WHO WILL BE THE LAST PERSON INCARCERATED FOR CANNABIS IN THE UNITED STATES?

Jonathan Wall is currently in a federal supermax detention facility in Baltimore, facing up to life in prison for allegedly growing cannabis in California—a state where it is legal—that was sold in Maryland—a state where it is, well, we're not even sure:

That's because cannabis corporations are in Maryland and 26 other states making billions in revenue growing, manufacturing and distributing pot. Cannabis conglomerates wonderfully engaged in branding, licensing, product innovation, research and development. You can drive 30 minutes from where Jonathan is incarcerated right now and visit:

Curaleaf, headquartered in Massachusetts: market cap in excess of $8 billion, creating jobs in more than 23 states with Q2 2021 record revenue of more than $300 million.

Or, like former speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives, John Boehner, who spent his career fighting to maintain federal prohibition, sit on the board of New York-based Acreage Holdings, which has a pending $3.4 billion dollar deal with Canada-based Canopy; market cap in excess of $7.1 billion; presence on 5 continents; and maker of the L.A. Lakers' official CBD sports drink, Biosteel.

But then you—along with the likes of Jay Z, Seth Rogen, and Willie Nelson—would be in violation of U.S. federal law and subject to incarceration. 26-year-old Jonathan Wall faces life in prison while Beyonce says that she's starting a cannabis farm. This is not the way the law is supposed to work.

Cannabis is now legal in large sections of the country. And despite more than a half century of government propaganda, people didn't try to fly off buildings, go crazy with the reefer madness or stop going to work every day. President Biden recently gave a speech about how 20 years in Afghanistan was too long and that our continued involvement there was a mistake. Well, what about more than 50 years of proven failure, 50 years of gross economic waste, 50 years of caging our own citizens, 50 years of asset forfeiture abuse, 50 years of enforcement disparity and evisceration of the constitutional rights of people of color. In a country where you can buy an assault rifle and fifth of whiskey, federal prohibition of cannabis has never been about more than fear, bias, race, stigmatization and control.

It is time for our government to admit that it has made a mistake. Go to freejonathanwall.com to help stop this miscarriage of justice and to end federal prohibition of cannabis once and for all.
