To whom it may concern,

Morry Gash has been a contributing photographer for Isthmus since May of this year. In that time, we have used him on numerous occasions, and for a variety of situations. We are pleased to have a photographer of his skill and reliability on our staff.

Professional and prompt, Morry has been an asset to our operation. The quality of his work has been high, and both myself and editor Dean Robbins have come to rely on him a great deal. Indeed, we would be sad to see him go. But it is clear that Morry has the ambition and the ability to work on larger and more exciting assignments than we are able to offer him here. And it is clear that he has the capacity to grow in proportion to the challenges that are given him. I urge you to consider his application highly.

Sincerely,

Bill Lueders
