Subject: Oppose HB1, the Combatting Violence, Disorder and Looting Law Enforcement Protection Act
Elected Representative,

I am a California resident contacting you today to urge you to OPPOSE HB1, the Combatting Violence, Disorder, and Looting Law Enforcement Protection Act. There are already laws in place regarding violence, disorder, and looting, which do not infringe on protesters' due process protections and extra protections for Law Enforcement Officers in the state of Florida under FL §112.532.

While the events that took place at the Capitol on January 6, 2021, are abhorrent and a direct attack against democracy, it is also evident due to the circumstances of 2020 that law enforcement is not always capable of discerning civil disobedience. A constitutionally protected act, from rioting and other illegal activity. This bill language was drafted before the Capitol siege and targeted civil rights protesters, many of whom were eventually proven innocent.

Just this summer in Jacksonville, over 70 peaceful civil rights protesters were unlawfully detained. Among these protesters were families, students, pastors, business owners, teachers, medics, and lawyers. All charges were dropped. Four protesters even sued the Jacksonville Sheriff's Office and won a $100,000 settlement due to their rights being deliberately violated. With this new bill, these innocent people would have had incredible difficulty maintaining their freedom, even in the court of law.

As a concerned citizen, I am asking you not to allow fear and chaos to influence a hasty decision that could jeopardize honest Americans' freedom. We have seen the blatant double standards regarding protesting and treatment amongst groups, and this bill was proposed before this tyrannic event and is only being pushed into legislation in haste and to further suppress our freedoms.
Please VOTE NO on HB1.

Sincerely,
Freddie Lambright, III

Subject: Oppose HB1, the Combatting Violence, Disorder and Looting Law Enforcement Protection Act

Elected Representative,

I am a Florida resident contacting you today to urge you to OPPOSE HB1, the Combatting Violence, Disorder, and Looting Law Enforcement Protection Act. There are already laws in place regarding violence, disorder, and looting, which do not infringe on protesters' due process protections and extra protections for Law Enforcement Officers in the state of Florida under FL §112.532.

While the events that took place at the Capitol on January 6, 2021, are abhorrent and a direct attack against democracy, it is also evident due to the circumstances of 2020 that law enforcement is not always capable of discerning civil disobedience. A constitutionally protected act, from rioting and other illegal activity. This bill language was drafted before the Capitol siege and targeted civil rights protesters, many of whom were eventually proven innocent.

Just this summer in Jacksonville, over 70 peaceful civil rights protesters were unlawfully detained. Among these protesters were families, students, pastors, business owners, teachers, medics, and lawyers. All charges were dropped. Four protesters even sued the Jacksonville Sheriff's Office and won a $100,000 settlement due to their rights being deliberately violated. With this new bill, these innocent people would have had incredible difficulty maintaining their freedom, even in the court of law.

As a concerned citizen, I am asking you not to allow fear and chaos to influence a hasty decision that could jeopardize honest Americans' freedom. We have seen the blatant double standards regarding protesting and treatment amongst groups, and this bill was proposed before this tyrannic event and is only being pushed into legislation in haste and to further suppress our freedoms.

Please VOTE NO on HB1.

Sincerely,
Gage Lacharite

Subject: Oppose HB1, the Combatting Violence, Disorder and Looting Law Enforcement Protection Act

Elected Representative,

I am contacting you today to urge you to OPPOSE HB1, the Combatting Violence, Disorder and Looting Law Enforcement Protection Act. There are already laws in place regarding violence, disorder and looting which do not infringe on the due process protections of protesters.

I was very concerned with the vote to push this bill through the Criminal Justice Subcommittee on 01/27/21, despite the overwhelming majority of commenters expressing opposition. It is as though our representatives are not representing the voice of their constituents, rather, attempting to fulfill their personal political agendas instead.

This bill will not stop assemblies, but it will fill more prisons; crowded prisons already at the mercy of covid-19, killing inmates and officers. Creating more felons is not the way to a better Florida.

In Florida, we had historic marches and businesses were not burned. In fact, many business owners supported the actions either financially, through goods and services, or by joining themselves, proud to make history. Protests brought communities across Florida together all summer, however, a bill like this will create an extra layer of fear and division.

It was shocking to see comments dismissed regarding the unclear 'mob intimidation' language, as well as the possibility that these restrictions would be used mainly to target communities of color protesting against police killings.

The response was that this is not the 'intent' of the bill, and that there are always some that can abuse any law; "bad apples." This is concerning to me as a citizen because our lawmakers should care if even one American's freedom is jeopardized. A law that can be manipulated to target innocent people is an unjust law, and that concern should not be brushed off. Giving bad apples more tools to exercise bad judgement is unnecessary.

The fact is, this bill language was drafted prior to the Capitol siege and targeted towards civil rights protesters, many of whom were proven innocent. We cannot ignore the hundreds of citizens, including the Tallahassee 19 and the over 70 protesters in Jacksonville, who were falsely targeted and arrested last summer. The police were wrong in their assessment, so it is very valid for people to not want more reasons for law enforcement to be 'on alert'.

As a concerned Floridian, I am asking you to not allow fear and chaos to influence a hasty decision which could jeopardize the freedom of honest Americans. Please VOTE NO on HB1/SB484.

Thank you
Alyse Santana

Subject: Oppose HB1, the Combatting Violence, Disorder and Looting Law Enforcement Protection Act

Elected Representative,

I am a Florida resident contacting you today to urge you to OPPOSE HB1, the Combatting Violence, Disorder, and Looting Law Enforcement Protection Act. There are already laws in place regarding violence, disorder, and looting, which do not infringe on protesters' due process protections and extra protections for Law Enforcement Officers in the state of Florida under FL §112.532.

While the events that took place at the Capitol on January 6, 2021, are abhorrent and a direct attack against democracy, it is also evident due to the circumstances of 2020 that law enforcement is not always capable of discerning civil disobedience. A constitutionally protected act, from rioting and other illegal activity. This bill language was drafted before the Capitol siege and targeted civil rights protesters, many of whom were eventually proven innocent.

Just this summer in Jacksonville, over 70 peaceful civil rights protesters were unlawfully detained. Among these protesters were families, students, pastors, business owners, teachers, medics, and lawyers. All charges were dropped. Four protesters even sued the Jacksonville Sheriff's Office and won a $100,000 settlement due to their rights being deliberately violated. With this new bill, these innocent people would have had incredible difficulty maintaining their freedom, even in the court of law.

As a concerned citizen, I am asking you not to allow fear and chaos to influence a hasty decision that could jeopardize honest Americans' freedom. We have seen the blatant double standards regarding protesting and treatment amongst groups, and this bill was proposed before this tyrannic event and is only being pushed into legislation in haste and to further suppress our freedoms.

Please VOTE NO on HB1.

Sincerely,
Lena Antoine

Subject: Oppose HB1-Please Protect Floridian's and My First Amendment Rights

Natalie Brown,

I am writing to you to ask you to please OPPOSE HB1 at the House Justice Appropriations meeting when it is scheduled for a hearing. I am outraged that this legislation even got assigned to a public hearing much less that it has been fast-tracked through the House on party lines. Florida currently faces the worst economic and public health crisis in history and instead of working to find solutions HB1 criminalizes free speech, peaceful assembly and dissent through unconstitutional language that is targeted at silencing Black voices demanding basic human rights, equality, and fair treatment by law enforcement.

Instead of addressing the horrendous housing crisis, the broken unemployment system, the failing healthcare system, the disorganized and chaotic education system, AND the rising number of deaths, poverty, job loss and sickness in Florida HB1 repackages legislation put forward by Governor DeSantis as a "response to the violent insurrectionist mobs" that attempted a coup on the nation's Capitol. This language is a smokescreen for the true intent of the bill which is to circumvent the mess that Florida has as a consequence of the pandemic and lack of support for Florida's poverty impacted and oppressed. I am not fooled by this. This is the same legislation it was back in September with the same purpose - to limit the basic civil rights of BLM protestors that is guaranteed to all people under the US Constitution.

I believe that HB1 is being used to distract media and organizers from focusing on the real problem: lack of support for those in need across the state. How dare the Governor and the Florida Legislature waste taxpayer time and money on proposing solutions to a made up problem. Section 870 of the Florida Statute already criminalizes riots, unlawful assemblies, and looting but this legislation would actually make it legal for motorists who strike protestors with their vehicle, even if the incident results in someone's death. It limits people's ability to apply to Florida's already broken unemployment system if they have been convicted under the proposed legislation and allows victims of violent crimes to recover civil damages from a local government that is deems responsible for grossly negligent "policing" during a "riot". Meanwhile, the Florida Legislature is fast-tracking HB7/SB72 to create COVID19 liability immunity for the real victims of negligence by businesses, government agencies, schools, and religious organizations who have caused the spread of COVID19.

The Executive Director of the ACLU of Florida, Micah Kubic, stated that "This (bill) is not an attempt to make our communities safer. This proposed legislation by DeSantis is nothing more than a campaign political stunt. Now, it is being disguised as a response to the failed violent coup at the US Capitol. And, it is just as unconstitutional."

A statewide survey of Florida voters put out after the attack by Donald Trump's supporters on the US Capitol suggested a lack of support for HB1 and Governor DeSantis' push to amp up criminal penalties for "disorderly" protests. Ninety-percent of those asked stated their support for "protecting our constitutional right to free assembly and free speech by legally protesting without fear of criminal charges". Seventy-one percent of Democrats and 74% of Republicans deemed the issue a top priority. Eighty percent of respondents said they were more likely to support a legislator who voted to protect that priority, and 56% were "much more likely". On the other hand, 83% of respondents thought that it was important to strengthen unemployment protections for people who lost their jobs because of COVID-19, 63% said that this was "very important". (1)

Finally, this legislation also creates a preemptive attack on local municipalities that might want to "defund" the police and put their money towards more humanitarian initiatives to provide real solutions to small business and economic crises caused by the pandemic. Instead of restricting local government's ability to find solutions we need legislation that answers the call of the people in the streets. People only protest when they are being abused, oppressed, marginalized or violated. It's time the House Justice Appropriations Subcommittee address the calls of Florida voters and people who cared enough to peacefully assemble. We need to face the issues head on and answer to the humanity and dignity of working class, black, brown, and immigrant families in Florida who are suffering with workable policies that help the state grow and prosper.

If this legislation passes I will be letting people know that they should not travel in Florida, they should not move to Florida, they should not visit Florida, because our government does not support them and keep them safe. Public health and the economy should be your number one priority. Please OPPOSE HB1 and support legislation that provides real solutions to the real problems Floridians face today.

Subject: Oppose HB1-Please Protect Floridian's and My First Amendment Rights

Kimberly Simon,

I am writing to you to ask you to please OPPOSE HB1 at the House Justice Appropriations meeting when it is scheduled for a hearing. I am outraged that this legislation even got assigned to a public hearing much less that it has been fast-tracked through the House on party lines. Florida currently faces the worst economic and public health crisis in history and instead of working to find solutions HB1 criminalizes free speech, peaceful assembly and dissent through unconstitutional language that is targeted at silencing Black voices demanding basic human rights, equality, and fair treatment by law enforcement.

Instead of addressing the horrendous housing crisis, the broken unemployment system, the failing healthcare system, the disorganized and chaotic education system, AND the rising number of deaths, poverty, job loss and sickness in Florida HB1 repackages legislation put forward by Governor DeSantis as a "response to the violent insurrectionist mobs" that attempted a coup on the nation's Capitol. This language is a smokescreen for the true intent of the bill which is to circumvent the mess that Florida has as a consequence of the pandemic and lack of support for Florida's poverty impacted and oppressed. I am not fooled by this. This is the same legislation it was back in September with the same purpose - to limit the basic civil rights of BLM protestors that is guaranteed to all people under the US Constitution.

I believe that HB1 is being used to distract media and organizers from focusing on the real problem: lack of support for those in need across the state. How dare the Governor and the Florida Legislature waste taxpayer time and money on proposing solutions to a made up problem. Section 870 of the Florida Statute already criminalizes riots, unlawful assemblies, and looting but this legislation would actually make it legal for motorists who strike protestors with their vehicle, even if the incident results in someone's death. It limits people's ability to apply to Florida's already broken unemployment system if they have been convicted under the proposed legislation and allows victims of violent crimes to recover civil damages from a local government that is deemed responsible for grossly negligent "policing" during a "riot". Meanwhile, the Florida Legislature is fast-tracking HB7/SB72 to create COVID19 liability immunity for the real victims of negligence by businesses, government agencies, schools, and religious organizations who have caused the spread of COVID19.

The Executive Director of the ACLU of Florida, Micah Kubic, stated that "This (bill) is not an attempt to make our communities safer. This proposed legislation by DeSantis is nothing more than a campaign political stunt. Now, it is being disguised as a response to the failed violent coup at the US Capitol. And, it is just as unconstitutional."

A statewide survey of Florida voters put out after the attack by Donald Trump's supporters on the US Capitol suggested a lack of support for HB1 and Governor DeSantis' push to amp up criminal penalties for "disorderly" protests. Ninety-percent of those asked stated their support for "protecting our constitutional right to free assembly and free speech by legally protesting without fear of criminal charges". Seventy-one percent of Democrats and 74% of Republicans deemed the issue a top priority. Eighty percent of respondents said they were more likely to support a legislator who voted to protect that priority, and 56% were "much more likely". On the other hand, 83% of respondents thought that it was important to strengthen unemployment protections for people who lost their jobs because of COVID-19, 63% said that this was "very important". (1)

Finally, this legislation also creates a preemptive attack on local municipalities that might want to "defund" the police and put their money towards more humanitarian initiatives to provide real solutions to small business and economic crises caused by the pandemic. Instead of restricting local government's ability to find solutions we need legislation that answers the call of the people in the streets. People only protest when they are being abused, oppressed, marginalized or violated. It's time the House Justice Appropriations Subcommittee address the calls of Florida voters and people who cared enough to peacefully assemble. We need to face the issues head on and answer to the humanity and dignity of working class, black, brown, and immigrant families in Florida who are suffering with workable policies that help the state grow and prosper.

If this legislation passes I will be letting people know that they should not travel in Florida, they should not move to Florida, they should not visit Florida, because our government does not support them and keep them safe. Public health and the economy should be your number one priority. Please OPPOSE HB1 and support legislation that provides real solutions to the real problems Floridians face today.

RE: Florida Automobile Minimum Insurance Coverage and Unlicensed Drivers

Dear Senator Boyd,

In late 2015 after 15 years of residing on the Florida west coast my husband and I moved to Tennessee where we found most everything less expensive except automobile insurance, though not by much.

In 2019 we returned to Florida and were SHOCKED at the increase in rates during the years of our absence. In Tennessee we had two newer vehicles, fully covered. Our current coverage per vehicle is essentially the same premium cost as it was to cover two vehicles in Tennessee! In other words Double the cost.

I asked my insurer, USAA, why automobile insurance has increased so much and I was given two reasons. First is the number of uninsured motorists and second underinsured motorists both involved in accidents. I see that minimum coverage is currently only $10,000 personal injury protection and $10,000 property damage liability; that is absurdly low. I believe these amounts have not been increased in at least 20 years when we first moved to Florida.

It is not equitable that responsibly insured drivers and their carriers overpay for those who abuse the privilege of driving on public roadways. Drivers who cannot or will not pay the cost of adequately insuring themselves and their vehicles have no right to this privilege and certainly not those who drive unlicensed.

I would respectfully request that you work with the governor, Florida House, law enforcement and insurance industry to substantially increase coverage limits to amounts more in line with today's costs and more aggressively deny nonconforming drivers the right to drive amongst us.

Thank you for your kind consideration of this matter,

Best regards,

Joanne Riddle

Comment or Question:
Dear Senator Burgess,

I am a Florida college student who resides in Hillsborough County and am writing to express my strong opposition to the "Combatting Violence, Disorder and Looting and Law Enforcement Protection Act" proposed by Governor Ron DeSantis. This proposed legislation seeks to invalidate and villainize protestors who fight for justice while using the deceitful veil of imposing "law and order" to "protect" civilians and the community. DeSantis refers to protests as "mobs" however, I have personally heard numerous accounts of peaceful protesters being attacked and arrested by the police. I fully agree with Micah Kubic, executive director of the ACLU of Florida when he said DeSantis wants to "silence, criminalize, and penalize Floridians who want to see justice for Black lives lost to racialized violence and brutality at the hands of law enforcement." In my opinion, it is abhorrent that DeSantis wishes to pardon those who inflict injury or death on protestors and restrict state grants and aid to local governments who reduce police funding. It would be of great benefit to the police and to communities if professionals and community members assisted with issues such as mental health and homelessness. Our state has more serious concerns than criminalizing protests and keeping the already inflated police budget intact. I appreciate your time and consideration.

Comment or Question:
Senator Burgess,

I wanted to reach out and thank you for submitting the Combating Public Disorder bill. As a Floridian, I am very anxious and nervous about the future of our country given the current trend to suppress the Internet-based voice of any who does not align with "independent fact checkers". This situation is only made worse by a lack of even making the actions of people such as PCS Principal Counsel Michael Beller who was recorded suggesting conservative parents should have their children taken away for reeducation, or US Representative Ocasio-Cortez suggesting the southern states need to be "liberated" from conservatives. These suggestions are beyond political aspects and are treading dangerously close to human rights in some cases, and are direct human rights violations in others.

Thank you again for your proposed legislation and for protecting the free speech of all Floridians, regardless of their point of view.

Respectfully,
Stephen Hohman

Comment or Question:

Danny,

This idea that your Anti-Mob legislation bill is about public safety is disingenuous to the public. It gives police and antifa type citizens the power to attack people that are peacefully protesting. Stop saying that this is only about rioters. This bill does not help to stop racism in this country. Please move away from trying to pass this law or you should fear never getting elected to public office again.

Comment or Question:

Since July 1, 2018, an incalculable number of lives have probably been saved because on that day, Georgia State Representative John Carson's (R-Marietta) new hands-free driving law, House Bill 673, the Hands-Free Georgia Act, went into effect.

This new hands-free driving law prohibits drivers from holding or supporting a wireless telecommunication device or a stand-alone electronic device while operating a vehicle. Additionally, the law maintains the ban on texting, emailing and internet browsing while driving, but also prohibits watching or recording videos while driving. GPS navigation and voice-to-text features will still be permitted. Additionally, the law does not contain a 90-day grace period for enforcement.

As a Floridian since 1987, I have been increasingly horrified at the inability of drivers on our Florida roadways to respect and follow our current distracted driving law. Although our current law was a huge step in the right direction, it is far from what is needed in our State to force anyone behind the wheel in the State of Florida to take the law seriously. We must move forward and take the next steps to strengthen our existing distracted driving laws and make sure anyone breaking this law experiences harsh financial consequences for doing so. We must take a stronger stand on this issue and make sure drivers know this behavior will not be tolerated.

Florida is the 2nd worst state in the nation (Louisiana is the 1st) regarding distracted driving accidents; every year more than 3,500 Florida drivers will be seriously injured due to a distracted driver, or nearly 10 people a day and another 200 or more will lose their lives due to distracted drivers in Florida. In one survey, more than 90% of drivers admitted to using their smartphone in some capacity while driving.

This irresponsible behavior, regardless of the driver's sex, race, citizenship or status, needs to be addressed now.. not later. Each and every day we continue to allow this behavior to continue .. more lives are lost...families devastated.

Will you consider courageously stepping forward to spearhead a campaign within the legislature to strengthen our current law to something similar to Georgia's law? Floridians deserve to know driving in the State of Florida while holding a cell phone will not be tolerated .. period.

Thank you.

Comment or Question:
Dear Sen. Burgess,

I am formally inviting you to be a guest speaker on a panel for the Broward County Bar Association's annual Black History Month event. The event is a collaboration with various voluntary bar organizations such as the TJ Reddick Bar Association, Caribbean Bar Association, Haitian Lawyers Association, and the Gwen S. Cherry Black Women Lawyers Association. It will be on February 24, 2021 at 12:00pm via Zoom.

We are composing a panel of diverse stakeholders to explore the after-effects of the worldwide Summer 2020 protests, from the community impact, to resulting legislation/policy changes, and ways to effect change beyond the protest. We are particularly interested in hearing more about SB 484 from one of its co-sponsors.

To that end, we would be honored if you were a panelist for this event. Please let me know if you would be interested in participating and feel free to call or text me with any questions.

Best,

I wish to know how you voted or plan to vote on bill 370 Gun Control. This bill is a direct violation of our 2nd Amendment rights as American Citizens. When the government takes away our right to defend ourselves and our families, then that is not the American way, and only the criminals will have guns while we are left defenseless.

If this bill has not yet passed, then I ask that you vote against it. If it has already passed then I need to know now to begin a protest and get this unconstitutional bill repealed.

Please respond to my email.

Comment or Question:
2021 SB 484

There are already numerous laws regarding much of what has been entered into 2021 SB 484 and others; I see no reason to add redundant laws except to conceal an agenda to further restrict freedoms of Florida citizens and municipalities.

"Authorizes residents of municipality to file an appeal to Administration Commission if municipality makes reduction to budget of municipal law enforcement agency." Especially in time of extreme loss of funding - such as during a pandemic- municipalities should have the right and RESPONSIBILITY to adjust the budget regarding law enforcement funding. Social services need to be added in order that someone clinically trained can be present to deal with those having a psychotic break, NOT participating in a criminal act. How many have been shot due to a psychological break? It's unknown, due to lack of transparency. And how many in law enforcement are specially trained to de-escalate situations? Military- type training is what is given to law enforcement for the past few decades - minimal to no training in de-escalation or care of someone experiencing an acute psychotic episode. Look at the stats IF you can find them. Why are law enforcement not held to the same accountability standards as citizens they are supposed to protect? Why are they protected from providing full disclosure?

"Revises minimum term of imprisonment for battery on law enforcement officer in furtherance of riot" I see nothing about revision of laws regarding law enforcement using military-like tactics against those peacefully protesting - or is that going to be called "rioting?"

Specifically, "prohibits specified assemblies from engaging in disorderly & violent conduct; prohibits inciting or encouraging riot" describes EXACTLY what happened in Washington DC Jan 6th, by not only the President of the United States, but many leaders of the Republican party, by continuously and loudly making the false claims (struck down in court by many of the judges Trump put in place) that the election was stolen from Trump. If it was stolen from him, WHY, on the SAME BALLOTS were so many other republicans elected/re-elected?

Why are there plans to name a highway (Hwy 27, which I drive every day) after an insurrectionist? Why is he not accountable to the same laws as others?

I want clear, concise answers, please, not political crap.

Constituent,
Colleen Swisher RN

Comment or Question:
Dear Senator Rick Scott,

As a former Republican (now an Independent), I'm writing to you today to express my great disappointment with a great deal of the GOP, in the way in which it has misrepresented my needs, that of my family, and the will of the people of Florida (particularly House District 20). I have been greatly disappointed to hear and read the words that have come out of the mouths of Republicans, from our local leaders, all the way up to that of former President Trump's. So many issues that have plagued our state and nation for the 4 years have been sad, frustrating, downright wrong to witness!!

My husband and I simply don't believe that the GOP represents our values, needs, or true character. We are rather conservative, but we also believe in the effects of climate change and fossil fuels in our world, we support strong borders, but certainly not in the way that Trump went about it. I am a 1st generation American, eldest child of Peruvian naturalized citizens of this great nation. There must be a dialogue to take the needs, aspirations, and situations of dreamers and others that seek to find a better life here in America, whilst giving children born to American citizens an equal opportunity. You MUST support dialogue about police brutality on black, indigenous, and other people of color (BIPOC) and seek equality AND equity for all peoples that live in our great nation! We all deserve to live in peace, seeking and speaking TRUTH - regardless of who it might oppose or how it may affect you personally. We are pro-life, from conception to death, but understand that there are also circumstances that warrant conversation and understanding and that there is NO easy answer to these debates. There is so much more I'd like to communicate to you at this time, but I won't take any more of your valuable time!

Finally, my reason for writing to you today is regarding the recent events surrounding Rep. Marjorie Taylor Greene. I have seen and heard EXACTLY how Ms. Greene has behaved and how she has spoken in the last 1+ year(s), the kinds of things she communicated to her potential constituents, and how she CONTINUES to express herself - with no true remorse or reflection! She won the vote to represent the people of her district in Georgia based on lies, conspiracy theories, and inciteful, hateful attacks. She is, in part, responsible for the actions of rioters and insurrectionists that stormed the Capitol building on 1/6/21! This kind of behavior and SHE have NO place within the walls of our democratic institutions. I am GREATLY disappointed that you did not vote for her removal from her committee assignments!!

I pray that you and the other representatives for my district and state, gain some perspective, reflect upon your own moral conscience, and begin to speak out and properly ACT OUT, so as to "walk the talk", not just "talk the talk"!! I am tired of watching Florida be an embarrassment to America and I hope and pray to see us rise up to be appropriately acknowledged and represented!

We are raising 2 God-fearing, level-minding, discerning, open-minded, and respectful young teenage girls that KNOW and LOVE the Gospel and Jesus' message to all - to love and serve HIM and ALL of his people, with words, actions, as the TRUE way of life!! They are watching and learning to advocate, research, learn, speak the truth, and effect change. They are our only hope at this point!!

Respectfully yours!

61 read:

62 163.08 Supplemental authority for improvements to real
63 property.-

64 (1) (a) In chapter 2008-227, Laws of Florida, the 65 Legislature amended the energy goal of the state comprehensive 66 plan to provide, in part, that the state shall reduce its energy
67 requirements through enhanced conservation and efficiency
68 measures in all end-use sectors and reduce atmospheric carbon
69 dioxide by promoting an increased use of renewable energy
70 resources. That act also declared it the public policy of the 71 state to play a leading role in developing and instituting
72 energy management programs that promote energy conservation, 73 energy security, and the reduction of greenhouse gases. In 74 addition to establishing policies to promote the use of 75 renewable energy, the Legislature provided for a schedule of 76 increases in energy performance of buildings subject to the 77 Florida Energy Efficiency Code for Building Construction. In 78 chapter 2008-191, Laws of Florida, the Legislature adopted new 79 energy conservation and greenhouse gas reduction comprehensive 80 planning requirements for local governments. In the 2008 general
81 election, the voters of this state approved a constitutional 82 amendment authorizing the Legislature, by general law, to

91 property resulting from fossil fuel energy production. Improved
92 property that has been retrofitted with energy-related 93 qualifying improvements receives the special benefit of 94 alleviating the property's burden from energy consumption. All

102 the installation and operation of qualifying improvements not 103 only benefit the affected properties for which the improvements
104 are made, but also assist in fulfilling the goals of the state's 124 finance such improvements with local government assistance.

125 (c) The Legislature determines that the actions authorized
126 under this section, including, but not limited to, the financing

CA staff are familiar with the issue. Senator Hooper filed a bill last year that unfortunately was never heard so we don't have access to a staff analysis.

Some of the articles about PACE loans are attached.

St. Lucie county passed local consumer protections, and I believe Broward did as well. Other counties have eliminated the program.

Some notes on the program:

- Energy improvements can be financed without a large up-front cash payment. Projects must be permanent improvements, for example new roofs, air-conditioning units, impact windows, and solar panels.
- Energy and insurance savings could be greater than the PACE assessment over time (a home energy survey or audit can help to project this).
- Improvements typical of PACE can potentially increase the value of the property.
- Eligibility determination includes evaluation of a property owner's payment history related to mortgage debt and property taxes for the preceding three years, confirmation that there are no involuntary liens and no notices of default within the preceding three years.
- PACE spreads repayment over many years. Interest rates and fees for the project are set by the PACE provider at the time that Financing Document/Agreements are finalized with the property owner. Rates vary and typically last for 15-20 years.
- PACE repayment, occurs through its placement on the tax roll as a non-ad valorem special assessment tied to the property rather than the homeowner.
- Failure to pay the PACE assessment is treated the same as nonpayment of taxes, which can trigger foreclosure.
- A PACE assessment is the priority lien on a property and therefore has a higher priority than most other liens on a property, including any mortgage.
- At a sale, the seller's lender or buyer's lender (i.e., mortgage company) of a home with an existing PACE may require pay off of the remaining outstanding balance of the assessment before the property can be refinanced or sold. Importantly, Freddie Mac, Fannie Mae, and FHA, require this).

Florida energy efficiency loan reform not a priority yet for lawmakers

A few months after Florida legislators said they would like to see changes in a state-authorized energy efficiency loan program, no bills have been filed. And with a number of high-profile issues to tackle in the 2021 session, efforts for reform may be challenging.

Property Assessed Clean Energy programs hold themselves out to homes and businesses as a way to finance costly energy efficiency upgrades, such as new air conditioners or weather-proof windows.

But a Tampa Bay Times investigation published in September found that the terms of the financing are often unclear to customers, and many find themselves with spiking property taxes that are difficult to afford. Some are in danger of losing their homes. The program has little state oversight.

RELATED: Read the full investigation: An energy efficiency finance program is trapping Florida homeowners in debt

The largest provider of these “PACE” loans, Ygrene Energy Fund, is the subject of a consumer protection investigation by the Florida Attorney General’s Office. As of mid-December, the investigation is ongoing, spokeswoman Kylie Mason said.

Just a few days before Christmas, there were no bills proposed relating to PACE programs. Rep. Ed Hooper, R-Clearwater, said that if one is introduced, it will be competing with significant issues such as the state budget and pandemic measures.

“(There) could be a historic low number of bills passing,” he said.

Following the Times’ investigation, several Florida legislators said the program needs reform, largely around protections for consumers.

RELATED: Florida legislators say an energy efficiency loan program needs reform

Two bills last year would have added a number of consumer protections, such as requiring that PACE loan providers check a customer’s ability to repay the loan before giving it to them, but neither was voted on.

“My hope is that some legislator takes it on and says, ‘We’re going to fix the PACE program,’” said Sen. Jeff Brandes, R-St. Petersburg.

Brandes, who sits on the Florida Senate’s banking and insurance committee, previously told the Times he would like to see reform around a technical aspect of the program — who is paid first in a foreclosure. Typically, banks are first to collect funds from a foreclosure to pay off any remaining mortgage balance on the home. But Florida law allows PACE loan providers to move to the front of the line for those funds, leaving less for banks. This placement helps guarantee some return on investment for PACE providers.

Just before the election, PACE provider Ygrene gave $112,000 in Florida political donations to Republican candidates and committees, including a $50,000 check to Gov. Ron DeSantis’ political committee.

One Tampa Bay county — Pasco — still allows the program. Hernando County stopped its program in May. Hillsborough County commissioners at a December meeting said they would allow the program to expire this month, expressing concerns over what they said was a lack of consumer protections.

Pinellas County has never allowed the program for its residents.

RELATED: Hillsborough to let controversial PACE program expire as planned

Hooper said that while other large issues may take priority for legislators, how local governments interact with PACE programs may have an effect.

“If more local governments would take that same action, I think there would be more interaction with PACE loan providers to find a common ground and a consumer-friendly solution,” he said.

AN ENERGY EFFICIENCY FINANCE PROGRAM IS TRAPPING FLORIDA HOMEOWNERS IN DEBT.

Kathryn Meas was in a bind.

The air conditioner in her 672-square-foot home died in mid-spring, and she couldn't afford a new one. Poor credit and a fixed income put a traditional loan out of reach.

Her air conditioning company proposed a solution, a new program that helped finance energy-saving home improvements. No money down. No monthly payments. The loan was all but assured. The first payment wasn't due until the end of the year, the air conditioning salesman said.

Kathryn Meas, 61, sits in her nearly empty home. [ OCTAVIO JONES | Times ]

Meas, 61, agreed to the deal by signing an electronic tablet. She wasn't given any paperwork, and she didn't know the loan amount or the interest rate. She didn't understand at the time that her annual property taxes would spike from about $300 to $1,200.

The financial fallout eventually forced her to sell the home.

"I hate selling it," she said. "I love it here."

By Steel Bite Pro

In the last three years, more than 4,000 Tampa Bay homeowners financed projects through Property Assessed Clean Energy programs. Known as PACE, the initiatives help homeowners afford energy-efficient upgrades, such as new air conditioners and rooftop solar panels.

But the private companies that administer the programs have saddled low-income residents with risky loans tied to their property tax bills, a Tampa Bay Times investigation found.

The Times created a database of many of the state's PACE loans, analyzed thousands of official records and spoke with more than three dozen local homeowners, all of who expressed misgivings about the program.

Many homeowners didn't know their property taxes would skyrocket. Salespeople working for the contractors who perform the work emphasized the idea of no immediate payments — and downplayed the tax hit, homeowners said. One Brandon man's annual tax bill jumped from $900 to $6,250.

Some PACE recipients risk losing their homes because they can't pay the hefty loans and thousands of dollars in interest. Several properties in the Tampa Bay area are already slated for government auction.

The length of the loans will force some people to keep paying after the products stop working. The companies, for instance, write 15-year loans for new air conditioners, but they don't always last that long.

PACE companies also granted loans to homeowners who were delinquent on their taxes, a violation of the program's eligibility requirements.

The state provides little oversight of the companies that run the program. Consumers have so little recourse that one county tax collector created his own system to ensure homeowners understand what they are buying before it's too late.

The companies financing the loans say the program works, and any problems are isolated or small in scale.

Mike Lemyre is the senior vice president of government affairs for Ygrene Energy Fund, the largest PACE provider in Florida. [ Ygrene Energy Fund ]

"Property owner benefits are numerous," said Mike Lemyre, senior vice president of Ygrene Energy Fund, Florida's largest PACE provider. "We got into this business to provide financing to make homes and communities more resilient and more efficient."

The Florida Attorney General's Office says it is investigating Ygrene's lending practices but declined to provide further details. At least one Florida county has temporarily banned PACE loans, and Hillsborough County commissioners voted in August to stop the program.

Absent any changes, consumer advocates and some public officials worry about widespread consequences.

"Honestly, the program should be shut down," said David Hiller, a lawyer who handled several PACE cases in California.

PACE programs began in California in 2008 as a way to help more residents — including those with lower incomes — make their homes energy efficient. They later expanded to upgrades that protect against natural disasters, such as hurricane-resistant windows.

Many states have PACE programs for businesses. But Florida, California and Missouri also allow homeowners to participate.

Qualifying for a traditional mortgage or car loan typically hinges on someone's financial track record. The lender will look at credit scores, bank statements and incomes to ensure a borrower has the means to make monthly payments.

In Florida, PACE loans have no such requirements. Homeowners qualify based on the equity in their homes. They also must have paid property taxes on time for the previous three years.

There's another major difference: PACE loans are a tax lien tied to the home, not the homeowner. That means either the loan gets paid off when the home is sold, or the new owner takes over the payments. Homeowners pay their PACE loans through their annual property tax bill.

While the programs are outlined in state law, they are run by third parties. Three firms have dominated the state's residential PACE program: Ygrene, Renew Financial Group and Counterpointe Energy Solutions. Counterpointe said it is no longer issuing residential PACE loans, but instead is focusing on commercial financing.

The companies hire and vet the contractors who pitch the program and perform the work.

“PACE has lower interest rates and longer terms, resulting in lower monthly payments that make it more affordable,” said Lemyre of Ygrene, which passed $1 billion in Florida PACE projects this year.

Many of the homeowners the Times spoke to say they don’t have enough income to afford the bigger-than-expected loan payments. And too many of the contractors who perform the work target low-income, elderly and non-English speaking residents, who don’t understand how the program works, lawyers and consumer advocates told the Times.

Some of those same critics said the borrowers don’t get a break on prices, either. A few accused contractors of charging excessive amounts for solar panels and air conditioners.

Homeowners often sign the contracts on mobile devices or tablets, making it difficult to review the terms. And the ones who spoke with the Times complained that they didn’t always get an honest rundown of what they were signing.

Meas talks on the phone with her title company a few weeks before moving out of her home. [ OCTAVIO JONES | Times ]

Meas had meticulously hand stamped her living room wallpaper with small, deep-green maple leaves, the same color as her carpet. Two large impressionist paintings hung on opposite walls.

“I was going for Italian countryside,” she said, when a reporter visited.

Meas has multiple sclerosis. Her immune system attacks her nerve cells, and heat makes the symptoms significantly worse. When she contacted her air conditioning company in 2017, she had gone nearly a week without cool air.

Her husband died in 2004, and she retired from part-time work in a medical office in 2014. Social Security, disability benefits and $350 a month from a roommate barely covered the bills.

A PACE loan felt like her only solution.

The air conditioning salesman, she said, told her the program wouldn’t cost anything up front. She should put $70 a month aside to help pay for the increase in her annual taxes, he said. The application could be approved that day.

“It was made to seem like it was a real new thing that just came over from California,” Meas said.

Jeffrey Tavernaro, 46, recounted a similar sales pitch when the air conditioner at his Pasco home broke in June 2017. The PACE loan, his air conditioning salesman said, would come with no interest, and the first payment wouldn’t be due for a year. Tavernaro also would get a tax break for installing an energy-efficient appliance, he remembers the salesman saying.

The new air conditioner cost about $14,000. He’d only need to set aside $100 a month, he was told. All he had to do was sign the tablet.

But after about a year, when his property tax bill came due, his mortgage company told him he would need nearly twice as much to cover the loan. He also discovered that the loan wasn't zero interest; it was 7.69 percent. He didn't get a tax break for installing the air conditioner, either.

The program seemed to come with so many benefits, he said. "Then it turns out that's pretty much as far from the truth as you can get."

Tavernaro had the financial means to make the extra payments. Meas wasn't so lucky — she couldn't pay her full tax bill. A few months later, the Pasco County tax collector told her that she had two years to pay her delinquent taxes or her home would be auctioned. She decided to sell.

After paying off her mortgage, Meas used some of the remaining money to settle her tax bill. She also paid off the $5,000 PACE loan.

She now lives in an apartment, which doesn't feel as much like home.

"They don't let you paint the walls," she said.

As it turns out, Meas wasn't even eligible for the loan.

Under state law, homeowners can participate in PACE if they paid their taxes on time the previous three years. The requirement helps establish that homeowners can afford the loans as well as pay the rest of their annual property taxes.

But the Pasco County tax collector found 15 homeowners who got PACE loans despite recent tax delinquencies including Meas. Lenders also granted loans to four homeowners without filing a required disclosure form with the tax collector's office. One homeowner was behind on taxes and did not have a disclosure form on file.

Mike Fasano, the Pasco tax collector, was so dismayed with how the companies ignored the requirement that he said he would no longer collect money for those loans. The homeowners won't have to make any more payments, Fasano said, unless the PACE companies push back.

PACE loans should not exceed 20 percent of a home's value, consumer advocates told the Times. Even with low interest rates, big loans can be burdensome, and understanding the cost of a PACE loan can be confusing, they said. Salespeople typically give verbal estimates for monthly payments — despite the bill being paid annually.

A salesman told Charles Hannor that a PACE loan could solve his problem. His 35-year-old Brandon home had leaky windows and doors. Hannor, 68, discovered later that he had taken out two loans, not one. He said he wasn't told the amount for either loan, or the interest rates.

A little over six months later, he found out that his property taxes would rise from $900 a year to more than $6,250 — a seven-fold increase. Public records show that his loans total more than an estimated $45,000 — about 26 percent of his home's value.

The Times identified 40 homeowners in Hillsborough County who had two or more PACE loans on a single property. One homeowner had three loans, all from different companies, amounting to roughly 30 percent of the home's value.

Alice Vickers, former director of the Florida Alliance for Consumer Protection, emphasized that even payday lenders must enter loans into a database so they don't give more than one to a customer. The state's PACE law has no similar requirement.

"It's just creating an opportunity to prey on these consumers," Vickers said.

Workers install solar panels on a building in California. [ U.S. Dept. of Energy ]

PACE programs ran into similar problems in other locations.

In California, companies wrote about $300 million in PACE loans in 2014. Two years later, the number jumped to nearly $1.6 billion, according to the state treasurer's office. With the growth came a torrent of complaints — confused consumers, deceptive sales pitches, unaffordable payments.

In 2018, California passed sweeping consumer protections. The changes made it mandatory for PACE lenders to check that a person could repay the loan and required the companies to disclose the financing terms in more detail, similar to home mortgages.

Since then, PACE loans plunged by more than half.

"It was predatory before," said Hiller, the California lawyer. "It still is predatory, but it's put somewhat of a check on it."

In Florida, about 30 counties have a residential PACE program, including Pasco County. Pinellas County only participates in the commercial version. Pinellas commissioners considered opening it to homeowners in December 2018. But they tabled the idea, citing several concerns, including that companies didn't check whether homeowners could repay the loans.

Last year, the Naples Daily News detailed how PACE companies in Collier County dogged Habitat for Humanity residents with sales calls and gave them loans they couldn't afford.

Elena Mola, a lawyer who lives in Naples, raised concerns last year about PACE practices in Collier County. [ Elena Mola ]

Two months later, Elena Mola, a lawyer who lives in Naples and works in Washington, D.C., raised concerns about contractors taking advantage of low-income and non-English-speaking homeowners. At a Collier County Commission meeting, Mola presented research she said showed contractors who do the repair work charged significantly inflated prices for air conditioners and solar panels.

At the meeting, four representatives from PACE lender Ygrene, pushed back, saying any problems were isolated and that customer service was a top priority.

Unconvinced, the Collier County Commission banned the residential PACE program.

Hernando County stopped the program in May. And in August, Hillsborough County commissioners barred it, too. Commissioner Sandy Murman said the program “preyed upon” consumers.

One Thursday morning earlier this year, a group of Realtors gathered in Tampa for a meeting called “The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly of the Florida PACE program.”

The training session began quietly. But murmurs gave way to a flurry of questions as attendees learned how PACE loans can complicate buying and selling homes. Who pays off the loan when the home sells? How do buyers know if a home includes a PACE loan? Could sellers or their brokers be liable for failing to disclose a loan?

The loans can take months, even up to a year, to appear in tax records. That means some residents, the Realtors learned, might unknowingly buy homes that include PACE loans.

That’s what happened to a woman who bought a $150,000 home in Pasco County. The previous owner had taken out a PACE loan in the fall of 2019 to pay for an air conditioner. The tax lien hadn’t posted to the tax collector’s website at the time of the sale.

Mike Fasano, Pasco County Tax Collector, created his own system to protect consumers in Pasco who participate in PACE. [ Mike Fasano ]

A few months later, the woman called Fasano’s office for an explanation of an extra charge on her annual taxes. The charge, she discovered, was the annual payment toward a $20,000 loan for the air conditioner.

“That’s why we encourage you as Realtors to ask the simple question of the seller: Is there a PACE loan?” said Fasano, who led the meeting.

And there’s another factor: Under state law, PACE lenders are first in line to be paid if a home goes into foreclosure. They leapfrog banks and other lenders who issue mortgages.

For that reason, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac said in 2010 that they would stop backing mortgages on homes that had PACE loans. The financing giants hold about one-third of the country’s $16 trillion in mortgage debt. In 2017, the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development announced that homes with PACE loans would not be eligible for financing through the Federal Housing Authority. That can make it hard for homeowners to refinance, too.

Robert Salinas Jr., 71, said his PACE salesman didn’t tell him that. Salinas felt misled into signing a $13,225 loan to replace the central air conditioner on his 1,173-square-foot Brandon home. He’d like to refinance to free up cash to pay down the PACE loan faster. Otherwise, he’ll be 85 years old when the loan payments end.

“If you have a choice, take a traditional loan,” he said.

Homeowners dissatisfied with PACE loans have little recourse. No government agency in Florida oversees the program, so complaints often end up with the companies that provide the financing. Tax collectors and other local government agencies also field complaints, but they have little or no investigative power.

Homeowners can go to court, but they are often limited to suing contractors over shoddy or incomplete work. Proving they were misled into signing a contract is much harder.

There is no central repository for customer data in Florida, so would-be regulators cannot easily see whether someone has more than one loan, has a particularly high interest rate or whether a company is unfairly targeting a low-income neighborhood.

Tax collectors can see whether someone has more than one PACE loan. But even they don't know the total amount of someone's loan unless they specifically require the PACE companies to have contractors fill out a special form.

A bill proposed in the most recent Florida legislative session would have required verification that a homeowner could afford the loan. The bill died without a full vote of the House or Senate. The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau announced last year it was considering implementing similar consumer protections on the loans nationwide, but the rules have not been formalized.

Frustrated with a lack of consumer protections, Fasano set up his own safeguards in Pasco County. His office requires that the homeowner and the contractor sign a consumer protection form that outlines the loan in plain language. Samantha Bisconti, a customer advocate in Fasano's office, then calls homeowners to ensure they understand what they are buying, how much it costs and that they often have three days to back out.

Linda Neary, 72, wanted to reduce her energy costs at her Port Richey home. Solar panels seemed like the right solution, she said. A salesman left the impression that the loan was for about $1,200 to be paid over a year, she said.

"I thought, 'Well I guess I could scrape that up,'" she said, and signed the contract.

Bisconti called the next day. The loan, she explained, was for $25,800 paid over 30 years. With interest, Neary would have paid more than $50,000. Her yearly tax bill would have jumped from about $700 to just under $2,400.

Neary, who was within her three-day window, opted out.

PACE lenders argue that the program helps homeowners afford energy-efficient upgrades, particularly because there isn't any money required up front.

The long loan terms — typically 10 to 20 years — are a boon to consumers, said Lemyre, the Ygrene executive. The length allows for more affordable payments. And the interest rates, which can go up to about 9 percent, can be lower than the rates consumers would get through other financing.

"Unlike banks, the ultimate goal of these programs is not to earn interest for their shareholders," Ygrene's website said. "Rather, PACE options are implemented to help more people afford upgrades that will make their homes more efficient and more resilient."

Two days before the Times published this article, Renew sent a release about the results of a survey of its Florida PACE customers. It found they were highly satisfied with the program, and that Renew scored higher in customer satisfaction than “beloved consumer brands” like investment company Vanguard and luxury department store chain Nordstrom.

“As a company, we’ve been fortunate enough to help Floridians through hard times, including hurricanes Irma, Michael and Dorian,” Renew CEO Mark Floyd said in the release. “Even now, I’m heartened to see that we’re helping Floridians get through the COVID-19 crisis by not only providing access to the financing they need to make their homes safer, healthier and more comfortable, but also by treating them well along the way.”

Counterpointe declined to provide a response for this story for several months following two certified letters and several emails and calls. On Wednesday, a spokesman called and said the firm decided to stop issuing residential loans last year and instead will focus on commercial lending.

PACE companies also tout the low number of complaints. Renew Financial said in an earlier statement that more than 99 percent of its complaints aren’t about financing agreements, and most are resolved within 30 days. The company reported 440 complaints since the program launched, according to an agenda for a September meeting. The complaints, it said, most often centered around the quality of the work or how quickly it was done.

As for Ygrene, less than 1 percent of complaints focused on financing, Lemyre said. He attributed the low rate to an enhanced disclosure process the company put in place.

“We provide the fastest service while still completing all of the requirements for the program,” he said.

Lemyre told the Times that he wasn’t aware that the state attorney general’s office was investigating his company.

“We are confident that in working with the (Florida Attorney General’s Office) it will show Ygrene’s steadfast commitment to our customers and effectiveness of our consumer protections,” he said in a later statement.

A small but growing number of PACE customers have fallen behind on their property tax bills. In Florida, homeowners have two years to pay delinquent taxes. After that, homes can be sold to the highest bidder.

In Hillsborough, five PACE customers failed to pay their taxes in 2017. A year later, the number grew to 27, topping out at 32 in 2019, the most recent data available.

In Pasco, 17 fell behind in 2017. Another 48 joined them in 2018, followed by 69 in 2019. Pasco County has seven homes with PACE loans slated for auction later this year. None were scheduled in Hillsborough.

But those are just the struggling homeowners who are easy to spot in public records.

In some cases, banks that hold mortgages on PACE homes step in and pay the delinquent taxes. The intervention protects the homes from falling into foreclosure, where the banks risk losing some or all of the unpaid portion of the mortgages. In California, the problem grew to the point that the state set up a $10 million reserve fund in 2013 that would cover banks in the event they lost a PACE property to foreclosure.

The number of times banks have paid PACE assessments is difficult to track in public records.

Fasano warned: "This will be Florida's next mortgage crisis if we're not careful."

Times staffer John Martin and former Times news researcher Caryn Baird contributed to this report. The lead photo was taken by Times photographer Luis Santana.

Tampa, FL (November 5, 2020) – Starting November 5th at 9 p.m., there will be temporary lane closures and turn restrictions on West Spruce Street and North Lois Avenue while a department contractor vacuum excavates and tests the thickness of a wastewater force mainline pipe in the area. This scheduled maintenance will impact the following areas:

- Left turns will be restricted from North Lois Avenue onto West Spruce Street.
- Motorists traveling east on West Spruce Street will be restricted at North Lois Avenue.
- Partial closure of the right lane on West Spruce Street at the intersection of North Lois Avenue.
- Right turns will be restricted from North Lois Avenue onto West Spruce Street.

These restrictions will remain in place until 4 a.m. on November 6th. The contractor will return at 9 p.m. on November 6th to complete the inspection. These partial lane closures and turn restrictions will again be in place. The streets will reopen to normal traffic patterns by 4 a.m. on November 7, 2020, weather permitting.

A high-resolution map of the work area and closures is embedded below. The City of Tampa recommends that motorists use alternative routes to avoid traffic congestion. See all road closures at www.tampagov.net/RoadClosures

Subject: PIP Talking Points

Any discussion of the rate impact of HB 54 cannot be divorced from the fact that Florida's mandatory automobile insurance requirements under the Motor Vehicle No-Fault law are unfair and inadequate.

- The law is unfair because it does not require at-fault drivers to maintain insurance to pay for the injuries they cause other people.
- The law is inadequate because $10,000 in PIP coverage is insufficient coverage in an ever increasing number of auto accidents.
- 48 other states require BI coverage. Even among states that require PIP, every state except Florida also requires BI coverage.
- Florida is the only state where the required insurance to cover bodily injuries, whether it is BI or PIP, is as low as $10,000. Bodily injury coverage with limits of at least 25/50 is required in 40 of 50 states.
- It is necessary and good public policy that Florida increase the minimum limit drivers must carry for coverage of bodily injuries suffered in auto accidents.

This change will, on average, put downward pressure on rates.

- The majority of Floridians who currently purchase auto insurance with BI coverage of 25/50 or more will benefit from PIP repeal and the bad faith reforms in the bill. Those policyholders will not be required to purchase more insurance and can choose to not purchase MedPay. Those drivers will be able to drop PIP coverage they do not need and thus would pay less for insurance.
- In late 2016 the Office of Insurance Regulation commissioned an actuarial study on the impact of repealing PIP and mandating BI. That report estimated that the statewide average premium for total coverage (BI, PD, UM, MedPay, Collision, Comprehensive) would drop 5.6% if PIP were repealed and replaced with a mandate to purchase BI at 25/50 limits.
  - Even if MedPay of $5,000 were mandated, which this bill does not do, the report estimated the average premium would only go up 0.3%. The bill does not mandate MedPay.
- The OIR report did not contemplate a BI mandate that also contains bad faith reform long requested by the insurance industry that provides a safe-harbor if the insurer agrees to settle. The bad faith reforms in the bill will create additional savings.
- Repealing PIP will benefit policyholders in cities where PIP coverage is the most expensive.
  - The 2016 OIR report estimated the average premium for total coverage in Miami-Dade would drop 15.5% if PIP were repealed and replaced with a BI mandate of 25/50.
- While the bill should put downward pressure on rates, some policyholders will pay more for their auto insurance. Drivers that now do not purchase any PIP coverage may well pay more for their coverage, which is unfortunately necessary to require that drivers have adequate insurance.

Subject: Please Oppose HB1 & Protect First Amendment Rights

Meagan Hebel,

I am writing to you to ask you to please OPPOSE HB1 at the House Justice Appropriations meeting when it is scheduled for a hearing. I am outraged that this legislation even got assigned to a public hearing must less that it has been fast-tracked through the House on party lines. Florida currently faces the worst economic and public health crisis in history and instead of working to find solutions HB1 criminalizes free speech, peaceful assembly and dissent through unconstitutional language that is targeted at silencing Black voices demanding basic human rights, equality, and fair treatment by law enforcement.

Instead of addressing the horrendous housing crisis, the broken unemployment system, the failing healthcare system, the disorganized and chaotic education system, AND the rising number of deaths, poverty, job loss and sickness in Florida HB1 repackages legislation put forward by Governor DeSantis as a "response to the violent insurrectionist mobs" that attempted a coup on the nation's Capitol. This language is a smokescreen for the true intent of the bill which is to circumvent the mess that Florida has as a consequence of the pandemic and lack of support for Florida's poverty impacted and oppressed. I am not fooled by this. This is the same legislation it was back in September with the same purpose - to limit the basic civil rights of BLM protestors that is guaranteed to all people under the US Constitution.

I believe that HB1 is being used to distract media and organizers from focusing on the real problem: lack of support for those in need across the state. How dare the Governor and the Florida Legislature waste taxpayer time and money on proposing solutions to a made up problem. Section 870 of the Florida Statute already criminalizes riots, unlawful assemblies, and looting but this legislation would actually make it legal for motorists who strike protestors with their vehicle, even if the incident results in someone's death. It limits people's ability to apply to Florida's already broken unemployment system if they have been convicted under the proposed legislation and allows victims of violent crimes to recover civil damages from a local government that is deems responsible for grossly negligent "policing" during a "riot". Meanwhile, the Florida Legislature is fast-tracking HB7/SB72 to create COVID19 liability immunity for the real victims of negligence by businesses, government agencies, schools, and religious organizations who have caused the spread of COVID19.

The Executive Director of the ACLU of Florida, Micah Kubic, stated that "This (bill) is not an attempt to make our communities safer. This proposed legislation by DeSantis is nothing more than a campaign political stunt. Now, it is being disguised as a response to the failed violent coup at the US Capitol. And, it is just as unconstitutional."

A statewide survey of Florida voters put out after the attack by Donald Trump's supporters on the US Capitol suggested a lack of support for HB1 and Governor DeSantis' push to amp up criminal penalties for "disorderly" protests. Ninety-percent of those asked stated their support for "protecting our constitutional right to free assembly and free speech by legally protesting without fear of criminal charges". Seventy-one percent of Democrats and 74% of Republicans deemed the issue a top priority. Eighty percent of respondents said they were more likely to support a legislator who voted to protect that priority, and 56% were "much more likely". On the other hand, 83% of respondents thought that it was important to strengthen unemployment protections for people who lost their jobs because of COVID-19, 63% said that this was "very important". (1)

Finally, this legislation also creates a preemptive attack on local municipalities that might want to "defund" the police and put their money towards more humanitarian initiatives to provide real solutions to small business and economic crises caused by the pandemic. Instead of restricting local government's ability to find solutions we need legislation that answers the call of the people in the streets. People only protest when they are being abused, oppressed, marginalized or violated. It's time the House Justice Appropriations Subcommittee address the calls of Florida voters and people who cared enough to peacefully assemble. We need to face the issues head on and answer to the humanity and dignity of working class, black, brown, and immigrant families in Florida who are suffering with workable policies that help the state grow and prosper.

If this legislation passes I will be letting people know that they should not travel in Florida, they should not move to Florida, they should not visit Florida, because our government does not support them and keep them safe. Public health and the economy should be your number one priority. Please OPPOSE HB1 and support legislation that provides real solutions to the real problems Floridians face today.

Finally, this legislation also creates a preemptive attack on local municipalities that might want to "defund" the police and put their money towards more humanitarian initiatives to provide real solutions to small business and economic crises caused by the pandemic. Instead of restricting local government's ability to find solutions we need legislation that answers the call of the people in the streets. People only protest when they are being abused, oppressed, marginalized or violated. It's time the House Justice Appropriations Subcommittee address the calls of Florida voters and people who cared enough to peacefully assemble. We need to face the issues head on and answer to the humanity and dignity of working class, black, brown, and immigrant families in Florida who are suffering with workable policies that help the state grow and prosper.

If this legislation passes I will be letting people know that they should not travel in Florida, they should not move to Florida, they should not visit Florida, because our government does not support them and keep them safe. Public health and the economy should be your number one priority. Please OPPOSE HB1 and support legislation that provides real solutions to the real problems Floridians face today.

Subject: Please Oppose HB1 & Protect First Amendment Rights

Kimberly Simon,

I am writing to you to ask you to please OPPOSE HB1 at the House Justice Appropriations meeting when it is scheduled for a hearing. I am outraged that this legislation even got assigned to a public hearing must less that it has been fast-tracked through the House on party lines. Florida currently faces the worst economic and public health crisis in history and instead of working to find solutions HB1 criminalizes free speech, peaceful assembly and dissent through unconstitutional language that is targeted at silencing Black voices demanding basic human rights, equality, and fair treatment by law enforcement.

Instead of addressing the horrendous housing crisis, the broken unemployment system, the failing healthcare system, the disorganized and chaotic education system, AND the rising number of deaths, poverty, job loss and sickness in Florida HB1 repackages legislation put forward by Governor DeSantis as a "response to the violent insurrectionist mobs" that attempted a coup on the nation's Capitol. This language is a smokescreen for the true intent of the bill which is to circumvent the mess that Florida has as a consequence of the pandemic and lack of support for Florida's poverty impacted and oppressed. I am not fooled by this. This is the same legislation it was back in September with the same purpose - to limit the basic civil rights of BLM protestors that is guaranteed to all people under the US Constitution.

I believe that HB1 is being used to distract media and organizers from focusing on the real problem: lack of support for those in need across the state. How dare the Governor and the Florida Legislature waste taxpayer time and money on proposing solutions to a made up problem. Section 870 of the Florida Statute already criminalizes riots, unlawful assemblies, and looting but this legislation would actually make it legal for motorists who strike protestors with their vehicle, even if the incident results in someone's death. It limits people's ability to apply to Florida's already broken unemployment system if they have been convicted under the proposed legislation and allows victims of violent crimes to recover civil damages from a local government that is deems responsible for grossly negligent "policing" during a "riot". Meanwhile, the Florida Legislature is fast-tracking HB7/SB72 to create COVID19 liability immunity for the real victims of negligence by businesses, government agencies, schools, and religious organizations who have caused the spread of COVID19.

The Executive Director of the ACLU of Florida, Micah Kubic, stated that "This (bill) is not an attempt to make our communities safer. This proposed legislation by DeSantis is nothing more than a campaign political stunt. Now, it is being disguised as a response to the failed violent coup at the US Capitol. And, it is just as unconstitutional."

A statewide survey of Florida voters put out after the attack by Donald Trump's supporters on the US Capitol suggested a lack of support for HB1 and Governor DeSantis' push to amp up criminal penalties for "disorderly" protests. Ninety-percent of those asked stated their support for "protecting our constitutional right to free assembly and free speech by legally protesting without fear of criminal charges". Seventy-one percent of Democrats and 74% of Republicans deemed the issue a top priority. Eighty percent of respondents said they were more likely to support a legislator who voted to protect that priority, and 56% were "much more likely". On the other hand, 83% of respondents thought that it was important to strengthen unemployment protections for people who lost their jobs because of COVID-19, 63% said that this was "very important". (1)

Finally, this legislation also creates a preemptive attack on local municipalities that might want to "defund" the police and put their money towards more humanitarian initiatives to provide real solutions to small business and economic crises caused by the pandemic. Instead of restricting local government's ability to find solutions we need legislation that answers the call of the people in the streets. People only protest when they are being abused, oppressed, marginalized or violated. It's time the House Justice Appropriations Subcommittee address the calls of Florida voters and people who cared enough to peacefully assemble. We need to face the issues head on and answer to the humanity and dignity of working class, black, brown, and immigrant families in Florida who are suffering with workable policies that help the state grow and prosper.

If this legislation passes I will be letting people know that they should not travel in Florida, they should not move to Florida, they should not visit Florida, because our government does not support them and keep them safe. Public health and the economy should be your number one priority. Please OPPOSE HB1 and support legislation that provides real solutions to the real problems Floridians face today.

Subject: PLEASE OPPOSE HB1!! Protect our Freedom.

Dear Elected Representative!

As a Florida resident I am contacting you today to urge you to OPPOSE HB1, the Combatting Violence, Disorder, and Looting Law Enforcement Protection Act.

There are already laws in place regarding violence, disorder, and looting, which do not infringe on protesters' due process protections and extra protections for Law Enforcement Officers in the state of Florida under FL §112.532.

While the events that took place at the Capitol on January 6, 2021, are abhorrent and a direct attack against democracy, it is also evident due to the circumstances of 2020 that law enforcement is not always capable of discerning civil disobedience. A constitutionally protected act, from rioting and other illegal activity.

This bill language was drafted before the Capitol siege and targeted civil rights protesters, many of whom were eventually proven innocent.

Just this summer in Jacksonville, over 70 peaceful civil rights protesters were unlawfully detained. Among these protesters were families, students, pastors, business owners, teachers, medics, and lawyers. All charges were dropped. Four protesters even sued the Jacksonville Sheriff's Office and won a $100,000 settlement due to their rights being deliberately violated. With this new bill, these innocent people would have had incredible difficulty maintaining their freedom, even in the court of law.

As a concerned citizen, I am asking you not to allow fear and chaos to influence a hasty decision that could jeopardize honest Americans' freedom. We have seen the blatant double standards regarding protesting and treatment amongst groups, and this bill was proposed before this tyrannic event and is only being pushed into legislation in haste and to further suppress our freedoms.

Please VOTE NO on HB1.

Sincerely,
Kayla Blanks

Kimberly Simon,

Please OPPOSE HB1 at the House Justice Appropriations meeting when it is scheduled for a hearing. I am outraged that this legislation even got assigned to a public hearing must less that it has been fast-tracked through the House on party lines. Florida currently faces the worst economic and public health crisis in history and instead of working to find solutions HB1 criminalizes free speech, peaceful assembly and dissent through unconstitutional language that is targeted at silencing Black voices demanding basic human rights, equality, and fair treatment by law enforcement.

Instead of addressing the horrendous housing crisis, the broken unemployment system, the failing healthcare system, the disorganized and chaotic education system, AND the rising number of deaths, poverty, job loss and sickness in Florida HB1 repackages legislation put forward by Governor DeSantis as a "response to the violent insurrectionist mobs" that attempted a coup on the nation's Capitol. This language is a smokescreen for the true intent of the bill which is to circumvent the mess that Florida has as a consequence of the pandemic and lack of support for Florida's poverty impacted and oppressed. I am not fooled by this. This is the same legislation it was back in September with the same purpose - to limit the basic civil rights of BLM protestors that is guaranteed to all people under the US Constitution.

I believe that HB1 is being used to distract media and organizers from focusing on the real problem: lack of support for those in need across the state. How dare the Governor and the Florida Legislature waste taxpayer time and money on proposing solutions to a made up problem. Section 870 of the Florida Statute already criminalizes riots, unlawful assemblies, and looting but this legislation would actually make it legal for motorists who strike protestors with their vehicle, even if the incident results in someone's death. It limits people's ability to apply to Florida's already broken unemployment system if they have been convicted under the proposed legislation and allows victims of violent crimes to recover civil damages from a local government that is deems responsible for grossly negligent "policing" during a "riot". Meanwhile, the Florida Legislature is fast-tracking HB7/SB72 to create COVID19 liability immunity for the real victims of negligence by businesses, government agencies, schools, and religious organizations who have caused the spread of COVID19.

The Executive Director of the ACLU of Florida, Micah Kubic, stated that "This (bill) is not an attempt to make our communities safer. This proposed legislation by DeSantis is nothing more than a campaign political stunt. Now, it is being disguised as a response to the failed violent coup at the US Capitol. And, it is just as unconstitutional."

A statewide survey of Florida voters put out after the attack by Donald Trump's supporters on the US Capitol suggested a lack of support for HB1 and Governor DeSantis' push to amp up criminal penalties for "disorderly" protests. Ninety-percent of those asked stated their support for "protecting our constitutional right to free assembly and free speech by legally protesting without fear of criminal charges". Seventy-one percent of Democrats and 74% of Republicans deemed the issue a top priority. Eighty percent of respondents said they were more likely to support a legislator who voted to protect that priority, and 56% were "much more likely". On the other hand, 83% of respondents thought that it was important to strengthen unemployment protections for people who lost their jobs because of COVID-19, 63% said that this was "very important". (1)

Finally, this legislation also creates a preemptive attack on local municipalities that might want to "defund" the police and put their money towards more humanitarian initiatives to provide real solutions to small business and economic crises caused by the pandemic. Instead of restricting local government's ability to find solutions we need legislation that answers the call of the people in the streets. People only protest when they are being abused, oppressed, marginalized or violated. It's time the House Justice Appropriations Subcommittee address the calls of Florida voters and people who cared enough to peacefully assemble. We need to face the issues head on and answer to the humanity and dignity of working class, black, brown, and immigrant families in Florida who are suffering with workable policies that help the state grow and prosper.

If this legislation passes I will be letting people know that they should not travel in Florida, they should not move to Florida, they should not visit Florida, because our government does not support them and keep them safe. Public health and the economy should be your number one priority. Please OPPOSE HB1 and support legislation that provides real solutions to the real problems Floridians face today.

Subject: Please Oppose HB1

To whom it may concern,

I am a Florida resident contacting you today to urge you to OPPOSE HB1, the Combatting Violence, Disorder, and Looting Law Enforcement Protection Act. There are already laws in place regarding violence, disorder, and looting, which do not infringe on protesters' due process protections and extra protections for Law Enforcement Officers in the state of Florida under FL §112.532.

While the events that took place at the Capitol on January 6, 2021, are abhorrent and a direct attack against democracy, it is also evident due to the circumstances of 2020 that law enforcement is not always capable of discerning civil disobedience. A constitutionally protected act, from rioting and other illegal activity. This bill language was drafted before the Capitol siege and targeted civil rights protesters, many of whom were eventually proven innocent.

Just this summer in Jacksonville, over 70 peaceful civil rights protesters were unlawfully detained. Among these protesters were families, students, pastors, business owners, teachers, medics, and lawyers. All charges were dropped. Four protesters even sued the Jacksonville Sheriff's Office and won a $100,000 settlement due to their rights being deliberately violated. With this new bill, these innocent people would have had incredible difficulty maintaining their freedom, even in the court of law.

As a concerned citizen, I am asking you not to allow fear and chaos to influence a hasty decision that could jeopardize honest Americans' freedom. We have seen the blatant double standards regarding protesting and treatment amongst groups, and this bill was proposed before this tyrannic event and is only being pushed into legislation in haste and to further suppress our freedoms. Please VOTE NO on HB1.

Sincerely,
Adalai Rader
Duval County

Subject: Please Oppose HB1

Meagan Hebel,

Please OPPOSE HB1 at the House Justice Appropriations meeting when it is scheduled for a hearing. I am outraged that this legislation even got assigned to a public hearing must less that it has been fast-tracked through the House on party lines. Florida currently faces the worst economic and public health crisis in history and instead of working to find solutions HB1 criminalizes free speech, peaceful assembly and dissent through unconstitutional language that is targeted at silencing Black voices demanding basic human rights, equality, and fair treatment by law enforcement.

Instead of addressing the horrendous housing crisis, the broken unemployment system, the failing healthcare system, the disorganized and chaotic education system, AND the rising number of deaths, poverty, job loss and sickness in Florida HB1 repackages legislation put forward by Governor DeSantis as a "response to the violent insurrectionist mobs" that attempted a coup on the nation's Capitol. This language is a smokescreen for the true intent of the bill which is to circumvent the mess that Florida has as a consequence of the pandemic and lack of support for Florida's poverty impacted and oppressed. I am not fooled by this. This is the same legislation it was back in September with the same purpose - to limit the basic civil rights of BLM protestors that is guaranteed to all people under the US Constitution.

I believe that HB1 is being used to distract media and organizers from focusing on the real problem: lack of support for those in need across the state. How dare the Governor and the Florida Legislature waste taxpayer time and money on proposing solutions to a made up problem. Section 870 of the Florida Statute already criminalizes riots, unlawful assemblies, and looting but this legislation would actually make it legal for motorists who strike protestors with their vehicle, even if the incident results in someone's death. It limits people's ability to apply to Florida's already broken unemployment system if they have been convicted under the proposed legislation and allows victims of violent crimes to recover civil damages from a local government that is deems responsible for grossly negligent "policing" during a "riot". Meanwhile, the Florida Legislature is fast-tracking HB7/SB72 to create COVID19 liability immunity for the real victims of negligence by businesses, government agencies, schools, and religious organizations who have caused the spread of COVID19.

The Executive Director of the ACLU of Florida, Micah Kubic, stated that "This (bill) is not an attempt to make our communities safer. This proposed legislation by DeSantis is nothing more than a campaign political stunt. Now, it is being disguised as a response to the failed violent coup at the US Capitol. And, it is just as unconstitutional."

A statewide survey of Florida voters put out after the attack by Donald Trump's supporters on the US Capitol suggested a lack of support for HB1 and Governor DeSantis' push to amp up criminal penalties for "disorderly" protests. Ninety-percent of those asked stated their support for "protecting our constitutional right to free assembly and free speech by legally protesting without fear of criminal charges". Seventy-one percent of Democrats and 74% of Republicans deemed the issue a top priority. Eighty percent of respondents said they were more likely to support a legislator who voted to protect that priority, and 56% were "much more likely". On the other hand, 83% of respondents thought that it was important to strengthen unemployment protections for people who lost their jobs because of COVID-19, 63% said that this was "very important". (1)

Finally, this legislation also creates a preemptive attack on local municipalities that might want to "defund" the police and put their money towards more humanitarian initiatives to provide real solutions to small business and economic crises caused by the pandemic. Instead of restricting local government's ability to find solutions we need legislation that answers the call of the people in the streets. People only protest when they are being abused, oppressed, marginalized or violated. It's time the House Justice Appropriations Subcommittee address the calls of Florida voters and people who cared enough to peacefully assemble. We need to face the issues head on and answer to the humanity and dignity of working class, black, brown, and immigrant families in Florida who are suffering with workable policies that help the state grow and prosper.

If this legislation passes I will be letting people know that they should not travel in Florida, they should not move to Florida, they should not visit Florida, because our government does not support them and keep them safe. Public health and the economy should be your number one priority. Please OPPOSE HB1 and support legislation that provides real solutions to the real problems Floridians face today.

Bill Summaries

SB 336 – Rouson

SB 336 creates a large-scale agricultural pollution reduction pilot program within the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) in partnership with dairy farms to develop and maintain regional pollution reduction projects that eliminate water pollution in the state.

The bill establishes pilot program application and project selection requirements. All aspects of projects planned and developed must be available for inspection by the DEP, the Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services, and water management districts. The bill specifies that pilot program participants are presumed to comply with water quality standards and are eligible for certain permit terms and funding. The DEP is given discretionary authority to adopt rules to provide a general permit for the construction of systems and projects under certain circumstances.

The bill requires that the Office of Program Policy Analysis and Government Accountability evaluate the pilot program using specified minimum criteria and report its findings to the Legislature. The pilot program is repealed as of October 2, 2025, unless reviewed and continued by the Legislature.

The bill authorizes the DEP to grant general permits for certain pilot program participants.

The bill provides for a nonrecurring appropriation in the 2021-2022 fiscal year of $1.3 million for the initial implementation of the program, of which $800,000 is to be spent in the Lake Okeechobee Basin Management Action Plan and $500,000 in the Suwannee Basin Management Action Plan.

This act takes effect July 1, 2021.

SB 374 – Bradley

SB 374 creates the “Agricultural Equipment Fair Repair Act” requiring original equipment manufacturers of agricultural equipment to provide certain manufacturing, diagnostic, and repair information to independent repair providers and owners. Original equipment manufacturers are prohibited from excluding certain information concerning security-related functions.

The bill does not apply to motor vehicle manufacturers or motor vehicle dealers. Additionally, a civil penalty may be collected from any original equipment manufacturer who is found to be in violation.

The bill takes effect July 1, 2021.

Subject: Please, I Urge You To Oppose HB1

Elected Representative,

My name is Courtney McClanahan, I am a Florida resident contacting you today to urge you to OPPOSE HB1, the Combatting Violence, Disorder, and Looting Law Enforcement Protection Act. There are already laws in place regarding violence, disorder, and looting, which do not infringe on protesters' due process protections and extra protections for Law Enforcement Officers in the state of Florida under FL §112.532.

While the events that took place at the Capitol on January 6, 2021, are abhorrent and a direct attack against democracy, it is also evident due to the circumstances of 2020 that law enforcement is not always capable of discerning civil disobedience. A constitutionally protected act, from rioting and other illegal activity. This bill language was drafted before the Capitol siege and targeted civil rights protesters, many of whom were eventually proven innocent.

Just this summer in Jacksonville, over 70 peaceful civil rights protesters were unlawfully detained. Among these protesters were families, students, pastors, business owners, teachers, medics, and lawyers. All charges were dropped. Four protesters even sued the Jacksonville Sheriff's Office and won a $100,000 settlement due to their rights being deliberately violated. With this new bill, these innocent people would have had incredible difficulty maintaining their freedom, even in the court of law.

As a concerned citizen, I am asking you to not allow fear and chaos to influence a hasty decision that could jeopardize honest Americans' freedom. We have seen the blatant double standards regarding protesting and treatment amongst groups, and this bill was proposed before this tyrannic event and is only being pushed into legislation in haste and to further suppress our freedoms. Please VOTE NO on HB1.

Sincerely,
Courtney McClanahan

Homeownership Experiences Following Criminal Justice Contact

Using data from the National Longitudinal Survey of Youth 1997 (NLSY97), this article considers the potential of a broad variety of criminal justice system interactions to shape homeownership experiences among young adults. Using a variety of models to address concerns of unobserved confounding variables, the author investigates how arrest, criminal charges, conviction, and incarceration relate to (1) probability of homeownership, (2) age of entry into first homeownership, and (3) homeownership duration. Results indicate that, like incarceration, these lower level forms of criminal justice contact are independently associated with lower levels of homeownership, delayed entry into homeownership, and shorter duration of homeownership among respondents who succeed in becoming homeowners. Given the importance of homeownership for individual wealth accumulation and racial wealth gaps, as well as sizable racial disparities in criminal justice contact in the United States, these findings illuminate a potentially important pathway through which racial disparities in socioeconomic well-being are reinforced.

Using Research to Improve Health and Health Care in U.S. Correctional Facilities

To implement policies and practices that foster positive health outcomes and fulfill the U.S. government's constitutional obligation to provide adequate health care to people who are incarcerated, researchers and practitioners must understand their health needs and the nature and quality of the care they receive. This brief provides an overview of what is known about health and health care in correctional settings and what must be investigated to improve treatment and health outcomes in correctional settings. This brief is part of a forthcoming research agenda for the Prison Research and Innovation Initiative—a five-year effort to leverage research and evidence to shine a much-needed light on prison conditions and pilot strategies to promote the well-being of people who live and work behind bars.

Australia's Third Action Plan of the National Plan to Reduce Violence Against Women and Their Children, Priority Area 2

Violence against women and children continues to challenge well-being in Australia, especially for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islanders. In this report, the authors discuss their evaluation of the national government's Third Action Plan of the National Plan to Reduce Violence Against Women and Their Children, and specifically Priority Area 2: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Women and Their Children. The national government provided funding to 14 different service providers across Australia that work specifically on family issues in Aboriginal communities. Aboriginal communities are mostly located in remote and sparsely populated areas, creating challenges for service delivery. The Third Action Plan funding was intended to help service providers deliver initiatives to address one or more of four categories: (1) trauma-informed therapeutic services, (2) men's behavior change programs, (3) intensive family case management and (4) victim services through legal service providers. Report findings include that interviewees from sites frequently described how a holistic approach to treatment provided positive results. Clinicians noted that storytelling and narrative therapeutic approaches were often quite effective, in part because these approaches fit well with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander cultural practices. Making sure to staff programs with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander staff was critical. Many communities have seen programs come and go over the years (often due to inconsistent funding) and have experienced broken promises from government entities or other efforts to address local problems. Data collection was extremely challenging for sites and site staff expressed a desire for more meaningful contact with other sites.

Higher Education: Department of Education Should Further Assess College Access Grant Programs

The U.S. Department of Education gives grants to schools and organizations that provide disadvantaged students with services to help them attend college. These eight grant programs are collectively known as "TRIO", named for the original three programs. The department could improve the information it has about TRIO programs in two areas: (1) grantee performance data, and (2) program assessments. Schools and organizations report data to the department to show how the TRIO grants they receive have been working. For example, organizations that receive grants to encourage students to complete college report on the numbers and percentages of students who received services and earned degrees. The U.S. Department of Education evaluates grantees' performance using the self-reported data, but has done little to verify the data. Accurate performance data are important because returning grantees can earn points for past performance in the next grant competition—increasing the likelihood that they will receive new grants. Almost 80% of recent TRIO grants went to returning grantees. Therefore, grantees may have an incentive to report a more positive picture than warranted. Officials from an organization representing TRIO grantees told us there is a risk that some grantees may report inaccurate information. As for assessing the individual TRIO programs, studies of some programs are outdated. In addition, the department has never assessed the effectiveness of three of the seven TRIO programs that serve students, and did not have any new assessments planned as of August 2020.

Hate Crimes and Black College Student Enrollment

Reported hate crimes have increased rapidly in recent years, including on college campuses. Concurrently, general racial animus has increased in the United States. Scholars have shown that the larger sociopolitical environment can directly impact the campus climate and experiences of all students, particularly students of color. However, little is known about how reports of hate crimes incidents relate to the college enrollment of students of color. This lack of evidence is especially troubling for Black persons, the most frequent targets of reported hate crimes both on and off campus. This paper helps to fill in that gap by exploring the association between Black students' college enrollment and the number of reports of hate crimes at two levels: the state and the institution. The authors examine a comprehensive dataset of institutional enrollment and characteristics, reported hate crimes, and Census data on state racial demographics from 1999 to 2017 using several techniques including institution fixed effects. The authors find that a standard deviation increase in reports of state-level hate crimes predicts a 20% increase in Black first-time student enrollment at Historically Black College and Universities (HCBUs). As the number of reported hate crimes is almost assuredly an undercount of the actual number of incidents, the authors explore the implications of this work while keeping that limitation in mind.

Media Literacy and Digital Citizenship

This resource provides an overview of media literacy and digital citizenship, including definitions as they appear in multiple settings. It also includes examples from three states (Utah, Virginia, and Washington) that address digital citizenship in legislation and one state (Colorado) that has convened a media literacy task force. Noted statistics include that 91% of teachers believe that digital citizenship is at least moderately effective in helping students make smart, safe, and ethical decisions online. Two-thirds of students were unable to tell the difference between news stories and online advertisements. And 96% of students did not consider how ties between an advocacy website and industry might affect the site's credibility. Colorado convened a media literacy task force in 2019 and their recommendations include 1) revising language arts and civics content standards to be more inclusive of media literacy; 2) strategies to support school districts with implementation that includes ways the state department of education can support local efforts; and 3) ways to recognize students and teachers who demonstrate excellence in media literacy.

How England Implemented Its Computer Science Education Program

Computer science education helps students acquire skills such as computational thinking, problem-solving, and collaboration. Computer science education can also reduce skills inequality if education systems make a concerted effort to ensure that all students have equitable access to curricula that provides them with the needed breadth of skills, regardless of their gender, ethnicity, or socioeconomic status. Based on prior analyses and expert consultations, the authors selected 11 computer science education country, state, and provincial case studies that may have lessons that can broadly apply to other education systems. These cases come from diverse global regions and circumstances and have implemented computer science education programs for various periods and to different levels of success. As such, they have examined information to extract lessons that can lead to successful implementation. This study will examine how England developed its computer science education program of study. Computer science concepts have been part of the official English curriculum for over a decade, but reforms have encouraged wider participation in the last six years. Given that this is a relatively long period of implementation compared to many other countries' computer science activities, this England case study can provide an understanding of how computer science education activities can be improved over time.

Farmworkers: Additional Information Needed to Better Protect Workers from Pesticide Exposure

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and states ensure compliance with the Agricultural Worker Protection Standard (WPS) primarily through inspections of farms. The states collect some information—such as the number of inspections they conduct—and provide that information to EPA as part of cooperative agreements between EPA and the states. An EPA regulation allows farmworkers to designate a representative to find out which pesticides are used where they work. This information can help farmworkers with pesticide exposure illnesses get faster diagnoses and better treatment. The extent of use of the designated representative provision of the WPS, and its effect on the availability of pesticide information, are not known because EPA does not collect information on the use of the provision and does not coordinate with states to do so. By coordinating with states, through the cooperative agreements or some other mechanism, to collect information on the use of the designated representative provision, EPA would be better positioned to determine whether the provision is serving its intended purpose. Farmers have raised concerns that other farmers could be misusing pesticide information for competitive advantage. The EPA, state officials, and others told us they didn't know of any instances of misused information. But EPA guidance doesn't outline how pesticide information should be used. The authors made two recommendations, including that the EPA explain its expectations on the appropriate use of pesticide information.

I-Street Initiative – Evaluation of Intelligent School Zone Beacon and Vehicle-Cyclist Detection and Warning System

The main purpose of this study is to evaluate a smartphone-based app called "TravelSafely" developed by Temple.AI. This app has the capability to alert drivers if they exceed a given speed threshold in an active school zone or when they are approaching a cyclist and a collision is possible. The authors collected trajectory and eye tracking data from 50 participants. Each participant drove a circuit twice and, in each circuit, drive through 4 school zones and one staged cyclist. The driving subjects were randomized across three conditions: (1) Stealth/OFF condition (drivers did not receive any alerts), (2) Audio ON (drivers received audio alerts), and (3) Audio/Visual ON (drivers received both audio and visual alerts). Overall, the experimental study suggests that the availability of an app decreases the probability of speeding in school zones and increased visual scanning behavior. These could translate into improved situational awareness and increased safety in school zones. In the case of the bicyclist, the results showed a significant increase the probability of seeing the cyclist with the availability of the app when the bicyclist was not expected. This suggest the value of the app in improving safety in locations in which cyclists are generally not expected. It is useful to acknowledge that these results are based on a relatively small sample of valid data points. Therefore, future studies with larger samples are warranted.

Fintech Borrowers: Lax-Screening or Cream-Skimming?

Financial markets have recently witnessed a disruptive force: the rise of online intermediaries and, more generally, fintech companies, i.e., firms that apply technology to improve financial activities. This report studies the personal credit market using unique individual-level data covering financial-technical fintech and traditional lenders. The authors show that fintech lenders acquire market share by first lending to higher risk borrowers and then to safer borrowers, and mainly rely on hard information to make credit decisions. Fintech borrowers are significantly more likely to default than neighbor individuals with the same characteristics borrowing from traditional financial institutions. Furthermore, they tend to experience only a short-lived reduction in the cost of credit, because their indebtedness increases more than non-fintech borrowers a few months after loan origination. However, fintech lenders' pricing strategies are likely to take this into account.

Elder Justice: Health and Human Services Could Do More to Encourage State Reporting on the Costs of Financial Exploitation

Elder financial exploitation—the fraudulent or illegal use of an older adult’s funds or property—has far-reaching effects on victims and society. Understanding the scope of the problem has thus far been hindered by a lack of nationwide data. In 2013, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) worked with states to create the National Adult Maltreatment Reporting System (NAMRS), a voluntary system for collecting adult protective services data on elder abuse, including financial exploitation. The authors were asked to study the extent to which NAMRS provides information on elder financial exploitation. This report examines (1) the status of HHS’s efforts to compile nationwide data through NAMRS on the extent of financial exploitation and the challenges involved, and (2) what is known about the costs of financial exploitation to victims and others. The authors analyzed NAMRS data from Fiscal Year 2016 through 2019 (the most recent available); reviewed relevant federal laws; and interviewed officials from HHS, other federal agencies, elder abuse prevention organizations, and researchers. They also reviewed adult protective services documents and spoke with officials in eight states, including Florida, selected based on their efforts to study, collect, and report cost data; and reviewed studies on financial exploitation.

Deaths: Final Data for 2018

This report presents final 2018 data on U.S. deaths, death rates, life expectancy, infant and maternal mortality, and trends by selected characteristics such as age, sex, Hispanic origin and race, state of residence, and cause of death. The race categories are consistent with 1997 Office of Management and Budget (OMB) standards, which are different from previous reports (1977 OMB standards). In 2018, a total of 2,839,205 resident deaths were registered in the United States, yielding a crude death rate of 867.8 per 100,000 population. The age-adjusted death rate, which accounts for the aging of the population, was 723.6 deaths per 100,000 U.S. standard population. Life expectancy at birth was 78.7 years. The top five leading causes of death in 2018 were 1) heart disease, 2) cancer, 3) accidents, 4) chronic lower respiratory disease, and 5) stroke. The age-adjusted death rate decreased 1.1% from 731.9 per 100,000 standard population in 2017 to 723.6 in 2018. Life expectancy for females was 5.0 years higher than for males, the same as in 2017. The difference in life expectancy between the sexes has narrowed since 1979, when it was 7.8 years. Among external causes of injury death, unintentional poisoning has been the leading mechanism of injury mortality since 2011.

Independent Evaluation of the Comprehensive Primary Care Plus: Third Annual Report

This report to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services covers the first three years of Comprehensive Primary Care Plus for the 2,905 practices in regions that began the program in 2017. Comprehensive Primary Care Plus is the largest primary care payment and delivery reform effort tested in the U.S. to date. The report examines (1) engagement in the program by payer partners and health information technology vendors and participation by practices; (2) the supports practices received; (3) how practices were implemented by the program and changed the way they delivered health care; and (4) the impacts of the program on cost, service use, limited claims-based quality-of-care outcomes, and patient experience for attributed Medicare fee-for-service beneficiaries three years into the five year model. Key findings include that the program continued to provide practices with substantial supports including enhanced and alternative payments, data feedback, learning activities, and health information technology vendor supports. The program practices built on their progress from the first two years to make important changes in care, including providing care management to high-risk patients and integrating behavioral health care into their practices. There were a few small favorable effects on some measures of service use, quality of care, and patient experience for Medicare fee-for-service beneficiaries. And when including enhanced payments to the program's practices, the program increased government expenditures for Medicare beneficiaries.

Wearable Sensor Technology and Potential Uses Within Law Enforcement: Identifying High-Priority Needs to Improve Officer Safety, Health, and Wellness Using Wearable Sensor Technology

Many wearable sensor technology devices on the market enable individuals and organizations to track and monitor personal health metrics in real time. These devices are worn by the user and contain sensors to capture various biomarkers. Although these technologies are not yet sufficiently developed for law enforcement purposes overall, wearable sensor technology devices continue to advance rapidly and offer the potential to equip law enforcement officers and agencies with data to improve officer safety, health, and wellness. For example, in the short term, they provide information on the officer's physical condition, fitness, and readiness. In the long term, they could be used to alert officers to emerging health concerns. Key findings from this report include that current wearable sensor technology devices are not sufficiently developed for law enforcement purposes overall because they lack the accuracy and precision needed to inform and support decision-making. The short-term focus should be on preparing for a time when technology will be more applicable to law enforcement roles. Now is the time for law enforcement to participate in the process of developing wearable sensor technology devices.

Racial Disparities in Motor Vehicle Searches Cannot Be Justified by Efficiency

During traffic stops, police search black and Hispanic motorists more often than white motorists, yet those searches are equally or less likely to yield contraband. The authors ask whether equalizing search rates by motorist race would reduce contraband yield. They use unique administrative data from Texas to isolate variation in search behavior across highway patrol troopers and find that, across troopers, search rates are unrelated to the proportion of searches that yield contraband. These results imply that, in partial equilibrium, troopers can equalize search rates across racial groups, maintain the status quo search rate, and increase contraband yield.

Alternatives to Arrests and Police Responses to Homelessness

In response to unsheltered homelessness, communities often turn to punitive responses: issuing ordinances that criminalize homelessness, clearing homeless encampments, and arresting people. This results in people becoming trapped in a cycle of homelessness and jail. Until housing is available at the scale needed to end homelessness, communities can improve outcomes for people enduring unsheltered homelessness and for the community as a whole by considering promising innovations that prioritize inclusive public space management and shift the role of law enforcement agencies from policing homelessness to solving homelessness in partnerships with service providers. This report reviews the evidence for housing as the solution to homelessness and emerging evidence for inclusive public space and alternative crisis response policies and practices.

Exploring Coherence in English Language Arts Instructional Systems in the Common Core Era

Coherence among components of an instructional system is key to changing teachers' instructional practices in standards-based reforms. Coherence involves working across traditional silos—or system components (e.g., curriculum, professional learning, assessment)—to integrate components to avoid fragmentation of experiences for educators and students. The authors set out to understand how districts and schools are activating various policy levers (i.e., instructional components) to drive instructional coherence and student learning in English language arts in the Common Core era. The authors investigate the coherence of teachers' instructional systems using survey data from state-representative samples of teachers and smaller samples of district leaders across three states: Louisiana, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island. Findings include (1) few English language arts teachers used standards-aligned curriculum materials in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, while most did in Louisiana; (2) in classrooms composed of more than half students of color, teachers were more likely to use standards-aligned materials than those with fewer; (3) teachers generally received multiple supports to implement their curriculum materials, but elementary teachers were more likely to receive these supports than teachers at higher grades; (4) teachers differed tremendously by states in their English language arts instructional systems, with teachers in Louisiana reporting teaching in systems that show evidence of far greater coherence; and (5) there is greater evidence of incoherent instructional systems for teachers serving more students with disabilities and for elementary teachers.

The Transfer Landscape: A Survey of College Officials

Given the environment surrounding higher education and the workforce, it seems like this should be transfer's moment. Transferring from one college to another has historically been harder than it should be, with impediments at many points along the way. The incentives for institutions and students to smooth out the process right now are greater than ever before, given the current and pending declines in traditional college-age students, the likelihood that COVID-19 will scramble students' college-going patterns, and the societal push for racial equity that is increasing pressure on colleges to diversify their student bodies. A new survey, however, underscores some of the attitudes and practices that have historically impeded the path for transfer students -- and identifies perceptual gaps between administrators at two-year and four-year colleges that could be difficult to overcome. Among the key findings of the report, which queried administrators who are involved with transfer policies or practices at two- or four-year colleges: roughly three-quarters of administrators at two-year and four-year colleges alike agree that students who transfer from one institution to another perform as well as or better at the receiving institution than do students who began at that institution. Additionally, two-year college officials give themselves higher ratings at preparing students for transfer than do their four-year-college counterparts -- but even the community college officials don't rate themselves very highly. Officials from all institutions overwhelmingly agree that a "centralized approach to credit evaluation works better for transfer student enrollment" than does leaving those decisions up to individual departments and professors. But four-year college administrators are two to three times likelier than their two-year-college peers to agree that, "faculty experts in individual academic departments are effective at deciding which and how many credits students may transfer to a major program."

Expanding the Arts Across the Juvenile Justice System

In a one-day count in 2018, an estimated 37,529 youths resided in juvenile placement facilities across the United States. While the estimated number of juveniles in residential placement facilities has dropped by more than half over 20 years, alternative placement to other government juvenile facilities continues to remove youths from their community and education, creating inequitable, unreliable or inaccessible opportunities to engage in the arts. In addition, the COVID-19 pandemic has intensified persistent inequities in the juvenile justice system, particularly access to resources related to youth well-being and developmental success, such as the arts. This report identifies considerations for effective and sustainable arts-based programming, identifies the key actors in policy and implementation for arts education, and considers the state and federal policy opportunities and barriers for implementing arts-based programming in juvenile justice systems.

Learning During the COVID-19 Pandemic: It Is Not Who You Teach, but How You Teach

The authors use standardized end-of-course knowledge assessments to examine student learning during the disruptions induced by the COVID-19 pandemic. Examining seven economics courses taught at four U.S. institutions classified as R1 doctoral universities with very high research activity, they find that students performed substantially worse, on average, in Spring 2020 when compared to Spring or Fall 2019. They find no evidence that the effect was driven by specific demographic groups. However, their results suggest that teaching methods that encourage active engagement, such as the use of small group activities and projects, played an important role in mitigating this negative effect. The results point to methods for more effective online teaching as the pandemic continues.

State Insights on Renewing a Cross-Government for Water Affordability

This report explores what constitutes good water governance through the lenses of water affordability and equity. While the topic was selected prior to the outbreak of COVID-19, the pandemic has further revealed and exacerbated health and financial disparities across racial, gender, and geographic lines. The water sector has a unique opportunity to rethink how governments build the water infrastructure grid. Communities are still living on subsidized investments made by the federal government for water infrastructure from the 1950s to the 1980s. Ratepayers cannot finance that scale of investment to rebuild currently failing infrastructure. Going forward, the federal government will need to subsidize replacement costs and/or rethink current water infrastructure, particularly treatment technologies. This is especially true in the midst of the ongoing pandemic and economic recession. The economy cannot recover in communities that do not have clean water or sanitation. The costs of a modern water infrastructure grid could be less expensive if rebuilt differently. Envisioning a new water grid requires identifying what works and does not work with the current system. This includes revisiting plumbing codes, fire suppression systems, or centralized treatment technologies. The water sector must take this opportunity to shift its water paradigm before spending trillions to rebuild a water grid that struggles to meet the needs of the 21st century. A modern water grid must be equitable, sustainable, and affordable. A utility that is affordable for the community will be more affordable for their customers, including individual households.

The U.S. Essential Workforce Ages 50 and Older: A Snapshot

The COVID-19 pandemic has highlighted the importance of the essential workforce. Spread across many industries and occupational groups, these workers have kept vital parts of the U.S. critical infrastructure, economy, and health care system in operation. Many of these essential workers, totaling about 16.1 million, are ages 50 and older. Women are more likely than men to be essential workers. Among workers ages 50+, 33.2% of women are designated as essential, compared with 27.2% of men. Among all race/ethnicities, Black/African American workers are most likely to be designated as essential. Black/African American women are the demographic of workers ages 50+ who are most likely to be essential workers. Despite the vital importance of the work they are doing, particularly during the pandemic, many U.S. essential workers of all ages, including the 50+, earn low wages.

Economic Benefits of COVID-19 Screening Tests

The authors assess the economic value of screening testing programs as a policy response to the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic. They find that the fiscal, macroeconomic, and health benefits of rapid SARS-CoV-2 screening testing programs far exceed their costs, with the ratio of economic benefits to costs typically in the range of 4-15 (depending on program details), not counting the monetized value of lives saved. Unless the screening test is highly specific, however, the signal value of the screening test alone is low, leading to concerns about adherence. Confirmatory testing increases the net economic benefits of screening tests by reducing the number of healthy workers in quarantine and by increasing adherence to quarantine measures.

Organ Transplants: Changes in Allocation Policies for Donated Livers and Lungs

The Organ Procurement and Transplantation Network (OPTN) develops allocation policies in the United States to determine which transplant candidates receive offers for organs, such as livers or lungs, that are donated from deceased donors. In July 2018, the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), which oversees OPTN, directed it to change the liver allocation policy to be more consistent with federal regulations. The liver allocation policy changed in February 2020 from a system that, in general, offered donated livers first to the sickest candidates within the fixed boundaries of a donation service area or region to a system based on a candidate's level of illness and distance from the donor hospital. The current liver allocation policy offers livers first to the sickest candidates within 500 nautical miles of the donor hospital using a series of distance-based concentric circles, called acuity circles. This report outlines the changes to the liver allocation policy and the similarities and differences in the processes OPTN used to change the liver and lung allocation policies, and federal oversight of these processes, among other things.

The COVID-19 Hazard Continues, But the Hazard Pay Does Not: Why America's Essential Workers Need a Raise

The United States has entered a third peak of the COVID-19 pandemic, with cases spiking across the country. Many experts anticipate that the winter months will be the worst yet, and a new study projects that the U.S. could surpass 500,000 COVID-19 deaths by the end of February. As the U.S. begins this even deadlier phase of the pandemic, the country's 50 million frontline essential workers are among the most vulnerable. This report looks at the state of hazard pay for COVID-19's frontline essential workers. The unequal sacrifices shouldered by low-wage frontline workers require policy solutions such as federal hazard pay during the pandemic and a higher minimum wage so that workers permanently earn a living wage. The pandemic has laid bare the wide gap between the low wages that frontline workers earn and the essential value they bring to society.

Capital Punishment, 2018 - Statistical Tables

This report presents information on persons under sentence of death on December 31, 2018 and persons executed in 2018. Tables show state-by-state statistics on the movement of prisoners sentenced to death during 2018, the status of capital statutes, and methods of execution. Data include offender characteristics, such as sex, race, ethnicity, criminal history, and time between the imposition of a death sentence and execution. At year-end 2018, a total of 30 states and the Federal Bureau of Prisons held 2,628 prisoners under sentence of death, which was 75 (3%) fewer than at year-end 2017. Eight states executed a total of 25 prisoners in 2018, with Texas accounting for more than half (13) of the executions. California (28%), Florida (13%), and Texas (8%) held about half of the prisoners under death sentences in the United States at year-end 2018. The largest declines in the number of prisoners under death sentences in 2018 were in Pennsylvania and Texas (down 11 prisoners each), followed by Washington (down 8) and then Alabama, Florida, California, and Nevada (down 6 each).

Understanding Police Enforcement: A Multicity 911 Analysis

With more than 240 million 911 calls each year, a sizable proportion of police officers' time consists of responding to calls for service. Despite the importance of the 911 call system, little information exists on the nature of calls for service, how they are handled, and how police respond. The Vera Institute of Justice partnered with two police departments (Camden, New Jersey and Tucson, Arizona) to study this crucial component of the policing system. Researchers employed a five-pronged mixed methods approach: reviewing the literature on 911 calls for service; mapping the 911 call system process and analyzing 911 call audio records; analyzing computer-aided dispatch (CAD) data; applying Natural Language Processing techniques to assess narrative fields in CAD data; and analyzing linked CAD and record management system data. By combining these five research components, Vera sought to identify alternatives to traditional 911 call-processing practices that could potentially improve outcomes for community members, call-takers, dispatchers, and police officers. The most frequent incident type was noncriminal in nature; with the most frequent incident type some variation of a complaint or request for an officer to perform a welfare check. In addition, the most common priority types were nonemergency. These findings suggest the need for future research and local conversations about whether certain types of 911 calls for service require responses by police. There are critical gaps in knowledge regarding the underlying needs, causes, and consequences for these resource intensive calls for service that do not involve a crime.

Do sexual and gender minorities (SGMs) in the United States encounter disproportionate rates of victimization as compared with their cisgender, heterosexual counterparts? Answering this question has proved elusive because nationally representative victimization data have not included victims' sexual orientation or gender identity. The National Crime Victimization Survey, the nation's primary source of representative information on criminal victimization, began documenting sexual orientation and gender identity in 2016 and released data publicly for the first time in 2019. The authors find SGMs disproportionately are victims across a variety of crimes. The rate of violent victimization for SGMs is 71.1 victimizations per 1,000 people compared with 19.2 victimizations per 1,000 people for those who are not SGMs. Sexual and gender minorities are 2.7 times more likely to be a victim of violent crime than non-SGMs. These findings raise the importance of further considering sexual orientation and gender identity in victimization and interventions.

Individual and Geographic Variation in Driver's License Suspensions: Evidence of Disparities by Race, Ethnicity and Income

Although access to a motor vehicle is essential for pursuing social and economic opportunity and ensuring health and well-being, states have increasingly used driver's license suspensions as a means of compelling compliance with a variety of laws and regulations unrelated to driving, including failure to pay a fine or appear in court. Little known about the population of suspended drivers and what geographic resources may be available to them to help mitigate the impact of a suspension. Using data from the New Jersey Safety Health Outcomes (NJ-SHO) data warehouse 2004–2018, the authors compared characteristics of suspended drivers, their residential census tract, as well as access to public transportation and jobs, by reason for the suspension (driving or non-driving related). In addition, they examined trends in the incidence and prevalence of driving and non-driving-related suspensions by sub-type over time. The authors found that the vast majority (91%) of license suspensions were for non-driving-related events, with the most common reason for a suspension being failure to pay a fine. Compared to drivers with a driving-related suspension or no suspension, non-driving-related suspended drivers lived in census tracts with a lower household median income, higher proportion of black and Hispanic residents and higher unemployment rates, but also better walkability scores and better access to public transportation and jobs. This study contributes to a growing literature that shows, despite public perception that they are meant to address traffic safety, the majority of suspensions are for non-driving related events. Further, these non-driving-related suspensions are most common in low-income communities and communities with a high-proportion of black and Hispanic residents. Although non-driving-related suspensions are also concentrated in communities with better access to public transportation and nearby jobs, additional work is needed to determine what effect this has for the social and economic well-being of suspended drivers.

New Data Measuring High School to Postsecondary Transitions by State and Year

Transitions from high school to college are challenging for many students, but key for long-term success. Thus, they are a major focus of education policy and research. However, systematically measuring how students progress from high school to college can be difficult, largely because it requires linking data from disparate K–12 and postsecondary systems. Currently, there is no central source of data on whether high school graduates are enrolling, persisting, and completing postsecondary education by the state of the high school they attended. In partnership with the National Student Clearinghouse, Mathematica embarked on an effort to use existing data to produce timely measures of high school to postsecondary transitions by year and state of high school attended. The resulting measures produced include college enrollment, persistence, and completion rates for the 2002 to 2019 cohorts of high school graduates in all 50 states. In Florida, the overall college enrollment rate (students who enter college by age 19) has ranged between 92% (for the 2002 cohort) to 75% (for the 2019 cohort).

This is Not a Test. This is an Emergency: Special Considerations for Assessing and Advancing Equity in School-Year 2020-21

State policymakers are confronting well-documented intersecting crises – medical, economic, and racial – with especially dire implications for educational equity. State education leaders face a moral urgency to both understand and respond to the challenges students are experiencing and to do so in ways that address burgeoning equity gaps. Education assessment can play a crucial role in identifying these learning and related challenges, allowing policy leaders to direct resources to where the needs are the greatest. It will be incredibly challenging, however, to collect, interpret, and use high-quality state standardized test data this school year. This brief recognizes this conundrum and offers recommendations for state leaders regarding assessment in 2020-21 including: 1) Separate assessment from accountability. There are serious threats to producing valid data to support accountability decisions this year. Changes to accountability systems will require a waiver to state Every Student Succeeds Act (ESSA) plans and possibly change in state law or regulation. 2) Plan now! State standardized tests operate on a long planning and quality-control-cycle, therefore, the time to act is now. Planning must begin almost immediately. Waiting until January or February will be too late to adapt testing systems to best understand and act on opportunity gaps and learning progress. Plans should also account for various contingencies, particularly due to remote and hybrid schooling, and allow for adjustment as conditions change. 3) Collect Opportunity-to-Learn information. States must design a system for collecting data to document and understand students' access to the resources, tools, and experiences they need to learn.

Persistence and Convergence: The End of Kindergarten Outcomes of Pre-K Graduates and Their Nonattending Peers

The present investigation considers the differences in school readiness skills across the kindergarten year between a group of pre-K attenders and non-attenders who came from low-income and ethnically and linguistically diverse homes (n= 2,581). As part of this effort, the authors also consider the degree to which the benefits of pre-K diminish by the end of kindergarten (i.e., convergence) and the extent to which this convergence is a result of children without prior pre-K experience making ground (i.e., catch-up) or children with prior pre-K experience losing ground (i.e., fadeout). Results revealed that pre-K graduates outperformed non-attenders in the areas of achievement and executive functioning skills at the end of kindergarten, and also that the benefits of pre-K at the start of the year diminished by a little more than half. This convergence between groups' performance was largest for more constrained skills, such as letter-word identification, and was attributed to the fact that non-attenders made greater gains in kindergarten as compared with graduates of pre-K. Importantly, convergence in the groups' performance in kindergarten was not attributed to pre-K children's classroom experiences in kindergarten. Convergence was, however, attributable to preexisting individual differences, and there was support for the notion that even though children's skills are susceptible to improvement as a result of pre-K, their longer-term outcomes are likely to be impacted by factors that are outside the scope of early schooling.

2020 Survey of Admissions Leaders: A Mess of a Year

This year, fear and anxiety regarding college admissions spread throughout higher education, according to the 2020 Inside Higher Ed Survey of College and University Admissions Officials, conducted by Gallup between August 6 and 30, 2020. The survey of 433 senior admissions officials (only one per institution) found: 1) A record number were very concerned about filling their classes; 2) A majority (also a record) not only did not fill their classes by May 1 (the traditional deadline) but did not fill their classes by July 1; 3) A significant minority of private colleges said they were taking advantage of rules changes made by the National Association for College Admission Counseling to recruit students; 4) Most colleges expect enrollment to decrease this year; 5) A majority of those that went test optional or test blind during the pandemic do not expect to ever restore a standardized testing requirement in admissions; and 6) Private college officials were much more likely than their public counterparts to say they played a key role in deciding what the college would do this fall, with regard to campus openings.

Keep It Simple: Streamlining Book Illustrations Improves Attention and Comprehension in Beginning Readers

This study used eye-tracking to examine whether extraneous illustration details—a common design in beginning reader storybooks—promote attentional competition and hinder learning. The study used a within-subject design with first- and second-grade children. Children (n = 60) read a story in a commercially available Standard condition and in a Streamlined condition, in which extraneous illustrations were removed while an eye-tracker recorded children's gaze shifts away from the text, fixations to extraneous illustrations, and fixations to relevant illustrations. Extraneous illustrations promoted attentional competition and hindered reading comprehension: children made more gaze shifts away from text in the Standard compared to the Streamlined condition, and reading comprehension was significantly higher in the Streamlined condition compared to the Standard condition. Importantly, fixations toward extraneous details accounted for the unique variance in reading comprehension controlling for reading proficiency and attending to relevant illustrations. Furthermore, a follow-up control experiment (n = 60) revealed that these effects did not solely stem from enhanced text saliency in the Streamlined condition and reproduced the finding of a negative relationship between fixations to extraneous details and reading comprehension. This study provides evidence that the design of reading materials can be optimized to promote literacy development in young children.

How Can Cities Create More Equitable Transportation Systems?

All Americans need some form of transportation to access employment, education, health care, and other services. But not everyone has equal access to high-quality, reliable, and safe transportation. To understand the barriers to transportation and to identify ways transportation systems can become more equitable, the authors studied four metropolitan regions (Seattle, Washington; Lansing, Michigan; Baltimore, Maryland; and Nashville, Tennessee), each a distinct type in its transportation infrastructure, sprawl, fiscal health, population growth, and housing costs. Through data analysis and interviews with community leaders, the authors found that these varied cities share common barriers to equity—and common solutions. Common solutions include metro regions defining transportation equity in partnership with historically excluded residents, transportation departments having dedicated funding sources to allow for equitable and innovative transportation decisions, and cities collecting data to track transportation equity and create tools to help them make transportation decisions with equity as a key consideration.

The Challenge of Decarbonizing Heavy Transport

Many jurisdictions are focused on achieving very low or net-zero greenhouse gas emissions by mid-century, bringing a spotlight to the biggest challenges in decarbonization. The transportation sector is responsible for about one-quarter of global greenhouse gas emissions and emissions are growing, even in the developed world where other emissions are generally flat. Liquid fuels made from oil dominate the sector; they are easy to transport and store, contain a great deal of energy for their weight and volume, and enable use of internal combustion engines. The degree of difficulty in decarbonizing transport varies across the sector. Electrification is relatively easy for smaller vehicles that travel shorter distances carrying lighter loads. For these vehicles, the added weight of a battery is less of a hindrance and the inherently simpler and more efficient electric motor and drivetrain (the system that delivers power from the motor to the wheels) make up for some of the weight penalty. However, the heavier forms of transportation are among the fastest growing, meaning that the nation must consider solutions for these more difficult vehicles as well. The challenge of decarbonizing these sectors and the technologies to overcome these challenges are global, but this paper focuses on policy options in the United States. Decarbonization of heavy transport lags behind other sectors, but spillover effects can help. For example, some advanced biofuel technologies produce a range of fuels, similar to making a range of fuels from crude oil. Today's supply of bio-jet fuel comes from such processes, despite a lack of policy for jet fuel decarbonization. More synergies could emerge if carbon capture becomes a common way to decarbonize difficult stationary sources of greenhouse gases, like some industrial processes. Captured carbon dioxide (CO<sub>2</sub>) can be combined with hydrogen produced with renewable electricity to make liquid fuels. Technology exists to decarbonize the heavy transport sector, although many advanced technologies are expensive and not proven at scale. The challenge for policymakers will be keeping technology advances and policy in alignment as the technology advances.

Voices from the Field: Engaging Employers to Connect Young Adults to Good Fit Employment

America's youngest workers are facing the most dire employment prospects since the Great Depression. At the start of 2020, nearly five million young people ages 16-24 were neither enrolled in school nor working. Today, their unemployment crisis has been greatly exacerbated by the pandemic. This disconnection, both before and after the arrival of COVID-19, has had an outsized impact on young workers of color. Across the country, workforce development and education providers are scrambling to meet the needs of these young people. Now more than ever, they need accurate information on available employment, including wages, health insurance, paid leave, scheduling, and safety, among other things. This report compiles insights from workforce professionals about the types of questions they ask employers. Two hundred and ten workforce professionals in Cleveland, Indianapolis, and Philadelphia responded to a survey about the kinds of conversations they have with business representatives on topics related to workplace practices, environment, and equity and inclusion in the workplace. Although the survey that informed this publication was conducted before the pandemic, the questions are increasingly relevant and important today. The report finds that businesses are using employer engagement survey results to inform capacity-building strategies to help workforce professionals, especially those who are new to the field, develop an understanding of how and why having learning-focused engagement with employers is important. An objective of this work is to equip workforce professionals to build standing and confidence for deeper engagement with employers about their workplace environment, workplace practices, and employees' experiences.

Child Care Facilities: Federal Agencies Need to Enhance Monitoring and Collaboration to Help Assure Drinking Water is Safe from Lead

The Department of Health and Human Services' (HHS) Office of Child Care provides states with resources and technical assistance to help determine if drinking water in child care facilities is safe from lead. However, the office does not require that drinking water be tested because there is no requirement to do so under the Office of Child Care-administered Child Care and Development Block Grant, a key federal funding source for states to subsidize child care. Nonetheless, some states require child care providers to test their drinking water for lead. Children who are exposed to lead can experience serious developmental delays. Many young children spend significant amounts of time in child care settings. The authors were asked to review efforts to address lead in drinking water at child care facilities. The authors reviewed relevant laws, regulations and documents, and conducted a generalizable survey of 762 Head Start centers. To obtain information on lead testing and remediation, the authors also visited or interviewed 11 child care providers and Head Start grantees in four states that were selected for geographic variation and the presence of state laws for lead in drinking water. HHS's Office of Head Start has performance standards that require grantees to provide safe drinking water to children, but Office of Head Start does not ensure grantees comply with them. For example, the Office of Head Start does not require grantees to test their water or document that it is safe from lead, nor does the Office of Head Start check grantees' compliance with this standard during monitoring reviews. According to an Office of Head Start official, the office limits the number of standards it monitors to more efficiently use its limited resources. However, without documentation, the Office of Head Start does not have reasonable assurance that Head Start grantees provide safe drinking water. In fact, an estimated 43% of Head Start centers had not tested their drinking water for lead in late 2018 or 2019, and 31% did not know whether they had tested, according to the authors' nationwide survey. The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has awarded grants to help child care facilities test for lead in drinking water, but has not taken sufficient action to ensure its 2019 Memorandum of Understanding with the Office of Child Care and Office of Head Start, which encourages lead testing, is being executed. The authors make four recommendations including that Office of Head Start require grantees to document that water provided to children is safe from lead, and for EPA and HHS to improve their collaboration.

Children's Uninsured Rate Rises by Largest Annual Jump in More Than a Decade

After reaching a historic low of 4.7% in 2016, the child uninsured rate began to increase in 2017, and as of 2019 jumped back up to 5.7%. This increase of a full percentage point translates to approximately 726,000 more children. Much of the gain in coverage that children made as a consequence of the Affordable Care Act's major coverage expansions implemented in 2014 has now been eliminated. The largest increase was observed between 2018 and 2019 when, despite a continued strong economy, the number of children without health insurance rose by 320,000. This increase in the number of uninsured children was the largest annual jump seen in more than a decade. Moreover, since this data was collected prior to the pandemic, the number of uninsured children is likely considerably higher in 2020, as families have lost their jobs and employer-sponsored insurance, though it is impossible to know yet by precisely how much. One-third of the total increase in the number of uninsured children from 2016 to 2019 live in Texas. The state saw by far the greatest coverage loss over the period with an estimated 243,000 more children living without health coverage. Florida has the next biggest loss, adding about 55,000 children to the uninsured count over the three-year period. Twenty-nine states experienced an adverse change for children from 2016 to 2019. The only state that bucked national trends and significantly reduced its number of uninsured children during this three-year time period was New York. These coverage losses were widespread across income, age, and race/ethnicity, but were largest among White and especially Latino children (who can be of any race).

Using Natural Language Processing to Code Patient Experience Narratives

Patient narratives about experiences with health care contain a wealth of information about what is important to patients. These narratives are valuable for both identifying strengths and weaknesses in health care and developing strategies for improvement. However, rigorous qualitative analysis of the extensive data contained in these narratives is a resource-intensive process, and one that can exceed the capabilities of human analysts. One potential solution to these challenges is natural language processing, which uses computer algorithms to extract structured meaning from unstructured natural language. Because natural language processing is a relatively new undertaking in the field of health care, the authors set out to demonstrate its feasibility for organizing and classifying these data in a way that can generate actionable information. In doing so, the authors focused on two steps that must be performed by a machine learning system designed to classify narratives into such codes as those typically applied by human coders (e.g., positive or negative statements regarding care coordination). These steps are (1) numerically representing the text data (in this case, entire narratives as they are provided by patients) and (2) classifying the data by codes based on that representation. The authors also compared four related approaches to deploying machine learning algorithms, identified potential pitfalls in the processing of data, and showed how natural language processing can be used to supplement and support human coding. The success of the fairly simple models described in this pilot study supports the promise of these approaches for analyzing patient narratives at larger scale and there is labor-saving potential in leveraging the strengths of both machine and human coders, potentially in creative ways. Perhaps the most obvious opportunity for additional investment is increasing the size of the data set on which to train the models, which the authors expect would improve performance. Efficiency may be gained by contracting model building to specialized companies.

A Randomized Trial of Permanent Supportive Housing for Chronically Homeless Persons with High Use of Publicly Funded Services

Homelessness is associated with high use of acute health care services, including emergency department and inpatient care. Among homeless individuals, a small group (referred to as “frequent users”) account for a large proportion of all acute service use. The purpose of this study was to examine whether randomization to permanent supportive housing (subsidized housing with closely linked, voluntary supportive services) versus usual care reduces the use of acute health care and other services among chronically homeless high users of county-funded services. Between 2015 and 2019, the authors assessed service use from Santa Clara County, California, administrative claims data for all county-funded health care, jail and shelter, and mortality. The authors enrolled 423 participants (199 intervention; 224 control). Eighty-six percent of those randomized to permanent supportive housing received housing compared with 36% in usual care. On average, the 169 individuals housed by the permanent supportive housing intervention have remained housed for 28.8 months (92.9% of the study follow-up period). The intervention decreased psychiatric emergency department visits and shelter use, and increased outpatient mental health care, but not medical emergency department visits or hospitalizations. Limitations included more than one-third of usual care participants received another form of subsidized housing, potentially biasing results to the null, and loss of power due to high death rates. Permanent supportive housing can house high-risk individuals and reduce emergent psychiatric services and shelter use. Reductions in hospitalizations may be more difficult to realize.

Jails in Indian Country, 2017-2018

This report is the 17th in a series that began in 1998. It provides statistics from the Bureau of Justice Statistics' Annual Survey of Jails in Indian Country on the demographic characteristics, most serious offense, and conviction status of the tribal inmate population, and it describes facility characteristics, including bed space and staffing. Highlights from this report include: 1) A total of 84 jails in Indian country held an estimated 2,870 inmates at midyear 2018, up from 2,820 inmates in 2017 and from 1,775 inmates (held in 68 facilities) in 2000; 2) Jails in Indian country were rated to hold an estimated maximum of 4,290 inmates at midyear 2018, up from 4,200 at midyear 2017; 3) From midyear 2000 to midyear 2018, the overall rated capacity of jails in Indian country increased by 107%, while the midyear inmate population increased by 62%; and 4) Occupied bed space declined from 86% of rated capacity at midyear 2000 to 67% at midyear 2018.

California's 2019 Crime Rate is the Lowest in Recorded State History

California's crime rate fell by 3% from 2018 to 2019. This fact sheet reveals that crime rates have declined over the past decade amid statewide criminal justice reforms. Crime rates in the state fell by 12% from 2010 through 2019, with California jurisdictions reporting reductions in most major crime types, including burglary and robbery. There is variation across counties, which indicates the critical role that local policies play in crime trends.

State Policy Landscape Report: K12 Climate Action

This report looks at key areas where states have policies that can support schools in moving toward climate action. The report highlights opportunities for growth by focusing on state-level policy in the following focus areas: (1) Mitigation; (2) Adaptation; and (3) Education. With 98,000 public schools in the United States, the education sector has the opportunity to lead the nation into a new era that normalizes sustainable practices and equips the next generation to tackle the environmental challenges of the future. The report discusses key topic areas (including energy, transportation, food, adaptation and resilience, state standards, and career and technical education) and findings show that some states have started to work toward climate action, but there is more work to be done. Policymakers, school leaders, and educators can learn from the policy initiatives currently occurring across the country. The differences across states, the need to support schools in transitioning to environmental sustainability, and leadership from America's youth create an opportunity to further advance policy to support schools in addressing climate change. For example, 6 states have policies that target net-zero energy consumption in schools. Thirty-four states (including Florida) and Washington, D.C. have policies or programs to support local food in school meals. Twenty-nine states have career and technical education programs that prepare students for green careers.

Supports for Social and Emotional Learning in American Schools and Classrooms

Researchers present results from a spring 2019 survey of a nationally representative sample of kindergarten through grade 12 (K–12) public school teachers about their approaches to supporting students' social and emotional learning and the factors that might influence those approaches. The authors explore teachers' social and emotional learning practices, including both classroom- and school-level approaches. The authors also examine teachers' beliefs about social and emotional learning, their emotional well-being, professional development related to social and emotional learning, school-level supports for social and emotional learning, and district and state social and emotional learning standards. All of these conditions can contribute to the likelihood that educators will adopt high-quality social and emotional learning practices. The findings shed light on how social and emotional learning practices and supports can depend on the population of students that a school serves and explore how multiple aspects of teacher well-being are related to social and emotional learning practices. Although these data were gathered before schools closed because of the coronavirus disease 2019 (COVID-19) pandemic in spring 2020, the findings will continue to be relevant as educators work to enact social and emotional learning practices in both in-person and remote instructional contexts in future school years. The report finds that a large majority of teachers expressed confidence that they could improve students' social and emotional competencies. At the same time, many teachers believed that factors beyond their control had a greater influence on students' social and emotional learning than they did themselves, and that pressure to improve student academic achievement made it difficult to focus on social and emotional learning. Teachers' sense of well-being was positively associated with their reported emphasis on social and emotional learning practices. Teachers in lower-poverty schools reported higher levels of well-being compared with their counterparts in higher-poverty schools. Elementary teachers reported higher levels of school supports for social and emotional learning than secondary teachers did.

Kentucky FAME: Fulfilling the Promise of Apprenticeship

The economy is changing and, with it, America's need for postsecondary education and training. Not long ago, in the early 1980s, only one-third of U.S. jobs required more than a high school diploma. Today, two-thirds of jobs require some postsecondary education or training—not necessarily a four-year college degree, but some more specialized technical or nontechnical preparation for the world of work. The Federation for Advanced Manufacturing Education (FAME) began as a small, local initiative: Toyota Motor North America and a handful of other firms in central Kentucky came together to build a talent pipeline. Yet already in its early days, FAME was at the forefront of most of the trends that now define the nation's response to the changing nature of work. A national model of employer-provided training—founded, funded and managed by manufacturing companies—FAME stands at the crossroads of the push to expand apprenticeship and the drive to align it more closely with the nation's goals for postsecondary credential attainment. The message from Kentucky for policymakers, state and federal: redouble your efforts to take earn-and-learn training to scale. The report findings about Kentucky employment outcomes leave little doubt, and the good reviews heard from FAME graduates reinforce the point. Few approaches are more effective than apprenticeship in preparing learners for the workforce. Structured properly and offered in cooperation with a community college, earn-and-learn training can boost postsecondary credential attainment. And at a time of growing concern about economic inequality, Kentucky FAME shows what earn-and-learn programs can do to propel learners into the middle class.

Optimizing Practice Scheduling Requires Quantitative Tracking of Individual Item Performance

Decades of research has shown that spacing practice trials over time can improve later memory, but there are few concrete recommendations concerning how to optimally space practice. The authors show that existing recommendations are inherently suboptimal due to their insensitivity to time costs and individual- and item-level differences. The authors introduce an alternative approach that optimally schedules practice with a computational model of spacing in tandem with microeconomic principles. They simulated conventional spacing schedules and their adaptive model-based approach. Simulations indicated that practicing according to microeconomic principles of efficiency resulted in substantially better memory retention than alternatives. The simulation results provided quantitative estimates of optimal difficulty that differed markedly from prior recommendations but still supported a desirable difficulty framework. Experimental results supported simulation predictions, with up to 40% more items recalled in conditions where practice was scheduled optimally according to the model of practice. This approach can be readily implemented in online educational systems that adaptively schedule practice and has significant implications for millions of students currently learning with educational technology.

Measuring the Benefits of Ridesharing Services to Urban Travelers

Ridesharing consists of drivers who provide private trips with their own car without intervention from a regulatory authority; passengers who use their smart phone to request transportation to various destinations; and transportation network companies, such as Uber Technologies, Inc. (Uber) or Lyft, which match passengers' demand for trips and drivers' supply of vehicles with a smart phone application. Ridesharing services have grown rapidly since 2010 when Uber launched its first on-demand car service, UberCab, in San Francisco. The dramatic growth of ridesharing drivers' labor supply has been aided by the absence of medallion permits or occupational licensing requirements that apply to taxi drivers. In addition, ridesharing drivers have flexible hours, which enable them to smooth income fluctuations. Finally, capacity utilization, measured by the fraction of business hours or miles that a fare-paying passenger occupies a shared vehicle, is much greater for UberX drivers than for taxi drivers in, for example, New York City and Boston. In this paper, the authors measure the benefits of ridesharing services to travelers in the San Francisco Bay Area by estimating a mixed-logit model of mode choice. They include Uber as a representative ridesharing service and they quantify the welfare gain that it provides to travelers by estimating the difference in total benefits with and without its service. Consumers gain roughly $1 billion annually from Uber's non-fare attributes, such as personalized pricing, more transparent fares, and higher service quality, which consumers value but taxis have not provided. Annual benefits to travelers in major U.S. cities are likely to amount to several billions of dollars. Regulations that limit the expansion of ridesharing services are not justified and are likely to reduce travelers' welfare without addressing the problems of the modes that they seek to protect.

Impact of Information on Consumer Understanding of a Partially Automated Driving System

Recent advances in technology have made it possible for some vehicles, under certain circumstances, to control their speed and direction for an extended period of time without any input from the driver. These partially automated driving systems may give the impression that the car can "drive by itself," however, no vehicle available to consumers currently is designed to be used without an attentive driver who is ready and able to retake control of the vehicle at any time. Thus, it is imperative that drivers properly understand the capabilities and limitations of the technology in their vehicles. This report describes the results of an experimental study designed to investigate how seemingly small differences in marketing and training materials can influence consumers' initial understanding and expectations of a partially automated driving system. This study finds that consumer-oriented information emphasizing a partially automated driving system's capabilities, without commensurate emphasis given to the system's limitations, can produce inflated expectations regarding what the system can do and the situations that it can handle, with possible implications for safety. Results underscore the importance of providing consumer-oriented information that is not only technically accurate but also balanced, with appropriate emphasis given to the limitations of technology and the importance of driver engagement. These results add to the growing body of literature that suggests that the information drivers receive about driving automation technologies, including the name of the feature, can influence their expectations, and their actual use of the feature, in ways that have the potential to affect safety.

Policy Strategies to Build a More Inclusive Economy with Cooperatives

In this report, the authors provide an overview of how policy can help cooperatives build healthy, equitable, and sustainable communities. Cooperatives with engaged memberships that aspire to cooperative principles offer solutions to some of the country's biggest issues. For example, cooperatives help renters purchase homes, help people set up checking accounts or take out loans, help families access affordable child care, help older adults find reliable home care, and help people access fresh food. Examples of cooperatives are consumer cooperatives (e.g., grocery store cooperatives and credit unions) and worker cooperatives (i.e., businesses owned by some or all employees). The authors describe four broad policy goals: level the playing field, help grow the number of cooperatives in underserved markets, help grow the size and market share of existing cooperatives, and support cooperatives in reaching underserved people and communities. They also identify six specific ways policy can advance these goals, from enabling legislation to providing technical assistance. They conclude with steps that cooperatives can take to advance these policy goals such as building relationships with legislatures and collaborating with other cooperatives.

Veteran's Affairs Health Care: Better Data Needed to Assess the Health Outcomes of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender Veterans

The Department of Veterans Affairs' (VA) Veterans Health Administration analyzes national-level data by birth sex to assess health outcomes for women veterans. For example, it analyzes frequency data to identify their most common health conditions. However, the Veterans Health Administration is limited in its assessment of health outcomes for the lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender (LGBT) veteran population because it does not consistently collect sexual orientation or self-identified gender identity (SIGI) data. The Veterans Health Administration officials stated that providers may record veterans' sexual orientation—which can be used to identify lesbian, gay, and bisexual veterans—in non-standardized clinical notes in electronic health records. However, without a standardized field, providers may not be consistently collecting these data, and the Veterans Health Administration does not know the total number of these veterans in its system. The Veterans Health Administration officials recognize the importance of consistently collecting these data, but have yet to develop and implement a field for doing so. According to the VA, 89% of veterans' records lack gender identity data. Without this data, the VA may miss opportunities to provide appropriate health screenings and identify disparities. The authors recommended the VA improve its data collection and analysis to improve health equity and better understand the needs of LGBT veterans.

Current Contraceptive Status Among Women Aged 15–49: United States, 2017–2019

Nearly all women use contraception in their lifetimes, although at any given time, they may not be using contraception for reasons such as seeking pregnancy, being pregnant or postpartum, or not being sexually active. Using data from the 2017–2019 National Survey of Family Growth, this report provides a snapshot of current contraceptive status, in the month of interview, among women aged 15–49 in the United States. In addition to describing use of any method by age, Hispanic origin and race, and education, patterns of use are described for the four most commonly used contraceptive methods: female sterilization; oral contraceptive pills; long-acting reversible contraceptives, which include contraceptive implants and intrauterine devices; and the male condom. In 2017–2019, 65.3% of women aged 15–49 in the United States were currently using contraception. The most common contraceptive methods currently used were female sterilization (18.1%), oral contraceptive pills (14.0%), long-acting reversible contraceptives (10.4%), and the male condom (8.4%). Use of long-acting reversible contraceptives was higher among women aged 20–29 (13.7%) and 30–39 (12.7%) compared with women aged 15–19 (5.8%) and 40–49 (6.6%). Current condom use was higher among Hispanic women (10.5%) and non-Hispanic black women (11.0%) compared with non-Hispanic white women (7.0%). With higher education, female sterilization declined and use of the pill increased.

Association of the Built Environment With Childhood Psychosocial Stress

Emerging research suggests that factors associated with the built environment, including artificial light, air pollution, and noise, may adversely affect children’s mental health, while living near green space may reduce stress. Little is known about the combined roles of these factors on children’s stress. The objective of this study was to investigate associations between components of the built environment with personal and home characteristics in a large cohort of children who were assessed for perceived stress. In this cohort study, a total of 2290 Southern California Children’s Health Study participants residing in 8 densely populated urban communities responded to detailed questionnaires. Exposures of artificial light at night (ALAN) derived from satellite observations, near-roadway air pollution determined from a dispersion model, noise estimated from the U.S. Traffic Noise Model, and green space from satellite observations of the enhanced vegetation index were linked to each participant’s geocoded residence. Results show that children’s exposure to smoke at home in addition to residential exposure to ALAN and near-roadway air pollution were associated with increased perceived stress among young adolescent children. These associations appeared to be partially mitigated by more residential green space. The findings may support the promotion of increased residential green spaces to reduce pollution associated with the built environment, with possible mental health benefits for children.

Senator Burgess,

Port Tampa Bay is Florida's largest and most diverse port. We also are West Central Florida's largest economic engine, boasting an economic impact of over $17 billion. We are also responsible for roughly 80,000-85,000 direct and indirect jobs, many of these people are your constituents.

Throughout the COVID-19 pandemic, Port Tampa Bay has remained in a strong position due to our diversity and strength of business. We would like to invite you come see us and tour our facilities at your convenience. We can provide a short briefing on all that the port has to offer, then take a tour on a Hillsborough County Sheriff's Office boat so that you can see it all from the waterside.

I hope that you and your family have a wonderful holiday and we hope to see you soon!

Natalie Brown,

I am writing to you to ask you to please OPPOSE HB1 at the House Justice Appropriations meeting when it is scheduled for a hearing. I am outraged that this legislation even got assigned to a public hearing must less that it has been fast-tracked through the House on party lines. Florida currently faces the worst economic and public health crisis in history and instead of working to find solutions HB1 criminalizes free speech, peaceful assembly and dissent through unconstitutional language that is targeted at silencing Black voices demanding basic human rights, equality, and fair treatment by law enforcement.

Instead of addressing the horrendous housing crisis, the broken unemployment system, the failing healthcare system, the disorganized and chaotic education system, AND the rising number of deaths, poverty, job loss and sickness in Florida HB1 repackages legislation put forward by Governor DeSantis as a "response to the violent insurrectionist mobs" that attempted a coup on the nation's Capitol. This language is a smokescreen for the true intent of the bill which is to circumvent the mess that Florida has as a consequence of the pandemic and lack of support for Florida's poverty impacted and oppressed. I am not fooled by this. This is the same legislation it was back in September with the same purpose - to limit the basic civil rights of BLM protestors that is guaranteed to all people under the US Constitution.

I believe that HB1 is being used to distract media and organizers from focusing on the real problem: lack of support for those in need across the state. How dare the Governor and the Florida Legislature waste taxpayer time and money on proposing solutions to a made up problem. Section 870 of the Florida Statute already criminalizes riots, unlawful assemblies, and looting but this legislation would actually make it legal for motorists who strike protestors with their vehicle, even if the incident results in someone's death. It limits people's ability to apply to Florida's already broken unemployment system if they have been convicted under the proposed legislation and allows victims of violent crimes to recover civil damages from a local government that is deems responsible for grossly negligent "policing" during a "riot". Meanwhile, the Florida Legislature is fast-tracking HB7/SB72 to create COVID19 liability immunity for the real victims of negligence by businesses, government agencies, schools, and religious organizations who have caused the spread of COVID19.

The Executive Director of the ACLU of Florida, Micah Kubic, stated that "This (bill) is not an attempt to make our communities safer. This proposed legislation by DeSantis is nothing more than a campaign political stunt. Now, it is being disguised as a response to the failed violent coup at the US Capitol. And, it is just as unconstitutional."

A statewide survey of Florida voters put out after the attack by Donald Trump's supporters on the US Capitol suggested a lack of support for HB1 and Governor DeSantis' push to amp up criminal penalties for "disorderly" protests. Ninety-percent of those asked stated their support for "protecting our constitutional right to free assembly and free speech by legally protesting without fear of criminal charges". Seventy-one percent of Democrats and 74% of Republicans deemed the issue a top priority. Eighty percent of respondents said they were more likely to support a legislator who voted to protect that priority, and 56% were "much more likely". On the other hand, 83% of respondents thought that it was important to strengthen unemployment protections for people who lost their jobs because of COVID-19, 63% said that this was "very important". (1)

Finally, this legislation also creates a preemptive attack on local municipalities that might want to "defund" the police and put their money towards more humanitarian initiatives to provide real solutions to small business and economic crises caused by the pandemic. Instead of restricting local government's ability to find solutions we need legislation that answers the call of the people in the streets. People only protest when they are being abused, oppressed, marginalized or violated. It's time the House Justice Appropriations Subcommittee address the calls of Florida voters and people who cared enough to peacefully assemble. We need to face the issues head on and answer to the humanity and dignity of working class, black, brown, and immigrant families in Florida who are suffering with workable policies that help the state grow and prosper.

If this legislation passes I will be letting people know that they should not travel in Florida, they should not move to Florida, they should not visit Florida, because our government does not support them and keep them safe. Public health and the economy should be your number one priority. Please OPPOSE HB1 and support legislation that provides real solutions to the real problems Floridians face today.

A statewide survey of Florida voters put out after the attack by Donald Trump's supporters on the US Capitol suggested a lack of support for HB1 and Governor DeSantis' push to amp up criminal penalties for "disorderly" protests. Ninety-percent of those asked stated their support for "protecting our constitutional right to free assembly and free speech by legally protesting without fear of criminal charges". Seventy-one percent of Democrats and 74% of Republicans deemed the issue a top priority. Eighty percent of respondents said they were more likely to support a legislator who voted to protect that priority, and 56% were "much more likely". On the other hand, 83% of respondents thought that it was important to strengthen unemployment protections for people who lost their jobs because of COVID-19, 63% said that this was "very important". (1)

Finally, this legislation also creates a preemptive attack on local municipalities that might want to "defund" the police and put their money towards more humanitarian initiatives to provide real solutions to small business and economic crises caused by the pandemic. Instead of restricting local government's ability to find solutions we need legislation that answers the call of the people in the streets. People only protest when they are being abused, oppressed, marginalized or violated. It's time the House Justice Appropriations Subcommittee address the calls of Florida voters and people who cared enough to peacefully assemble. We need to face the issues head on and answer to the humanity and dignity of working class, black, brown, and immigrant families in Florida who are suffering with workable policies that help the state grow and prosper.

If this legislation passes I will be letting people know that they should not travel in Florida, they should not move to Florida, they should not visit Florida, because our government does not support them and keep them safe. Public health and the economy should be your number one priority. Please OPPOSE HB1 and support legislation that provides real solutions to the real problems Floridians face today.

Subject: PROTECT OUR RIGHTS TO FREE SPEECH!

Elected Representative,

I am a Florida resident contacting you today to urge you to OPPOSE HB1, the Combatting Violence, Disorder, and Looting Law Enforcement Protection Act. There are already laws in place regarding violence, disorder, and looting, which do not infringe on protesters' due process protections and extra protections for Law Enforcement Officers in the state of Florida under FL §112.532.

While the events that took place at the Capitol on January 6, 2021, are abhorrent and a direct attack against democracy, it is also evident due to the circumstances of 2020 that law enforcement is not always capable of discerning civil disobedience. A constitutionally protected act, from rioting and other illegal activity. This bill language was drafted before the Capitol siege and targeted civil rights protesters, many of whom were eventually proven innocent.

Just this summer in Jacksonville, over 70 peaceful civil rights protesters were unlawfully detained. Among these protesters were families, students, pastors, business owners, teachers, medics, and lawyers. All charges were dropped. Four protesters even sued the Jacksonville Sheriff's Office and won a $100,000 settlement due to their rights being deliberately violated. With this new bill, these innocent people would have had incredible difficulty maintaining their freedom, even in the court of law.

As a concerned citizen, I am asking you not to allow fear and chaos to influence a hasty decision that could jeopardize honest Americans' freedom. We have seen the blatant double standards regarding protesting and treatment amongst groups, and this bill was proposed before this tyrannic event and is only being pushed into legislation in haste and to further suppress our freedoms.

Please VOTE NO on HB1.

Sincerely,

Maria I. Garcia

Comment or Question:

I am extremely concerned about the HB1 anti-protest bill. Why is the legislature attempting to take away our right to peaceful assembly? Making a peaceful gathering criminal, charging participants for being there with felonies and the possibility of jail. I hope to heck you vote against this awful bill. I refer you back to section 4 and 5 of the Florida State Constitution. Thank you for your consideration.

Comment or Question:
Dear Senator,

I would like to address the recently filed State Bill 54, which is set for Committee vote on January 26, 2021. The harsh reality is that SB 54 will materially harm every Floridian and place many families in the direct path of financial disaster. Florida Statute * 627.736 provides $10,000 for payment of all medical bills incurred following a motor vehicle accident. With the number of visitors we have in the state, this monetary protection is often the only way Florida residents have to pay for necessary medical treatment due to the number of drivers who are either underinsured or uninsured. Under the current PIP law, the medical expenses that will be automatically paid by insurance companies, the medical liens against Florida citizens, and the debt collections against patients is far less than what will occur if SB 54 is enacted.

The automatic nature of PIP reimbursement has served our community, our medical professionals, and most importantly the patients, well by making the treatment and reimbursement of expenses almost instantaneous. Bodily Injury claims routinely take years of protracted litigation, especially at this time when our state courts are not holding jury trials. These medical expenses are reported to patients' credit reports when they are sent to collections, which has a devastating effect on their lives. This does not take into account when a Floridian is injured in an automobile accident caused by an uninsured motorist or tourist. Under the PIP statute, an insured's medical bills will be paid regardless of who is deemed to be at fault for the accident. Should SB 54 pass, Florida will undoubtedly have tourists fly into Orlando from other states or out of country, rent a vehicle, crash it into a Floridian, subsequently leave the state or country, and then not held accountable for their actions under Florida's jurisdiction or court system. Under SB 54, the Floridian is left to suffer without any financial assistance of insurance coverage that they currently enjoy under PIP.

Under SB 54, mandatory Bodily Injury will be available to doctors and patients at some future point in time, but as those details are not included in SB 54, it will leave a large gap for patients who desperately need medical treatment. In addition to the financial burden imposed on the insureds' and people of Florida through the delayed process of Bodily Injury Litigation, the insureds will be limited to the amount of money available to them, as the customary percentage taken by attorneys on such claims is 33%-40% of the amount recovered. Under the current PIP law, the injured party is entitled to the entire $10,000. As a practitioner of both bodily injury and PIP, I can say from experience that someone's PIP can often make or break a personal injury case. Without this extra, and guaranteed, medical payment fund, many more personal injury cases will go to trial, putting a strain on our already strained system.

A vote in support of SB 54 is a vote to directly harm every citizen of Florida by removing the primary protection from uninsured motorists or tourists without insurance policies. I would request that you reconsider the protection you are removing from citizens who count on you to advocate for policies and laws that help and protect all of us. Though there is no perfect solution to the unfortunately high number of drivers in our state without adequate insurance, Florida Statute * 627.736 is vastly better than what you are proposing.

Thank you for your time and should you have any questions, I am available at your convenience.

In addition to the financial burden imposed on the insureds' and people of Florida through the delayed process of Bodily Injury Litigation, the insureds will be limited to the amount of money available to them, as the customary percentage taken by attorneys on such claims is 33%-40% of the amount recovered. Under the current PIP law, the injured party is entitled to the entire $10,000. As a practitioner of both bodily injury and PIP, I can say from experience that someone's PIP can often make or break a personal injury case. Without this extra, and guaranteed, medical payment fund, many more personal injury cases will go to trial, putting a strain on our already strained system.

A vote in support of SB 54 is a vote to directly harm every citizen of Florida by removing the primary protection from uninsured motorists or tourists without insurance policies. I would request that you reconsider the protection you are removing from citizens who count on you to advocate for policies and laws that help and protect all of us. Though there is no perfect solution to the unfortunately high number of drivers in our state without adequate insurance, Florida Statute * 627.736 is vastly better than what you are proposing.

Thank you for your time and should you have any questions, I am available at your convenience.

Comment or Question:

Good evening Senator Burgess,

I am concerned with Governor Desantis's new proposal. I believe that it would limit the right to assemble for Floridians, and may even incite violence. The measure provides a defense that someone may use to harm protesters, including the expansion of stand your ground as well as the immunity clause for vehicles hitting protesters. It also includes measures that will block state funding to cities that cut the budget to their city police. This proposal is clearly in response to the protests surrounding police violence around the country, and will not help the situation and if anything will incite more violence. I implore you that you will not sponsor this legislation, and if it is brought to the senate floor, that you will vote to reject it. I think that it is important that our right to protest without fear is secured.

Thank you for reading and considering my opinion,
Jenna Stannard

Comment or Question:

Senator Burgess,

Thank you for sponsoring SB 484 Combating Disorder is crucial in the protection of our citizens and public officials. State and local Law enforcement needs to be mandated and have the authority to work with Federal agencies and DOJ to combat mob rule and disorder.

SB 484 needs stronger language, we can't allow extremists to strom our government buildings, occupy, enter illegally, cause property damage and threaten our public servants. I would ask you to consider proposing stronger language to the text by adding "alteration or removal" to SB 484 as currently written " prohibiting defacing, injuring or damaging a memorial."

Our memorials have been targets by extremists amd as you know, we currently have no protection of monuments, veteran memorials, government buildings and signs referencing names of past historical figures. These radical domestic terrorists have desecrated on left their marks spray painting, breaking and removing many of our sacred symbols of democracy.

Comment or Question:

As a constituent, I am very concerned about HB 1 / SB 484. I know that you sponsored this bill and submitted on the 6th. This unnecessary legislation silences Floridians and directly attacks our First Amendment rights. This is exactly the double speak that I expect from a republican. Small government but more infringement.

As a regular peaceful protester I condemn what Trumpism supports such as the insurrection at our capital, but it was fostered under YOUR party. As a regular protester I am familiar with laws regulations and would never infringe on others rights or resort to unlawful practices there are already laws to protect my rights and those of others, this legislation stands to limit my freedoms not protect them. This legislative double speak is a waste of time and I would like you to focus on the real issues of the day.

As you know, protests for civil rights, social justice, and environmental protection are the foundation of some of our most important laws. Like the right to vote, protest is one of the tools Americans have always used to create positive change in our country.

Therefore, I urge you to oppose HB 1/SB 484. The intent of this legislation is to silence and punish protesters. This legislation infringes on Floridians' civil rights and is an attack on our very democracy.

I am monitoring the progress of this bad bill and will check back to learn more about your vote. Thank you.

Comment or Question:
Dear Senator,

I would like to address the recently filed State Bill 54, which is set for Committee vote on January 26, 2021. The harsh reality is that SB 54 will materially harm every Floridian and place many families in the direct path of financial disaster. Florida Statute * 627.736 provides $10,000 for payment of all medical bills incurred following a motor vehicle accident. With the number of visitors we have in the state, this monetary protection is often the only way Florida residents have to pay for necessary medical treatment due to the number of drivers who are either underinsured or uninsured. Under the current PIP law, the medical expenses that will be automatically paid by insurance companies, the medical liens against Florida citizens, and the debt collections against patients is far less than what will occur if SB 54 is enacted.

The automatic nature of PIP reimbursement has served our community, our medical professionals, and most importantly the patients, well by making the treatment and reimbursement of expenses almost instantaneous. Bodily Injury claims routinely take years of protracted litigation, especially at this time when our state courts are not holding jury trials. These medical expenses are reported to patients' credit reports when they are sent to collections, which has a devastating effect on their lives. This does not take into account when a Floridian is injured in an automobile accident caused by an uninsured motorist or tourist. Under the PIP statute, an insured's medical bills will be paid regardless of who is deemed to be at fault for the accident. Should SB 54 pass, Florida will undoubtedly have tourists fly into Orlando from other states or out of country, rent a vehicle, crash it into a Floridian, subsequently leave the state or country, and then not held accountable for their actions under Florida's jurisdiction or court system. Under SB 54, the Floridian is left to suffer without any financial assistance of insurance coverage that they currently enjoy under PIP.

Under SB 54, mandatory Bodily Injury will be available to doctors and patients at some future point in time, but as those details are not included in SB 54, it will leave a large gap for patients who desperately need medical treatment. In addition to the financial burden imposed on the insureds' and people of Florida through the delayed process of Bodily Injury Litigation, the insureds will be limited to the amount of money available to them, as the customary percentage taken by attorneys on such claims is 33%-40% of the amount recovered. Comment or Question:

Dear Sen. Burgess

I am a constituent in Wesley Chapel deeply concerned about the frankly fascist proposal of our Governor to legalize murder within 500 feet of a "disorderly assembly" is an incredible threat to human life (of all colors and beliefs) that is a veiled threat against our basic human rights to assembly and protest. The idea that we should have made it easier to murder the students marching for their lives after the 2018 Stoneman Douglas shooting, the idea that we should be enacting legislation to protect the terrorists like the Nazi who injured 28 in Charlottesville, NC, and the idea that we should allow protestors and counter protestors to exchange fire if someone throws something is dangerous, disgusting, anti-Christian, and un-American. I highly urge you and your colleagues to roundly reject this ludicrous proposal, and further urge you to consider impeachment and removal of Gov. DeSantis for his failure on the pandemic and the dangerous legislation he wishes to pass.

This kind of evil needs to be unanimously rejected. I trust you will put your state and your country before your party and work effortlessly to prevent the lethal pushes towards fascism and populism by our president and his friend.

If a Democratic governor had proposed such a dangerous law, I know you would have fought valiantly against it and him at every front.

Please, Senator. Do the right thing

Sincerely,

Adam Filinovich

Comment or Question:
Dear Senator Burgess,

You and I attended law school together and I appreciate your service to the State of Florida. I have been practicing civil litigation, including personal injury and PIP, for the majority of my career. I would like to address your recently filed State Bill 54, which is set for Committee vote on January 26, 2021.

Respectfully, your bill will materially harm every Floridian and place many families in the direct path of financial disaster. Comment or Question:

I am writing about a proposed gun bill, Bill 370.

It is a political bill and has nothing in it that reflects crime or gun use in Florida or the United States for that matter. Criminals rarely use "assault weapons". Actually, by definition, an assault weapon is a rifle that fires in different modes including fully automatic which are severely restricted by Federal Law, but "Assault Weapon" sounds scarier than a "semiautomatic rifle" so this term is used.

Some actual facts for you: According to the FBI's UCR report from 2014-2018 there were 48,549 gun crimes in the US. Hand guns accounted for 31,934 crimes/Deaths while all long guns were 1,437 (semiautomatic rifles were not separated out from other long guns). That is a percentage of just UNDER 3%! In fact in another FBI report in 2018, knives killed 5X's the number of people than guns!

So there are no facts that would support this draconian bill. Yes, I know about the Pulse and Sandy Hook massacres but before we impinge on our Second Amendment rights, which is the only right that says "shall not be infringed", we need to step back and deal with the reality rather than emotionally or simply because it is a political party's wish to make their supporters happy.

The reality is this. These restrictions will not stop shootings or mass shootings. States and cities with the toughest fire arms laws are still the same places with the highest crime and firearm death rates. When California passed their ban on large capacity magazines nobody in the L. A. Bloods said: Hey we're going to F up that party but remember don't use anything except those 10 round magazines! We don't want to get caught doing THAT!" The law changed nothing for the criminals.

The only affect these laws have is to make people that are already law abiding citizens criminals. A mistake, like forgetting there is a 30 round magazine in the bottom of your Range Bag can destroy a good person's life. That is all that will happen.

An actual solution, instead of a political one, is much more complex than simply passing a bill that hurts your constituents with a law that has no basis in reality and as we've seen over and over does absolutely nothing to stop crime. Please note the INCREASE in crime in New York City despite the massive gun laws on their books.

Let's be honest. The bulk of these shootings are in urban/poor areas. We don't want to be called a racist, especially politicians, so we avoid that fact, just like the black community does. When Mr. Floyd was murdered it set off a year long series of protests, riots, fires and deaths. On this same extended weekend I checked 5 cities newspapers: Atlanta, Oakland, Minneapolis, Chicago and New York. In just those 5 cities there were over 50 people shot. 14 were killed including a beautiful elementary aged girl. Did you hear about that? Of course not. There are "Sandy Hooks" all the time, especially during the summer and they are almost always done with hand guns! Why hand guns? They are cheaper, easier to hide so they are very disposable.

The problem is poverty. While Democrats may pass a law like this and walk around patting themselves on the back, in the real world, in these areas, nothing has or will change. NOTHING. As long as we ignore the roots and causes of this cancer it will not stop. Period. We need to do things to bring jobs and therefore hope, to these areas.

Here's a suggestion. We give companies tax breaks or other incentives BUT we require them to hire X% of the workplace's workers to be from within 30 miles or whatever. When they say they can't find trained people for X job we provide free training or have the company train the people from their pool of applicants. This will create jobs and give the people a trade for life if they choose.

I love music. Go to YouTube and listen to Elvis's "In the Ghetto" or the words of Louis Armstrong before he sings "Wonder World". THAT is how old this problem has been around and been ignored. Fix that Senator.

Comment or Question:

The recently filed SB 54 filed by Burgess and referred to the insurance and banking committee for vote on 1/26/21 will materially harm every Floridian and place many families in direct path of financial disaster. Specifically, under the current PIP law, all medical bills will be automatically paid by the insurer and the amount of medical liens and debt collections against patients is drastically lower than the proposed course in SB 54.

The automatic nature of PIP reimbursement has served the community, doctors, and patients well by making the treatment and reimbursement of same almost instantaneous.

Bodily Injury claims, routinely take years and numerous reports of debts on patients credit as well as living loans taken to pay for medical bills pending litigation.

Under SB 54, mandatory BI will be available to doctors and patients at some future point in time, which likely takes years and severe life interruptions. In addition to the the financial burden imposed on the insured's and people of Florida through the delayed process of Bodily Injury Litigation, the insured's will also not receive the $25,000 bodily injury limit promised, as the customary percentage taken by attorneys on such claims is usually 33%-40% ($10,000/$25,000). The people of Florida deserve better, and the current PIP structure is better than the onerously complex and drastically dilatory process proposed under SB 54.

All of that is before the unavoidable situations where a Floridian is injured or hurt in a automobile accident by an uninsured motorist or tourist. Under the current PIP (627.736), the insured's medical bills will be paid if they are not at fault or if they are at fault. under SB 54, you will undoubtedly have tourists fly into Orlando from other states or out of country, rent a vehicle, crash it into a Floridian, then subsequently leave the state or country, and not be able to be held accountable under Florida's jurisdiction or court system. under SB 54, the Floridian is left to suffer without any financial assistance of insurance coverage that they currently enjoy under PIP.

A vote in support of SB 54, is a vote to directly harm the people of Florida by removing their protections from uninsured motorists, tourists, greedy lawyers that will take almost half of the insurance benefits, and the strangling delays and debt that will accrue through protracted bodily injury litigation.

Subject: Amend HR7608

Dear Senator Lee,

I'm writing to ask that you carefully evaluate HR7608 and the spending budget (Interior Appropriations bill) amendment for 2021 that requires "the Bureau of Land Management to utilize $11,000,000 of its Wild Horse and Burro Program budget to implement PZP humane, reversible fertility control to manage wild horse populations."

In and of itself, it does nothing to satisfy its stated objective to humanely manage wild horse populations. Why? PZP is a substance, not a method. Currently, PZP is primarily used as a relatively unmanaged part of helicopter captures and is not governed by the rigor required to ensure "humane, reversible fertility control." Without clear guidelines and constraints regarding its application and use, a desirable outcome is highly questionable

I am respectfully requesting that you propose an amendment to this spending bill that strictly prohibits funding for any sterilization process or any additional removals in, or from, any HMA that has failed to develop a robust, scientifically derived HMAP as required in BLM's own handbook, including transparent and inclusive public participation. Until we have established a rigorous planning process this program will never meet the expectations of the many Americans who support a humane, fair, and effective management plan for our wild horses and burros.

While PZP can be a useful tool, this amendment completely ignores an actual management plan. There is nothing in this legislation that defines how and when this product should be applied, a critical consideration. There are no stated guidelines for each herd to ensure genetic viability among herd populations, a key consideration when carefully managing a fertility control program. Other key components of a true management plan are simply absent, issues such as water access, critical habitat preservation, forage allocation, and adherence to animal welfare standards during invasive and dangerous roundups. Finally, AML (Appropriate Management Level), the numerical driver for removals, is, once again, left untouched and untempered by scientifically set goals.

In short, this amendment is nothing more than a directive to make a huge commodity purchase from one of the key backers of the so-called "Path Forward," a closed-door agreement (not a management document) made by corporate lobby groups. The substance (PZP) has value, but, in and of itself, it will not make any fundamental change to rectify the flaws that are pushing the program toward fiscal collapse or take an actual step toward the directive of sustainable management.

The 2013 National Academy of Sciences report clearly characterizes the unscientific processes and corresponding poor data quality used by BLM to "manage" this program — little has changed since that time. Of the 177 HMAs under BLM's control, only 7 have produced HMAPs (Herd Management Area Plan) in spite of a legal mandate to do so as outlined in BLM's own handbook.

Sincerely,
Eileen Westermann

Dear Senator Burgess,

With 2020 nearly behind us, Tampa Bay leaders are coming together to assess the state of our region, and discuss what we can do to accelerate our recovery in the wake of COVID-19.

I am writing to personally invite you to join us as we convene virtually for the fourth annual State of the Region community event on Friday, January 15, 2021. You can register here. (Please note that this event is free of charge to all participants, but an RSVP is required.)

A few words about the event itself...

Just as we've done for the past three years, the research teams from the Tampa Bay Partnership and USF Muma College of Business will unveil the most recent data tracking our region's performance against 19 other communities in the United States.

This year, we'll also dig deeper into our recovery from the COVID-19 pandemic, explore racial disparities in Tampa Bay, and identify where the two critical issues intersect.

Joining us to provide context, best practices and insights about the region will be:

- Lynn Casey, Chair of the Itasca Project in the Minneapolis/St. Paul region. Lynn will address how her community consistently ranks at the top of the charts in so many economic and quality of life indicators, but was forced to confront its massive equity gaps following the death of George Floyd.
- Gus Faucher, Senior Vice President and Chief Economist for The PNC Financial Services Group, will compare the economic impact of COVID-19 on Tampa Bay to other key U.S. markets, and help us identify ways we can accelerate our economic comeback (or avoid falling further behind).
- Brian Lamb, Global Head of Diversity & Inclusion at JPMorgan Chase & Co., will help us understand why racial equity is a critical economic issue, and offer suggestions – based on his long history of leadership in Tampa Bay, including as Chair of the USF Board of Trustees and the Tampa Bay Partnership – about how we can best address it here.

Following the main event, we will present six, simultaneous 15-minute break-out sessions, each one highlighting a best practice here in Tampa Bay that is moving the needle on one or more of the indicators that our teams are tracking. (We'll provide more information on these sessions as we get closer to the event.)

Finally, thank you for the good work that you are doing to support our community and move the needle on our collective prosperity.

I hope you can join us for this special event on January 15.

All the best,
Rick Homans

SB 54 Repeals PIP, Requires BI Coverage, Creates New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions

Tallahassee—State Senator Danny Burgess (R-Zephyrhills) today filed Senate Bill 54, Motor Vehicle Insurance. The legislation repeals Florida's current Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law, which requires drivers to carry personal injury protection coverage, instead requiring that drivers carry bodily injury liability coverage. The bill also creates a new framework to govern motor vehicle insurance claims for bad faith failure to settle.

"Florida is one of only two states in the country that does not currently require drivers to carry liability coverage that would immediately kick in if they cause the bodily injury or death of another person while operating a motor vehicle,” said Senate President Wilton Simpson (R-Trilby). “PIP coverage is too expensive for the benefits it provides. It’s the right time for Florida to move to mandatory coverage for bodily injury liability.”

“Replacing our no-fault system with a bodily injury liability system more appropriately places liability where it should be – with the party that caused the accident,” said Senator Burgess. “Additionally, the bill creates a new framework for handling bad faith litigation that provides a clear set of standards to govern the conduct of both parties in the claims handling process, which we believe will lead to better outcomes for both insured Floridians and their insurance companies.”

Repeals No-Fault, Requires Bodily Injury Liability Coverage

SB 54 repeals the Florida Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law (No-Fault Law), which requires every owner and registrant of a motor vehicle in this state to maintain Personal Injury Protection (PIP) coverage. The bill enacts financial responsibility requirements for liability for motor vehicle ownership or operation, as follows:

- For bodily injury (BI) or death of one person in any one crash, $25,000, and
- Subject to that limit for one person, $50,000 for BI or death of two or more people in any one crash.
- Retains the existing $10,000 financial responsibility requirement for property damage.
- Revises required coverage amounts for garage liability and commercial motor vehicle insurance, and increases the cash deposit amount required for a certificate of self-insurance establishing financial responsibility for owners and operators of motor vehicles that are not for-hire vehicles.
- Repealing the No-Fault Law eliminates the limitations on recovering pain and suffering damages from PIP insureds, which currently require bodily injury that causes death or significant and permanent injury.

Requires Medical Payments Coverage

SB 54 requires insurers to offer medical payments coverage (MedPay) with limits of $5,000 or $10,000 to cover medical expenses of the insured. Insurers may also offer other policy limits that exceed $5,000, and may offer deductibles of up to $500. The bill requires that insurers must reserve $5,000 of MedPay benefits for 30 days to pay physicians or dentists who provide emergency services and care or who provide hospital inpatient care.

Creates a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions

SB 54 creates a new framework to govern all bad faith claims for failure to settle related to motor vehicle insurance. The bill requires insurers to follow claims handling best practices standards based on long-established good faith duties related to claim handling, claim investigation, defense of the insured, and settlement negotiations.

The bill establishes that it is a condition precedent to bringing a third-party bad faith action not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., that the claimant serve a demand for settlement. The demand must:

- Identify the date and location of the loss, the claimant, and insured.
- State the legal and factual basis of the claim.
- Detail the claimant’s injuries, medical treatment, and the amount of current and reasonably anticipated future damages.
- Demand a settlement amount, which may not exceed the insured’s policy limit.
- Release, if accepted, the insured from any further liability.
- Not provide conditions on the settlement other than payment of the demand and the ability of the claimant to take an examination under oath of the insured.

The bill allows the third-party bad faith claimant to condition the demand for settlement on taking a two hour examination under oath (EUO) of the insured limited to discovering recoverable assets. The bad faith claimant may withdraw the demand for settlement after the EUO. If the insured refuses to submit to the EUO, the insurer may tender policy limits without obtaining a release of the insured and may not be held liable if there is an excess judgment against the insured.

The bill provides that in a third-party action for bad faith failure to settle not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., the insurer is not liable for bad faith if the insurer tenders policy limits within 30 days of receiving a demand for settlement.

Allows for Named Driver Exclusions

SB 54 authorizes the exclusion of a specifically named individual from specified insurance coverages under a private passenger motor vehicle policy, with the written consent of the policyholder.

Hi Natalie,

It was good to speak with you, today. I am attaching a power-point that summarizes some of the key points regarding Florida TaxWatch's research on a COVID-19 Limited Liability Shield. The reports were written before the bills were filed and we are focusing on the compelling economic reasons for a liability shield.

We plan to release the research next Monday, January 11, 2021 at 11 am. The release will occur via zoom. We would invite the Senator to join us for the rollout via zoom. If he is unable to join us, we would welcome a quote from him on the importance and need for a limited liability shield. If appropriate, we would welcome comments about the bills. We would need that quote by the end of the day tomorrow.

If the Senator or staff would like to discuss the research further or receive a finalized copy of this report before release on Monday, please call Florida TaxWatch Executive Vice President, Tony Carvajal, at (850)-566-6232. Dear Fellow Taxpayer

The recent COVID-19 pandemic has had a devastating effect on Florida's economy and the health and well-being of its 21 million residents. Once the initial cases were reported in early March, the economic impacts of COVID-19 began to manifest themselves immediately. As businesses closed, tens of thousands of Floridians (including many workers in low-wage positions in Florida's tourism and hospitality industries) lost their jobs. Florida's unemployment rate, which had remained steady at 2.8 percent prior to the pandemic had increased to 14.5 percent as of May 2020. To date, more than 4.9 million reemployment assistance (unemployment insurance) claims have been filed.

Florida TaxWatch undertakes this independent analysis to better understand the impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic on each sector that makes up Florida's economy, and to offer industry-specific recommendations and options to help Florida recovery and ease the burdens created by the pandemic on Florida taxpayers. The recommendations contained in this report are by no means an exhaustive list. I recommend policymakers also consider the recommendations contained in the August 2020 TaxWatch COVID-19 Taxpayer Task Force Final Report, and the November 2020 Final Report of the Restore Economic Strength through Employment & Tourism (RESET) Task Force, entitled Working Together for a Better Florida.

Florida TaxWatch is pleased to present this report and its findings and looks forward to engaging policymakers in discussion during the next legislative session and beyond.

Sincerely,

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

As Florida continues to deal with the constantly changing COVID-19 pandemic, questions remain as to how the state will reverse one of the worst recessions in history while at the same time maintaining prudent public health and safety measures. The difficulty lies in the unequal manner in which the virus has wreaked havoc on the state's various economic sectors. Due to the varied effects, understanding the nature and scope of each sector's unique pandemic challenges is crucial to providing substantive policy recommendations going forward.

While all economic sectors in Florida have been affected, the Leisure and Hospitality industry has been the state's hardest-hit sector in terms of lost employment and economic activity. In the second quarter of 2020 – April, May, and June – the state reported 60.5 percent fewer tourists compared to the previous year, a decline of around 18.5 million people, as the pandemic led to a standstill in international travel. With fewer tourists, businesses throughout the industry faced plummeting sales and revenue. Hotel demand dropped 77.6 percent year-over-year, leading to hotel revenues falling $416.5 million. Small businesses in the tourism industry experienced an average of 12.6 missed weeks of business and around 64.5 percent loss in revenue. Between March and April 2020, the sector recorded 482,000 job losses, far outsizing any other impacted industry and corresponding to 41.7 percent fewer jobs than in April 2019.

Due to a rapid decline in international trade and tourism alongside the state's stay-at-home order, Florida's Trade, Transportation, and Utilities sector also experienced profound impacts during the pandemic. Economic data suggest total enplanements to Florida's airports numbered 3.1 million between April and June, down 87.7 percent from the same period in 2019. A reduction in cargo and cruise passengers led to a loss of $22.2 billion in total economic activity to the state's seaports. Waning consumer confidence coupled with large store closures meant total consumer spending in the state decreased 31 percent in April 2020 compared to January.

Elsewhere in the state's economy, businesses in other economic sectors faced differing impacts due to a variety of factors. Florida's real estate market, part of the state's Financial Activities sector, encountered a significant rebound by July 2020 when home sales rose 11.5 percent compared to July 2019 and homebuyers from across the nation began to relocate to Florida. Other industries, such as Professional and Business Services and Information transitioned more easily to remote work, partially offsetting some downward pressure in employment but disadvantaging some workers without telework capabilities.

Challenges with maintaining safety for workers while also mitigating economic losses were rather pronounced in the Education and Health Services industry. Florida hospitals lost around $8 billion through August 2020 due to increased costs from treatment, protective gear, and non-reimbursed costs. Outside hospital settings, the state halted elective surgeries and visitation to long-term care facilities, which ushered in a subsequent shift toward telemedicine visits. Across the education spectrum, K-12 schools, colleges, and universities face continued difficulty with expanding remote instruction while also dealing with falling revenues from reduced enrollment, costs from acquiring personal protective equipment (PPE) and uncertain government aid.

The Construction and Manufacturing sectors, Florida's two goods-producing sectors, experienced contrasting outcomes. The Construction sector was the one industry in the state that seemed to benefit from the state-wide stay-at-home order, which reduced traffic and accelerated critical infrastructure projects valued above $2.1 billion. As a whole, the sector only witnessed a 1,400 decrease in employment. The Manufacturing sector, on the other hand, faced unique challenges when the pandemic disrupted international supply chains. At the pandemic's peak, the Manufacturing sector lost around 33,700 jobs, and over 78.3 percent of companies anticipated major financial impacts.

Florida's Government and Agriculture sectors were likewise not immune to the economic effects stemming from the ongoing pandemic. The state government reported general revenue collections were down nearly $1.9 billion when the state finished its fiscal year on June 30, 2020. For local governments in cities like Orlando, Miami, and Tallahassee, tourist development tax revenues dropped nearly 95 percent in some areas while taxable sales fell anywhere from 17 to 27 percent lower than in 2019. In the Agriculture industry, producers dealt with an estimated $522.5 million in crop losses through April 2020 as demand fell from large-scale buyers, including restaurants, school districts, and processing facilities.

To offset the pandemic's economic blow and encourage a robust recovery, policymakers from around the state should consider adopting various policy recommendations tailored to specific economic industries. Policy recommendations, such as continuing public investment in Florida's tourism marketing industry, will prove critical to the Leisure and Hospitality industry's recovery over the coming years. Likewise, targeted investment in the state's Manufacturing sector can help to diversify Florida's economy while at the same time boosting employment in high-wage, high-skill jobs. For the Retail Trade industry, enacting E-fairness legislation will help prevent unfair competitive disadvantages for physical retailers and small businesses already struggling under the pandemic.

Other policy recommendations, such as enacting a limited COVID-19 liability shield, would be overarching across economic sectors and would help businesses in various industries to reopen and resume operations. Such a policy measure would safeguard businesses, their agents, and individuals from predatory litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 while also ensuring customers have proper recourse in the event of gross negligence.

The pandemic has once again exposed a fundamental problem at the root of the state's economy: the heavy reliance on tourism and real estate development to foster economic activity. A diversified economy will be imperative in launching Florida's economy beyond the pandemic's end and lessening the likelihood of a future economic recession of the same magnitude. The first of many steps to accomplish this goal of economic diversification will be to understand the complicated way in which the virus has affected Florida's different sectors and provide relevant policy remedies in response.

INTRODUCTION

In the months since Florida reported its first positive COVID-19 case, Florida has faced an economic recession never before seen in the state's history. Public officials responded to the evolving public health emergency by issuing stay-at-home orders and shuttering non-essential businesses during the month of April. Though necessary to stem the exponential rise in COVID-19 cases, the resulting economic fallout affected businesses and workers across the state, creating a precarious path forward to recovery.

Nationally, the U.S. Real Gross Domestic Product (GDP) fell by a historic 32.9 percent in the second quarter of 2020 (April-June),<sup>1</sup> and estimates in Florida predicted an even greater decline around 36.9 percent in the second quarter.<sup>2</sup> Unemployment quickly followed suit as Florida's unemployment skyrocketed to 1.3 million persons in May 2020, corresponding to an unemployment rate around 13.7 percent.<sup>3</sup> For a state economy largely dependent on tourism, only 12.8 million visitors traveled to Florida during the second quarter, a decline around 60.5 percent from the 32.4 million visitors during the same time in 2019.<sup>4</sup> The subsequent loss in economic activity left a notable impact on the state's revenue with General Revenue (GR) collections falling $1.9 billion short of expectations for the fiscal year ending on June 30, 2020.<sup>5</sup>

Even as businesses begin to re-open and reemployment assistance claims begin to taper off, challenges remain for Florida's recovering economy. Experts predict that the state's economy will not return to pre-pandemic levels until the end of 2021 or later due to the state's large emphasis on tourism,<sup>6</sup> and the state government will continue to grapple with largely fluctuating revenues over the next few years. Of course, the exact timing of a full economic recovery is far from certain and will likely depend on the course of the disease outbreak and the development of effective treatments and vaccines to combat the virus. Yet at present, much more must be done to analyze the current economic situation and come up with innovative solutions to spearhead recovery efforts in the years to come.

On the aggregate, the pandemic's statewide effects are clear; however, in recent months, there has been less attention toward the industry-specific effects for Florida's different economic sectors. Certainly, some industries have faced far larger economic contractions than other industries whose impacts were not as severe, yet still consequential.

In line with the industry classification system used by the Florida Department of Economic Opportunity (DEO) and U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), this report looks at the top ten major economic sectors in Florida along with the agricultural sector to determine the industry-specific effects and compare their overall magnitudes. The chosen list of economic sectors for this analysis is not exhaustive but simply follows similar classification standards by the Florida DEO and the U.S. BLS. The economic sectors are also presented according to their relative contributions to state GDP, with sectors contributing more in total output appearing first in the report.

Florida TaxWatch undertakes this independent analysis to analyze the specific ways the pandemic has affected the different sectors that make up Florida's economy in hopes of discovering the subtleties underneath the statewide economic impact. Additionally, TaxWatch provides industry-specific recommendations to guide policymakers in tailoring recovery measures to specific economic sectors. These measures include policy, regulatory, and tax-oriented actions. By seeking to shine a light on the economic picture for various industries, the hope is to help the Sunshine State recover in an efficient, cost-effective way while also ensuring the safety and well-being of all taxpayers.

FINANCIAL ACTIVITIES

INDUSTRY PROFILE

The Financial Activities sector is part of the service-providing industries group and consists of two specific sub-sectors:

- Finance and Insurance (NAICS 52) --- includes establishments primarily engaged in financial transactions (creation, liquidation, or change in ownership of financial assets) and/or in facilitating financial transactions. Entities include banks, credit unions, monetary authorities, financial investment companies, and insurance carriers.
- Real Estate and Rental and Leasing (NAICS 53) --- includes establishments primarily engaged in renting, leasing, or otherwise allowing the use of tangible or intangible assets. The assets may be tangible, as in the case of real estate and equipment, or intangible, as is the case with patents and trademarks.<sup>7</sup>

As shown in Table 1, the Financial Activities sector contributes more than $206 billion in total output to the state of Florida, with a large portion of the total coming from real estate and rentals. Comparatively, the Real Estate industry contributes around 16.1 percent of total state GDP, whereas the Finance and Insurance industry comprises 5.7 percent.<sup>8</sup> Despite the lower output, the Finance and Insurance industry employs 391,000 workers, or about 4.4 percent of the state's total employment. Alternatively, the Real Estate industry employs just under 200,000 workers, or about 2.2 percent of the state's total employment.

Annual wages for workers in the Real Estate industry are just on par with the state's average around $51,700. For those working in the Finance and Insurance industry, the average annual wage hovers just under $90,000, well above the state average.<sup>9</sup> Future employment growth is promising. Both the Finance and Real Estate industries are predicted to grow employment by 6.9 and 8.4 percent, respectively, by 2027.<sup>10</sup> No other sector contributes more to Florida's economy than the Financial Activities sector.

EFFECTS OF COVID-19 ON THE SECTOR

Florida's housing market experienced a tremendous comeback from April 2020, when economic uncertainty was at its peak, to July 2020, when the housing market seemed to outperform itself a year ago. In April, when business shutdowns and unemployment permeated markets, Florida reported lower level of closed sales, pending sales, and new listings. According to data from Florida Realtors, April saw closed sales of single-family homes statewide drop 20.7 percent year-over-year, numbering 21,400 total sales for the month. New pending sales were 35.1 percent lower than the previous year, while new listings were 27.2 percent lower than April 2019. In addition, condo-townhouse sales declined by 36.5 percent, for a total of only 7,500 sales during the month. The only category to not experience downward trends during this time was median housing prices, which held a statewide median price of $275,000; up six percent from 2019.<sup>11</sup>

Despite these downward trends, Florida experienced a significant rebound in its housing market by July 2020, a mere few months since the pandemic's worst moments. Single-family existing home sales rose 11.5 percent compared to July 2019 to a total of 31,400 sales --- the best monthly performance since January 2020 before the pandemic. Pending sales also showed large increases with gains about 21.7 percent higher than 2019. For Florida's condo-townhouses, closed sales rose 19 percent higher when compared to July 2019.

Both single-family homes and condo-townhouse properties experienced increases in their statewide median sales price for the 103rd consecutive month.<sup>12</sup>

Recent reports also show Florida has become a popular destination for homebuyers across the nation, especially from areas such as New York, Chicago, and Boston.<sup>13</sup> Fueled in part by the lower mortgage rates wrought on by the pandemic and the state's historic lack of an income tax, families are flocking to Florida despite the pandemic. New contracts for single-family homes and condominiums continue to rise in five south and central west coast counties. From Palm Beach County to Hillsborough County, sales continue to rise, outpacing trends in the Real Estate industry as a whole.<sup>14</sup>

Due to a robust housing market, and growing prominence among out-of-state homebuyers, Florida's Documentary Stamp Tax collections have been above estimates in recent months. The tax, which is routinely assessed on documents used in real estate transactions, came in $27 million above estimates in October 2020.<sup>15</sup> Compared to the previous year, the collections were 32 percent above October 2019. These above-estimate collections not only evidence the amount of economic activity in the state's housing market, but also underscore the importance of the real estate market to the state's tax base.

Despite the tremendous rebound in the housing market over recent months, some experts are cautioning that the upward climb may not last. According to researchers at Florida Atlantic University (FAU) and Florida International University (FIU), eight out of ten key metro areas in Florida – including Tampa, Miami, and Orlando – are significantly overpriced compared to past long-term trends and may be arriving at their respective peaks.<sup>16</sup> Similar warnings come from Zillow where data suggest a seasonal slowdown may arrive in Florida over coming months with growth expected to resume next spring.<sup>17</sup> Exactly how the housing market will perform in 2021 will depend largely on changing patterns in the broader macroeconomy.

The other portion of the Financial Activities sector, Finance and Insurance, faced a daunting test from the pandemic due to the large-scale rise in unemployment across the state and nation. Without jobs, many people were unable to pay back loans in full, creating a precarious situation for many financial institutions. Bank of America, the largest bank by deposit in Florida, saw profits fall by 45 percent in the first quarter. JPMorgan Chase, the fourth largest in Florida, saw earnings fall nearly 70 percent. Overall, the state's banking sector took a significant hit with a posted combined loss of $281 million in the first quarter of 2020, according to data from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. This figure compares to profits of over $467 million only one year earlier.<sup>18</sup> Despite these losses, however, analysts do not predict widespread closures since the recession is not tied to a housing market crash like in 2008.

In addition, many banks and credit unions have positioned themselves to be important facilitators for the federal Paycheck Protection Program (PPP) which, in the first round, saw over 88,997 loans totaling $17.8 billion in Florida.<sup>19</sup> For Florida's insurance companies, much uncertainty exists whether business interruptions from COVID-19 are covered under many business insurance plans. Despite the ongoing litigation and uncertainty, many health insurance companies have taken proactive steps to aid their customers and assist the local communities. Florida Blue, for example, extended its premium due date for customers who needed extra time to pay premiums and also tripled its COVID-19 community investments to over $7 million.<sup>20</sup>

In total, the Financial Activities sector faced 14,100 job losses in Florida from February to July 2020, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.<sup>21</sup> In the month of April, total employment averaged 573,000 --- about 2.6 percent lower than April 2019. Between the two industries, the Real Estate industry possessed a higher risk of losing jobs than the Finance and Insurance industry. The Real Estate industry had 116,500 potential jobs at risk compared to only 47,000 in the Finance and Insurance industry.<sup>22</sup> This observation can be explained in part to the fact that many banks and financial institutions converted to remote work or drive-thru only, making it more bearable to weather the pandemic's initial effects. Despite the greater potential jobs loss for the Real Estate industry, recent trends indicate that Florida's housing market remains a robust seller's market as inventory falls and demand increases throughout a delayed homebuying season.

POLICY RECOMMENDATIONS

Recommendation 1

The Florida Legislature should establish safeguards to protect businesses, their agents, and individuals from the threat of opportunistic, predatory, and expensive litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by customers and employees. These safeguards should also ensure that those who contract COVID-19 as a result of gross negligence or intent to harm by others are able to recover for their injuries.

As thousands of Florida businesses struggle to reopen or remain open in light of the COVID-19 pandemic, many are fearful of the threat of litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by their customers. If Florida's economy is to recover and regain its pre-pandemic prosperity, it is important that businesses, health-care facilities, and other entities that are working hard to comply with public health directives or protective measures to reduce the risk of exposure to or transmission of COVID-19 are protected from civil liability. It is also important to make sure that those acting in "bad faith" are held accountable for their negligence while ensuring that those who contract COVID-19 because of the gross negligence of others can recover for their injuries.

Reduce and ultimately eliminate the Business Rent Tax (BRT).

Florida is the only state in the nation that imposes a statewide sales tax to leases on commercial property. This tax creates a government-mandated increase of up to eight percent in occupancy costs for businesses that rent. Over the last several legislative sessions, the Legislature has slowly reduced the state tax from 6.0 to 5.5 percent; however, more must be done to eliminate the competitive disadvantage that many Florida businesses face. Policymakers should consider phasing out the BRT to lower costs for businesses already struggling under the strain of the COVID-19 pandemic to pay rent payments.

Recommendation 3

Relax state and local restrictions on vacation rentals while also providing unified guidance for all counties.

As part of the state's response to the virus in early March, short-term vacation rentals were ordered to cease operations to limit the number visitors from virus hotspots around the U.S. In late May, Governor DeSantis lifted the ban on vacation rentals for counties outside of South Florida with an important condition: counties had to individually submit proposed rental procedures and attain approval from the state Department of Business & Professional Regulation (DBPR). As of early October, 55 of the state's 67 counties had received approval to resume bookings.<sup>23</sup> Even with a majority of counties resuming vacation rentals, many owners and companies face conflicting guidance between various counties. At present, the patchwork of county rules and restrictions make it difficult for vacation rental owners with properties in multiple counties to adhere to special guidelines. Florida TaxWatch recommends state policymakers provide unified guidance on reopening vacation rentals with particular focus toward conflicting measures between counties.

TRADE, TRANSPORTATION & UTILITIES

INDUSTRY PROFILE

The Trade, Transportation, and Utilities sector is one of several service-providing industries and is comprised of four primary sub-sectors:

- Wholesale Trade (NAICS 42) --- includes establishments engaged in wholesaling merchandise, generally without transformation, and rendering services incidental to the sale of merchandise.
- Retail Trade (NAICS 44-45) --- includes establishments engaged in retailing merchandise at the end of the distribution process. Retailers are organized to sell merchandise in small quantities to the general public for personal or household consumption.
- Transportation and Warehousing (NAICS 48-49) --- includes establishments that provide transportation of passengers and cargo, warehousing and storage for goods, or scenic and sightseeing transportation.
- Utilities (NAICS 22) --- includes establishments which provide utility services, such as electric, water, and sewage.

As shown in Table 2, of the four sub-sectors that comprise the Trade, Transportation, and Utilities sector, Retail Trade and Wholesale Trade combined for a total output around $140.9 billion in 2019, around 15 percent of total state GDP. These two sub-sectors combined accounted for around 1.5 million jobs in Florida, or about 16.5 percent of total jobs in 2019. Annual wages for Wholesale Trade were higher than the state average, whereas workers in the Retail Trade industry had lower average annual wages around $32,500.

Transportation and Warehousing was the next highest GDP contributor of the four sub-sectors with an annual output around $30.9 billion in 2019. Employment was around 358,000 ---slightly above that of Wholesale Trade. Average annual wages hovered around $54,500 in 2019. Finally, for the Utilities sub-sector, there was a GDP contribution around $15.4 billion, or about 1.6 percent of total state GDP. Utilities only accounted for a small portion of total state employment with just over 28,500 jobs; however, average annual wages were the highest in the group with wages being around $94,000 --- well above any other category in the sector.

EFFECTS OF COVID-19 ON THE SECTOR

Compared to most other economic sectors, the Trade, Transportation, and Utilities sector is perhaps the most dynamically impacted by COVID-19 due to the constantly shifting nature of supply chains, state and local legislation, and consumer demand. In particular, sensitivity to diminished international trade and lower global/domestic tourism meant businesses such as airports, seaports, and other transportation hubs faced falling traffic. Furthermore, stay-at-home orders and other executive actions designed to stem the flow of COVID-19 forced many retailers to close doors, resorting to online sales only. At the same time, however, increased need for essential services, such as grocery stores and pharmacies, offset some of the decline in sales. In total, the pandemic's effect on this industry is complicated in scope, yet several aspects are highlighted in this section.

Due to the rapid decline in international trade and tourism, Florida's airports and seaports were some of the first to feel the effects of the virus. Between April and June, total enplanements to Florida's airports numbered 3.1 million, down 87.7 percent from the same period in 2019. Some airports, such as Fort Lauderdale International and Miami International faced 90 percent reductions in enplanements compared to the previous year.<sup>24</sup>

With virus concerns keeping potential visitors at home, and many governments from around the world instituting travel restrictions to and from certain locations, Florida felt the immediate effects when fewer flights led to fewer domestic and international tourists visiting the state.

A similar story occurs when considering the state's seaports --- major hubs for cargo containments carrying traded goods and cruises carrying passengers. According to an economic analysis study by the Florida Ports Council, the virus led to a loss of 5.6 million tons of liquid bulk cargo, 1.6 million tons of dry bulk cargo, and over 4.9 million cruise passengers. These impacts led to a loss of $22.2 billion in total economic activity to the state, consisting of $5.1 billion in direct revenue loss and $1.2 billion in lower responding and local consumption.<sup>25</sup> These economic impacts are expected to continue well into 2021, especially in light of a November 3, 2020 decision by members of the Cruise Lines International Association to force cruise lines to shut down their U.S. offerings for the remainder of 2020.<sup>26</sup>

Under the directive of many state and local government measures, retailers and wholesalers across the state experienced drastic reductions in sales as people avoided large stores and opted for shopping online instead. By the middle of April, total consumer spending in Florida decreased by 31 percent compared to January 1, 2020, following a general attrition of consumer confidence among the population.<sup>27</sup> These trends were witnessed across the nation as retail spending dropped a record 16.4 percent in April compared to March. Online retailers were the only ones to experience gains in spending with a 8.4 percent increase compared to March.<sup>28</sup> Companies such as J.C. Penney, Pier One Imports, and GNC were among some of the larger retailers to declare bankruptcy as a result of falling revenues. In Florida, gradual re-opening plans were met with enhanced cleaning and safety protocols to reduce the transmission in many stores. Mandatory masks, reduced capacity, and regular cleaning typified most store instructions.

Even as the state concludes the holiday season, there are signs that the usual uptick in sales was not as sizable this time around. After posting a strong surge in consumer optimism in September, Floridians' consumer confidence slumped from October to December according to the University of Florida's Consumer Sentiment Index.<sup>29</sup> Respondents signaled their growing pessimism as expectations about economic conditions meddled with rising COVID-19 cases across the nation. Especially for those making less annual income, expectations are that personal financial situations may not improve any time soon. For businesses, these trends may be a worrisome sign of continued impacts to retail trade in Florida.

For the Utilities sector, the pandemic has created a contentious battleground between certain electricity companies and customers. During the pandemic's early months in the spring, major utilities companies suspended disconnections for customers who were unable to make timely payments. As the downturn dragged on, some municipal and private power companies, such as Duke Energy, Tampa Electric Co., and Florida Power & Light resumed disconnections. These companies maintained that resuming disconnections was necessary to recover unpaid costs from roughly 1.25 million residential customers throughout the state. Duke Energy, for example, reported it had around $18 million in deficits between April and June compared to the same period in 2019.<sup>30</sup> The decision to resume disconnects was met with stiff resistance as legal petitions were filed in court to impose a 90-day moratorium on behalf of customers. The challenges remain wrapped up in court and represent a tense standoff between energy companies, customers, and utility regulators.

Altogether, the Trade, Transportation, and Utilities economic sector experienced a 160,000 reduction in its labor force from March to April 2020. By June, employment totaled 1.7 million in the state, about 3.5 percent lower than at the same time in 2019. According to analysis by the Florida Chamber of Commerce, the Retail industry has 736,000 vulnerable jobs, second only to those jobs in the tourism industry.<sup>31</sup> Seventy-three percent of these total vulnerable jobs centered in large-size firms with over 500 employees. Utilities and Wholesale Trade were considered medium-risk for having fewer total vulnerable jobs at risk of being lost throughout the pandemic. Nevertheless, these two industries faced layoffs numbering around 101,000 total workers.<sup>32</sup>

Recommendation 1

The Florida Legislature should establish safeguards to protect businesses, their agents, and individuals from the threat of opportunistic, predatory, and expensive litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by customers and employees. These safeguards should also ensure that those who contract COVID-19 as a result of gross negligence or intent to harm by others are able to recover for their injuries.

As thousands of Florida businesses struggle to reopen or remain open in light of the COVID-19 pandemic, many are fearful of the threat of litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by their customers. If Florida's economy is to recover and regain its pre-pandemic prosperity, it is important that businesses, health-care facilities, and other entities that are working hard to comply with public health directives or protective measures to reduce the risk of exposure to or transmission of COVID-19 are protected from civil liability. It is also important to make sure that those acting in "bad faith" are held accountable for their negligence while ensuring that those who contract COVID-19 because of the gross negligence of others can recover for their injuries.

Enact E-Fairness legislation similar to bills filed in 2019.

As it stands today, Florida does not currently collect sales tax on sales to Florida customers by remote (out-of-state) sellers. Remote vendors sell their personalized products to Florida consumers by internet, telephone, or by mail. By not collecting sales tax on these remote sales, Florida's state and local government miss out on legally owned revenue. Non-collection also creates a competitive disadvantage for many of Florida's brick-and-mortar retailers already struggling under the weight of the pandemic.

To date, Florida is one of only two states (out of 45 that levy sales taxes) that have not implemented a remote sales tax following a U.S. Supreme Court decision<sup>33</sup> indicating its constitutionality for states. The Florida Revenue Estimating Conference found that not collecting sales tax on remote sales tax costs Florida state and local governments around $612 million a year, a figure that will grow to $870 million annually in five years.<sup>34</sup> With the virus leading to a surge in online sales, the estimate from 2019 likely underestimates the true value of missed remote sales tax revenue. Florida should enact legislation to require marketplace vendors without a physical presence in Florida to collect sales tax and provide it to respective state and local government entities. Past legislation, such as SB 126 and HB 159 in 2020, are frameworks for instituting such legislation.

Support sales tax holidays which are important to many businesses in the Retail industry.

Sales Tax Holidays, specifically Back to School days, have become important to many consumers in Florida. These holidays are crucial to the Retail industry and have made the Back-to-School Holiday the second biggest shopping weekend in Florida behind only Black Friday. In the past, Florida taxpayers have been found to save nearly $543 million in state and local sales taxes from the exemptions.<sup>35</sup> For retailers, the sales tax holidays lead to higher gross sales and greater purchases of particular items. Continuing these holidays will be essential for retailers and small businesses already struggling to maintain consistent sales during the pandemic. Of course, proper safety measures should be prioritized for any sales tax holiday. Florida TaxWatch recommends policymakers continue supporting sales tax holidays due to their cost-saving, revenue boosting properties for consumers and businesses alike.

Recommendation 4

Invest in the expansion of the state's transportation infrastructure network, including airports, seaports, spaceports, highways, and railways part of the State Intermodal System (SIS).

The population growth and economic expansion that will inevitably follow the pandemic's end will require a resilient transportation network well-equipped to handle the increased traffic and trade. In recent years, Florida's infrastructure spending has been inadequate to meet growing needs, hampered by falling transportation funding. By 2040, it is estimated that Florida's will face a $161 billion shortfall between transportation needs and projected revenues. For airports and seaports, two groups especially hard hit by the pandemic, unmet funding is around $10 billion.<sup>36</sup> To remedy this issue, policy-makers must prioritize strategic investments in crucial infrastructure vital to facilitating the movement of people, goods, and services across the state. Targeted investments will have clear economic implications for the entire state as transportation infrastructure supports more than 210,000 jobs, creates $7.2 billion in economic activity, and contributes more than $1.3 billion in taxes—not to mention the importance to attracting new businesses and tourists.<sup>37</sup>

PROFESSIONAL AND BUSINESS SERVICES

INDUSTRY PROFILE

The Professional and Business Services sector is part of the service-providing industries group and includes three principal sub-sectors:

- Professional, Scientific, and Technical Services (NAICS 54) --- include establishments that specialize in providing technical expertise for others. Activities include legal advice, accounting, payroll services, engineering, computer services, consulting, and more.
- Management of Companies and Enterprises (NAICS 55) --- include establishments that administer the strategic or organization planning for another company or enterprise.
- Administrative and Support and Waste Management (NAICS 56) --- includes establishments that perform routine support activities for the day-to-day operations of other organizations. Examples include office administration, clerical services, security and surveillance, janitorial services, and waste disposal services.<sup>38</sup>

As shown in Table 3, Florida's Professional and Business Services sector contributed around $132.1 billion in total output to the state's GDP in 2019, equating to 14 percent of total state GDP. Within this category, Professional, Scientific, and Technical Services contributed the most to GDP with around $73.9 billion in total output. The sector employed 597,000 workers with wages around $81,000.

Despite only maintaining an average employment of 115,000 workers and contributing $19.6 billion in total output, the Management of Companies and Enterprises sub-sector boasted the highest annual wages of all three groups with an annual wage of about $115,000. Lastly, Administrative and Support and Waste Management contributed $38.6 billion to state output and employed just over 682,000 workers, or about 7.7 percent of the state's total work force. Wages were well below the state average, however, with annual wages just under $40,000. Future employment growth for each industry just mentioned was among the highest of all sectors in Florida. Ranging from 10.6 to 14.1 percent employment growth by 2027, the Professional and Business Services sector is predicted to add about 170,000 new jobs in the span of seven years.<sup>39</sup>

EFFECTS OF COVID-19 ON THE SECTOR

Across the broad sector, the rapid transition to remote work platforms has perhaps been the most profound change brought on by the COVID-19 pandemic. Due to the nature of work, many companies within the Professional and Business Services sector were able to adapt to stay-at-home orders and office closings to ensure business continuation. Compared to other major sectors, the Professional and Business Services sector had the third highest ability to telework rate of 70 percent, behind only Information and Financial Activities.<sup>40</sup> The Bureau of Labor Statistics states: "[Telework] feasibility is high in the information, financial activities, professional and business services, and public administration industries; it is low in the leisure and hospitality, agriculture, and construction industries."<sup>41</sup>

Due to higher telework feasibility, employment losses have not been as pronounced compared to other sectors. Employment losses were much smaller for non-critical workers in remote-work feasible sectors, such as Professional, Scientific, and Technical Services, compared to those in hotel and entertainment industries.<sup>42</sup> Nationally, industries where remote work was feasible, such as Professional and Business Services, experienced three percent declines in employment in April 2020 relative to April 2019, whereas non-telework friendly industries like Leisure and Hospitality suffered greater losses in employment.<sup>43</sup>

Although the sector has been able to adapt to remote work in many settings, many exceptions still exist, and certain pockets of the population are disadvantaged in the transition. Those workers who have been able to make the switch primarily include higher-wage, high-skilled workers with adequate access to Internet platforms. At a disadvantage are low-income, largely ethnic minority workers without remote work capabilities. The Economic Policy Institute estimates that the Professional and Business Services industry has a 53.4 percent share of workers who can telework, but less than one-in-five Black workers and roughly one in six Hispanic workers are able to work from home. Additionally, higher-wage workers are six times as likely to be able to work from home as lower-wage workers.<sup>44</sup>

For those workers in the Administrative and Support and Waste Management sector, inability to switch to remote work for some workers (e.g., janitorial services or trash collectors) led to employment difficulties for those with particularly lower wages compared to the rest of the sector as a whole. These disparities are reflected in Florida's employment figures throughout the pandemic.

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, between February and July 2020, employment in Florida's Professional and Business Services sector fell from 1.4 million to 1.3 million in the span of a few months. The decline represented a 6.2 percent contraction with the employment figures in July being eight percent lower than the same time in the previous year.<sup>45</sup> Breaking the Professional and Business Services sector down into its three components, most job losses occurred in the Administrative and Waste Services industry. The year-to-date change hovered around 74,700 fewer jobs, signifying a 10.8 percent reduction over the year. For Professional and Technical Services, the over the year change in jobs actually increased by 1,100 or 0.2 percent. Finally, the over the year change for the Management of Companies and Enterprises employment fell by only 1,700 or 1.5 percent.<sup>46</sup> Based on analysis by the Florida Chamber of Commerce, those jobs in the professional services industry face a total of 76,000 vulnerable jobs with most impacts centering in companies with fewer than 99 employees.<sup>47</sup>

Recommendation 1

The Florida Legislature should establish safeguards to protect businesses, their agents, and individuals from the threat of opportunistic, predatory, and expensive litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by customers and employees. These safeguards should also ensure that those who contract COVID-19 as a result of gross negligence or intent to harm by others are able to recover for their injuries.

As thousands of Florida businesses struggle to reopen or remain open in light of the COVID-19 pandemic, many are fearful of the threat of litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by their customers. If Florida's economy is to recover and regain its pre-pandemic prosperity, it is important that businesses, health-care facilities, and other entities that are working hard to comply with public health directives or protective measures to reduce the risk of exposure to or transmission of COVID-19 are protected from civil liability. It is also important to make sure that those acting in "bad faith" are held accountable for their negligence while ensuring that those who contract COVID-19 because of the gross negligence of others can recover for their injuries.

Provide disaster relief for commercial and non-homestead residential properties.

The Florida Legislature should put in statute a disaster/calamity provision to specifically address economic damages resulting from the impact of loss of access to, or use of, commercial and non-residential real property.

In the past, the Florida Legislature passed similar measures in response to real property damaged by Hurricanes Hermine, Matthew, and Irma (§197.318, Fla. Stat.). The relief would be equivalent to the annualized value of economic damage, which could be a specified amount determined by the Florida Legislature and Department of Revenue. The economic damage could form the basis for an adjustment to the 2020 taxable value, or if action were not attainable in 2020, then it could become a direct adjustment to the 2020 ad valorem taxes. The priority, however, should be for 2020 relief for specified taxpayers.

GOVERNMENT

INDUSTRY PROFILE

The Government sector (NAICS 91)<sup>48</sup> comprises establishments of federal, state, and local government agencies that administer, oversee, and manage public programs and have executive, legislative, or judicial authority. These agencies set policy, adjudicate legal cases, and provide for public safety and national defense. These governmental entities oversee programs that are not typically performed in the private sector. Examples of establishments within this sector would include legislative bodies, judicial courts, police departments, correctional institutions, and space research.<sup>49</sup> County and municipal administration or law enforcement entities are one of the ten largest employers in every county except one. In addition, the military and public corrections facilities are among the top three employers in at least thirteen counties.<sup>50</sup>

As shown in Table 4, there are almost 458,000 employed government workers in the state of Florida, constituting 5.2 percent of total state employment. For these workers, average annual wages typically average around $60,232 --- higher than the state average.<sup>51</sup> The state's government sector—when considering federal, state, county, and municipal governments—contributes around $98.8 billion to the state's economy, around 10.4 percent of state GDP.<sup>52</sup>

EFFECTS OF COVID-19 ON THE SECTOR

For Florida's state, county, and municipal governments, the economic downturn resulting from the pandemic created an uncertain situation for many localities as tax revenues fell and made budget shortfalls inevitable. According to the August 2020 Revenue Estimating Conference report, Florida's general revenue collections were down by nearly $1.9 billion when the state finished its fiscal year (FY) 2019-2020 on June 30, 2020. Anticipated revenues were also revised downward by $3.4 billion in FY 2020-2021 with the bulk of the adjustment coming from a projected $2.8 billion decrease in sales tax revenue over the fiscal year.<sup>53</sup> When the Conference met again in late December, there were sizable adjustments made to the forecast adopted in August to reflect the higher-than-expected revenue collections over the previous few months. The Conference revised anticipated revenues upward by around $1.5 billion in FY 2020-2021 and by $623 million in FY 2021-2022.<sup>54</sup> Driving these upward revisions was a large adjustment to the forecast in Sales Tax revenue over the coming fiscal year. Yet even with these more favorable revenue forecasts in place, there remains a great deal of uncertainty as revenue collections tend to follow fluctuations in Florida's tourism-sensitive economy.

A similar story played out among many of the state's counties and cities. In tourism-reliant cities such as Orlando and Miami, taxable sales in August 2020 were anywhere from 17.0 percent to 27.3 percent lower than the same time in August 2019.<sup>55</sup> Throughout the summer months, local tourist development taxes (TDT) hit historic lows when revenue dropped nearly 95 percent in large cities like Orlando.<sup>56</sup> Even in smaller cities, such as Tallahassee, there was a predicted $2.09 million reduction in TDT revenues in 2020.<sup>57</sup> With such a large drop in local revenue, many areas have had to cut funds to many local development projects, including performing arts and convention centers, while also dealing with rising public health costs.

As part of the federal CARES Act, state and local governments from around the country vied for $150 billion in aid money to be used for supplying public health equipment, reimbursing costs of business interruptions, and providing rent assistance;<sup>58</sup> however, the manner in which this money was disbursed across Florida's local governments was hampered by time delays and lack of consistent guidance. Twelve of Florida's largest counties were the first to receive CARES Act funds, totaling around $2.5 billion. More than two months after this initial disbursement, the state began providing the remaining amount to the state's smaller counties and municipal governments. Yet even with these funds now disbursed, many local governments continued to navigate the complex web of federal/state stipulations, complicated further by the tremendous demand for aid.

Comparable to businesses and workers in the private industry, many within the Government sector likewise experienced numerous challenges in dealing with the pandemic's spread, yet unlike their private sector counterparts, many state employees faced inconsistent, and at times, unclear guidance on telework and return-to-work instructions. In late March, the Department of Management Services (DMS), which oversees state personnel, issued options for sick leave and remote work, but state workers still faced an unclear patchwork of telework policies that sometimes varied among departments within the same agency. The lack of a consistent telework policy across the entire state government has led to confusion for many of the state's employees. Even as the state gradually reopened in early May, many departments had not outlined return-to-work policies for their employees.

Elsewhere in the Government sector, correctional facilities garnered much attention throughout the course of the pandemic as it drew criticism for the rapid spread of COVID-19 among inmates and correctional officers. As of late-December 2020, the Florida Department of Corrections reported that there have been nearly 17,200 positive cases among inmates and 4,100 positive cases among officers.<sup>59</sup> The close proximity to other inmates potentially fuels the rapid transmission. As a result, the surge in prison cases provoked public criticism for the lack of precautionary steps to curb the spread of COVID-19 behind bars, leading some groups to advocate for releasing certain subsets of the prison population more susceptible to the disease. Other states, such as New York, Massachusetts, Missouri, and Oklahoma, have all taken steps to release elderly, non-violent offenders from their prison populations; however, it remains to be seen whether the state of Florida will follow suit.

Analysis by the Florida Chamber of Commerce has found that among those in the government, there are about 13.4 percent of total jobs at risk due to the ongoing pandemic. It is unclear whether the pandemic will have more of an adverse effect on employees at the state or local level; nevertheless, governments at all levels are contending with falling revenues and tightening budget constraints, likely causing recovery efforts to linger for years to come.

Recommendation 1

The Florida Legislature should establish safeguards to protect businesses, their agents, and individuals from the threat of opportunistic, predatory, and expensive litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by customers and employees. ### Recommendation 2

Ensure there is a consistent, statewide telework policy for state employees. Promote similar measures for Florida's county and local governments.

Similar to workers in the private sector, many state government workers transitioned to remote work when in-person work became unsafe and unfeasible during the state's stay-at-home order. Although Florida Statutes (Section 110.171(2), Florida Statutes) already address telecommuting, inconsistencies still exist. Wide disparities in telecommuting policies across agencies and sometimes within departments created confusion for many state employees.

Research suggests that telework can result in improved productivity and cost savings. Costs that can be avoided or reduced include overtime payments, property leasing, janitorial/cleaning services, utilities, office equipment and supplies, and office furniture, among others. A January 2010 report by the Office of Program Policy Analysis and Government Accountability (OPPAGA) examined this issue alongside hoteling and other alternative work arrangements and found that alternative work arrangements can reduce agency costs and provide personnel related benefits (e.g., improved morale and reduced turnover).<sup>60</sup> The Department of Management Services should develop a comprehensive, statewide telework policy for state employees, thereby improving personnel benefits and promoting consistency across agencies and departments.

Florida can reduce its overall prison costs and better protect at-risk inmates from COVID-19 through the supervised release of certain non-violent elderly inmates.

Florida's elderly inmate population is particularly vulnerable to the COVID-19 virus. Even before the pandemic, Florida's elderly inmates bore a disproportionate share of the state's prison healthcare costs. According to The National Institute of Corrections, states spend on average $70,000 per year to incarcerate someone age 50 and older, nearly three times what it costs for younger inmates.<sup>61</sup> Coupled with the health risks associated with contracting COVID-19, the potential health care costs are even higher. Florida should identify low-risk, elderly inmates to receive conditional medical release. The action would follow other states, such as Illinois, Pennsylvania, and California, which have already lowered their prison populations through similar measures. By releasing elderly inmates, Florida can protect especially at-risk inmates while also lowering long-term costs associated with housing elderly inmates.

EDUCATION & HEALTH SERVICES

INDUSTRY PROFILE

The Education and Health Services sector is a part of the service-providing industries group and consists of two primary sub-sectors:

- Educational Services (NAICS 61) --- includes establishments that provide instruction and training on a wide variety of subjects. Examples include schools, colleges, universities, test training centers, and more.<sup>62</sup>
- Health Care and Social Assistance (NAICS 62) --- includes establishments providing health care, such as hospitals and residential care facilities, and social assistance, such as child services and community housing services. Although industries in the Health Care and Social Assistance sector may differ in the degree to which they provide medical care exclusively, all industries share the commonality of including trained health practitioners with sufficient medical expertise.<sup>63</sup>

As shown in Table 5, Florida's Educational Services industry employs around 613,700 workers (or 6.9 percent of the state's labor force) and contributes around $9.2 billion in total output, only about one percent of total state GDP. Average annual wages in this sector are just under $47,000, which is below the state average. For the Health Care and Social Assistance industry, employment is more than double that of its Educational Services partner with employment at 1.2 million workers (or about 14 percent of the state's labor force). The sector contributes $85.2 billion in total output, equating to nine percent of Florida's total GDP. For those in the Health Care industry, average annual wages are around $54,500 in a year—about $3,000 above the state's average. According to the Florida DEO, the entire sector is expected to grow by 197,000 workers by 2027 with 87 percent of the expected growth coming from the Health Care industry and 13 percent of the predicted growth coming from the Educational Services industry.<sup>64</sup>

EFFECTS OF COVID-19 ON THE SECTOR

Ever since the COVID-19 pandemic emerged as a global threat, no industry has experienced the direct risks of exposure to the virus more than the Health Care industry. For health care professionals across the state and around the globe, the inherent dangers associated with treating COVID patients have consistently been met with steadfast courage and noble heroism, warranting noteworthy praise and a renewed commitment to supporting our frontline workers.

As of late-December 2020, the state of Florida reported more than 1.3 million positive COVID-19 cases and around 21,000 deaths to date. Data by the Agency for Health Care Administration also show that the number of COVID-19 positive patients in hospitals was steadily rising with around 5,300 hospitalizations. Florida's positivity rate averaged eight percent in December after hovering below five percent for most of the late-summer.<sup>65</sup> Mirroring the uptick in cases across the nation, Florida looks poised to experience a rise in COVID-19 cases as the winter months approach.

According to the Florida Hospital Association, Florida hospitals were estimated to lose up to $8 billion between March and August 2020 from reduced revenues and increased costs related to COVID-19, even after accounting for compensation from federal relief funds. Financial losses are associated with lost revenue due to canceled outpatient services, elective services, and increased operational costs from securing personal protective equipment and other gear. Throughout the pandemic, hospitals have also incurred additional reimbursed costs through purchase of Remdesivir and hiring additional clinical staff to meet case surges in the early summer. The financial impact on hospitals across the state have ranged by region with most revenue losses centering in south Florida, where losses exceeded $4.3 billion. A breakdown by region is provided in Figure 1 below.<sup>66</sup>

Outside hospital settings, the COVID-19 pandemic also changed the landscape for many outpatient clinics and long-term care facilities, ushering in a subsequent shift toward telehealth and implementation of strict protocols to protect the state's most vulnerable populations. Early on during the pandemic, the governor suspended elective surgeries to divert much needed medical focus to hospitals. As a result, elective surgeries in outpatient settings decreased tremendously—a feature mirroring trends across the southeast. By some estimates, the number of visits to ambulatory practices declined by 57 percent in southern states, Florida included.

Around the same time, the number of telemedicine visits as a percentage of total visits rose rapidly across the nation with some estimates supporting a nationwide 14 percent increase compared to normal.<sup>67</sup> In some places, such as Memorial Healthcare System in Broward County, telehealth visits through March and April skyrocketed by over 662 percent over all of 2019.<sup>68</sup> During the 2019 legislative session, Florida passed a law which enabled out-of-state health care professionals to provide telehealth services for patients in Florida after meeting certain eligibility requirements.<sup>69</sup> By expanding access to more timely telehealth services, the state positioned itself to respond to the surging demand in telemedicine during the pandemic. The governor also suspended visitation to Florida's long-term care facilities and instituted strict screening protocols for medical workers since most COVID-related deaths focused on elderly populations in these settings; however, by early September, the state began to allow family members to visit their loved ones in long-term care facilities in a safe, socially-distanced way. For workers at these facilities, strict testing protocols were put in place to substantially reduce the possibility of asymptomatic transmission.

The continued need for healthcare workers to combat the virus outbreak meant healthcare jobs did not face the steep falloff in employment as some other industries did. Nonetheless, heightened health risk from close contact with infected patients and state-mandated reductions in elective surgeries meant some jobs were lost since the pandemic began. In February 2020, employment in the industry stood at around 1.19 million workers. By April when the pandemic worsened, employment reduced to 1.08 million workers (a 9.1 percent reduction). By July 2020, employment rose again to 1.15 million employees, regaining some momentum as various outpatient settings resumed services at the state's direction.<sup>70</sup> According to the Florida Chamber of Commerce, in total, the Health Care industry has 211,00 total jobs at risk with these vulnerable jobs coming from primarily small (fewer than 100 employees) and large (over 500 employees) sized firms.<sup>71</sup>

Across the education spectrum, from K-12 to higher education, students, teachers, and administrators are facing the unique challenges associated with adapting to primarily remote platforms. With cases mounting in early March, many schools decided to discontinue in-person instruction in favor of online teaching to reduce transmission. The online-learning approach continued well into the summer and with a majority of the schools returning to in-person teaching last fall, the primary concern continued to be whether schools had the necessary safety measures in place to prevent transmission between teacher and students.

For schools in the K-12 setting, early spring 2020 presented a tremendous difficulty in expanding remote instruction for the state's more than 2.8 million K-12 public students. By summer, the difficulty seemed to be conflicting and ambiguous state direction in desiring physical re-openings for schools come fall, a position that eventually permitted schools to implement online-only options for the beginning of semesters. Due to the gradual return of students to classrooms across the state, some schools have been temporarily closed due to outbreaks, with infections among school-aged children rising by almost 35 percent.<sup>72</sup> By mid-November 2020, eight Florida counties had 100 or more COVID-19 cases in public and private K-12 schools. The data show Miami-Dade and Broward lead other counties with more than 250 cases each.<sup>73</sup> As the academic year advances, K-12 schools around Florida will continue to face numerous challenges in keeping students and teachers safe, ensuring equal access to education for all students, and maintaining the instructional capacity online for families opting to forego in-person teaching this year.

For public and private colleges and universities, the COVID-19 pandemic has led to falling revenues due to heightened safety measures, room and board refunds, and numerous students foregoing enrollment during the 2020-2021 academic school year. To recoup these losses, some universities have looked to federal aid, but the aid has been largely insufficient to cover all incurred costs. According to estimates, Florida's public universities and colleges received over $252 million in aid money from the federal CARES Act, with the University of Central Florida receiving the largest amount at $51 million.<sup>74</sup> The Independent Colleges and Universities of Florida (ICUF), consisting of 30 Florida based non-profit institutions, have faced close to $1 billion in collective losses to date with only a portion of that amount covered by federal aid.<sup>75</sup> Among private institutions, Keiser University received the largest CARES Act allocation around $21 million.<sup>76</sup> With courses resuming in the spring semester and university-related cases rising, it remains to be seen how colleges and universities will maintain safety measures for a younger subset of the population that in recent months has been the impetus for new COVID-19 cases.

In total, employment in the Education and Health Services sector fell by 127,300 jobs between March and April 2020. Since then, employment has gradually regained some steam as August's employment figures are only 1.2 percent lower than the previous year.<sup>77</sup> The prospect for short and long-term recovery depend on a variety of factors including how well schools can adapt to increased demand for online schooling, reduced revenue flows, and hampered prospects for future employment. Some of these uncertainties can likely be ameliorated by additional state and federal aid money in successive legislative sessions over coming years.

POLICY RECOMMENDATIONS

Recommendation 1

The Florida Legislature should establish safeguards to protect healthcare workers who must make extremely difficult medical decisions under trying and uncertain circumstances and educators who must look for creative ways to manage the risk and ensure the health and safety of students and others who enter school grounds from the threat of opportunistic, predatory, and expensive litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by customers and employees. These safeguards should also ensure that those who contract COVID-19 as a result of gross negligence or intent to harm by others are able to recover for their injuries.

As thousands of Florida businesses struggle to reopen or remain open in light of the COVID-19 pandemic, many are fearful of the threat of litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by their customers. If Florida's economy is to recover and regain its pre-pandemic prosperity, it is important that businesses, healthcare and educational facilities, and other entities that are working hard to comply with public health directives or protective measures to reduce the risk of exposure to or transmission of COVID-19 are protected from civil liability. It is also important to make sure that those acting in "bad faith" are held accountable for their negligence while ensuring that those who contract COVID-19 because of the gross negligence of others can recover for their injuries.

Recommendation 2

Expand telehealth opportunities in the state of Florida by ensuring rural and remote areas have adequate broadband capabilities and by addressing regulatory barriers to reimbursements for telehealth providers.

Telehealth and virtual care have become important avenues for patients to receive medical care while keeping physicians, staff, and other patients safe from the COVID-19 virus. By 2030, it is estimated that more than 50 percent of health care services will be consumed virtually.<sup>78</sup> Despite these trends, seamless telehealth delivery cannot be achieved without improvements in broadband internet, digital readiness, and reimbursement regulation.

Based on prior Florida TaxWatch analysis, there are more than 464,000 people without access to wired connection in rural and remote areas. Another 280,000 people are without any available wired internet providers in their areas.<sup>79</sup> Without these digital connections, residents in more remote or rural areas will be without the same telehealth capabilities as those in more urban areas. Additionally, another challenge deals with barriers to reimbursements for providers. Even as many commercial insurance companies have provided updated guidelines in response to the COVID-19 pandemic, much more must be done to ensure providers are able to react to an increase in telehealth demand and guidelines persist for the foreseeable future.

Due to the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic, states such as Florida need adequate telehealth technology in place. Florida TaxWatch believes that by addressing the challenges to accessing and delivering telehealth services, Florida will have a robust system to serve millions of Floridians both during and after the pandemic. To accomplish this, policymakers should enact new telehealth insurance coverage and payment parity laws or amend current laws to adapt to the evolving nature of telehealth services.<sup>80</sup>

The Florida Legislature should permit Florida pharmacists with the proper safety and storage equipment to administer COVID-19 vaccines when they become available.

From the perspective of many patients, the pharmacist is the most accessible and trusted medical professional. Implementing point-of-care treatment for COVID-19 (or administering vaccines for other types of pandemics) in community pharmacies will improve access to care for patients who do not have a primary physician or who are only able to access healthcare clinics after normal business hours. Pharmacists are able to see patients after the initial treatment to assess patient status and the need for further intervention. The 2020 Legislature passed, and the Governor signed into law, HB 389, which allows pharmacists to test and treat patients for the flu and strep throat.

TaxWatch thinks this innovation is worthy of consideration by the Legislature as a way to improve access to health care, reduce its costs, and improve patient outcomes. TaxWatch recommends the Legislature more fully evaluate the pros and cons of point-of-care vaccine administration and identify ways to overcome the identified barriers to successful implementation.

Recommendation 4

Include K-12 and higher education teachers and employees who are in direct contact with students on the list of frontline workers to receive the COVID-19 vaccine.

Schools, colleges, and universities represent a potential major source of community spread. As students return to the classrooms in increasing numbers, making sure that teachers and employees who come into direct contact with students receive the COVID-19 vaccine will reduce community spread and permit school districts, colleges, and universities to continue providing quality instruction for students.

Recommendation 5

The Florida Legislature should commit to supporting higher education institutions from both public and private settings and should specifically fund the Effective Access to Student Education (EASE) grant program for independent colleges and universities.

The Independent Colleges and Universities of Florida (ICUF) consist of 30 Florida based not-for-profit, regionally accredited institutions. All 30 ICUF institutions closed on-campus instruction for the Spring and Summer 2020 semesters and shifted to online learning. To date, ICUF institutions have lost more than $60 million in revenue for room and board refunds, $90 million in loss of earnings and refunds due to summer program cancelations (including summer camps), and tremendous uncertainty in those schools fortunate to have endowment investments. Once these costs are added, Florida's 30 independent institutions face close to $1 billion in collective losses.<sup>81</sup> The Florida Legislature cut EASE 18.8%, or $22.9 million, in the 2019 session and did not replace those funds in the 2020 session.<sup>82</sup>

LEISURE & HOSPITALITY

INDUSTRY PROFILE

According to the North American Industry Classification System (NAICS), the Leisure and Hospitality sector is one of several service-providing industries and is comprised of two sub-sectors:

- Arts, Entertainment, and Recreation (NAICS 71) --- includes a wide range of establishments that provide services to meet cultural, entertainment, and recreation interests of their patrons. Examples include theme parks, bowling alleys, golf courses, and spectator sports; and
- Accommodation and Food Services (NAICS 72) --- includes establishments providing customers with lodging and/or prepared meals, snacks, beverages for consumption. Examples include hotels, motels, full-service restaurants, and bars.<sup>83</sup>

As shown in Table 6, the Leisure and Hospitality industry contributed around $53.6 billion to the state's GDP (after adjusting for inflation) in 2019. The total contribution from the sector equated to around 5.7 percent of the state's total GDP when taking into account all the other sectors in the economy.<sup>84</sup> Furthermore, in 2019, the Leisure and Hospitality industry averaged a monthly employment of 1.02 million (11.5 percent of total state employment) for its Accommodation and Food Services sub-sector and a monthly employment of nearly 250,000 (2.8 percent of total state employment) for its Arts, Entertainment, and Recreation sub-sector.<sup>85</sup> Prior to COVID-19, the Accommodation and Food Services sub-sector was predicted to grow by 125,000 additional jobs, or around 12.2 percent, by 2027. For the Arts and Entertainment sub-sector, employment was expected to climb 23,000 jobs by 2027, or about 9.8 percent.<sup>86</sup>

EFFECTS OF COVID-19 ON THE SECTOR

Florida's Leisure and Hospitality industry has been the most visibly affected during the course of the COVID-19 pandemic. Known for the millions of tourists who usually flock to the state during the summer months, Florida has felt the immediate impact of reduced air travel around the world as theme parks, beaches, and other attractions have faced tremendous drops in attendance. For a state so largely dependent on tourism, it is natural that the most pronounced effects of the ongoing COVID-19 outbreak would center on this particular economic sector.

According to VISIT Florida, the state's principal tourism marketing agency, year-over-year change in hotel demand hit a low-point in April 2020 when hotel demand plummeted 77.6 percent lower than the same time in 2019. The drop in demand corresponded to a $416 million decline in hotel revenue. Although hotel demand and revenue have made slight improvements since April, the state still faces lower than average numbers.<sup>87</sup> Preliminary estimates suggest that only 12.8 million visitors visited the state between April and June, a decrease of around 60.5 percent from the previous year. Domestic visitors accounted for most of these visitors as international travel only numbered around 235,000 visitors, marking a 91.1 percent decrease compared to 2019.<sup>88</sup>

Due to the large-scale reduction in out-of-state and international visitors, businesses that usually cater to tourists faced a huge plunge in customer revenue. In an average year, tourism generates around $94 billion in local spending between lodging, food and beverage, shopping, transportation, and entertainment.<sup>89</sup> With the pandemic, however, the amount of tourism spending is expected to fall far below previous years. The state's large theme parks, such as Disney, Universal, and Sea-

World did not re-open until June and July, leading to thousands of employee furloughs and eventual layoffs. As gatherings, events, and activities were shut down throughout the pandemic, Florida's small businesses were especially hard hit from the loss in tourism activity. Data from the Florida Chamber of Commerce suggest that small businesses in the Leisure and Hospitality industry suffered the highest number of closed business weeks compared to small businesses in all other economic sectors in Florida. For the Arts, Entertainment, and Recreation industry, there was around 14 missed weeks of business and around 66.3 percent revenue loss. For the Accommodation and Food Services industry, there was about 12.6 missed weeks and 64.5 percent revenue lost among small businesses.<sup>90</sup>

Between March 2020 and April 2020, the state's Leisure and Hospitality industry suffered 481,900 job losses, representing a 39.8 percent one-month drop. Among all of Florida's economic industries, the Leisure and Hospitality industry faced the largest decline in employment. In the middle of the state's April shutdown, the industry had 41.7 percent fewer jobs than it did in April 2019.<sup>91</sup> When considering the total jobs at risk based on proximity to others, the Florida Chamber of Commerce found that the Leisure and Hospitality industry had 913,000 total vulnerable jobs in Florida, far outpacing the next largest industry, Retail Trade. By company size, the same report found that:

- 45 percent of the total vulnerable jobs were in large-sized companies with 500+ employees;
- 13 percent of the vulnerable jobs were in medium-sized companies with 100-499 employees; and
- 42 percent of vulnerable jobs were in small-sized companies with fewer than 99 employees.<sup>92</sup>

Finally, a drop in the state's tourism minimized potential tax revenue generated. According to a 2018 report by Rockport Analytics, Florida tourism generates about $14.1 billion in federal tax revenue and around $12 billion in state and local tax revenue in a typical year.<sup>93</sup> Most localities fund numerous development projects and marketing efforts through the use of tourist development taxes levied on visitors. Local government took a hit when these revenue sources faced surging declines during the pandemic's worst months. In some places such as Orlando, home to the state's major theme parks and attractions, the county government saw a record 95 percent drop in tourism tax dollars in April, equating to a loss of $765,900 that would have funded local development projects.<sup>94</sup> The loss in tax revenue is a trend shared by local governments of varying sizes all throughout Florida.

POLICY RECOMMENDATIONS

Recommendation 1

The Florida Legislature should establish safeguards to protect businesses, their agents, and individuals from the threat of opportunistic, predatory, and expensive litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by customers and employees. These safeguards should also ensure that those who contract COVID-19 as a result of gross negligence or intent to harm by others are able to recover for their injuries.

As thousands of Florida businesses struggle to reopen or remain open in light of the COVID-19 pandemic, many are fearful of the threat of litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by their customers. If Florida's economy is to recover and regain its pre-pandemic prosperity, it is important that businesses, health-care facilities, and other entities that are working hard to comply with public health directives or protective measures to reduce the risk of exposure to or transmission of COVID-19 are protected from civil liability. It is also important to make sure that those acting in "bad faith" are held accountable for their negligence while ensuring that those who contract COVID-19 because of the gross negligence of others can recover for their injuries.

Florida TaxWatch research shows that continuous, targeted investment into Florida's tourism industry is critical to our state's success. While diversifying the economy is important, tourism will remain a key component of Florida's economic strength. The Legislature must continue to fund tourism marketing and promotion at a level sufficient to move Florida forward.

Marketing Florida's attractions and natural destinations will be essential to recovering Florida's economy in coming years. By making strategic investments in Florida's marketing tourism wing, the state can mitigate against the negative perception that Florida is an unsafe destination during and following the pandemic. Prior to the pandemic, the Florida Office of Economic and Demographic Research (EDR) estimated a positive return on investment (ROI) around 2.15 for VISIT Florida's marketing efforts in 2018, meaning for every dollar spent on the state's marketing efforts, the state received $2.15 in tax revenue. The positive ROI took into account the goods purchased by tourists, from hotel rooms and meals to souvenir shops and gasoline.<sup>95</sup> By reminding tourists, both international and domestic, that Florida is "open for business" and safe to visit, tourism and revenue can hopefully return to pre-COVID levels.

Recommendation 3

Expand the Rural and Urban Jobs Tax Credit programs to include restaurants, bars, and retail establishments in both programs.

The Rural Job Tax Credit and Urban Job Tax Credit programs offer incentives for eligible business within one of 36 designated Qualified Rural Areas or one of 13 urban areas to create new jobs. The current structure of the two programs currently excludes restaurants, bars, and retail establishments—businesses most impacted by the pandemic. Both programs are capped at $5 million in total tax credits annually. Policymakers should expand both programs by increasing the annual caps on tax credits and including restaurants, bars, and retail establishments as qualified recipients.

Recommendation 4

Stop the diversion of Tourist Development Tax (TDT) funds for purposes other than the marketing and promotion of tourism.

In 1977, the Legislature passed the Local Option Tourist Development Act, which allows counties to levy additional sales tax on "transient rentals" (hotels, motels, resorts, or any other living accommodation) for a term of six months or less for the sole and specific purpose of funding the promotion and marketing of Florida tourism. Sixty-three of Florida's 67 counties levy some combination of TDTs.<sup>96</sup>

Since then, the authorized uses of TDT revenue have also expanded. In addition to the original three uses, TDTs can now be used for: zoos; beach park facilities; beach, channel, estuary, or lagoon improvements; erosion control; restoration of lakes and rivers; fishing piers; nature centers; auditoriums operated by non-profits; emergency medical and law enforcement services (coastal counties); and professional sports franchise and spring training facilities. Counties may also use TDTs for major capital improvements, including land acquisition, for public facilities including transportation, sewer, solid waste, drainage, potable water, and pedestrian facilities, if they are "needed to increase tourist-related business activities." Not all the above uses are available to all counties.

The increasing expansion of the authorized uses of tourist development taxes is troubling. TDTs were created to fund a relatively narrow set of tourism related uses with a focus on promotion and advertising. As more and more uses are allowed, the dollars available for advertising and promotion decrease.

Recommendation 5

Given the significance of Florida's natural resources to its Leisure and Hospitality industries, the state should continue its strategic investment in targeted water quality improvements to achieve significant, meaningful and measurable nutrient reductions in key waterbodies across the state.

The governor's Bolder, Brighter, Better Future budget for FY 2020-2021 calls for $2.5 billion to be invested over four years for protection of water resources, an increase of $1 billion over the previous four years. The current budget appropriates more than $625 million for this purpose, including more than $322 million for Everglades restoration projects. Continued funding will help to protect these unique natural resources and ensure that all visitors and Florida residents alike have access to these prized properties for future generations.

MANUFACTURING

INDUSTRY PROFILE

The Manufacturing sector (NAICS 31-33) is part of the goods-producing group and comprises establishments engaged in mechanical, physical, or chemical transformation of materials, substances, or components into new products. These establishments are most often described as plants, factories, or production mills that incorporate machines and other heavy equipment.<sup>97</sup> Examples of businesses in this sector are largely diverse and include firms producing goods including food and beverages, aerospace equipment, communications, pharmaceuticals, batteries, and transportation vehicles. Florida is also home to numerous advanced manufacturing companies which specialize in high-skill, high-wage jobs and develop nanotechnology and other digital technologies.

As shown in Table 7, the Manufacturing sector was a key driver in Florida's economy with a total economic output around $53.6 billion, or about 5.6 percent of total state output in 2019.<sup>98</sup> With more than 20,000 manufacturing companies, the state boasted over 383,000 jobs (4.3 percent of total jobs in Florida) and average annual wages of $63,883 in 2019.<sup>99</sup> Employment in the Manufacturing industry is currently concentrated in the state's southeast, central, and northeastern parts, with counties in these areas contributing nearly 57 percent of Florida manufacturing jobs.<sup>100</sup> Manufacturing jobs are also important to largely rural areas, supplying these areas with abundant opportunities to rapidly grow regional output and provide high paying jobs.

By 2027, the Manufacturing sector is expected to grow by an additional 7,000 jobs, or 1.9 percent.<sup>101</sup> In terms of productivity, or gross revenue per employee, Florida currently ranks 32nd among all 50 states and the District of Columbia with an annual $142,943 in gross revenue per employee. Even though this represents a significant increase since 2014, Florida still lags behind other states in the southeastern U.S. in terms of productivity. Nevertheless, the industry has made tremendous strides in promoting competitive, high-wage, high-skill jobs in recent years.<sup>102</sup>

EFFECTS OF COVID-19 ON THE SECTOR

Compared to other industries in Florida, the Manufacturing industry has faced a unique set of challenges in response to the COVID-19 pandemic due to the nature of work and the industry's relationship to international markets. In particular, the Manufacturing industry has struggled with supply chain disruptions, workplace safety requirements, and remote work difficulties, resulting in layoffs and ceased operations in some cases. Yet at the same time, many manufacturing companies have transitioned to aid in the production of essential equipment necessary to fight the virus's spread and have proven essential to recovery efforts as a result.

At the pandemic's peak in April 2020, the state witnessed a loss of 33,700 jobs, or about a 7.9 percent reduction, from the same month in 2019. Despite this initial loss, by July 2020, the Manufacturing sector was able to regain nearly 16,000 jobs since the industry's low point in April.<sup>103</sup> In total, risk analysis suggests that there are up to 89,000 vulnerable manufacturing jobs in Florida due to the close proximity between employees in some firms. Of the total vulnerable jobs, over 46 percent are in firms with 500+ employees, 20 percent are in firms with 100-499 employees, and 34 percent are in firms with fewer than 99 employees.<sup>104</sup>

According to a nationwide survey by the National Association of Manufacturers (NAM), over 78.3 percent of manufacturing companies anticipated a financial impact, 53.1 percent anticipated a change in operations, and 35.5 percent were already facing significant supply chain disruptions.<sup>105</sup> Respondents who commented on their supply chain disruptions noted how timing issues led to parts arriving late and deliveries to customers being delayed as a result. These subsequent time delays resulted in some additional costs as some manufacturers had to identify alternative suppliers. In response to supply disruptions, organizations such as FloridaMakes have provided manufacturers with preparedness checklists and regional networks to mitigate against potential disruptions.<sup>106</sup> In another effort to help with supply and demand imbalances, The Associated Industries of Florida, Space Florida, and FloridaMakes teamed up to develop Connex Florida, an online database that connects manufacturers with businesses in need of their products during the pandemic.

The COVID-19 outbreak has also resulted in enhanced cleaning and sanitation protocols for the industry due to the nature of work at many firms. For some manufacturers, enhanced protocols include mandatory use of face masks or face coverings, eliminating common touch points, and repeatedly screening employees for symptoms. These measures seek to reduce the transmission of COVID-19 in spaces where employees are in close proximity. In addition, some employers are staggering work and allowing some employees to work remotely when applicable; however, not all companies are able to provide remote work.

Even with mitigative measures, enhanced cleaning protocols, and innovative new tools in place, Florida's Manufacturing sector will likely still feel the effects of slowed international markets. Yet even as these manufacturers contend with shifting global markets, their basic importance to the overall economy cannot be underscored enough. Whether producing protective medical equipment and ventilators, or advanced technology and rockets, Manufacturing will remain essential to the economy's recovery and future advancement.

These safeguards should also ensure that those who contract COVID-19 as a result of gross negligence or intent to harm by others are able to recover for their injuries.

As thousands of Florida businesses struggle to reopen or remain open in light of the COVID-19 pandemic, many are fearful of the threat of litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by their customers. If Florida's economy is to recover and regain its pre-pandemic prosperity, it is important that businesses, health-care facilities, and other entities that are working hard to comply with public health directives or protective measures to reduce the risk of exposure to or transmission of COVID-19 are protected from civil liability. It is also important to make sure that those acting in "bad faith" are held accountable for their negligence while ensuring that those who contract COVID-19 because of the gross negligence of others can recover for their injuries.

Reestablish the Qualified Target Industry (QTI) Tax Refund Program.

In 1994, Florida established the Qualified Target Industry (QTI) Tax Refund program to boost the creation of high-quality, high-wage jobs. The program created a state grant to offset the amount a qualifying business paid in state and local taxes. Despite finding a positive ROI between 4.3:1 and 6.4:1, the state opted to discontinue the QTI program and allowed it to expire on June 30, 2020.<sup>107</sup> By reestablishing the program, the state can create and retain high-paying, high-skilled jobs in the manufacturing industry.

Recommendation 3

Create a tax credit to encourage manufacturers to use Florida suppliers.

Maintaining a resilient, in-state supplier base is important for supplying the state's need for personal protection equipment, ventilator parts, and other necessary components for medical equipment; however, for many companies in the manufacturing sector, supply chain imbalances are not enough to stay on course with growing manufacturing demands. Coupled with the international supply chain disruptions experienced globally, it is now important more than ever to establish a sustainable in-state supply chain. A tax credit taken against a corporate income tax would be useful to help improve state supply-chains and bolster manufacturing.

Recommendation 4

Support advanced manufacturing across the state through continued public investment in initiatives that adapt and deploy Industry 4.0 technology.

The continued growth of Florida's Manufacturing sector will depend in large part on how well Florida manufacturers adopt technology and how technology shapes the future of Manufacturing. Advanced manufacturing is the integration of new technology and techniques to optimize product design and create highly-differentiated, cost-effective, and competitive products. Due to the high-skilled nature of this manufacturing work, advanced manufacturing companies support many high-skill, high-paying jobs in Florida while also generating millions in tax revenue.

The challenge facing manufacturers is "connection." With the Industrial Internet of Things (IIoT) upon us, technologies such as robotics, 3D printing, advanced analytics and Artificial Intelligence (AI) now offer the potential for connected, additive and autonomous manufacturing processes — which is critical for companies looking to extend the lifespan of machines, reduce device breakdowns and increase throughput. By continuing public investment in advanced manufacturing, the state can better position itself to diversify the economy and emerge from the pandemic as a global leader in information technology, research, innovation, and manufacturing.

Recommendation 5

Invest in entrepreneurial second-stage companies with tremendous growth potential through state programs such as the Manufacturers Business Growth Program offered by FloridaMakes, in partnership with GrowFL.

Second-stage companies are firms that have survived start-up phase and now focus on growth, expansion, and job creation. In Florida, there were 181,648 second-stage companies in 2016, representing 11.7 percent of Florida's businesses, 34.3 percent of jobs, and 34.7 percent of total sales.<sup>108</sup> GrowFL is an effective state program that plays an integral part in Florida's entrepreneurial economy. The program identifies companies with the greatest potential to strengthen the state economy and provides them with tools and methods to overcome growth challenges. According to prior Florida TaxWatch analysis, between 2017 and 2026, GrowFL was predicted to generate $4.72 billion in additional GDP, create 43,700 private sector jobs with average annual salaries of $97,815, produce $4.61 billion in additional personal income, and generate $345 million in additional state tax revenue.<sup>109</sup> In order to improve economic outcomes across the state and offset losses from the pandemic, policymakers should increase funding for FloridaMakes and GrowFL and other programs in the state's economic development toolkit.

Recommendation 6

Consistent with Governor DeSantis's Executive Order 19-31, the Florida Legislature should appropriate funds to promote apprenticeships and other industry specific learning opportunities, and to fund workforce programs within the Florida College System.

Even though Florida's manufacturing industry has grown in recent years, a chronic problem continues to be the lack of appropriate skills in the labor force. Manufacturers argue that skills shortages result when there are new advanced technologies, negative perceptions among students and parents toward the industry, and baby boomer retirements. Manufacturers reported deficiencies in both soft skills (e.g., time management, communication, leadership) and hard skills (e.g., math, information technology, research). Such an incongruence between sought after skills and available skills in the labor force creates difficulty in filling high-wage jobs. By expanding apprenticeships and workforce programs in the Florida College System, the Legislature can improve the talent pool for manufacturing jobs in coming years and lessen the negative perceptions people may hold about the industry.

INFORMATION

INDUSTRY PROFILE

The Information sector (NAICS 51) is one of the service-providing industries and comprises establishments engaged in the following: (a) producing and distributing information, (b) providing the means to transmit or distribute these products as well as data or communications, (c) processing data.<sup>110</sup> Included in this sector are companies that publish material on the Internet, the motion picture and sound industries, broadcasting companies, telecommunications, Web search portals, and information services.

As shown in Table 8, the Information sector contributed $49.5 billion to Florida's GDP, corresponding to around 5.2 percent of the state's total output in 2019.<sup>111</sup> There were just under 140,000 workers employed, on average each month in 2019, which was about 1.6 percent of the state's entire labor force. In terms of annual wages, workers had an average of about $85,700, well above the state average.<sup>112</sup> In coming years, the Information sector's employment is expected to grow by a miniscule 0.9 percent by 2027, equating to around 1,220 new jobs.<sup>113</sup>

EFFECTS OF COVID-19 ON SECTOR

The widespread availability of information throughout the course of the pandemic has been vital to understanding the virus's nature and scope while also offering a reprieve to many families confined to the indoors during a collection of stay-at-home orders throughout the early summer. Yet, the Information industry has not been immune to the detrimental effects of the COVID-19 crisis. From newspaper outlets and broadcasting companies to motion pictures and booksellers, businesses within the Information industry have faced added strain to economic trends that already seemed perilous prior to the pandemic.

The rapid dissemination of accurate, reliable, and credible information relating to the COVID-19 pandemic has been a priority for print and digital media companies around the nation. According to the Florida Press Association, in a recent survey of Floridians, a majority of those surveyed (53 percent) indicated that they seek COVID-19 related information from newspapers' online editions, with another quarter indicating they receive information from a combination of newspapers' web and print editions.<sup>114</sup> The news media business, however, continues to face extraordinary challenges that began before the pandemic in securing enough revenue to continue digital and media print with fewer businesses posting ads and many news companies offering COVID-19-related articles without subscription.

Across the nation, an estimated 36,000 employees of news media companies have been laid off, furloughed, or had pay reduced in response to the virus.<sup>115</sup> A similar trend across Florida has unfolded. For the Tampa Bay Times, the virus resulted in several journalist layoffs and a ten percent pay cut for full-time staff members. Other media outlets, such as Orlando Weekly and Jacksonville's Florida Times-Union also announced layoffs in response to the pandemic. The Miami Herald cut jobs in its advertising department and closed a publishing subsidiary focused on travel and tourism.<sup>116</sup>

With many movie theaters closing their doors due to government orders and movie goers resorting to at-home streaming services, the TV and film industry has likewise faced building pressure under the pandemic. Across the nation, reduced attendance and closed theaters resulted in an estimated $4.4 billion in box office revenue, down 61 percent from 2019.

The pandemic's timing could not be worse as it hit during the peak summer months where annual ticket sales usually account for 40 percent of yearly sales.<sup>117</sup>

Large cinema companies, such as AMC and Regal Cinema, have reported unsustainable drops in revenue, and during the fall, Regal made the announcement they were potentially closing theater doors permanently due to bankruptcy. Even as some theaters and entertainment venues gradually reopen, many potential consumers still voice their concern over contracting COVID-19 in closely confined spaces with only 16-20 percent of the general public expressing comfort in going to the movies.<sup>118</sup>

Between February and July 2020, the Information industry in Florida lost around 10,000 jobs, from a high of about 137,900 in February to 127,900 workers in July. Compared to 2019, July's job figures are eight percent lower than the previous year.<sup>119</sup> According to the Florida Chamber of Commerce, there are 28,000 potential jobs at risk in the Information sector with about 70 percent of these jobs focusing in large size firms with over 500 employees. The industry is considered to be at medium-risk when considering the potential jobs at risk.<sup>120</sup> The prospects for recovery are largely dependent on the ongoing nature of the COVID-19 pandemic. With less ad revenue and fewer moviegoers, it can be expected that at least in the short-term, companies in the Information sector will face continued financial hardship.

POLICY RECOMMENDATIONS

Recommendation 1

The Florida Legislature should establish safeguards to protect businesses, their agents, and individuals from the threat of opportunistic, predatory, and expensive litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by customers and employees. These safeguards should also ensure that those who contract COVID-19 as a result of gross negligence or intent to harm by others are able to recover for their injuries.

As thousands of Florida businesses struggle to reopen or remain open in light of the COVID-19 pandemic, many are fearful of the threat of litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by their customers. If Florida's economy is to recover and regain its pre-pandemic prosperity, it is important that businesses, healthcare facilities, and other entities that are working hard to comply with public health directives or protective measures to reduce the risk of exposure to or transmission of COVID-19 are protected from civil liability. that those acting in "bad faith" are held accountable for their negligence while ensuring that those who contract COVID-19 because of the gross negligence of others can recover for their injuries.

State-level incentives to stimulate Florida's film and entertainment industry are both necessary and important to remain competitive. If the tax credit incentive program can be recreated to ensure the state makes back its investment, to create jobs for Florida residents, to promote Florida tourism, and to pump additional revenue into local businesses, then it would be in the best interest of the state for the Legislature to consider such revisions.

In 2017, there were more than 4,400 established businesses in Florida's film and entertainment industry (excluding digital media), employing more than 26,000 Floridians. These too are high-quality, high-paying jobs, with average salaries of more than $81,700. This is almost 69 percent higher than the average annual wage for all Florida industries ($47,060). The total wages paid to employees in Florida's film and entertainment industry in 2016 were $2.2 billion.<sup>121</sup>

The film and entertainment industry also supports indirect jobs and wages in thousands of companies with which it does business, such as caterers, dry cleaners, hotels, florists, security guards and off-duty law enforcement officers, hardware and lumber suppliers, software, and digital equipment suppliers, as well as jobs in other companies doing business with consumers, such as video retailers and services, theme parks and tourist attractions.

Reduce the Communication Services Taxes (CST).

A communications service tax (CST) is imposed on the sale of communication services in Florida, including cable and satellite television, video and music streaming, and telephone and mobile services. Relative to other states, Florida's CST is very high, ranking ninth-highest in the nation. When combined with other local levies, the CST can become highly punitive and disproportionately burden those with lower incomes. In addition, the CST makes the state less competitive and reduces the potential investment in various information network infrastructures. As many workers continue to work from home, addressing the burdensome CST should be a priority for state policymakers moving forward.

CONSTRUCTION

INDUSTRY PROFILE

The Construction sector (NAICS 23) is part of the goods-producing group and includes establishments engaged in the construction of buildings or engineering projects, such as highways or utilities. Construction work may include new work, additions, alterations, or maintenance to existing structures both in residential and non-residential settings.<sup>122</sup> Jobs within the Construction industry include construction managers, landscape architects, contractors, civil engineers, electricians, construction workers, and more.

As shown in Table 9, the Construction sector contributed around $43.3 billion in total economic output, equating to around 4.6 percent of total state GDP in 2019.<sup>123</sup> Additionally, average monthly employment for 2019 was around 567,000 --- 6.4 percent of the total workforce in Florida. Annual wages averaged $52,900, just slightly above the statewide average of $51,761.<sup>124</sup> Compared to the other major industries, the Construction sector is one of the fastest growing in Florida with a predicted employment growth around 59,760 new jobs (10.7 percent growth) by 2027.<sup>125</sup> When analyzing the total construction spending, private nonresidential spending in Florida totaled $16.5 billion in 2018, whereas state and local spending totaled $12.7 billion. Within Florida, there were just over 70,800 construction firms in 2016, of which 92 percent of them were small businesses.<sup>126</sup>

EFFECT OF COVID-19 ON THE SECTOR

On March 28, the governor issued Executive Order 20-91, the “Safer At Home” order,<sup>127</sup> which among other things closed non-essential businesses around the state of Florida. Alongside healthcare workers, law enforcement, and grocery workers, employees within the Construction industry likewise found themselves listed among the essential services. As a result, the Construction industry has in some ways benefitted from the reduction in travel around the state, expediting construction projects to completion ahead of schedule and becoming necessary to the state's continued functioning.

Early on during the stay-at-home order, Governor DeSantis directed the Florida Department of Transportation (FDOT) to accelerate critical infrastructure projects around the state due to the reduction in traffic. In total, the projects represented $2.1 billion in value and included projects such as an $802 million design build project in Miami-Dade and an $864 million bridge project in Tampa Bay.<sup>128</sup> The FDOT also capitalized on reduced traffic in central Florida, where it accelerated construction projects for part of the I-4 Ultimate Project. By early August, more than 50 road projects were sped up at the direction of the state government. There are many other infrastructure projects around the state that could be prioritized and accelerated, such as the $200 million Tamiami Trail Project, which represents a critical project for Everglades restoration. Overall, shorter timelines and more projects have allowed many workers in the Construction sector held on to their jobs even during the shutdown.

On the residential and commercial side, Construction paints a mixed picture. Early on during the pandemic, Florida only authorized 12,223 building permits for residential units in April, a drop of around 15.8 percent compared to April 2019. This reduction paralleled a drop across the U.S. as nationally, the change in new residential units authorized by building permits dropped 20 percent relative to 2019 with the greatest losses occurring in the country's northeast. By July of 2020, however, a minor rebound occurred. There were 13,053 new residential building permits issued in Florida, only a 0.42 percent decrease from last July.<sup>129</sup>

Commercially, the COVID-19 pandemic also stalled construction with some metro areas, such as Miami, seeing commercial and multifamily starts fall 16 percent year-to-date through June.<sup>130</sup> Yet, across the nation, residential and commercial construction is once again on the rise with privately-owned housing starts in July coming in 22.6 percent above the previous month's figure and 23.4 percent above July 2019 rate.<sup>131</sup>

In total, the Construction sector in Florida witnessed a minor 1,400 decrease in employment between March and April 2020. During the statewide shutdown in April, the Construction industry maintained around 559,700 jobs, only about 0.1 percent smaller than during the same time in 2019. Compared to all other economic sectors in Florida, the Construction sector was the only one to experience an increase in employment between May and June, adding around 10,000 jobs by June.<sup>132</sup> In the Construction industry, small businesses are the principal drivers for job creation as data suggest 78.9 percent of jobs created in the sector are by firms with less than 100 employees. This percentage was highest among all economic industries in Florida and may indicate another reason why the Construction sector is experiencing a smoother recovery than other sectors in Florida.<sup>133</sup>

the risk of exposure to or transmission of COVID-19 are protected from civil liability. It is also important to make sure that those acting in "bad faith" are held accountable for their negligence while ensuring that those who contract COVID-19 because of the gross negligence of others can recover for their injuries.

Recommendation 2

Provide money to the Small County Road Assistance Program (SCRAP) and the Small County Outreach Program (SCOP).

As the FDOT accelerates many large-scale infrastructure projects around the state, there must also be sufficient attention toward the state's smaller counties with infrastructure needs. Both the SCRAP and SCOP programs assist small county governments with resurfacing, reconstructing, repairing, and rehabilitating aging bridges, roads, or drainage components. Directing state funds to critical infrastructure needs in small counties will directly improve infrastructure quality in these areas and will also have the added benefit of bringing jobs and local spending to areas with lower economic activity.

Stop diverting funds from the affordable housing trust fund.

Even before the pandemic, Florida faced an affordable housing crisis as home ownership and adequate rental housing for low to moderate-income families became harder. The lack of affordable housing creates societal costs which are linked to poor physical and mental health outcomes for families involved. Over the last ten years, the Florida Legislature has swept nearly $1.4 billion from the Housing Trust Funds, exceeding the $882 million appropriated for affordable housing.<sup>134</sup> For the nearly two million Floridians who pay more than 30 percent of their incomes for housing, these reductions have had detrimental effects on homelessness, health, and educational outcomes.<sup>135</sup> As the pandemic has led to scores of layoffs, many families now find themselves without an adequate source of income to pay for their housing. The result could be catastrophic if the Legislature continues depleting affordable housing funds. Florida TaxWatch urges the Florida Legislature to stop diverting funds from affordable housing programs to improve family health outcomes and promote economic benefits from increased construction activity.

OTHER SERVICES

INDUSTRY PROFILE

The Other Services (except public administration) sector (NAICS 81) is one of several in the service-providing industries group and includes establishments engaged in providing services not explicitly defined elsewhere in the NAICS classification system. Companies in this sector are primarily engaged in activities such as repairing equipment, promoting religious activity, social advocacy, laundry services, personal care services, and more. As shown in Table 10, the sector contributed around $23.4 billion to state GDP in 2019, accounting for 2.5 percent of total output.<sup>136</sup> In addition, the sector employed a total of 282,400 workers across the state, representing 3.2 percent of total state employment. When it came to average annual wages, the sector had one of the lowest wage levels among all economic sectors with annual wages around $38,000.<sup>137</sup> By 2027, the sector is expected to add 25,800 jobs at a total employment growth around seven percent.<sup>138</sup>

EFFECTS OF COVID-19 ON SECTOR

Given the diverse collection of service-based businesses that fall under this particular sector, pinpointing overarching effects from COVID-19 proves a difficult task. According to data from the U.S. BLS, the Other Services sector faced around 60,300 job losses from March to April 2020. By April, employment stood at about 288,400 statewide, which was 18.4 percent lower than the same time last year. By July 2020, employment rose again to 320,000 around the state; however, this level was around 9.6 percent lower than July 2019.<sup>139</sup>

Analysis by the Florida Chamber of Commerce shows that a total of 166,000 jobs were considered vulnerable in the Other Services sector due to COVID-19.<sup>140</sup>

Personal and laundry-oriented jobs, which include barbershops, faced the highest total vulnerable jobs with 88,000 in total. Over 65 percent of these vulnerable jobs came from small-sized companies with between 0 and 99 employees. Religious and labor union-oriented jobs, which include churches and labor organizations, accounted for 40,000 total vulnerable jobs. When taking firm size into account, nearly 70 percent of the total vulnerable jobs in this category were also in small sized firms with fewer than 99 workers. Lastly, repair and maintenance-oriented jobs, which include automotive repair shops, possessed 38,000 total vulnerable jobs with 71 percent of these jobs being housed in small firms.

Due to the varying landscape of state and local government orders early on in the pandemic, businesses within the Other Services sector faced differing pressures. For example, according to the governor's executive order<sup>141</sup> in early April, automobile-related companies were deemed essential businesses and were allowed to remain open during the statewide lockdown. At the same time, barbershops and hair salons across the state were not considered essential businesses.

Despite the difference in government directives, all companies across the sector faced difficulty. Florida's automobile industry, which typically boasts over $80 billion in sales each year and contributes nearly $4 billion in state sales tax, has been under strain due to a combination of international supply chains and fewer automobile sales as more people stay home. With many Chinese automotive parts factories closing during the virus, ensuring adequate supply of car parts posed an ongoing issue.<sup>142</sup>

For Florida's beauty industry, the danger of close contact between workers and patrons meant all salons and barbershop remained closed until May, exacerbating financial woes for many small sized companies in this industry.

Oftentimes overlooked during financial downturns, nonprofit organizations are vital to providing much needed social services in many local communities during times of need. Yet like many other businesses in this economic sector, they too have felt the brunt of the pandemic as revenues have fallen and demand for services has skyrocketed. Many of these organizations make their revenue from hosted events, local partnerships, and membership fees --- all of which have been significantly scaled back due to the pandemic. Based on a statewide survey from the Florida Nonprofit Alliance, almost 80 percent of nonprofits experienced a negative financial impact due to the virus either by canceled events or loss in membership.<sup>143</sup> At the same time, demand for social services in areas such as health services, youth development, and food provision have all risen to meet growing community needs. Although 73 percent of the reporting nonprofits had a disruption in services, more than one-third recorded largescale increases in demand for services.<sup>144</sup> For nonprofits moving forward, the twin goals of survival and service remain at the forefront as many organizations adapt to budgetary challenges amid surging demand for services.

The examples outlined in this section are to demonstrate only some of the COVID-19 effects on this diverse economic sector and does not represent an exhaustive analysis of every company within the Other Services sector. Nevertheless, the points prove the demonstrable impact of COVID-19 across companies of varying sizes, functions, and locations.

Recommendation 1

The Florida Legislature should establish safeguards to protect businesses, their agents, and individuals from the threat of opportunistic, predatory, and expensive litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by customers and employees. These safeguards should also ensure that those who contract COVID-19 as a result of gross negligence or intent to harm by others are able to recover for their injuries.

As thousands of Florida businesses struggle to reopen or remain open in light of the COVID-19 pandemic, many are fearful of the threat of litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by their customers. If Florida's economy is to recover and regain its pre-pandemic prosperity, it is important that businesses, health-care facilities, and other entities that are working hard to comply with public health directives or protective measures to reduce the risk of exposure to or transmission of COVID-19 are protected from civil liability. It is also important to make sure that those acting in "bad faith" are held accountable for their negligence while ensuring that those who contract COVID-19 because of the gross negligence of others can recover for their injuries.

Clarify the sales tax exemption for environmental cleaning services for health care facilities.

For the most part, Florida does not impose a sales tax on services, but a few, such as nonresidential cleaning services, are actually taxed. The state currently relies on the NAICS code 561720 (janitorial services) to define nonresidential cleaning services as a taxable service, leading to wide inconsistencies and unintended economic consequences. Section 212.08(7) (v), Florida Statutes, provides the exemption for professional services. The Florida Legislature should clarify that environmental cleaning services by professionally trained service firms --- subject to Centers for Disease Controls (CDC) standards for cleaning, disinfecting, and removing pathogens --- are exempt from tax by the associated section in statute and are not liable to pay taxes as janitorial services.

AGRICULTURE

INDUSTRY PROFILE

The Agriculture sector (NAICS 11) comprises establishments involved in growing crops, raising animals, harvesting timber, and harvesting fish from a farm, ranch, or other natural habitats. Examples of establishments in this sector include farms, ranches, greenhouses, nurseries, orchards, and more. Farms may consist of a single tract of land or separate tracts held under different tenures. For example, one tract may be owned and the other rented. The operator of the farm may operate alone or with the assistance of any hired employees or household members; or the farm may be operated by partnership, corporation, or other organization.

As shown in Table 11, Agriculture directly contributed $7.8 billion in total output to state GDP in 2019, accounting for less than 1 percent of the state's total GDP.<sup>145</sup> The state's more than 47,000 farms are first in the nation for producing oranges, grapefruit, watermelons, and fresh-market snap beans, cucumbers, and fresh-market tomatoes.<sup>146</sup> In terms of total employment, however, the Agriculture sector only employs around 68,600 workers, or about 0.8 percent of the state's total labor force. The sector's employment is the third-lowest behind only the Mining and Utilities industries. For the state's farmers, average annual wages center around $33,484.<sup>147</sup> In terms of future employment, the Agriculture industry is expected to decline by almost 5,500 jobs by 2027, amounting to an 8.2 percent drop over the next few years.<sup>148</sup>

Agricultural Commodities

As the COVID-19 pandemic rippled throughout the entire economy, agricultural crop producers around the state felt the pinch as the statewide stay-at-home order and ensuing shutdown of the food service industry coincided with the peak of Florida's growing season. Between late October and May, Florida's growers supply enough fruits and vegetables for over 150 million people in the eastern U.S.<sup>149</sup> Yet due to the rapid closure of many large-scale food buyers, including restaurants, school districts, and processing facilities, many agricultural producers were left with fewer outlets to sell their crops. The sudden drop in demand led to immediate economic impacts across the state with estimated crop losses amounting to $522.5 million through April 2020.<sup>150</sup>

Within this overall economic impact, various crop industries faced differing losses (See Figure 2). For watermelon producers, statewide sales dropped 50 percent leading to $95 million in losses, while at the same time, overall demand for Florida cabbage decreased by nearly 100 percent amounting to $24 million in losses.

150 Florida Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services (FDACS), Florida Seasonal Crop COVID-19 Impact Assessment, May 2020.

Cucumber growers in South Florida saw demand fall nearly 100 percent, equating to around $38 million in losses. Green beans experienced revenue losses ranging from 50-75 percent and prices per box falling from $16-18 to $6-8. In total, those in the green bean growing business faced between $40-50 million in revenue loss. Blueberry production also took a large hit with prices being down 35 percent, leading to around $50 million in total losses.<sup>151</sup> Closures in the food service industry were particularly difficult for the state's tomato producers. By some estimates, early losses in the tomato market surged to over $133 million in lost revenue, the highest loss among all seasonal crops in Florida.<sup>152</sup>

Unexpectedly, the citrus industry has been the one area in Florida's agricultural sector where producers have actually benefitted from the pandemic. For years, the citrus industry has dealt with falling revenues due to hurricanes, freezes, and citrus greening --- a bacterial infection spread by insects. But when the pandemic struck Florida's economy, consumers began to purchase more citrus products for their immune boosting properties. By the middle of April, orange juice sales were up 50 percent in Florida as consumers were drinking about 45.6 percent more gallons of orange juice compared to April 2019.<sup>153</sup> Likewise, during the same time, Floridians were consuming 25 percent more gallons of grape juice compared to the same time in 2019, leading to an uptick in sales around 32.2 percent.<sup>154</sup> Using consumer survey data, researchers at UF found that consumers who were male, younger than 45, higher income, and living in an urban area were more likely to purchase orange juice in response to COVID-19. Additionally, orange juice demand was found to be highly dependent on consumer awareness through media sources.<sup>155</sup>

Aquaculture

Aquaculture is another important area within Florida's agriculture industry, bringing in about $100 million in sales annually from over 1,500 aquatic crops—fish, shellfish, plants, and more.<sup>156</sup> Yet, similar to producers on land, aquaculture producers experienced severe economics as consumption for fish, oyster, clam, and other products fell when restaurants and bars closed across the state. To gauge these impacts, researchers at UF conducted a study across 1,500 respondents in aquaculture, commercial fishing, for-hire/charter fishing operations, seafood wholesale, and marine recreation support businesses. Closures were reported for only around nine percent of the aquaculture respondents with reported sales declining around 40 percent, on average.<sup>157</sup>

Nowhere were the impacts to aquaculture more noticeable than in the shellfish industry. For an industry that typically receives $15.5 million in annual sales revenue and accounts for 22 percent of the state's aquaculture sales, shellfish producers lost approximately $1.85 million in sales from March to mid-May due to the COVID-19 pandemic. Within this total figure, clam producers felt the brunt of the revenue reduction with around $1.58 million in losses. Oyster producers, on the other hand, faced around $0.27 million in losses.<sup>158</sup> Most of the impacted producers were in Florida's panhandle and coastal counties where oyster and clam operations are most popular. As consumer demand for seafood products continues to decline, aquaculture producers expect to experience depressed sales and uncertain profitability going forward.

Livestock

Similar to livestock producers across the country, Florida's livestock industry fell victim to many supply chain backups during the pandemic's spring months, worsening the gap between supply and demand for products such as meat, milk, eggs, and more. Florida ranks 13th in the U.S. for cattle production, with around 15,000 beef producers, but when meat-processing plants closed early on due to virus spreading concerns, many cattle farmers were without a channel for their products. At the same time, consumer demand for meat products soared during these months as many families stayed home during lockdown orders. The apparent disconnect became noticeable when many grocery stores began experiencing empty shelves and some restaurants transitioned to chicken-only menus. Although meat prices increased at grocery stores, many meat farmers did not reap the benefit since they had to pay extra to feed ani-imals for much longer than they normally would. In total, for Florida's meat producers, the pandemic led to around a 36 percent decrease in beef cattle revenue, equating to over $100 million in estimated losses between March and mid-May.<sup>159</sup> Additionally, there was an estimated 20 percent reduction in revenue for other livestock products, such as milk, honey, and eggs, corresponding to around $27.2 million in losses during the spring months.<sup>160</sup>

Forestry and Logging

Florida has over 17 million acres, or about 26,000 square miles, of forest around the state. In a typical year, around 650 million cubic feet of forest are harvested for products and projects requiring wood.<sup>161</sup> Even prior to COVID-19, the state's timber industry, primarily situated in northwest Florida, suffered serious setbacks as the region continued to recover from Hurricane Michael in 2018. When the pandemic hit lumber markets in full force, Florida's producers were met with another problem: surging consumer demand for toilet paper products and home renovation projects. As families were largely confined to their homes in April and May, many took to panic buying of essential household items like toilet paper while also desiring renovations for their homes. The result oftentimes led to shortages and higher prices --- a trend mirroring other parts of the agriculture industry, such as livestock and meat sales. Impacts in the forestry and logging industry had direct effects on other sectors mentioned throughout this report, such as the Retail Trade and Construction sectors. Due to the recent infusion of federal aid money for post-Hurricane Michael relief and ongoing fluctuations in consumption behavior, it is hard to pinpoint an exact financial impact to forestry and logging producers in the state of Florida. However, preliminary estimates from the UF suggest sales revenue for forestry and timber producers between March and mid-May was around 24 percent lower than the same time period in 2019.<sup>162</sup>

Agricultural Chemicals

Finally, for Florida's various fertilizer and pesticide companies, the pandemic has seemed to have a limited impact on the agricultural chemical industry so far. Large fertilizer companies in Florida, such as Mosaic Co., flagged virus outbreaks at its operations in other countries, but did not report significant economic effects at home.<sup>163</sup> Companies that specialize in agrichemical production have remained essential to many farmers for their provision of pre-harvest fertilizers, a necessary input for most crop production. The issue tends to be downstream when farmers who have paid for pre-harvest inputs cannot recover the costs because of diminished crop sales. As a result, the financial burden ends up falling more on the farmers than it does the fertilizer company. It is important to note, however, that due to data availability limitations, arriving at an exact economic impact for agrichemical businesses is not possible at this moment.

OVERARCHING EFFECTS AND RESPONSES

In an effort to dampen the economic blow to all the agricultural subsectors discussed above, Florida's Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services worked with agriculture producers, the federal government, and major consumers to identify food outlets. The U.S. Department of Agriculture released nearly $30 billion in aid across the country. Alongside this infusion of federal aid, the Commissioner of Agriculture and Consumer Services has worked with major retailers and state agencies to bolster consumption of Florida-based agriculture. One innovative effort was to create a commodities list, called "Florida Farm to You," which connects potential buyers with farmers and producers of Florida-grown crops, seafood, and poultry.

Of all the economic sectors analyzed in this research report, the Agriculture industry has the fewest number of vulnerable jobs due to the low proximity to the public in general. With around 500 estimated jobs at risk, the Agriculture industry is considered a low-risk industry according to the Florida Chamber of Commerce. The virus would have a sizable impact on agricultural small businesses with around 91 percent of total vulnerable jobs coming from small farms with between 0 and 99 employees.<sup>164</sup> Yet as the previous discussion has shown, to discern the impact of COVID-19 on Florida's agriculture industry, one must distinguish from the various components that comprise the industry. From aquaculture to

Recommendation 1

The Florida Legislature should establish safeguards to protect agricultural businesses, their agents, and individuals from the threat of opportunistic, predatory, and expensive litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by customers and employees. These safeguards should also ensure that those who contract COVID-19 as a result of gross negligence or intent to harm by others are able to recover for their injuries.

As thousands of Florida businesses struggle to reopen or remain open in light of the COVID-19 pandemic, many are fearful of the threat of litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by their customers. If Florida's economy is to recover and regain its pre-pandemic prosperity, it is important that businesses, health-care facilities, and other entities that are working hard to comply with public health directives or protective measures to reduce the risk of exposure to or transmission of COVID-19 are protected from civil liability. It is also important to make sure that those acting in "bad faith" are held accountable for their negligence while ensuring that those who contract COVID-19 because of the gross negligence of others can recover for their injuries.

Urge Florida's congressional delegation to continue advocating for the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) to provide direct support to Florida's farmers and ranchers, and distributors and wholesalers, based on actual losses for agricultural producers where price and market supply imbalances exist.

In early April, 27 members of Florida's congressional delegation, including both U.S. senators, urged the USDA to provide direct relief for Florida's agricultural producers. By late May, the USDA announced it would be providing $16 billion in direct relief payments as part of the Coronavirus Food Assistance Program (CFAP).<sup>165</sup> To date, Florida farmers have received $174.1 million in direct aid from the first round of aid.<sup>166</sup> Later again in September of 2020, USDA Secretary Sonny Perdue announced an additional round of payments totaling $14 billion as part of the CFAP 2.0 program.<sup>167</sup>

The newest round of payments includes provisions on price trigger commodities, which are commodities that meet a minimum 5-percent decline over a specified time; flat-rate crops, which do not meet the 5-percent price decline trigger or do not have available data; and sales commodities, which include specialty crops not included in the price trigger and flat-rate categories. Florida's congressional delegation should continue advocating for successive rounds of agricultural aid with specific focus on crops important to Florida's producers, such as citrus, sugarcane, tomatoes, cucumbers, green beans, and more.

Recommendation 3

Extend loan repayment deadlines and waive penalties for late payments to ensure farm loan flexibility. Measures, such as the USDA's disaster set-aside provision, should be extended for COVID-19 related losses.

For many farmers who lost significant revenue as a result of the pandemic, a growing struggle going forward may be the inability to pay existing farm debt. Over the previous months, the USDA has announced several changes to assist farmers dealing with existing debt. One such measure involves the USDA's Farm Service Agency's (FSA) disaster set-aside (DSA) provision, which assists current FSA borrowers who are victims of natural disasters to skip an annual installment payment on any current direct farm loan. The deferred payment is moved to the end of the loan repayment period while still accruing interest. In response to the pandemic, the USDA extended eligibility beyond just natural disasters to include loans affected by COVID-19; however, only the next payment is set aside with some exceptions beyond that.<sup>168</sup>

In early August, the USDA also offered a one-time annual installment payment deferral option for Farm Storage Facility Loan (FSFL) borrowers experiencing financial hardship. No fees or prepayment penalties were applied to borrowers who chose this option.<sup>169</sup> Eligible borrowers were able to request a one-time only annual installment payment deferral for loans have terms of three, five, seven, or ten years.

To further assist farmers who struggle with ongoing debt repayments due to COVID-19, policymakers should extend loan repayment deadlines, waive penalties for late payments, and identify additional methods to alleviate debt burden for farmers. Specifically, the government should expand the DSA provision to ensure COVID-19 affected farmers can apply aid toward successive payments beyond just the first one.

Maintain a safe and secure food supply chain.

Maintaining a safe and secure food supply chain requires adequate precautions at every step of the process. First, state and local leaders should ensure food supply chain workers are adhering to COVID-19 safety guidelines when handling food. Additionally, leaders should continue working with producers and retailers alike to encourage ongoing consumption of Florida-grown products. Working at every stage of the supply chain will help to prevent the erroneous perception that fresh produce is unsafe to consume while also minimizing potential shortages at grocery stores.

CONCLUSIONS

As the global COVID-19 pandemic continues to pose a significant public health emergency, governments are increasingly passing measures to minimize both the virus's spread and the ensuing economic contraction. Attainment of both goals need not be cross-cutting as policymakers can pursue public health efforts while also addressing economic conditions to make long-term recovery viable.

For Florida specifically, the surge in COVID-19 cases during the summer, alongside the slew of stay-at-home orders, forced business closures, and social distancing measures created a perilous situation for the state's physical and economic health; however, as this report has shown, the virus's effects had not been equal across all economic sectors with some facing existential threats for the foreseeable future (e.g., Leisure and Hospitality) and others actually benefitting in some ways from reduced statewide traffic (e.g., Construction).

In an effort to address the unique needs specific to each sector, this independent research report analyzed the various economic sectors in the state with an eye toward contribution to state GDP, employment, average wages, future growth and more. The COVID-19-specific effects were then analyzed and quantified to gauge the nature and extent of the pandemic's influence on each particular industry. Finally, policy recommendations were presented to mitigate against the short-term and long-term challenges present for each economic sector. The list of recommendations is not an exhaustive list; rather, it represents a starting point for policymakers at all levels of government to discuss potential policy approaches moving forward.

The report also highlights a long-term goal for Florida as it moves beyond the pandemic: the need for a robust, diversified state economy. Undoubtedly, the pandemic's effects were magnified in Florida due to the heavy reliance on tourism to fuel local economic activity and generate tax dollars. As tourism fell, so too did businesses directly and indirectly related to the Leisure and Hospitality industry. By seeking a comprehensive strategy to create high-skill, high-wage jobs in all economic sectors beyond just tourism, the state can better position itself to weather future economic shocks like the COVID-19 pandemic. Moving forward, Florida TaxWatch recommends that policymakers at all levels of government incorporate these considerations when drafting industry-specific COVID-19 relief measures.

Dear Fellow Taxpayer

As thousands of Florida businesses struggle to reopen or remain open in light of the COVID-19 pandemic, many are fearful of the threat of litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19. Healthcare workers who must make extremely difficult medical decisions under trying and uncertain circumstances are exposed to additional liability. In addition, educators must look for creative ways to manage the risk and ensure the health and safety of students and others who enter school facilities.

If Florida's economy is to recover and regain its pre-pandemic prosperity, it is important that businesses, healthcare facilities, schools, nonprofits, government organizations, and other entities that are working hard to comply with public health directives or protective measures to reduce the risk of exposure to or transmission of COVID-19 are protected from unnecessary and costly civil liability. It is also important to make sure that those acting in "bad faith" are held accountable for their negligence while ensuring that those who contract COVID-19 because of the gross negligence of others can recover for their injuries.

Florida TaxWatch undertakes this independent analysis to examine the economic and fiscal benefits and liabilities of the Florida Legislature creating responsible liability shield legislation related to the COVID-19 pandemic, and to assess the potential economic impacts of the Legislature's action or failure to do so.

Florida TaxWatch presents this independent assessment as compelling evidence of the tremendous economic and taxpayer benefits of providing this protection. The taxpayers of Florida expect and deserve nothing less.

Sincerely,

Dominic M. Calabro

Executive Summary

As the impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic continue to be felt by Florida's businesses, non-profits, schools, colleges and universities, and healthcare providers, employers of all types are fearful of keeping their business open or reopening their business because of the threat of opportunistic, predatory, and expensive litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 when they are taking proper precautions.

Florida is a litigious state. Only four states (Mississippi, California, Louisiana, and Illinois) have more litigious climates than Florida.<sup>1</sup> As of this report, nearly 500 COVID-19-related lawsuits have already been filed in Florida, and there is no evidence to suggest that this trend is slowing down. Even if a great many of these lawsuits are unsuccessful, they have the potential to stall Florida's economic recovery by hurting businesses and individuals who are trying to provide essential services during these times of great uncertainty.

It is critical that the Florida Legislature establish safeguards to protect individuals, businesses, and their agents who are acting responsibly to minimize exposure to COVID-19 from liability against specific types of COVID-19-related claims so they can remain open. It is also critical that these safeguards ensure that those who contract COVID-19 as a result of gross negligence or intent to harm by others are able to recover for their injuries.

As of this report, the federal government and more than 30 states have taken some action to narrow the liability limits related to COVID-19. Florida, however, is not yet one of those. Florida's first documented case of COVID-19 appeared just two weeks before the 2020 legislative session adjourned. Since March 1, 2020, Governor DeSantis has issued more than 50 executive orders related to COVID-19.

In the Summer of 2020, the Associated Industries of Florida's Restore Economic Strength through Employment and Tourism (RESET) Task Force was established (with some 50 statewide organizations, including Florida TaxWatch) to examine the issues facing Florida businesses during the COVID-19 pandemic and to prepare draft legislation that would protect businesses from a flood of pandemic-related lawsuits. The RESET Task Force, after hearing from numerous subject matter experts, surveying a broad coalition of Florida businesses, and reviewing legislation from other states, put forth draft legislation to protect Florida businesses from opportunistic and predatory COVID-19-related lawsuits.

Florida TaxWatch supports the good work of the RESET Task Force and urges the Legislature to pass the Task Force's draft legislation with consideration of the following additions: (1) make it clear that a covered entity (one that is following reasonable safety protocols) is entitled to the rebuttable presumption that a potential claimant assumes the risk when he or she enters certain premises that provide express warnings or disclaimers; (2) make it clear that, for the purposes of workers' compensation benefits, there is a rebuttable presumption that the contraction of COVID-19 by an essential employee, including but not limited to a health care worker or a public safety worker, is work-related; and (3) limit a covered entity's liability to "actual economic compensatory damages" and exclude any liability for non-economic or punitive damages.

Florida TaxWatch partnered with the Regional Economic Consulting (REC) Group to answer this question: “What if no legislative action is taken and no measures are put into place to shield Florida businesses, nonprofit organizations, and government agencies from civil liability resulting from COVID-19 related litigation?” Depending on the extent to which employers’ confidence in the economy is shaken by the threat of opportunistic and predatory lawsuits, from March 2020 through September 2020, the absence of a meaningful shield from liability could have negatively impacted the Florida economy by as much as $16.1 billion (12.9 percent since the fourth quarter of 2019) with more than 208,000 jobs lost. The impact on personal income amounts to a total maximum possible loss of $14.6 billion. The total maximum effect on tax collections, both the state and local governments, is estimated at a $1.5 billion loss with the lion’s share coming from sales tax during this six-month period. Assuming no change in employers’ confidence in the economy, the absence of a liability shield would reduce the Florida economy by as much as $27.6 billion and more than 356,000 jobs annually.

Florida TaxWatch understands and acknowledges that immunity from civil liability will not stem the spread of COVID-19, nor will it prevent injury or harm or make the associated costs go away. Even if those harmed have to burden the costs, if Florida’s economy is to recover and regain its pre-pandemic prosperity, it is important that businesses, healthcare facilities, nonprofit organizations, and other entities that are working hard to comply with public health directives or protective measures to reduce the risk of exposure to or transmission of COVID-19 are protected from the costs and distractions of civil liability.

Responsible nonprofit organizations, business owners, and other covered entities who are acting in good faith to comply with public health directives and are investing in measures to protect their patrons and employees must have comfort that they will be able to open and operate their business without fear of opportunistic, predatory, and expensive litigation. It is also important to make sure that those acting in “bad faith” are held accountable for their negligence while ensuring that those who contract COVID-19 because of the gross negligence of others can recover for their injuries.

Introduction

As the impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic continue to be felt by Florida’s businesses, non-profits, schools, colleges and universities, and healthcare providers, employers of all types are fearful of keeping their business open or reopening their business because of the threat of opportunistic, predatory, and expensive litigation resulting from alleged exposure to COVID-19 by customers and employees.

“... My biggest concern about reopening is the threat of lawsuits. This creates a threat for small businesses like mine who currently are in financial distress due to COVID-19. To protect our customers and our staff members, we are ensuring that all our staff are temperature checked on the daily, that all our staff members are wearing masks and gloves, and that everybody in the restaurant is practicing social distancing. As lawmakers, I ask you to please come up with any protection for small businesses like mine from liability due to COVID-19.”

Florida is a litigious state. According to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce’s Institute for Legal Reform, Florida ranked among the bottom five (worst) states (46th) in terms of their overall litigation climate. Only four states (Mississippi, California, Louisiana, and Illinois) have more litigious climates than Florida.<sup>4</sup> More than 400 COVID-19-related lawsuits have already been filed in Florida, and there is nothing to suggest that this trend is slowing down. Even if a great many of these lawsuits are unsuccessful, they have the potential to paralyze Florida’s economic recovery by hurting businesses and individuals who are trying to provide essential services during times of great uncertainty.

It is critical that the Florida Legislature establish safeguards to protect businesses, and their agents and individuals, from liability against specific types of COVID-19-related claims so businesses can reopen or remain open. It is also critical that these safeguards ensure that those who contract COVID-19 as a result of gross negligence or intent to harm by others are able to recover for their injuries.

Florida TaxWatch undertakes this analysis to examine the economic, fiscal, and social (societal) benefits of the Florida Legislature creating meaningful liability shield legislation related to the COVID-19 pandemic. The analysis will also examine potential concepts that will need to be considered, including challenges and drawbacks of such legislation.

Lawsuits – Florida

Perhaps the most comprehensive tracking of coronavirus-related lawsuits and complaints is being maintained by the law firm of Hunton Andrews Kurth, LLC.<sup>5</sup> As shown in Table 1, 490 COVID-19-related lawsuits had been filed in Florida as of December 7, 2020. Only New York (1,189) and California (943) have more COVID-19-related lawsuits.<sup>6</sup> These lawsuits range from price gouging to challenges to mask ordinances to wrongful death. Because of the inherent limitations in trying to track COVID-19-related lawsuits in 67 Florida counties, the information in Table 1 should be considered comprehensive but not exhaustive. The data do provide some insight into the types of lawsuits that have been filed to-date and the extent to which Florida businesses might be subject to liability in the absence of any legislated “safe harbor” provisions. A more detailed breakdown of COVID-19 related lawsuits in Florida is presented in Appendix 2.

The safe harbor provisions contained in the federal SAFE TO WORK Act and in the actions by state governments to-date (See Appendix 1) are intended to apply to instances where there have been injuries, damages, or death related to exposure to, transmission of, or contraction of COVID-19. Of the 490 lawsuits identified in Table 1, only a small fraction (less than 20 percent) would appear on their face to involve injuries, damages, or death related to exposure to, transmission of, or contraction of COVID-19.

There is nothing to suggest that this represents the total number of COVID-19-related lawsuits that will be filed in Florida, or that the number or percentage of lawsuits involving allegations of injuries, damages, or death related to exposure to, transmission of, or contraction of COVID-19. The cumulative growth of COVID-19-related lawsuits in the U.S. since March 2020 is shown in Figure 1. If this trend continues, then one would expect the number of COVID-19-related lawsuits in Florida to continue to increase as well.

What is the Federal Government Doing?

In July 2020, the U.S. Senate filed the “Safeguarding America’s Frontline Employees To Offer Work Opportunities Required to Kickstart the Economy Act,” more commonly known as the “SAFE TO WORK Act,” as part of a $1 trillion COVID-19 relief package. The SAFE TO WORK Act is intended “to lessen the burdens on interstate commerce by discouraging insubstantial lawsuits relating to COVID-19 while preserving the ability of individuals and businesses that have suffered real injury to obtain complete relief.”<sup>7</sup>

The SAFE TO WORK Act acknowledges that one of the major impediments to permitting businesses that are open to stay open, and to help other businesses reopen safely, is the risk of expensive litigation and distractions even though plaintiffs are not likely to prevail in their lawsuit. Further, healthcare workers who must make extremely difficult medical decisions under trying and uncertain circumstances are exposed to additional liability. The SAFE TO WORK Act looks to make sure that those acting in bad faith are held accountable for their negligence while ensuring that those who contract COVID-19 because of the gross negligence of others can recover for their injuries.

7 116th Congress, 2nd Session, S.4317.

One of the key components of the SAFE TO WORK Act is the “safe harbor” provision.<sup>8</sup> The safe harbor exempts any individual or entity engaged in businesses, services, activities, or accommodations from liability in any COVID-19 exposure unless the plaintiff can prove by “clear and convincing evidence” that:

- The individual or entity was not making reasonable efforts to comply with the applicable government standards and guidance in effect at the time of the “actual, alleged, feared, or potential for exposure” to COVID-19;
- The individual or entity engaged in “gross negligence<sup>9</sup> or willful misconduct”<sup>10</sup> that caused actual exposure to COVID-19; and
- The actual exposure to COVID-19 caused the plaintiff’s personal injury.<sup>11</sup>

A defendant would not, therefore, be liable for COVID-19 exposure as long as the defendant undertook reasonable efforts in light of all the circumstances to comply with the applicable mandatory COVID-19 standards and regulations in effect at the time of the alleged exposure.

The SAFE TO WORK Act also exempts health care providers from COVID-19-related medical liability unless the plaintiff can prove by “clear and convincing evidence” that:

- There was “gross negligence or willful misconduct” by the health care provider; and
- The alleged harm, damage, breach, or tort resulting in the personal injury was directly caused by the alleged gross negligence or willful misconduct.<sup>12</sup>

Compensatory damages are limited to economic losses and punitive damages are prohibited, except in cases involving intentional misconduct. The SAFE TO WORK Act establishes a floor on liability but makes it expressly clear that states are free to further limit liability for COVID-19 exposure. To date, the Senate has taken no action on the bill, as filed.<sup>13</sup>

What Are Other States Doing?

At the time of this report, more than 30 other states have taken some action --- either issuance of an Executive Order or enactment of legislation --- to narrow the liability limits related to COVID-19 (See Appendix 1). Although the various emergency measures contain similarities, each differs in ways that leave businesses, nonprofits, schools, colleges, universities, workers, and healthcare providers subject to differing limitations to immunity from civil liability related to the exposure, contraction, or transmission of COVID-19.

What is Florida Doing?

Conspicuously absent from the list of states in Appendix 1 is the state of Florida. Because Florida’s 60-day legislative session begins in January in even-numbered years, the first documented case of COVID-19 (March 1) appeared just two weeks before the session adjourned. When the legislature adjourned on March 19, Florida had roughly 50 documented cases of COVID-19 statewide. Since March 1, 2020, Governor DeSantis has issued more than 50 executive orders related to COVID-19.<sup>14</sup>

<sup>10</sup> Willful misconduct is defined as an act or omission that is taken to achieve a wrongful purpose, knowingly without legal factual justification, and in disregard of a known or obvious risk that is so great as to make it highly probable that the harm will outweigh the benefit.

In the Summer of 2020, the Associated Industries of Florida's Restore Economic Strength through Employment and Tourism (RESET) Task Force was established to examine the issues facing Florida businesses during the COVID-19 pandemic and to prepare draft legislation that would protect businesses from a flood of pandemic-related lawsuits.<sup>15</sup> The RESET Task Force includes Florida TaxWatch, the Florida Retail Federation, the National Federation of Independent Businesses, the Florida Restaurant & Lodging Association, Florida Justice Reform, and more than 50 other organizations. The RESET Task Force, after hearing from numerous subject matter experts, surveying a broad coalition of Florida businesses, and reviewing legislation from other states, put forth draft legislation to protect Florida businesses from opportunistic and predatory COVID-19-related lawsuits.

The draft legislation proposed by the RESET Task Force provides the following safeguards:

Essential Business Liability Immunity --- Would provide immunity from liability for “essential businesses” that have been required to remain open and in operation throughout the pandemic and to agents of essential businesses. An “essential business” includes: (a) those businesses deemed “essential” within the meaning of Governor DeSantis’ COVID-19 executive orders; and (b) an industry identified as part of the “essential workforce” in March 28, 2020 guidance issued by the U.S. Department of Homeland Security Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency.

Community Amenities Liability Immunity --- Would provide limited immunity from liability to owners of “community amenities” and their agents. A “community amenity” is privately owned and includes (but is not limited to) swimming pools, clubhouses, gyms or workout rooms, libraries, tennis courts, meeting rooms, or any other common areas or common elements that are owned, operated, or maintained by a condominium, cooperative, or homeowners’ association.

Clear and Convincing Evidence --- Would require a plaintiff or claimant seeking relief to show “by clear and convincing evidence” that (a) an act or omission by the covered entity proximately caused the damages, injury, or death; and (b) the act or omission constituted “gross negligence” or that the act or omission was “intended to cause harm” to an individual.

Clear Intent of Proposed Immunity Law --- Makes it expressly clear and understood that the immunities afforded to the entities covered by the draft legislation do not apply to claims for injury, damages, or death where the act or omission was intended to cause harm.

Rebuttable Presumption --- Establishes a “rebuttable presumption” of no exposure. It is presumed that all individuals who come into contact with an entity covered by the draft legislation were not infected with COVID-19 at the time of the interaction. To rebut this presumption, it would have to be shown by clear and convincing evidence that the covered entity knew that the individual who transmitted the COVID-19 to the injured party was, at the time, infected by COVID-19.

Compliance with COVID-Safe Practices --- Ensures that changes in policies, procedures, or practices by an entity covered by the draft legislation to comply with applicable public health guidelines and government-issued protective measures after an alleged exposure occurs cannot be used to suggest that the covered entity exposed a plaintiff or claimant to COVID-19 in the first place.

Third Parties --- Makes it expressly clear and understood that an entity covered by the draft legislation is not liable for a COVID-19-related claim that is premised on the acts or omissions of a third party, unless the covered entity has a duty to control the third party.

Shortened Statute of Limitations --- Includes a shortened statute of limitations. Under current Florida law, tort claims (including negligence claims) are subject to a four-year statute of limitations;<sup>16</sup> however, the draft legislation requires a claimant to file a COVID-19 related claim “no later than one year after the date of the injury or death.”

Additional Employee Protections --- Provides additional protections from employees’ COVID-19 related claims, provided the employer generally complied with applicable public health guidelines and protective measures.

Analysis

As shown in Appendix 1, more than 30 states have taken or are in the process of taking emergency steps to provide limited immunity from COVID-19-related civil liability. Although each emergency measure differs from state-to-state in terms of who is covered, behaviors and actions that are not covered, damages, and burden of proof, there are numerous similarities that should be considered by Florida lawmakers when this matter is considered, either in special session or the 2021 regular session.

The draft legislation proposed by Florida’s RESET Task Force, as well as the legislation summarized in Appendix 1, are all designed to limit or discourage opportunistic or predatory lawsuits that might be filed against businesses or individuals related to the spread of COVID-19. Absent these measures, any patron of a business who contracts COVID-19 or any patient who questions difficult treatment decisions made by their healthcare professionals under trying and uncertain circumstances could file a lawsuit.

Most of the legislation summarized in Appendix 1 is broadly written with respect to the covered entities, which could leave room for differing interpretations. Generally, the broader the language, the more room for interpretation. The covered entities included in the draft legislation proposed by Florida’s RESET Task Force include “essential businesses” that have been required to remain open and in operation throughout the pandemic and to agents of essential businesses. The Governor’s Executive Order No. 20-91 references “essential services” that are:

- Included in the U.S. Department of Homeland Security’s “Guidance on the Essential Critical Infrastructure Workforce, v.2 (March 28, 2020)” and any subsequent lists published;<sup>17</sup>
- Designated by Executive Order 20-89 and its attached list of businesses and activities designated by Miami-Dade County in multiple orders; and
- Added with the approval of the State Coordinating Officer, in close coordination with the State Health Officer.

All told, the expansive list of essential services maintained on the Florida Division of Emergency Management’s website is 19 pages, and includes workers in the following businesses: health care/public health; law enforcement, public safety, and other first responders; food and agriculture; energy; water and wastewater; transportation and logistics; public works and infrastructure support services; communications and

information technology; other community- or government-based operations and essential functions; critical manufacturing; hazardous materials; financial services; chemical; defense industrial base; commercial facilities; residential/shelter facilities and services; hygiene products and services; and houses of worship.<sup>18</sup> As a result, there is considerably less ambiguity with respect to which business would have immunity from COVID-19 related civil liability.

The draft legislation affords protection against the ever-changing standards of care. As more is learned about how COVID-19 is contracted and transmitted (e.g., community spread), the more likely the guidelines issued by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and state and local public health agencies will continue to evolve. Any change in policies, procedures, or practices by a covered entity necessary to comply with applicable public health guidelines after the alleged exposure to COVID-19 is not admissible to prove negligence or culpability.

In both the draft legislation proposed by Florida's RESET Task Force and the legislation summarized in Appendix 1, immunity from liability is not "blanket" immunity. Only those covered entities that are acting "in good faith" to comply with applicable public health guidelines to minimize exposure to and transmission of COVID-19 are immune. The emergency measures implemented by the draft legislation and by other states in no way absolve business owners of their responsibility to protect their patrons and employees from exposure to COVID-19.

In both the draft legislation proposed by Florida's RESET Task Force and the legislation summarized in Appendix 1, those who are acting "in bad faith" to comply with applicable public health guidelines to minimize exposure to and transmission of COVID-19 will be held accountable. Covered entities can be sued if it can be established that the damages were caused by gross negligence, recklessness, or conduct with an intent to harm.

It is clear in both the draft legislation proposed by Florida's RESET Task Force and the legislation summarized in Appendix 1 that the plaintiff in any civil action will have a heavy burden of proof and a significant financial burden. The draft legislation and most, if not all, of the emergency measures implemented by the states adopt the "clear and convincing evidence" standard of proof. A "medium-level" burden of proof, clear and convincing evidence requires the evidence to be highly and substantially more likely to be true than untrue.<sup>19</sup> It is a more rigorous standard to meet than the "preponderance of evidence" standard, but a less rigorous standard than the "beyond a reasonable doubt" standard. Regardless of which standard is used, proving that a patron contracted COVID-19 at a particular business, or that a student contracted COVID-19 while at school (for example) will prove to be difficult and undoubtedly expensive.

What if No Legislative Action is Taken?

Florida TaxWatch enlisted the services of the Regional Economic Consulting (REC) Group<sup>20</sup> to answer this question: What if no legislative action is taken and no measures are put into place to shield Florida businesses from civil liability resulting from opportunistic, predatory, and expensive litigation? REC's analysis<sup>21</sup> looks at the effects no liability shield would have on the state's Gross Domestic Product (GDP), employment, labor and business income, and state and local tax revenues. REC's analysis, entitled "Analysis of the Effects of Liability Shield on Florida's Economy: A Florida TaxWatch Project," is available on the Florida TaxWatch website.<sup>22</sup>

Methodology

The REC analysis is based on the premise that an employer's decision whether to increase or decrease its workforce depends upon how consumers feel about the economy in light of COVID-19. REC uses the University of Florida's Bureau of Economic and Business Research (BEBR) Consumer Sentiment Index (CSI), which measures how consumers perceive the current status of the economy. If the CSI is up because consumers feel good about the economy, businesses hire more workers to meet the increased demand. Conversely, if the CSI goes down, then businesses lay off employees.

This "elasticity" permits REC to compare the difference between the projected employment that is tied to consumer optimism and the actual employment levels to determine the employment loss as a result of employers' concern of being sued. The REC analysis uses data from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, the U.S. Bureau of Economic Analysis, BEBR, the Legislative Office of Economic and Demographic Research, and the Florida Economic Estimating Conference.

Using the economic model IMPLAN (see Appendix 3), the analysis estimates the direct, indirect and induced impacts of employers' decisions. The analysis does not measure the effects of the entire economic slowdown caused by other economic factors but focuses on the portion of the economic decline resulting from the employers' pessimism regarding COVID-19.

Impacts on Employment

Table 2 displays three variables --- the effect of consumer sentiments on jobs; the total change in employment; and the effect of employer sentiments on jobs --- from March 2020 through September 2020. The effect of consumer sentiments on jobs describes what the change in employment would look like if employment were purely driven by consumer sentiment barring any optimism or pessimism felt by employers. The total change in employment reflects the actual change in employment. The effect of employer sentiments on jobs reflects the difference between the consumer outlook for jobs and the actual change in jobs. It can be explained as the optimism or pessimism of the employers themselves.

As shown in Table 2, if hiring was tied solely to the emotions and demands of the consumer, the job loss in March 2020 (488,070) would have been much greater than the actual 95,300 lost jobs. From March to September, Florida has seen a total 539,100 jobs lost; 412,719 of these job losses can be attributed to falling consumer optimism while the rest is due to employers' and businesses' unwillingness to increase their labor force due to low demand.

In the absence of a general lockdown there are 126,381 jobs that employers have not filled that would otherwise be a part of the workforce absent the COVID-19 pandemic. The REC analysis uses IMPLAN to measure what a loss of 126,381 jobs would mean to the rest of the economy. It is important to note that these 126,381 jobs represent the maximum impacts that would be related to employers' concerns about litigation.

The direct job loss of 126,381 jobs indirectly results in an additional employment loss of 34,046 jobs. These are jobs tied to the supply chain. A restaurant operating at 50 percent capacity, for example, will purchase less food, drink, and other supplies from distributors and wholesalers who, in turn, will need fewer employees to process these orders. Further downstream are induced effects related to the reduction in the workforce, where workers affected will have less money available to spend at other establishments. The "ripple effect" of these induced effects is a loss of an additional 48,303 jobs, for a total direct, indirect, and induced job loss of 208,731 jobs. The employment-related impacts for each non-farm sector of the state's economy are depicted in Table 3 and Figure 2.

<sup>23</sup> The REC analysis excludes agricultural employees due to the challenges collecting, disseminating, and using agricultural labor data. There are wide variations in peak employment by type of commodity by region due to seasonal fluctuations. As a result, numerical estimates provided by agricultural employment data vary depending on time of collection and whether data refer to employment for one week or the entire year. Obtaining accurate farming employment numbers is complicated by: self-employment, unpaid family employment; part-time or hobby farmers; and other partnerships. Further, agricultural labor data are affected by the unknown number of undocumented workers in the field. Thus, using this data will bias the estimation of the economic impacts. It is for this reason why the Bureau of Labor Statistics uses non-farm employment and agencies use non-farm employment as a basis for projections.

It comes as no surprise that the Leisure and Hospitality sector bears the brunt of the employment losses, with a total loss of more than 85,000 jobs during this seven-month period. Businesses in this sector see the highest volumes of patrons on a daily basis and face the greatest challenges complying with state and local public health mandates (e.g., mask and limited occupancy mandates, etc.). Employer optimism has resulted in a direct increase in jobs in the Trade sector. With many small businesses shuttering or not reopening, larger grocery stores and “big box” retail stores have benefitted. The indirect and induced effects of lost jobs from other sectors will have negative ripple effects, however, resulting in an overall loss of 9,070 jobs in the Trade sector.

Impacts on Personal Income

As shown in Table 4 and Figure 3, the impact on personal income also follows a similar pattern to job losses. The Leisure and Hospitality sector again has the largest impact on personal income (-$3.5 billion at 23.6 percent) followed by Professional and Business Services (-$2.6 billion at 17.9 percent), Government (-$2.2 billion at 14.8 percent), Transportation and Utilities (-$1.6 billion at 10.6 percent), and the Construction sector (-$1.4 billion at 9.7 percent). The maximum total impact on personal income during this seven-month period is estimated at -$14.7 billion.

Impacts on Gross Domestic Product (GDP)

The reluctance of employers to hire has major ramifications on Florida's GDP (which is the sum of the total value of goods produced and services rendered in Florida's economy within a given period of time). Together with employment, GDP and Personal Income correlate with one another. The GDP numbers follow the same patterns as the job losses, with the Leisure and Hospitality sector suffering the greatest impact (see Table 5 and Figure 4).

As shown in Table 5, the total maximum GDP impact from employer sentiment accounts for almost $16.1 billion in losses across the state during the seven-month period. The two hardest hit economic sectors are Leisure and Hospitality (-$3.9 billion at 24.9 percent) and Professional and Business Services (-$2.7 billion at 16.9 percent).

Fiscal Impacts on State and Local Governments

The fiscal impact on tax collections for state and local governments from March 2020 through September 2020 is estimated at a loss of $1.49 billion (see Table 6). The largest driver in lost revenue during this seven-month period is sales tax (-$765.2 million), followed by property tax (-$520.7 million).

Summary of Economic Impacts

Table 7 summarizes the estimated impacts across different categories of job losses, GDP losses, and private income losses. This represents a maximum total for each category and reflects the potential impacts during this seven-month period due to employers' concern and their business outlook facing uncertainties and challenges in this current economy. Employer concern in the economy is estimated to account for a maximum 1.6 percent loss to GDP, and 12.9 percent of the total GDP loss since late 2019. If every single one of the 208,731 jobs were tied to litigation concerns, the maximum cost of that concern to the state GDP from March 2020 through September 2020 is $16.1 billion; however, these are "worst-case" estimates and accordingly they must be considered within a range of potential outcomes.

As shown in Table 7, depending on the extent to which employers' confidence in the economy is shaken by the threat of opportunistic and predatory lawsuits, the Legislature's failure to enact a meaningful shield from liability could negatively impact the Florida economy from March 2020 through September 2020 by as much as $16.1 billion (12.9 percent since the fourth quarter of 2019) with more than 208,000 jobs lost.

Conclusions and Recommendations

Florida TaxWatch understands and acknowledges that immunity from civil liability will not stem the spread of COVID-19, nor will it prevent injury or harm or make the associated costs go away. Persons who contract COVID-19 could have contracted the coronavirus from almost anyone they have come into contact with, or at any business they have patronized over the past eight to ten months. As a result, proving a causal relationship will be a difficult burden for a plaintiff. Permitting unlimited civil litigation given the difficulty in proving the proximate cause of contracting COVID-19, even recognizing that the costs will be borne (absent negligence or intent to harm) by those who are injured or harmed and ultimately the taxpayers, is not in the taxpayers' best interest.

Even if those harmed have to burden the costs, if Florida's economy is to recover and regain its pre-pandemic prosperity, it is important that businesses, healthcare facilities, and other entities that are working hard to comply with public health directives or protective measures to reduce the risk of exposure to or transmission of COVID-19 are protected from unnecessary and costly civil liability, even when the plaintiffs cannot meet the current statutory burden of "preponderance of evidence." Responsible business owners and other covered entities who are acting in good faith to comply with public health directives and are investing in measures to protect their patrons and employees must have comfort that they will be able to open and operate their business without fear of opportunistic, predatory, and expensive litigation. It is also important to make sure that those acting in "bad faith" are held accountable for their negligence while ensuring that those who contract COVID-19 because of the gross negligence of others can recover for their injuries.

The analysis by the Regional Economic Consulting Group uses the difference between the projected employment tied to consumer optimism and the actual employment levels to estimate the portion of the change in the number of jobs attributable to employers' concern over litigation, and their economic outlook. Depending on the extent to which employers' confidence in the economy is shaken by the threat of opportunistic and predatory lawsuits, the Legislature's failure to enact a meaningful shield from liability could negatively impact the Florida economy from March 2020 through September 2020 by as much as $16.1 billion (12.9 percent since the fourth quarter of 2019) with more than 208,000 jobs lost. The impact on personal income amounts to a total maximum possible loss of -$14.6 billion. The total maximum effect on tax collections, both the state and local governments, is estimated at -$1.5 billion loss with the lion's share coming from sales tax.

Florida TaxWatch supports the good work of the RESET Task Force and urges the Legislature to pass the Task Force's draft legislation with consideration of the following additions at the earliest opportunity:

- The rebuttable presumption provisions should be strengthened to make it clear that a covered entity (one that is following reasonable safety protocols) is entitled to the rebuttable presumption that a potential claimant assumes the risk when he or she enters certain premises that provide express warnings or disclaimers.
- The rebuttable presumption provisions should be strengthened to make it clear that, for the purposes of workers' compensation benefits, there is a rebuttable presumption that the contraction of COVID-19 by an essential employee, including but not limited to a health care worker or a public safety worker, is work-related. The presumption applies only to an essential employee who performs functions pertaining to those roles and involving interactions with the public during the public health emergency declared by the governor's executive orders.
- The draft legislation should limit a covered entity's liability to "actual economic compensatory damages," and to exclude any liability for non-economic or punitive damages.

Appendix 1.

EMERGENCY STATE ACTIONS TO LIMIT LIABILITY FROM COVID-19

- Alabama On May 8, 2020, Governor Kay Ivey issued an Executive Order that offers protection for businesses, health care providers, universities, public institutions of higher education, and their employees, officers and agents from unwarranted legal liability stemming from COVID-19. Under the Governor's Proclamation, businesses, health care providers, and other covered entities will not be liable for the death or injury to persons or for damage to property resulting from an act or omission related to COVID-19, unless the claimant can show by clear and convincing evidence that the alleged death, injury, or damage was caused by the covered entity's "wanton, reckless, willful, or intentional misconduct." In cases where liability is established and the acts or omissions do not result in serious physical injury, liability is limited to actual economic compensatory damages. In cases involving wrongful death, liability is limited to an award of punitive damages.
- Alaska On May 8, 2020, Governor Mike Dunleavy signed into law Senate Bill 241, which provides immunity from civil liability primarily to healthcare providers who take an action based upon an order from the state's health department. Local companies that manufacture personal protective equipment are immune from civil liability for damages resulting from injury to or the death of a user of the personal protective equipment if the manufacturer acted "in good faith" to respond to the COVID-19 pandemic. The immunity from civil liability does not protect businesses or healthcare providers from liability for "gross negligence, recklessness or intentional misconduct."
- Arizona The Arizona legislature adjourned its regular session without the Senate taking action on House Bill 2912, which would have allowed COVID-19-related lawsuits only if a business acted with "gross negligence," essentially the reckless disregard for the consequences of the action on others. The burden of proof in any civil action that is based on the plaintiff contracting COVID-19 and that is filed pursuant to House Bill 2912 is "clear and convincing evidence."
- Arkansas On June 15, 2020, Arkansas Governor Asa Hutchinson issued an Executive Order to protect Arkansas businesses from liability related to COVID-19. Businesses that opened or remained open during the COVID-19 pandemic are immune from civil liability for damages or injuries resulting from exposure to COVID-19 on the business premises; however, this immunity does not apply to "willful, reckless, or intentional misconduct" that results in injury or damages. There is a presumption that willful, reckless or intentional misconduct does not exist if the businesses are (a) substantially complying with health and safety directives or guidelines issued by the state; or (b) acting in good faith while attempting to comply. The "clear and convincing evidence" standard of proof established by other states is absent.
- California The California General Assembly is currently considering a bill (No. 1759) that would provide immunity from civil liability to public and independent institutions of higher education for injuries related to COVID-19 infection. This immunity does not apply to claims from damages caused by "intentional misconduct, wanton or reckless misconduct, gross negligence, or willful and wanton negligence" if both of the following conditions exist: (1) The alleged negligence or misconduct is proven by "clear and convincing evidence" to have resulted in the transmission of COVID-19 that led to the injury, emotional distress, damage, death of a person, or economic loss; and (2) the action is not brought pursuant to Section 382 of the Code of Civil Procedure.
- Connecticut On April 7, 2020, Governor Ned Lamont issued an executive order to protect hospitals and nursing homes from COVID-19 lawsuits and to exempt the medical care community from lawsuits over deaths or injuries involving shortages of personal protective equipment and other medical supplies during the pandemic. The executive order directed every workplace in the state to take additional protective measures to reduce the risk of transmission of COVID-19 between and among employees, customers, and other persons who might enter the workplace. Legally binding, statewide mandatory rules prescribing such additional protective measures were put into effect. Healthcare professionals and facilities were immune and protected from suit for civil liability for any injury or death alleged to have been sustained because of an individual's or healthcare facility's acts or omissions undertaken "in good faith" while providing health care services in support of the State's COVID-19 response.

- Delaware Delaware’s Emergency Management Act provides immunity from civil litigation to qualified medical personnel who are engaged in emergency or disaster relief operations for the death or injury to persons, or damage to property. The immunity does not apply if the qualified medical personnel commit “intentional conduct and willful or wanton disregard of the rights of others resulting in death, injury or damages.”
- Georgia On June 26, 2020, the Georgia General Assembly passed Senate Bill 359, also known as the “Georgia COVID-19 Pandemic Business Safety Act.” The Act, which currently awaits final approval by Governor Brian Kemp pending his office’s legal review, intends to protect healthcare providers and certain other businesses, entities, and individuals in the State of Georgia from legal liability arising from COVID-19. However, the Act allows lawsuits to proceed if the claimant can prove “gross negligence, willful and wanton misconduct, reckless infliction of harm, or intentional infliction of harm” by one of the Act’s covered parties. In other words, if the Act becomes law, the covered parties operating in Georgia would be shielded from lawsuits related to COVID-19 exposure, absent one of the carve-outs for gross negligence or wanton misconduct.
- Hawaii On April 16, 2020, Governor Ige issued Executive Order 20-05 which provides immunity from civil liability to health care workers who act “in good faith” for any COVID-19-related death, injury, or property damage that occurs while rendering assistance. Civil immunity does not apply to “willful misconduct, gross negligence, or recklessness.”
- Idaho On August 24, 2020, the Idaho legislature introduced a series of bills[1] to provide immunity from civil liability to accredited institutions of higher education and to persons who take actions in an effort to “address or mitigate the disaster or emergency arising from a coronavirus-related disaster or emergency.” The immunity does not apply to accredited institutions of higher education who act with “malice or criminal intent” and with “reckless, willful, and wanton conduct,” and to persons whose actions are the result of “willful misconduct, reckless infliction of harm, or intentional infliction of harm.”
- Illinois On April 1, 2020 Governor J.B. Pritzker signed Executive Order 2020-19, which provides immunity from civil liability for health care professionals, volunteers, and facilities for any injury caused by any act or omission that occurred while the professional, volunteer, or facility was providing health care services in response to the COVID-19 outbreak. The immunity does not apply to injuries or deaths caused by “gross negligence or willful misconduct” of healthcare professionals or facilities, or or injuries or deaths caused by “willful misconduct” by healthcare volunteers.
- Indiana Existing Indiana law provides immunity from civil liability to facilities and individuals for injuries resulting from healthcare services provided in response to an emergency. This immunity does not apply to injuries or deaths caused by “gross negligence or willful misconduct.”
- Iowa On June 18, 2020, Iowa Governor Kim Reynolds signed into law the COVID-19 Response and Back-to-Business Liability Act, which provides immunity from civil liability for Iowa businesses and healthcare providers for damages or injuries sustained from exposure to COVID-19 if the act or omission causing the alleged damage or injury was in “substantial compliance or was consistent with any federal or state statute, regulation, order, or public health guidance elated to COVID-19 that was applicable to the person or activity at the time of the alleged exposure or potential exposure.” The Act prohibits a person from bringing a civil action alleging exposure to COVID-19 unless the action relates to a minimum medical condition, involves an act that was intended to cause harm, or involves an act that constitutes actual malice. Damages that may be recovered by a claimant for the cost of medical care shall not exceed the amounts actually paid to the healthcare providers who rendered treatment and any amounts necessary to satisfy the charges that have been incurred but not yet been paid.
- Kansas On June 8, 2020, Kansas Governor Laura Kelly signed the COVID-19 Response and Reopening for Business Liability Protection Act, which provides immunity from civil liability for COVID-19 related claims to Kansas businesses acting in substantial compliance with public health directives applicable to the activity giving rise to the cause of action when the cause of action accrued. The provisions of this Act do not apply to civil liability when it is established that the act, omission, or decision constituted gross negligence or willful, wanton, or reckless conduct.

Kentucky On March 30, 2020, Governor Andy Beshear signed into law Senate Bill 150, which provides limited civil immunity to healthcare providers and manufacturers of personal protective equipment and personal hygiene supplies from liability for COVID-19-related negligence and product liability. The conduct of healthcare providers is immune from liability to the extent that the provider “acts as an ordinary, reasonable, and prudent health care provider would have acted under the same or similar circumstances.” The conduct of manufacturers of personal protective equipment and personal hygiene supplies is immune from liability to the extent the companies “acted in good faith and in an ordinary, reasonable, and prudent manner under the same or similar circumstances.” The immunity does not apply to claims of “gross negligence, or willful and wanton conduct.”

Louisiana Louisiana Governor John Bel Edwards has signed two measures passed during the 2020 legislative session legislation that provide immunity to businesses from civil liability for COVID-19 exposure, and that make it difficult for anyone to recover damages for exposure to COVID-19, even if that exposure results in death or serious injury. The first measure (Act 305) shields businesses from liability for COVID-19 exposure if they are in substantial compliance with governmentally established COVID-19 procedures except in cases of “gross negligence or willful and wanton misconduct.” The second measure (Act 336) limits the ability of persons claiming injury from exposure to COVID-19 to recover damages. Recovery of damages is allowed only if: (a) the business failed to substantially comply with applicable COVID-19 procedures established by the public agency governing those operation; and (b) the death or injury was caused by “gross negligence of reckless misconduct.”

Maryland Under existing Maryland law, healthcare providers are immune from civil or criminal liability if the provider acts in good faith and under a catastrophic health emergency proclamation. The immunity applies only if the provider acts “in good faith.”

Massachusetts On April 17, Governor Charlie Baker signed into law Chapter 64 of the Acts of 2020, which provides to health care professionals and health care facilities immunity from suit and civil liability for any damages alleged to have been sustained by an act or omission by the health care professional or health care facility in the course of providing health care services during the period of the COVID-19 pandemic. This immunity does not apply if the damage was caused by an act or omission constituting “gross negligence, recklessness or conduct with an intent to harm or to discriminate.”

Michigan On March 29, 2020, Governor Gretchen Whitmer issued Executive Order 2020-31, which provides immunity from civil liability to healthcare workers who provide services in support of the state’s response to COVID-19. The immunity does not apply to claims of “gross negligence or willful misconduct.” Senate Bill 899, which would have provided additional protections to healthcare workers, was vetoed by the Governor in August.

Minnesota Minnesota’s emergency management act provides immunity from civil liability to “responders” when acting under an emergency plan. The term “responders” is broadly defined and includes physicians, nurses, first responders, hospitals, clinics, laboratories, and other health care providers and entities. The immunity applies to damages from “good faith acts or omissions” by responders in rendering emergency care. The immunity does not apply if the responder acts in a “willful and wanton or reckless manner” when providing care or assistance.

Mississippi On July 8, 2020, Mississippi Governor Tate Reeves signed the Mississippi Back-to-Business Liability Assurance and Health Care Emergency Response Liability Protection Act,” which is designed to protect businesses from civil damages for injuries or death resulting from or related to actual, alleged, or potential exposure to COVID-19. Businesses are immune from civil liability if they can show that they attempted “in good faith” to follow applicable public health guidance. Healthcare professionals and facilities are immune from civil liability related to COVID-19 for “acts or omissions while providing health care services related to a COVID-19 state of emergency.” Civil immunity would not apply if it can be shown by “clear and convincing evidence” that a defendant acted with “actual malice or willful, intentional misconduct.”

- Missouri On July 1, 2020, Governor Mike Parson signed into law Senate Bill 591, which provides immunity from civil liability to small businesses. Under the new law, employers are liable for the actions of their employees if they ordered the employee to act in a manner that caused harm; if they knew about the act; or if the employer knew that their employee was unfit to do their job.
- Montana Under existing Montana law, healthcare professionals who “in good faith” render or fail to render emergency care are immune from civil liability during declared states of emergency. The immunity does not apply when the damage or injury is caused by “gross negligence or willful and wanton misconduct” and in cases of “willful misconduct, gross negligence, or bad faith.”
- Nevada On August 11, 2020, Governor Steve Sisolak signed into law Senate Bill 4, which provides immunity from civil liability to businesses in the event a customer contracts COVID-19 while on the business premises or during an activity conducted or managed by the business if the business is in “substantial compliance with controlling health standards”. The business is immune from civil liability unless it can be proven that the business violated controlling health standards with gross negligence and the gross negligence was the proximate cause of the plaintiff’s personal injury or death.
- New Jersey On April 13, 2020, Governor Phil Murphy signed into law SB 2333, which provides immunity from civil liability to healthcare facilities and professionals in the course of providing medical services to COVID-19 patients, including those undertaken in good faith to support efforts to treat and prevent the spread of COVID-19. Senate Bill 2333 also provides immunity from civil and criminal civil and criminal liability for any damages related to the allocation of ventilators or other scarce medical resources. Immunity does not apply if the acts or omissions constitute a crime or fraud, malice, or “gross negligence, recklessness, or willful misconduct.” In August, legislation was introduced that would provide immunity from civil liability for businesses against any damage claim stemming from COVID-19 exposure occurring onsite at the businesses. The immunity would not apply to “willful misconduct, reckless infliction of harm or the intentional infliction of harm.”
- New Mexico In June 2020, legislation was introduced that would provide immunity from civil liability for business owners for a “breach of duty of care” when damages or injury are alleged to result from exposure or potential exposure to COVID-19. The immunity does not apply if the owner failed to comply with “federal and state laws that provide requirements for mitigation of the spread of coronavirus disease 2019.”
- New York On April 3, 2020, Governor Andrew Cuomo signed into law the Emergency Disaster Treatment Act, which provides immunity from civil and criminal liability to healthcare professionals and facilities, and volunteer organizations, for damages caused by an act or omission in the course of providing healthcare services, if done in “good faith” and pursuant to a COVID-19 emergency rule. These immunities do not apply to “gross negligence, reckless misconduct, intentional harm or willful or intentional criminal misconduct.”
- North Carolina On July 2, 2020, North Carolina Governor Roy Cooper signed legislation (House Bill 118) designed to protect businesses from civil damages arising from any act or omission alleged to have resulted in the contraction of COVID-19. Businesses are required to provide reasonable notice of actions taken on the premises to reduce the risk of transmission of COVID-19 to individuals present on the premises. No person is liable for the failure of any individual to comply with rules, policies, or guidelines contained in the notice of actions. The civil immunity does not apply to acts or omissions that constitute “gross negligence, willful or wanton conduct, or intentional wrongdoing.”
- Ohio On September 14, 2020, Governor Mike DeWine signed legislation (House Bill 606) that provides all entities civil immunity for injuries, damages, or death related to exposure to, transmission of, or contraction of COVID-19. The civil immunity does not apply if it can be shown that the exposure, transmission, or contraction was the result of “reckless conduct, intentional misconduct, or willful or wanton misconduct.” Healthcare providers are also protected from both professional disciplinary action and tort liability resulting from the “provision, withholding, or withdrawal” of healthcare services resulting from the COVID-19 pandemic. Claimants can still recover damages in a civil action if it can be proven that a healthcare provider acted with “reckless disregard for the consequences” of their actions or engaged in “intentional misconduct or willful or wanton misconduct”.

- Oklahoma On May 21, 2020, Governor Kevin Stitt signed legislation (Senate Bill 1946) that provides civil immunity from a claim by someone who was exposed to COVID-19 to everyone, provided that no laws were violated and the business accused followed official health guidelines. In June, legislation was introduced that, if enacted, would provide immunity from civil liability to health care practitioners and providers acting “in good faith” for any act or omission in the course of rendering health care during the state of a disaster emergency. Immunity from civil liability would also be provided to medical equipment manufacturers and providers for claims stemming from an act or omission that is related to the proper use, condition or nature of the health care equipment. The immunity does not apply to negligence that occurs in the course of providing patient care to patients without COVID-19, and for “willful misconduct, gross negligence, or bad faith.”
- South Carolina The legislature is considering a joint resolution that would provide immunity from civil liability to “health care providers and businesses that follow public health guidance,” regarding COVID-19. Covered entities that follow applicable public health guidance will be immune from liability for claims arising from acts or omissions in the course of operating their businesses unless a claimant can prove, by “clear and convincing evidence,” that the damages were caused by “knowingly reckless, willful or intentional misconduct,” or by failing to make any attempt to follow public health guidance.

IMPLAN Model and Definitions

IMPLAN Model

IMPLAN is a leading provider of economic impact data and analytical software. The company began in 1972 working with the US Forest Service and has grown to a current user base of academics, governments, economic developers, corporations, nonprofits, and consultants. Input-Output (I-O) modeling is based on the foundational concept that all industries, households, and government in the economy are connected through buy-sell relationships; therefore, a given economic activity supports a ripple of additional economic activity throughout the economy.

IMPLAN is an I-O modeling system that uses annual, regional data to map these buy-sell relationships so users can predict how specific economic changes will impact a given regional economy or estimate the effect of past or existing economic activity. Input-output accounting (using the IMPLAN model as an example) describes commodity flows from producers to intermediate and final consumers. The total industry purchases of commodities, services, employment compensation, value added, and imports are equal to the value of the commodities produced. Industries producing goods and services for final use and purchases for final use (final demand) drive the model. Industries producing goods and services for final demand purchase goods and services from other producers. These other producers, in turn, purchase goods and services. This buying of goods and services continues until leakages from the region stop the cycle. The resulting sets of multipliers describe the change of output for every regional industry caused by a US $1.00 change in final demand for any given industry.

Input-Output (I-O) Analysis and IMPLAN are designed to predict the ripple effect of an economic activity by using data about previous spending. Production in a given sector in an economy supports demand for production in sectors throughout the economy, both due to supply chain spending and spending by workers. One of the tenets that makes IMPLAN so attractive is that there are no black boxes. Analysts can view the background data used in the models and customize them with local data and knowledge.

Direct Effects

Direct effects are the set of expenditures applied to the I-O for an impact analysis. It is the initial exogenous change in final demand in terms of industry output, employment, and labor income dollars. It is one or more production changes or expenditures made by producers/consumers as a result of an activity or policy. Direct effects can be positive or negative. These initial changes are determined by an analyst and demonstrate the result of an activity or policy being analyzed. Applying these initial changes to the multipliers in IMPLAN will then display how a region will respond economically to these changes. When consumers purchase goods and services, they create final demand to the Industries producing the goods and services they consume.

Indirect Effects

Indirect effects are the business to business purchases in the supply chain taking place in the region that stem from the initial industry input purchases. As the industry specified spends their money in the region with their suppliers, this spending is shown through the indirect effect.

Induced Effects

Induced effects are the values stemming from household spending of Labor Income, after removal of taxes, savings, and commuter income. The induced effects are generated by the spending of the employees within the business' supply chain.

Employment

Employment data in IMPLAN follows the same definition as Bureau of Economic Analysis Regional Economic Accounts (BEA REA) and Bureau of Labor Statistics Census of Employment and Wages (BLS CEW) data, which is full-time/part-time annual average. Thus, 1 job lasting 12 months = 2 jobs lasting 6 months each = 3 jobs lasting 4 months each. A job can be either full-time or part-time. Similarly, a job that lasts one quarter of the year would be 0.25 jobs. Note that a person can hold more than one job, so the job count is not necessarily the same as the count of employed persons. Jobs in IMPLAN are not the same as a full-time equivalent number.

Labor Income

Labor Income represents the total value of all forms of employment income paid throughout a defined economy during a specified period of time. It reflects the combined cost of total payroll paid to employees (e.g. wages and salaries, benefits, payroll taxes) and payments received by self-employed individuals and/or unincorporated business owners (e.g. capital consumption allowance) across the defined economy. Labor Income (LI) encompasses two additional representative metrics called Proprietor Income (PI) and Employee Compensation (EC).

Value Added

Value Added represents the difference between Output and the cost of Intermediate Inputs throughout a defined economy during a specified period of time. It equals gross Output minus Intermediate Inputs (consumption of goods and services purchased from other industries or imported). Value Added is a measure of the contribution to GDP made by an individual producer, Industry, or Sector.

Output

All analysis in IMPLAN is based on Output, which is the value of production by industry in a calendar year. IMPLAN Output data largely come from the same sources as those used by the BEA in developing their Benchmark Input-Output tables. Since output is the total production value of a Sector, it includes all components of production value or output for a given Sector:  $\text{Output} = \text{Employee Compensation} + \text{Proprietor Income} + \text{Intermediate Expenditures} + \text{Tax on Production and Imports} + \text{Other Property Income}$ .

Other Property Income

Other Property Income (OPI), previously denoted as "Profit" includes consumption of fixed capital (CFC), corporate profits, and business current transfer payments (net). Subsidies for government enterprises is considered negative profit, therefore any subsidization of a government enterprise will count as a negative value towards the government enterprise Sector's OPI.

Taxes on Production & Imports

Taxes on Production & Imports, less subsidies (TOPI) includes sales and excise taxes, customs duties, property taxes, motor vehicle licenses, severance taxes, other taxes, and special assessments. For all Sectors other than government enterprises, subsidies are counted as a negative value towards TOPI.

Hello Amol -

Thank you so much for your time and for speaking with me today regarding a meeting request with Senator Burgess.

As we discussed, Mr. Tra Williams would like to expand on the issue he discussed at the Polk County Delegates meeting last week regarding the compliance deadline to develop minimum training requirements for entry-level commercial motor vehicle operators, and how FleetForce is positioned to work with the many businesses in Polk County who will be facing the challenges that will come with this change.

We understand that Senator Burgess may be tied up with legislative session, so we will be happy to schedule a virtual meeting at his convenience. Please feel free to offer some availability for the Senator and we will work with his calendar to make it happen.

Thank you again, and it was a true pleasure speaking with you.

Kindest,

Laura

Thank you for your consideration Amol. If an in person meeting can be scheduled, will it be at his district office? Considering we are located in Winter Haven, a trip to Tallahassee may be a little difficult to arrange on our end.

Hello Amol -

Thank you so much for your time and for speaking with me today regarding a meeting request with Senator Burgess.

As we discussed, Mr. Tra Williams would like to expand on the issue he discussed at the Polk County Delegates meeting last week regarding the compliance deadline to develop minimum training requirements for entry-level commercial motor vehicle operators, and how FleetForce is positioned to work with the many businesses in Polk County who will be facing the challenges that will come with this change.

We understand that Senator Burgess may be tied up with legislative session, so we will be happy to schedule a virtual meeting at his convenience. Please feel free to offer some availability for the Senator and we will work with his calendar to make it happen.

Thank you again, and it was a true pleasure speaking with you.

Kindest,

Laura

Hey Leslie!

Amol in our office is coordinating scheduling. I'm sure we can arrange a time for you and the Senator or one of us to touch base on SB 566. Do you expect it to be on the next committee agenda?

(I'm reattaching your overview document so Amol has it handy.)

Hi Natalie – I'm not sure you are the correct person to contact about meeting with Sen. Burgess. I'd like to set a meeting with the Sen. regarding SB 566 by Sen. Perry. I represent Enterprise Rent a Car and we support the measure. The Senator is on the committee where it will first be heard and I'd like to discuss it with him.

I have also attached an overview of the issue from our standpoint. I can make myself available any time. Regards, Leslie

Tax Fairness for People Renting Cars in Florida

SB 566 by Sen. Keith Perry/HB 365 by Rep. Mike Caruso

The way consumers access transportation options continue to evolve. A new business model for renting cars – called peer to peer car-sharing - has emerged in Florida. This has resulted in renters of cars being taxed differently depending upon the business they rent from – a rental car company or a peer to peer car-sharing company. These bills seek to ensure all renters of cars are treated the same.

How Peer-to-Peer (P2P) Car-Sharing Works – P2P car-sharing companies are the AirBnb of cars. They contract with private individuals to rent their cars to the public through an app. They also enter agreements with the public who wish to rent cars from their app. The person uses the car for the set amount of time, and their credit card is charged through the company when the car is returned. The person who allows the P2P company to rent out their car is paid by the company via direct deposit. The P2P company keeps between 25-30% of the rental cost.

The activities of P2P companies - taking and confirming reservations online, offering delivery service, providing products such as insurance and roadside assistance, and handling payment for the service – are the same services provided by rental car companies.

Rental Car Surcharge Law – Section 212.0606, F.S. states that “a surcharge of $2 per day or any part of a day is imposed upon the lease or rental of a motor vehicle licensed for hire and designed to carry fewer than nine passengers regardless of whether the motor vehicle is licensed in this state.”

Florida law levies the surcharge on the rental for the first 30 days of a lease or rental. Further, the state sales tax is collected on the transaction. Exceptions are made for persons with a not for profit organization and those whose car is being repaired. This fee paid by car renters was established by the Legislature in 1987 to ensure vehicles using roads help pay for building and maintaining the roads.

In 2014, the law was updated to clarify people who rent cars from a car-sharing company for less than 24 hours must pay $1 per usage plus sales tax. If that car is kept for 24 hours or more, the $2/day rental car surcharge is levied on the renter of the car.

Unfair Tax Application for Persons Renting Cars – In Florida, the $2/day rental car surcharge and sales tax on that transaction is not being collected from a person renting a car from a P2P company. State law requires renters of cars to pay a $2/day rental car surcharge and the sales tax on the transaction. P2P companies say they only connect owners and renters but state law requires the levy of the taxes on the transaction, not the business model. This creates a disparate treatment of people paying for the same service.

The Department of Revenue Calls it a “Rental Transaction” - In a March 2019 informal Letter of Advice, the Department of Revenue stated P2P companies “...are engaged in the business (i.e. an activity either direct or indirect) of renting motor vehicles for a consideration.... Any rental made through the peer to peer car-sharing program is subject to the $2.00 surcharge.” The surcharge funds the following activities in Florida:

- 80% - Local infrastructure needs through the DOT District in which the surcharge was collected;
- 15.25% - VisitFlorida operations through the Tourism Promotional Trust Fund; and,
- 4.25% - Enterprise Florida for use in its international operations.

In 2019, car renters paid more than $142 million in rental car surcharges. For 2019-20, $182 million was projected to be collected from persons renting cars from rental car companies. The emergence of COVID-19 caused a major decrease in tourism and business travel, resulting in lower collections.

Below are the funds provided to DOT districts from the rental car surcharge, based on the rentals that were generated in that District.

Florida Revenue from People Renting Cars (Rental Car Surcharge only)

Total		$138.4 M	$142.2 M	$128.3 M	$78.4 M	$102.0 M

Other Concerns– The unfair treatment of people who rent cars in Florida is proliferating. Research has found that Florida used car dealers, small rental car companies, and others list several cars on P2P sites, and those renters do not pay any tax. One P2P site has over 30 Florida car owners managing nine to 41 cars, and those renters are not paying sales tax or the surcharge.

Some P2P companies advertise that their cars are cheaper than those provided by rental car companies. However, recent comparison found renters of cars from P2P sites pay more even without paying the surcharge or sales tax.

Proposal – The bills sponsored by Sen. Perry and Rep. Caruso clarify the “rules of the road” and ensure people renting cars in Florida are treated the same regardless of the business model they use. The main components of the bills are:

- Tax fairness – Clarifies that all car renters pay the rental car surcharge and subsequent sales tax.
- Insurance – Following the National Council of Insurance Legislators (NCOIL) model insurance language, establishes insurance requirements for the P2P programs and car owners when making a vehicle available to rent on a P2P site. People listing cars on the site would be required to maintain the same level of insurance required of all car owners and rental car companies in Florida (10/20/10).
- Consumer Protections – Mirroring the National Council of Insurance Legislators (NCOIL) model insurance language, the bills ensure vehicles rented on P2P sites do not have open safety recalls and require peer-to-peer car sharing companies to follow certain recordkeeping requirements.

Nine states have approved legislation like what is being proposed in Florida: Colorado, Indiana, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Ohio, Tennessee, Virginia and West Virginia. Thirty states are advancing or preparing to advance legislation in 2021

Hi Natalie! Hope you are doing well and had a good weekend and safe trip up to TLH. I have reached out to Sen. Burgess today, but while he was in committee. Wanted to get this to you quickly in light that the bill has been placed on the agenda for next week.

I know I mentioned late last week that I had some proposed language that would fit in SB 494 since there has not been a successful vehicle in the last many years and this is not something that necessitates a standalone piece of legislation. The language we would want to include would just add on to the end of where the current bill drops off and would be as simple as the below:

(2) In order to address any unforeseen allergic reaction, a pharmacist may administer an appropriate weight-based dosage of epinephrine using an autoinjector delivery system within the framework of an established protocol under a supervising physician licensed under chapter 458 or chapter 459.

This would just address the problem that sometimes there is too much epinephrine utilized for infants, toddlers and small children and ensure that the appropriate weight-based dosage would be provided. This is even more important given the instances of anaphylaxis following COVID-19 vaccines.

Please let me know your thoughts.

Best,

Greg

House and Senate File Legislation Proposed by Gov. Ron DeSantis to Protect Peaceful Protests, Combat Violent Disorder

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (Jan. 6, 2021) -- In response to the violent mobs in Washington, D.C., the Florida House of Representatives and Senate filed identical bills to combat violence, disorder and looting in Florida. Statements from Governor Ron DeSantis, House Speaker Chris Sprowls, Senate President Wilton Simpson, Representative Juan Fernandez-Barquin, sponsor of House Bill 1, and Senator Danny Burgess, sponsor of Senate Bill 484, are below.

Florida Governor Ron DeSantis

“While as Americans we all have a right to peacefully assemble, violence or rioting of any kind is not acceptable and will not be tolerated in the state of Florida. In 2020, I proposed legislation to stop violent assemblies, combat rioting and protect law enforcement. In light of today’s events at our United States Capitol, we have no time to waste to uphold public safety. I look forward to working with House Speaker Sprowls and Senate President Simpson to swiftly pass this bill during the upcoming Legislative Session so that we may protect the rule of law in our great state.”

House Speaker Chris Sprowls (R-Palm Harbor)

“In a democracy, rioting, violence and lawlessness are repugnant and unacceptable. This isn’t a peaceful protest. It’s an act of domestic terrorism. It’s a tragic, cowardly and un-American spectacle. Together we are taking immediate action in Florida by filing the Combating Violence, Disorder and Looting and Law Enforcement Protection Act. The House will work together with Governor DeSantis and the Senate to protect Floridians from this kind of nonsensical violence. And when these types of despicable acts happen, law enforcement and prosecutors will have the tools and the support they need to keep Floridians safe, communities whole and property undamaged.”

Senate President Wilton Simpson (R-Trilby)

“Our constitutional right to protest has played a critical role in the great history of our democracy. I fully respect the right of every American to peacefully protest; however, there is absolutely no excuse for attacking law enforcement and destroying property. Over the last few months, Governor DeSantis has discussed strengthening our state laws to increase penalties for bad actors who turn otherwise peaceful and constitutional protests into violent attacks on law enforcement officers. I am proud to support our Governor and join with our House colleagues to make it clear that peaceful protests are welcome, but violent, destructive mobs will not be tolerated in Florida.”

State Representative Juan Fernandez-Barquin (R-Miami-Dade)

“What I witnessed today in Washington was disgusting, and I repudiate the violence and destruction that took place there. Today I filed legislation in the Florida House to make sure it doesn’t happen here in Florida. It is never acceptable for a civil society to behave in this way, and this bill will ensure that it is unwelcome in Florida. It does not matter if you are Republican or Democrat, we are a society of laws, and all must follow the law.”

State Senator Danny Burgess (R-Zephyrhills)

“We are a nation of law and order, not violence, destruction and unrest. We respect the right to peacefully protest, but the shameful conduct we witnessed at the United States Capitol today and episodes of violent civil unrest that we have witnessed over the last several months have no place in our democracy. This legislation makes it clear that here in Florida criminals who seek to thwart peaceful protests by willfully inciting violence, attacking law enforcement and destroying public or private property will be held accountable.”

ICYMI: Florida Speaker Sprowls Targets Mob Violence with New Bill: 'You Will Go to Prison'

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (January 8, 2021) — Today, Florida Speaker of the House Chris Sprowls (R-Palm Harbor), a former state prosecutor, joined America's Newsroom on Fox News Channel to highlight HB 1, the first-in-the-nation bill that targets rioting and mob violence statewide in Florida.

Sprowls said, “We do not care about which viewpoint is being expressed. This is a nation of laws governed by the Constitution and in the state of Florida our message is very very clear: that kind of conduct, that kind of activity will not be tolerated, and you will go to prison.” (LINK)

HB 1 was filed in the House by Representatives by Representative Juan Fernandez-Barquin (R-Miami-Dade) on Wednesday night in timely response to the violent protests in Washington, D.C., and across the nation last summer.

Hi David,

To follow up on our phone conversation I have attached the press release and an additional statement by the bill sponsor, Danny Burgess, regarding the social media censorship bill (SB 520). Here is the link to the bill where you can read the text:
<https://flsenate.gov/Session/Bill/2021/520>

Senator Danny Burgess also filed SB 484: Combating Public Disorder, which addresses doxing. Specifically, it creates the offense of doxing that will make it a 1st degree misdemeanor to electronically publish another's personal identification information with the intent the information will be used to threaten, intimidate, harass, or place a person in fear of death or great bodily harm. Here is the link: <https://flsenate.gov/Session/Bill/2021/484>

If you would like, I would be happy to facilitate a phone interview with Senator Burgess, who is sponsoring both of these bills.

I believe these are the only bills currently filed that deal with the subjects you are looking for. However, our 2021 Legislative Session begins March 2, so additional legislation may be filed between now and then. You can search by key word for all bills filed in the Florida Senate and House here: <https://flsenate.gov/Session/Bills/2021>.

Hi Lisa,

I hope you're holding up ok. I'm a technology reporter with The New York Times, where I cover the legal and policy questions posed by major tech companies like Facebook and Google.

I am interested in whether state legislatures will play a greater role in answering some of these questions. I was wondering if you expected the Florida Senate to take up any measures this year that would involve the tech giants, like an online privacy bill or a tax on digital services.

Thanks for considering it.

Take care, David, 917-405-5284

Comment or Question:
Dear Senator Rick Scott,

As a former Republican (now an Independent), I'm writing to you today to express my great disappointment with a great deal of the GOP, in the way in which it has misrepresented my needs, that of my family, and the will of the people of Florida (particularly House District 20). I have been greatly disappointed to hear and read the words that have come out of the mouths of Republicans, from our local leaders, all the way up to that of former President Trump's. So many issues that have plagued our state and nation for the 4 years have been sad, frustrating, downright wrong to witness!!

My husband and I simply don't believe that the GOP represents our values, needs, or true character. We are rather conservative, but we also believe in the effects of climate change and fossil fuels in our world, we support strong borders, but certainly not in the way that Trump went about it. I am a 1st generation American, eldest child of Peruvian naturalized citizens of this great nation. There must be a dialogue to take the needs, aspirations, and situations of dreamers and others that seek to find a better life here in America, whilst giving children born to American citizens an equal opportunity. You MUST support dialogue about police brutality on black, indigenous, and other people of color (BIPOC) and seek equality AND equity for all peoples that live in our great nation! We all deserve to live in peace, seeking and speaking TRUTH - regardless of who it might oppose or how it may affect you personally. We are pro-life, from conception to death, but understand that there are also circumstances that warrant conversation and understanding and that there is NO easy answer to these debates. There is so much more I'd like to communicate to you at this time, but I won't take any more of your valuable time!

Finally, my reason for writing to you today is regarding the recent events surrounding Rep. Marjorie Taylor Greene. I have seen and heard EXACTLY how Ms. Greene has behaved and how she has spoken in the last 1+ year(s), the kinds of things she communicated to her potential constituents, and how she CONTINUES to express herself - with no true remorse or reflection! She won the vote to represent the people of her district in Georgia based on lies, conspiracy theories, and inciteful, hateful attacks. She is, in part, responsible for the actions of rioters and insurrectionists that stormed the Capitol building on 1/6/21! This kind of behavior and SHE have NO place within the walls of our democratic institutions. I am GREATLY disappointed that you did not vote for her removal from her committee assignments!!

I pray that you and the other representatives for my district and state, gain some perspective, reflect upon your own moral conscience, and begin to speak out and properly ACT OUT, so as to "walk the talk", not just "talk the talk"!! I am tired of watching Florida be an embarrassment to America and I hope and pray to see us rise up to be appropriately acknowledged and represented!

We are raising 2 God-fearing, level-minding, discerning, open-minded, and respectful young teenage girls that KNOW and LOVE the Gospel and Jesus' message to all - to love and serve HIM and ALL of his people, with words, actions, as the TRUE way of life!! They are watching and learning to advocate, research, learn, speak the truth, and effect change. They are our only hope at this point!!

Respectfully yours!

Karyn Colon

Senator Danny Burgess moves to protect Floridians' First Amendment Rights

Tallahassee, FL - Yesterday's events regarding Twitter's decision to permanently ban the President of the United States and Apple threatening to remove the conservative-leaning application known as Parler, has prompted Senator Danny Burgess (R-Zephyrhills) to file landmark legislation to protect Floridians from this dangerous precedent.

The First Amendment states that "Congress shall make no law...prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech..." "It seems to me that the government explicitly has granted Facebook, Twitter, and others immunity under federal law. As publishers of third-party content, they should not be allowed to discriminate based on content and ban individuals just because they do not agree with their viewpoint." says Senator Burgess.

This bill, as it stands, would require social media websites to provide electronic notice to a user who has been disabled or suspended, within 30 days, and explain why this user was punished. Senator Burgess fully intends to amend this legislation to include social media censorship and rely on the committee process to evaluate its merits.

"I just filed the Combating Public Disorder bill that creates a criminal offense for individuals who cyber intimidate others online. This bill goes a step further by signaling to social media websites that regardless of a person's background, political history, religion, race, gender, or any other identifying measure, Twitter and Facebook cannot be the sole judge, jury, and executioner on American's First Amendment rights. For better or for worse, social media has become a major part of our everyday life and society. These unilateral actions set a terrifying precedent that must be addressed appropriately." says Senator Burgess.

Comment or Question:

Dear Senator Burgess,

I am outraged by the recent events and abuse of power from our Federal Government as well as Big Tech censorship of American and Floridian liberties. This was more than free speech issues although that was among the most prominent, in some cases these were threats against people's livelihoods, their ability to peruse happiness. Action needs to be taken to set precedence that Florida will not tolerate this kind of abuse against its citizens, and other competing companies. These companies include Amazon, Google, Facebook, Twitter, Verizon, Shopify, Youtube, and AT&T although it is possible there are more.

I was impacted by their actions and my free speech was censored. There is also a concerted effort to collect lists of people who have been identified as individuals who supported their political opponent. Their proposals include threats against civil liberties, the ability to obtain a job, bank account, lines of credit, and more.

We need to act now to put protections in place so our state can remain a beacon of freedom.

Tampa, FL (November 5, 2020) – Starting November 5th at 9 p.m., there will be temporary lane closures and turn restrictions on West Spruce Street and North Lois Avenue while a department contractor vacuum excavates and tests the thickness of a wastewater force mainline pipe in the area. This scheduled maintenance will impact the following areas:

- Partial closure of the left lane on North Lois Avenue between W Spruce Street and West Union Street.
- Left turns will be restricted from North Lois Avenue onto West Spruce Street.
- Motorists traveling east on West Spruce Street will be restricted at North Lois Avenue.
- Partial closure of the right lane on West Spruce Street at the intersection of North Lois Avenue.
- Right turns will be restricted from North Lois Avenue onto West Spruce Street.

These restrictions will remain in place until 4 a.m. on November 6th. The contractor will return at 9 p.m. on November 6th to complete the inspection. These partial lane closures and turn restrictions will again be in place. The streets will reopen to normal traffic patterns by 4 a.m. on November 7, 2020, weather permitting.

A high-resolution map of the work area and closures is embedded below. The City of Tampa recommends that motorists use alternative routes to avoid traffic congestion. See all road closures at www.tampagov.net/RoadClosures

Subject: PIP Talking Points

Any discussion of the rate impact of HB 54 cannot be divorced from the fact that Florida's mandatory automobile insurance requirements under the Motor Vehicle No-Fault law are unfair and inadequate.

- The law is unfair because it does not require at-fault drivers to maintain insurance to pay for the injuries they cause other people.
- The law is inadequate because $10,000 in PIP coverage is insufficient coverage in an ever increasing number of auto accidents.
- 48 other states require BI coverage. Even among states that require PIP, every state except Florida also requires BI coverage.
- Florida is the only state where the required insurance to cover bodily injuries, whether it is BI or PIP, is as low as $10,000. Bodily injury coverage with limits of at least 25/50 is required in 40 of 50 states.
- It is necessary and good public policy that Florida increase the minimum limit drivers must carry for coverage of bodily injuries suffered in auto accidents.

This change will, on average, put downward pressure on rates.

- The majority of Floridians who currently purchase auto insurance with BI coverage of 25/50 or more will benefit from PIP repeal and the bad faith reforms in the bill. Those policyholders will not be required to purchase more insurance and can choose to not purchase MedPay. Those drivers will be able to drop PIP coverage they do not need and thus would pay less for insurance.
- In late 2016 the Office of Insurance Regulation commissioned an actuarial study on the impact of repealing PIP and mandating BI. That report estimated that the statewide average premium for total coverage (BI, PD, UM, MedPay, Collision, Comprehensive) would drop 5.6% if PIP were repealed and replaced with a mandate to purchase BI at 25/50 limits.
  - Even if MedPay of $5,000 were mandated, which this bill does not do, the report estimated the average premium would only go up 0.3%. The bill does not mandate MedPay.
- The OIR report did not contemplate a BI mandate that also contains bad faith reform long requested by the insurance industry that provides a safe-harbor if the insurer agrees to settle. The bad faith reforms in the bill will create additional savings. Repealing PIP will benefit policyholders in cities where PIP coverage is the most expensive.

- The 2016 OIR report estimated the average premium for total coverage in Miami-Dade would drop 15.5% if PIP were repealed and replaced with a BI mandate of 25/50.
- While the will should put downward pressure on rates, some policyholders will pay more for their auto insurance. Drivers that now do not purchase any PIP coverage may well pay more for their coverage, which is unfortunately necessary to require that drivers have adequate insurance.

Tours can be as quickly as he needs them to be but a standard tour would be about an hour and a half to 2 hours. We'd sit down and do a presentation/briefing for 30-45 min then hop on the boat and see everything from the waterside for an hour. 10-15 minutes for travel time to and from the HQ to the boat.

Senator Burgess,

Port Tampa Bay is Florida's largest and most diverse port. We also are West Central Florida's largest economic engine, boasting an economic impact of over $17 billion. We are also responsible for roughly 80,000-85,000 direct and indirect jobs, many of these people are your constituents.

Throughout the COVID-19 pandemic, Port Tampa Bay has remained in a strong position due to our diversity and strength of business. We would like to invite you come see us and tour our facilities at your convenience. We can provide a short briefing on all that the port has to offer, then take a tour on a Hillsborough County Sheriff's Office boat so that you can see it all from the waterside.

I hope that you and your family have a wonderful holiday and we hope to see you soon!

Comment or Question:

I am writing about a proposed gun bill, Bill 370. It is a political bill and has nothing in it that reflects crime or gun use in Florida or the United States for that matter. Criminals rarely use "assault weapons". Actually, by definition, an assault weapon is a rifle that fires in different modes including fully automatic which are severely restricted by Federal Law, but "Assault Weapon" sounds scarier than a "semiautomatic rifle" so this term is used. Some actual facts for you: According to the FBI's UCR report from 2014-2018 there were 48,549 gun crimes in the US. Hand guns accounted for 31,934 crimes/Deaths while all long guns were 1,437 (semiautomatic rifles were not separated out from other long guns). That is a percentage of just UNDER 3%! In fact in another FBI report in 2018, knives killed 5X's the number of people than guns! So there are no facts that would support this draconian bill. Yes, I know about the Pulse and Sandy Hook massacres but before we impinge on our Second Amendment rights, which is the only right that says "shall not be infringed", we need to step back and deal with the reality rather than emotionally or simply because it is a political party's wish to make their supporters happy. The reality is this. These restrictions will not stop shootings or mass shootings. States and cities with the toughest fire arms laws are still the same places with the highest crime and firearm death rates. When California passed their ban on large capacity magazines nobody in the L. A. Bloods said: Hey we're going to F up that party but remember don't use anything except those 10 round magazines! We don't want to get caught doing THAT!" The law changed nothing for the criminals. The only affect these laws have is to make people that are already law abiding citizens criminals. A mistake, like forgetting there is a 30 round magazine in the bottom of your Range Bag can destroy a good person's life. That is all that will happen. An actual solution, instead of a political one, is much more complex than simply passing a bill that hurts your constituents with a law that has no basis in reality and as we've seen over and over does absolutely nothing to stop crime. Please note the INCREASE in crime in New York City despite the massive gun laws on their books. Let's be honest. The bulk of these shootings are in urban/poor areas. We don't want to be called a racist, especially politicians, so we avoid that fact, just like the black community does. When Mr. Floyd was murdered it set off a year long series of protests, riots, fires and deaths. On this same extended weekend I checked 5 cities newspapers: Atlanta, Oakland, Minneapolis, Chicago and New York. In just those 5 cities there were over 50 people shot. 14 were killed including a beautiful elementary aged girl. Did you hear about that? Of course not. There are "Sandy Hooks" all the time, especially during the summer and they are almost always done with hand guns! Why hand guns? They are cheaper, easier to hide so they are very disposable.

The problem is poverty. While Democrats may pass a law like this and walk around patting themselves on the back, in the real world, in these areas, nothing has or will change. NOTHING. As long as we ignore the roots and causes of this cancer it will not stop. Period. We need to do things to bring jobs and therefore hope, to these areas.

Here's a suggestion. We give companies tax breaks or other incentives BUT we require them to hire X% of the workplace's workers to be from within 30 miles or whatever. When they say they can't find trained people for X job we provide free training or have the company train the people from their pool of applicants. This will create jobs and give the people a trade for life if they choose.

I love music. Go to YouTube and listen to Elvis's "In the Ghetto" or the words of Louis Armstrong before he sings "Wonder World". THAT is how old this problem has been around and been ignored. Fix that Senator.

Subject: SB 54 - Motor Vehicle Insurance

Dear Senator Burgess,

I wanted to circle back with you to discuss SB 54 – Motor Vehicle Insurance. We have discussed this legislation in the past and some of the concerns that the Florida Orthopaedic Society has with eliminating PIP without providing patients with clarity over what insurance coverage will cover any harm they may do to themselves and unambiguous language that will make it clear that health insurance will become the primary payer of care rendered in the event of an automobile accident.

Our specific concerns with the current bill are as follows:

1. We understand the argument that for drivers that have both health insurance and PIP, they are carrying duplicative coverage. But we also understand there are a significant number of Floridians that are uninsured because their employers do not offer them coverage and they are priced out of the health insurance market. The massive loss of jobs due to COVID has made this situation even worse. For those uninsured, the Florida no-fault coverage is their only health insurance coverage. Though the bill has a mandatory "offering" of med pay, we would encourage mandatory election of such coverage for those drivers that cannot provide proof of health insurance coverage when purchasing their auto policy. This would create a small risk pool of uninsured patients that are required to pay into Med Pay Coverage which should have a positive impact on rates with more people paying into that pool, rather than just relying on those that voluntarily choose to purchase the additional med pay. We support a strict definition of what is covered in that mandatory Med Pay coverage to be limited to only Emergency Care as defined in the Statutes. We strongly believe there will be a significant impact on emergency physicians and uninsured Floridians if there is no mandated coverage to pay for emergency care if the motorist cannot provide prove of health insurance.

2. It is current practice for health insurance carriers to deny claims that are related to automobile accidents. That is why our members routinely have to ask if an injury the patient has sustained is related to an auto accident or workers compensation. When other insurance products may be responsible, the health insurance carriers currently deny the claim. We would strongly encourage you to include clear language that establishes that health insurance is the primary payer for auto injuries and provides a process for coordination of benefits after the fact with an Auto Insurance Carrier that is ultimately found responsible for the claim. This will ensure timely access to care and treatment for injured motorists and a process for the health insurance carrier to be made whole for the payment of any treatment that was the responsibility of the auto carrier.
3. Finally, with more patients needing to utilize their health insurance to receive treatment for auto accidents in emergency rooms and outside of their usual primary care and specialist networks, physicians and insurance carriers will need a venue to address any out-of-network payment disputes that will arise. It would help to make it clear that any payment dispute between the health insurer, auto carrier, and physician, the appropriate venue for resolution is the Provider and Health Plan Dispute Resolution Program currently in statute and housed at AHCA. That dispute resolution process was last reviewed when the state addressed Surprise Medical Billing. We believe the need to use that process will increase as health insurance becomes primary for more auto related care. We do need to fix that Dispute Resolution Process to include mandatory participation from the insurance carriers as well as currently their participation is optional and we have seen many refuse to participate.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to provide these three concerns that we have with the current legislative proposal. We hope to work with you on your legislation as it moves through the process so we achieve clarity for all stakeholders and make sure patients are able to access care in a timely manner.

Sincerely,

Senator Danny Burgess moves to protect Floridians' First Amendment Rights

Tallahassee, FL - Yesterday's events regarding Twitter's decision to permanently ban the President of the United States and Apple threatening to remove the conservative-leaning application known as Parler, has prompted Senator Danny Burgess (R-Zephyrhills) to file landmark legislation to protect Floridians from this dangerous precedent.

The First Amendment states that "Congress shall make no law...prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech..." "It seems to me that the government explicitly has granted Facebook, Twitter, and others immunity under federal law. As publishers of third-party content, they should not be allowed to discriminate based on content and ban individuals just because they do not agree with their viewpoint." says Senator Burgess.

This bill, as it stands, would require social media websites to provide electronic notice to a user who has been disabled or suspended, within 30 days, and explain why this user was punished. Senator Burgess fully intends to amend this legislation to include social media censorship and rely on the committee process to evaluate its merits.

"I just filed the Combating Public Disorder bill that creates a criminal offense for individuals who cyber intimidate others online. This bill goes a step further by signaling to social media websites that regardless of a person's background, political history, religion, race, gender, or any other identifying measure, Twitter and Facebook cannot be the sole judge, jury, and executioner on American's First Amendment rights. For better or for worse, social media has become a major part of our everyday life and society. These unilateral actions set a terrifying precedent that must be addressed appropriately." says Senator Burgess.

Senator Danny Burgess moves to protect Floridians' First Amendment Rights

Tallahassee, FL - Yesterday's events regarding Twitter's decision to permanently ban the President of the United States and Apple threatening to remove the conservative-leaning application known as Parler, has prompted Senator Danny Burgess (R-Zephyrhills) to file landmark legislation to protect Floridians from this dangerous precedent.

The First Amendment states that "Congress shall make no law...prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech..." "It seems to me that the government explicitly has granted Facebook, Twitter, and others immunity under federal law. As publishers of third-party content, they should not be allowed to discriminate based on content and ban individuals just because they do not agree with their viewpoint." says Senator Burgess.

This bill, as it stands, would require social media websites to provide electronic notice to a user who has been disabled or suspended, within 30 days, and explain why this user was punished. Good Afternoon –

I know of no direct prohibition related to a candidate wearing his or her law enforcement uniform at political events or in campaign advertisements. However, I would point you to a couple of provisions in our election code that may be helpful.

Section 104.31, F.S. provides guidance regarding the political activities of state, county, and municipal officers and employees:

104.31 Political activities of state, county, and municipal officers and employees.—

(1) No officer or employee of the state, or of any county or municipality thereof, except as hereinafter exempted from provisions hereof, shall:

(a) Use his or her official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or a nomination of office or coercing or influencing another person's vote or affecting the result thereof.

(b) Directly or indirectly coerce or attempt to coerce, command, or advise any other officer or employee to pay, lend, or contribute any part of his or her salary, or any money, or anything else of value to any party, committee, organization, agency, or person for political purposes. Nothing in this paragraph or in any county or municipal charter or ordinance shall prohibit an employee from suggesting to another employee in a noncoercive manner that he or she may voluntarily contribute to a fund which is administered by a party, committee, organization, agency, person, labor union or other employee organization for political purposes.

(c) Directly or indirectly coerce or attempt to coerce, command, and advise any such officer or employee as to where he or she might purchase commodities or to interfere in any other way with the personal right of said officer or employee.

The provisions of this section shall not be construed so as to prevent any person from becoming a candidate for and actively campaigning for any elective office in this state. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects and candidates. The provisions of paragraph (a) shall not be construed so as to limit the political activity in a general, special, primary, bond, referendum, or other election of any kind or nature, of elected officials or candidates for public office in the state or of any county or municipality thereof; and the provisions of paragraph (a) shall not be construed so as to limit the political activity in general or special elections of the officials appointed as the heads or directors of state administrative agencies, boards, commissions, or committees or of the members of state boards, commissions, or committees, whether they be salaried, nonsalaried, or reimbursed for expense. In the event of a dual capacity of any member of a state board, commission, or committee, any restrictive provisions applicable to either capacity shall apply. The provisions of paragraph (a) shall not be construed so as to limit the political activity in a general, special, primary, bond, referendum, or other election of any kind or nature of the Governor, the elected members of the Governor's Cabinet, or the members of the Legislature. The provisions of paragraphs (b) and (c) shall apply to all officers and employees of the state or of any county or municipality thereof, whether elected, appointed, or otherwise employed, or whether the activity shall be in connection with a primary, general, special, bond, referendum, or other election of any kind or nature.

(2) An employee of the state or any political subdivision may not participate in any political campaign for an elective office while on duty.

(3) Any person violating the provisions of this section is guilty of a misdemeanor of the first degree, punishable as provided in s. 775.082 or s. 775.083.

(4) Nothing contained in this section or in any county or municipal charter shall be deemed to prohibit any public employee from expressing his or her opinions on any candidate or issue or from participating in any political campaign during the employee's off-duty hours, so long as such activities are not in conflict with the provisions of subsection (1) or s. 110.233.

History.—s. 8, ch. 26870, 1951; s. 7, ch. 29615, 1955; s. 5, ch. 29936, 1955; s. 1, ch. 59-208; s. 18, ch. 65-379; s. 53, ch. 71-136; ss. 1, 2, ch. 74-13; s. 1, ch. 75-261; s. 30, ch. 79-190; s. 1, ch. 80-207; s. 628, ch. 95-147; s. 1, ch. 2006-275.

Section 106.15, F.S. relating to certain prohibited acts:

106.15 Certain acts prohibited.—

(1) No person shall pay money or give anything of value for the privilege of speaking at a political meeting in the furtherance of his or her candidacy, nor shall anyone speaking for such a person pay money or give anything of value for such privilege.

(2) No candidate, in the furtherance of his or her candidacy for nomination or election to public office in any election, shall use any state-owned aircraft or motor vehicle, as provided in chapter 287, solely for the purpose of furthering his or her candidacy. However, in the event a candidate uses any state-owned aircraft or motor vehicle to conduct official state business and while on such trip performs any function in the furtherance of his or her candidacy for nomination or election to public office in any election, the candidate shall prorate the expenses incurred and reimburse the appropriate agency for any trip not exclusively for state business and shall pay either a prorated share of all fixed and variable expenses related to the ownership, operation, and use of such aircraft or one-half of the total fixed and variable expenses related to the ownership, operation, and use of such aircraft, whichever is greater. The reimbursement shall be made from the campaign account of the candidate.

(3) A candidate may not, in the furtherance of his or her candidacy for nomination or election to public office in any election, use the services of any state, county, municipal, or district officer or employee during working hours.

(4) No person shall make and no person shall solicit or knowingly accept any political contribution in a building owned by a governmental entity. For purposes of this subsection, "accept" means to receive a contribution by personal hand delivery from a contributor or the contributor's agent. This subsection shall not apply when a government-owned building or any portion thereof is rented for the specific purpose of holding a campaign fund raiser.

(5) Any person violating the provisions of this section commits a misdemeanor of the first degree, punishable as provided in s. 775.082 or s. 775.083.

History.—s. 15, ch. 73-128; s. 9, ch. 74-200; s. 1, ch. 77-174; s. 54, ch. 77-175; s. 61, ch. 79-400; s. 31, ch. 81-304; s. 28, ch. 83-217; s. 2, ch. 83-304; s. 16, ch. 91-45; s. 17, ch. 91-107; s. 648, ch. 95-147; s. 2, ch. 97-223; s. 7, ch. 2002-197.

The Florida Elections Commission has jurisdiction to investigate and determine violations of chapters 104 and 106. (See, s. 106.25, F.S.) I tried to research the Division of Elections website to see whether they have issued any advisory opinions on point but their database is having "issues."

Mr. Burgess,

Thank you for the email.

This is why I did not vote for you! This bill is authoritarian and overreaching; much like trump and his stooge dessantis. The state should not have the right to interfere with the law enforcement budget of a municipality. This is nothing more than a knee-jerk reaction to the term "defund the police" which, in my interpretation, means rearranging budgets to provide more services like mental health response within law enforcement, not necessarily reducing them. However, if a municipality arrives at a lower law enforcement budget via bargaining or some other means then so be it. The citizens of the municipality have recourse and their votes to voice their concerns.

The term "specific circumstances" is used many times. This is an open ended term inviting abuse at the highest levels. No bail for unlawful assembly is heavy-handed. Unlawful assembly is not the same as a riot and should be separate in punishment. Unlawful assembly could simply be where a group meeting at the wrong street.

SB 494: Administration of Vaccines

On Friday I filed legislation to improve access to vaccinations for Floridians. SB 494: Administration of Vaccines would amend Florida State Statutes to allow pharmacists who meet certain requirements to administer vaccines recommended by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices to adults.

This legislation will increase the number of vaccination sites by allowing licensed and approved pharmacists to vaccinate the public at their local pharmacy.

SB 484: Combatting Public Disorder

We are a nation of law and order, not violence, destruction, and unrest. We respect the right to peacefully protest, but the shameful conduct we witnessed at the United States Capitol and episodes of violent civil unrest that we have witnessed over the last several months have no place in our country.

Last week I filed SB 484: Combatting Public Disorder. SB 484 makes it clear that here in Florida criminals who seek to thwart peaceful protests by willfully inciting violence, attacking law enforcement, and destroying public or private property will be held accountable.

SB 520: Social Media Websites

For better or for worse, social media has become a major part of our everyday life and society. After hearing from our constituent that social media sites were banning users and deleting accounts without explanation, I filed SB 520: Social Media Websites.

This legislation would require social media companies to provide individual and business users notice when the website has suspended or disabled a user's account and requires the companies to detail the steps necessary to restore the account.

SB 520 signals to social media websites that regardless of a person's background, political history, religion, race, gender, or any other identifying measure, Twitter and Facebook cannot be the sole judge, jury, and executioner of Americans' First Amendment rights.

SB 494: Administration of Vaccines

On Friday I filed legislation to improve access to vaccinations for Floridians. SB 494: Administration of Vaccines would amend Florida State Statutes to allow pharmacists who meet certain requirements to administer vaccines recommended by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices to adults.

This legislation will increase the number of vaccination sites by allowing licensed and approved pharmacists to vaccinate the public at their local pharmacy.

SB 484: Combatting Public Disorder

We are a nation of law and order, not violence, destruction, and unrest. We respect the right to peacefully protest, but the shameful conduct we witnessed at the United States Capitol and episodes of violent civil unrest that we have witnessed over the last several months have no place in our country.

Last week I filed SB 484: Combatting Public Disorder. SB 484 makes it clear that here in Florida criminals who seek to thwart peaceful protests by willfully inciting violence, attacking law enforcement, and destroying public or private property will be held accountable.

SB 520: Social Media Websites

For better or for worse, social media has become a major part of our everyday life and society. After hearing from our constituent that social media sites were banning users and deleting accounts without explanation, I filed SB 520: Social Media Websites.

This legislation would require social media companies to provide individual and business users notice when the website has suspended or disabled a user's account and requires the companies to detail the steps necessary to restore the account.

SB 520 signals to social media websites that regardless of a person's background, political history, religion, race, gender, or any other identifying measure, Twitter and Facebook cannot be the sole judge, jury, and executioner of Americans' First Amendment rights.

Senator Burgess:

I believe SB 484 is another example of FL GOP over reach.

Governor DeSantis has admitted that FL was not affected by the actions this bill is alleged to address, making it a solution in search of a problem.

It is also another example of the FL Republican party's desire to tell local jurisdictions how to govern.

I hope you agree that politicians in the nation's capitol should not direct how states set their budget, and it is not the legislature's role to direct how cities and counties should spend the dollars under their jurisdiction.

The adage that governance closest to the people is the best governance seems to have fallen out of favor in Tallahassee. I hope that will work to return it e importance it deserves in the lawmaking process.

Thank you for the opportunity to share my thoughts.

I wish you well, and I trust that you will faithfully act on the best interest of all Floridians.

Thank you for reaching out to your constituents; however, I live in senate district 19 and am represented by Senator Rouson.

Respectfully

Ray Eydmann

SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance Approved by Banking and Insurance Committee

This week the Senate Committee on Banking and Insurance, chaired by Senator Jim Boyd approved SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance.

SB 54 is the first bill I presented in the Florida Senate. This legislation will replace Florida's no-fault system with a bodily injury liability system more appropriately places liability where it should be - with the party that caused the accident.

Additionally, the bill creates a new framework for handling bad faith litigation that provides a clear set of standards to govern the conduct of both parties in the claims handling process, which I believe will lead to better outcomes for both insured Floridians and their insurance companies.

- Repeals No-Fault, Requires Bodily Injury Liability Coverage
- Requires Insurance Companies to Offer Medical Payments Coverage
- Creates a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions
- Allows for Named Driver Exclusions

Senate Bill 54 transforms this ineffective and outdated insurance structure, which I believe will lead to a more stable insurance market and better outcomes for insured Floridians when they face the unfortunate and in some cases tragic circumstance of being involved in a serious vehicle accident.

Emergency Management Director and Florida National Guard Brief Committee on Pandemic Response

This week in the Select Committee on Pandemic Preparedness and Response:

As chair of the Select Committee, I asked our Division of Emergency Management Director, Jared Moskowitz to update our committee members on the state's COVID-19 vaccination efforts.

Director Moskowitz gave an incredibly detailed presentation and provided a week-by-week review of Florida's vaccine distribution and administration progress. Although Florida leads the nation in vaccinations of seniors 65 years of age and older, there remains a critical need for increased vaccine supply from the federal government. The lack of vaccine supply from the federal government is currently the major impediment to vaccinating more Floridians.

I also asked the Florida National Guard's Director of Military Support, Col. John L. Steele, to brief the Select Committee on their response to COVID-19.

The Florida National Guard continues to support the state's COVID-19 response through operational support of Community Based Testing Sites, Community Vaccination Sites, Mobile Testing Teams, augmentation to airport screening, statewide logistics support, coordination, food distribution, planning, and operational mission sets.

As chair of the Select Committee, I asked our Division of Emergency Management Director, Jared Moskowitz to update our committee members on the state's COVID-19 vaccination efforts.

Director Moskowitz gave an incredibly detailed presentation and provided a week-by-week review of Florida's vaccine distribution and administration progress. Although Florida leads the nation in vaccinations of seniors 65 years of age and older, there remains a critical need for increased vaccine supply from the federal government. The lack of vaccine supply from the federal government is currently the major impediment to vaccinating more Floridians.

I also asked the Florida National Guard's Director of Military Support, Col. John L. Steele, to brief the Select Committee on their response to COVID-19.

The Florida National Guard continues to support the state's COVID-19 response through operational support of Community Based Testing Sites, Community Vaccination Sites, Mobile Testing Teams, augmentation to airport screening, statewide logistics support, coordination, food distribution, planning, and operational mission sets.

Dear friends,

I've just returned from another busy week in the Florida Senate.

This week, I presented (and passed) my first bill, cast my first votes, and attended quite a few virtual meetings. On Thursday, my committee received an update on vaccine distribution and the pandemic response from the National Guard and the Department of Emergency Management.

It is an honor to serve you in the Florida Senate.

SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance Approved by Banking and Insurance Committee

This week the Senate Committee on Banking and Insurance, chaired by Senator Jim Boyd approved SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance.

SB 54 is the first bill I presented in the Florida Senate. This legislation will replace Florida's no-fault system with a bodily injury liability system more appropriately places liability where it should be – with the party that caused the accident.

Additionally, the bill creates a new framework for handling bad faith litigation that provides a clear set of standards to govern the conduct of both parties in the claims handling process, which I believe will lead to better outcomes for both insured Floridians and their insurance companies.

- Repeals No-Fault, Requires Bodily Injury Liability Coverage
- Requires Insurance Companies to Offer Medical Payments Coverage
- Creates a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions
- Allows for Named Driver Exclusions

Senate Bill 54 transforms this ineffective and outdated insurance structure, which I believe will lead to a more stable insurance market and better outcomes for insured Floridians when they face the unfortunate and in some cases tragic circumstance of being involved in a serious vehicle accident.

This week in the Florida Senate

Dear friends,

I've just returned from another busy week in the Florida Senate.

This week, I presented (and passed) my first bill, cast my first votes, and attended quite a few virtual meetings. On Thursday, my committee received an update on vaccine distribution and the pandemic response from the National Guard and the Department of Emergency Management.

It is an honor to serve you in the Florida Senate.

Forward March,

SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance Approved by Banking and Insurance Committee

This week the Senate Committee on Banking and Insurance, chaired by Senator Jim Boyd approved SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance.

opening_white_car_door.jpg

SB 54 is the first bill I presented in the Florida Senate. This legislation will replace Florida's no-fault system with a bodily injury liability system more appropriately places liability where it should be – with the party that caused the accident.

Additionally, the bill creates a new framework for handling bad faith litigation that provides a clear set of standards to govern the conduct of both parties in the claims handling process, which I believe will lead to better outcomes for both insured Floridians and their insurance companies.

- Repeals No-Fault, Requires Bodily Injury Liability Coverage
- Requires Insurance Companies to Offer Medical Payments Coverage
- Creates a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions
- Allows for Named Driver Exclusions

Senate Bill 54 transforms this ineffective and outdated insurance structure, which I believe will lead to a more stable insurance market and better outcomes for insured Floridians when they face the unfortunate and in some cases tragic circumstance of being involved in a serious vehicle accident.

Emergency Management Director and Florida National Guard Brief Committee on Pandemic Response

_____ This week in the Select Committee on Pandemic Preparedness and Response:

As chair of the Select Committee, I asked our Division of Emergency Management Director, Jared Moskowitz to update our committee members on the state's COVID-19 vaccination efforts.

Director Moskowitz gave an incredibly detailed presentation and provided a week-by-week review of Florida's vaccine distribution and administration progress. Although Florida leads the nation in vaccinations of seniors 65 years of age and older, there remains a critical need for increased vaccine supply from the federal government. The lack of vaccine supply from the federal government is currently the major impediment to vaccinating more Floridians.

I also asked the Florida National Guard's Director of Military Support, Col. John L. Steele, to brief the Select Committee on their response to COVID-19.

The Florida National Guard continues to support the state's COVID-19 response through operational support of Community Based Testing Sites, Community Vaccination Sites, Mobile Testing Teams, augmentation to airport screening, statewide logistics support, coordination, food distribution, planning, and operational mission sets.

Subject: The state legislators need to STOP their attacks on HOME RULE

Senator Burgess,

Will city councils be reluctant to increase police budgets if SB 484 passes? This is a horrible attack on home rule.

My town is experimenting with ways to keep people out of jail by utilizing social workers and monies to find the homeless places to live. IF you force the city council to keep the same budget for our sheriff's office, they might be less inclined to raise the budget one year for an experimental plan that might cost more in the initial year. Please QUIT attacking home rule.

There are multiple problems with your bill SB 484. One of the problems is an attack on home rule. Cities will be struggling with their budgets. What right does the state have to step in? Excerpt from SB 484:

Starting at line 107

(4)(a) Within 30 days after a municipality posts its tentative budget to the official website under subsection (3), a resident of the municipality may file an appeal by petition to the Administration Commission if the tentative budget contains a funding reduction to the operating budget of the municipal law enforcement agency.

Beginning on line 118

The petition shall be filed with the Executive Office of the Governor,

Beginning on line 122

The governing body of the municipality has 5 working days after delivery of a copy of the petition to file a reply with the Executive Office of the Governor,

Beginning on line 135

The budget as approved, amended, or modified by the Administration Commission shall be final.

Response:

Ms. Aertker,

Thank you for taking the time to reach out to my office regarding your home rule concerns over SB 484.

Before being elected to the Senate and the House in the last few years, my public service started right in my own community as a city councilman and as the mayor of Zephyrhills, my hometown. I know how important it is for our local leaders to make decisions about their community without the state stepping in. I truly believe that the leaders closer to home know what is best for their constituents. With that being said, this bill aims to provide more transparency in regard to how our municipal law enforcement agencies are being funded and allowing the state to step in if our own constituents are concerned with their safety.

The bill explicitly says that the state will step in ONLY if there is an unexplained reduction in the municipal law enforcement budget AND if a resident of the municipality, someone like yourself, files a petition for the state to look into it.

If you have any additional questions or concerns, please do not hesitate to reach out to my staff Meagan Hebel at hebel.meagan@flsenate.gov

Thank you.

Thank you for your kind reply. Please contemplate how you'd feel if any citizen could make you go through this process for bills that you propose. Excerpt from HB 1 (which is identical to SB 484) beginning on line 107

Within 30 days after a municipality posts its tentative budget to the official website under subsection (3), a resident of the municipality may file an appeal by petition to the Administration Commission if the tentative budget contains a funding reduction to the operating budget of the municipal law enforcement agency. The petition must set forth the tentative budget proposed by the municipality, in the form and manner prescribed by the Executive Office of the Governor and approved by the Administration Commission, the operating budget of the municipal law enforcement agency as approved by the municipality for the previous year, and state the reasons or grounds for the appeal. The petition shall be filed with the Executive Office of the Governor, and a copy served upon the governing body of the municipality or to the clerk of the circuit court of the county in which the municipality is located. The governing body of the municipality has 5 working days after delivery of a copy of the petition to file a reply with the Executive Office of the Governor, and shall deliver a copy of such reply to the petitioner. Upon receipt of the petition, the Executive Office of the Governor shall provide for a budget hearing at which the matters presented in the petition and the reply shall be considered. A report of the findings and recommendations of the Executive Office of the Governor thereon shall be promptly submitted to the Administration Commission, which, within 30 days, shall approve the action of the governing body of the municipality or amend or modify the budget as to each separate item within the operating budget of the municipal law enforcement agency. The budget as approved, amended, or modified by the Administration Commission shall be final.

Subject: Represent us! Your constituents opposite HB1 and Protect Floridian's First Amendment Rights

Kimberly Simon,

Polls are clear your constituents overwhelmingly OPPOSE HB1. We request you represent Floridians at the House Justice Appropriations meeting to stop HB 1 at the hearing or as soon as possible. We are outraged that this legislation even got assigned to a public hearing must less that it has been fast-tracked through the House on party lines. Florida currently faces the worst economic and public health crisis in history and instead of working to find solutions HB1 criminalizes free speech, peaceful assembly and dissent through unconstitutional language that is targeted at silencing Black voices demanding basic human rights, equality, and fair treatment by law enforcement.

Instead of addressing the horrendous housing crisis, the broken unemployment system, the failing healthcare system, the disorganized and chaotic education system, AND the rising number of deaths, poverty, job loss and sickness in Florida HB1 repackages legislation put forward by Governor DeSantis as a "response to the violent insurrectionist mobs" that attempted a coup on the nation's Capitol. This language is a smokescreen for the true intent of the bill which is to circumvent the mess that Florida has as a consequence of the pandemic and lack of support for Florida's poverty impacted and oppressed. I am not fooled by this. This is the same legislation it was back in September with the same purpose - to limit the basic civil rights of BLM protestors that is guaranteed to all people under the US Constitution.

I believe that HB1 is being used to distract media and organizers from focusing on the real problem: lack of support for those in need across the state. How dare the Governor and the Florida Legislature waste taxpayer time and money on proposing solutions to a made up problem. Section 870 of the Florida Statute already criminalizes riots, unlawful assemblies, and looting but this legislation would actually make it legal for motorists who strike protestors with their vehicle, even if the incident results in someone's death. It limits people's ability to apply to Florida's already broken unemployment system if they have been convicted under the proposed legislation and allows victims of violent crimes to recover civil damages from a local government that is deems responsible for grossly negligent "policing" during a "riot". Meanwhile, the Florida Legislature is fast-tracking HB7/SB72 to create COVID19 liability immunity for the real victims of negligence by businesses, government agencies, schools, and religious organizations who have caused the spread of COVID19.

The Executive Director of the ACLU of Florida, Micah Kubic, stated that "This (bill) is not an attempt to make our communities safer. This proposed legislation by DeSantis is nothing more than a campaign political stunt. Now, it is being disguised as a response to the failed violent coup at the US Capitol. And, it is just as unconstitutional."

A statewide survey of Florida voters put out after the attack by Donald Trump's supporters on the US Capitol suggested a lack of support for HB1 and Governor DeSantis' push to amp up criminal penalties for "disorderly" protests. Ninety-percent of those asked stated their support for "protecting our constitutional right to free assembly and free speech by legally protesting without fear of criminal charges". Seventy-one percent of Democrats and 74% of Republicans deemed the issue a top priority. Eighty percent of respondents said they were more likely to support a legislator who voted to protect that priority, and 56% were "much more likely". On the other hand, 83% of respondents thought that it was important to strengthen unemployment protections for people who lost their jobs because of COVID-19, 63% said that this was "very important". (1)

Finally, this legislation also creates a preemptive attack on local municipalities that might want to "defund" the police and put their money towards more humanitarian initiatives to provide real solutions to small business and economic crises caused by the pandemic. Instead of restricting local government's ability to find solutions we need legislation that answers the call of the people in the streets. People only protest when they are being abused, oppressed, marginalized or violated. It's time the House Justice Appropriations Subcommittee address the calls of Florida voters and people who cared enough to peacefully assemble. We need to face the issues head on and answer to the humanity and dignity of working class, black, brown, and immigrant families in Florida who are suffering with workable policies that help the state grow and prosper.

If this legislation passes I will be letting people know that they should not travel in Florida, they should not move to Florida, they should not visit Florida, because our government does not support them and keep them safe. Public health and the economy should be your number one priority. Please OPPOSE HB1 and support legislation that provides real solutions to the real problems Floridians face today.

How dare the Governor and the Florida Legislature waste taxpayer time and money on proposing solutions to a made up problem. Section 870 of the Florida Statute already criminalizes riots, unlawful assemblies, and looting but this legislation would actually make it legal for motorists who strike protestors with their vehicle, even if the incident results in someone's death. It limits people's ability to apply to Florida's already broken unemployment system if they have been convicted under the proposed legislation and allows victims of violent crimes to recover civil damages from a local government that is deems responsible for grossly negligent "policing" during a "riot". Meanwhile, the Florida Legislature is fast-tracking HB7/SB72 to create COVID19 liability immunity for the real victims of negligence by businesses, government agencies, schools, and religious organizations who have caused the spread of COVID19.

The Executive Director of the ACLU of Florida, Micah Kubic, stated that "This (bill) is not an attempt to make our communities safer. This proposed legislation by DeSantis is nothing more than a campaign political stunt. Now, it is being disguised as a response to the failed violent coup at the US Capitol. And, it is just as unconstitutional."

A statewide survey of Florida voters put out after the attack by Donald Trump's supporters on the US Capitol suggested a lack of support for HB1 and Governor DeSantis' push to amp up criminal penalties for "disorderly" protests. Ninety-percent of those asked stated their support for "protecting our constitutional right to free assembly and free speech by legally protesting without fear of criminal charges". Seventy-one percent of Democrats and 74% of Republicans deemed the issue a top priority. Eighty percent of respondents said they were more likely to support a legislator who voted to protect that priority, and 56% were "much more likely". On the other hand, 83% of respondents thought that it was important to strengthen unemployment protections for people who lost their jobs because of COVID-19, 63% said that this was "very important". (1)

Finally, this legislation also creates a preemptive attack on local municipalities that might want to "defund" the police and put their money towards more humanitarian initiatives to provide real solutions to small business and economic crises caused by the pandemic. Instead of restricting local government's ability to find solutions we need legislation that answers the call of the people in the streets. People only protest when they are being abused, oppressed, marginalized or violated. It's time the House Justice Appropriations Subcommittee address the calls of Florida voters and people who cared enough to peacefully assemble. We need to face the issues head on and answer to the humanity and dignity of working class, black, brown, and immigrant families in Florida who are suffering with workable policies that help the state grow and prosper.

If this legislation passes I will be letting people know that they should not travel in Florida, they should not move to Florida, they should not visit Florida, because our government does not support them and keep them safe. Public health and the economy should be your number one priority. Please OPPOSE HB1 and support legislation that provides real solutions to the real problems Floridians face today.

Subject: Represent us! Your constituents opposite HB1 and Protect Floridian's First Amendment Rights

Natalie Brown,

Polls are clear your constituents overwhelmingly OPPOSE HB1. We request you represent Floridians at the House Justice Appropriations meeting to stop HB 1 at the hearing or as soon as possible. We are outraged that this legislation even got assigned to a public hearing must less that it has been fast-tracked through the House on party lines. Florida currently faces the worst economic and public health crisis in history and instead of working to find solutions HB1 criminalizes free speech, peaceful assembly and dissent through unconstitutional language that is targeted at silencing Black voices demanding basic human rights, equality, and fair treatment by law enforcement.

Instead of addressing the horrendous housing crisis, the broken unemployment system, the failing healthcare system, the disorganized and chaotic education system, AND the rising number of deaths, poverty, job loss and sickness in Florida HB1 repackages legislation put forward by Governor DeSantis as a "response to the violent insurrectionist mobs" that attempted a coup on the nation's Capitol. This language is a smokescreen for the true intent of the bill which is to circumvent the mess that Florida has as a consequence of the pandemic and lack of support for Florida's poverty impacted and oppressed. I am not fooled by this. This is the same legislation it was back in September with the same purpose - to limit the basic civil rights of BLM protestors that is guaranteed to all people under the US Constitution.

I believe that HB1 is being used to distract media and organizers from focusing on the real problem: lack of support for those in need across the state. How dare the Governor and the Florida Legislature waste taxpayer time and money on proposing solutions to a made up problem. Section 870 of the Florida Statute already criminalizes riots, unlawful assemblies, and looting but this legislation would actually make it legal for motorists who strike protestors with their vehicle, even if the incident results in someone's death. ## Santander Consumer USA to bring 875 Jobs to Pasco County of converted retail space in Pasco County.*

PASCO COUNTY, FLORIDA (December 8, 2020) — The Pasco Economic Development Council (Pasco EDC) is pleased to welcome Santander Consumer USA Inc. (Santander) to the county. Santander is investing a minimum of $12 million of the approximate $22 million in tenant improvements and business personal property to upgrade and convert existing retail space off State Road 54 near the Suncoast Parkway. The company will create 875 new to Florida jobs over the next five years, with salaries exceeding 115% of the average county wage.

"I am thrilled to welcome Santander to Pasco County and am looking forward to all of the great jobs they are bringing," said Pasco County Commissioner Kathryn Starkey. "This is a huge economic development win and I am happy we are able to offer local incentives to assist in recruitment."

Santander is a public, full-service, consumer finance company focused on vehicle finance and third-party servicing. The company is headquartered in Dallas, Texas, and has additional locations in Texas, Arizona, Colorado and California. The company manages accounts for more than three million customers across all credit profiles.

"We are excited to expand our presence in Florida – a state with a favorable business environment where people are familiar with the Santander brand," said Mahesh Aditya, Santander Consumer President and CEO. "The Tampa Bay area is rich in talent, particularly in the customer service sector, and we look forward to offering future employees a dynamic and progressive place to grow their careers."

Santander plans to grow its financial services customer contact operations with the development of a modern and efficient site that can accommodate future expansion. Factors the company considered when choosing their new location relied heavily on a strong employment base, viability of the labor market, recruiting opportunities, cost of living, and local incentives that can accommodate the large project.

“Santander is an excellent addition to the Business and Professional Services industry in Pasco,” said Bill Cronin, President/CEO, Pasco EDC. “Not only are they making a significant investment in the county, but they also plan to upfit and modernize a prominent building that has been empty for years.”

Subject: SB 194: Crimes Evidencing Prejudice

Dear Senators,

Countering hate motivated violence such as the 2018 attack at a Tallahassee yoga studio is not a Democratic or Republican value, but an American value. To that end, I have introduced Senate Bill 194: Crimes Evidencing Prejudice, which would strengthen our state's hate crime laws.

Under current Florida law - §§ 775.085 and 775.083 - a hate crime cannot be charged if person is targeted for a criminal act because of physical disability, gender or gender identity. So, had the perpetrator of the Tallahassee yoga studio attack lived, he could not be charged with a gender-based hate crime under Florida law. Also, an individual who assaults a person because he or she is blind, paralyzed or transgender could not be charged with a hate crime.

Furthermore, the hate crime law does not cover "association with" or "mixed-motive" hate crimes. As a result, an individual cannot be charged with a hate crime where for example a person is victimized for being at a bar or restaurant with African American or Hispanic friends. And a person involved in fender-bender who assaults the other driver while yelling racial epithets and angry remarks about the accident at him or her, cannot not be charged with a hate crime.

SB 194 would fix these critical gaps in the hate crime law by (1) expanding its definition of disability to cover physical disabilities; (2) adding the categories of gender and gender identity; and (3) covering association with and mixed-motive hate crimes.

Florida's hate crime law is more than just a vehicle for increasing sentences by reclassifying charges for criminals who target victims based on race, religion, sexual orientation or other personal characteristics. It also provides a way for our State to recognize that these crimes strike special fear within victimized groups, fragment communities, and tear at the very fabric of our democratic way of life.

Every major police organization in the country has supported hate crime laws — because they understand the special impact of these crimes. The FBI has been collecting hate crime data from the 18,000 police agencies across the country since 1990. According to the latest FBI hate crimes data, 2019 set a 10-year high for hate crimes nationally.

While Florida's numbers dropped to 111 from 141 in 2018, these numbers, do not tell the whole story because Florida has an underreporting problem. In fact, New York and Texas, which have approximately the same population size as Florida, reported 611 and 456 hate crimes in 2019. Hate crimes in general are underreported. While the FBI's 2019 national figure of 7,120 hate crimes is a 10-year high, the U.S. Department of Justice estimates that nationally 250,000 non-fatal hate crimes occur annually. This issue is more pronounced in Florida. For 2019, the number of Florida law enforcement agencies reporting one or more hate crimes to the FBI was 50% lower than the national average. Only 51 out of 638 Florida agencies reported hate crimes. Florida's statutory exclusion of hate crimes committed because of physical disability, gender, gender identity, as well as "association with" or "mixed motive" hate crimes, most likely contributes to this underreporting.

We all understand that Americans are free to believe and say whatever they want. Hate crime laws, however, only punish criminal acts, such as aggravated assault or vandalism. Just as in any criminal case, hate crime laws require bias motive to be proven beyond a reasonable doubt with admissible evidence. Indeed, the Florida Supreme Court in 1994 upheld the State's current hate crime law against a First Amendment challenge.

It would be naïve to think that racism and bigotry can be legislated away, but a strong and inclusive hate crime law is essential to deterring and preventing these crimes. When hate crimes are committed, hate crime charges and condemnation by public officials can bring a measure of dignity and closure to victims, as well as the victims' communities.

All Floridians deserve the full protection of our State's hate crime law. The Florida Senate should come together to send a resounding message against bias-motivated crimes. I therefore urge you to co-sponsor SB 194: Crimes Evidencing Prejudice.

SPECIAL MASTER'S FINAL REPORT

THIS IS A CONTESTED EXCESS JUDGMENT CLAIM FOR $312,500 BASED ON A JURY AWARD FOR THE CLAIMANT REGINALD JACKSON AND AGAINST THE CITY OF LAKE LAND FOR INJURIES SUSTAINED BY THE CLAIMANT WHEN HE WAS SHOT IN THE NECK BY A LAKE LAND POLICE OFFICER AFTER A TRAFFIC STOP.

FINDINGS OF FACT:

On October 18, 2001, around midnight, Reginald Jackson, then 24 years old, was driving home on Memorial Boulevard in Lakeland after picking up his girlfriend's 18-month-old brother from a relative's house. Officer Michael Cochran of the Lakeland Police Department was behind Jackson in a marked patrol car. Officer Cochran entered Jackson's tag number in his computer which indicated that there was a discrepancy. Officer Cochran turned on his flashing lights and pulled Jackson over. Officer Cochran asked Jackson for his license and vehicle registration. When Jackson's registration looked in order, Officer Cochran returned to his patrol car and ran the tag number again. There was no problem with Jackson's vehicle tag. Officer Cochran realized that he had initially entered the wrong tag number.

However, Officer Cochran had observed that Jackson had a child in the front passenger seat who was not in a child car seat. Officer Cochran proceeded to write Jackson a citation for transporting a child without a car seat. He told Jackson that Jackson could not drive home without a car seat and would have to get someone to bring a car seat for the child. Jackson asked Officer Cochran if he could follow the officer to Jackson's home, which was nearby, but Officer Cochran declined. Officer Cochran then drove away.

Jackson tried to use a pay phone close to where his car had been pulled over, but the phone was not working. Jackson saw another pay phone in the parking lot of a lounge a block away, so he got back into his car and drove to the lounge. Meanwhile, Officer Cochran had lingered nearby in an alleyway, apparently to observe Jackson because Officer Cochran suspected that Jackson would not obey the instruction not to drive anywhere unless the child was in a car seat. When Officer Cochran saw Jackson drive away, he immediately followed Jackson and pulled into the parking lot of the lounge with the intent to arrest Jackson.

Officer Cochran exited his patrol car and approached Jackson, who was at or near the pay phone, telling Jackson that he was under arrest. Jackson replied that he was just using the pay phone and he walked quickly to his car, got in, started it up, backed up a short distance, and then put the vehicle in "drive" with the intent to drive away. Jackson explained his reaction as caused by his being startled and confused. It was also asserted by his attorneys that, because Jackson is an African American and Officer Cochran is white, Jackson believed that Officer Cochran was acting out of racism. Jackson did not say that he feared he would be physically harmed by Officer Cochran.

Officer Cochran drew his handgun and positioned himself in front of Jackson's car, on the driver's side, with his body to the side of the front right tire and his left hand on the fender of the car. As Jackson slowly moved the car forward, Officer Cochran was yelling for Jackson to "stop or I'll shoot." Officer Cochran then shot through the windshield, striking Jackson in the neck. The bullet passed through Jackson's neck and came out of his back. The shot fired by Officer Cochran was reasonably calculated to kill Jackson. Jackson momentarily lost consciousness and his car continued forward and crossed all lanes of Memorial Boulevard. Jackson regained consciousness in time to apply the brakes and prevent the car from crashing into a storefront.

The written policies of the Lakeland Police Department regarding the use of firearms by police officers state that their use “shall be limited to those situations in which lethal defensive action is warranted,” and firearms are not to be drawn or displayed unless there is a “reasonable suspicion of a threat of death or great bodily harm to an officer or another person.”

Officer Cochran claimed that he feared for his life because he believed Jackson was attempting to run him over with the car. The more persuasive evidence indicates that, if Officer Cochran feared for his life, it was an unreasonable fear. The car was rolling forward slowly. The evidence is ambiguous as to whether Officer Cochran was positioned to the side of the car or slightly in front of the car. However, even if he was positioned slightly in front of the car, the more persuasive evidence indicates he could have side-stepped or dodged the car by moving to his right. His decision to end the “threat” by shooting to kill Jackson was not a reasonable act. Although Jackson’s actions in returning to his car and beginning to drive away indicated that he was going to resist arrest and flee, his actions did not give rise to a reasonable belief that he intended to kill or cause serious bodily harm to Officer Cochran.

The gunshot wound left Jackson with a permanent brachial plexus injury which is an injury to nerves that control shoulder, arm, and hand movements. There is no surgery or treatment that can repair the damage. As a result of the injury, Jackson has intermittent pain, numbness, or tingling in his right arm and hand. His right arm is also weaker.

LITIGATION HISTORY:

Jackson filed a lawsuit in 2005 against the City in the circuit court for Polk County. Following a three-day trial, the jury determined that the City was 75 percent at fault and Jackson was 25 percent at fault. The jury verdict was $550,000. Applying the 75/25 split, the circuit court issued a final judgment against the City for $412,500. The City paid the sovereign immunity limit of $100,000, leaving a balance of $312,500 to seek through a claim bill.

CLAIMANT'S POSITION: Officer Cochran was negligent in the use of his firearm and the jury award is fair and reasonable.

THE CITY'S POSITION: Officer Cochran's actions were reasonable under the circumstances. Jackson is solely responsible for his injury.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW: The claim bill hearing was a de novo proceeding for the purpose of determining, based on the evidence presented to the Special Master, whether the City is liable in negligence for the injuries suffered by Jackson and, if so, whether the amount of the claim is reasonable.

It was claimed that Officer Cochran violated Police Department policy when he first drew his firearm. However, because Jackson quickly returned to his car when he was told he was under arrest, Jackson created a reasonable suspicion in the mind of Officer Cochran that Jackson might be going to get a weapon. Therefore, Officer Cochran did not violate Police Department policy when he drew his firearm. Thereafter, however, it was apparent to Officer Cochran that Jackson had not returned to the car to get a weapon and that Jackson did not have a weapon. Officer Cochran was not justified in shooting Jackson for resisting and fleeing from an attempted arrest for transporting a child without a car seat. See Light v. State, 796 So. 2d 610 (Fla. 2d DCA 2001)(police officers had no authority to use deadly force to arrest a person who had committed only a misdemeanor).

To state a claim for negligence under Florida law, a plaintiff must allege that the defendant owed the plaintiff a duty of care, that the defendant breached the duty, and that the breach caused the plaintiff to suffer damages. Paterson v. Deeb, 472 So. 2d 1210, 1214 (Fla. 1985).

Although the decision to make an arrest is a discretionary governmental function which does not give rise to a duty of care that can be breached, the actions of law enforcement officers in conducting an arrest can create a duty to exercise reasonable care. See, generally, Wallace v. Dean, 3 So. 3d 1035 (Fla. 2009). In Lewis v. City of St. Petersburg, 260 F. 3d 1260 (11th Cir. 2001), it was held that when a police officer draws his or her firearm, the officer owes a duty to act with reasonable care to all persons that are within the zone of risk associated with the discharge of the firearm. The court stated that Florida law clearly recognizes a cause of action for the negligent handling of a firearm and the negligent decision to use a firearm.

In City of Miami v. Sanders, 672 So. 2d 46 (Fla. 3d DCA 1996), the appellate court reversed the trial court's judgment for the plaintiff for negligent use of excessive force by a police officer during an arrest, stating that "there is no such thing as a negligent commission of an intentional tort." The court stated that the proper action would be for the intentional tort of battery in which the analysis would focus on whether the force used was reasonable under the circumstances. The court went on to say that there can be a distinct cause of action for negligence brought against a police officer separate from the claim of excessive force, but "the negligence component must pertain to something other than the actual application of force during the course of the arrest." Id., at 48.

Ansley v. Heinrich, 925 F. 2d 1339 (11th Cir. 1991) involved several claims against two deputy sheriffs for shooting a man who was carrying a handgun, but had not been observed to have committed a crime. The appellate court did not address the negligence claim, but mentioned that the trial court entered a judgment against the Hillsborough County Sheriff for negligence. Mazzilli v. Doud, 485 So. 2d 477 (Fla. 3d DCA 1986) involved the review of a trial court's judgment against the City of Hialeah for assault and battery and negligence by a Hialeah police officer who shot a federal drug enforcement officer, believing that the federal officer was a felon. The appellate court found "ample evidence" to support the jury's conclusion that the police officer was negligent. These cases do not remove all doubt about the proper application of the law of negligence to a law enforcement officer's use of his or her firearm, but these cases along with the Jackson case make three known cases where a judgment of negligence was entered. Accordingly, my recommendation is based on the premise that negligence is a proper cause of action.

Jackson was within the zone of risk created when Officer Cochran drew his weapon and, therefore, Officer Cochran owed Jackson a duty to act with reasonable care. Officer Cochran did not act with reasonable care when he fired his weapon. Contributing to the finding that Officer Cochran did not act with reasonable care is the fact that the discharge of his firearm endangered the life of the child sitting next to Jackson. Officer Cochran breached his duty to Jackson and the breach was the proximate cause of Jackson's injuries. Officer Cochran was acting within the course and scope of his employment at the time of the incident. Therefore, the City, as his employer, is be liable for Officer Cochran's negligence and the damages that resulted.

The jury award is reasonable for the injuries that Jackson suffered.

ATTORNEY'S FEES AND LOBBYIST'S FEES:

In compliance with s. 768.28(8), F.S. Jackson's attorneys agreed to limit their fees to 25 percent of any amount awarded by the Legislature. They have not acknowledged the requirement of the claim bill that costs and lobbyist's fees be included in the 25 percent figure.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY:

This is the first claim bill filed for Reginald Jackson.

RECOMMENDATION:

For the reasons set forth above, I recommend that Senate Bill 66 (2010) be reported FAVORABLY.

Respectfully submitted,

Bram D. E. Canter
Senate Special Master

Hon. Danny Burgess,

I am writing you today on behalf of the over 3,000 Floridians that IATSE Local 631 represents. We are a trade union that represents the hard working Floridians that work behind the scenes in Entertainment, on experiences that are uniquely Floridian products. Be that the trade show, convention, theme park, concerts, theatre, movie, or television industries. When we have disputes we always try to follow every law in whatever actions we take including when we peacefully protest.

I have now read all of HB1, and while I like the anti-doxing provisions, I have serious concerns about the rest of SB 484/HB1, and the impact that it could have if outside agitators commit crimes, or if one impassioned person crosses the line. Under what I have read in HB1 those actions could create legal jeopardy for those that have done nothing other than raise their voice peacefully, because it could be declared an unlawful assembly.

This could create an issue were someone doing nothing more than marching, or holding a sign could be arrested and held without bail because of "no release until first appearance" holding them longer than what is currently required by law. Under this bill, anyone peacefully protesting should be ready to spend a few days in jail before being able to bail out, even if they are swept up for not doing anything wrong. This approach would lead to Dr. King being arrested for marching in a Selma like march if it happened today. It would lead to Cesar Chavez being held without bail for speaking up for farm workers. It would lead to myself being arrested for peaceful protesting, to help 48,000 Disney World Workers a living wage just a few years ago. (There was a protest where we were accused of blocking traffic, even as most protesters crossed with the lights in the cross walks)

And that is before we allow counter-protester to escape civil liability for injuring or even killing a protestor with their car, or a gun, or any other means. This is just a few of the concerns I have with the dangerous bill, but is not a full accounting, but in respect for your, and your staffs time I will keep this brief.

This is a bad Bill, this is a bad law, and will hurt Floridians. This is not about looting or rioting, this bill looks like, to this worker's rights advocate, as an attempt to scare Floridians into shutting up and being quiet. I hope that is not the goal of this bill, but that is how this reads to me and many others.

In Solidarity,

Paul Cox

Senator---love your bill. I fully support the bill and have some ideas to make it stronger. Below are some initial thoughts:

-After the bill becomes law it will almost certainly get challenged in Court. For that reason--you should add a severability clause.

-Would love to see a citizen standing provision---for citizens of the state and members of historical preservation organizations. Right now ANTIFA will damage or tear down a monument and no one does anything about it. When the historical preservation groups try to file suit---it is always dismissed for lack of standing.

Here's some language to consider:

A public entity owning a monument, any resident of this state, or an entity whose purpose is historic preservation, shall have standing to seek enforcement of this Act through civil action in the circuit court in the county in which a memorial which has been damaged, defaced, destroyed or removed is located.

If the State of Florida or a political subdivision of the state accepts, or has accepted, the donation of a memorial the donor of the monument, and any organization of the state organized for the purpose of historic preservation, shall have a continuing interest in the monument and shall have standing to bring a cause of action to protect and preserve the donated monument.

Waiver of Sovereign Immunity-Notwithstanding the provisions of s.768.28 sovereign immunity is waived by the state and its subdivisions for purposes of permitting a victim of a crime resulting from a violent or disorderly assembly to file an action for damages against any subdivision of the state when that subdivision was grossly negligent in failing to protect persons and property from harm.

-It would be great if the Secretary of State had the ability to pull back funding or remove a historic district designation if a local government removes historic monuments. Here's some possible language:

Florida Statute 265.705 is amended to read:

Section 7. A. State policy relative to historical properties.—The rich and unique heritage of historical properties in this state, representing more than 10,000 years of human presence, is an important legacy to be valued and conserved for present and future generations. The destruction of these nonrenewable historical resources will engender a significant loss to the state's quality of life, economy, and cultural environment. It is therefore declared to be state policy to provide leadership in the preservation of the state's historical resources and to administer state-owned or state-controlled historical resources in a spirit of stewardship and trusteeship, and accordingly the Secretary of State is hereby authorized to take such action necessary or appropriate to protect and preserve the historical resources of the state, including but not limited to criminal referrals to the Attorney General of Florida

B. The Secretary of State shall have authority to de-certify a Historic District in the State of Florida when a historic resource is removed from a Historic District and make reduce or eliminate funding to any historic district in the state that has removed any historic resource that served as the basis for the creation of the Historic District.

C. The Secretary of State shall have standing to pursue any legal action necessary to protect and preserve historic property or historic resources in this state as defined in s. 265.7025 (4).

-How about appointing a Domestic Terrorism Task Force. It would provide an opportunity to really dive into the tactics being used by Anitifa and others to intimidate local elected officials and coerce them into removing historical monuments. You could have hearings across the state all summer and really bring to light some of the tactics used by ANTIFA and other extreme leftists groups (I have some pictures). One thing they do is to arrive in a large group to protest a monument---and threaten to keep coming back every week--forcing a local government to spend money they don't have on additional security.

-On line 441 you may want to consider removing the phrase "without consent of the owner thereof" ....it is often difficult to determine who actually owns some of the historical monuments.

-You may want to look at Chapter 876 "Criminal Anarchy, Treason, and Other Crimes Against Public Order"....there are a number of provisions that could easily be amended to add some teeth to the bill.

Please consider me a resource and sounding board. This is an important piece of legislation and I would like to help you get it across the finish line.

Hi Natalie! Hope you are doing well and had a good weekend and safe trip up to TLH. I have reached out to Sen. Burgess today, but while he was in committee. Wanted to get this to you quickly in light that the bill has been placed on the agenda for next week.

I know I mentioned late last week that I had some proposed language that would fit in SB 494 since there has not been a successful vehicle in the last many years and this is not something that necessitates a standalone piece of legislation. The language we would want to include would just add on to the end of where the current bill drops off and would be as simple as the below:

(2) In order to address any unforeseen allergic reaction, a pharmacist may administer an appropriate weight-based dosage of epinephrine using an autoinjector delivery system within the framework of an established protocol under a supervising physician licensed under chapter 458 or chapter 459.

This would just address the problem that sometimes there is too much epinephrine utilized for infants, toddlers and small children and ensure that the appropriate weight-based dosage would be provided. This is even more important given the instances of anaphylaxis following COVID-19 vaccines.

Please let me know your thoughts.

Best,

Greg

Let me be clear:

One of the most important things to me as a State Senator is listening and advocating on behalf of my constituents in Tallahassee. Over the last several months there have been a countless amount of individuals who have reached out to my office with concerns over their Facebook and Twitter accounts. Many of them have been banned without notice and are not able to get ahold of anyone at Facebook or Twitter to resolve their issues. My office attempted, on their behalf, to get to the bottom of their claims but were unsuccessful. These social media companies are monopolies, holding onto millions and millions of American's intellectual property free of charge. They also seem to be selectively enforcing their Terms of Service agreements by moderating certain content and not others. As the bill stands now, we would only be requiring these companies to provide notification to the user as to why they were banned. My intent with this bill is to add components of enforcement, limitations on censorship, and a pathway for users who were wrongly suspended or banned to gain access to their account again. I did not include these ideas in the first draft because I wholeheartedly believe in the committee process and would like all of my colleagues, on both sides of the aisle, to have a say in this matter.

Senator Danny Burgess moves to protect Floridians' First Amendment Rights

Tallahassee, FL - Yesterday's events regarding Twitter's decision to permanently ban the President of the United States and Apple threatening to remove the conservative-leaning application known as Parler, has prompted Senator Danny Burgess (R-Zephyrhills) to file landmark legislation to protect Floridians from this dangerous precedent.

The First Amendment states that "Congress shall make no law...prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech..." "It seems to me that the government explicitly has granted Facebook, Twitter, and others immunity under federal law. As publishers of third-party content, they should not be allowed to discriminate based on content and ban individuals just because they do not agree with their viewpoint." says Senator Burgess.

This bill, as it stands, would require social media websites to provide electronic notice to a user who has been disabled or suspended, within 30 days, and explain why this user was punished. Senator Burgess fully intends to amend this legislation to include social media censorship and rely on the committee process to evaluate its merits.

"I just filed the Combating Public Disorder bill that creates a criminal offense for individuals who cyber intimidate others online. This bill goes a step further by signaling to social media websites that regardless of a person's background, political history, religion, race, gender, or any other identifying measure, Twitter and Facebook cannot be the sole judge, jury, and executioner on American's First Amendment rights. For better or for worse, social media has become a major part of our everyday life and society. These unilateral actions set a terrifying precedent that must be addressed appropriately." says Senator Burgess.

Subject: SB 54 - Motor Vehicle Insurance

Dear Senator Burgess,

I wanted to circle back with you to discuss SB 54 – Motor Vehicle Insurance. We have discussed this legislation in the past and some of the concerns that the Florida Orthopaedic Society has with eliminating PIP without providing patients with clarity over what insurance coverage will cover any harm they may do to themselves and unambiguous language that will make it clear that health insurance will become the primary payer of care rendered in the event of an automobile accident.

Our specific concerns with the current bill are as follows:

1. We understand the argument that for drivers that have both health insurance and PIP, they are carrying duplicative coverage. But we also understand there are a significant number of Floridians that are uninsured because their employers do not offer them coverage and they are priced out of the health insurance market. The massive loss of jobs due to COVID has made this situation even worse. For those uninsured, the Florida no-fault coverage is their only health insurance coverage. Though the bill has a mandatory “offering” of med pay, we would encourage mandatory election of such coverage for those drivers that cannot provide proof of health insurance coverage when purchasing their auto policy. This would create a small risk pool of uninsured patients that are required to pay into Med Pay Coverage which should have a positive impact on rates with more people paying into that pool, rather than just relying on those that voluntarily choose to purchase the additional med pay. We support a strict definition of what is covered in that mandatory Med Pay coverage to be limited to only Emergency Care as defined in the Statutes. We strongly believe there will be a significant impact on emergency physicians and uninsured Floridians if there is no mandated coverage to pay for emergency care if the motorist cannot provide prove of health insurance.
2. It is current practice for health insurance carriers to deny claims that are related to automobile accidents. That is why our members routinely have to ask if an injury the patient has sustained is related to an auto accident or workers compensation. When other insurance products may be responsible, the health insurance carriers currently deny the claim. We would strongly encourage you to include clear language that establishes that health insurance is the primary payer for auto injuries and provides a process for coordination of benefits after the fact with an Auto Insurance Carrier that is ultimately found responsible for the claim. This will ensure timely access to care and treatment for injured motorists and a process for the health insurance carrier to be made whole for the payment of any treatment that was the responsibility of the auto carrier.
3. Finally, with more patients needing to utilize their health insurance to receive treatment for auto accidents in emergency rooms and outside of their usual primary care and specialist networks, physicians and insurance carriers will need a venue to address any out-of-network payment disputes that will arise. It would help to make it clear that any payment dispute between the health insurer, auto carrier, and physician, the appropriate venue for resolution is the Provider and Health Plan Dispute Resolution Program currently in statute and housed at AHCA. That dispute resolution process was last reviewed when the state addressed Surprise Medical Billing. We believe the need to use that process will increase as health insurance becomes primary for more auto related care. We do need to fix that Dispute Resolution Process to include mandatory participation from the insurance carriers as well as currently their participation is optional and we have seen many refuse to participate.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to provide these three concerns that we have with the current legislative proposal. We hope to work with you on your legislation as it moves through the process so we achieve clarity for all stakeholders and make sure patients are able to access care in a timely manner.

Sincerely,

by Senator Danny Burgess

Repealing PIP, requiring BI coverage, and creating a new framework for bad faith actions

Talking Points:

- Senate Bill 54 transforms ineffective and outdated insurance practices to result in a more stable insurance market and better outcomes for all insured Floridians.
- Florida is one of only two states that does not currently require drivers to carry liability coverage that immediately kicks in if they cause bodily injury or death.
- This legislation repeals Florida's No-Fault Law and instead enacts a bodily injury liability system, providing fairness to insured drivers and placing liability on the at-fault party in an accident.
- Florida's No-Fault Law, which requires Personal Injury Protection (PIP), has failed to substantially reduce litigation.
- For everyone's protection, drivers must be insured at sufficient levels. The repeal of PIP will allow Floridians to purchase better coverage.
- Enacting Senate Bill 54 will ensure more significant bodily injury liability coverage for Floridians and require insurance companies to offer first party medical coverage (MedPay) of $5,000 or $10,000 to all drivers.
- Senate Bill 54 also reforms bad faith actions in order to reduce litigation by providing a set of standards that will govern conduct of both parties during the claims handling process.
- This legislation creates a framework to improve the claims handling process and lead to more favorable conclusions for both the insured and insurance company.
- Allowing insurers to conduct settlement negotiations that are more in line with insurer's evaluation of the claim can lead to less overall costs.
- Senate Bill 54 aims to lower the number of uninsured and underinsured drivers and provide a greater safety net in the event of an accident.

Bill Summary:

Repeal Personal Injury Protection (PIP) and Mandate Bodily Injury (BI) Coverage

- Repeals the Florida's No-Fault Law, which requires every owner and registrant of a motor vehicle in this state to maintain PIP coverage.
- Enacts financial responsibility requirements for liability for motor vehicle ownership or operation, as follows:
  - For bodily injury (BI) or death of one person in any one crash, $25,000, and;
  - Subject to that limit for one person, $50,000 for BI or death of two or more people in any one crash.
  - Retains the existing $10,000 financial responsibility requirement for property damage.
  - Revises required coverage amounts for garage liability and commercial motor vehicle insurance, and increases the cash deposit amount required for a certificate of self-insurance establishing financial responsibility for owners and operators of motor vehicles that are not for-hire vehicles.
  - Eliminates limitations on recovering pain and suffering damages from PIP, which currently require bodily injury that causes death or significant and permanent injury.

Mandate the Offer of Medical Payments Coverage (MedPay)

- Requires insurers to offer MedPay with limits of $5,000 or $10,000 to cover medical expenses of the insured.
  - Insurers may also offer other policy limits that exceed $5,000.
  - Insurers may offer deductibles of up to $500.
- Requires insurers to reserve $5,000 of MedPay to pay physicians or dentists who provide emergency services and care or who provide hospital inpatient care.

Create a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Claims

- Creates a new framework to govern all bad faith claims for failure to settle related to motor vehicle insurance.
- Requires insurers to follow claims handling best practices standards based on long-established good faith duties related to claim handling, claim investigation, defense of the insured, and settlement negotiations.

- Establishes that it is a condition precedent to bringing a third-party bad faith action not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., that the claimant serve a demand for settlement. The demand must:
  - Identify the date and location of the loss, the claimant, and insured.
  - State the legal and factual basis of the claim.
  - Detail the claimant’s injuries, medical treatment, and amount of current and reasonably anticipated future damages.
  - Demand a settlement amount, which may not exceed their policy limit.
  - Release, if accepted, the insured from any further liability.
  - Not provide conditions on the settlement other than payment of demand and ability of the claimant to take an examination under oath of the insured.
- Allows the third-party bad faith claimant to condition the demand for settlement on taking a 2-hour examination under oath (EUO) of the insured limited to discovering recoverable assets.
- The claimant may withdraw the settlement demand after the EUO.
- If the insured refuses to submit to the EUO, they may tender policy limits without obtaining a release of the insured and may not be held liable if there is an excess judgment against the insured.
- Provides a safe harbor to the insurer in third-party bad faith action not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., providing that an insurer is not liable for bad faith if it tenders policy limits within 30 days of receiving a settlement demand.
- Requires the trier of fact to consider certain actions of the insurer such as compliance with best practices.
- Prohibits punitive damages in a bad faith failure to settle action.

Allow Named Driver Exclusions

- Authorizes the exclusion of a specifically named individual from specified insurance coverages under a private passenger motor vehicle policy, with the written consent of the policyholder.

Senator Burgess Files Legislation to Repeal Florida's Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law

Tallahassee—State Senator Danny Burgess (R-Zephyrhills) today filed Senate Bill 54, Motor Vehicle Insurance. The legislation repeals Florida's current Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law, which requires drivers to carry personal injury protection coverage, instead requiring that drivers carry bodily injury liability coverage. The bill also creates a new framework to govern motor vehicle insurance claims for bad faith failure to settle.

"Florida is one of only two states in the country that does not currently require drivers to carry liability coverage that would immediately kick in if they cause the bodily injury or death of another person while operating a motor vehicle," said Senate President Wilton Simpson (R-Trilby). "PIP coverage is outdated and doesn't protect consumers. It's the right time for Florida to move to mandatory coverage for bodily injury liability."

"Replacing our no-fault system with a bodily injury liability system more appropriately places liability where it should be – with the party that caused the accident," said Senator Burgess. "Additionally, the bill creates a new framework for handling bad faith litigation that provides a clear set of standards to govern the conduct of both parties in the claims handling process, which we believe will lead to better outcomes for both insured Floridians and their insurance companies."

Repeals No-Fault, Requires Bodily Injury Liability Coverage

SB 54 repeals the Florida Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law (No-Fault Law), which requires every owner and registrant of a motor vehicle in this state to maintain Personal Injury Protection (PIP) coverage. The bill enacts financial responsibility requirements for liability for motor vehicle ownership or operation, as follows:

- For bodily injury (BI) or death of one person in any one crash, $25,000, and
- Subject to that limit for one person, $50,000 for BI or death of two or more people in any one crash.
- Retains the existing $10,000 financial responsibility requirement for property damage.
- Revises required coverage amounts for garage liability and commercial motor vehicle insurance, and increases the cash deposit amount required for a certificate of self-insurance establishing financial responsibility for owners and operators of motor vehicles that are not for-hire vehicles.
- Repealing the No-Fault Law eliminates the limitations on recovering pain and suffering damages from PIP insureds, which currently require bodily injury that causes death or significant and permanent injury.

Requires Medical Payments Coverage

SB 54 requires insurers to offer medical payments coverage (MedPay) with limits of $5,000 or $10,000 to cover medical expenses of the insured. Insurers may also offer other policy limits that exceed $5,000, and may offer deductibles of up to $500. The bill requires that insurers must reserve $5,000 of MedPay benefits for 30 days to pay physicians or dentists who provide emergency services and care or who provide hospital inpatient care.

Creates a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions

SB 54 creates a new framework to govern all bad faith claims for failure to settle related to motor vehicle insurance. The bill requires insurers to follow claims handling best practices standards based on long-established good faith duties related to claim handling, claim investigation, defense of the insured, and settlement negotiations.

The bill establishes that it is a condition precedent to bringing a third-party bad faith action not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., that the claimant serve a demand for settlement. The demand must:

- Identify the date and location of the loss, the claimant, and insured.
- State the legal and factual basis of the claim.
- Detail the claimant's injuries, medical treatment, and the amount of current and reasonably anticipated future damages.
- Demand a settlement amount, which may not exceed the insured's policy limit.
- Release, if accepted, the insured from any further liability.
- Not provide conditions on the settlement other than payment of the demand and the ability of the claimant to take an examination under oath of the insured.

The bill allows the third-party bad faith claimant to condition the demand for settlement on taking a two hour examination under oath (EUO) of the insured limited to discovering recoverable assets. The bad faith claimant may withdraw the demand for settlement after the EUO. If the insured refuses to submit to the EUO, the insurer may tender policy limits without obtaining a release of the insured and may not be held liable if there is an excess judgment against the insured.

The bill provides that in a third-party action for bad faith failure to settle not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., the insurer is not liable for bad faith if the insurer tenders policy limits within 30 days of receiving a demand for settlement.

Allows for Named Driver Exclusions

SB 54 authorizes the exclusion of a specifically named individual from specified insurance coverages under a private passenger motor vehicle policy, with the written consent of the policyholder.

Subject: STOP HB1/Protect First Amendment Rights

Meagan Hebel,

I am writing to you to ask you to please please STOP/OPPOSE HB1 at the House Justice Appropriations meeting when it is scheduled for a hearing. I am outraged that this legislation even got assigned to a public hearing must less that it has been fast-tracked through the House on party lines. Florida currently faces the worst economic and public health crisis in history and instead of working to find solutions HB1 criminalizes free speech, peaceful assembly and dissent through unconstitutional language that is targeted at silencing Black voices demanding basic human rights, equality, and fair treatment by law enforcement.

Instead of addressing the horrendous housing crisis, the broken unemployment system, the failing healthcare system, the disorganized and chaotic education system, AND the rising number of deaths, poverty, job loss and sickness in Florida HB1 repackages legislation put forward by Governor DeSantis as a "response to the violent insurrectionist mobs" that attempted a coup on the nation's Capitol. This language is a smokescreen for the true intent of the bill which is to circumvent the mess that Florida has as a consequence of the pandemic and lack of support for Florida's poverty impacted and oppressed. I am not fooled by this. This is the same legislation it was back in September with the same purpose - to limit the basic civil rights of BLM protestors that is guaranteed to all people under the US Constitution.

I believe that HB1 is being used to distract media and organizers from focusing on the real problem: lack of support for those in need across the state. How dare the Governor and the Florida Legislature waste taxpayer time and money on proposing solutions to a made up problem. Section 870 of the Florida Statute already criminalizes riots, unlawful assemblies, and looting but this legislation would actually make it legal for motorists who strike protestors with their vehicle, even if the incident results in someone's death. It limits people's ability to apply to Florida's already broken unemployment system if they have been convicted under the proposed legislation and allows victims of violent crimes to recover civil damages from a local government that is deems responsible for grossly negligent "policing" during a "riot". Meanwhile, the Florida Legislature is fast-tracking HB7/SB72 to create COVID19 liability immunity for the real victims of negligence by businesses, government agencies, schools, and religious organizations who have caused the spread of COVID19.

The Executive Director of the ACLU of Florida, Micah Kubic, stated that "This (bill) is not an attempt to make our communities safer. This proposed legislation by DeSantis is nothing more than a campaign political stunt. Now, it is being disguised as a response to the failed violent coup at the US Capitol. And, it is just as unconstitutional."

A statewide survey of Florida voters put out after the attack by Donald Trump's supporters on the US Capitol suggested a lack of support for HB1 and Governor DeSantis' push to amp up criminal penalties for "disorderly" protests. Ninety-percent of those asked stated their support for "protecting our constitutional right to free assembly and free speech by legally protesting without fear of criminal charges". Seventy-one percent of Democrats and 74% of Republicans deemed the issue a top priority. Eighty percent of respondents said they were more likely to support a legislator who voted to protect that priority, and 56% were "much more likely". On the other hand, 83% of respondents thought that it was important to strengthen unemployment protections for people who lost their jobs because of COVID-19, 63% said that this was "very important". (1)

Finally, this legislation also creates a preemptive attack on local municipalities that might want to "defund" the police and put their money towards more humanitarian initiatives to provide real solutions to small business and economic crises caused by the pandemic. Instead of restricting local government's ability to find solutions we need legislation that answers the call of the people in the streets. People only protest when they are being abused, oppressed, marginalized or violated. It's time the House Justice Appropriations Subcommittee address the calls of Florida voters and people who cared enough to peacefully assemble. We need to face the issues head on and answer to the humanity and dignity of working class, black, brown, and immigrant families in Florida who are suffering with workable policies that help the state grow and prosper.

If this legislation passes I will be moving and letting people know that they should not travel in Florida, they should not move to Florida, they should not visit Florida, because our government does not support them and keep them safe. Public health and the economy should be your number one priority. Please OPPOSE HB1 and support legislation that provides real solutions to the real problems Floridians face today.

Subject: Stop infringement on first amendment rights

Elected Representative,

I am a Florida resident contacting you today to urge you to OPPOSE HB1, the Combatting Violence, Disorder, and Looting Law Enforcement Protection Act. There are already laws in place regarding violence, disorder, and looting, which do not infringe on protesters' due process protections and extra protections for Law Enforcement Officers in the state of Florida under FL §112.532.

While the events that took place at the Capitol on January 6, 2021, are abhorrent and a direct attack against democracy, it is also evident due to the circumstances of 2020 that law enforcement is not always capable of discerning civil disobedience. A constitutionally protected act, from rioting and other illegal activity. This bill language was drafted before the Capitol siege and targeted civil rights protesters, many of whom were eventually proven innocent.

Just this summer in Jacksonville, over 70 peaceful civil rights protesters were unlawfully detained. Among these protesters were families, students, pastors, business owners, teachers, medics, and lawyers. All charges were dropped. Four protesters even sued the Jacksonville Sheriff's Office and won a $100,000 settlement due to their rights being deliberately violated. With this new bill, these innocent people would have had incredible difficulty maintaining their freedom, even in the court of law.

As a concerned citizen, I am asking you not to allow fear and chaos to influence a hasty decision that could jeopardize honest Americans' freedom. We have seen the blatant double standards regarding protesting and treatment amongst groups, and this bill was proposed before this tyrannic event and is only being pushed into legislation in haste and to further suppress our freedoms. Please VOTE NO on HB1.

Sincerely,
Jenna Ferreira

Natalie Brown,

I am writing to you to ask you to please PASS HB1 at the House Justice Appropriations meeting when it is scheduled for a hearing. I am proud that this legislation even got assigned to a public hearing must less that it has been fast-tracked through the House on party lines. Florida currently has one of the best economic and public health help centers. HB1 criminalizes hateful speech, unlawful assembly and damage to private and public property. HB1 stands by human rights, equality, and fair treatment by law enforcement.

If this legislation passes I will be letting people know that they should travel to Florida, they should move to Florida, they should encourage others to visit Florida, because our government supports them and keeps them safe. Public health and the economy is their number one priority. Please PASS HB1 and support legislation that provides real solutions to the real problems Floridians face today.

Natalie Brown,

I am writing to you to ask you to please OPPOSE HB1 at the House Justice Appropriations meeting when it is scheduled for a hearing. I am outraged that this legislation even got assigned to a public hearing must less that it has been fast-tracked through the House on party lines. Florida currently faces the worst economic and public health crisis in history and instead of working to find solutions HB1 criminalizes free speech, peaceful assembly and dissent through unconstitutional language that is targeted at silencing Black voices demanding basic human rights, equality, and fair treatment by law enforcement.

Instead of addressing the horrendous housing crisis, the broken unemployment system, the failing healthcare system, the disorganized and chaotic education system, AND the rising number of deaths, poverty, job loss and sickness in Florida HB1 repackages legislation put forward by Governor DeSantis as a "response to the violent insurrectionist mobs" that attempted a coup on the nation's Capitol. This language is a smokescreen for the true intent of the bill which is to circumvent the mess that Florida has as a consequence of the pandemic and lack of support for Florida's poverty impacted and oppressed. I am not fooled by this. This is the same legislation it was back in September with the same purpose - to limit the basic civil rights of BLM protestors that is guaranteed to all people under the US Constitution.

I believe that HB1 is being used to distract media and organizers from focusing on the real problem: lack of support for those in need across the state. How dare the Governor and the Florida Legislature waste taxpayer time and money on proposing solutions to a made up problem. Section 870 of the Florida Statute already criminalizes riots, unlawful assemblies, and looting but this legislation would actually make it legal for motorists who strike protestors with their vehicle, even if the incident results in someone's death. It limits people's ability to apply to Florida's already broken unemployment system if they have been convicted under the proposed legislation and allows victims of violent crimes to recover civil damages from a local government that is deems responsible for grossly negligent "policing" during a "riot". Meanwhile, the Florida Legislature is fast-tracking HB7/SB72 to create COVID19 liability immunity for the real victims of negligence by businesses, government agencies, schools, and religious organizations who have caused the spread of COVID19.

The Executive Director of the ACLU of Florida, Micah Kubic, stated that "This (bill) is not an attempt to make our communities safer. This proposed legislation by DeSantis is nothing more than a campaign political stunt. Now, it is being disguised as a response to the failed violent coup at the US Capitol. And, it is just as unconstitutional."

A statewide survey of Florida voters put out after the attack by Donald Trump's supporters on the US Capitol suggested a lack of support for HB1 and Governor DeSantis' push to amp up criminal penalties for "disorderly" protests. Ninety-percent of those asked stated their support for "protecting our constitutional right to free assembly and free speech by legally protesting without fear of criminal charges". Seventy-one percent of Democrats and 74% of Republicans deemed the issue a top priority. Eighty percent of respondents said they were more likely to support a legislator who voted to protect that priority, and 56% were "much more likely". On the other hand, 83% of respondents thought that it was important to strengthen unemployment protections for people who lost their jobs because of COVID-19, 63% said that this was "very important". (1)

Finally, this legislation also creates a preemptive attack on local municipalities that might want to "defund" the police and put their money towards more humanitarian initiatives to provide real solutions to small business and economic crises caused by the pandemic. Instead of restricting local government's ability to find solutions we need legislation that answers the call of the people in the streets. People only protest when they are being abused, oppressed, marginalized or violated. It's time the House Justice Appropriations Subcommittee address the calls of Florida voters and people who cared enough to peacefully assemble. We need to face the issues head on and answer to the humanity and dignity of working class, black, brown, and immigrant families in Florida who are suffering with workable policies that help the state grow and prosper.

If this legislation passes I will be letting people know that they should not travel in Florida, they should not move to Florida, they should not visit Florida, because our government does not support them and keep them safe. Public health and the economy should be your number one priority. Please OPPOSE HB1 and support legislation that provides real solutions to the real problems Floridians face today.

Florida Launches Statewide Vaccine Appointment Pre-Registration Site

Today, Florida announced the launch of a statewide preregistration system to schedule COVID-19 vaccine appointments for individuals 65 and older and frontline health care workers. Individuals can pre-register for vaccine appointments and be notified when appointments are available in their area by visiting myvaccine.fl.gov.

This website will allow individuals who are eligible to receive the COVID-19 vaccine to be proactively contacted when vaccine appointments are available at state-supported vaccination sites. Once appointments are available, individuals will be contacted by phone call, text, or email and will be assisted in scheduling an appointment.

Vaccine supply remains limited and appointments may not be available for several weeks in some counties.

Additionally, each county has a designated phone number that individuals can call and pre-register if they do not have Internet access. Please find the complete list of numbers by county here. Whether a resident calls by phone or visits myvaccine.fl.gov, their place in line will be reserved reliably using Sharecare software.

As outlined in Executive Order 20 - 315, individuals who are eligible for the vaccine in Florida are outlined below. If someone does not meet these eligibility requirements, they will not be able to pre-register.

- Long-term care facility residents and staff;
- Persons 65 years of age and older; and
- Health care personnel with direct patient contact.

Hospital providers, however, also may vaccinate persons whom they deem to be extremely vulnerable to COVID-19.

Pawsitive News!

In between meetings, my staff and I have been busy child-proofing (and puppy-proofing) the office.

I am very excited to announce that Courtney, the kids, and our newest addition, Briar, will be joining me in Tallahassee next week! If you follow me on social media you may have seen photos of Briar, our four-month-old King Charles Cavalier puppy.

SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance Approved by Banking and Insurance Committee

This week the Senate Committee on Banking and Insurance, chaired by Senator Jim Boyd approved SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance.

SB 54 is the first bill presented in the Florida Senate. This legislation will replace Florida's no-fault system with a bodily injury liability system more appropriately places liability where it should be - with the party that caused the accident.

Additionally, the bill creates a new framework for handling bad faith litigation that provides a clear set of standards to govern the conduct of both parties in the claims handling process, which I believe will lead to better outcomes for both insured Floridians and their insurance companies.

- Repeals No-Fault, Requires Bodily Injury Liability Coverage
- Requires Insurance Companies to Offer Medical Payments Coverage
- Creates a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions
- Allows for Named Driver Exclusions

Senate Bill 54 transforms this ineffective and outdated insurance structure, which we believe will lead to a more stable insurance market and better outcomes for insured Floridians when they face the unfortunate and in some cases tragic circumstance of being involved in a serious vehicle accident.

Emergency Management Director and Florida National Guard Brief Committee on Pandemic Response

This week in the Select Committee on Pandemic Preparedness and Response:

As chair of the Select Committee, I asked our Division of Emergency Management Director, Jared Moskowitz to update our committee members on the state's COVID-19 vaccination efforts.

Director Moskowitz gave an incredibly detailed presentation and provided a week-by-week review of Florida's vaccine distribution and administration progress. Although Florida leads the nation in vaccinations of seniors 65 years of age and older, there remains a critical need for increased vaccine supply from the federal government. The lack of vaccine supply from the federal government is currently the major impediment to vaccinating more Floridians.

I also asked the Florida National Guard's Director of Military Support, Col. John L. Steele, to brief the Select Committee on their response to COVID-19.

The Florida National Guard continues to support the state's COVID-19 response through operational support of Community Based Testing Sites, Community Vaccination Sites, Mobile Testing Teams, augmentation to airport screening, statewide logistics support, coordination, food distribution, planning, and operational mission sets.

Updates from the Florida Senate

Dear friends,

Yesterday I arrived in Tallahassee for my first committee week as your state senator. We have a lot of work ahead of us and the 2021 Legislative Session is just around the corner.

Over the next few months, I will be sending regular newsletters to update you about what's happening in Tallahassee.

In this inaugural newsletter, I provide a brief overview of the upcoming week and discuss a few of the bills I've filed so far.

It is an honor to serve you in the Florida Senate.

Forward March,

SB 494: Administration of Vaccines

On Friday I filed legislation to improve access to vaccinations for Floridians. SB 494: Administration of Vaccines would amend Florida State Statutes to allow pharmacists who meet certain requirements to administer vaccines recommended by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices to adults.

This legislation will increase the number of vaccination sites by allowing licensed and approved pharmacists to vaccinate the public at their local pharmacy.

SB 484: Combatting Public Disorder

We are a nation of law and order, not violence, destruction, and unrest. We respect the right to peacefully protest, but the shameful conduct we witnessed at the United States Capitol and episodes of violent civil unrest that we have witnessed over the last several months have no place in our country.

SB 484: Combatting Public Disorder makes it clear that here in Florida criminals who seek to thwart peaceful protests by willfully inciting violence, attacking law enforcement, and destroying public or private property will be held accountable.

SB 520: Social Media Websites

For better or for worse, social media has become a major part of our everyday life and society. First thing Monday morning, I filed SB 520: Social Media Websites.

This legislation would require social media companies to provide individual and business users notice when the website has suspended or disabled a user's account and requires the companies to detail the steps necessary to restore the account.

SB 520 signals to social media websites that regardless of a person's background, political history, religion, race, gender, or any other identifying measure, Twitter and Facebook cannot be the sole judge, jury, and executioner of Americans' First Amendment rights.

The Week Ahead

As the chair of the Senate Select Committee on Pandemic Preparedness and Response, I am looking forward to our first meeting on Thursday, January 14.

Florida's Surgeon General, Dr. Scott Rivkees and the Secretary of the Florida Agency on Health Care Administration, Mary Mayhew will be presenting to the committee.

You can watch the committee meeting safely from your office or from home on the Florida Channel here from 11:30 AM to 1:30 PM.

Once appointments are available, individuals will be contacted by phone call, text, or email and will be assisted in scheduling an appointment.

Vaccine supply remains limited and appointments may not be available for several weeks in some counties.

Additionally, each county has a designated phone number that individuals can call and pre-register if they do not have Internet access. Please find the complete list of numbers by county here. Whether a resident calls by phone or visits myvaccine.fl.gov, their place in line will be reserved reliably using Sharecare software.

As outlined in Executive Order 20 - 315, individuals who are eligible for the vaccine in Florida are outlined below. If someone does not meet these eligibility requirements, they will not be able to pre-register.

- Long-term care facility residents and staff;
- Persons 65 years of age and older; and
- Health care personnel with direct patient contact.

Hospital providers, however, also may vaccinate persons whom they deem to be extremely vulnerable to COVID-19.

SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance Approved by Banking and Insurance Committee

This week the Senate Committee on Banking and Insurance, chaired by Senator Jim Boyd approved SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance.

SB 54 is the first bill presented in the Florida Senate. This legislation will replace Florida's no-fault system with a bodily injury liability system more appropriately places liability where it should be - with the party that caused the accident.

Additionally, the bill creates a new framework for handling bad faith litigation that provides a clear set of standards to govern the conduct of both parties in the claims handling process, which I believe will lead to better outcomes for both insured Floridians and their insurance companies.

- Repeals No-Fault, Requires Bodily Injury Liability Coverage
- Requires Insurance Companies to Offer Medical Payments Coverage
- Creates a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions
- Allows for Named Driver Exclusions

Senate Bill 54 transforms this ineffective and outdated insurance structure, which we believe will lead to a more stable insurance market and better outcomes for insured Floridians when they face the unfortunate and in some cases tragic circumstance of being involved in a serious vehicle accident.

Emergency Management Director and Florida National Guard Brief Committee on Pandemic Response

This week in the Select Committee on Pandemic Preparedness and Response:

As chair of the Select Committee, I asked our Division of Emergency Management Director, Jared Moskowitz to update our committee members on the state's COVID-19 vaccination efforts.

Director Moskowitz gave an incredibly detailed presentation and provided a week-by-week review of Florida's vaccine distribution and administration progress. Although Florida leads the nation in vaccinations of seniors 65 years of age and older, there remains a critical need for increased vaccine supply from the federal government. The lack of vaccine supply from the federal government is currently the major impediment to vaccinating more Floridians.

I also asked the Florida National Guard's Director of Military Support, Col. John L. Steele, to brief the Select Committee on their response to COVID-19.

The Florida National Guard continues to support the state's COVID-19 response through operational support of Community Based Testing Sites, Community Vaccination Sites, Mobile Testing Teams, augmentation to airport screening, statewide logistics support, coordination, food distribution, planning, and operational mission sets.

Subject: The state legislators need to STOP their attacks on HOME RULE

Senator Burgess,

Will city councils be reluctant to increase police budgets if SB 484 passes? This is a horrible attack on home rule.

My town is experimenting with ways to keep people out of jail by utilizing social workers and monies to find the homeless places to live. IF you force the city council to keep the same budget for our sheriff's office, they might be less inclined to raise the budget one year for an experimental plan that might cost more in the initial year. Please QUIT attacking home rule.

There are multiple problems with your bill SB 484. One of the problems is an attack on home rule. Cities will be struggling with their budgets. What right does the state have to step in? Excerpt from SB 484:

Starting at line 107

(4)(a) Within 30 days after a municipality posts its tentative budget to the official website under subsection (3), a resident of the municipality may file an appeal by petition to the Administration Commission if the tentative budget contains a funding reduction to the operating budget of the municipal law enforcement agency.

Beginning on line 118

The petition shall be filed with the Executive Office of the Governor,

Beginning on line 122

The governing body of the municipality has 5 working days after delivery of a copy of the petition to file a reply with the Executive Office of the Governor,

Beginning on line 135

The budget as approved, amended, or modified by the Administration Commission shall be final.

THIS WEEK IN THE FLORIDA SENATE

Legislation Advances to Protect Businesses Safely Reopening During the Pandemic

Florida business owners and their employees have suffered significant losses for nearly a year due to COVID-19. The vast majority of these businesses have worked tirelessly making their best effort to adhere to changing safety guidance and regulations. The Senate Committee on Judiciary passed Senate Bill 72: Civil Liability for Damages Relating to COVID-19, by Senator Jeff Brandes, which aims to shield businesses from fraudulent or opportunistic lawsuits related to the COVID-19 pandemic.

When a business makes a good faith effort to adhere to safety guidelines to reopen during a period of extreme uncertainty, our laws should protect them and our legal system should not be a place where they face frivolous and costly litigation. Senate Bill 72 works to separate the serious and merited claims from the fraudulent and unfair claims brought against a Florida business. The legislation requires an affidavit from a physician attesting that the defendant caused the plaintiff's injuries or damages. It also requires the plaintiff to prove the defendant failed to make a good faith effort to adhere to safety guidelines and that the defendant's actions were grossly negligent.

"Frivolous lawsuits should not interfere with the ability of business owners and employees to earn a living and support their families," said Senator Brandes. "This legislation will create a safe harbor for Florida businesses who are struggling every day to keep their doors open during this unprecedented time."

Senate legislation to ensure protections for the health care providers who have been on the front lines of the pandemic is forthcoming.

Committee Approves Bill Ensuring College Tuition Exemptions for Students in DCF Care

Senator Ray Rodrigues presents Senate Bill 52: Postsecondary Education in the Senate Committee on Education.

Young Floridians who enter the child welfare system deserve all the support that we can give. The Senate Committee on Education, chaired by Senator Joe Gruters, advanced Senate Bill 52: Postsecondary Education, by Senator Ray Rodrigues. This legislation clarifies state laws to ensure students who turn 18 while in the custody of the Department of Children and Families (DCF) or a specified guardian are exempt from tuition and fees at Florida's postsecondary institutions.

Senate Bill 52 also increases access to dual enrollment for all students by creating the Dual Enrollment Scholarship Program to bolster state funding of dual enrollment tuition and instructional material costs and authorizes universities to create a bonus program to reward exceptional university staff.

"Dual enrollment helps our students make the most of their high school experience with a head start towards earning higher education credentials. This legislation increases access to dual enrollment opportunities for students in public, private, or virtual education settings," said Senator Rodrigues. "Additionally, our universities should be able to reward exceptional employees without being required to consider across-the-board bonuses. This legislation authorizes universities to create individualized bonus structures for their best employees."

Emergency Management Director, Florida National Guard Brief Committee on Pandemic Response

Division of Emergency Management Director Jared Moskowitz updated the Select Committee on Pandemic Preparedness and Response, chaired by Senator Danny Burgess, on the state's COVID-19 vaccination efforts. Director Moskowitz provided a week-by-week review of Florida's vaccine distribution and administration progress. Although Florida leads the nation in vaccinations of seniors 65 years of age and older, there remains a critical need for increased vaccine supply from the federal government. The lack of vaccine supply from the federal government is currently the major impediment to vaccinating more Floridians, according to Director Moskowitz.

Florida Division of Emergency Management Director, Jared Moskowitz, introduces Cobra, a COVID-19 sniffing dog, to the Select Committee on Pandemic Preparedness and Response.

The Florida National Guard's Director of Military Support, Col. John L. Steele, also briefed the Select Committee on their response to COVID-19. The Florida National Guard continues to support the state's COVID-19 response through operational support of Community Based Testing Sites, Community Vaccination Sites, Mobile Testing Teams, augmentation to airport screening, statewide logistics support, coordination, food distribution, planning and operational mission sets.

Legislation to Repeal Florida's Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law Advances

Senate Bill 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance, by Senator Danny Burgess, aims to lower the number of uninsured and underinsured drivers and provide a greater safety net for Floridians in the event of an accident. The Senate Committee on Banking and Insurance, chaired by Senator Jim Boyd, approved the legislation.

Senate Bill 54 repeals Florida's current Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law, which requires drivers to carry personal injury protection coverage, instead requiring that drivers carry bodily injury liability coverage. The bill also creates best practice standards for handling motor vehicle insurance claims and requires insurers to offer medical payments coverage (MedPay) with limits of $5,000 or $10,000 to cover medical expenses of the insured.

"Senate Bill 54 transforms this ineffective and outdated insurance structure, which we believe will lead to a more stable insurance market and better outcomes for insured Floridians when they face the unfortunate and in some cases tragic circumstance of being involved in a serious vehicle accident," said Senator Burgess.

Resolution to Denounce Democratic Socialism Passes Committee

Since before our nation's founding, the American spirit has embraced the ideals of democracy and freedom. The Senate Committee on Governmental Oversight and Accountability, chaired by Senator Ray Rodrigues, voted to approve Senate Resolution 150: Individual Liberty and Democracy by Senator Manny Diaz, Jr. The resolution rejects democratic socialism in favor of our true American values of individual liberty and democracy. The Florida Senate will continue to protect our freedom, which unites us as a nation and is the cornerstone of America.

Pro-Consumer Legislation Passes First Committee

Senate Bill 56: Community Association Assessment Notices, by Senator Ana Maria Rodriguez, unanimously passed the Senate Committee on Regulated Industries, chaired by Senator Travis Hutson. Senate Bill 56 provides additional notice requirements for condominium, cooperative, and homeowners' associations relating to the collection of assessments by these community associations.

This legislation ensures condominium owners are informed of assessment changes enacted by their associations and will help to reduce late-fees caused by the inconsistent delivery of assessments. These changes will keep unit owners, especially seniors, properly informed if the delivery method of a statement of account transitions to e-mail delivery.

The bill also increases the payment deadline for a condominium or cooperative unit owner from 30 days to 45 days after receiving an association's Notice of Intent to Record a Claim of Lien in order to avoid the filing of a claim of lien.

Subject: Uninsured Motorist Issue

Senator Burgess,

The attached PDF is the official number of uninsured motorists in the state of Florida. For November 2020, it was 6.6 percent. I've included their uninsured motorist estimate as an attachment dated 12.16.2020.

Here is how DHSMV generates that number:

- Once a month a data pull is conducted for the number of vehicles registered in the state, and the number of vehicles that have meet the minimal insurance requirements as reported to the Department from the Insurance industry. Those numbers are reflected on the page and used to create a rate. Commercial vehicles are excluded from the pull since it is only to reflect personally owned vehicles.

The insurance industry generates a very different number. A 2017 Insurance Research Council report estimated that in 2015, 26.7 percent of Florida drivers were uninsured. This was the highest uninsured motorist rate in the country. In my experience, the insurance industry points to this number rather than the DHSMV number. I've included the 2017 IRC report as an attachment.

Here is how the IRC generates their number:

- Uninsured motorist rates were estimated by comparing the injury portion of UM insurance coverage with bodily injury (BI) liability coverage. If an insured person is injured in an auto accident caused by an at-fault driver, then he or she will file a BI liability claim against the at-fault driver seeking compensation for their injury. However, if the at-fault driver is uninsured or the injured person is a victim of a hit-and-run driver, then the injured person will file a UM claim with their own insurance company to seek compensation. Claim frequencies measure the number of insurance claims per 100 vehicles insured for an entire year. The ratio of UM claim frequency to BI claim frequency represents the chance that someone injured in an auto accident was the victim of an uninsured at-fault driver.

It think the IRC number likely overestimates the number of true uninsured in Florida because Florida does not require BI coverage. The most likely ways the DHSMV number is incorrect is if there are large numbers of unregistered vehicles on the roads, or the insurance industry data is somehow incorrect regarding the real number of insureds.

Personally, I think that by mandating BI, the IRC number of 26.7% is likely to decrease because more drivers will have BI, but the DHSMV number will increase because the coverage will likely be more expensive for some people that currently buy PIP/PD only policies.

Executive Summary

Most licensed drivers in the United States are required by state law to maintain liability insurance coverage that will compensate others for injuries or damages resulting from auto accidents in which the insured is found to be at fault. Forty-nine states and the District of Columbia have adopted compulsory insurance laws requiring drivers to maintain liability insurance coverage.<sup>1</sup> Even in New Hampshire, the only state without a compulsory auto insurance law, drivers who have demonstrated a lack of financial responsibility for past auto accidents must provide proof of financial responsibility for potential future accidents.<sup>2</sup>

Despite the near-universal requirement that drivers maintain liability insurance coverage, a significant number do not, and these uninsured drivers increase costs for drivers who do have coverage. Auto insurance policies typically include uninsured motorist (UM) coverage that will protect the insured if they are injured by an at-fault uninsured driver. The costs associated with UM insurance coverage can be significant. According to the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC), the countrywide average premium cost per covered vehicle for UM coverage in 2013 was $67.<sup>3</sup>

Uninsured motorists pose additional costs for insurance companies, state governments, and taxpayers. In 2012, the average UM claim included $11,379 in claimed medical losses and $7,960 in lost wages.<sup>4</sup> In addition to underwriting UM insurance coverage and processing UM insurance claims, auto insurance companies must comply with regulations in many states requiring insurers to inform the state any time auto insurance coverage is cancelled. State governments administer taxpayer-funded programs to monitor the insurance status of motor vehicles registered in the state.

This report updates previous Insurance Research Council (IRC) estimates of the percentage of drivers who are uninsured. New estimates for the years 2013–15 are presented, along with earlier estimates from 1999–2012. The new estimates are based on the analysis of auto injury claim frequency data provided by 143 insurance companies, representing 60 percent of the private passenger auto insurance market countrywide in 2015.

Uninsured motorist rates were estimated by comparing the injury portion of UM insurance coverage with bodily injury (BI) liability coverage. If an insured person is injured in an auto accident caused by an at-fault driver, then he or she will file a BI liability claim against the at-fault driver seeking compensation for their injury. However, if the at-fault driver is uninsured or the injured person is a victim of a hit-and-run driver, then the injured person will file a UM claim with their own insurance company to seek compensation. Claim frequencies measure the number of insurance claims per 100 vehicles insured for an entire year. The ratio of UM claim frequency to BI claim frequency represents the chance that someone injured in an auto accident was the victim of an uninsured at-fault driver.

Because an at-fault driver is either uninsured or insured, the UM to BI claim frequency ratio estimates the percentage of all drivers who are uninsured. For example, if, in a group of 10,000 vehicle owners, 1,000 (10 percent) do not have auto liability insurance and accidents involving injuries occur at a frequency of 5 percent per year, then 500 auto accidents with an injury would occur ( $5 \text{ percent} \times 10,000$ ), of which 50 would involve uninsured drivers ( $10 \text{ percent} \times 500$ ). Five of the 50 accidents (10 percent) would involve another uninsured motorist, while 45 of the accidents would involve insured motorists as the injured parties. As a result, these 45 injured individuals would submit UM claims to their own insurers, producing a claim frequency rate of 0.005 (45 UM claims for 9,000 insured vehicles). Meanwhile, there would be 450 BI claims for 9,000 insured vehicles, producing a BI claim frequency of 0.05. The ratio of UM to BI claim frequencies would be 0.10, or 10 percent ( $0.005/0.05$ ). Thus, the ratio of UM to BI claim frequencies produces a measure of the probability that an injury to an insured car occupant will have been the fault of an uninsured driver. This approach assumes that insured and uninsured drivers experience the same frequency of at-fault accidents resulting in injuries. If accident rates for uninsured drivers are greater than for insured drivers, then the IRC estimates understate the true prevalence of uninsured drivers. If, on the other hand, accident rates for insured drivers are greater than for uninsured drivers, then the IRC estimates overstate the true prevalence of uninsured drivers.

Major findings

- In 2015, when someone was injured in an auto accident in the U.S., the chances were about one in 8 that the at-fault driver in the accident was uninsured. From 2010 to 2015, the countrywide ratio of UM to BI claim frequencies increased from 12.3 percent to 13.0 percent, following a seven-year decline from a high of 14.9 percent in 2003.
- The percentage of uninsured drivers varied significantly by state. In 2015, the UM to BI claim frequency ratio was highest in Florida (26.7 percent) and lowest in Maine (4.5 percent). Other states with comparatively high uninsured motorist rates in 2015 were Mississippi (23.7 percent), New Mexico (20.8 percent), Michigan (20.3 percent) and Tennessee (20.0 percent). Figure 1 illustrates the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers in each state in 2015. In thirteen states and the District of Columbia, the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers was equal to or greater than 15 percent.

- Five states (Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, Florida, and North Dakota) experienced increases in their estimated uninsured motorist rates of 3 percentage points or more from 2006–15. Two of these states (Michigan and Florida) had uninsured motorist rates exceeding 20 percent in 2015. Massachusetts and North Dakota had comparatively low uninsured motorist rates in 2015, even after experiencing significant increases over the 2006–15 period.
- Several states experienced significant improvements in their uninsured motorist rates over the 2006–15 period. Oklahoma’s rate fell 13.5 percentage points, from 24.0 percent to 10.5 percent, likely due to legislation enacted in 2013 aimed at reducing the number of uninsured drivers. New Mexico also experienced a significant decline in its uninsured motorist rate—from 30.7 percent to 20.8 percent.
- High uninsured motorist rates do not always indicate high underlying claim frequencies. For example, Michigan had one of the highest uninsured motorist rates in the country in 2015 (20.3 percent), but also had one of the country’s lowest UM and BI claim frequency rates. Indiana experienced low BI claim frequency rates and medium UM claim frequency rates, but had one of the ten highest uninsured motorist estimates (16.7 percent).
- Uninsured motorist rates are likely influenced by several factors. Higher average expenditures for auto liability insurance coverage are associated with higher rates of uninsured motorists, although the relationship is relatively weak and insurance cost is not a strong predictor of uninsured motorist rates. Future IRC research will explore the factors and conditions that explain uninsured motorist rates across states and over time.

National Uninsured Motorists Trends

The IRC previously estimated that, in 2012, the countrywide uninsured motorist rate was 12.6 percent.<sup>5</sup> This report adds three additional years to the trend of uninsured motorist estimates. The IRC estimates that the percentage of drivers countrywide who were uninsured increased to 12.7 percent in 2013, and then to 13.0 percent in 2014. In 2015, the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers remained at 13.0 percent.

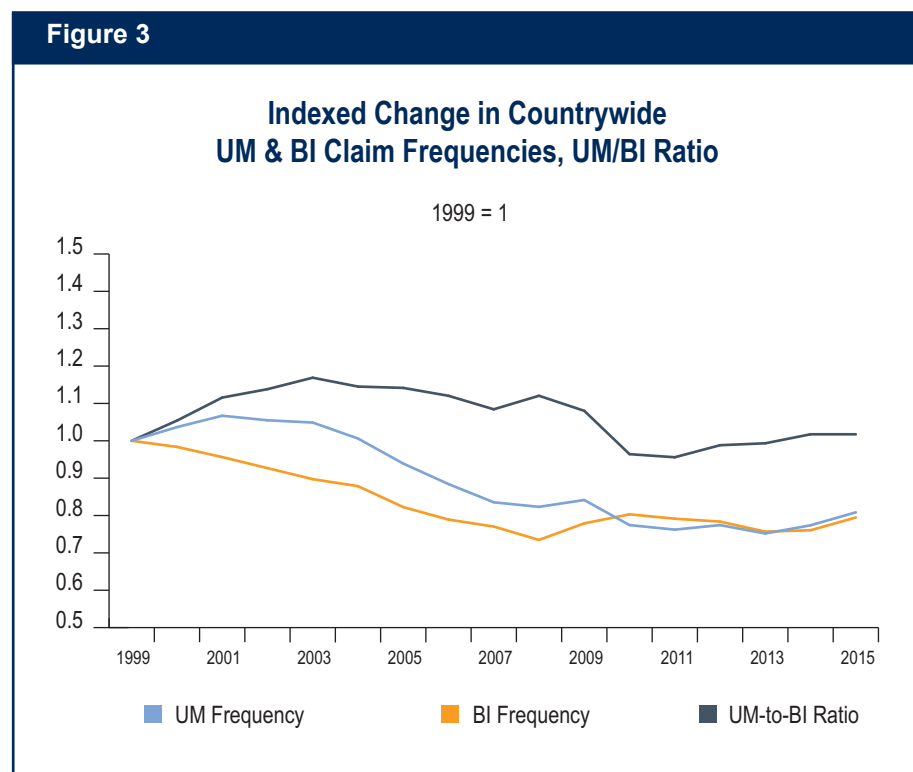

The percentage of drivers who are uninsured has increased slowly since 2011, when the UM rate was at its lowest since 1980, 12.2 percent (Figure 2). Uninsured motorist rates have typically fluctuated between 11 and 15 percent. Only 6 of the 37 years that the IRC has studied uninsured motorists had estimated rates that fell outside the 11 to 15 percent range. The current estimate of 13 percent is in the middle of that range.

The ratio of UM and BI claim frequency rates forms the basis for the IRC’s estimate of the prevalence of uninsured motorists. Figure 3 depicts change over time in UM and BI claim frequency rates and the UM to BI ratio by indexing each measure to 1, starting in 1999. The trends illustrate how changes in underlying claim frequencies affect the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers. The UM to BI claim frequency ratio (the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers) changes very little when UM and BI claim frequency trends follow each other closely. For example, from 2014 to 2015, the UM and BI claim frequency rates both increased, but at approximately the same rate, thus resulting in no change in the UM to BI ratio. When UM and BI claim frequency trends move in different directions, or move in the same direction but at different rates, then the UM to BI claim frequency ratio changes. For example, from 2007 to 2008, the UM claim frequency rate decreased, but not as rapidly as BI claim frequency. As a result, the UM to BI claim frequency rate increased. A more dramatic example can be seen with 2009 to 2010, when UM claim frequency decreased as BI claim frequency increased, resulting in a significant decline in the UM to BI ratio, from 13.8 to 12.3 percent.

Despite long-term declines in both UM and BI claim frequencies, the UM to BI claim frequency ratio was only slightly different in 2015, at 13.0 percent, than it was in 1999, when it was 12.7 percent. The UM to BI ratio was little changed because UM and BI claim frequency rates experienced very similar declines over the sixteen-year period. If the UM and BI claim frequency trends had experienced very different trends, then the UM to BI ratio in 2015 would have differed considerably from what it was in 1999.

Countrywide uninsured motorists and bodily injury claim frequency rates, as well as the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers (the UM to BI claim frequency ratio) are presented in Figure 4 for the years 1999–2015. Only claims involving bodily injury are included in the UM claim frequency rates. Claim frequency rates and uninsured motorist estimates prior to 1999 can be found in previous IRC Uninsured Motorists reports.

State UM Trends

Individual state UM to BI claim frequency ratios in 2015 ranged from 4.5 percent in Maine to 26.7 percent in Florida. Four other states, in addition to Florida, had UM to BI ratios of 20 percent or more: Mississippi (23.7 percent), New Mexico (20.8 percent), Michigan (20.3 percent), and Tennessee (20.0 percent). Wide variation in uninsured motorist rates across states is not a new phenomenon; similar differences have been documented in previous IRC UM studies. The 2015 ranking of states by the percentage of uninsured drivers, as measured by the UM to BI claim frequency ratio, is shown in figure 5.

In 2015, twenty states had uninsured motorist rates equal to or greater than the countrywide rate (13.0 percent) while 30 states had rates below the countrywide rate. Most of the states with the highest uninsured motorist rates in 2015 also had high rates in 2006, but that was not the case for all of them. Indiana, for example, ranked eighth in 2015 but only twentieth in 2006. Similarly, Arkansas ranked ninth in 2015, but nineteenth in 2006. Conversely, some states with relatively high rankings in 2006 had significantly lower rankings 10 years later. Oklahoma, for example, had the fourth highest uninsured motorist rate in 2006, but ranked thirty-first by 2015.

Uninsured motorist rates for individual states often change from year-to-year, although the changes are typically small. Some states, however, have experienced significant changes over extended periods of time. Figure 6 lists states with the greatest increases or decreases in their UM to BI ratios from 2006 to 2015. Although the 2015 UM to BI ratio for Massachusetts (6.2 percent) was less than one-half the countrywide rate, the state experienced the largest percentage point increase, rising 4.8 points over the ten-year period. Many of the other states with the largest percentage point increases also are among the states with the highest UM to BI ratios in 2015. Michigan, for example, experienced a 3.8 percentage point increase in its UM to BI ratio, and Florida, which ranked fifth highest among all the states in 2006, ranked first in 2015, with a UM to BI ratio of 26.7 percent. This followed a 3.4 percentage point increase over 10 years.

Among the states with significant decreases in their UM to BI ratios, Oklahoma is particularly noteworthy. The dramatic decrease in Oklahoma's ratio (falling from 24.0 percent to 10.5 percent) may be attributed to the enactment of legislation in 2013 aimed at reducing the number of uninsured drivers.<sup>6</sup> Other states experiencing substantial decreases include New Mexico (declining 9.0 points to 20.8 percent) and Alabama (declining 8.0 points to 18.4 percent). Even with substantial decreases, however, New Mexico and Alabama are among the states with the highest estimated percentage of uninsured drivers. Another state to note is California, where the UM to BI ratio dropped 5.7 points, to 15.2 percent. In 2006, California had the sixth highest estimated percentage of uninsured drivers in the country. By 2015, California ranked twelfth among all the states.

Further insight into uninsured motorist rates is found in the underlying claim frequency rates used to calculate UM to BI claim frequency ratios. Figure 7 indicates for each state whether UM and BI claim frequencies are relatively low, medium, or high. The 10 states with the highest UM to BI ratios are shown in bold. Uninsured motorist rates may be high even when claim frequency rates are low, as was the case with Michigan, where strong no-fault rules limit all types of liability claims involving bodily injury. States with medium and high BI claim frequency rates and high UM claim frequency rates tend to have higher UM to BI ratios. Thirteen of 17 states with this combination of claim frequencies also experienced UM to BI ratios equal to or greater than the countrywide average (13.0 percent), in 2015.

UM and BI claim frequency rates varied more across states than did UM to BI claim frequency ratios. The coefficient of variation (CV) is a commonly used measure of variation across a set of data. It is particularly useful in comparing different groups of data with different characteristics. Expressed as a percentage, a higher CV indicates greater variation among the data in a group, and a lower CV indicates less variation. The CV for UM claim frequency in 2015 was 65 percent, compared with 46 percent for BI claim frequency, which indicates that BI claim frequency varied less across states than UM claim frequency. The CV for state UM to BI claim frequency ratios was even lower at 39 percent, indicating that state uninsured motorist rates, as measured by UM to BI ratios, varied less than the underlying claim frequencies on which the uninsured motorist estimates are based.

Understanding why uninsured motorist rates vary significantly across states is a critical requirement to devise effective strategies to reduce the prevalence of uninsured drivers. For example, as might be expected, higher insurance costs are associated with higher uninsured motorist rates. Figure 8 illustrates the relationship between state UM to BI ratios and average liability premiums, as calculated by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners. Average liability premiums are the total premiums paid by policyholders for all auto liability coverages combined, divided by the number of insured liability exposures (that is, the number of vehicles insured for an entire year).<sup>7</sup> The slope of the line and the dispersion of states around the line indicates that only about 15 percent of the total variation in the UM to BI ratios of every state and the District of Columbia in 2014 was explained by average liability premium costs. In other words, the average cost of insurance (average liability premium) explains only a portion of the variation in uninsured motorist rates across states. A $200 difference in average liability premium costs was associated with an average 2.4 percentage point difference in UM to BI ratios. However, the wide dispersion of states at different premium cost levels indicates that cost alone is a poor predictor of uninsured motorist rates. States with similar insurance costs had uninsured motorist rates that varied widely. For example, in states with average liability premium costs ranging narrowly between $750 and $850, the UM to BI ratio ranged from 6.2 percent to 26.7 percent. This finding suggests that factors in addition to the cost of insurance likely contribute to the prevalence of uninsured drivers in any particular state.<sup>8</sup>

Many states have taken steps to encourage drivers to obtain auto insurance coverage and to reduce the frequency of uninsured driving. The most common approach to promoting insurance coverage is to enact compulsory auto insurance laws requiring motor vehicle owners to obtain property damage and bodily injury liability coverage with specific minimum coverage limits. Figure 9 lists the minimum insurance requirements for motorists in each state. In addition to requiring liability coverage, states with no-fault systems require Personal Injury Protection (PIP) coverage. Several states also require UM coverage to protect those who incur medical and/or property damage losses caused by an uninsured driver. Compulsory insurance requirements, while designed and intended to promote insurance coverage, may have the unintended effect of increasing the prevalence of uninsured drivers if the amount of coverage required, and the associated costs, are greater than what some drivers believe they are able to afford or prefer to pay.

Most states also prescribe specific penalties and fines for failing to comply with state insurance requirements. The penalties for driving without insurance vary widely, ranging from $100 for a first offense to a year in jail for multiple violations.<sup>9</sup> The states also take a variety of steps to enforce insurance requirements and identify drivers who fail to maintain minimum coverage. In several instances, state enforcement mechanisms require insurance companies to report detailed information to state agencies whenever a change in a policy that might indicate that a vehicle is no longer appropriately insured occurs.

Compulsory insurance requirements, fines and penalties for noncompliance, and the cost and affordability of insurance coverage are just some of the factors that may influence the prevalence of uninsured motorists. Future IRC research will explore how these factors work both independently and in concert to explain differences in uninsured motorist rates across states.

Methodology

IRC analyzed UM and BI liability exposure and claim count data provided by participating companies for the years 2013, 2014, and 2015. Data from previous IRC studies were also examined. Fourteen insurers, representing approximately 60 percent of the private passenger auto liability insurance business countrywide, participated in the study. Each insurer provided data for its total private passenger auto line of business (preferred, standard, and nonstandard lines) in each state. The number of earned car years and the number of incurred claims, including incurred but not reported claims, were combined to calculate UM and BI claim frequencies and the corresponding UM to BI claim frequency ratio.

The ratio of UM to BI claim frequencies produces a reasonable estimate of the proportion of injury-producing accidents caused by uninsured or hit-and-run motorists. Claim frequencies, rather than claim counts, were used to minimize distortions from different numbers of UM and BI earned car years. Calculating the size of the uninsured driver population is important in fashioning appropriate public policies to address the uninsured motorist issue and to measure the effectiveness of different approaches. The illegal nature of driving a vehicle without insurance makes obtaining an exact and accurate number of uninsured drivers in each state a difficult task. The ratio of UM to BI claim frequencies provides an estimate of the probability that an at-fault driver in an accident was uninsured and unable to satisfy their liability for someone else's injuries caused by the accident. Therefore, the UM to BI ratio provides a measure of the impact on society of uninsured motorists.

A limitation of the UM to BI ratio is that the UM claim frequency also includes injury claims from hit-and-run accidents in which it is unknown if the at-fault driver had insurance. Also, any potential underlying differences in claiming behavior between injured parties deciding to make a BI claim versus a UM claim could affect underlying claim frequencies. Vehicles that were not insured, but also not driven on the road, do not factor into the UM to BI ratio. Finally, this approach assumes that insured and uninsured drivers experience the same frequency of at-fault accidents resulting in injuries. If accident rates for uninsured drivers are actually greater than or less than the rates for insured drivers, then IRC estimates understate or overstate, respectively, the true prevalence of uninsured drivers. Considering these factors, the UM to BI ratio provides a consistent and reasonable measure for comparing the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers from state to state and over time within each state.

Description of Relevant Auto Insurance Coverages

The claim frequency information in this study relied on the UM and BI portions of private passenger auto injury insurance coverage. If an injury occurred to a person in an auto accident and the other driver was at fault, the injured person would file a BI claim against the at-fault driver. Because the injured claimant is typically someone outside the driver's household, BI claims are referred to as third-party claims. BI payments can include coverage for medical expenses and lost wages, as well as payments for general damages, sometimes referred to as pain and suffering payments.

However, if an injury occurred to a person in an auto accident and the other driver was at fault but did not have liability insurance, the injured person would file a UM claim with his or her own insurance company. The insured's UM coverage pays the amount the injured person would have otherwise received from the at-fault driver. Eligibility for payments from either BI or UM coverage depends on the other driver being at fault for the accident.

Other auto injury insurance coverages, such as medical payments (MP) and PIP, were not included in this analysis because neither involves a comparable group of claims to UM claims. UM is a fault-based coverage, whereas MP and PIP are no-fault, first-party coverages.

Emergency Order 20-009: Visitation Ban Lifted for Nursing Homes and other Assisted Living Facilities (September 1, 2020)

The Emergency Order lifts, with restrictions, the nursing home and assisted living facility visitation ban imposed in March. The Emergency Order allows residents to designate two "essential" caregivers and two "compassionate" caregivers who would have access to the facility and resident. Essential caregivers provide services or assistance with activities of daily living to help maintain quality of life for a facility resident, while compassionate caregivers provide emotional support to a resident, and may be allowed entry into facilities on a limited basis. Other than in end-of-life situations, a resident may only be visited by one essential or compassionate caregiver at a time. However, an intermediate care facility or Agency for Persons with Disabilities licensed foster-care or group home facility may allow up to two such visitors at a time. The Emergency Order provides a mandate that permitted visitors wear a surgical mask and other PPE as appropriate, complete training on infection prevention and control, comply with facility-provided COVID-19 testing, and maintain social distancing from staff and other residents in the facility. General visitors will also be allowed to visit facilities provided that the facility have no positive COVID-19 cases in the previous 14 days and if other limitations are met. Residents may designate up to five general visitors, however, may be visited by no more than two at a time. View Emergency Order 20-009 here for additional information contained in the order.

Question and Answers

1. Why are we raising it from 10-20-10 to 25-50-10?
  - a. The erosion of the value of the PIP benefit is detrimental. Here are some numbers to think about:
    - i. Using the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, and the wonderful help from Banking and Insurance committee staff, we have determined that the total inflation from January 1979 to December 2020 is 698.12%. That means:
    - ii. $10,000 in 1979 only equates to $1,252 today
2. Insurance FRAUD
  - a. Due to the erosion of the monetary value of the PIP benefit, motor vehicle insurance fraud is at an all-time high. A study done by our own Senate Banking and Insurance Committee found that our motor vehicle insurance laws are being exploited by:
    - i. Health care clinic fraud;
    - ii. Staging car crashes;
    - iii. Manufacturing false crash reports;
    - iv. Filing PIP claims with contrived injuries;
    - v. Dishonest medical treatment providers;
    - vi. Attorney back-dealing
3. What is garage liability and what does it do?
  - a. Establishing minimum amount minimum amount of $60,000 in liability coverage. This comes from the property damage and BI amount in the 25-50-10 plan. ($50k BI + $10k PD = $60k)
4. What is changes are we making to commercial vehicles?
  - a. Bill amends $50,000 to $60,000 for a vehicle with a gross weight of 26k pounds or more but less than 36k
  - b. Bill amends $100,000 to $120,000 for a vehicle with a gross weight of 35k pounds or more but less than 44k.
  - c. Bill sustains $300,000 for vehicle over 44k pounds.
5. What changes are we making to self-insurance?
  - a. Currently, a person may qualify as a self-insurer by obtaining a certificate of self-insurance and must satisfy the following requirement:
    - i. $40,000 in net unencumbered worth
    - ii. We are changing it to a net unencumbered worth of $100,000 because of our new plan proposal. When this was originally established, we came up with the $40,000 because it was double the required BI (2 times $20,000). Now, given we have increased the BI, we are increasing the net worth to $100,000 (2 times $50,000).
6. More on bad faith:
  - a. The demand must:
    - i. Identify the date and location of the loss, the claimant, and insured.
    - ii. State the legal and factual basis of the claim.

- iii. Detail the claimant's injuries, medical treatment, and the amount of current and reasonably anticipated future damages.
  - iv. Demand a settlement amount, which may not exceed the insured's policy limit.
  - v. Release, if accepted, the insured from any further liability.
  - vi. Not provide conditions on the settlement other than payment of the demand and the ability of the claimant to take an examination under oath of the insured.
- b. Naturally, a claimant deserves to know whether recovery from an insured's assets is possible before agreeing to a settlement within the insurance policy limits. The bill will allow the claimant to condition the demand for settlement on taking a 2 hour examination under oath (EUO) of the insured limited to discovering recoverable assets.
  - c. The bad faith claimant may withdraw the demand for settlement after the EUO. This is only fair because claimants should not and cannot be forced to settle within policy limits.
  - d. The bill requires the insured to cooperate with the claimant and submit to the EUO. If the insured refuses to submit to the EUO, the insurer may tender policy limits without obtaining a release of the insured and may not be held liable if there is an excess judgment against the insured.
  - e. The provisions of the bill regarding settlement will show whether an insurer truly refused a settlement offer. If so, then that insurer may have engaged in bad faith. If, however, an insurer is willing to offer its policy limits in return for a waiver of liability for its insured, it is obvious that the insurer was willing to do what is within its power to shield its insured from damages above the insurance policy. Policyholders will benefit because their insurer is incentivized to try and settle for policy limits when appropriate. Further, eliminating large bad faith awards in certain circumstances will create less pressure to settle non-meritorious claims and should lower rates.
  - f. The key question in a bad faith failure to settle case is whether the insurer failed to settle when it could and should have done so. If an insurer proves they were willing to settle and tender policy limits, then the insurer hasn't acted in bad faith in refusing to settle. Accordingly, the bill provides a safe harbor to the insurer in third-party bad faith action not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., providing that an insurer is not liable for bad faith if it tenders policy limits within 30 days of receiving a demand for settlement.
  - g. Bad faith claims should consider not only the insurer's actions and omissions, but also the behavior of all the various parties to the lawsuit, because those are relevant regarding whether the fact a settlement didn't occur is because of the insurer, or whether other parties' actions were the cause. The bill requires the trier of fact, when determining if an insurer in bad faith failed to settle, to consider certain actions of the insurer such as compliance with best practices along with certain actions of the insured and claimant.

- h. The bill also prohibits punitive damages in a bad faith failure to settle action. A bad faith action provides strong punishment for an insurer's bad behavior
    - i. The bad faith action itself provides extra-contractual damages that can range into the tens-of-millions of dollars. Given that fact, punitive damages are unnecessary.
- 7. What else is there to know about Med Pay?
  - a. Insurers may also offer other policy limits that exceed $5,000.
  - b. Insurers may offer deductibles of up to $500.
  - c. Requires insurers must reserve $5,000 of MedPay benefits for 30 days to pay physicians or dentists who provide emergency services and care or who provide hospital inpatient care.
- 8. RAISING RATES?
  - a. There have been numerous studies done by our own banking and insurance staff and other groups that have concluded that rates will actually go down. In the big scheme of things, it is hard to determine what will happen.
  - b. From an overall standpoint, after speaking with insurance companies, even if the rates do increase $5 to $10 per month per policyholder this is saving them money in the long run if they are in a detrimental accident and they have to spend thousands of more dollars on healthcare.
- 9. Why not keep PIP and just increase amounts?
  - a. We have continuously worked on improving PIP over the years and raising the BI would not do anything. There would also be continuous fraud. The cost of Med Pay is also lower than PIP. Ans

Subject: Vote No on HB1 and Protect Floridian's First Amendment Rights

Meagan Hebel,

I am writing to you to ask you to please OPPOSE HB1 at the House Justice Appropriations meeting when it is scheduled for a hearing. I am outraged that this legislation even got assigned to a public hearing must less that it has been fast-tracked through the House on party lines. Florida currently faces the worst economic and public health crisis in history and instead of working to find solutions HB1 criminalizes free speech, peaceful assembly and dissent through unconstitutional language that is targeted at silencing Black voices demanding basic human rights, equality, and fair treatment by law enforcement.

Instead of addressing the horrendous housing crisis, the broken unemployment system, the failing healthcare system, the disorganized and chaotic education system, AND the rising number of deaths, poverty, job loss and sickness in Florida HB1 repackages legislation put forward by Governor DeSantis as a "response to the violent insurrectionist mobs" that attempted a coup on the nation's Capitol. This language is a smokescreen for the true intent of the bill which is to circumvent the mess that Florida has as a consequence of the pandemic and lack of support for Florida's poverty impacted and oppressed. I am not fooled by this. This is the same legislation it was back in September with the same purpose - to limit the basic civil rights of BLM protestors that is guaranteed to all people under the US Constitution.

I believe that HB1 is being used to distract media and organizers from focusing on the real problem: lack of support for those in need across the state. How dare the Governor and the Florida Legislature waste taxpayer time and money on proposing solutions to a made up problem. Section 870 of the Florida Statute already criminalizes riots, unlawful assemblies, and looting but this legislation would actually make it legal for motorists who strike protestors with their vehicle, even if the incident results in someone's death. It limits people's ability to apply to Florida's already broken unemployment system if they have been convicted under the proposed legislation and allows victims of violent crimes to recover civil damages from a local government that is deems responsible for grossly negligent "policing" during a "riot". Meanwhile, the Florida Legislature is fast-tracking HB7/SB72 to create COVID19 liability immunity for the real victims of negligence by businesses, government agencies, schools, and religious organizations who have caused the spread of COVID19.

The Executive Director of the ACLU of Florida, Micah Kubic, stated that "This (bill) is not an attempt to make our communities safer. This proposed legislation by DeSantis is nothing more than a campaign political stunt. Now, it is being disguised as a response to the failed violent coup at the US Capitol. And, it is just as unconstitutional."

A statewide survey of Florida voters put out after the attack by Donald Trump's supporters on the US Capitol suggested a lack of support for HB1 and Governor DeSantis' push to amp up criminal penalties for "disorderly" protests. Ninety-percent of those asked stated their support for "protecting our constitutional right to free assembly and free speech by legally protesting without fear of criminal charges". Seventy-one percent of Democrats and 74% of Republicans deemed the issue a top priority. Eighty percent of respondents said they were more likely to support a legislator who voted to protect that priority, and 56% were "much more likely". On the other hand, 83% of respondents thought that it was important to strengthen unemployment protections for people who lost their jobs because of COVID-19, 63% said that this was "very important". (1)

Finally, this legislation also creates a preemptive attack on local municipalities that might want to "defund" the police and put their money towards more humanitarian initiatives to provide real solutions to small business and economic crises caused by the pandemic. Instead of restricting local government's ability to find solutions we need legislation that answers the call of the people in the streets. People only protest when they are being abused, oppressed, marginalized or violated. It's time the House Justice Appropriations Subcommittee address the calls of Florida voters and people who cared enough to peacefully assemble. We need to face the issues head on and answer to the humanity and dignity of working class, black, brown, and immigrant families in Florida who are suffering with workable policies that help the state grow and prosper.

If this legislation passes I will be letting people know that they should not travel in Florida, they should not move to Florida, they should not visit Florida, because our government does not support them and keep them safe. Public health and the economy should be your number one priority. Please OPPOSE HB1 and support legislation that provides real solutions to the real problems Floridians face today.

Updates from the Florida Senate

Dear friends,

Yesterday I arrived in Tallahassee for my first committee week as your state senator. We have a lot of work ahead of us and the 2021 Legislative Session is just around the corner.

Over the next few months, I will be sending regular newsletters to update you about what's happening in Tallahassee.

In this inaugural newsletter, I provide a brief overview of the upcoming week and discuss a few of the bills I've filed so far.

It is an honor to serve you in the Florida Senate.

Forward March,

Danny Burgess
State Senator
District 20

SB 494: Administration of Vaccines

On Friday I filed legislation to improve access to vaccinations for Floridians. SB 494: Administration of Vaccines would amend Florida State Statutes to allow pharmacists who meet certain requirements to administer vaccines recommended by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices to adults.

This legislation will increase the number of vaccination sites by allowing licensed and approved pharmacists to vaccinate the public at their local pharmacy.

SB 484: Combatting Public Disorder

We are a nation of law and order, not violence, destruction, and unrest. We respect the right to peacefully protest, but the shameful conduct we witnessed at the United States Capitol and episodes of violent civil unrest that we have witnessed over the last several months have no place in our country.

Last week I filed SB 484: Combatting Public Disorder. SB 484 makes it clear that here in Florida criminals who seek to thwart peaceful protests by willfully inciting violence, attacking law enforcement, and destroying public or private property will be held accountable.

SB 520: Social Media Websites

For better or for worse, social media has become a major part of our everyday life and society. After hearing from our constituent that social media sites were banning users and deleting accounts without explanation, I filed SB 520: Social Media Websites.

This legislation would require social media companies to provide individual and business users notice when the website has suspended or disabled a user's account and requires the companies to detail the steps necessary to restore the account.

SB 520 signals to social media websites that regardless of a person's background, political history, religion, race, gender, or any other identifying measure, Twitter and Facebook cannot be the sole judge, jury, and executioner of Americans' First Amendment rights.

This week, I presented (and passed) my first bill, cast my first votes, and attended quite a few virtual meetings. On Thursday, my committee received an update on vaccine distribution and the pandemic response from the National Guard and the Department of Emergency Management.

It is an honor to serve you in the Florida Senate.

Some Pawsitive News!

In between meetings, my staff and I have been busy child-proofing (and puppy-proofing) the office.

I am very excited to announce that Courtney, the kids, and our newest addition, Briar, will be joining me in Tallahassee next week! If you follow me on social media you may have seen photos of Briar, our four-month-old King Charles Cavalier puppy.

SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance Approved by Banking and Insurance Committee

[REDACTED]

This week the Senate Committee on Banking and Insurance, chaired by Senator Jim Boyd approved SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance.

SB 54 is the first bill I presented in the Florida Senate. This legislation will replace Florida's no-fault system with a bodily injury liability system more appropriately places liability where it should be - with the party that caused the accident.

Additionally, the bill creates a new framework for handling bad faith litigation that provides a clear set of standards to govern the conduct of both parties in the claims handling process, which I believe will lead to better outcomes for both insured Floridians and their insurance companies.

- Repeals No-Fault, Requires Bodily Injury Liability Coverage
- Requires Insurance Companies to Offer Medical Payments Coverage
- Creates a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions
- Allows for Named Driver Exclusions

Senate Bill 54 transforms this ineffective and outdated insurance structure, which I believe will lead to a more stable insurance market and better outcomes for insured Floridians when they face the unfortunate and in some cases tragic circumstance of being involved in a serious vehicle accident.

Emergency Management Director and Florida National Guard Brief Committee on Pandemic Response

This week in the Select Committee on Pandemic Preparedness and Response:

As chair of the Select Committee, I asked our Division of Emergency Management Director, Jared Moskowitz to update our committee members on the state's COVID-19 vaccination efforts.

Director Moskowitz gave an incredibly detailed presentation and provided a week-by-week review of Florida's vaccine distribution and administration progress. Although Florida leads the nation in vaccinations of seniors 65 years of age and older, there remains a critical need for increased vaccine supply from the federal government. The lack of vaccine supply from the federal government is currently the major impediment to vaccinating more Floridians.

I also asked the Florida National Guard's Director of Military Support, Col. John L. Steele, to brief the Select Committee on their response to COVID-19.

The Florida National Guard continues to support the state's COVID-19 response through operational support of Community Based Testing Sites, Community Vaccination Sites, Mobile Testing Teams, augmentation to airport screening, statewide logistics support, coordination, food distribution, planning, and operational mission sets.

Natalie---Sen. Burgess and I have exchanged a couple of text messages about scheduling a Zoom call to discuss SB 484. Thought it might be a good idea to get you in the loop on this so we can nail down a date and time. Also---would Sen. Burgess be agreeable to having a few folks join the call that could give him some firsthand accounts of monument destruction?

Thank you!
