelihood that this information would also be misconstrued by the general public and impede the investigation.

17	S.C. Code Ann. § 30-4-40(a)(3)(A), (C), (E)	The redacted information provides details about the canvas performed by law enforcement, which contains information about which homes had video cameras.	The release of such information would provided personal addresses, contact information for potential witnesses, and which homes potentially have video cameras. As such, the release of such information would unquestionably interfere with a prospective law enforcement proceeding, invade the personal privacy of individuals that are potential witnesses or contain information relevant to this investigation, and risk disclosure of techniques and procedures used by law enforcement in ongoing investigations. Moreover, information about how the crime occurred must remain confidential to aid police with interviewing potential witnesses about the facts of the crime as these details are critical to determine the veracity of potential witnesses. Further, the release of such information risks leaks from potential witnesses that could damage the investigation. Lastly, there is a high likelihood that this information would also be misconstrued by the general public and impede the investigation.
18	S.C. Code Ann. § 30-4-40(a)(3)(A), (E)	The redacted information provides details about the evidence seized from the crime scene.	The release of such information would unquestionably interfere with a prospective law enforcement proceeding and risk disclosure of techniques and procedures used by law enforcement in ongoing investigations and risk circumvention of the law. Moreover, information about how the crime occurred must remain confidential to aid police with interviewing potential witnesses about the facts of the crime as these details are critical to determine the veracity of potential witnesses. Further, the release of such information risks leaks from potential witnesses that could damage the investigation. Lastly, there is a high likelihood that this information would also be misconstrued by the general public and impede the investigation.
19	N/A	Information provides who taped off the crime scene.	N/A