Subject: Black Education Tragedy Is New

Senator Tom Lee

Black Education Tragedy Is New by Walter Williams

Several years ago, Project Baltimore began an investigation of Baltimore's school system. What they found was an utter disgrace. In 19 of Baltimore's 39 high schools, out of 3,804 students, only 14 of them, or less than 1%, were proficient in math. In 13 of Baltimore's high schools, not a single student scored proficient in math. In five Baltimore City high schools, not a single student scored proficient in math or reading. Despite these academic deficiencies, about 70% of the students graduate and are conferred a high school diploma — a fraudulent high school diploma.

The Detroit Public Schools Community District scored the lowest in the nation compared to 26 other urban districts for reading and mathematics at the fourth- and eighth-grade levels. A recent video captures some of this miseducation in Milwaukee high schools: In two city high schools, only one student tested proficient in math and none are proficient in English. Yet, the schools spent a full week learning about "systemic racism" and "Black Lives Matter activism." By the way, a Nov. 19, 2020, Milwaukee Journal Sentinel article asks: "How many Black teachers did you have? I've only had two." The article concludes, "For future Black students, that number needs to go up." New York City is one of many school systems in the United States set to roll out Black Lives Matter-themed lesson plans. According to the NYC Department of Education, teachers will delve into "systemic racism," police brutality and white privilege in their classrooms.

Should we blame this education tragedy on racial discrimination or claim that it is a legacy of slavery? Dr. Thomas Sowell's research in "Education: Assumptions Versus History" documents academic excellence at Baltimore's Frederick Douglass High School and others. This academic excellence occurred during the late 1800s to mid-1900s, an era when blacks were much poorer than today and faced gross racial discrimination. Frederick Douglass High School of yesteryear produced many distinguished alumni, such as Thurgood Marshall and Cab Calloway, and several judges, congressmen and civil rights leaders. Frederick Douglass High School was second in the nation in black Ph.Ds. among its alumni.

Also, in Sowell's "Education: Assumptions Versus History" is the story of Paul Laurence Dunbar High School, a black public school in Washington, D.C. As early as 1899, its students scored higher on citywide tests than any of the city's white schools. From its founding in 1870 to 1955, most of its graduates went off to college. Dunbar's distinguished alumni include U.S. Sen. Edward Brooke, physician Charles Drew and, during World War II, nearly a score of majors, nine colonels and lieutenant colonels, and a brigadier general. Today's Paul Laurence Dunbar and Frederick Douglass high schools have material resources that would have been unimaginable to their predecessors. However, having those resources have meant absolutely nothing in terms of academic achievement.

If we accept the notion that rotten education is not preordained, then I wonder when the black community will demand an end to an educational environment that condemns so many youngsters to mediocrity. You can bet the rent money that white liberals and high-income blacks would not begin to accept the kind of education for their children that most blacks receive.

The school climate, seldom discussed, plays a very important role in education. During the 2017-18 school year, there were an estimated 962,300 violent incidents and 476,100 nonviolent incidents in U.S. public schools nationwide. Schools with 1,000 or more students had at least one sworn law enforcement officer. About 90% of those law enforcement officers carry firearms. Aside from violence, there are many instances of outright disrespect for teachers. First- and second-graders telling teachers to "Shut the f— up" and calling teachers "b——h."

Years ago, much of the behavior of young people that we see today would have never been tolerated. There was the vice principal's office where corporal punishment would be administered for gross infractions. If the kid was unwise enough to tell his parents what happened, he might get more punishment at home. Today, unfortunately, we have replaced practices that worked with practices that sound good and caring. And we are witnessing the results. Walter Williams, December 2, 2020

Very concerning

Subject: 3rd Party Bad Faith Case Law

Attachment(s): "3rd Party Bad Faith Cases.docx"

Sen. Burgess,

Here is a document that summarizes some of the major 3<sup>d</sup> party bad faith cases. The key case overall is probably Boston Old Colony v. Gutierrez, which builds upon Auto Mut. Indem. Co. v. Shaw.

From the insurer perspective, they disliked the Berges v. Infinity decision (but liked the dissents) and their current bête noire is Harvey v. GEICO.

Auto Mut. Indem. Co. v. Shaw, 184 So. 852 (Fla. 1938)

Florida Supreme Court Adopts Bad Faith Standard That Insurer Act Honestly and In Good Faith Towards Insured

It appears that the insurance company in the settlement of claims and in conducting a defense before the court on suits filed should be held to that degree of care and diligence which a man of ordinary care and prudence should exercise in the management of his own business. See G. A. Stowers Furniture Co. v. American Indemnity Co., Tex.Com.App., 15 S.W.2d 544; City of Wakefield v. Globe Indemnity Co., 246 Mich. 645, 225 N.W. 643; Georgia Casualty Co. v. Mann, 242 Ky. 447, 46 S.W.2d 777; Attleboro Mfg. Co. v. Frankfort Marine, etc., Ins. Co., 1 Cir., 240 F. 573; Cavanaugh Bros. v. General Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corp., 79 N.H. 186, 106 A. 604; Ballard v. Ocean Accident & Guarantee Co., 7 Cir., 86 F.2d 449. The prevailing rule seems to be, however, that the insurer must act in good faith toward the assured in its effort to negotiate a settlement. This the Defendant concedes, in complete accord with the holding in the Cooper Case, supra, that 'the insurer cannot escape liability by acting upon what it considers to be for its own interest alone, but it must also appear that it acted in good faith and dealt fairly with the insured. * * * This relationship imposes *831 upon the insurer the duty, not under the terms of the contract strictly speaking, but because of and flowing from it, to act honestly and in good faith toward the insured' considering that the action below cannot be sustained either upon the theory of negligence or of implied contract, but that it may be supported upon the allegations of bad faith exercised in the settlement negotiations by the defendant to the plaintiff. See Noshey v. American Automobile Ins. Co., 6 Cir., 68 F.2d 808; Maryland Casualty Co. v. CookO'Brien Const. Co., 8 Cir., 69 F.2d 462; Tiger River Pine Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co., 163 S.C. 229, 161 S.E. 491; Tyger River Pine Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co., 170 S.C. 286, 170 S.E. 346.

Thompson v. Commercial Union Ins. Co. of New York, 250 So.2d 259 (Fla. 1971)

Third-Party to the Insurance Contract May Sue Insurer Directly for Bad Faith

It is also established in this state that a third party beneficiary who is not a formal party to a contract may sue for damages sustained as the result of the acts of one of the parties to the contract. See Weimar v. Yacht Club Point Estate, Inc., 223 So.2d 100 \(Fla.App.4th, 1969\); Morse v. Hendry Corporation, 200 So.2d 816 \(Fla.App.2d, 1967\); DiCamillo v. Westinghouse Electric Corporation, 122 So.2d 499 \(Fla.App.2d, 1960\) (materialman as third party beneficiary); Flintkote Company v. Brewer Co. of Florida, 221 So.2d 784 \(Fla.App.3rd, 1969\)(materialman); Mugge v. Tampa Waterworks Co., 52 Fla. 371, 42 So. 81 \(1906\); Woodbury v. Tampa Waterworks Co., 57 Fla. 243, 249, 49 So. 556 \(1909\); Auto Mut. Indemnity Co. v. Shaw, 134 Fla. 815, 184 So. 852 \(1938\).

Essential to the right of a third party beneficiary of a contract to maintain an action for its breach is the clear intent and purpose of the contract to directly and substantially benefit the third party. See Woodbury v. Tampa Waterworks Co., Supra; First National Bank of St. Augustine v. Perkins, Supra; and East Coast Stores, Inc. v. Cuthbert, 101 Fla. 25, 133 So. 863 \(1931\).

'It cannot be disputed that securance of liability insurance coverage protection for the operation of a motor vehicle, regardless of whether the policy is secured to meet the requirements of Ch. 324, F.S., is an act undertaken by the insured with the intent of providing a ready means of discharging his obligations that may accrue to a member or members of the public as a result of his negligent operation of a motor vehicle on the public streets and highways of this state.

'The separate trial is not necessarily limited to the issue of coverage. The question of whether or not the carrier exercised good faith in the settlement of a claim against the insured could also be determined by a separate trial after the determination of the case on the merits.'

Thus, it is apparent that our holdings in Shingleton and Beta Eta have removed the only obstacle to adoption of the theory and reasoning expressed by Wigginton, J., in Canal Insurance, Supra.

Moreover, such a result accords with the settled public policy of this state to encourage and favor compromise and settlement of controversies when such settlement is entered into fairly and in good faith by competent parties, and is not procured by fraud or overreaching. See Florida East Coast R. Co. v. Thompson, 93 Fla. 30, 111 So. 525 (1927); Columbus Hotel Corp. v. Hotel Management Co., 116 Fla. 464, 156 So. 893 (1934); City of Coral Gables v. State, 128 Fla. 874, 176 So. 40 (1937); Harper v. Strong, 135 Fla. 10, 184 So. 848 (1938); Wade v. Wade, 63 So.2d 184 (Fla.1953); National Surety Co. v. Willys-Overland, Inc., 103 Fla. 738, 138 So. 24 (1931); Russell v. Shelby Mutual Insurance Company, 128 So.2d 161 (Fla.App.3rd, 1961); *264 In Re Estate of Kemp, 177 So.2d 757 (Fla.App.1st, 1965); Coe v. Diener, 159 So.2d 269 (Fla.App.2d, 1964).

Accordingly, we adopt the language set out above from the concurring opinion of Wigginton, J., in Canal Insurance Company of Greenville, S.C. v. Sturgis, Supra, and hold that a judgment creditor may maintain suit directly against tortfeasor's liability insurer for recovery of the judgment in excess of the policy limits, based upon the alleged fraud or bad faith of the insurer in the conduct or handling of the suit. Such allegations have been pleaded in the case under consideration.

Campbell v. Government Employees Ins. Co., 306 So.2d 525 (Fla. 1974)

Bad Faith, Not Negligence, is not the Standard in a Bad Faith Case

In Auto Mutual Indemnity Co. v. Shaw, supra, we aligned Florida with those states whose standards for determining liability in an excess judgment case is bad faith rather than negligence. We ruled therein that such matters as reasonable diligence and ordinary care were material in determining *531 bad faith. Traditionally, reasonable diligence and ordinary care are considerations of fact—not of law.

Boston Old' Colony Ins. V. Gutierrez, 386 So.2d 783 (Fla. 1980)

Duty of Good Faith

An insurer, in handling the defense of claims against its insured, has a duty to use the same degree of care and diligence as a person of ordinary care and prudence should exercise in the management of his own business. Auto Mutual Indemnity Co. v. Shaw, 134 Fla. 815, 184 So. 852 (1938). For when the insured has surrendered to the insurer all control over the handling of the claim, including all decisions with regard to litigation and settlement, then the insurer must assume a duty to exercise such control and make such decisions in good faith and with due regard for the interests of the insured. Liberty Mutual Ins. Co. v. Davis, 412 F.2d 475 (5th Cir. 1969).

Actions Necessary to Meet the Duty of Good Faith

This good faith duty obligates the insurer to advise the insured of settlement opportunities, to advise as to the probable outcome of the litigation, to warn of the possibility of an excess judgment, and to advise the insured of any steps he might take to avoid same. Ging v. American Liberty Ins. Co., 423 F.2d 115 (5th Cir. 1970). The insurer must investigate the facts, give fair consideration to a settlement offer that is not unreasonable under the facts, and settle, if possible, where a reasonably prudent person, faced with the prospect of paying the total recovery, would do so. Government

Employees Ins. Co. v. Grounds, 311 So.2d 164 (Fla. 1st DCA 1975), cert. discharged, 332 So.2d 13 \(Fla.1976\); Government Employees Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 288 So.2d 513 (Fla. 1st DCA 1973), quashed, 306 So.2d 525 \(Fla.1974\); Baxter v. Royal Indemnity Co., 285 So.2d 652 (Fla. 1st DCA 1973), cert. discharged, 317 So.2d 725 \(Fla.1975\).

Negligence Relevant to Whether Insurer Acted in Good Faith

Because the duty of good faith involves diligence and care in the investigation and evaluation of the claim against the insured, negligence is relevant to the question of good faith. American Fidelity and Casualty Co. v. Greyhound Corp., 258 F.2d 709 (5th Cir. 1958); DeLaune v. Liberty Mutual Ins. Co., 314 So.2d 601 \(Fla. 4th DCA 1975\). The question of failure to act in good faith with due regard for the interests of the insured is for the jury. Campbell v. Government Employees Ins. Co., 306 So.2d 525 \(Fla.1974\).

Example That Insured's Conduct and Decisions Are Relevant in Determining Whether Insurer Acted in Bad Faith

The evidence presented in the present case demonstrates that Boston Old Colony fulfilled all these obligations. We hold that under the facts of this case, Thompson does not require the result reached by the district court of appeal. There is no sufficient evidence from which any reasonable jury could have concluded that there was bad faith on the part of the insurer. The facts in Thompson are materially different from the facts now before us. In the present case, Brown, the insured, at all times contested liability and had evidence *786 to support his position. Brown expressly requested Boston Old Colony not to settle the claim because he was pursuing a counterclaim against plaintiff Gutierrez. Brown executed a "hold harmless" agreement in which he assumed responsibility for any excess judgment. After settlement of Brown's counterclaim, prior to trial, Boston Old Colony offered to settle for policy limits. Unlike Thompson, where the insurer refused to settle at all times despite advice of its own counsel, here the insurer was ready to settle, expressed its willingness to settle, and only because of the explicit request of its own insured did not settle. Furthermore, in the present case, unlike Thompson, the plaintiff refused to settle when the insurer subsequently offered to settle prior to trial.

General Acc. Fire & Life Assur. Corp., Ltd. v. American Cas. Co. of Reading, Pa., 390 So.2d 761 (Fla. 3rd DCA 1980).

Insurer Must Exercise Reasonable Diligence and Good Faith When Deciding Whether to Settle

The courts have developed an action for bad faith in order to protect insured persons from unnecessary excess judgments resulting from the willingness of insurance companies to risk trials rather than negotiate and settle claims against insured individuals. The insurance company, usually in control of settlement under policy provisions requiring its consent, is obligated to comply with its concomitant duty to exercise reasonable diligence and decide in good faith whether to settle a claim. Auto Mutual Indemnity Co. v. Shaw, 134 Fla. 815, 184 So. 852 (1938).

Powell v. Prudential Property & Cas. Ins. Co., 584 So.2d 12 (Fla. 3rd DCA 1991).

Claimant Settlement Offer Not Necessary for Bad Faith Regarding Settlement

The lack of a formal offer to settle does not preclude a finding of bad faith. Although an offer of settlement was once considered a necessary element of a duty to settle, 31 Fla.Jur.2d Insurance § 818, at 295 \(1981\), this court held in General Acc. Fire & Life Assur. Corp. v. American Cas. Co., 390 So.2d 761, 765 \(Fla. 3d DCA 1980\), rev. denied, 399 So.2d 1142 \(Fla.1981\), that an offer to settle is not a prerequisite to the imposition of liability for an insurer's bad faith refusal to settle, but is merely one factor to be considered. Moreover, liability may be predicated on a refusal to disclose policy limits. 14 Couch on Insurance 2d § 51:11, at 398 \(Rev. ed. 1982\). The refusal to inform a claimant of the policy limits deprives the claimant of a basis for evaluating the case, thus hindering settlement. Cernocky v. Indemnity Ins. Co., 69 Ill.App.2d 196, 216 N.E.2d 198 \(1966\) (refusal to disclose policy limits may constitute bad faith).

Bad Faith May Be Inferred From Willful, Without-Cause Delay in Settlement Negotiations

34Bad faith may be inferred from a delay in settlement negotiations which is willful and without reasonable cause. 46 C.J.S. Insurance § 1408 \(1946\). Where liability is clear, and injuries so serious that a judgment in excess of the policy limits is likely, an insurer has an affirmative duty to initiate settlement negotiations. Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Schropp, 222 Kan. 612, 567 P.2d 1359 \(1977\) (duty to initiate settlement negotiations arises if carrier would initiate settlement negotiations on its own behalf were its potential liability equal to that of its insured); Rova Farms Resort, Inc. v. Investors Ins. Co., 65 N.J. 474, 323 A.2d 495 \(1974\) (where substantial injuries and potential liability of insured are obvious, failure to offer policy limits constitutes bad faith even where there is no assurance that action can be settled); Alt v. American Family Mut. Ins. Co., 71 Wis.2d 340, 237 N.W.2d 706 \(1976\) (insurer has affirmative duty to investigate possibilities of settlement); Eastham v. Oregon Auto Ins. Co., 273 Or. 600, 540 P.2d 364 \(1975\) (insurer may be found to have acted in bad faith for delaying an offer to settle). See generally 14 Couch on Insurance 2d § 51:17 \(Rev. ed. 1982\); J. Appleman, Insurance Law and Practice § 4711, at 383 (Rev. ed. 1979).

Any question about the possible outcome of a settlement effort should be resolved in favor of the insured; the insurer has the burden to show not only that there was no realistic possibility of settlement within policy limits, but also that the insured was without the ability to contribute to whatever settlement figure that the parties could have reached. 44 Am.Jur.2d Insurance § 1401, at 340 \(1982\); J. Appleman, supra § 4711, at 385. Whether the insurer's delay in disclosing the policy limits foreclosed settlement negotiations and prevented an offer of settlement is a relevant and material fact issue. See also State Auto. Ins. Co. v. Rowland, 221 Tenn. 421, 427 S.W.2d 30 \(1968\) (insureds are not required, to prove as an element of their bad faith action, that claim could definitely have been settled within policy limits); Young v. American Cas. Co., 416 F.2d 906 \(2d Cir.N.Y.1969\) (same).

Shuster v. S. Broward Hosp. Dist. Physicians Prof'l Liab. Ins. Trust, 591 So.2d 174 (Fla. 1992)

Insurer Must Exercise Good Faith When Settling Claims of Multiple Claimants

For example, when there are multiple parties to a suit, we do not believe a “deems expedient” clause will protect an insurer who, in bad faith, indiscriminately settles with one or more of the parties for the full policy limits, thus exposing the insured to an excess judgment from the remaining parties. Clearly, the intent of the parties would not have been to allow the insurer to escape its primary duty to defend and indemnify the insured merely by paying out the full sum of the policy limits in bad faith.

State Farm Mut. Ins. Co. v. Laforet, 658 So.2d 55 (Fla. 1995)

In Florida, third-party bad faith actions were recognized as early as 1938. See Auto Mut. Indem. Co. v. Shaw, 134 Fla. 815, 184 So. 852 \(1938\). Moreover, even though the tort of bad faith occurred between an insurer and its insured, Florida courts allowed the injured third party to bring a bad faith action directly against the first party's insurer. Thompson v. Commercial Union Ins. Co., 250 So.2d 259 \(Fla.1971\). This was permitted because the injured third-party, as the beneficiary to the bad faith claim, was the real party in interest in a position similar to that of a “judgment creditor.” Id. at 264.

By the time the legislature enacted section 624.155 in 1982, it was clearly established in Florida law that third-party bad faith actions existed at common law. Thompson; Opperman v. Nationwide Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 515 So.2d 263 \(Fla. 5th DCA 1987\), review denied, 523 So.2d 578 \(Fla.1988\). There was, however, no first-party action by an insured <sup>*59</sup> for bad faith in Florida at common law. Baxter. Unlike third-party bad faith actions, in first-party bad faith actions the insured, particularly in uninsured motorist claims, is also the injured party who is to receive the benefits under the policy. McLeod v. Continental Ins. Co., 591 So.2d 621 \(Fla.1992\). Essentially, Florida courts had refused to recognize the tort of first-party bad faith because the type of fiduciary duty that exists in third-party actions is not present in first-party actions and the insurer is not exposing the insured to excess liability. As the court explained in Baxter, the relationship in a first-party bad faith action is the very antithesis of that established in third-party actions.

It is singularly important to ... note that regardless of the bad faith of the insurer in refusing to settle a claim against it by its insured under this provision of the policy, such action of the insurer can never result in a judgment against the uninsured motorist for any excess liability.... Because the interests of the insurer are wholly adverse to those of its insured as to every facet of a claim under the uninsured motorist provision of the policy, no basis for a fiduciary relationship between the parties exists.

Totality of the Circumstances Standard, Not “Fairly Debatable Standard,” Applies to Bad Faith

We next address State Farm's contention that the trial judge should have directed a verdict in its favor because, under the “fairly debatable” standard, there was no bad faith as a matter of law. Alternatively, State Farm argues that the jury's verdict was contrary to the manifest weight of the evidence. Under the “fairly debatable” standard, a claim for bad faith can succeed only if the plaintiff can show the absence of a reasonable basis for denying the claim. Anderson v. Continental Ins. Co., 85 Wis.2d 675, 271 N.W.2d 368 \(1978\). To date, no Florida court has specifically adopted the “fairly debatable” standard in bad faith actions. Robinson v. State Farm Fire & Casualty Co., 583 So.2d 1063 \(Fla. 5th DCA 1991\). Moreover, the approach by Florida courts in bad faith actions has been described as “unsettled.” Id. at 1067–68. One federal district court has expressly applied the “fairly debatable” standard to a Florida action but did so based on its use in other jurisdictions. See Reliance Ins. Co. v. Barile Excavating & Pipeline Co., 685 F.Supp. 839 \(M.D.Fla.1988\). Florida differs, however, from most jurisdictions given that first-party bad faith actions are actionable only under section 624.155 and not the common law. Henderson, supra, 26 U.Mich.J.L.Ref. at 27–30. Additionally, as previously discussed, section 624.155 provides remedies for both first- and third-party causes of actions. Section 624.155 provides that an insurer has acted in bad faith if it has “[n]ot attempt[ed] in good faith to settle claims when, under all the circumstances, it could and should have done so, had it acted fairly and honestly toward its insured and with due regard for [the insured's] interest.” § 624.155\(1\)\(b\) 1. Because this specific standard is set forth in section 624.155, we find it unnecessary and inappropriate to apply the “fairly debatable” standard to bad faith actions in Florida.

Farinas v. Florida Farm Bureau General Ins. Co., 850 So.2d 555 (Fla. 4th DCA 2003)

We are confronted with three questions: 1) what was Farm Bureau's good-faith duty to the insured, the Copertinos, in a multiple claimant situation, 2) did Farm Bureau meet that duty and 3) are there any remaining issues of fact for a jury to determine.

Obligation of Insurer in Handling Settlement of Multiple Competing Claims

On their faces, Boston Old Colony and related cases seem irreconcilably opposed to Harmon. Boston Old Colony provides that an insurer must conduct a full investigation of all competing claims arising out of an accident before endeavoring to settle any one individual claim, while keeping the insured informed at all junctures of the process. Harmon provides that an insurer may pick and choose which claims to settle based on any strategy it deems expedient, as long as those choices are reasonable. The trial court in the present case believes that it can decide which of these standards to apply. However, this is not the case, because the two cases are capable of harmonization.

Boston Old Colony and Harmon provide a general rule and a more specific application of that rule. The rule in Boston Old Colony sets a standard applicable in all automobile insurance bad faith cases, regardless of the factual circumstances and legal nuances of the cases. The Harmon rule focuses on the standard in scenarios with multiple competing claims. Therefore, the Boston Old Colony standard applies to all Florida cases alleging insurer bad faith, and Harmon applies to the subset of those cases involving multiple competing claims. Under this rationale, the present case is subject to both standards.

Farm Bureau was required by Boston Old Colony to fully investigate all the claims at hand to determine how to best limit the insured's liability. Additionally, based on Davis, Farm Bureau should have sought to settle as many claims as possible within the policy limits. Finally, based on Shuster, Farm Bureau had the duty to avoid indiscriminately settling selected claims and leaving the insured at risk of excess judgments that could have been minimized by wiser settlement practice. Whether Farm Bureau satisfied each of these requirements, are questions for a jury to decide.

Farm Bureau's good faith duty to the insured requires it to fully investigate all claims arising from a multiple claim accident, keep the insured informed of the claim resolution process, and minimize the magnitude of possible excess judgments against the insured by reasoned claim settlement. This does not mean that Farm Bureau has no discretion in how it elects to settle claims, and may even choose to settle certain claims to the exclusion of others, provided this decision is reasonable and in keeping with its good faith duty. Second, whether Farm Bureau has met its good faith duty and undertaken a reasonable claims settlement strategy are questions for a jury to decide. Consequently, in answer to the third question, there are many factual issues for the jury to resolve, including whether Farm Bureau's quick settlement with three of the possible claimants was reasonable, whether Farm Bureau's rejection of global and other settlement options contemplated the best interests of the insured, whether Farm Bureau adequately investigated the facts of all of the claims, and whether Farm Bureau properly rejected advice of legal counsel and suggested settlement strategies proposed by Farm Bureau employees.

Berges v. Infinity Ins. Co., 896 So.2d 665 (Fla. 2004)

Bad Faith is Generally a Jury Question

The First District's reasoning in Grounds is more consistent with insurance bad faith law, which generally reserves the question of bad faith for the jury. See Gutierrez, 386 So.2d at 785 (“The question of failure to act in good faith with due regard for the interests of the insured is *673 for the jury.”); see also Campbell v. Gov't Employees Ins. Co., 306 So.2d 525, 530–31 \(Fla.1974\) (“[R]easonable diligence and ordinary care [are] material in determining bad faith. Traditionally, reasonable diligence and ordinary care are considerations of fact—not of law.”).

In Florida, the question of whether an insurer has acted in bad faith in handling claims against the insured is determined under the “totality of the circumstances” standard. See State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Laforet, 658 So.2d 55, 63 \(Fla.1995\). Each case is determined on its own facts and ordinarily “[t]he question of failure to act in good faith with due regard for the interests of the insured is for the jury.” Gutierrez, 386 So.2d at 785; see also Campbell, 306 So.2d at 530–31 (“[R]easonable diligence and ordinary care [are] material in determining bad faith. Traditionally, reasonable diligence and ordinary care are considerations of fact—not of law.”).

Duty to Inform the Insured of Settlement Offers

The duty to inform the insured of settlement opportunities is one of the duties subsumed within the duty of good faith owed by an insurer to an insured. The failure to inform the insured of the settlement offer does not automatically establish bad faith; it is simply one factor for the jury to consider in determining whether the insurer acted in bad faith. See id. at 14 (concluding that the “lack of a formal offer to settle does not preclude a finding of bad faith,” but is merely one factor to be considered by the jury); Gen. Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corp. v. Am. Cas. Co., 390 So.2d 761, 765 (Fla. 3d DCA 1980) (same).

Dissent

I recognize that since this Court's decision in Boston Old Colony Insurance Co. v. Gutierrez, 386 So.2d 783 (Fla.1980), bad faith claims against liability insurers have served a useful role in the regulation of Florida's insurers. I know that there are real incidents of bad faith conduct on the part of insurers in the handling of insurance claims, which are deservedly a basis for bad faith damages. In other words, there is a place for a remedy against insurers that in real situations act in actual bad faith.

On the other hand, I must also recognize that there are strategies which have developed in the pursuit of insurance claims which are employed to create bad faith claims against insurers when, after an objective, advised view of the insurer's claims handling, bad faith did not occur. This is a strategy which consists of setting artificial deadlines for claims payments and the withdrawal of settlement offers when the artificial deadline is not met. The goal of this strategy is to convert a policy purchased by the insured which has low limits of insurance into unlimited insurance coverage.<sup>11</sup>

It is my conclusion that this strategy is what was employed in this case and is the basis of this case. I cannot join in the majority's approval of what I conclude is a created—rather than a real—bad faith claim. Perpetuating this kind of bad faith action is not only wrong on the basis of the claims handling facts in this particular case but is greatly detrimental to Florida's liability insurance consumers because of the increases in their insurance costs.

I conclude that what is needed are express guidelines which include set time periods in which all insurers must presumptively make decisions on claims and issue payments. The guidelines should set out the conditions for payments such as for the appointment of guardians. There is also a need for defined penalties for failure to meet these time requirements rather than limitless insurance. In view of this *687 decision, I regret that there appears to be no alternative but that the guidelines will have to be mandated by statute.

Discovery in First-Party Claims Under 624.155, F.S., is the Same as Under Third-Party Claims

Consistent with the analysis outlined, we hold that in connection with evaluating the obligation to process claims in good faith under section 624.155, all materials, *1130 including documents, memoranda, and letters, contained in the underlying claim and related litigation file material that was created up to and including the date of resolution of the underlying disputed matter and pertain in any way to coverage, benefits, liability, or damages, should also be produced in a first-party bad faith action. Further, all such materials prepared after the resolution of the underlying disputed matter and initiation of the bad faith action may be subject to production upon a showing of good cause or pursuant to an order of the court following an in-camera inspection. See Fla. R. Civ. Pro. 1.280\(b\), 1.350; Fla. Farm Bureau Gen. Ins. Co. v. Copertino, 810 So.2d 1076, 1079 \(Fla. 4th DCA 2002\). However, we caution that where the coverage and bad faith actions are initiated simultaneously, the courts should employ existing tools, such as the abatement of actions and in-camera inspection, to ensure full and fair discovery in both causes of action.<sup>3</sup> In no event should parties be permitted to undermine the plain meaning, spirit, and intent of the Legislature's mandate or this pronouncement by attempting to shield documents that pertain to the processing or litigation of the underlying claim by merely asserting that such documents were prepared in anticipation of litigation of the bad faith action. Obviously, files are opened routinely in the insurance business when claims are presented and that type of material should contain an accurate record of the manner in which the matter has been processed. In the same vein, litigants who choose to file both actions simultaneously must recognize that certain documentation relevant to the bad faith action may not be available for discovery until after resolution of the underlying matter. See Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. HomeAmerican Credit, Inc., 844 So.2d 818, 819 \(Fla. 5th DCA 2003\) (holding that a party is not entitled to discovery of an insurer's claim file in an action for insurance benefits combined with bad faith until the insurer's obligation to provide coverage has been established); Allstate Ins. Co. v. Shupack, 335 So.2d 620, 621 \(Fla. 3d DCA 1976\) (same). However, when the underlying claim for benefits has been resolved, all files pertaining to the underlying dispute which produced the alleged bad faith are discoverable as in traditional common law third-party bad faith cases for failure to settle third-party claims.

Macola v. Government Employees Ins. Co., 953 So.2d 451 (Fla. 2006)

The Tender of Policy Limits in Response to a Civil Remedy Notice Does Not Preclude a Common Law Bad Faith Action

We have for review two questions of Florida law certified by the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit.<sup>1</sup> Because both appellants have filed only common law third-party bad faith causes of action, we rephrase the certified questions into a single question:

DOES THE TENDERING OF THE POLICY LIMITS BY AN INSURER IN RESPONSE TO THE FILING OF A CIVIL REMEDY NOTICE UNDER SECTION 624.155, FLORIDA STATUTES \(2005\), BY THE INSURED AFTER THE INITIATION OF A LAWSUIT AGAINST THE INSURED BUT BEFORE ENTRY OF AN EXCESS JUDGMENT PRECLUDE A COMMON LAW BAD FAITH CAUSE OF ACTION BY THE INSURED AND INJURED THIRD PARTIES?

For the reasons that follow, we answer the rephrased certified question in the negative.<sup>2</sup>

Regarding section 624.155\(3\)\(d\), we clearly delineated the effect of this cure provision on a first-party action for bad faith in Talat. Because a cause of action for extracontractual damages for first-party bad faith was unavailable under the common law, we strictly construed the civil remedy statute and held that the tender of the policy limits within the sixty-day period cured any alleged violation of subsection (1)(b)(1). See Talat, 753 So.2d at 1283–84. We explained that the only remedy was statutory and that the statute conditioned the remedy on notice by the insured and failure by the insurer to pay the damages within the cure period. See id. In other words, in the first-party context, “[t]he statutory cause of action for extra-contractual damages simply never comes into existence until expiration of the sixty-day window without the payment of the damages owed under the contract.” Id. at 1284.

We have never construed the cure provision in the context of a third-party bad faith action. And, the difference between first-party and third-party bad faith causes of action is critical. As we recently explained in Ruiz, a third-party bad faith cause of action arises when the insurer fails to act in good faith in handling a claim brought by a third party against an insured, whereas a first-party bad faith cause of action arises when an insurer fails to act in good faith in the processing of the insured's own first-party claim. See 899 So.2d at 1125. Although section 624.155 is in derogation of the common law with respect to first-party bad faith, the statute codifies the common law with respect to third-party bad faith. Compare Talat, 753 So.2d at 1283 (“[T]he civil remedy provided in subdivision (1)(b)1 was not in existence for first-party insureds before the adoption of the civil remedy statute.”), with Zebrowski, 706 So.2d at 277 (“[T]he *458 enactment of section 624.155\(1\)\(b\)\(1\) had the effect of codifying Thompson ... and Cope ...”). Thus, the premise for our decision in Talat—that the insured had no remedy without the statute—does not apply to third-party actions.

Further, “the essence of a third-party bad faith cause of action is to remedy a situation in which an insured is exposed to an excess judgment because of the insurer's failure to properly or promptly defend the claim.” Cunningham v. Standard Guar. Ins. Co., 630 So.2d 179, 181 \(Fla.1994\) (citing Cope, 462 So.2d at 460). Accordingly, where the underlying tort action against the insured no longer exists, either because the injured party has released the insured from liability or the underlying judgment has been satisfied, the cause of action for third-party bad faith no longer exists. Id. However, the tender of the policy limits to the insured when the underlying tort action is still pending does not eliminate the underlying tort action or the insured's exposure to an excess verdict. Thus, interpreting section 624.155\(3\)\(d\) to allow the tender of the policy limits after the time period to settle has expired to preclude a common law cause of action for third-party bad faith puts the insured in a worse position than he or she would have been in had the Legislature not enacted section 624.155. This result would be inconsistent with the plain language of section 624.155\(8\) that the civil remedy statute “does not preempt any other remedy or cause of action provided for pursuant to ... the common law of this state.”

Perera v. U.S. Fidelity and Guar. Co., 35 So.3d 893 (Fla. 2010)

Although an excess judgment is not always a prerequisite to bringing a bad-faith claim, the existence of a causal connection is a prerequisite—in other words, the claimed damages must be caused by the bad faith.

Harvey v. GEICO General Ins. Co., 259 So.3d 1 (Fla 2018).

Summary of Good Faith Duty

Almost four decades ago, we explained the law of bad faith and the good faith duty insurers owe to their insureds in handling their claims, which still holds true today. See Boston Old Colony, 386 So.2d at 785. We explained that “in handling the defense of claims against its insured,” the insurer “has a duty to use the same degree of care and diligence as a person of ordinary care and prudence should exercise in the management of his own business.” Id. This duty arises from the nature of the insurer's role in handling the claim on the insured's behalf—because the insured “has surrendered to the insurer all control over the handling of the claim, including all decisions with regard to litigation and settlement, then the insurer must assume a duty to exercise such control and make such decisions in good faith and with due regard for the interests of the insured.” Id. We explained in great detail what this duty requires of insurers:

This good faith duty obligates the insurer to advise the insured of settlement opportunities, to advise as to the probable outcome of the litigation, to warn of *7 the possibility of an excess judgment, and to advise the insured of any steps he might take to avoid same. The insurer must investigate the facts, give fair consideration to a settlement offer that is not unreasonable under the facts, and settle, if possible, where a reasonably prudent person, faced with the prospect of paying the total recovery, would do so. Because the duty of good faith involves diligence and care in the investigation and evaluation of the claim against the insured, negligence is relevant to the question of good faith.

We reaffirmed this duty insurers owe to their insureds in Berges, stating that the insurer “owe[s] a fiduciary duty to act in [the insured’s] best interests.” 896 So.2d at 677. Indeed, “this is what the insured expects when paying premiums.” Id. at 683.

5678The obligations set forth in Boston Old Colony are not a mere checklist. An insurer is not absolved of liability simply because it advises its insured of settlement opportunities, the probable outcome of the litigation, and the possibility of an excess judgment. Rather, the critical inquiry in a bad faith is whether the insurer diligently, and with the same haste and precision as if it were in the insured’s shoes, worked on the insured’s behalf to avoid an excess judgment. “[T]he question of whether an insurer has acted in bad faith in handling claims against the insured is determined under the ‘totality of the circumstances’ standard.” Id. at 680. Further, it is for the jury to decide whether the insurer failed to “act in good faith with due regard for the interests of the insured.” Boston Old Colony, 386 So.2d at 785. This Court will not reverse a jury’s finding of bad faith where it is supported by competent, substantial evidence, as “it is not the function of [the appellate court] to substitute its judgment for the trier of fact.” Berges, 896 So.2d at 680.

Insurer’s Duty to Initiate Settlement Negotiations

In a case “[w]here liability is clear, and injuries so serious that a judgment in excess of the policy limits is likely, an insurer has an affirmative duty to initiate settlement negotiations.” Powell v. Prudential Prop. & Cas. Ins. Co., 584 So.2d 12, 14 \(Fla. 3d DCA 1991\). In such a case, where “[t]he financial exposure to [the insured] [i]s a ticking financial time bomb” and “[s]uit c[an] be filed at any time,” any “delay in making an offer under the circumstances of this case even where there was no assurance that the claim could be settled could be viewed by a fact finder as evidence of bad faith.” Goheagan v. Am. Vehicle Ins. Co., 107 So.3d 433, 439 \(Fla. 4th DCA 2012\) (citing Boston Old Colony, 386 So.2d at 785).

Causation

The damages claimed by an insured in a bad faith case “must be caused by the insurer’s bad faith.” Perera v. U.S. Fidelity & Guar. Co., 35 So.3d 893, 902 \(Fla. 2010\). However, “the focus in a bad faith case is not on the actions of the claimant but rather on those of the insurer in fulfilling its obligations to the insured.” Berges, 896 So.2d at 677.

While this Court has stated that “there must be a causal connection between the damages claimed and the insurer’s bad faith,” Perera, 35 So.3d at 902, this Court has never held or even suggested that an insured’s actions can let the insurer off the hook when the evidence clearly establishes that the insurer acted in bad faith in handling the insured’s claim. In fact, the standard jury instructions on legal cause in a bad faith case belies the Fourth District’s conclusion that where the insured’s own actions, even “in part” cause the judgment, the insurer cannot be found liable for bad faith. Indeed, the standard legal cause instruction states:

Bad faith conduct is a legal cause of [loss] [damage] [or] [harm] if it directly and in natural and continuous sequence produces or contributes substantially to producing such [loss] [damage] [or] [harm], so that it can reasonably be said that, but for the bad faith conduct, the [loss] [damage] [or] [harm] would not have occurred.

Fla. Std. Jury Instr. (Civ.) 404.6(a). Nowhere in this instruction does it state that an insurer can escape liability merely because the insured's actions could have contributed to the excess judgment.<sup>3</sup>

To All Legislative Members: This request is pending approval by the Executive Office of the Governor and is now in Legislative Consultation. It will be implemented at the end of the consultation period on 2/17/2021 if no formal objection is filed, pursuant to Chapter 216.177 F.S.

Budget Amendment Request #: B0470

Requested by: Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services

Problem Statement:

This amendment requests the transfer of $69,232 of budget authority from the Expense category to the Acquisition of Motor Vehicle category in the General Inspection Trust Fund to purchase two 2021 Police Package Dodge Chargers with the necessary police sirens and other law Enforcement equipment. The requested vehicles will both replace 2007 Ford Crown Victorias involved in separate accidents resulting in total losses. These are pursuit vehicles stationed and used at interdiction stations, and the Office of Agricultural Law Enforcement (OALE) does not have sufficient fleet to replace the station vehicles, currently resulting in fewer vehicles available for front-line agricultural law enforcement needs. Because of the immediate need to replace the two totaled vehicles, we are requesting full release of the transferred appropriation in order to procure vehicles immediately. The Expense appropriation is fully released at this time.

On July 21, 2020, our Officer was in route to her assigned duty station, driving vehicle ACS-28476 when she was involved in a single-car accident. The Officer was in Georgia, travelling north on GA 23 and negotiating a left-hand curve when the vehicle began to skid. The front and right side of the vehicle struck several small trees before overturning and landing on its roof in the west ditch of GA 23.

This Police Pursuit vehicle has been deemed a total loss. It has 139,470 miles and is 13 years old. The Kelly Blue Book value is between $378 and $805 and therefore meets the DMS criteria for replacement. The Office of Agricultural Law Enforcement received approval from DMS to dispose of the vehicle.

On September 17, 2020, one of our officers was involved in an accident in Duval County while working an off-duty traffic control detail using ACS-28755. The Officer was stationary in the outside travel lane on I-295, which was closed and blocked off with construction barrels. She then proceeded through the construction barrels and entered the southbound travel lane. A vehicle traveling south in the inside lane struck the left rear of the police vehicle. Lowest repair estimate was $5,502, while the Kelly Blue Book value is between $150 and $474. This Police Pursuit vehicle has 198,911 miles and is 13 years old and we have received approval from DMS to dispose of the vehicle.

Agency Request:

The Office of Agricultural Law Enforcement was not appropriated any budget authority in the Acquisition of Motor Vehicle Category for FY 2020-21. This request is to transfer authority from the Expense Category to the Acquisition of Motor Vehicle Category in order to purchase two 2021 Police Package Dodge Chargers and the necessary police sirens, lights and other police equipment. The new vehicles will replace two totaled 2007 Ford Crown Victorias. The Office of Agricultural Law Enforcement has sufficient Expense authority to cover this transfer and these vehicles are needed to perform our mission.

Problem Statement:

The Division of Risk Management manages workers' compensation claims, employment discrimination and civil rights claims, property claims, and general liability and automobile liability claims for the state, including claims for bodily injury, property damage, or death resulting from negligence of a state employee conducting state business or while driving a vehicle. The Division utilizes an insurance management system to manage claims. Utilization of this system requires an annual payment for licenses, hosting services, and file storage. The payment is invoiced and paid in January/February each year.

The Division utilizes the budget authority in the Risk Management Information Claims System category to make the annual payment. The Division has received an invoice from the vendor for $552,257 and payment is needed by the first of February. In addition, the Division has also received an invoice for $8,558.75 for the first and second notice of injury transactions for the first four months. The current release of 456,366 is insufficient to pay the current invoices. In order to pay these invoices and to cover an additional $45,841.25 in invoices expected, the Division is requesting early release for the 4th quarter. The release request of 152,118 from the State Risk Management Trust Fund, represents the calculated 4th quarter release with the holdback. This request keeps 6% of the original appropriation unreleased in accordance with the current release plan.

Subject: A Constitutional Minute Week of 24 January 2021

To the Sovereigns of Florida:

As an aside, this is our third Constitutional Minute - we will provide a link to where these are posted in the near future.

An "INVASION" is defined as:

- An instance of invading a country or region
- An incursion by a large number of people
- An unwelcome intrusion into another's domain

The Constitution states in Article IV Section 4: "The United States shall guarantee to every state in this union, a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against INVASION." Regardless of how the average person defines an invasion today, an excess of 100,000 foreigners from one country, deliberately violating our laws to gain entry into our nation every year is irrefutably tantamount to an INVADING political or social force.

- When illegal aliens get involved in our political process to:
- Vote
- Demand representation
- Politically protest

Or try to participate in our political processes

Then they become political combatants as an invading force, and are actively working to undermine our laws and government.

In addition to the protection from INVASION, the Constitution also requires Congress to exercise the power "To establish an uniform rule of naturalization... throughout the United States." A "uniform rule of naturalization" does not include giving a race, culture, or an age group preferential treatment over any other immigrant. Uniformity means all immigrants have equal opportunity to immigrate and that the same entrance criteria are applied to all. The truth is there are over ten Million of INVADERS in America today and according to Yale and MIT the place the number well above TWENTY million illegal aliens. Information about the Yale/MIT study can be found here: <https://thehill.com/latino/407848-yale-mit-study-22-million-not-11-million-undocumented-immigrants-in-us>

Even more important - the Constitution also requires: that ALL "senators and representatives... and the members of the several state legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several states, shall be bound by oath or affirmation, to support this constitution." This means our public servants are required to "support" the Constitution and "protect" each State from INVASION by ensuring an INVASION of foreigners for social, military, or political purposes is "REPELLED."

When public servants give aid or comfort to those violating the Constitution, or acting with the intent to violate its laws, then these public servants are acting as subversives against the Constitution and deliberately rebelling against the Constitution and laws in pursuance thereof - in essence, committing moral perjury. The framers placed several checks and balances into the Constitution. One such check in the Constitution was requiring all public servants federal and state be bound by a "legal" oath of office. The oath of office was to ensure our public servants would be legally bound to support the Constitution and not bound to support a person, the government itself, or a Party.

After the Civil War, Congress recognized that the oath of office, as well as simply depending upon the honor and character of a person was inadequate. Congress felt the Constitution needed greater teeth to regulate the behavior of ALL public servants both federal and state. This is why Section 3 was added to the 14th Amendment - to protect the Constitution from future rebellious public servants. During the debates in Congress Section 3 was well-defined that a public servant who violates their oath of office would be deemed as "moral perjury." If a public servant commits moral perjury at any level of government they would be violating their oath of office which they are bound to uphold. Therefore, according to Section 3 of the 14th Amendment public servants committing moral perjury would no longer be "qualified" to hold a public office.

This loss of qualification means they must be immediately removed from office and banned from holding any public office for the remainder of their lives. Just like impeachment, this is neither a criminal punishment nor a court process. The Public Servant is deemed no longer qualified to hold office. Public servants who blatantly violate their oath to not "support" the Constitution but support those rebelling against the Constitution are committing "moral perjury."

Supporting the Constitution obligates public servants to perform duties such as protecting each State from INVASION. Consequently, when a member of Congress fails to protect the States from an invasion - this is directly violating their oath by protecting those who are violating our laws; furthermore, when elected officials offering preferential treatment to a certain group of illegal aliens they are also violating the Constitutions "uniform rule of naturalization." Obviously Section 3 is being ignored. If we are to preserve our laws and Constitution we must demand full compliance to the Constitution. Since elected officials have not been inclined to enforce Section 3 at the federal level, then the enforcement must start with the State Legislative bodies.

State Legislators, County Commissioners or Supervisors, Sheriffs and Coroners have the authority to call for Common Law Grand Juries which are capable of enforcing Section 3. Until we use the teeth in the Constitution to remove those deliberately violating the Constitution this problem of non-compliance will continue to get worse.

More importantly, the new Biden Administration is planning on violating the Constitution by not protecting the States from this invasion and is asking Congress to legalize more than ten million invaders. The States must act in every capacity, using the Attorney Generals to sue the Biden Administration and removing members of Congress who openly support and call for violating the Constitution; thus, committing moral perjury.

Best Regards

G. R. Mobley

Create a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions

SB 54 creates a new framework to govern all bad faith claims for failure to settle related to motor vehicle insurance. Policyholders will benefit because the bill requires insurers to follow claims handling best practices standards based on long-established good faith duties related to claim handling, claim investigation, defense of the insured, and settlement negotiations.

The bill will prevent settlement negotiations where parties try to hide information or place unduly short timeframes on settlement offers. An insurer should only be found in bad faith for failing to settle a claim if the claimant was actually willing to settle and placed reasonable conditions on settlement. Thus, the bill establishes that it is a condition precedent to bringing a third-party bad faith action not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., that the claimant serve a demand for settlement. The demand must:

- Identify the date and location of the loss, the claimant, and insured.
- State the legal and factual basis of the claim.
- Detail the claimant's injuries, medical treatment, and the amount of current and reasonably anticipated future damages.
- Demand a settlement amount, which may not exceed the insured's policy limit.
- Release, if accepted, the insured from any further liability.
- Not provide conditions on the settlement other than payment of the demand and the ability of the claimant to take an examination under oath of the insured.

Naturally, a claimant deserves to know whether recovery from an insured's assets is possible before agreeing to a settlement within the insurance policy limits. The bill will allow the claimant to condition the demand for settlement on taking a 2 hour examination under oath (EUO) of the insured limited to discovering recoverable assets.

- The bad faith claimant may withdraw the demand for settlement after the EUO. This is only fair because claimants should not and cannot be forced to settle within policy limits.
- The bill requires the insured to cooperate with the claimant and submit to the EUO. If the insured refuses to submit to the EUO, the insurer may tender policy limits without obtaining a release of the insured and may not be held liable if there is an excess judgment against the insured.

The provisions of the bill regarding settlement will show whether an insurer truly refused a settlement offer. If so, then that insurer may have engaged in bad faith. If, however, an insurer is willing to offer its policy limits in return for a waiver of liability for its insured, it is obvious that the insurer was willing to do what is within its power to shield its insured from damages above the insurance policy. Policyholders will benefit because their insurer is incentivized to try and settle for policy limits when appropriate. Further, eliminating large bad faith awards in certain circumstances will create less pressure to settle non-meritorious claims and should lower rates.

The key question in a bad faith failure to settle case is whether the insurer failed to settle when it could and should have done so. If an insurer proves they were willing to settle and tender policy limits, then the insurer hasn't acted in bad faith in refusing to settle. Accordingly, the bill provides a safe harbor to the insurer in third-party bad faith action not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., providing that an insurer is not liable for bad faith if it tenders policy limits within 30 days of receiving a demand for settlement.

Bad faith claims should consider not only the insurer's actions and omissions, but also the behavior of all the various parties to the lawsuit, because those are relevant regarding whether the fact a settlement didn't occur is because of the insurer, or whether other parties' actions were the cause. The bill requires the trier of fact, when determining if an insurer in bad faith failed to settle, to consider certain actions of the insurer such as compliance with best practices along with certain actions of the insured and claimant.

The bill also prohibits punitive damages in a bad faith failure to settle action. A bad faith action provides strong punishment for an insurer's bad behavior. The bad faith action itself provides extra-contractual damages that can range into the tens-of-millions of dollars. Given that fact, punitive damages are unnecessary.

Good Evening Members & Staff,

I hope this message finds you well! On behalf of Florida Rising and on the eve of Black History Month, I wanted to take a moment to share resources with you in our continued opposition to HB 1 / SB 484, along with one of many examples of historic acts of nonviolent civil disobedience this legislation will silence.

An overview of last week's first committee hearing is linked here. The bill has found opposition from racial justice advocates, public defenders, law enforcement, faith leaders, and even Ariana Grande. Attached is a 2-pager by the ACLU which provides a summary of the legislation.

Pictured: Protesters attempt to block the delivery of toxic PCB waste to a landfill in Warren County, N.C., in 1982. It was in response to the state's decision to locate a hazardous waste landfill in a low-income, predominantly Black area of Warren County that the term "environmental racism" was first used by the Rev. Ben Chavis. Read more here.

"A white man pulled a gun at a Florida protest. Black men took the blame!" In the Tampa Bay Times story, a woman tells drivers of Black Lives Matter protestors "You can run them over. DeSantis said so!" This bill does not include the stand your ground expansion the Governor originally supported, but it does allow a counter-protester to escape civil liability for injuring or killing a protester with their car, with a gun, or by any other means.

- A poll released last week found that of all tested issues, "protecting our constitutional right to free assembly and free speech" was rated as the most important, with 71% saying it was "extremely important." 71% of Democrats and 74% of Republicans placed it in the "extremely important" category.
- Linked here is a 2020 study by the Economic Policy Institute, which details the prevalence of preemption in the South, and how it is embedded in a racist history.

As always, if you have any questions do not hesitate to reach out.

Warmest,

OPPOSE SB 484/HB 1 - Punishing Racial Justice Protesters Act (Anti-Protest Act)

The ACLU of Florida opposes this bill because it is designed to further silence, punish, and criminalize those advocating for racial justice and an end to law enforcement's excessive use of force against Black and brown people.

The Bill is Intended to Silence Dissent and Punish Protesters Seeking Justice For Police Brutality

SB 484(Sen. Burgess)/HB 1(Rep. Fernandez-Barquin) was originally proposed last September by Governor Ron DeSantis to crack down on racial justice protests in the wake of George Floyd's murder. This bill attacks our free speech rights, intentionally chilling the act of protesting by threatening overly harsh criminal penalties that will be imposed disproportionately on people of color. Florida law enforcement officers and our criminal legal system do not need harsher penalties to be misapplied against Black and brown communities exercising their First Amendment rights.

The Bill is Overbroad and Vague and Will Chill Speech and Assembly

Vague and overly broad key definitions in this bill unconstitutionally threaten our First Amendment rights of free speech and assembly. For example, a new overly broad definition of "riot" would allow for the arrest and charge of a third-degree felony based on the riotous conduct of others, even though the individual arrested was lawfully exercising their First Amendment rights and did not engage in any violent and disorderly acts.

The Bill is Contrary to Criminal Justice Reform Efforts

This bill would result in more people, primarily Black and brown individuals, being incarcerated in jails and prisons for longer periods of time. By harshly increasing penalties and prison sentence lengths, creating brand new felonies, and deeming misdemeanors to be felonies resulting in felony disenfranchisement and all the collateral consequences of felony convictions (loss of voting rights, barriers to employment, education, and housing), this heavy-handed bill will exacerbate our overly high incarceration rates and undermine our criminal justice reform efforts.

The Bill is Unnecessary: Florida Statutes Already Criminalize Violence and Destruction of Property

This bill is entirely unnecessary. Current Florida law already criminalizes unlawful assembly, violence, property damage, traffic violations, violence directed at law enforcement, riots and sedition. Florida has more than enough laws currently on the books that punish the behaviors described in SB 484/HB 1. In addition to the above, Chapter 876, Florida Statutes, "Criminal Anarchy, Treason, and Other Crimes Against Public Disorder" provide law enforcement with an entirely separate arsenal to punish those who seek to violently overthrow our government. While the Governor is disingenuously trying to "rebrand" this bill as necessary in light of the attempted violent white-supremacist coup on our nation's Capitol, tellingly, this bill does not even mention Chapter 876.

The Bill Protects Confederate Monuments

Further evidencing the bill’s intent to punish those calling for racial justice, the bill seeks to protect confederate monuments by creating a new second degree felony offense, punished by up to 15 years imprisonment, for pulling down or destroying ‘memorials’ that honor or recount “the military service of any past or present United States Armed Forces military personnel,” or public service of a resident of the United States. Current statutes already protect against damage to property; the purpose of this bill is to elevate the protection of confederate monuments and harshly criminalize and disenfranchise those who seek their removal.

The Bill Prohibits Release Until First Appearance for Individuals Exercising Their First Amendment Rights

Throughout the bill, there are several offenses that would no longer be eligible for release on bail prior to first appearance. These “no release until first appearance” provisions require individuals to be held in custody beyond that which is currently required by law. Most outrageously, under SB 484/HB 1, individuals arrested for the minor offense of unlawful assembly “shall be held in custody until brought before the court for admittance to bail.” Thus, under this bill, anyone peacefully protesting should be prepared to spend the night in jail.

The Bill Usurps Local Control of Policing Decisions and Waives Sovereign Immunity

The bill allows the Governor, with the Cabinet, to reject and amend any city budget. This provision will require the municipality to spend taxpayer and staff resources to defend any appeal that is brought by any resident with regard to any amount of reduction in funding. Given the economic realities stemming from COVID, municipalities need flexibility within their budget to address public health and safety.

It also waives sovereign immunity for municipalities, allowing individuals to bring civil lawsuits against municipalities for any amount of damages for personal injury, wrongful death or property damage based on an after-the-fact determination of whether law enforcement’s response to the unlawful assembly or riot was reasonable. Under current law, damages against municipalities are typically capped at $200,000, this bill would make municipalities liable for unlimited amounts of damages.

The Bill Will Increase Violence Against Protesters

The bill will embolden and encourage violence against protesters peacefully exercising their First Amendment rights by allowing a counter-protester to escape civil liability for injuring or killing a protester with their car, with a gun, or by any other means.

Subject: Compelling Reason to Vote "NO" on S 522/ H 219

Attachment(s): "BIPPA VR's to State Congress R2 1-19-21.docx"

Dear Senator,

The reasoning to "Vote No" on S 522 is attached.

It is compelling because it explains the bad experience that an entire county of 600,000 residents went through which could have been avoided if officials surveyed residents with this simple yes or no question BEFORE jumping ahead:

"Do you want commercial tourist activities in the form of Vacation Rentals in your neighborhood?"

The answer in Brevard County was overwhelmingly "NO".

Please read the attached and save the other 21 million Florida residents from going through the roller coaster ride that we did in Brevard.

Thank You,

Mark Shantzis,

President

Barrier Islands Preservation and Protection Association (BIPPA)

Vacation Rentals Do Not Belong in Residential Neighborhoods

Florida Voters Are Against Neighborhood Daily Rentals!

Vote “NO” on H-219/S-522

Barrier Islands Preservation and Protection Association (BIPPA), in partnership with many other community organizations and NGO’s representing thousands of Brevard County voting homeowners, in an overwhelming display of property rights, recently affirmed the desire to:

- 1) Keep Vacation Rentals (VR’s) out of residentially zoned neighborhoods, and
- 2) Retain the local “home rule” control of Vacation Rentals

Brevard County is arguably Florida’s most geographically diverse and voter representative, and as such, the voters of Brevard are a clear indication of what the rest of Florida residents believe:

Where residents live and raise their families is clearly incompatible with commercial tourist activities. Chaotic operating services constantly coming and going, and unknown tourists, none of whom vote or think much about protecting the people or natural resources of the local neighborhoods, are unacceptable.

THE most important take-away from a 4-1 commission vote against VR’s in neighborhoods was that permanent resident voter’s property right to live in a neighborhood atmosphere is very important. And that the property right of owners specifically to make a profit and of government to collect commercial sales taxes, on residentially zoned property, is not.

In fact, even the tourists that occupy VR’s agree!

These tourists that have left their safe and secure neighborhoods to go on vacation will be the first to tell you that they do not want VR’s in their neighborhood back home, but are more than happy to party somewhere else.

So why is this issue constantly coming up in our State legislature?

The answer is that the State legislature is failing to properly inform the general public of potentially important life-style changing legislation. State legislators are making the same mistake initially made by Brevard Commissioners.

What we found in Brevard is that when the public was uninformed of the pending passage of permitting VR’s and of losing local control, 4 of 5 commissioners decided ON THEIR OWN that it would be a good idea and drafted an ordinance. But just 6 weeks after BIPPA’s awareness campaign began, Brevard commissioners overwhelmingly opposed VR’s in residentially zoned areas.

The key element was AWARENESS!

Once the public became aware of the issue, volunteer voters generated over 25,000 thousand of face-book (FB) hits while gathering over 1,500 petition signatures and 2,000 e-mails to county officials in opposition to daily vacation rentals in Brevard County. In just 6 weeks!

So many people showed up against daily vacation rentals in neighborhoods that 3 separate government buildings were needed to accommodate the crowd (with another 300 protesters with signs outside due to COVID concerns).

The opposition was so strong and clear that for only the second time in BIPPA's 30 years of activism, no commissioner would “second” the (vacation rental) motion.

Once the Commissioners got the message that voters would turn them out of office if the Commissioners allowed VR's in residential neighborhoods, they did what they were elected to do, and followed their constituent's desire to live peacefully without VR's next door to them.

You should do the same and Vote “NO” on H-219/ S-522.

Further, two economic risks associated with commercial uses in residential neighborhoods is just too great to ignore:

- 1) Legislation throughout the country is still evolving and will be litigated for years to come. It's just too early in the curve to force VR's into neighborhoods before the concept has stabilized. This is also the general legal consensus of Florida County Attorneys.
- 2) Home builders will suffer indeterminable losses when residents flee neighborhoods, dumping an unmanageable supply of used homes on the market. Other issues related to declining property values are clear when you hear the horror stories of people who are unfortunate enough to live next to an out-of-town (many out of country) owned and managed commercial tourist property.

Through our awareness campaign, and after weeks of research, BIPPA found that the vast majority of voting residents of Florida's counties and cities are opposed to commercial tourist activities in neighborhoods. Research has shown that voters clearly want to locally manage this very dynamic and still unsettled zoning issue.

If legislators continue to pursue approval of daily vacation rentals in neighborhoods, like was done in Brevard County, you can bet that the voters will rise up again, but this time State-wide and in each County, to replace those legislators that are not listening.

Listen to Florida's permanent resident voters: Vote “NO” on H-219/S-522

Subject: Concerned & Frightened American

Dear Representatives,

As one of your concerned constituents I wish to express the way I feel about what is going on in America today and ask you how the average everyday American can help to fix it and how helpless we feel that the election was aloud to cheat us of one of the best Presidents we have had in years. Just consider all the good he has done: Like space exploration is back on track, illegal immigration is way down, unemployment was at its lowest in ten years before the Pandemic, consumer confidence was way up along with the market. The Keystone pipeline was approved, Veterans are now allowed Private Healthcare options and many burdensome regulations have been cut, the TTP withdrawal and NATO allies increased their contributions. And while fighting America's decline Mr. Trump donated all his salary. Oh, and let's not forget the wall. It is all of this that makes me wonder why those four States were allowed to blatantly cheat the American people.

I don't believe that the reckless siege on the white house was initiated by Trump supporters. Trumps only intention was to rally support. Just like the other protests that have ensued around the nation, I believe that they all were infiltrated by groups of destructive people as a vehicle to get away with their violent behavior and have it blamed on others.

The citizens of America need a fair election in order to accept the results. I would like you to propose that the entire election in those doubtful states be totally re-voted and re-counted, or perhaps run the entire election again due to the obvious fraud that took place. The vote as well as the counting should be carefully monitored for the results.

Another issue is the one of Nancy Pelosi's never ending attack on President Trump. She is a hateful person and will stop at nothing to get her way. I wonder who her next mark will be?

Well, thank you for reading about my frustrations. I can only hope and pray that all goes well going forward.

Respectfully yours,

House and Senate File Legislation to Protect Peaceful Protests, Combat Violent Disorder

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (Jan. 6, 2021) -- In response to the violent mobs in Washington, D.C., the Florida House of Representatives and Senate filed identical bills to combat violence, disorder and looting in Florida. Statements from House Speaker Chris Sprowls, Senate President Wilton Simpson, Representative Juan Fernandez Barquin, sponsor of House Bill 1, and Senator Danny Burgess, sponsor of Senate Bill 484, are below.

House Speaker Chris Sprowls (R-Palm Harbor)

“In a democracy, rioting, violence and lawlessness are repugnant and unacceptable. This isn’t a peaceful protest. It’s an act of domestic terrorism. It’s a tragic, cowardly and un-American spectacle. Together we are taking immediate action in Florida by filing the Combating Violence, Disorder and Looting and Law Enforcement Protection Act. We will work together with Governor DeSantis and the Senate to protect Floridians from this kind of nonsensical violence. And when these types of despicable acts happen, law enforcement and prosecutors will have the tools and the support they need to keep Floridians safe, communities whole and property undamaged.”

Senate President Wilton Simpson (R-Trilby)

“Our constitutional right to protest has played a critical role in the great history of our democracy. I fully respect the right of every American to peacefully protest; however, there is absolutely no excuse for attacking law enforcement and destroying property. Over the last few months, Governor DeSantis has discussed strengthening our state laws to increase penalties for bad actors who turn otherwise peaceful and constitutional protests into violent attacks on law enforcement officers. I am proud to support our Governor and join with our House colleagues to make it clear that peaceful protests are welcome, but violent, destructive mobs will not be tolerated in Florida.”

State Representative Juan Fernandez-Barquin (R-Miami-Dade)

“What I witnessed today in Washington was disgusting, and I repudiate the violence and destruction that took place there. Today I filed legislation in the Florida House to make sure it doesn’t happen here in Florida. It is never acceptable for a civil society to behave in this way, and this bill will ensure that it is unwelcome in Florida. It does not matter if you are Republican or Democrat, we are a society of laws, and all must follow the law.”

State Senator Danny Burgess (R-Zephyrhills)

“We are a nation of law and order, not violence, destruction and unrest. We respect the right to peacefully protest, but the shameful conduct we witnessed at the United States Capitol today and episodes of violent civil unrest that we have witnessed over the last several months have no place in our democracy. This legislation makes it clear that here in Florida criminals who seek to thwart peaceful protests by willfully inciting violence, attacking law enforcement and destroying public or private property will be held accountable.”

Follow the bills at www.myfloridahouse.gov and www.flsenate.gov.

Subject: DROP HB 1

Dear Elected Representatives:

I am writing to urge you to oppose HB1. This is a dangerous and unnecessary bill that is poised to harm our democracy. Common sense should tell you that we already have laws on the books that address the issues this bill purports to address. And a simple review of the recent successful case against the sheriff's office in Jacksonville related to actions taken against peaceful protestors over the summer will reveal that even those existing laws are abused.

I strongly oppose any more measures that will punish those who exercise their right to express dissent against government policies and institutions.

This bill was proposed before the disturbing events of January 6 of this year, and I am disheartened to see Governor DeSantis disingenuously try and peddle this harmful bill again under the false pretext of preventing violence similar to what we saw at the Capitol. This bill was written in response to and is designed to target civil rights protestors and they will be the ones to bear the brunt of these measures should they be enacted.

Please stand up for our democracy and OPPOSE this bill quickly and decisively.

Thank you,
Rhea Myerscough

Subject: Florida Statute 775.082(9)(a)1, prison releasee reoffender

Attachment(s): "Prison Releasee Reoffender Brief.docx"

Dear Senator:

Attached please find my report regarding Florida's mandatory maximum prison releasee reoffender law under statute 775.082(9)(a)1. This report was written in support of SB 210 filed this session by Senator Jeff Brandes. I felt it was important to understand the history of how this law came to be. I have outlined other points I thought were helpful in understanding the costs associated with this law, and compared it to other legislation which helps one understand why it's actually an unnecessary piece of legislation.

My personal goal is for this law to undergo a complete retroactive repeal, but I am not naive enough to think this will happen anytime soon, or at all, and that is why I am in support of SB 210 which amends the PRR's sentencing structure to an acceptable level until repeal can become an actuality.

Although I had hoped to include references to the current reentry services Florida offers, time constraints did not permit me to do so. I have received some information from a fellow reformer pertaining to these programs which I would be happy to forward upon request, but as of this writing these have not been verified personally by me. I also possess PRR deviation reports from the 19th District and would be happy to email them to you at your request.

Thank you in advance for your time. If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Prison Releasee Reoffender Brief

Abstract:

In May of 1997, the Florida legislature passed HB 1371 which created the “Prison Releasee Reoffender Act.” This outline includes, but is not limited to, the definition and history of this Act, explaining in great detail why this Act is draconian, egregious and wholly unnecessary, the catalyst for the drafting, and ultimate passing, of this bill, which was contrary to the reasoning the legislature provided as to why this Act was necessary; how the Act violates various Articles of the Florida Constitution; and the exorbitant costs associated with the implementation of this Act since its inception.

Definition:

The Prison Releasee Reoffender Act (hereafter PRR) under 775.082(9)(a)1 is a mandatory maximum statute.<sup>1</sup> In its original form, to qualify to be sentenced as a PRR an individual would have committed, or attempted to commit, any one of the enumerated offenses<sup>2</sup> within 3 years after being released from a state correctional facility operated by the Department of Corrections, or a private vendor.

If the state attorney determines that a defendant is a PRR as defined in subparagraph 1, the state attorney may seek to have the court sentence the defendant as a PRR. Upon proof from the state attorney that establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that a defendant is a PRR as defined in this section, the defendant is not eligible to be sentenced under the usual sentencing guidelines and the court must sentence the individual under the PRR guidelines.<sup>3</sup> The burden of proof needed to qualify an individual as a PRR is simply a preponderance of the evidence and includes a determination of the defendant’s last date of release from a correctional institution/prison sentence in order to show it was within 3 years of the most recent offense, and whether the defendant has committed one of the enumerated offenses. A defendant sentenced under the PRR must serve 100% of the sentence and is not eligible for gain time, parole, control release, or any form of early release.<sup>4</sup>

History:

Although the legislature in 1997 utilized “public safety” as the catalyst for drafting the PRR by stating, “WHEREAS, the people of this state and the millions of people who visit our state deserve public safety and protection from violent felony offenders who have previously been sentenced to prison and who continue to prey on society by reoffending,”<sup>5</sup> this section will prove that the catalyst was simply due to overcrowding and gain time litigation, starting with this statement which precedes the earlier statement with regard to public safety, “WHEREAS, recent court decisions have mandated the early release of violent felony offenders.”<sup>6</sup>

Since the early 1970’s, Florida has had a severe prison overcrowding problem which resulted in litigation (specifically, Costello v. Wainwright, 397 F. Supp. 20,22 (M.D. Fla.1975)) to not only ease the overcrowding, but to ensure the Department of Corrections (hereafter DOC) provide adequate medical care (the inadequate care was felt to be, in part, due to overcrowding). As an example of the severity of the overcrowding during that time, in 1973 the normal capacity for the existing institutions of the Division of Corrections was 7,000 with an “emergency” capacity of 8,300. The actual inmate population on February 8, 1973, was approximately 10,300. The Lake Butler Reception and Medical Center, which was designed for 700 inmates, actually had a population of 1,300.<sup>7</sup>

Pursuant to Costello v. Wainwright, the DOC entered into a consent decree that provided for the capping of the prison population within certain limits. Over the years, the Florida legislature enacted various gain time statutes related to overcrowding due to the Costello consent decree. In 1983, the legislature enacted an Emergency Gain Time statute<sup>8</sup> which did not become active until prison overcrowding surpassed 98% of lawful capacity. On June 2, 1986, the triggering threshold percentile was increased to 99% capacity.<sup>9</sup> On February 5, 1987, the legislature enacted the Administrative Gain Time Statute<sup>10</sup> which superseded the Emergency Gain Time statute due to a triggering threshold percentile of 98%, which was lower than the 99% for Emergency Gain Time. The Emergency Gain Time statute was repealed effective June 17, 1993<sup>11</sup> and no credits were ever given under this statute. Under the Administrative Gain Time statute, DOC awarded a total of 720 days to individual prisoners between February of 1987 and June of 1988. Effective July 1, 1988, the Administrative Gain Time Statute was repealed and the Provisional Credits statute took its place with a triggering threshold percentile of 97.5.<sup>12</sup>

In 1989, the provisional credit statute was revised to exclude inmates ever convicted of committing, or attempting to commit, murder in the first, second, or third degree, and was applicable to offenses committed on or after January 1, 1990.<sup>13</sup> It was again amended in 1992 and, although it still contained the murder/attempted murder exclusions, it did not specify an effective date.<sup>14</sup> In 1992, then-Attorney General Robert Butterworth issued an opinion which surmised that the lack of an effective date in the 1992 provisional credits amendment indicated the legislature intended it to have retroactive application.<sup>15</sup> After AG Butterworth's opinion, the legislature enacted 944.278 (1993) which retroactively cancelled all awards of administrative gain time and provisional credits for all inmates serving a sentence in the custody of the DOC or serving a state sentence in custody of another jurisdiction.<sup>16</sup> As a result, credits for 2,789 individuals who were still in custody were cancelled, and rearrest warrants were issued for 164 individuals who had been released.<sup>17</sup>

Pursuant to AG Butterworth's opinion and the 1993 amendment which cancelled all administrative gain time and provisional credits, litigation challenging the revocation of credits ensued. Although denied at the State level, one such case, Lynce v. Mathis, made its way to the United States Supreme Court. Kenneth Lynce was one of the 164 individuals who had been rearrested. In summary, Lynce argued that the retroactive cancellation of provisional credits violated the ex post facto clause of the United States Constitution. The United States Supreme Court agreed and reversed and remanded the case for further proceedings. The Lynce case was argued on November 4, 1996 and decided on February 19, 1997.<sup>18</sup>

Due to the Lynce decision, another similar case, Calamia v. Singletary, on petition for writ of certiorari, the Florida Supreme Court granted the writ of habeas corpus of Russell Calamia and a writ of mandamus for Jeffrey Lynn Hock which reinstated their administrative and provisional gain time. This decision was May 22, 1997.<sup>19</sup>

Although author/sociologist Heather Schoenfeld indicates in her book, Building The Prison State, that the PRR was drafted immediately following the Calamia decision by Representatives Victor Crist and Adam Putnam,<sup>20</sup> we can see from the Journal of the House of Representatives that the first reading of HB 1371, which created the Prison Releasee Reoffender Act, occurred on March 13, 1997,<sup>21</sup> roughly two months prior to the Calamia decision (May 22, 1997), and roughly one month following the Lynce decision (February 19, 1997), and the PRR was ultimately signed into law on May 30, 1997.

Not only did HB 1371 create the PRR Act, it also amended Florida statute 947.141, violations of conditional release, control release, or conditional medical release, by utilizing one simple word to ensure anyone who violated terms of early release (even if that early release was due to overcrowding as “control release” is utilized when overcrowding occurs) would forfeit all gain time or commutation of time for good conduct as follows (words stricken are deletions, words underlined are additions), whereas before the revocation of gain time credits had been discretionary:

(6) Whenever a conditional release, control release, or conditional medical release is revoked by a panel of no fewer than two commissioners and the releasee is ordered to be returned to prison, the releasee, by reason of the misconduct, shall ~~may~~ be deemed to have forfeited all gain time or commutation of time for good conduct, as provided by law, earned up to the date of release.<sup>22</sup>

In addition to overcrowding litigation, the analyses utilized litigation related to gain time. Gain time is a behavioral management tool used to encourage satisfactory behavior. At the time, there were four types of gain time under statute 944.275 including basic gain time, incentive gain time, educational gain time and meritorious gain time. This section was amended in 1993 and 1995 to repeal basic gain time and reduce the amount of incentive gain time the DOC could award which specifically required all individuals sentenced to state prison for crimes committed on or after October 1, 1995, to serve no less than 85% of their sentence, which effectively implemented the “85% rule.”<sup>23</sup>

On March 20, 1996, Attorney General Robert Butterworth released an opinion concluding that the department could exercise its “discretion” under the statute by adopting a rule that prohibited certain classes of inmates from receiving incentive gain-time.<sup>24</sup> Based on this opinion, the DOC amended Rule 33-11.0065 of the administrative code and denied future incentive gain time awards to individuals who had 85% or less of any sentence remaining to be served.<sup>25</sup> The amended rule affected over 20,000 individuals<sup>26</sup> and was projected to lengthen the time served in prison on average by several years. A small number of individuals (153) were projected to serve more than 20 years longer as a result of the amended rule.<sup>27</sup>

Once again, in prison litigation, specifically Gwong v. Singletary, 683 So. 2d 109 (1996), the Florida Supreme Court ruled that the DOC could not change the manner in which incentive gain time was previously awarded and that such retrospective change violated the ex post facto clause of the U.S. Constitution.<sup>28</sup> As a result, approximately 500 individuals were immediately released in November and December of 1996. By August 1997, approximately 1,800 additional individuals were projected to be released. The individuals affected by Gwong, mostly convicted of murder and sexual battery, were scheduled to be released by these dates anyway prior to the DOC’s adoption of the amended rule and the Florida Supreme Court decision.<sup>29</sup>

We can determine through the original PRR bill analyses that the intent of the legislature at the time in drafting the bill was due to the early release statutes due to overcrowding, as well as litigation regarding gain time. The House's Committee on Crime and Punishment's final bill research and economic impact statement begins its substantive analysis not with concerns for public safety, nor outcry at violent crime rates or the introduction of specific cases which could perpetuate the necessity of such an act, but with detailing the creation and repeal of early release statutes, keeping the prison population below thresholds for early release, the cancellation of administrative gain time and provisional release credits, incentive gain time litigation issues, and definition of habitual offenders and habitual violent offenders.<sup>30</sup>

Along with quantifying the affected individuals in Gwong, the analyses also quantified the number of individuals affected by the Lynce decision, indicating approximately 2,700 individuals would have their sentence reduced from 30 days up to 7 years. Of those affected, approximately 500 either had been or would be immediately released during the first two weeks of March, 1997. The remaining individuals would be released, on average, of 10 to 12 individuals per month for several years. Of the 2,700 affected individuals, the DOC estimated that 1,800 (67%) would be under some type of supervision, or placed under the custody of another law enforcement agency.<sup>31</sup>

Although one could argue the legislature was concerned for public safety due to the offense categories of those whose early release credits were reinstated, and who had incentive gain time reinstated, the low number of individuals affected (4,500 combining both issues) hardly made it a crises situation. For example, according to the 1997-1998 Florida DOC annual report, 2,269 individuals were released during the fiscal year whose offenses were murder/manslaughter (882) and sexual offenses (1,387), many of which could most probably be included in the offense categories of those who received reinstatement of credits. Dividing the total (2,269) by 12 months, approximately 189 individuals who had been incarcerated with violent offenses were released per month. Furthermore, one could possibly incorporate the category of "other violent" offenses from that same fiscal year of 3,202. Adding that category to the others, for a total of 5,471 indicates approximately 455 releases per month of "violent" offenders.<sup>32</sup>

Though one could possibly also argue the violent crime rate at the time and/or recidivism rates, nothing in the original bill analyses, or even the bill itself, refers in any way, shape or form to either of those being a catalyst for the impetus of the PRR, a bill which was ultimately sponsored by 35 representatives and by 2 House committees<sup>33</sup>, and was passed unanimously in the House and without the Governor's signature.<sup>34</sup>

Once again, although the legislature at the time hinted at public safety being the issue by stating “the people of this state and the millions of people who visit our state deserve public safety,” even if referring to the murders of tourists that took place in the state, those crimes occurred in the early 1990’s, yet it wasn’t until the reinstatement of early release credits and the Gwong decision that the PRR was drafted. Furthermore, the legislature stated, “and protection from violent felony offenders (emphasis added) who have previously been sentenced to prison and who continue to prey on society by reoffending (emphasis added),”<sup>35</sup> yet the first prison sentence which helps qualify an individual for the PRR does not have to be a violent offense. For example, an individual who is sentenced to a 1 year and 1 day prison sentence for manufacture/sale/distribute of marijuana, and then commits a robbery within 3 years, qualifies as a PRR, even though the first prison sentence was for a drug offense and not a violent offense. Also, it simply takes only those 2 offenses for an individual to be sentenced under the PRR.

Although the legislature also indicated they found “the best deterrent to prevent prison releasees from committing future crimes is to require that any releasee who commits new serious felonies must be sentenced to the maximum term of incarceration allowed by law, and serve 100% of the court-imposed sentence,”<sup>36</sup> neither the bill itself, nor the bill analyses, substantiates this claim in any way, shape or form. There is no included data, or even mere mention, that this statement is true.

In summary, it is conclusive that due to overcrowding and the retroactive cancellation of provisional release credits and the resultant prison litigation culminating in the U. S. Supreme Court Lynce v. Mathis decision, as well as due to the retroactive amendment to incentive gain time, both of which violated the ex post facto clause of the U.S. Constitution, that without those two issues the PRR never would have been drafted. Thus, it is due to the State’s egregious misuse of their authority that the PRR statute was drafted, passed, and to this day is costing Florida taxpayers millions of dollars each year due to the excessive nature of the law.

Let me be clear. Once again, although the legislature at the time wanted to blame the court decisions, and wanted to instill a false sense of fear regarding public safety by insinuating individuals were being released “early” because of the court decisions, these individuals would have been released anyway, but it was not due to court decisions, it was due to Attorney General Robert Butterworth’s misapplication of retroactivity of provisional and gain time credits, credits which were given due to overcrowding (provisional) and credits that were actually earned (gain time credits). Thus, if anyone was to “blame,” it would be the State for, first of all, not addressing the overcrowding problem properly pre- and post-Costello, and making early release credits a necessity because of not engaging in due diligence.

Amendments

Since the passing of the PRR Act in 1997, the PRR portion of 775.082 has undergone several amendments which have increased eligibility, as well as harshness. Following are the amendments I am aware of at the time of the writing of this report:

1. In June of 1998, Gregory Thomas filed an appeal of his PRR sentence which challenged the definition of “sentence” under the PRR statute. Almost one month later, his appeal was assigned a number, 98-02761. In May of 1999, the legislature passed HB 121 which created the “Three-Strike Violent Felony Offender Act.” This act also redefined the term “prison releasee reoffender.” The term was revised to include “any defendant who commits or attempts to commit any offense listed in subparagraph (a)1.a.-r while the defendant was serving a prison sentence or on an escape status from a state correctional facility operated by the DOC or a private vendor.” Prior to this amendment, the definition of a PRR was simply anyone who committed or attempted to commit a qualifying offense within 3 years of being released from a state correctional facility or a private vendor. On October 6, 1999 the 2nd District Court of Appeals filed their decision to Thomas’s appeal, which reversed the PRR designation and remanded for deletion of that portion of his sentence. Mr. Thomas had walked away from his work release employment and did not return to the work release facility he was staying at. Two days later, he was charged with burglary and attempted burglary, as well as escape. The 2nd DCA decided the PRR statute did not actually define “released” and that their reading of the statute convinced them it indicated a release initiated by the state, not a “self-release” as in an “escape.” As further delineated in Graff v. State, 785 So.2d 649 (Fla. 2d DCA 2001), in accordance with Thomas, Graff’s PRR sentence was reversed and remanded for deletion. Lawrence Graff was also confined to a work release center when he escaped from the facility, and while on escape status he allegedly committed strong-arm robbery and aggravated battery. Footnote 1 of that decision reads, “We note that the legislature in 1999 added section 775.082(9)(a)(2) to address the situation presented in this case by including the definition of a “prison releasee reoffender” persons who commit one of the enumerated offenses while serving a prison sentence or on escape status from a state correctional facility...” Due to the appealability of such ambiguity, even before Mr. Thomas’s case was decided, the legislature passed legislation to further delineate and define the term “release.” What this did was not only include those on “escape” status, but also included the verbiage of while serving a prison sentence, which simply cast a wider net of eligibility.

This amendment also removed the very clear and concise instances where the state attorney could deviate from the PRR to read, “...unless the state attorney determines that extenuating circumstances exist which preclude the just prosecution of the offender, including whether the victim recommends that the offender not be sentenced as provided in this subsection.” As we noted earlier, there were four specific instances where a state attorney could deviate/offer a plea including insufficient evidence, unobtainable material witness testimony, the victim does not want the offender to receive the mandatory prison sentence and provides written statement to that affect, and lastly, the extenuating circumstances. What this portion of the amendment did was generalize the “extenuating circumstances” utilized for deviation, which in turn gave further power to the state attorney as to their individual interpretation of what extenuating circumstances consist of.

However, the 2nd District Court of Appeals issued an opinion declaring HB 121 (chapter 99-188) unconstitutional as they determined it violated the “one subject and matter” requirement of Article III, section 6 of Florida’s Constitution. Therefore, in April of 2002 the legislature passed HB 1399 which simply reenacted sections of HB 121, including the PRR portion, to satisfy the Second District’s opinion. It did not change any of the language, but simply reenacted the sections and made them retroactive to when HB 121 was signed into law.

2. On June 15, 2001, the Governor signed into law SB 676 which amended the following:
  - a. Changed q. under the qualifying offenses list from “Burglary of an occupied structure or dwelling,” to “Burglary of a dwelling or burglary of an occupied structure.
  - b. The next change further widens the PRR eligibility net by adding to the definition of within 3 years after being released from a state correctional facility operated by the DOC or a private vendor to include, “...or within 3 years after being released from a correctional institution of another state, the District of Columbia, the United States, any possession or territory of the United States, or any foreign jurisdiction, following incarceration for an offense for which the sentence is punishable by more than 1 year in this state. Therefore, a defendant could have committed a crime in Georgia that was a misdemeanor, but in Florida was a sentence of more than 1 year, and that individual would then qualify as a PRR. Furthermore, whereas defendants had to have served their prior qualifying prison time in a Florida prison, an individual who spent at least 1 year in prison in another state, any US possession or territory, or even any foreign jurisdiction, would now qualify as a PRR. There was no regard for the previously committed offense, only that the individual had been sentenced to prison for at least 1 year.
  - c. The next change widens criteria even further by adding to while the defendant was serving a prison sentence or on escape status from a state correctional facility operated by the DOC or a private vendor to include, “...or while the defendant was on escape status from a correctional institution of another state, the District of Columbia, the United States, any possession or territory of the United States, or any foreign jurisdiction following incarceration for an offense for which the sentence is punishable by more than 1 year in this state. Once again, there was no regard for the nature of the previous committed offense, simply that the defendant had been in prison and had escaped. This amendment was signed into law on June 15, 2001, a little over one month after the Graff decision.
3. In 2013, Dazarian Lewars was convicted of burglary of an unoccupied dwelling and was sentenced to 15 years as a PRR. Lewars appealed, arguing that he did not qualify as a PRR because he was not released from a DOC-operated facility, or private vendor, within 3 years of the burglary as he had spent a 24-month sentence solely in a county jail and never transferred to actual prison due to an accumulation of jail credit while he was awaiting a violation of probation hearing and sentencing. On December 13, 2018 the Florida Supreme Court upheld the decision of the 2nd District Court in Lewars v. State which, briefly, affirmed their opinion that release from a county jail did not satisfy PRR designation.<sup>37</sup>

4. On 6/28/2019, HB 7125, also known as the Florida First Step Act, was signed into law. Included in this bill was an amendment to the PRR. As you may have already ascertained, the amendment involved release from a county detention facility, to read as follows: "...within 3 years of being released from a state correctional facility operated by the Department of Corrections or a private vendor, a county detention facility following incarceration for an offense for which the sentence pronounced was a prison sentence.<sup>38</sup> To solidify the still ambiguous nature of "county detention facility," the final bill analysis for HB 7125 defined it further as follows: "A county detention facility means county jail, a county stockade, a county work camp, a county residential probation center, and any other place except a municipal detention facility used by a county or county officer for the detention of persons charged with or convicted of either felony or misdemeanor."<sup>39</sup> On page 88 of the analysis, it reads, "This bill amends s. 775.082, F.S., expanding the pool of offenders eligible for a mandatory minimum sentence for a "prison releasee reoffender." Also according to this analysis, as reported by the DOC, in FY 2017-2018 there were roughly 570 individuals who would be impacted by the bill language who were sentenced to time served and released before going to prison. The CJEC determined the new provision would increase the need for prison beds by an indeterminate amount. To put this into perspective, not having the county facility language in place in fiscal year 2017-2018 saved the state roughly $12,932,160.

Comparison to Habitual Offender Enhancements

When the PRR was drafted, Florida had several habitual offender enhancements under 775.084 including habitual felony offender (hereafter HFO), habitual violent felony offender (hereafter HVFO), and violent career criminal (hereafter VCC). Briefly, at the time the PRR was drafted the habitual offender laws basically doubled (enhanced) the statutory maximum sentences under 775.082 as potential maximum sentences for the HFO and HVFO, and as a mandatory minimum for the VCC. However, the enhancements under the HVFO were lower than those under the PRR. More importantly, a court had the discretion to decline to impose all three sentences if the court found that such sentencing was not necessary for the protection of the public.<sup>40</sup> Unlike the habitual offender statute, the imposition of sentence under the PRR is mandatory and certain, and the court would have no discretion to decline the imposition of the prescribed sentence. Furthermore, at the time, to qualify as a habitual felony offender an individual must have been previously convicted of two or more similar felonies, and the current felony for which the individual was being sentenced would have occurred within 5 years of the last felony conviction or release from prison, whichever is later.<sup>41</sup> In regards to the PRR, when it was initially drafted an individual need only have been released from a state correctional facility within 3 years of the most recent offense.<sup>42</sup> As confirmed by the bill analysis, and as noted previously, unlike the habitual offender statute, the application of the PRR was not based on a certain number of prior convictions, nor a certain type of prior offense,<sup>43</sup> even though the legislature, as mentioned earlier, insinuated the bill was being drafted for the protection from “violent felony offenders” who have previously been sentenced to prison and who “continue to prey on society by reoffending,”<sup>44</sup> but by the legislature’s own admission we know this to be false since it was known to not be based on a certain number or even the type of prior offense. One simply cannot categorize someone as inherently violent based on one offense, and cannot describe someone as habitual when the determination is not based on a certain number of prior convictions. That is the design of the habitual offender statutes, which were already in effect.

Furthermore, since the PRR is based on one prior prison sentence, and the HFO statutes are based on the number and type of offense, an individual can be sentenced as both a PRR and a HFO. For example, a defendant convicted of burglary may be sentenced to 25 years under the HVFO with 15 of those years served as a PRR.

In summary, as noted by the bill analysis, the PRR was distinguishable from the habitual offender statute in its certainty of punishment and its mandatory nature. Not only does it not allow for the court to depart downward from the proposed sentence, the mandatory minimum imposed is the maximum statutory penalty under 775.082.<sup>45</sup> The state attorney is not required to pursue PRR sentencing, even if a defendant meets the criteria, and the state attorney can seek to have the defendant sentenced under the usual sentencing guidelines, or if he/she meets relevant criteria, sentenced under one of the habitual offender sentences.

However, it should be emphasized that when a state attorney does pursue sentencing under the PRR and proves the defendant qualifies, the court must impose the appropriate statutory maximum term of imprisonment.<sup>46</sup>

Cost

Although the original bill analyses indicate the fiscal impact on state agencies/funds and local governments was “indeterminate,”<sup>47</sup> the Criminal Justice Estimating Conference (hereafter CJEC), which provides an official estimate of the fiscal and prison bed impact, on March 21, 1997 estimated the total cost for 10 years (1997-2007) would be $1,575,094,620. This estimate assumed prosecutors would pursue PRR sentences for all qualifying individuals.<sup>48</sup> However, on April 10, 1997 the CJEC met to consider the bed impact of the PRR which estimated total funds required for the same 10-year period mentioned previously would be $2,069,190,199. Contrary to the initial estimate which assumed all qualifying individuals would be sentenced as a PRR, the April estimate assumed only 87.9% of eligible offenders would be sentenced as a PRR.<sup>49</sup> It should also be noted that in the preliminary CJEC estimate on the prison bed impact, it was emphasized that the estimate assumed the bill would be the only change to occur in the current forecast. Other bills passed by the legislature could increase the costs further.<sup>50</sup> Later, we will elucidate several amendments to the PRR which have widened the eligibility criteria which has most probably increased associated costs. In summary, the analyses concluded that the long-term impacts of the PRR bill were difficult to estimate due to prosecutorial and judicial behavior, but stated “will probably be substantial (emphasis added) in both the operating and capital costs.”<sup>51</sup>

According to the DOC’s 2018-2019 Annual Report, it now costs $22,688 per year to house just one individual in prison, with costs having gradually increased over the last 5 years.<sup>52</sup> For further perspective on cost, Florida PRR Families United (hereafter FPFU), a reform group aimed at retroactive repeal of the PRR, did an informal project related to plea deals. Although the PRR was originally drafted to prohibit pleas,<sup>53</sup> with the certain and mandatory nature of the statute, as well as lack of gain time incentives, the PRR is a wonderful bargaining tool for prosecutors and courts to clear dockets. Although plea information was requested from all twenty state attorneys’ offices, the information was either reportedly completely lacking, insufficient, time-restrictive, or cost prohibitive with one office quoting more than half a million dollars to retrieve the requested records. Through FPFU, a small sampling of questionnaires were sent to PRR individuals currently incarcerated, with a majority of questionnaires being sent to those given a life sentence for robbery since that is the majority offense category for life sentences.<sup>54</sup>

This sampling revealed that of those with a life sentence, 100 were offered pleas ranging from 3 years to life (the life sentence pleas, a total of 8, are not included as each individual’s life is indeterminate) with the average plea offered being 18 years. For clarification, when the State offers a plea, they are saying with absolute certainty that they are more than comfortable from a public safety, length of sentence for crime committed, and victim impact perspective with that individual serving the offered amount of time. Hypothetically speaking, if someone enters prison at age 20 and is given an 18-year PRR (100%) plea deal, the cost for those 18 years is $408,384 (18 x $22,688). The average life expectancy for a male is approximately 78 years.<sup>55</sup> Therefore, someone given a life sentence at age 20 with an expected 58 more years to live will cost the State $1,315,904 which is a difference of $907,520. That is for only one individual. As you may have deduced, the defendants in these cases obviously rejected the plea offers and were given a life sentence at trial. Hence, although the State was comfortable offering substantially lesser sentences via a plea, these individuals are now serving life sentences simply for exercising their constitutional right to a trial, aptly called a “trial penalty.”<sup>56</sup>

The Florida DOC 2018-2019 Annual Report indicates the majority of admissions for that fiscal year, 35.3%, were individuals in the 25-34 range. For argument's sake, let us assume the average age of PRR individuals when sentenced is at the high end of the majority, or 34. Utilizing the 18-year average plea, the cost once again for one individual is $408,384 (18 x $22,688). With a difference now of 44 years (78-34 = 44), that would make the cost $998,272 (44 x $22,688) which is a difference of $589,888. Again, for only one individual.

Now let's assume one-quarter of the estimated current PRR population with life sentences (1,750 from the SB 1716 bill analysis), or 437.5, were age 20 when sentenced. At an estimated cost of $1,315,904 (58 years x $22,688) x 437.5 that would total $575,708,000. Compared to the same estimate for those with an average 18-year plea at a cost of $408,384 x 437.5 which is $178,668,000 with a difference of $397,040,000. We can also assume that the same percentage of individuals (437.5) was 34 at the time of admission. At a cost of $998,272 (44 x $22,688) that would total $436,744,000 (437.5 x $998,272) as compared to the 18-year average plea cost of $178,668,000 with a difference of $258,076,000. This is still a significant amount. Furthermore, this is assuming the cost of incarceration for one individual for one year stays the same. Although these are estimates due to the extreme difficulty with data collection, these are not at all unreasonable estimates.

Anti-Murder Act of 2007

In order to further emphasize the "public safety" ruse the 1997 legislature utilized as a sort of justification for drafting and passing the PRR as quickly and with so little regard to issues of future fiscal responsibility, constitutional issues, prison management issues, etc., I would like to highlight legislation that was passed almost a decade after the PRR for comparison purposes, including cost.

On February 1, 2004, 11-year-old Carlie Brucia from Sarasota, FL was abducted when she was walking home from a friend's house, which was only a mile away, after a sleepover. Her body was found on February 6 and a man named Joseph P. Smith was charged with, and ultimately convicted of, murder, kidnapping and rape.<sup>57</sup> Joseph Smith was a drug addict with a long criminal record and was on probation for drug offenses. Two months before the murder, a judge had declined to charge Smith with violation of probation because he hadn't paid all of his court fines and fees.<sup>58</sup>

Almost a year later, in February of 2005, Jessica Lunsford, age 9, was taken from her home in Homosassa, FL, and her body was discovered 3 weeks later. A registered sex offender, John E. Couey, confessed to kidnapping and killing Jessica.<sup>59</sup> It was also determined by investigators that the little girl had been raped.

Approximately 2 months later in April of 2005, 13-year-old Sarah Lunde was murdered in her home in Hillsborough County by a convicted rapist who was on probation after being released from prison in

2002. David Lee Onstott had previously dated Sarah's mother. Sarah's body was found 6 days after she disappeared partially submerged in a pond near her home.<sup>60</sup>

Also in 2004, what is considered to be one of the worst mass murders in Volusia County occurred on August 6 in Deltona. Known as the "Xbox Murders," six people were murdered when they were beaten to death with aluminum baseball bats by four men. The group of men was said to be led by Troy Victorino, who was on probation for beating a man with a walking stick 8 years earlier. The Deltona massacre is reported as having occurred because one of the victims had apparently discovered several items at her grandparent's home, which was vacant at the time as her grandparents lived part of the year in Maine, and believing these items to belong to "squatters," the victim may have discarded some of them, including an Xbox believed to have belonged to Victorino. Victorino was livid about the victim throwing his things away, and it is believed that was the catalyst for the brutal murders.<sup>61</sup>

Following the murder of Sarah Lunde, then-Attorney General Charlie Crist proposed that a new law be drafted which would ensure that violent felons who violate probation are locked up unless they can convince a judge that they do not pose a danger to the community. This bill was called the Anti-Murder Act of 2005.<sup>62</sup> Although there was certainly enough justification for such a bill with the above-mentioned events which had occurred within a little over a year, both related bills, HB 451 and CS/SB 608, died in Justice Appropriations, with the reason being cost, citing the $350 million to $630 million in additional court and prison resources.<sup>63</sup> Though judges do not normally voice their opinion on such matters, at least one judge, Stanford Blake, spoke out against the bill stating, "judges have to have discretion."<sup>64</sup> In fact, the Anti-Murder Act of 2005 took two years to pass, even though Charlie Crist proposed the Act again in the 2006 legislative session, even modifying it to lower the cost estimate. The sponsor of the House version, Rep. Joe Negron, even modified the list of qualifying offenses to "make those as limited to the serious felonies as possible."<sup>65</sup>

At the time, the St. Petersburg Times editorial board opined that the Act would remove discretion from judges and "could unnecessarily burden the state's prisons."<sup>66</sup> In response, Charlie Crist wrote a letter to the editor stating, "Getting even one potential killer off the street makes it a cost-effective proposition, not even considering its broader benefits to society."<sup>67</sup> Although the House supported the Act, the Senate never took up the bill, citing a cost of $118 million by 2010. The Senate president at the time, Tom Lee, told reporters, "at the end of the day, it was just a question of how much money are we going to spend to grow the criminal justice infrastructure in our state in 2006?"<sup>68</sup>

Remember, three innocent little girls had been kidnapped, raped and murdered in just a little over a year's time. And yet, it took two years to pass any type of legislation related to those brutal murders (notwithstanding the Jessica Lunsford Act, which mostly dealt with sex offender registration and reporting<sup>69</sup>), simply due to cost. The legislature in 1997, however, passed the PRR bill with lightning speed. There weren't three little girls who were no longer alive, there weren't three families who were mourning the murders of their innocent daughters. It was simply because a few thousand individuals had their gain time restored due to the State violating the Ex Post Facto clause, and not one of those released individuals had committed another crime. The PRR was passed almost unanimously with absolutely no regard to the future fiscal impact. My question is, why? A bill that was estimated to cost between anywhere from $1.5 to $2 billion over 10 years, but with the actual cost being completely and utterly indeterminate. What was so important about this piece of legislation, but the lives of three little girls meant so little that "cost" kept legislation related to their murders from passing for two years.

Violent Crime Rate

Some of you may be surmising that perhaps the PRR was passed, in part, due to an increase in the violent crime rate. Although the reported violent crime rate in Florida for Part I crimes<sup>70</sup> from 1990 to 1993 had increased to around 160,000 total violent crimes per year, the violent crime rate actually started to decline after 1993 by 2.4% in 1994 and by 7.2% in 1995. There was a modest decrease of only 0.7% in 1996, and another modest decrease of 0.3% in 1997. Although the violent crime rate continued to decrease/remain steady over the next 7 years, it once again started to increase in 2005, then starting its decline again in 2009.<sup>71</sup>

Although I do not have the data for fiscal years 1995-96, 1998-99, 1999-2000 and 2000-01<sup>72</sup>, the prison admissions for violent crime are as follows:<sup>73</sup>

Although the violent crime rate from 1993 (161,789) to 1997 (146,929) had decreased by almost 10%<sup>74</sup>, the rate of prison admissions for violent crime actually increased by the same amount, approximately 10% (see table above). Furthermore, although the violent crime rate over the next 10 years continued to fluctuate quite modestly, and the rate of prison admissions for violent crime did decrease for the same time period, from 2007 to 2018 the violent crime rate has continued to decline, down to 81,896 in 2018 (a year which data includes the 17 individuals killed in the Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School shooting on 02/14/2018), yet the prison admissions for violent crimes has remained relatively the same at around 30%.<sup>75</sup>

Recidivism

The Florida Department of Corrections defines recidivism as a return to prison as the result of either a new conviction or a violation of post-prison supervision, including technical violations, within 3 years of their prison release date. According to the 1996-1997 DOC Annual Report, the total recidivism rate at that time was a very low 18%. The recidivism rate from 2009 to 2016 has remained, on average, approximately 25%.<sup>76</sup> Note that a majority of individuals recidivate within 3 years of being released, which interestingly correlates to that which qualifies someone as a PRR.

Constitutional Issues

Although important, this section will be somewhat brief, mainly because numerous issues regarding the PRR have been addressed in the courts with few, if any, finding relief, and most appeals simply being met with legislation to “fix” the appealable issue. It is important to note constitutional issues for the simple reason that in the Senate analyses of the PRR, at least one constitutional issue related to due process was mentioned as follows:

“The legislation contains no provision for providing notice to the defendant prior to judgement being pronounced (emphasis added). It is fundamental to due process that “reasonable notice and an opportunity to appear and be heard (be provided) before judgement is pronounced.” State ex rel. Barancik v. Gates, 134 So.2d 497, 500 (Fla. 1961). Although the legislation apprises each releasee that he or she may be subject to the prison releasee reoffender sanction, there is no actual notice by the state to the defendant prior to judgement of the state attorney’s intent to pursue such sanction (emphasis added). This is in contrast to current habitualization, so that the defendant can prepare to defend himself or herself (emphasis added). See, Massey v. State, 589 So.2d 336, 337 (Fla. 5th DCA 1991) (“Lack of any notice, written or otherwise, is a due process violation...”), approved, Massey v. State, 609 So.2d 598 (Fla. 1992). Ashley v. State, 614 So.2d 486 (Fla. 1993, citing Massey.”<sup>77</sup>

When an individual is released from prison, they are required to sign a “notice” which indicates the individual’s name, DOC number and release date, which states, “You are hereby notified that if you commit or attempt to commit one of the following offenses within three years of your release from incarceration, you may be sentenced to the mandatory minimum sentencing provisions of section

775.082, F.S., of the “Prison Releasee Reoffender Punishment Act.” It then goes on to list the qualifying offenses, and at the bottom in bold states, “I acknowledge receipt of this notification of the “Prison Releasee Reoffender Punishment Act.” Refusal to sign this notice will not preclude you from being sentenced pursuant to section 775.082, F.S.”<sup>78</sup> Now, let’s say someone commits a robbery 2 years and 8 months from the date of their release from prison. How many of those individuals are going to recall signing, or even seeing, this warning notice? How many individuals would recall this notice even after 3 months, 6 months, a year? Furthermore, since the notice does not detail the actual penalties under the PRR and simply lists the statute number, how many individuals who are released from prison are going to research the specifics of that particular statute? Also, although notice is given to defendants sentenced under the HFO statutes by the court, the PRR “notice” is required to be given by the DOC, which has nothing to do with an individual’s actual case that they are being assessed for as to qualifying as a PRR. Clearly this is an issue of due process, no matter how many times the courts refuse to declare it, and even though the State is not required to demonstrate that the person received notice in order for the court to sentence the person as a prison releasee reoffender. The lack of notice in and of itself should constitute a violation of due process. I have had individuals sentenced as PRR who have indicated to me that if they had known they were going to receive such a harsh sentence, they would have taken the offered plea agreement. Furthermore, many individuals have been sentenced as PRR whose first prison sentence was prior to the passing of the Act and therefore those individuals absolutely did not receive notice, yet the courts have yet to rectify this injustice as the PRR was clearly prospective, yet utilizing prison sentences prior to the initiation of the act is retrospective and anyone who was sentenced as a PRR in this fashion should not have qualified.

Due process is defined as fair treatment of the judicial system. The Florida Constitution Article I, section 9, states, “No person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law.” By law, and because of this warning “notice” the DOC shows people upon their release from prison, actual notice of the intent to sentence someone as a PRR is not required. However, it is required under the habitual offender laws.

Article I, section 17, of Florida’s Constitution forbids the imposition of a punishment that is not only cruel, but also unusual. Although Florida’s felony murder rule, and the 10-20-Life law are certainly in company with the PRR as far as cruelty, the PRR is unusual in several ways as follows (please note, if there is any redundancy from that already discussed prior, this is intentional as I feel it is important to emphasize these issues as completely as possible):

1. First, the PRR is not a “minimum mandatory” in that once determined to be a PRR, the court must impose the statutory maximum. For instance, if robbery with a firearm carries a statutory maximum of being punishable by life, the court under the usual guidelines may sentence up to and including life, whereas under the PRR, the court would have no choice but to sentence the individual to a life sentence, which is the maximum sentence allowed.
2. Under the usual guidelines, the court may sentence the defendant to a lesser sentence than the statutory maximum. Under the PRR, the court has absolutely no discretion and must sentence the defendant according to the PRR guidelines. The only discretion the court has when it comes to the PRR is the ability to sentence a defendant to more than the statutory maximum. However, if a court is already bound to give a defendant the statutory maximum, what would be the point of giving more than the maximum allowed?

3. Under the PRR, an individual must serve 100% of his/her sentence with no opportunities for gain time, parole, control release, or any form of early release. It is very important to note here that the House of Representatives' Committee on Crime and Punishment noted in their final bill analysis that, "Because the penalties involved under the bill are minimum mandatory sentences, the DOC may face some disciplinary problems with those offenders serving sentences with no prospect for gain time awarded for good behavior."<sup>79</sup> How much more unusual is it for the legislature to pass legislation that renders an individual without the possibility of any form of redemption, knowing full well it most probably would cause more problems for the DOC?
4. Once again, the PRR does not take into consideration the type of prior offense, nor a certain number of prior offenses. Certainly, if it had it would simply be an almost exact replica of the habitual offender enhancements, and then what would be the purpose?

The Eighth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution also forbids the imposition of a sentence that is cruel and unusual, but this includes sentences that are disproportionate to the crime committed. If the State is comfortable offering a 15-year sentence for robbery with a firearm, how proportionate is it to receive a life sentence at trial for the same offense?

Furthermore, the PRR is disproportionate in that it differentiates between a defendant who committed a crime 2 years and 364 days after being released from a prison sentence and a defendant who committed the same crime 3 years and 1 day after being released from a prison sentence. Once again, there is no regard to offense type regarding the first prison sentence, only that the individual was previously in prison, and was released within 3 years of the most recent qualifying offense.

When the bill was originally drafted, it indicated that plea bargaining was prohibited and could only be utilized in certain circumstances.<sup>80</sup> These circumstances included:

1. The prosecuting attorney does not have sufficient evidence to prove the highest charge available.
2. The testimony of the material witness cannot be obtained.
3. The victim does not want the offender to receive the mandatory prison sentence and provides written statement to that effect.
4. Other extenuating circumstances exist which preclude the just prosecution of the offender.

At the time, for every case that the defendant did not meet PRR criteria and did not receive the mandatory minimum prison sentence, the state attorney was to explain the sentencing deviation in writing and maintain the deviation in the case file, with a report regarding these deviations to be sent to the Florida Prosecuting Attorneys Association (hereafter FPAA) on a quarterly basis. This information was to be made available to the public for at least a 10-year period. At this time, however, that portion of the bill states the offender is to be punished to the fullest extent of the law “unless the state attorney determines that extenuating circumstances exist which preclude the just prosecution of the offender, including whether the victim recommends that the offender not be sentenced as per the PRR guidelines. Therefore, the PRR is also disproportionate in that not everyone is afforded a plea offer, and even for those that are offered a plea, these pleas are all disproportionate.

On October 8, 2020 I received copies of PRR deviations from the State Attorneys office of the 19th judicial district. One example is of a defendant accused of second-degree murder and robbery. The defendant was willing to open plea to all charges if the State agreed to waive the PRR designation. The deviation was granted and the defendant received a life sentence for the second-degree murder, and 15 years for the robbery, both sentences imposed by a judge because without the PRR designation the judge had discretion, and in this case where someone was actually murdered, a life sentence would seem appropriate. The case is now on appeal. Once again, however, not everyone is offered a plea because the State Attorney decides the definition of “extenuating circumstances,” and in this particular case those circumstances included that although they felt they had a strong case, they also felt it possible the jury could return a verdict of manslaughter as it appeared the murder was the result of a drug deal gone bad (for marijuana, according to court documents)<sup>81</sup>. Additionally, the state felt the plea would avoid any unknown or appellate issues. Without the deviation, and being sentenced as PRR, the defendant faced a mandatory life in prison sentence if convicted. With the deviation, however, the sentence would be left up to the court and could impose any sentence from the bottom of the guideline (27.5 years) up to life in prison. To reiterate, even though the defendant in this case actually killed someone, the State was more than comfortable with the possibility of the court sentencing the defendant to 27.5 years when they offered and were granted a plea deviation from the PRR. I will note here that of those individuals I mentioned earlier whom the FPFU sampled regarding plea deals, of those who provided score sheets, for 31 individuals there was no victim injury. Zero. For 4 individuals there was slight, for 5 individuals moderate, and for 1 individual severe. The two highest categories of victim injury on the score sheet are death (120 points) and second-degree murder (240 points), yet none of these individuals sentenced to life had anything over severe, and the majority were none.

In another case, part of the reasoning for the deviation was the judge for the case was one who was felt to be “hypercritical” of law enforcement and there was concern with law enforcement affidavits. In the same case, the victims were elderly and were concerned about having to testify at a trial, and the defendant was willing to take a 20-year plea. Therefore, the PRR is also disproportionate not only dependent apparently on the personal disposition of the judge in the case, but in that it technically allows the wishes of a victim to determine sentencing. Now, if the wishes of the victim were not only heard, but also abided by, in all PRR cases, one could not as easily argue disproportionality. However, we know this to not be the case. Some victims are unaware they are able to request a lesser sentence, or request that the defendant not be charged at all. And, even if some victims are aware, their wishes are not always adhered to. In 2005, Jonathan Beaudry was charged with robbery with a gun or deadly weapon. He had robbed a cab driver with a steak knife of $220. Mr. Beaudry was introduced to drugs at a young age by a family member, and this robbery was the result of his drug addiction. Mr.

Beaudry's victim wrote a statement indicating he did not want him to receive a life sentence, but his wishes were ignored and Mr. Beaudry was given a life sentence. The prior prison stay which qualified Mr. Beaudry as a PRR was for introduction of contraband into a detention facility, a non-violent crime.

In the last example, an individual charged with 2 counts of robbery with a deadly weapon while wearing a mask, an offense punishable by life, 2 counts of aggravated assault with a weapon with no intent to kill, and grand theft, was determined to be an "accomplice" and was instrumental in securing convictions for the actual gunman (life) and the getaway driver (13 years on violation of probation) and was therefore offered a 15-year sentence, which he accepted, and which the victims in the case were comfortable with. However, if the defendant, being simply an accomplice, had refused the plea and gone to trial and was found guilty, the court would have had no choice but to sentence the individual to a life sentence under the PRR. Not every defendant has an accomplice, or accomplices, to garner a plea offer. However, this is the perfect case to highlight yet another example of disproportionality, besides the plea offers, in that this individual was still ultimately sentenced as a PRR. Yet, there are individuals, as noted above, who are offered pleas where the PRR is omitted completely.

To finish off the constitutional issues, we now address separation of powers which is located in Article II, section 3 of the Florida Constitution. Although this issue has also been argued in the courts, it is important to note simply due to the instances where it is stated that it is the State Attorney, and not the court, which has discretion in determining not only the eligibility of a defendant as a PRR, but also, as proven by the plea deviations, the definition of "extenuating circumstances," and whether or not a victim is able to determine sentencing with their wishes for or against prosecution as a PRR in order to determine whether an individual is, or isn't, offered a plea. The State Attorney is an executive function and determines charges and whether to prosecute someone charged with a crime. Sentencing, however, is a judicial function. With the PRR, once a defendant is determined to qualify as a PRR, a function which rests solely with the State Attorney, the court has no discretion as to sentencing, except to sentence above the statutory maximum as discussed earlier, a discretion so minute it's hardly worth including as part of the statute when one considers the mandatory prison term is the maximum statutory sentence allowed.

The original bill, HB 1371, reads as follows (all emphases are added): "If the state attorney determines that a defendant is a prison releasee reoffender as defined in subparagraph 1., the state attorney may seek to have the court sentence the defendant as a prison releasee reoffender. Upon proof from the state attorney that establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that a defendant is a prison releasee reoffender as defined in this section, such defendant is not eligible for sentencing under the usual guidelines..."<sup>82</sup> It also reads as follows: "For every case in which the offender meets the criteria in paragraph (a) and does not receive the mandatory minimum prison sentence, the state attorney must explain the sentence deviation in writing..."

The HB 1371 analyses describe the discretion multiple times as follows:

1. Page 1 of the Senate Staff Analysis and Economic Impact Statement, CS/SB 2362, Ways and Means Committee reads under the summary: “CS/SB 2362 provides that when a state attorney pursues sentencing...,” though sentencing is clearly a judicial function. In contrast, this same report states on page 2 regarding the habitual offender statutes, “If a state attorney pursues a habitual offender sanction (not sentence) against a defendant...,” which would clearly be in the purview of the executive branch. This same verbiage is used for the HVFO and VCC.
2. On page 6 of the same report as in number 1, it reads, “if a state attorney determines that a defendant is a prison releasee reoffender the state attorney may seek to have the court sentence the defendant as a prison releasee reoffender.” Now, this statement does intimate the court has some discretion in the matter, but the court only needs to determine if the defendant has committed a qualifying offense and has done so within 3 years of being released from prison, in order to confirm or deny the individual qualifies as a PRR. Thereafter, there is absolutely no discretion as to sentencing, except as noted previously. The judge is not able to entertain mitigating circumstances, does not determine the definition of extenuating circumstances, and is not able to take into consideration the wishes of the victim, which are all under the discretion of the State Attorney. Once the State Attorney proves that the defendant is a PRR and the court either confirms or denies this designation, sentencing is determined solely by the PRR designation, which once again is pursued by the State Attorney, not the court.
3. In the same report also on page 6, last paragraph, it reads as follows: “The state attorney is not required to pursue sentencing the defendant as a prison releasee reoffender. Even if the defendant meets the criteria for a prison releasee reoffender, the state attorney can seek to have the defendant sentenced under the sentencing guidelines or...” and “when the state attorney does pursue sentencing of the defendant as a prison releasee reoffender and proves that the defendant is a prison releasee reoffender, the court must impose the appropriate mandatory minimum term of imprisonment.”
4. In the same report, on page 10 under VII, Related Issues, it states, “This CS gives the state attorney total discretion to pursue prison releasee reoffender sentencing. If the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant qualifies, it has no discretion and must impose the statutory maximum allowable for the offense. And, “the provisions of this CS do not authorize a court to impose a lesser sentence even if the court believes the defendant presents no present danger to the public. Ergo, even if the court used their discretion in determining the defendant did not pose a danger to the public and wanted to impose a lesser sentence, he/she could not do so. That is the very definition of discretion, yet the court has no discretion in sentencing, a duty of the judiciary. This point is further elucidated with the following last sentence from the same paragraph, “This distinction could raise arguments that the bill empowers assistant state attorneys to be the ultimate sentencing authority, rather than the elected judiciary. This CS passed the Committee with 24 yays and 0 nays.

The points above are reiterated in the Senate’s Criminal Justice Committee CS pages 1, 2, 6, 7, 9, 10 and page 1 of the Statement of Substantial Changes Contained in Committee Substitute (passed with 7 yays and 1 nay); and the House of Representatives Committee on Criminal Justice Appropriations Bill Research and Economic Impact Statement of April 2, 1997 pages 1 and 5.

Recent Legislation

In the 2020 legislative session, Senator Jeff Brandes introduced SB 1716 which amended the sentencing structure under the PRR as follows:

- a. For a felony punishable by life, to a term of imprisonment of 25 years (currently life).
- b. For a felony of the first degree, to a term of imprisonment of 20 years (currently 30 years).
- c. For a felony of the second degree, to a term of imprisonment of 10 years (currently 15 years).
- d. For a felony of the third degree, to a term of imprisonment of 3 years (currently 5 years).

This bill also allowed for the accrual of gain time for anyone sentenced as a PRR, whereas the current law does not. These amendments were to be applied retroactively. According to the Senate Bill Analysis and Fiscal Impact statement for SB 1716, the legislature's Office of Economic and Demographic Research (hereafter EDR) indicated there were 7,396 potentially eligible PRR individuals incarcerated with varying mandatory sentences as follows: 1,126 with 5 years; 3,579 with 15 years; 799 with 30 years; 1,750 with life sentences; and 142 listed as "other." Although the bed impact could not be absolutely quantified, it was determined that with the bill proposals there would be a significant impact on the prison population.<sup>83</sup> However, this bill died in committee.

Hypothetically, if SB 1716 had passed last session and those in the 5 and 15-year categories had served enough time to subsequently be released, that would be an annual savings of $106,747,040 (combined total of 4,705 x $22,688); over 5 years, a savings of $533,735,200; over 10 years a savings of $1,067,470,400. Furthermore, the amendment for felonies punishable by life to 25 years is still 10 years more than the majority of plea offerings (15 years) where the individual ultimately received a life sentence at trial.

In relation to cost, it's important to note that with laws like the PRR, and other mandatory minimums, in which individuals are not only serving longer prison sentences, but in the case of the PRR who are then having to serve 100% of that sentence, this most probably adds to the elderly inmate population, which in turn substantially increases the cost. According to the DOC 2018-2019 Annual Report, as of June 30, 2019 elderly inmates (defined as 50 or older per statute 944.02) accounted for 25% of the total inmate population (an increase of 2.6% from the previous year).<sup>84</sup> The National Institute of Corrections has indicated that the annual cost of incarcerating those 55 or older who have chronic or terminal illnesses is 2 or 3 times that for all others on average, according to a Pew research study, and in this same study Florida was 7th overall in elderly inmate population for fiscal year 2015 when compared to other reporting states.<sup>85</sup>

VOI/TIS Theory

Although I have no doubt that the appeals regarding administrative/provisional credits related to overcrowding, as well as gain time credits, and the incorrect application of retroactivity in the opinions by Attorney General Butterworth were responsible for the drafting and passing of the PRR, I have my own theory about what may have been the catalyst, or at least contributed to, the apparent expeditious nature of passing this bill. Title II, Subtitle A of the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 (“Crime Act”) (Pub. L. 103-322), established the Violent Offender Incarceration and Truth-in-Sentencing (hereafter VOI/TIS) Incentive Grant Program. Briefly, this program was developed to help states remove violent offenders from the community, and encouraged states to implement TIS laws. This program provided formula grants to states to build or expand correctional facilities and jails to increase secure confinement space for violent offenders. From fiscal years 1996 to 2001, half of the funds were made available for the VOI portion, and half were available as incentive awards to states that implemented TIS laws. During FYs 1996-2001, more than $2.7 billion was allocated for the VOI/TIS program.

VOI funds were allocated to states using a three-tiered formula, with each tier using different criteria for eligibility. Eligible states could receive funding under all three tiers. Florida received the second highest total award of $236,967,649. Although the funding for each year from 1996 to 2001 was relatively equal,<sup>86</sup> and though a majority of states for 1996 received the exact same amount ($1,248,453), in fiscal year 1997 Florida received $73,077,414 which is almost double most of the subsequent years. It should be noted that this amount is taken from the Bureau of Justice Assistance (hereafter BJA) report. If one compares these figures to the semi-annual report provided by the state<sup>87</sup>, there is a discrepancy. The semi-annual report indicates Florida received $31,221,730 in 1996 and $43,104,137. With this difference, it appears that funds that should have belonged in 1997 were added to the amount reported by the BJA for FY 1996 of $1,248,453 ($77,077,414 - $43,104,137 = $29,973,277). Add $29,937,277 to $1,248,453 and that equals the amount Florida reported for FY 1996 of $31,221,730. I obviously do not have a reason as to why there is this discrepancy, whether honest human error, intentional, misunderstanding/miscalculation, etc., but either way there is a discrepancy. Although everyone makes mistakes, I would be remiss to think that an error such as this was made by the BJA in a report to Congress. Eighty-five percent of the funds from the VOI grants were available for the first two tiers, and the remaining 15% of the total funds were reserved for the third tier.

The eligibility requirements for the VOI portion of the grants are as follows:

1. Tier 1: To have qualified for VOI funds, a state needed to provide an assurance in its application for funding that it had implemented, or was planning to implement, correctional policies and programs, including truth-in-sentencing laws that (1) ensured that violent offenders served a substantial portion of the sentence imposed; (2) provided sufficiently severe punishment for violent offenders, including violent juvenile offenders; and (3) ensured that the prison time served was appropriately related to the determination that the inmate was a violent offender and thus was deemed necessary to protect the public.

2. Tier 2: A state that received a grant under Tier 1 was eligible for Tier 2 funds if it demonstrated that, since 1993, it had increased (1) the percentage of persons arrested for a Part 1 violent crime who were sentenced to prison; (2) the average prison time actually served by Part 1 violent offenders; or (3) the average percentage of a sentence served by persons convicted of a Part 1 violent crime.
3. Tier 3: A state that received a grant under Tier 1 (and Tier 2, if applicable) was eligible for Tier 3 funds if it demonstrated that, since 1993, it had increased (1) the percentage of persons arrested for a Part 1 violent crime who were sentenced to prison; (2) the average percentage of a sentence served by persons convicted of a Part 1 violent crime; or (3) by 10 percent or more, over the most recent 3-year period, the number of persons convicted of Part 1 violent crimes that had made new court commitments.

Using this information, let's note a few things. One could certainly argue Florida utilized TIS implementation to garner grant funds, and I'm assuming it did, however as noted previously in this report Florida implemented the 85% TIS rule in 1995, one year after the passing of the 1994 crime bill, and one year prior to federal funds being appropriated to states. Unfortunately, as of this writing I have yet to receive copies of the requested grant applications from FYs 1996-2001 in order to confirm/deny this information, and therefore these are only assumptions, but assumptions I feel are worthy of contemplation as the passing of the PRR portion of 775.082 certainly qualifies as implementation of a policy which satisfies all three tiers.

In December of 1993, over 5,000 members of a group called STOP (Stop Turning Out Prisoners) approved a petition drive for a constitutional amendment that would require prisoners to serve at least 85% of their sentences. This was after one STOP member inaccurately claimed in an article in the Orlando Sentinel that "We are disgusted that many Florida felons serve less than 15% of their sentence."<sup>88</sup> In July of 1994, the Florida Supreme Court ruled against the proposed STOP ballot amendment. By 1995, however, prisoners were already serving an average of 60% of their sentences and the guideline changes and the end of early releases would increase the average time served to 75% by 1996.<sup>89</sup> However, then-Senator Charlie Crist sponsored a bill shortly thereafter which was similar to the STOP ballot initiative. This bill passed unanimously in the Senate and overwhelmingly in the House. However, the 85% requirement would again require more prison beds (15,000) and subsequently an increase in operating expenses.

The question, then, became how to pay for the prison expansion afforded by the 1995 legislation of $2 billion over the next 5 years. Despite resistance to the suggestion of cutting Medicaid funding to help pay for prisons, lawmakers voted to do just that by 4%. In addition, the legislature cut funds for welfare and social services by making the AFDC application procedure more difficult, reducing benefits for poor pregnant women and aid to county public health clinics, and laying off HRS employees. By making these cuts, the legislature was able to fund 3,552 new prison beds ($80 million), operating costs for the 17,000 expected new prison beds for FY 1995-96 ($219.5 million), 2,942 new DOC positions, and a 6% pay raise for corrections officers (interestingly, at the same time teachers received only a 3% raise).<sup>90</sup> Of note, the grant funds received from the 1994 federal crime bill would cover almost half of the needed beds. According to the 2012 BJA report, Florida used its VOI/TIS funds to add 7,673 correctional beds, with 6,426 in operation, according to the last progress report.

To summarize, it is my theory that the PRR was passed, at least in part, as swiftly and with such little regard to the future fiscal impact due to the State needing to implement a program or policy that would help to satisfy the tier requirements of the VOI/TIS grants. At the time, there were already habitual offender enhancements. TIS had been implemented in 1995. They would need something that ensured violent offenders served a substantial portion of the sentence imposed (100%), provided sufficient punishment (certain punishment with the maximum statutory punishment allowed), increased the average prison time actually served by Part 1 violent offenders (many of the qualifying PRR offenses are Part 1), increased the average percentage of a sentence served by persons convicted of Part 1 offenses, etc. Once I receive the remainder of the requested records relating to the VOI/TIS grants, I will amend this report with that information whether it proves or disproves my theory. Regardless of the “cause” or catalyst, the prison releasee reoffender act is a draconian, disproportionate and unnecessary piece of legislation.

Relevant Articles/Case Studies

In an article in the St. Thomas Law Review, author Desiree Cuason hit on several key points regarding the PRR.<sup>91</sup> Of note, Ms. Cuason states the PRR mandates the courts automatically sentence a defendant who commits one of the qualifying crimes within 3 years of being released from a Florida prison to the statutory maximum. Although Ms. Cuason compares the PRR to other “three strikes” laws during that time period, the PRR is inherently different in that it is a “two strikes” law. The 1994 Crime Bill required federal courts to sentence persons charged with a current felony to the statutory maximum if they had previously been convicted of at least two other serious violent felonies, or any combination of two or more serious violent felonies, or drug offense. As we’ve discussed in detail, the PRR does not take into consideration the type, or number of prior offense(s). She goes on to state, “The only significant difference between the federal “Three Strikes” law and the Act is that the federal law provides the offender with two changes, while the Florida statute does not.”

Although Ms. Cuason opines that the PRR does not constitute cruel and unusual punishment as it does not impose a sentence of death, nor does it impose a sentence so severe that it shocks the conscience of the court, but how is that not so when someone is offered a 15-year plea deal, or even a 3, 5, 7, 10-year plea, and then receives a life sentence at trial? How is it not so severe when someone receives a life sentence for robbery where no one was physically harmed, yet people who have committed murder have been released?

This report also touches on the issue of disproportionality by noting, "In order to determine whether mandatory sentences fall within the purview of the Eighth Amendment Cruel and Unusual Punishment Clause, courts must consider "whether under the circumstances the nature of the punishment is grossly disproportionate to the offense and goes beyond any legitimate penal goal so as to shock the general conscience and violate principles of fundamental fairness." Failure of a defendant to refrain from reoffending, combined with the failure of previous sentences to deter such defendant, justifies the imposition of statutory maximums that the Act provides. Therefore, the imposition of such statutory maximums are not disproportionate to the qualifying crimes." However, the PRR takes into consideration only one previous sentence, and therefore even by the definition of the federal "Three Strikes" law it is highly disproportionate for someone to receive a life sentence based on that one prior offense, especially given that even the type of prior offense is irrelevant.

Another discrepancy in this article is found on page 645 and reads, "If found guilty of committing one of the qualified crimes within three years of being released from a Florida prison, the reoffender will be sentence to the maximum penalty. The word "commits," found in the amended language of chapter 775, mandates the finding of guilt." However, as we know, even though an individual may have been offered a plea, that plea could still have included sentencing under the PRR, and in that respect an individual was not found guilty but admitted guilt to avoid an even longer PRR sentence.

Under section III, the author notes the PRR could contribute to even more prison overcrowding with longer prison terms with no chance of early release, and that courts would sentence individuals to statutory maximums for what could be a minor crime, and that this would cause a tremendous strain on the financial resources of the State. And, though it is indicated in this report that there is no violation of the separation of powers, Ms. Cuason states, "With the implementation of the Act, judges will virtually have no voice in the sentencing scheme in that if the offender qualifies, courts will automatically impose the statutory maximum, and prevents judges from exercising discretion, and recommends that based on their experiences in applying general principles, concepts and standards, lawmakers should give discretion back to judges. Although she states sentencing is left up to the legislature and this in and of itself does not violate the separation of powers, however when someone is sentenced as a PRR the usual sentencing guidelines are bypassed, and this is exactly why it does violate the separation of powers.

In her summary and recommendations, Ms. Cuason suggests alternatives to sentencing such as partial and short-term confinement, intensive supervision, electronic monitoring and community service. But, more importantly, lawmakers must develop new ways of preventing future crimes with things such as early intervention school programs, job training and placement programs to educate troubled youth.

In another case study from 2002, author Pamala Griset brilliantly displays the history prior to the passing of the PRR and how amendments to gain time were the ultimate catalyst to its passing.<sup>92</sup> Regarding its definition, she wrote:

“The PRR was a mandatory sentencing law that clearly designated the prosecutor as the most powerful person in sentencing. Prosecutors were not required under the law to file PRR status for qualifying offenders, but when they did, judges could not intervene. Judges could not impose a lesser sentence by departure because the PRR bypassed the sentencing guidelines. Nor were any other avenues for mercy left to judicial discretion. The legislature sought to encourage prosecutors to file PRR status, however, by requiring them to write reasons, to be made public, for not filing against qualifying offenders.”

This report refers to the court decisions I’ve already discussed, Gwong v. Singletary and Lynce v. Mathis, and also reiterates how upset the legislature was regarding these decisions and utilized the PRR in retaliation. As noted, one of the individuals she interviewed stated, “The PRR evolved from the late 1980s. There were so many variations of sentencing because every year the Legislature changed its sentencing policy, so the DOC had different rules for everyone, depending on the date of their crime. The Legislature said ‘no more gain time,’ but the courts said ‘no, you can’t arbitrarily take it away.’ Hundreds of offenders were released early, and many might commit crimes, so the Legislature said ‘whenever they’re released, if they commit another crime, then they get a long, long sentence.’” Another interviewee noted, “giving them the statutory maximum, no gain time... was overkill. What was really needed was supervising them closely once they were released. But it [the PRR] got caught up in politics, and the Speaker put his entire weight behind passing it. He said ‘we’re not going home without this bill.’ He held hostage everything else.” Other interviewees, including some prosecutors, indicated the PRR was unnecessary as there were already habitual offender laws to cover every potential situation, but they did note that the PRR was different in “the extent of power allocated to prosecutors and removed from judges.”

Plea Questionnaire Findings

FPFU sent out approximately 500 questionnaires to random individuals incarcerated in several of Florida’s correctional institutions. Of those 500 questionnaires, 204 were returned with findings noted below:

1. A total of 129 of respondents, or 63%, were offered a plea.
2. Of the total of 129 plea respondents, 84% (109) were black, 15% (19) were white and 1% (1) were Hispanic (1).
3. The average plea offered was 18 years with 100 of those respondents ultimately being given a life sentence.
4. Of those 129 plea respondents who provided their score sheet (45), the average lowest possible sentence that could have been given under the usual guidelines is 10 years.
5. Of those 129 plea respondents who provided their score sheet which included the victim injury section (44), in 80% of the cases (35) there was zero victim injury, in 11% (5) there was slight victim injury, in 7% (3) there was moderate victim injury and in 2% (1) there was severe victim injury.

6. A total of 75 respondents, or 37%, were not offered a plea.
7. Of the 75 respondents who were not offered a plea, 83% (62) were black, 16% (12) were white, and 1% (1) were Hispanic.
8. Of the 75 respondents not offered a plea who provided their score sheet (25), the average lowest possible sentence under the normal guidelines was 9.5 years.
9. Of the 75 respondents not offered a plea who provided their score sheet which included the victim injury section (26), in 81% (21) of the cases there was zero victim injury, in 8% (2) there was slight victim injury, in 3% (1) there was moderate victim injury, and in 8% (2) there was severe victim injury.
10. Of the 75 respondents who were not offered a plea, 97% (73) received life sentences and 3% (2) received 30 years.

Racial/Ethnic Impact

The plea study noted above, although not as broad as one would like it to have been, still recognizes the racial disparity of the PRR. Although I still have not received a response to my public records request to the DOC on 10/17/2020 asking for everyone sentenced under the PRR since its inception sorted by race only, I have perused the Racial/Ethnic Impact Statement which was prepared for last session's SB 1716 by the Florida State University College of Criminology and Criminal Justice. According to this report, "it was found that there is racial/ethnic disparity in the rate of qualifying offenders sentenced as PRR's. Black offenders were more likely to be sentenced as PRR's for all felony types than were Hispanic and White offenders." It goes on to state, "Prior research has not examined potential racial/ethnic differences among offenders sentenced to prison under Florida's PRR Act. Research estimating the impact of the PRR shortly after its implementation, however, suggested that the Act resulted in large increases to the prison population, especially among offenders who otherwise would not have been sentenced to prison if they had not been designated as a PRR (Cuason, 1998; Griset, 2002)."

Advocacy

Several years ago, I started a petition on Change.org which calls for the retroactive repeal of the PRR. As of the writing of this report, the petition has 4,875 signatures. In 2020, Brenda "Kay" Spitzbarth started Florida PRR Families United to bring awareness to this egregious law as her son is one of the PRR individuals who spent his time in a county jail prior to the 2019 amendment, yet he has continued to be denied relief, even following the Lewars decision.

Federal First Step Act

On December 21, 2018, President Trump signed into law the First Step Act (FSA). This Act included a summary of the following provisions related to federal sentencing reform:

1. Changes to Mandatory Minimums for Certain Drug Offenders: The FSA makes changes to the penalties for some federal offenses. The FSA modifies mandatory minimum sentences for some drug traffickers with prior drug convictions by increasing the threshold for prior convictions that count toward triggering higher mandatory minimums for repeat offenders, reducing the 20-year mandatory minimum (applicable where the offender has one prior qualifying conviction) to a 15-year mandatory minimum, and reducing a life-in-prison mandatory minimum (applicable where the offender has two or more prior qualifying convictions) to a 25-year mandatory minimum.

2. Retroactivity of the Fair Sentencing Act: The FSA made the provisions of the Fair Sentencing Act of 2010 (P.L. 111-220) retroactive so that currently incarcerated offenders who received longer sentences for possession of crack cocaine than they would have received if sentenced for possession of the same amount of powder cocaine before the enactment of the Fair Sentencing Act can submit a petition in federal court to have their sentences reduced.<sup>93</sup>

As a result of these provisions, over 3,000 individuals were released from federal prison as of July 2019, and approximately 1,700 other federal sentences were reduced. The U.S. Sentencing Commission (USSC) indicated 25% of those sentence reductions were granted to prisoners in three states—Florida, South Carolina and Virginia. Over 91% were African-American, and most were male. I have included a brief summary of this Act to show that even the Federal Government is not immune to reform, and to retroactivity of those reforms.<sup>94</sup> However, one of the criticisms of the FSA was that lowering the prison population would necessarily increase crime rates. However, as per the 2020 report “Explaining the Past and Projecting Future Crime Rates,”<sup>95</sup> there is clear evidence that lowering state and federal imprisonment rates will not necessarily trigger increases in crime. They gave an example of 4 states where prison populations had been lowered by over 20% and crime rates had also declined by substantial amounts. By 2017, New York had reduced its prison population by 32%, but also had a 43% reduction in the UCR crime rate. New Jersey had a 38% reduction in the prison population, with a 48% reduction in the UCR crime rate. Maryland had a 17% reduction in their prison population, with a 34% reduction in crime. California had a 25% reduction in their prison population, with a 21% reduction in crime.<sup>96</sup>

This report further elucidates that a state’s prison population represents a small share of the total correctional system, with jails and probation containing far more admissions than prisons.<sup>97</sup> The authors beg the question, “Was it the rise in the prison population or the much larger number of people being booked and held in local jail systems or being sentenced to probation that most influenced crime rates?” And then go on to surmise, “There is certainly a possibility that the other forms of correctional control have had a greater impact than imprisonment has, particularly the jail and probation systems, which make up 90% of the total admissions to the correctional system and represent two-thirds of the total correctional population. These statistics should prompt policymakers and criminologists to question previous conclusions regarding the effects of imprisonment alone on crime.”

The average daily population for Florida jails/detention centers in the month of October 2020 was 48,602 which was as 12.5% decrease from the previous year, however of note this decrease is most likely due to the pandemic.<sup>98</sup> Therefore, Florida county jails/detention facilities house approximately half of the entire prison population on a daily basis.

Crime Victims

One of the misconceptions about reformers is that we don't care about victims. This couldn't be further from the truth. Reform should not only include changes to laws, it should more so include greater access to rehabilitation, with the goal of ensuring when someone is released from prison there will be no more victims, or, at the very least, much less. When Dorian Mackeroy wrote to Senator Brandes, he was honest in stating that for many years after he received his life sentence he was kind of lost in what it is he wanted to do, or even how he felt at spending the rest of his life in prison, but one day he decided the most important thing was to ensure there were no more victims, not only outside prison, but also inside, and vowed that even though life in prison seemed hopeless, he was resolved to be a better person. James Wilson stated to me several times that if I were ever to have a chance to speak in front of legislators about the PRR that they give me more than two minutes to speak because his victim deserved more than two minutes for me to explain why he should be released from prison.

The criminal justice system, and lawmakers, will always purport that what they are doing in terms of laws and upholding those laws are done for the victims. But, do they really understand what victims want? And, if they do, do they always abide by those wishes? As proven by the plea agreements and plea deviations, they do not. In 2016, the Alliance for Safety and Justice (ASJ) released their National Survey of Victim's Views report. This report was conducted by David Binder Research, which contacted a nationally representative sample of 3,165 people across the country, and, from that pool, identified and interviewed over 800 victims of both non-violent and violent crimes.

This report found that 61% of crime victims support shorter prison sentences, and more funding for prevention and rehabilitation. By a margin of 3 to 1, crime victims believe that time in prison makes people more likely to commit another crime rather than less likely. By a margin of 15 to 1, victims prefer increased investments in schools and education rather than prison and jails. By a margin of 10 to 1, victims preferred increased investments in job creation rather than in prison and jails.

In 2018, the ASJ did a similar report specifically for the State of Florida.<sup>99</sup> The same research company as the national study conducted the survey in both English and Spanish in January 2018 via landline phones and online. Respondents self-identified as victims and provided the types of crime they had experienced in the last 10 years. Of those interviewed, 88% supported investing more in education and communities than jails and prisons, and 83% supported investing more in job training and workforce development than jails and prisons. By a margin of 4 to 1, victims think prison makes people more likely to commit crimes than to help rehabilitate them into better citizens; by a margin of 3 to 1, victims prefer shorter sentences and more spending on prevention and rehabilitation programs to longer sentences that keep people in prison for as long as possible; 7 in 10 (69 percent) think rehabilitation, drug treatment, and mental health treatment is a better way to prevent future crimes than punishment through incarceration; and 8 in 10 (78 percent) prefer that prosecutors focus on solving neighborhood problems and stopping repeat crimes through rehabilitation, even if it means fewer prison convictions.

In addition to surveying crime victims about their broad priorities, the ASJ also asked about reforms that have been raised as policy reform options in Florida. Overwhelmingly, victims support policy changes that restore judicial discretion, incentivize participation in rehabilitation and risk-reduction programs, and reduce the use of prison for less serious crimes such as drug possession and petty theft.

Interestingly, this report also shows that although victims in Florida support the above measures, they also feel the system is not meeting their needs as victims. So, once again, how much does the criminal justice system in Florida truly care about not only victims' views on their needs and support, but also on the system itself, when they are clearly taking neither into consideration?

Although many states, and the federal government, have accomplished reforms that have reduced their prison populations, many of these reforms have been related to offenders/offenses deemed “non-violent.” However, most state inmates (in Florida, 56%<sup>100</sup>) have been convicted of violent crimes. Therefore, reductions in incarceration must, at least in part, depend upon reducing sentences for violent offenses. In a 2018 article for USA Today, sociologist Bruce Western wrote, “The political challenges for achieving criminal justice reform are formidable. Political debate portrays violence as a characteristic of certain people — thugs who are beyond redemption, people with no conscience. Using anger and fear to punish them with life sentences or death has become an intractable part of public policy.”<sup>101</sup>

This article also references the Boston Re-Entry Study<sup>102</sup> for which Mr. Western was the chief investigator for the Harvard University Team. During the course of this study, half of the 122 individuals who were interviewed indicated they had been beaten by their parents; 40% had witnessed someone being killed; 30% grew up with other family violence; and 16% reported being sexually abused. Mr. Western further writes, “Violence is as much a characteristic of places as of people. Poor and chaotic homes, disorderly and low-income neighborhoods, and the prisons and jails that lie, in some cases, in close proximity to them, are places where violence frequently happens. Some of the same violent conditions (domestic abuse, childhood sexual trauma) also exist in middle- and upper-income households. But people in higher-income areas also have more economic opportunity, greater access to mental health treatment and the ability to more easily leave bad situations behind.”

It is understandable that legislators do not want to appear “soft on crime,” which understandably occurs with conversations regarding violent crimes, but when we talk about victims we must include even those who go on to victimize.

Conclusion

The PRR is a draconian, egregious and wholly unnecessary law which was drafted for purely political, malicious and, in my opinion, short-term economic reasons. Buddy Jacobs of the FPAA testified at a Senate committee meeting during the 2020 session that none of the criminal justice bills from the 1990's were drafted maliciously, but how much more malicious is it to pass a law of such magnitude as the PRR simply due to restored early release credits? None of the released individuals who'd had their credits restored had committed another crime. All of the individuals who'd had credits restored were going to be released eventually. The restored credits were due in part to the legislature not adequately dealing with prison overcrowding issues stemming from the 1970's and 80's, and the remainder were credits that had to be earned. And, if my theory is correct and the PRR was utilized to receive federal grant monies, how is sending thousands of people to prison for terms sometimes decades longer than necessary for short-term grant money not the very definition of malicious? Even with the small sampling the FPFU was able to provide, we can see that the State time and again was comfortable offering anywhere from 3 years to 5, 10, 15, etc., years to individuals who ultimately were given life. How is this type of law not considered malicious? How malicious is it to pass a law knowing the DOC could have disciplinary problems with individuals who not only received disproportionately long sentences, but would also have absolutely no incentive for good behavior due to having to serve 100% of the sentence? How malicious is it to take an egregious law and make it worse with amendments that increase the eligibility net and make it watertight to appeals? How malicious is it to continue to not amend and/or retroactively repeal this statute simply because it helps prosecutors and courts clear dockets?

As we've determined, the PRR is disproportionate in a myriad of ways, and we've even determined that the PRR disproportionately affects African Americans.

Although the courts have mostly disagreed, the PRR does violate separation of powers in that it gives the state attorney sole discretion in whether someone is sentenced as a PRR, and this has been proven without a doubt. Sentencing is the role of the judiciary and should be left to such.

The PRR is the very definition of, if not cruel, at least unusual punishment. The PRR does not take into consideration the type of offense, nor the number of offenses, before it is ultimately able to qualify someone for a life sentence after only two "strikes," and in many of these instances, as we have proven, there was absolutely no physical victim injury. Only two instances of "proof" are needed to qualify someone as a PRR, that the individual committed a qualifying offense, and that the most recent offense occurred within 3 years of the individual being released from a prison sentence. Absolutely nothing else may be taken into consideration by the court when determining sentencing. PRR individuals must serve 100% of their sentence and are not eligible for gain time or any other form of early release. The PRR is a mandatory maximum where the statutory maximum is the sentence that must be imposed.

Since its inception, there have been approximately 14,000 individuals sentenced under the PRR. You will not hear even one of those individuals who say they did not deserve punishment for their crimes, but in a majority of instances, the punishment simply does not fit the crime.

This session, Senator Jeff Brandes has filed SB 210 which amends the PRR sentencing structure as in last sessions' SB 1716. Once again, although my personal goal is a complete and retroactive repeal of the PRR, amending the statute as filed by Senator Brandes is a step in the right direction and therefore it is highly supported by not only myself, Florida PRR Families United, loved ones of those sentenced under this law, but by those sentenced under this law. It is hoped you will share our enthusiasm for the various types of relief that will be afforded with this bill and support its passage.

Thank you for your time. Please peruse your email as I will be sending a digital copy of this report, as well as PRR deviations from the 19th District.

The following pages contain summaries of several PRR cases I've chosen to highlight, but there are many, many more examples of why this law needs to be repealed, or, at the very least, extensively amended.

Case Studies

Dorian Mackeroy: In 1998, at the age of 23, Dorian was sentenced to life under the PRR in Pinellas County for robbery with a firearm. His victim was not physically injured. The prior sentence that qualified him for the PRR was robbery with no gun/deadly weapon at the age of 16. At that time, however, since he was simply only with the other youth who actually committed the crime, he took a plea of 4 years as a youthful offender as a principal to robbery. Dorian was released from that sentence on September 30, 1994. Since the PRR was not passed until May 30, 1997, Dorian would not have received the PRR "warning" notice as required by the statute. Due to the qualifying PRR offense of robbery and his past offense of robbery, even though he plead to a lesser charge and did not even actually commit the first robbery, he was also designated as a "habitual violent felony offender," though he physically hurt no one in either of the offenses. The HVFO was later stricken per court order on August 24, 2004, but the PRR life sentence was left intact. The lowest possible sentence Dorian could have received under the usual guidelines is 6-1/2 years, and the maximum prison sentence he could have received under the usual guidelines is 11 years. Even with his life sentence, Dorian has managed to take as many programs as are offered for those serving life. Dorian is married and has 3 children, many grandchildren and a large extended family who are supportive. Dorian has been incarcerated for 23 years, 8 years more than the 15-year majority plea offered in robbery cases, and 6 years more than the average plea offered in the FPFU study. It has already cost the state approximately $500,000 to house Dorian, and if he spends the next 33 years in prison it will cost the State approximately $750,000 more. And, what will this 33 years prove/gain in the end?

Samuel L. Green, II: The prior offense that qualified Samuel as a PRR was an armed robbery that occurred in 1992. He was sentenced to 5 years in prison followed by 10 years of probation. He was released from actual prison on March 7, 1997, TWO MONTHS BEFORE the PRR was passed into law. He started his probation at that time, and violated probation with a technical violation (no new charge) and went back to prison in January of 2002 to serve the probation violation time, and was released on January 1, 2003. The most recent offense of robbery with a firearm occurred in June of 2004, seven years after he was released from actual prison. Samuel's technical probation violation was used to qualify him as a PRR, even though he was released from actual prison BEFORE the PRR was passed into law, BEFORE the PRR was amended to include “from a prison sentence,” which would include probation. Obviously, Samuel also did not receive the PRR notice from the DOC. For the most recent offense, Samuel was offered a 15-year plea as a PRR and indicated that one of the reasons he did not accept that plea is because his trial attorney informed him they had to be noticed in writing before trial if the State was going to seek the PRR. He also elected to go to trial because the lowest possible score he could have received under the usual guidelines was 5-1/2 years. Samuel is currently serving a life sentence under the PRR. Samuel was 32 when he was given his life sentence; he is now 47.

Mark Jones: In 2012, Mark, an honorably discharged Army veteran, was sentenced to life under the PRR for burglary/assault any person. The details of the “assault” are that Mark walked up to the victim’s car talking on a cell phone, he reached in the car and grabbed her wrist and said, “get out of the car and give me your keys.” She looked at him and didn’t think he was serious, and when she realized he was serious she screamed and Mark walked away. The State Attorney pursued PRR in Mark’s case due to him being sentenced to 1 year and 1 day in prison for grand theft of $300/less than $5000 for which he was sentenced on June 5, 2008 and was released on December 24, 2008. His qualifying PRR offense occurred on June 27, 2011. The lowest possible sentence Mark could have received was 5-1/2 years. There was no physical injury, weapons used, etc. The Veteran’s Administration was active throughout his incarceration and up to trial, but the State Attorney would not talk to them. Mark had a serious drinking problem due to an incident which occurred during service in the military. He eventually was unable to hold down jobs and would commit thefts because he had no money or home. Mark also has a documented traumatic brain injury and PTSD from active duty service and multiple social workers from the VA were present throughout his trial and at sentencing, yet the State continued to refuse to cooperate with them for any type of treatment plan. In all the time Mark has been incarcerated, he has never received a disciplinary report. Mark’s father is a retired special agent who spent 30 years with the FBI, his mom a retired schoolteacher who passed away recently while he has been incarcerated. Mark is married and has 2 brothers.

Michael Nicks: If you were to look up Michael Nicks on the DOC website, his offenses would make one think he’s a really bad guy. First-degree murder, robbery. Michael has 2 life sentences, and unless you knew the details of his case, you might think he deserves to be in prison for the rest of his life. But, that is exactly why taking discretion away from judges, as with the PRR, does not allow anyone to take into consideration the individual nuances of each case. At the age of 23, Michael was sentenced for the first-degree murder under the felony murder rule. In February of 2001, Michael was visiting Orlando with 2 friends. They met a man who one of his friends was possibly selling a gun to. This buyer ended up shooting and killing a taxi driver. Though Michael did not know the shooter, nor the cab driver, and did not shoot or kill anyone, due to the felony murder rule he was sentenced as if he had. The friend who was selling the gun received a 15-year plea deal in exchange for testimony that a robbery was what led to the murder and that Michael had conspired with the buyer to help with the robbery. The individual who actually killed the cab driver received 25 years. Michael was the least involved in the incident, but ended up with the 2 life sentences because of the PRR. A few years prior to the incident he had stolen some car batteries from a junk yard full of golf carts. He was caught and given 18 months of work release. This offense is what qualified Michael for the PRR. The judge in Michael’s case, Richard Conrad of the 9th Judicial Circuit in Orlando, actually apologized to Michael for having no other choice but to sentence him to life. Michael is now in his early 40's. The same year he went to prison, he became a mentor and tutor in education. He has been a chaplain's orderly, and a colonel's orderly. He is a mentor and program auditor in Wakulla's faith and character based rehabilitation program, and has 1,220 hours in this program. Michael's goal is to work as a paralegal, and one day, if granted his freedom, to become a lawyer. The morning of his trial, Michael was offered a 15-year plea deal, which he declined as he did not murder anyone, nor had he conspired to murder anyone, but he is now serving a life sentence. Michael has been in prison for 18 years, 3 years longer than the 15-year plea he was offered.

Louis Smock: Though there was no victim injury in his case, in 2008 Louis was sentenced to 5 life sentences for robbery with a gun/deadly weapon, and two sentences of 30 years for robbery without a gun/deadly weapon. The lowest possible sentence he could have received is 22 years. One month after his arrest, Louis was offered a plea of 26 years DOC with 10 years minimum mandatory, 10 years of probation, and a $250 fine. However, because he chose to go to trial, and due to the PRR, he received the above sentences. Five life sentences where no one was hurt.

Dontarious Carr: In 2014, Dontarious was charged with robbery with a gun/deadly weapon and possession of a concealed weapon/firearm by a convicted felon. There was no victim injury, and the lowest possible score he could have received under the usual guidelines was 7 years. Dontarious was deemed to qualify as a PRR and faced a life sentence at trial due to the offense of robbery with a deadly weapon being punishable by life, but he was offered a 15-year plea as a PRR, which he accepted. His current release date is 2029.

Marcus Maye: In May of 2002, Marcus was charged with robbery w/a deadly weapon. There was no victim injury, and the lowest possible sentence he could have received under the usual guidelines is 5-1/2 years. He was first offered a 30-year plea before trial, then 20 years at the start of trial. Marcus declined the plea, went to trial and received a life sentence due to the PRR.

Kenneth Nelson: In March of 2007, Kenneth was charged with robbery while armed with a firearm or deadly weapon. There was no physical victim injury, and the lowest possible sentence he could have received under the usual guidelines was 5 years. In 2007, Kenneth's lawyer received a letter from Jennifer Kuyrkendall, the assistant state attorney of the Office of the State Attorney of the third judicial circuit indicating Kenneth was released from prison on January 6, 2007 and this therefore qualified him as a PRR. The prison sentence Kenneth was released from at that time was for burglary of an occupied dwelling in which he received a 2-year and 8-month prison sentence. Ms. Kuyrkendall indicated that being subject to qualifying as a PRR he would be sentenced to a mandatory life sentence. She further went on to state that, "If your client wants to enter into a plea agreement with the State, I will amend the information to where it is charged as a 10-20-Life case pursuant to Florida Statute 775.087. Sentencing under that statute would only be a 20-year mandatory sentence." Part of this offer also included, "...and offer a proffer of testimony against his co-defendant and testify truthfully with or without subpoena." To reiterate, even though there was no physical injury to the victim, and even though the lowest possible sentence he could have received was 5 years the ASA felt a mandatory 20 years was appropriate, which it wasn't, as long as he cooperated with the State and testified against his co-defendant. Kenneth obviously refused the plea, and is now serving a life sentence. Another example of disproportionate sentencing, and sentencing decided entirely by the ASA, not the court.

Linda Wright: One of the very few women sentenced under the PRR, at the age of 47 Linda was charged with robbery with a weapon in October of 1998. Linda indicated to me that during the time she was going back and forth to the court for her case her lawyer would tell her she was facing 30 years, so she told him she wanted to go to trial, believing that if she lost she would receive the 30-year sentence. In June of 1993, Linda was charged with grand theft $300 less than $20,000 and received a 5-year prison sentence. She was released from that sentence on March 21, 1997, which is again two months before the PRR was signed into law, and in my opinion should absolutely not qualify someone as a PRR. If the DOC PRR warning notice precludes the State having to provide notice to defendants prior to trial so they are able to prepare an adequate defense, then it is absolutely obvious that any individual released prior to this law taking effect were NOT noticed. There was no physical victim injury in Linda's case, and the lowest possible sentence she could have received under the usual guidelines was 9.8 years, yet because she chose to go to trial she is now serving life as a PRR plus 30 years as a habitual offender for the robbery, and 30 years as a habitual offender plus 15 years as a PRR for count 2 which was aggravated battery (again, no victim injury is indicated on her score sheet). Does anyone else not see these sentences as extreme?! Linda didn't murder anyone, she didn't even physically hurt anyone, yet because she chose to go to trial she is serving life PLUS. Absolutely ridiculous. Linda is now 68 years old. She has been in prison now for 22 years.

Keith Bland: In April of 1993, Keith was sentenced to 5 years 6 months DOC for aggravated battery with a deadly weapon and was released from that sentence on May 7, 1997 which was, once again, before the PRR was passed into law. Keith was charged with armed robbery in July of 1997. There was no physical victim injury, and the lowest possible prison sentence Keith could have received under the usual guidelines was 4.8 years, and the maximum prison sentence he could have received under the usual guidelines was 8 years. Keith was initially offered 30 years with 20 mandatory, then 25 with 20 mandatory, and the last offer made to him was 20 years PRR. Keith indicated he asked for 10 years but that was declined by the State, even though the maximum sentence he could have received under the usual guidelines (97.5 points) was 8 years. Keith was 22 when he was given his life sentence, and he is now 44, having served almost THREE TIMES the maximum amount that he would have received without the PRR. If Keith had been given the maximum sentence under the usual guidelines, it would have cost the state approximately $181,504 (not accounting for gain time, so it could be even less). Due to the PRR, the state has already spent approximately $317,632 more than was necessary just for Keith, and if he should live to be 78 they will spend approximately $771,392 more for a total of $1,089,024 just on Keith alone.

Alexander Patterson: If you look up Mr. Patterson on the DOC website, it appears he has 11 life sentences. What comes to mind when you think of even one life sentence, let alone 11? One would perhaps think of a terrorist, serial killer, etc., yet Alexander was found guilty of robbery with a gun/deadly weapon. No one was physically hurt as a result of the robbery. The previous prison sentence which qualified Alexander as a PRR was for sale, delivery and possession of cocaine. Alexander committed 2 robberies. The reason it appears as if he has 11 life sentences is because the SA wanted to charge separately for everyone that was in the 2 stores at the time. Alexander's codefendant received 30 years and is set to be released June 5, 2024. Alexander tried to get a plea for 25 years, but the SA offered only life. Well, that is unless Alexander agreed to testify against his co-defendant, then they would have offered him 5 years. Alexander was 24 when he was given his life sentence. He is now 45 and has been in prison for 21 years. He is supported by his loving wife.

Horace Stokes: In June of 2014, Horace was charged with robbery with no firearm/deadly weapon, a second-degree felony that carries a maximum term of 15 years in prison. There was no victim injury, and the lowest possible sentence Horace could have received under the usual guidelines was a little less than 7 years, with the maximum being 15 years. Horace was offered a plea of 15 years and 1 day in prison as a habitual felony offender with a 15-year PRR mandatory. On the plea agreement, the assistant state attorney indicated that since Horace qualified as a PRR, a conviction would mandate a life sentence. However, if Horace were to forego his constitutional right to trial and enter a guilty plea, he would receive the earlier-mentioned sentence. Because he chose to go to trial, he received a life sentence.

William Graves: In March of 2001, Michael was charged with robbery with a firearm at the age of 39. There was no victim injury, and under the usual guidelines the lowest possible sentence he could have received was approximately 6 years. Michael indicated to me that four years after his conviction it was suggested to him that he should write the state attorney's office in the county of his conviction and inquire if there was ever a plea offered in his case. William received a response on July 25, 2006 from the 7th Judicial Circuit's ASA Bryan Feigenbaum that it was believed a plea of "three or four years DOC before trial began" had been offered, and subsequently rejected by William. William denies knowledge of any plea offer, and although his trial counsel, James Purdy, indicates he had notified William of a plea received from the prosecutor of 3-1/2 years in prison followed by 3 years' probation, it is incredulous to me that a 39-year-old individual facing a life sentence as a PRR would reject such an incredibly low offer. William has been in prison for 18 years, 14 to 15 years more than his offered plea of 3-4 years.

Joshua Lingeback: In 2006, Joshua was charged with robbery with a gun or deadly weapon. There was no physical victim injury. Joshua was not offered a plea, however the prosecutor trying his case requested PRR to be waived in order to accept a plea, but his supervisor would not agree to a waiver. Joshua received his life sentence when he was 27, he is now 40. During his incarceration, Joshua has completed many classes and gained many certificates including, but not limited to, Victim Impact, Financial Literacy, Parenting Classes, Toastmasters, Life Mapping, Commitment to Change 1 and 2, Financial Peace, Civics 911, Parenting From the Inside Out, G.R.O.T.H., journaling, Trauma Recovery, Beyond Anger, Personal Financial Management and Substance Abuse.

Cyril Innis: In 2002, Cyril was charged with robbery with a gun or deadly weapon. The prior prison stay which was used to qualify Cyril as a PRR occurred in the State of Massachusetts. Cyril was released on May 21, 1998 from the North Central Correctional Institution in Gardner, MA where he was serving time for armed robbery. He was rearrested approximately 11 months later for possession of cocaine and was released from a county jail approximately 4 months later. Although thereafter he ended up getting married and starting his own company, he relapsed. Cyril's wife convinced him to move to Florida, and even though he ended up working as a lead counselor at the Human Crisis Council in Orlando, he once again relapsed and ended up in a situation which led to the offense for which he is currently incarcerated. During the commission of the robbery, Cyril utilized a BB gun which was not loaded with BB's. Cyril was offered a plea of 20 years after 8 months, then 25 years right before trial. He was given the PRR designation on the first day of his trial, and since his prior prison sentence was not in the State of Florida, he would not have received the PRR "warning" notice. Cyril took his case to trial, with one of the reasons being his lawyer told him Florida had parole. Cyril's sentencing judge did not want to give him life under the PRR, but of course the judge had no choice but to do so. Cyril has been incarcerated for 16 years. During that time, he has obtained a Bachelor's degree in Christian Counseling and is an ordained minister. He currently works as a Senior Drug Treatment Facilitator for the treatment program where he is currently housed.

Christopher Aikens: In 1993, Christopher was sentenced to 9 years in prison for robbery with no gun/deadly weapon. He was released from that sentence on January 9, 1997 which was more than 4 months prior to the PRR being passed into law. Once again, Christopher did not receive the PRR "warning" notice which precludes notice of PRR sentencing intent. Furthermore, Christopher is adamant he did not commit the most recent robbery for which he is serving a life sentence. Christopher has information that supports his innocence, but he has failed to find relief in the courts thus far. Christopher was offered a 15-year plea deal which he rejected because he maintained his innocence of the actual robbery. Christopher was found guilty at trial and is now serving a life sentence for a robbery he maintains to this day he did not commit. Christopher was 31 when he was given his life sentence, and he has now spent 22 years total incarcerated, 7 years more than the plea he was offered. The lowest possible sentence he could have received under the usual guidelines was 12-1/2 years.

58 Be It Enacted by the Legislature of the State of Florida:

60 Section 1. Section 163.08, Florida Statutes, is amended to 61 read:

62 163.08 Supplemental authority for improvements to real
63 property.-

64 (1) (a) In chapter 2008-227, Laws of Florida, the 65 Legislature amended the energy goal of the state comprehensive 66 plan to provide, in part, that the state shall reduce its energy
67 requirements through enhanced conservation and efficiency
68 measures in all end-use sectors and reduce atmospheric carbon
69 dioxide by promoting an increased use of renewable energy
70 resources. That act also declared it the public policy of the 71 state to play a leading role in developing and instituting
72 energy management programs that promote energy conservation, 73 energy security, and the reduction of greenhouse gases. In 74 addition to establishing policies to promote the use of 75 renewable energy, the Legislature provided for a schedule of 76 increases in energy performance of buildings subject to the 77 Florida Energy Efficiency Code for Building Construction. In 78 chapter 2008-191, Laws of Florida, the Legislature adopted new 79 energy conservation and greenhouse gas reduction comprehensive 80 planning requirements for local governments. In the 2008 general
81 election, the voters of this state approved a constitutional 82 amendment authorizing the Legislature, by general law, to 83 prohibit consideration of any change or improvement made for the 84 purpose of improving a property's resistance to wind damage or 85 the installation of a renewable energy source device in the 86 determination of the assessed value of residential real
87 property.

17-00420-21

88 (b) The Legislature finds that all energy-consuming-
89 improved properties that are not using energy conservation
90 strategies contribute to the burden affecting all improved
91 property resulting from fossil fuel energy production. Improved
92 property that has been retrofitted with energy-related 93 qualifying improvements receives the special benefit of 94 alleviating the property's burden from energy consumption. All 95 improved properties not protected from wind or flood damage by 96 wind or flood resistance qualifying improvements contribute to 97 the burden affecting all improved property resulting from 98 potential wind or flood damage. Improved property that has been 99 retrofitted with wind or flood resistance qualifying 100 improvements receives the special benefit of reducing the 101 property's burden from potential wind or water damage. Further, 102 the installation and operation of qualifying improvements not 103 only benefit the affected properties for which the improvements 104 are made, but also assist in fulfilling the goals of the state's 105 energy and hurricane mitigation policies.

106 (c) All properties that doare not useusing advanced 107 technologies for wastewater removal contribute to the water 108 quality problems affecting this~~the~~ state, ~~and~~ particularly ~~the~~ 109 coastal areas. Improved property that has been retrofitted with 110 an advanced onsite treatment system or that has replaced an 111 onsite sewage treatment and disposal system with a~~converted to~~ 112 central ~~sewage system~~sewerage significantly benefits the quality 113 of water that may enter streams, lakes, rivers, aquifers, 114 canals, estuaries, or coastal areas. All properties that are not 115 protected from harmful environmental health hazards contribute 116 to the environmental health burden affecting this~~the~~ state. The

Commented [A1]: Just confirming that this is intentional and should not be "flood damage" as used in the preceding lines.

Commented [A2R2]: Can be either water or flood damage.

117 ~~improvement of property~~Property that has been improved to 118 mitigate against environmental health hazards, which improves
119 ~~benefits~~ the general-environmental health of this state,
120 benefits all citizens of this~~people within the~~ state. In order
121 to make qualifying improvements more affordable and assist 122 property owners who wish to undertake such improvements, the 123 Legislature finds that there is a compelling state interest in 124 enabling property owners to voluntarily finance such 125 improvements with local government assistance.

126 (c) The Legislature determines that the actions authorized 127 under this section, including, but not limited to, the financing
128 of qualifying improvements through the execution of PACE
129 assessment contracts, as defined in this section, ~~financing~~
130 ~~agreements~~ and the related imposition of voluntary assessments
131 are reasonable and necessary to serve and achieve a compelling
132 state interest and are necessary for the prosperity and welfare 133 of the state and its property owners and inhabitants.

134 (2) As used in this section, the term:

Commented [A4R4]: It is in subsection (2)(k), but is also defined as "onsite sewage treatment and disposal system" in that definitions section as well, so we simply referenced the definition itself.

249 family, residential building property of 4 or fewer dwelling 250 units not owned by a business entity, that may be benefited by 251 installation of a qualifying improvement. If a business entity 252 owns a qualifying residential real property, that property is 253 exempted from the provisions of subsections (15) through (23)
254 under this chapter.

255 (3) A local government may levy non-ad valorem assessments
256 to fund qualifying improvements.

257 (4) Subject to local government ordinance or resolution, a 258 property owner may apply to a PACE program ~~the local government~~

261 government. Costs incurred by a PACE program ~~the local~~

262 ~~government~~ for such purpose may be collected as a non-ad valorem
263 assessment. A non-ad valorem assessment shall be collected 264 pursuant to s. 197.3632 and, notwithstanding s. 197.3632(8)(a), 265 shall not be subject to discount for early payment. However, the 267 if this section is used and complied with, and the intent 268 resolution, publication of notice, and mailed notices to the 269 property appraiser, tax collector, and Department of Revenue

270 required by s. 197.3632(3)(a) may be provided on or before
271 August 15 in conjunction with any non-ad valorem assessment
272 authorized by this section, if the property appraiser, tax
273 collector, and local government agree.

274 (5) Pursuant to this section or as otherwise provided by 275 law or pursuant to a local government's home rule power, a local 276 government may enter into a partnership with one or more local 277 governments for the purpose of providing and financing
278 qualifying improvements.

279 (6) A local government may enter into an agreement with a
280 PACE administrator to administer a PACE program ~~qualifying~~
281 ~~improvement program may be administered by a for-profit entity~~ 282 ~~or a not-for-profit organization on behalf of and at the~~ 283 ~~discretion of the local government.~~

284 (7) A local government may incur debt for the purpose of 286 repayable ~~payable~~ from revenues received from the improved

287 property, or from any other available revenue source authorized 288 by law.

289 (8) A local government may enter into a PACE assessment
290 contract to finance or refinance the acquisition or installation

 294 Any PACE assessment contract financing agreement entered into 295 pursuant to this section or a summary memorandum of such 296 agreement ~~must shall~~ be submitted for recording recorded in the 297 public records of the county within which the property is 298 located by the sponsoring unit of local government within 5 days
 299 after execution of the instrument agreement. The recorded 300 instrument agreement shall provide constructive notice that the 301 assessment to be levied on the property constitutes a lien of 302 equal dignity to county taxes and assessments from the date of 303 recordation.

304 (9) Before entering into a PACE assessment contract, the 305 ~~PACE program~~ local government or entity administering the PACE 306 program financing agreement, the local government shall 307 reasonably determine the following: ~~that~~

308 (a) That all ~~All~~ property taxes and any other assessments 309 levied on the same bill as property taxes are current and have 310 been paid ~~and have not been delinquent~~ for the preceding 3 years
 311 or the property owner's period of ownership, whichever is less;

312 (b) That there are no involuntary liens greater than 313 $1,000, including, but not limited to, construction liens on the 314 property;

315 (c) That no notices of default or other evidence of 316 property-based debt delinquency have been recorded and not

"before final funding is disbursed"
"before final funding is provided"

Commented [A11R11]: The operative term here is the funding of the project itself, so we think funding is the best term to use as opposed to "disbursed" or "provided." An alternative would be to put "Before final funding" at the start of the paragraph and then continue with "a qualifying improvement..."

Senator---thank you for your time this morning. I am attaching a copy of the bill Rep. Roach filed last year as well as a copy of the bill filed by Rep. Drake a few years back.

There are essentially three things we need to do:

1. Create civil liability for those that damage/destroy monuments
2. Create citizen standing so interested parties can try to protect historical monuments/memorials
3. Make it a 3rd degree felony to intentionally damage/destroy a monument or memorial.

Thank you so much for your consideration.

Senator Burgess Files Legislation to Repeal Florida's Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law

SB 54 Repeals PIP, Requires BI Coverage, Creates New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions

Tallahassee—State Senator Danny Burgess (R-Zephyrhills) today filed Senate Bill 54, Motor Vehicle Insurance. The legislation repeals Florida's current Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law, which requires drivers to carry personal injury protection coverage, instead requiring that drivers carry bodily injury liability coverage. The bill also creates a new framework to govern motor vehicle insurance claims for bad faith failure to settle.

"Florida is one of only two states in the country that does not currently require drivers to carry liability coverage that would immediately kick in if they cause the bodily injury or death of another person while operating a motor vehicle," said Senate President Wilton Simpson (R-Trilby). "PIP coverage is too expensive for the benefits it provides. It's the right time for Florida to move to mandatory coverage for bodily injury liability."

"Replacing our no-fault system with a bodily injury liability system more appropriately places liability where it should be – with the party that caused the accident," said Senator Burgess. "Additionally, the bill creates a new framework for handling bad faith litigation that provides a clear set of standards to govern the conduct of both parties in the claims handling process, which we believe will lead to better outcomes for both insured Floridians and their insurance companies."

Repeals No-Fault, Requires Bodily Injury Liability Coverage

SB 54 repeals the Florida Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law (No-Fault Law), which requires every owner and registrant of a motor vehicle in this state to maintain Personal Injury Protection (PIP) coverage. The bill enacts financial responsibility requirements for liability for motor vehicle ownership or operation, as follows:

- For bodily injury (BI) or death of one person in any one crash, $25,000, and
- Subject to that limit for one person, $50,000 for BI or death of two or more people in any one crash.
- Retains the existing $10,000 financial responsibility requirement for property damage.
- Revises required coverage amounts for garage liability and commercial motor vehicle insurance, and increases the cash deposit amount required for a certificate of self-insurance establishing financial responsibility for owners and operators of motor vehicles that are not for-hire vehicles.
- Repealing the No-Fault Law eliminates the limitations on recovering pain and suffering damages from PIP insureds, which currently require bodily injury that causes death or significant and permanent injury.

Requires Medical Payments Coverage

SB 54 requires insurers to offer medical payments coverage (MedPay) with limits of $5,000 or $10,000 to cover medical expenses of the insured. Insurers may also offer other policy limits that exceed $5,000, and may offer deductibles of up to $500. The bill requires that insurers must reserve $5,000 of MedPay benefits for 30 days to pay physicians or dentists who provide emergency services and care or who provide hospital inpatient care.

Creates a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions

SB 54 creates a new framework to govern all bad faith claims for failure to settle related to motor vehicle insurance. The bill requires insurers to follow claims handling best practices standards based on long-established good faith duties related to claim handling, claim investigation, defense of the insured, and settlement negotiations.

The bill establishes that it is a condition precedent to bringing a third-party bad faith action not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., that the claimant serve a demand for settlement. The demand must:

- Identify the date and location of the loss, the claimant, and insured.
- State the legal and factual basis of the claim.
- Detail the claimant's injuries, medical treatment, and the amount of current and reasonably anticipated future damages.
- Demand a settlement amount, which may not exceed the insured's policy limit.
- Release, if accepted, the insured from any further liability.
- Not provide conditions on the settlement other than payment of the demand and the ability of the claimant to take an examination under oath of the insured.

The bill allows the third-party bad faith claimant to condition the demand for settlement on taking a two hour examination under oath (EUO) of the insured limited to discovering recoverable assets. The bad faith claimant may withdraw the demand for settlement after the EUO. If the insured refuses to submit to the EUO, the insurer may tender policy limits without obtaining a release of the insured and may not be held liable if there is an excess judgment against the insured.

The bill provides that in a third-party action for bad faith failure to settle not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., the insurer is not liable for bad faith if the insurer tenders policy limits within 30 days of receiving a demand for settlement.

Allows for Named Driver Exclusions

SB 54 authorizes the exclusion of a specifically named individual from specified insurance coverages under a private passenger motor vehicle policy, with the written consent of the policyholder.

Legislation to Repeal Florida's Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law Passes First Committee

SB 54 Repeals PIP, Requires BI Coverage, Creates Best Practice Standards for Claim Handling

Tallahassee—The Senate Committee on Banking and Insurance, chaired by Senator Jim Boyd (R-Bradenton) today passed Senate Bill 54, Motor Vehicle Insurance, by Senator Danny Burgess (R-Zephyrhills). The legislation repeals Florida's current Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law, which requires drivers to carry personal injury protection coverage, instead requiring that drivers carry bodily injury liability coverage. The bill also creates best practice standards for handling motor vehicle insurance claims.

"For everyone's protection, drivers must be insured at sufficient levels. Our goal is to lower the number of uninsured and underinsured drivers and provide a greater safety net in the event of an accident," said Senate President Wilton Simpson (R-Trilby).

"Florida's No-Fault Law has failed to significantly reduce litigation. Meanwhile, the cost of PIP remains high, when compared to the benefits it provides," said Senator Burgess. "Senate Bill 54 transforms this ineffective and outdated insurance structure, which we believe will lead to a more stable insurance market and better outcomes for insured Floridians when they face the unfortunate and in some cases tragic circumstance of being involved in a serious vehicle accident."

Repeals No-Fault, Requires Bodily Injury Liability Coverage

SB 54 repeals the Florida Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law (No-Fault Law), which requires every owner and registrant of a motor vehicle in this state to maintain Personal Injury Protection (PIP) coverage. JUNO BEACH, Fla. – Florida Power & Light Company (FPL) today notified the Florida Public Service Commission (PSC) that it expects to file a formal request in the coming months for new base rates. The company intends to propose a four-year rate plan that would begin in January 2022, once its current base rate settlement agreement concludes at the end of this year. FPL previously extended operations under the rate agreement by freezing base rates for an additional year through 2021.

FPL now serves 5.6 million customer accounts from Miami to Pensacola across more than half of Florida<sup>(1)</sup>, a rapidly growing state on the front lines of climate change and strong, frequent severe weather. Recognizing this, FPL's plan will enable the company to continue building a more resilient and sustainable energy future for everyone – including future generations – while keeping typical customer bills lower than the national average through at least 2025.

“Delivering clean, reliable and affordable energy to customers is a duty each of us at FPL takes extremely seriously, particularly during these difficult and challenging times,” said Eric Silagy, president and CEO of FPL. “Providing an essential service to today's customers comes with the fundamental responsibility to constantly look over the horizon to ensure we're ready to serve them tomorrow as well. Of course, we're mindful there's never a good time to request a rate increase, but we remain steadfastly committed to providing customers unparalleled value for their money while building an energy future they can depend on. To do that, we're asking for regulatory approval to continue our disciplined, long-term investment strategy in infrastructure, clean energy and other innovative technology that are the foundation of our communities. Over the past 15 years, we've repeatedly demonstrated that this innovative and long-term approach provides customers with lower bills and higher reliability today, and positions Florida for even greater success tomorrow."

In 2006, FPL's bill was slightly above the national average but has decreased roughly 10% over the last 15 years while the national average has increased approximately 30% during roughly the same period. FPL's typical 1,000-kWh residential customer bill is lower today than it was 15 years ago and 30% lower than the national average.

As FPL's bill has decreased over time, the service it provides customers has consistently and demonstrably improved. FPL's investments to build a stronger, smarter energy grid has resulted in best-in-state reliability every year since 2006, as well as repeated national recognition. In 2020, FPL received the ReliabilityOne® National Reliability Excellence Award, presented by PA Consulting, for the fifth time in the last six years. Since becoming sister companies with FPL in 2019, Gulf Power has delivered operational and financial benefits for customers, including the company's best-ever service reliability in 2019. Gulf Power delivered even better reliability in 2020 and earned the 2020 ReliabilityOne® Award for Outstanding Reliability Performance in the Southeast suburban/rural service area. FPL is one of the nation's cleanest electric utilities, with a modern, state-of-the-art fleet of ultra-efficient clean energy centers and a rapidly growing portfolio of solar power plants as part of the company's "30-by-30" plan to install 30 million solar panels by 2030.

"Even as the price of many goods and services increases year after year – often with little to no warning – the price of electricity from FPL has come down over the last 15 years while service has become significantly cleaner and more reliable. This does not and cannot happen by accident. Instead, it's the direct result of smart, long-term investments that reduce costs and improve efficiencies. In the coming months, we look forward to demonstrating how our 2022-2025 base rate proposal will help us continue delivering the clean, reliable and affordable energy customers expect and deserve in the years ahead," said Silagy.

Aligned with previous multi-year proposals, FPL is designing its new rate plan in a way that keeps costs down for customers over the long term while supporting continued investments to further enhance its infrastructure and improve the efficiency of its system.

Overview of request

FPL, which has not requested a general rate increase since 2016 and extended its current rate agreement by freezing base rates for an additional year, is finalizing its base rate adjustment proposal that would cover the next four years (2022-2025) and provide continued, longer-term cost certainty for customers.

FPL expects the proposal to include:

- In 2022, an adjustment to base annual revenue requirements of approximately $1.1 billion.
- In 2023, a subsequent year adjustment to base annual revenue requirements of approximately $615 million.
- In 2024 and 2025, a request for a Solar Base Rate Adjustment (SoBRA) mechanism to recover up to 900 megawatts (MW) of cost-effective solar projects in each year. If the full amount of new solar capacity allowed under the SoBRA proposal was constructed, FPL's preliminary estimate is that it would result in general base rate adjustments of approximately $140 million in 2024 and $140 million in 2025, which would be partially offset by a reduction in fuel costs on the clause portion of customer bills.

1) On Jan. 1, 2021, Gulf Power, which serves customers in Northwest Florida, legally combined with FPL. Gulf Power will continue as a separate operating division under the Gulf Power name through 2021.

The total of these rate increase requests over the four-year period from 2022 through 2025 would result in an estimated average increase in total revenue of less than 3.7% per year. FPL projects typical customer bills will remain well below the national average even with the proposed increase. In fact, adjusted for inflation, FPL's typical bill in January 2022 would be nearly 22% less than it was in 2006. In nominal terms, FPL's projected bill in January 2022 is projected to be just 3.5% higher than it was in 2006. Through the consolidation of FPL and Gulf Power, the typical residential customer bill in Northwest Florida is projected to be lower than today's bill by the end of the proposed four-year rate plan.

The phased-in rate adjustments are necessary to help pay for the more than $29 billion FPL is investing during the four-year period from 2019 through 2022 to benefit customers, including improving electric service reliability, reducing emissions and improving generation fuel efficiency, strengthening its electric system to make it more resilient in severe weather and preparing for customer growth. In addition, FPL will continue to make significant investments throughout the base rate proposal timeframe to further improve service for its customers.

Most FPL customers power their homes for just a few dollars a day. FPL's residential customer monthly usage median is 950 kWh, which means most FPL customer households consume less than the standard, 1,000-kWh typical bill benchmark, which is currently about $99. The typical 1,000-kWh Gulf Power residential customer bill is approximately $140.

Until FPL files its formal request, which is expected to occur in March, all rate, bill and revenue figures are estimates. Customers can visit FPL.com/answers or GulfPower.com/answers to learn more about the request. Once the formal request has been filed, the website will enable customers to calculate the estimated impact to their bills in 2022 based on their current electricity usage.

Delivering service efficiently

FPL ranks best-in-class among all major U.S. utilities based on its operating and maintenance (O&M) costs per kWh of retail sales. Compared with the average utility's O&M costs, FPL's innovative and relentless day-to-day focus on driving costs out of the business saves customers nearly $2.6 billion annually, which equates to savings of about $24 a month on a typical residential customer's $99 bill. Never satisfied, FPL continues to find new ways to work more efficiently to save customers money. For example, FPL's 2022 non-fuel O&M, which will be reflected in the company's upcoming filing, is projected to be lower than FPL's 2018 best-in-class level.

As an example, FPL's Project Accelerate, an annual program designed to find new ways to improve efficiency, lower costs and save money, is expected to produce more than $1.5 billion in savings for customers over the company's four-year rate plan, which is an annual savings run rate of approximately $390 million that will be reflected in the proposed rate plan. Another significant cost-saving measure that FPL has taken during the current rate plan is its merger and consolidation with Gulf Power. FPL estimates the consolidation is resulting in approximately $82 million per year in O&M savings for the combined company. FPL also projects system benefits of approximately $1.5 billion over the next 30 years as a result of power generation upgrades already underway, a new transmission line physically connecting both companies and the ability to dispatch from, and plan for, a common fleet of power generation resources. In total, customer savings from combining the two companies is projected to be $2.8 billion.

The company is committed to operating efficiently in order to deliver reliable service while keeping increases low, even while the costs of other essential products and services have risen dramatically. For example, groceries, medical care, health insurance and housing increased 25%-75% from 2006 to 2020. Meanwhile, FPL's typical customer bill is 10% lower today than it was in 2006.

While FPL's focus on efficiency and productivity has lessened the impact, the costs of many materials and products the company must purchase in order to provide clean, reliable and affordable power have increased. These increased expenses, combined with the projected addition of approximately one-half million new customers during the seven-year period beginning in 2018, are driving higher operating costs.

Investing in Florida to keep the state strong, competitive and successful

As Florida's largest private investor, FPL is proposing a four-year rate plan that will support continued investments in long-term infrastructure and advanced technology that will help keep customer bills low and reliability high over the long term. For the period 2019 through 2022, FPL will have invested more than $29 billion to benefit customers, with additional significant investments expected in 2023 and beyond to meet the growing needs of Florida's economy and continue delivering outstanding value for customers.

These investments support the continued building of a stronger, smarter and more resilient energy grid. Consistently the top priority for customers, the expectation and need for reliable, around-the-clock electric service has only been amplified amid the coronavirus (COVID-19) pandemic as more customers work and attend school remotely. Beyond customer expectations, hundreds of new federal regulatory requirements implemented since 2017, including new cyber security standards, have required FPL to continue investing in its infrastructure.

While FPL has been awarded the most reliable electric utility in the U.S. for five of the last six years, climate change and Florida's strong, frequent severe weather requires the company to continue investing in the energy grid. Additional investments in building a stronger, smarter electric system are crucial as FPL continues to further improve the reliability of its service for customers, including fewer outages and faster restoration. Also, FPL continues to invest in smart grid technology that enables the company to continually monitor and assess the health of its system, predict potential issues before they disrupt service to customers and restore power faster following outages.

The proposal will also include FPL's continued investments in cleaner, more efficient power generation. FPL's ultra-efficient fleet of state-of-the-art power plants has one of the cleanest emissions profiles among comparable utilities nationwide, and the company continues to rapidly expand solar energy. From 2019 through 2022, FPL will have added more than 2,700 MW of power generation, the costs for which are not included in current customer rates. Although these investments are supported by base rates, they are expected to generate substantial savings for customers over the long term by reducing fuel and other costs, resulting in substantial net customer savings over the lives of the investments.

FPL's track record of making smart power generation improvements is strong. For example, since 2001, FPL's investments in high-efficiency natural gas energy centers have saved customers nearly $11 billion in fuel costs and prevented more than 145 million tons of carbon dioxide emissions, equivalent to negating the emissions output of every registered vehicle in Florida for nearly the next four years.

FPL's annual capital investments in Florida far exceed its annual earnings, making the company's financial strength, particularly its allowed return on equity (ROE), critical to financing these important improvements on behalf of customers. As part of its base rate request, FPL expects to propose that its allowed ROE midpoint be set at 11.50%, which includes a 0.5% performance incentive in recognition of FPL's superior performance, relative to other utilities in Florida and the nation. FPL's financial strength – in all financial climates – directly benefits customers, enabling the company to borrow money at lower interest rates and attract investors needed to support the types of smart, long-term investments that improve service and keep bills low over time. FPL's best-in-class or top-decile performance across numerous key metrics translate into a customer value that's among the best in the nation. FPL's proposed ROE midpoint will better reflect this and encourage continued strong performance.

As it has from the moment COVID-19 became widespread in March 2020, FPL remains committed to supporting customers experiencing hardship due to the pandemic and the resulting economic uncertainty. To date, FPL has provided customers approximately $75 million in relief through various programs and initiatives. As Florida recovers, the company will continue to assist customers who need it most. However, the pandemic is also a stark reminder of the importance of reliable electricity and the need for continued smart, long-term investments in infrastructure, clean energy and innovative technology that will enable FPL to serve customers now and for decades to come.

FPL plans to formally file its petition and testimony with the PSC in March to enable a thorough review and a decision to be reached before the end of 2021.

FPL and Gulf Power's 2022-2025 Base Rate Proposal

FPL and Gulf Power, now a single company, serve 5.6 million customer accounts across half of Florida – from Miami to Pensacola. FPL's electric service is cleaner and more reliable than ever before – while our typical residential customer bill is lower today than it was 15 years ago and among the lowest in the nation. The exceptional value we provide our customers is the direct result of disciplined, long-term investments we've made in infrastructure, clean energy, innovative technology and cost-saving efficiencies. Our proposed four-year rate plan, beginning in 2022, is being designed to support investments that benefit customers while keeping typical bills well below the national average.

Continuing to invest in Florida's future

FPL is Florida's largest private investor. From 2019 through 2022, FPL will have invested more than $29 billion in infrastructure improvements to benefit our customers, with additional significant investments expected in 2023 and beyond. Our investments have made us one of the most reliable and cleanest utilities in the country while the typical residential customer bill is among the lowest in the nation. Serving customers while tackling today's challenges comes with the fundamental responsibility of looking over the horizon to ensure we're ready to serve customers tomorrow, especially in a rapidly growing state on the front lines of climate change and strong, frequent severe weather.

Resilient Future

We're building a more resilient and sustainable energy future for Florida in the face of climate change and strong, frequent severe weather.

We're deploying technology that enables us to continually monitor and assess the health of our system, predict potential issues before they disrupt service to customers and restore power faster following outages.

We're making critical upgrades to the main high-voltage electric transmission line that serves as the backbone of Florida's energy grid.

We're building the Northwest Florida Resiliency Connection, a new transmission line that connects FPL's energy grid to Northwest Florida, to enhance reliability for customers now and in the future.

Sustainable Future

Securing a more resilient and sustainable future for us all, including future generations, means strengthening our commitment to disciplined, long-term investments.

This includes adding more solar to our energy grid through our "30-by-30" plan to install 30 million solar panels in Florida by 2030.

Our plan includes building the world's largest integrated solar-powered battery that will bring the benefits of solar power to our customers even when the sun is not shining. It also includes an innovative green hydrogen pilot project, a technology that could one day unlock 100% carbon-free electricity.

We're also continuing to modernize our existing power plants in South and Northwest Florida to produce cleaner, more affordable energy for customers.

Better Together

Combining FPL and Gulf Power has already produced, and will continue to produce, tangible benefits for all customers as we usher in an even cleaner, more sustainable energy future for Florida. In total, customers savings from combining the two companies is projected to be $2.8 billion over the next 30 years. This includes savings on operations and maintenance, as well as savings from power generation upgrades, a new transmission line physically connecting both companies and the ability to dispatch from, and plan for, a common fleet of power generation resources.

Operating efficiently to deliver customer savings

At FPL, we have a relentless, day-to-day focus on operating efficiently. For example, when it comes to how much it costs us to generate electricity – we're the most cost-efficient utility in America<sup>1</sup>. What does that mean for customers? It means that compared to an average utility, we save customers nearly $2.6 billion annually. That's $24 a month on the typical 1,000-kWh residential customer bill.

Keeping Bills Low

Everyday costs are up, but FPL bills are down

FPL's projected bill in January 2022 is expected to be just 3.5% higher than it was in 2006, a fraction of the increases of 25%-75% in the cost of groceries, medical care, health insurance and housing from 2006-2020.

Under our proposed plan, we expect our typical bill to remain well below the national average through at least 2025. By the end of the four-year rate plan, we project the typical 1,000-kWh residential customer bill in Northwest Florida will be lower than it is today.

Source: Various Consumer Price Indexes, U.S. Department of Labor's Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Our four-year plan

FPL's current base rate settlement agreement concludes at the end of this year. FPL previously extended operations under the rate agreement by freezing base rates for an additional year through 2021. We're proposing a plan for 2022-2025 that will phase in rate adjustments and provide continued, longer-term rate certainty for customers while making their electricity cleaner and more reliable. Even with the change, FPL expects its typical residential customer bills will continue to remain well below the national average.

YEAR	REVENUE REQUIREMENT	TYPE OF ADJUSTMENT
2022	$1.1 billion	General Base Rate Adjustment
2023	$615 million	General Base Rate Adjustment
2024	$140 million	Solar Base Rate Adjustment

Note for customers in Northwest Florida:

In recognition of initial cost to service differences between the existing FPL and Gulf Power service territories, FPL will propose a transition rider/credit mechanism to address those differences equitably for customers in the respective service areas. The transition rider/credit would decline to zero over a five-year period.

Next Steps

We've notified the Florida Public Service Commission (PSC) that we expect to file a formal request in the coming months for new base rates that would take effect in January 2022. We plan to formally file our petition and testimony with the PSC in March to enable a thorough review and decision before the end of 2021. ## FPL's unwavering commitment to serving our communities during the COVID-19 pandemic

FPL is committed to supporting our communities in good times and bad, including during the COVID-19 global pandemic. To date, we've provided more than $75 million in support to customers through numerous relief programs and initiatives.

- » COVID-19 policies: FPL remains committed to supporting customers during the COVID-19 global pandemic. Since mid-March 2020, FPL has offered customers experiencing hardship payment extensions, waived late fees and helped connect customers with available financial assistance. We also suspended disconnections for nonpayment for six months.
- » Financial Assistance: Through FPL's third-party partners, customers can apply for financial assistance to help pay their electric bill.
  - Federal assistance: Federal financial assistance has increased due to COVID-19. For example, the CARES Act increased funding by nearly 60% to Florida's Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program (LIHEAP) in 2020.
  - Care to Share: This FPL program provides bill payment assistance to customers and has been recently expanded due to the pandemic
- » COVID-19 policies: FPL remains committed to supporting customers during the COVID-19 global pandemic. Since mid-March 2020, FPL has offered customers experiencing hardship payment extensions, waived late fees and helped connect customers with available financial assistance. We also suspended disconnections for nonpayment for six months.
- » Direct bill relief: FPL provided direct bill relief to customers, including those significantly behind on their bills with up to a $200 credit. In total, more than 112,000 customers secured bill credits (74% of eligible customers) and FPL distributed more than $15 million in bill credits.
- » Accelerated deposit refunds: After receiving unanimous approval from the PSC, FPL also issued accelerated deposit refunds to customers who paid on time and in full for the last 12 months. The company also issued accelerated deposit refunds to eligible small businesses customers.

- » Small business support and Main Street Recovery Credit Program: FPL's Main Street Recovery Credit Program offers eligible small businesses a monthly 10% credit on the energy charge portion of their bill. Eligible businesses include small businesses that were inactive for at least six consecutive months after March 2020, new small businesses and existing small businesses operating in federally designated Opportunity Zones. In addition to the credit program, FPL has led energy efficiency webinars for businesses, worked to raise awareness about FPL's Business Energy Manager tool that helps businesses track and take control of their energy use, and worked with small businesses to make sure they understand available CARES Act resources.
- » Low-Income Discount Program (LIHEAP/EHEAP): Shareholders from FPL's parent company, NextEra Energy, have committed $15 million to fund a new low-income discount program. Eligible residential customers who receive federal assistance through the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program (LIHEAP) or the Emergency Home Energy Assistance for the Elderly Program (EHEAP) automatically received a $20 credit on their monthly bill starting in December 2020 that will extend through December 2021. The program will initially include an estimated 55,000 FPL customers who receive LIHEAP or EHEAP assistance.

- » Accelerated bill credit (fuel savings): Following unanimous PSC approval, FPL fast-tracked annual fuel savings into customers' May 2020 bills, resulting in an approximately 25% bill decrease for the typical residential customer bill. Normally, annual fuel savings are spread out over the course of a year. However, due to the global pandemic, FPL thought it was important to quickly pass savings onto customers.
- » Corporate donations: FPL, its sister NextEra Energy companies and employees have committed nearly $5 million in emergency assistance funds. In Florida, funds are helping partner organizations working on the frontlines of the crisis to provide critical support to the most vulnerable members of our communities. This includes assistance for basic needs like housing, food and healthcare, hunger relief efforts for food insecure populations, and storm preparation for homebound individuals.

Education Support

FPL is committed to supporting education programs that prepare students for exciting, well-paying jobs and help break down barriers for traditionally underserved children.

- » In December 2020, FPL donated $1 million to buy more than 1,600 laptops for students to use in rapid credentialing programs to obtain the skills they need to get back to work amid the COVID-19 pandemic.

- » In November 2020, FPL donated 1,000 utility poles to Palm Beach County to help the school district ensure that more than 25,000 students and their families have access to the internet during this time of distance learning amid the COVID-19 pandemic.

- » We've redesigned our programs to best meet the needs of students during COVID-19 and beyond.

- » In 2020, FPL's Manatee Lagoon offered virtual programming and a fully online summer camp to thousands of students across the state.

- » FPL also introduced a virtual curriculum for grades 4, 5 and 6 that covers energy standards in science, English, language arts and math.

- The free, open-source online curriculum is designed to ensure that students have a deeper understanding about the importance of energy, with virtual and in-person instruction options to help maintain a healthy and safe learning environment.

- » Throughout the pandemic, we have also looked for opportunities to donate devices, including laptops and computer headsets, to underserved students for remote learning.

Test Year Letter – EA Gov’t Affairs Stakeholder Email – FINAL

Amid the continued challenges of the global pandemic, we remain committed to providing clean, reliable, affordable energy our customers can depend on. Serving customers today comes with the fundamental responsibility to ensure we’re prepared to meet their energy needs tomorrow. This is especially important given our state is rapidly growing and on the front lines of climate change and strong, frequent severe weather.

Securing a more resilient and sustainable energy future for all of us, including future generations, means strengthening our commitment to smart and proven, long-term investments in the infrastructure, innovative technology and clean energy that are the foundation of our communities.

Today, we began the process of doing just that by notifying the Florida Public Service Commission (PSC) that we expect to file a four-year rate plan in the coming months. This customary process takes about a year to complete and, if our plan is approved, would result in new rates going into effect in January 2022 once FPL’s current base rate settlement agreement concludes at the end of this year. FPL previously extended operations under the rate agreement by freezing base rates for an additional year through 2021. Importantly, our plan will help us continue delivering unmatched value to customers by ushering in Florida’s energy future and keeping bills among the lowest in America.

I also want to provide an update on current FPL bills. As you may know, rates are routinely adjusted every January to “true-up” various clauses on electric bills. Primarily due to higher fuel costs, the PSC has approved an increase to bills, starting this month, that will amount to $2.62, or less than 3%, for the typical residential customer and 3-5% for typical business customers, depending on rate class.

FPL does not profit from fuel charges but passes costs directly to customers. We work hard to keep costs low, which is why it’s important to view this increase in context. Even with this latest adjustment, the fuel portion of FPL bills has decreased 15% for residential customers and 13% for businesses since 2017, which was the first year of FPL’s current, multi-year settlement agreement.

The downward trend in fuel costs reflects a decline in natural gas prices and the fact that FPL is using less fuel to generate electricity because of our long-term investments in ultra-efficient, clean energy centers that run on natural gas and solar power plants that don’t use fuel at all. These types of smart, forward-thinking investments are at the heart of our proposed four-year plan for rates beginning in 2022.

We are committed to keeping you updated as the rate-setting process continues. We will be able to provide specific information regarding bill impacts, as well as projected adjustments to municipal utility taxes, and franchise fees if applicable, after we formally file our plan in the coming months. In the meantime, please visit FPL.com/answers to learn more about the proposal, which is a combined plan with Gulf Power – our sister utility in Northwest Florida that legally merged with FPL earlier this year.

Please stay safe and remember that FPL is here to help throughout the pandemic. As always, don’t hesitate to contact me directly if you have any questions.

Test Year Letter – Gulf Power Business/EA/Gov’t Affairs Stakeholder Email – FINAL

As you may be aware, Gulf Power and Florida Power & Light Company merged into a single energy company on Jan. 1, now serving more than 5.6 million customer accounts across more than half of Florida – from Pensacola to Miami. Beginning the journey to unify our rates is the natural and logical next step to fully consolidate the operations of our two previously separate energy companies.

To that end, FPL and Gulf Power today notified the Florida Public Service Commission (PSC) of our plan to file a joint request in the coming months for unified rates that would be effective in January 2022. Our proposed four-year rate plan beginning in 2022 will help us continue delivering greater value to customers by securing a clean, reliable energy future through continued investments in our infrastructure in Northwest Florida for generations to come. In fact, we project that at the end of the four-year rate plan, typical residential customer bills in Northwest Florida will be lower than they are today.

Why now?

Now more than ever, Northwest Floridians are counting on Gulf Power to help lead them through tough times and deliver electricity that’s clean, reliable and affordable. As part of FPL, we are adopting the company’s proven practices and track record of success to move our customers in Northwest Florida toward an even brighter energy future. Gulf Power will continue to operate under the Gulf Power brand name through 2021.

Since becoming sister companies with FPL in 2019, Gulf Power has delivered operational and financial benefits for our customers, including our best-ever service reliability in 2020. In fact, Gulf Power received the 2020 ReliabilityOne® Award for Outstanding Reliability Performance in the Southeast suburban/rural service area. We’re also investing in cleaner energy for Northwest Florida, including converting our coal-fueled power plant, Plant Crist, to run on cleaner natural gas and building emissions-free solar energy plants across the Panhandle.

This rate review and our many other major investments are all part of our strategy to provide cleaner, more reliable and lower-cost energy for our customers. Ultimately, our goal is for Gulf Power customers to enjoy the same rates as FPL customers. Today’s filing is the first step to deliver this additional value to our customers.

What’s next?

The rate-setting process, which began today, takes about a year to complete. FPL plans to formally file its plan with the PSC in the coming months. Once that happens, we will be able to share more information. For now, I encourage you to visit GulfPower.com/answers to learn more about the proposal.

Please stay safe and know that Gulf Power remains committed to our customers and communities.

Dear Senator Burgess,

With 2020 nearly behind us, Tampa Bay leaders are coming together to assess the state of our region, and discuss what we can do to accelerate our recovery in the wake of COVID-19.

I am writing to personally invite you to join us as we convene virtually for the fourth annual State of the Region community event on Friday, January 15, 2021. You can register here. (Please note that this event is free of charge to all participants, but an RSVP is required.)

A few words about the event itself...

Just as we've done for the past three years, the research teams from the Tampa Bay Partnership and USF Muma College of Business will unveil the most recent data tracking our region's performance against 19 other communities in the United States.

This year, we'll also dig deeper into our recovery from the COVID-19 pandemic, explore racial disparities in Tampa Bay, and identify where the two critical issues intersect.

Joining us to provide context, best practices and insights about the region will be:

- Lynn Casey, Chair of the Itasca Project in the Minneapolis/St. Paul region. Lynn will address how her community consistently ranks at the top of the charts in so many economic and quality of life indicators, but was forced to confront its massive equity gaps following the death of George Floyd.
- Gus Faucher, Senior Vice President and Chief Economist for The PNC Financial Services Group, will compare the economic impact of COVID-19 on Tampa Bay to other key U.S. markets, and help us identify ways we can accelerate our economic comeback (or avoid falling further behind).
- Brian Lamb, Global Head of Diversity & Inclusion at JPMorgan Chase & Co., will help us understand why racial equity is a critical economic issue, and offer suggestions – based on his long history of leadership in Tampa Bay, including as Chair of the USF Board of Trustees and the Tampa Bay Partnership – about how we can best address it here.

Following the main event, we will present six, simultaneous 15-minute break-out sessions, each one highlighting a best practice here in Tampa Bay that is moving the needle on one or more of the indicators that our teams are tracking. (We'll provide more information on these sessions as we get closer to the event.)

Finally, thank you for the good work that you are doing to support our community and move the needle on our collective prosperity.

I hope you can join us for this special event on January 15.

Hello Senator Tom Lee:

My name is Sandra Remilien. Jeaccinette Philogene, a Haitian witch living in Lauderdale Lakes, Florida has been doing witchcraft to monitor me and she is doing witchcraft on you and to control you.

Jeaccinette did witchcraft to make the email I sent to you fail.

Jeaccinette did witchcraft to make the coronavirus come to the United States. Jeaccinette is doing witchcraft to make people have the coronavirus. Jeaccinette did witchcraft to make people have the zika virus. Officer Joachim lied and said I wrote the North Miami Police Department.

Jeaccinette did witchcraft to make Officer Joachim and Merisier Remilien know I emailed Dr. Tedros Adhanom Ghebryesus from the World Health Organization and Rachel Bridges at the UN Foundation because Officer Joachim lied and said I wrote the North Miami Police Department.

Jeaccinette did witchcraft to make police officers go to Merisier Remilien's house on March 17 and did witchcraft to make them say I wrote people and said that Jeaccinette did witchcraft to make people have the coronavirus so she can do witchcraft to make Merisier Remilien, Luna Remilien, Guylene Presendieu, Sony Remilien and Rony Remilien know she did witchcraft to make people have the coronavirus.

Jeaccinette is doing witchcraft to make people have the coronavirus.

Jeaccinette needs to tell people that she is doing witchcraft to make people have the coronavirus.

Jeaccinette is doing witchcraft to make people who live in Miami-Dade County and in Broward County have the coronavirus so she can do witchcraft so there is no school in Miami-Dade County and in Broward County because Kaliah Remilien does not want to go to school.

Jeaccinette is doing witchcraft to make Kaliah Remilien do her homework.

Kaliah Remilien does not know her birthday or her age. Kids who are two years old know their birthday and age.

Kaliah Remilien's father Rony Remilien never passed the FCAT.

Jeaccinette did witchcraft so Kaliah Remilien doesn't live at Samora Merritt's mother's house in Palm Bay, Florida.

Jeaccinette did witchcraft to make the Senate pass the Never Again Education Act so she can do witchcraft to make the Holocaust be taught in school so she can do witchcraft to make Kaliah Remilien know about the Holocaust so she can do witchcraft to make Kaliah Remilien know what I know.

Jeaccinette did witchcraft to kill Magic School Bus author Joanna Cole and physicist Stephen Hawking because she wants to do witchcraft to make Kaliah Remilien, Hugette Presendieu's daughter Imani Valcin and Luna Remilien's daughter Chelsea Desir like science.

Jeaccinette's kids flunked school.

Luna Remilien could not pass her tests when Luna Remilien was going to FIU. Jeaccinette did witchcraft to make Luna Remilien pass her tests because Luna Remilien could not pass her tests. Jeaccinette did witchcraft to make Jackson North Hospital and Borinquen Clinic hire Luna Remilien so Luna Remilien can get my medical records. Jeaccinette did witchcraft to make Baptist Hospital hire Luna Remilien.

Jeaccinette did witchcraft to make the pharmacy technician certification board say Hugette Presendieu passed the pharmacy technician exam when Hugette Presendieu did not pass the pharmacy technician exam.

Senator---thank you for your time this morning. I am attaching a copy of the bill Rep. Roach filed last year as well as a copy of the bill filed by Rep. Drake a few years back.

There are essentially three things we need to do:

1. Create civil liability for those that damage/destroy monuments
2. Create citizen standing so interested parties can try to protect historical monuments/memorials
3. Make it a 3rd degree felony to intentionally damage/destroy a monument or memorial.

Thank you so much for your consideration.

Senator Burgess Files Legislation to Repeal Florida's Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law

SB 54 Repeals PIP, Requires BI Coverage, Creates New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions

Tallahassee—State Senator Danny Burgess (R-Zephyrhills) today filed Senate Bill 54, Motor Vehicle Insurance. The legislation repeals Florida's current Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law, which requires drivers to carry personal injury protection coverage, instead requiring that drivers carry bodily injury liability coverage. The bill also creates a new framework to govern motor vehicle insurance claims for bad faith failure to settle.

"Florida is one of only two states in the country that does not currently require drivers to carry liability coverage that would immediately kick in if they cause the bodily injury or death of another person while operating a motor vehicle," said Senate President Wilton Simpson (R-Trilby). "PIP coverage is too expensive for the benefits it provides. It's the right time for Florida to move to mandatory coverage for bodily injury liability."

"Replacing our no-fault system with a bodily injury liability system more appropriately places liability where it should be – with the party that caused the accident," said Senator Burgess. "Additionally, the bill creates a new framework for handling bad faith litigation that provides a clear set of standards to govern the conduct of both parties in the claims handling process, which we believe will lead to better outcomes for both insured Floridians and their insurance companies."

Repeals No-Fault, Requires Bodily Injury Liability Coverage

SB 54 repeals the Florida Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law (No-Fault Law), which requires every owner and registrant of a motor vehicle in this state to maintain Personal Injury Protection (PIP) coverage. The bill enacts financial responsibility requirements for liability for motor vehicle ownership or operation, as follows:

- For bodily injury (BI) or death of one person in any one crash, $25,000, and
- Subject to that limit for one person, $50,000 for BI or death of two or more people in any one crash.
- Retains the existing $10,000 financial responsibility requirement for property damage.
- Revises required coverage amounts for garage liability and commercial motor vehicle insurance, and increases the cash deposit amount required for a certificate of self-insurance establishing financial responsibility for owners and operators of motor vehicles that are not for-hire vehicles.
- Repealing the No-Fault Law eliminates the limitations on recovering pain and suffering damages from PIP insureds, which currently require bodily injury that causes death or significant and permanent injury.

Requires Medical Payments Coverage

SB 54 requires insurers to offer medical payments coverage (MedPay) with limits of $5,000 or $10,000 to cover medical expenses of the insured. Insurers may also offer other policy limits that exceed $5,000, and may offer deductibles of up to $500. The bill requires that insurers must reserve $5,000 of MedPay benefits for 30 days to pay physicians or dentists who provide emergency services and care or who provide hospital inpatient care.

Creates a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions

SB 54 creates a new framework to govern all bad faith claims for failure to settle related to motor vehicle insurance. The bill requires insurers to follow claims handling best practices standards based on long-established good faith duties related to claim handling, claim investigation, defense of the insured, and settlement negotiations.

The bill establishes that it is a condition precedent to bringing a third-party bad faith action not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., that the claimant serve a demand for settlement. The demand must:

- Identify the date and location of the loss, the claimant, and insured.
- State the legal and factual basis of the claim.
- Detail the claimant's injuries, medical treatment, and the amount of current and reasonably anticipated future damages.
- Demand a settlement amount, which may not exceed the insured's policy limit.
- Release, if accepted, the insured from any further liability.
- Not provide conditions on the settlement other than payment of the demand and the ability of the claimant to take an examination under oath of the insured.

The bill allows the third-party bad faith claimant to condition the demand for settlement on taking a two hour examination under oath (EUO) of the insured limited to discovering recoverable assets. The bad faith claimant may withdraw the demand for settlement after the EUO. If the insured refuses to submit to the EUO, the insurer may tender policy limits without obtaining a release of the insured and may not be held liable if there is an excess judgment against the insured.

The bill provides that in a third-party action for bad faith failure to settle not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., the insurer is not liable for bad faith if the insurer tenders policy limits within 30 days of receiving a demand for settlement.

Allows for Named Driver Exclusions

SB 54 authorizes the exclusion of a specifically named individual from specified insurance coverages under a private passenger motor vehicle policy, with the written consent of the policyholder.

Happy Monday, Kimberly and Natalie! I am following up on the meeting request below from early December to discuss pandemic preparedness and my text exchanges with Senator Burgess between January 8 and January 11 expressing some of our concerns with SB 484.

Would it be possible to schedule a meeting to discuss these two items with the senator? In preparation for the meeting, I am attaching our letter of opposition circulated to House Criminal Justice committee members as they prepared to consider the House companion to SB 484.

Thank you in advance,

Good morning, Kimberly:

I hope this email finds you well. We wanted to reach out and congratulate Sen. Burgess on his new role in the Florida Senate! We would also welcome the opportunity to briefly discuss some of the Catholic Conference's legislative priorities for the 2021 session, if it would be possible to fit us into his schedule. There are a few issues I'd like to highlight but, as he is Pandemic Preparedness and Response Chair, I'd especially like to share Catholic Charities' efforts in this regard and needs moving forward.

Thank you in advance for your kind attention,
Ingrid Delgado

RE: Opposition to HB 1 (Public Disorder)

Dear Representative Fernandez-Barquin:

The Florida Conference of Catholic Bishops struggles ardently against violence. However, we oppose HB 1, as it is unnecessary and entails foreseeable unintended consequences. Our concerns are the following:

HB 1 is unnecessary

The crimes committed in recent riots in Washington and across the county prompt outrage and deep concern. As we reflect on these events, it is necessary to recall that assault, battery, burglary, theft, and stealing are already crimes, and perpetrators are being held accountable for these actions. It seems unnecessary to create new and stiffer penalties for crimes if they occur during a riot, as long as the applicable laws are enforced.

Reflects a retributive approach to justice

The Conference supports increasing gain time, as it incentivizes rehabilitation. The longer sentences in HB 1 work against gain time reform efforts of reducing sentence lengths for individuals who demonstrate good behavior. Rigid formulations of mandatory minimum sentencing are one-size-fits-all solutions which are too often inappropriate, yet HB 1 creates a new mandatory minimum sentence.

Violates principle of subsidiarity

The provision that allows the governor to amend or override a local governing body's law enforcement budget prompts concern. A community of a higher order should not interfere in the internal life of a community of a lower order, depriving the latter of its functions. Put more simply, crime is largely a local issue; to the extent possible, local responses should be developed and respected.

Unintended consequences for churches, faith-based and other organizations

The terms "prohibited assemblies" and "riots" in HB 1 are undefined, as are "injury" and "force." Activities that we and many Floridians support, such as praying in front of an abortion facility, pro-life marches, and prayer vigils could be construed as prompting prosecution if this bill is enacted. This is a serious concern.

Alternative responses are available

There are other approaches to the civil unrest we have witnessed of late. Promoting de-escalation training is one.

Exacerbates existing ills

In its present form, HB 1 will further exacerbate the already disproportionate impact of incarceration among the poor and communities of color while increasing costs of incarceration.

We must oppose HB 1 but remain available to discuss our concerns further at your request.

Sincerely,

Michael B. Sheedy

Subject: New report: The Cost of School Policing: What Florida's Students Have Paid for a Pretense of Security

Good afternoon, Senators:

I wanted to be sure to share with you our new report, "The Cost of School Policing: What Florida's students have paid for a pretense of security," which was created in partnership with SPLC, Equality Florida, LWV of Florida, and the Florida Social Justice in Schools Project. The report analyzes the impact of the Florida Legislature's decision to mandate that every public school have an officer or security personnel onsite, and finds that the heightened presence of police officers in Florida schools in the past two years has led to an unprecedented increase in school arrests.

Below are a few salient findings:

- The presence of law enforcement was related to a greater frequency of school arrests (40-82% more at the school-level). This relationship existed at the elementary, middle and high school levels.
- The presence of law enforcement predicted greater numbers of behavioral incidents being reported to law enforcement, particularly for less severe infractions and among middle schoolers.
- There was little consistent evidence that the presence of law enforcement decreased the number of behavioral incidents occurring, indicating that school-based law enforcement were not necessarily making schools safer.
- For the first time ever, there are more police officers working in Florida schools (3,650) than school nurses (2,286).
- The number of police officers in schools is more than double the number of school social workers (1,414) and school psychologists (1,452).
- During the 2018-19 school year, the number of youth arrests at school increased 8%, while the number of youth arrested in the community continued to decline by 12%.
- The percentage of youth arrests happening at school hit a five-year high of 20%.
- The number of students expelled from school increased 43%.
- Schools reported more than four times as many incidents of using physical restraints on students.
- Police officers arrested elementary-aged kids 345 times, including an arrest of a five year old and five arrests of six-year olds, during the 2018-19 school year.

We hope this information on the financial and human costs of school policing will be useful in reconsidering the mandate of requiring police officers and armed personnel in schools. Given our current budget crisis and data showing the harmful results to our children and increase in the school-to-prison pipeline, repealing the school policing mandate would be a step in the right direction and would free up significant budgetary resources.

Please do not hesitate to contact me if you have any questions or would like any additional information. You can see your county specific data here: <https://www.aclufl.org/en/school-prison-pipeline-local-resources> and the underlying research and data report from the UF Education Policy and Research Center here: https://www.aclufl.org/sites/default/files/curran\_-\_the\_expanding\_presence\_of\_law\_enforcement\_in\_florida\_schools.pdf.

Executive Summary

School districts across the country are reassessing the efficacy of integrating police officers into schools. This comes after many years of advocacy from impacted youth and on the heels of increased awareness of police brutality and the misuse of law enforcement for social services. Many schools are beginning to feel the impacts of COVID-19 on their budgets and are struggling to provide the minimum resources needed for education, further calling into question the appropriateness of spending scarce education dollars on policing. Despite this, some school districts are paying for more police officers and security personnel than even required by state law.

In this conversation, Florida's school districts have been at the mercy of the Legislature. There has been a perception that they have only the false choice between placing a police officer or an armed civilian at every school due to a state mandate. Meanwhile, our students suffer:

- » For the first time ever, there are more police officers working in Florida schools (3,650) than school nurses (2,286).
- » The number of police officers in schools is more than double the number of school social workers (1,414) and school psychologists (1,452).
- » During the 2018-19 school year, the number of youth arrests at school increased 8%, while the number of youth arrested in the community continued to decline by 12%.

- » The percentage of youth arrests happening at school hit a five-year high of 20%.
- » The number of students expelled from school increased 43%.
- » Schools reported more than four times as many incidents of using physical restraints on students.
- » Police officers arrested elementary-aged kids 345 times, including an arrest of a five year old and five arrests of six-year olds, during the 2018-19 school year.

An analysis of Florida's experiment with school policing illustrates that the school policing mandate has only increased negative outcomes for our students:

- » The presence of law enforcement was related to a greater frequency of school arrests (40-82% more at the school-level). This relationship existed at elementary, middle and high school levels.
- » The presence of law enforcement predicted greater numbers of behavioral incidents being reported to law enforcement, particularly for less severe infractions and among middle schoolers.
- » There was little consistent evidence that the presence of law enforcement decreased the number of behavioral incidents occurring, indicating that school-based law enforcement were not necessarily making schools safer.

Florida lawmakers must repeal the mandate for police and stop the push for armed personnel in schools and return discretion to local communities over whether and how police should be involved in schools. In the meantime, school districts can adopt policies, both internal and as part of memorandums of understanding with law enforcement agencies, to mitigate the harm of increased school policing:

- » Increase the employment of student support staff.
- » Adopt minimum training requirements and accountability measures for police working in schools.
- » Adopt a minimum age of arrest.
- » Adopt limitations on the use of force against children.
- » Adopt student codes of conduct with consequences clearly outlined for specified behavior that limit the involvement of law enforcement to those situations posing immediate safety risks.
- » Assign clear duties to officers to focus on controlling access to campus, not policing the hallways or engaging in student discipline.
- » Adopt effective discipline policies and practices that teach and reinforce positive behavior.

- » Educate teachers and staff to effectively manage classroom behavior and about when it is appropriate to call the police on their students and when it is not.
- » Teach students about their rights in police encounters and avoid blurring the lines between law enforcement and school staff when investigating, searching and interrogating students.

We cannot continue asking our students to carry the weight of adult fear and inaction at a time when they are more vulnerable than ever.

Florida is failing to meet the emotional and mental health needs of its students

While for some students, school provides a safe, stable environment, for many, it is their primary source of stress.

Schools today in Florida look vastly different than they did five years ago. A school's status as the center of a community is largely becoming incompatible with security measures implemented due to fear of mass shootings. The evidence does not support the need for the recently enacted increases in school police officers - legislators have unfortunately allowed fear, and not evidence, to drive school policing policy in Florida.

- » Consistently fewer than 2% of all youth homicides each year happen at school.<sup>1</sup> This rate has not changed in decades.
- » The most recently available data, examining school-associated homicides between July 1994 and June 2017, found the rate of school-associated homicides in which there was a single victim was 0.03 per 100,000 students, while the rate of multiple-victim school-association homicides was 0.008 per 100,000 students.<sup>2</sup>
- » The rate of students being victimized, and the rate of specific crimes such as thefts and violent offenses, has been steadily declining.<sup>3</sup>

Students today are reporting more stress than any other generation,<sup>4</sup> and show significant declines in mental health and increasing suicidality.<sup>5</sup> While for some students, school provides a safe, stable environment, for many, it is their primary source of stress.<sup>6</sup> This reality is illustrated by increased suicide rates while school is in session.<sup>7</sup>

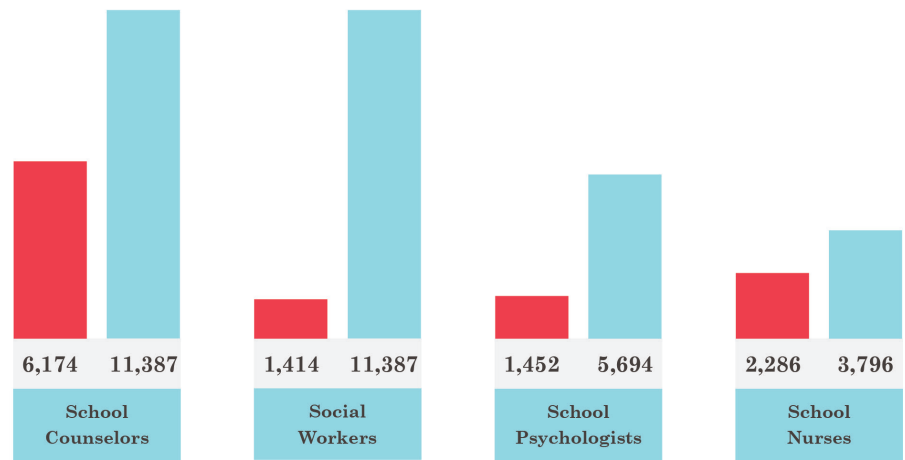

The current COVID-19 pandemic is adding to student stress and straining their access to support. It has also exposed inadequacies throughout our education and healthcare systems that work against our goal to meaningfully educate every Floridian.

Lastly, we know that mental health issues are most likely to emerge in adolescence - and are more efficiently treated early in their development.<sup>8</sup> One in five adolescents have a mental illness that will persist into adulthood, underscoring the need to take student stress seriously in an effort to prevent worsening of symptoms.<sup>9</sup>

Professionals trained to meet these needs exist. Over time, school-based mental health and student support professionals, including school counselors, school social workers, nurses and school psychologists, have emerged as effective at identifying and addressing student needs, either through direct service or referrals to resources. The majority of children and adolescents who receive mental and developmental health services do so at school.<sup>10</sup> These professionals also play a key role in designing school programs and structures that promote a healthy school climate.<sup>11</sup>

Ultimately, they are trained to do exactly the work the U.S. Secret Service identified as a key prevention practice for preventing school shootings - address and end bullying in schools, address the mental health needs of students, and foster high-quality relationships between staff and students so threats are better detected and reported.<sup>12</sup>

No school district met the industry standards for the number of students served by a single student support professional

■ 2018-19 FTE Staff   ■ Staff required to meet industry standard ratio.

Unfortunately, 52 percent of public schools nationwide report that inadequate funding was a major limitation in their efforts to provide mental health services to students.<sup>13</sup> In Florida, during the 2018-19 school year, no school district met the industry standards for the number of students served by a single student support professional. School counselors recommend a ratio of 250 students per counselor, but in Florida the average ratio is 461:1.<sup>14</sup> School nurses, meanwhile, recommend ratios below 750:1 at the highest, but in Florida, an average of 1,240 students were served by a single Registered Nurse or Licensed Practice Nurse.<sup>15</sup> School psychologists recommend ratios of 500 students per psychologist, but in Florida there is only one school psychologist for every 1,961 students.<sup>16</sup> Like school counselors, social workers in schools work best with caseloads of no more than 250. But Florida has only one social worker for every 2,013 students.<sup>17</sup>

The fiscal cost of policing in Florida schools

At least $383 million was spent at the state and local levels to embed police officers or security personnel in schools during the 2018-19 school year - more than twice the amount spent in 2016-17.

In the aftermath of the tragic mass shooting at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School, Florida policymakers took their guidance from law enforcement. The Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School Public Safety Commission (MSD Commission), established to examine the tragedy and identify lessons, was dominated by law enforcement officers, with no current teachers, no students or student organizations, no community or mentorship organizations, and only one member with mental health training.<sup>18</sup> The MSD Commission included no people of color as voting members. When students tried to engage in the process and provide their testimony, the MSD Commission ended its hearing before the public testimony portion had been scheduled.<sup>19</sup>

Despite finding significant failures in the provision of special education services to the perpetrator of the mass shooting and recognizing the need for closer examination of the mental health issues, the MSD Commission failed to provide meaningful recommendations to address these issues. Instead, it focused on its area of expertise: policing.

The Florida Legislature has largely adopted the MSD Commission's recommendations, at significant expense to Florida's taxpayers and students. It provided a total of $225.5 million in FY 2018-19 to embed police officers or armed personnel in schools. More was provided to harden schools with gates, bulletproof glass and security cameras and to surveil social media and track students as potential threats.

Recognizing the power of prevention, safe schools funding can be used for after-school programs, behavior-driven intervention programs, bullying intervention, and suicide prevention, and historically it was. Today, however, 98% of the state safe schools funding pays for police officers.

Today, students in Florida’s schools are more likely to interact with law enforcement at school than a nurse, a social worker or a psychologist.

Two years after Parkland, the amount spent to place police officers in schools only grows, eclipsing funding streams for mental health support in schools.<sup>20</sup> Meanwhile, overall spending at schools largely remained relatively stagnant, despite this increased spending on policing.<sup>21</sup>

It’s important to note that these funds are only state funds - an additional $157.6 million from local budgets was also spent to fund police in schools in 2018-19.<sup>22</sup> Today, students in Florida’s schools are more likely to interact with law enforcement at school than a nurse, a social worker or a psychologist.

What do police in schools actually do?

The only given when a police officer is placed in a school in Florida is that they have the power to arrest students. Their role varies from school to school, and is often at odds with the purported rationale for posting them at schools. Like many states, Florida fails to have a uniform state policy on just what an officer working in a school should do or what training they should have before they work with our kids.<sup>24</sup> Likewise, the Florida Department of Education provides no guidance to schools or districts on appropriate school policing policies or policies related to arresting students in public schools.<sup>25</sup>

While the justification for Florida's school policing mandate was to protect students from mass shootings, there is very little evidence that integrating police into schools makes schools safe.<sup>26</sup> In the aftermath of the mass shooting at Columbine High School, the federal and state governments provided grants to fund police in schools, which drove the expansion of school policing.<sup>27</sup> However, a study of all school shootings since the Columbine tragedy found that the presence of law enforcement at a school did not predict lower casualties.<sup>28</sup> Ultimately, when asked what schools could do to prevent future school shootings, only 8% of officers working in schools said use armed security staff or police officers.<sup>29</sup>

Part of the reason for this is that police working in schools spend their time policing normal adolescent misbehavior, not facing high-risk situations like an armed attack. Thus, the MSD Commission found that for the officer stationed at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School during the attack, decades of experience policing schools “may have contributed to his inadequate response to [the] shooting.”<sup>30</sup>

School administrations see police officers as another resource to manage behavior in an otherwise under-resourced environment. Surveys of Florida school districts on their use of police officers from 2000 through 2012 indicate that districts cited student disrespect toward teachers as one of the top three critical issues for school safety.<sup>31</sup> For a couple years, students considered “disrespectful” were cited as a critical safety issue more often than controlling access to campus.<sup>32</sup>

Lines between discipline and security have been further blurred by the National Association of School Resource Officers (NASRO) advocating for police working in schools to adopt a “triad role” of teacher, informal counselor/mentor, and law enforcement officer despite there being exceptionally limited training requirements across the country preparing them for these roles.<sup>33</sup> Only 41% of surveyed police officers in schools reported that their primary role involved law enforcement.<sup>34</sup> Despite the fact that NASRO states that police officers should not be involved in disciplinary decision-making,<sup>35</sup> seven percent see their primary role as disciplinarian. Only 17% reported engaging in mentoring and just 2% reported teaching.<sup>36</sup>

There is no evidence that officers in schools are trained to be counselors, teachers, or even to police children or teens.

When it comes to mentoring, there is evidence that police officers approach their work in schools as a sort of ambassador, shaping students’ perceptions of law enforcement generally, “teaching students that police are to be trusted and used as a resource, and that negative interactions with police (including the arrest of a loved one) are the result of an individual’s criminality.”<sup>37</sup> This can be especially troubling for youth of color who have personally had negative interactions with police.

Florida largely leaves how officers working in schools should be trained, and what they should do while at schools, to local discretion. State law requires only that officers working in schools complete mental health crisis intervention training.<sup>38</sup> While the Attorney General’s Office offers training for school resource officers on the “basic knowledge and skills necessary to implement crime prevention programming in a school setting,” the state offers no recognized state certification for school resource officers, and there is no requirement for officers to complete this training in order to work in schools or be called “school resource officers.”<sup>39</sup>

There is no evidence that officers in schools are trained to be counselors, teachers, or even to police children or teens. In one survey, only a quarter of police officers stationed at schools reported having any experience working with youth before being placed in a school.<sup>40</sup> In another, despite reporting that more than a third of incidents they responded to involved a student receiving special education services, only 59% had received training related to special education students.<sup>41</sup> Despite this lack of training and expertise, officers often take a leading role in deciding how to respond to youth misbehavior.

Police officers are also being relied on for youth mental health. The Baker Act is a law intended to require a person with a mental illness to be evaluated in emergency situations when they pose a real and present threat of substantial harm to themselves or others if not immediately taken to a psychiatric hospital.<sup>42</sup> In such situations, a court, specified medical and mental health professionals, and police can initiate an involuntary 72-hour hold for examination. Evidence shows, however, that the Baker Act is increasingly being used on school children who make jokes, act out, exhibit normal manifestations of a known disability, or express ordinary sadness. This has had devastating results, including trauma and abuse, for these children, as young as 6, and their families.<sup>43</sup>

Because subjecting someone to an involuntary psychiatric examination and hold is so serious, not even all social workers have the authority to use the Baker Act.<sup>44</sup> Even school psychologists, with advanced degrees and years of experience in mental health assessment and crisis response have yet to be authorized in statute despite Florida Department of Children and Families (DCF) recommendations to do so.<sup>45</sup> Clinical social workers must have a master's degree in social work, a passing score on a national exam, and two years of experience working under a licensed clinical social worker to use the Baker Act.<sup>46</sup> Meanwhile, there are no prerequisites for police officers to handcuff a child and have them committed.

Over the last 15 years, the use of the Baker Act on children has more than doubled, with the largest increase among kids 11 to 13 years old.<sup>47</sup> A DCF analysis found that police officers initiated more than 68% of involuntary examinations of youth in fiscal year 2017-18.<sup>48</sup> Although available data is limited, we know that children were subjected to involuntary examinations more than 36,000 times that year,<sup>49</sup> which DCF found was likely an undercount due to inadequacies in data collection.<sup>50</sup> Additionally, at least 21 youth were subjected to involuntary examinations more than 10 times each, and police officers initiated 88% of these examinations. Nearly a quarter of these examinations were initiated at school.<sup>51</sup>

When there are no student support resources, and there is an officer with no clear role and no clear threat to respond to, officers end up being the person to respond when teachers cannot quickly address student outbursts.

The roles police are taking in schools have significant implications for student and parental rights:

- » Parents do not have to provide consent for their child to be subjected to an involuntary examination under the Baker Act, and are powerless to help their children once it has been initiated.<sup>52</sup>
- » Parents do not have to be notified before police interrogate a child at school.<sup>53</sup>
- » Although officers must stop an interrogation if the child tells them that they want to talk to their parents first, officers don't have to tell the child they have this right.<sup>54</sup>
- » Police officers only have to attempt to notify parents when they take a child into custody so the parents know where the child is.<sup>55</sup>
- » Although police officers have to read children their rights when they are taken into custody, school staff does not have to do this, even when the police officer is in the room during an interrogation.<sup>56</sup>
- » Parents, and students, may lose their right to consent before their records are shared with law enforcement and others.<sup>57</sup>

It comes as no surprise then that schools where police officers are stationed have more student arrests on campus.<sup>58</sup> Often, these arrests are for misbehavior better handled by teachers and administrators.<sup>59</sup> During the 2018-19 school year, 1,129 arrests were made in schools for “disorderly conduct”—nearly four times as many as made outside of schools. When there are no student support resources, and there is an officer with no clear role and no clear threat to respond to, officers end up being the person to respond when teachers cannot quickly address student outbursts.

What is more hidden is that stationing a police officer in a school fundamentally changes the school climate. Trends suggest that discipline increases, with more kids being pushed out of school through suspensions and expulsions.<sup>60</sup> Even when a memorandum of understanding dictates that officers should stay out of discipline, they shape how

A key issue is that police officers have nearly unlimited discretion to arrest even the youngest students. In a study of how they use that discretion, 77% of officers reported arresting students “to calm them down.” The majority has also arrested students to show them that actions have consequences (68%) or because a teacher wanted them arrested for a minor offense (55%).<sup>64</sup>

Ultimately, the research consistently shows that the presence of law enforcement negatively impacts school climate:

- » The presence of law enforcement shifts school culture and practices in ways that result in more punitive environments.<sup>65</sup>
- » The presence of law enforcement is predictive of higher rates of student arrests,<sup>66</sup> and contributes to disproportionate arrests of Black and brown students and students with disabilities.<sup>67</sup>
- » Most studies show that school-based law enforcement are related to higher rates of exclusionary discipline.<sup>68</sup>
- » There is evidence that the presence of law enforcement in schools may increase students’ fear, heightening their perceived need for law enforcement to protect them from objectively unlikely to occur threats.<sup>69</sup>

The impact of school policing has never been evenly felt. Since the earliest programs, police have been more likely to be stationed at schools that serve predominantly low-income students of color.<sup>70</sup> Unlike how they approach predominately white schools, police stationed at these schools are more likely to see students as suspects.<sup>71</sup>

This exacerbates the consequences of an already unjust system. From early on, youth of color are more likely to be seen as troublemakers, regardless of their actual behavior.<sup>72</sup> For example, a study of Pinellas County discipline found that more than half of suspended Black students were suspended for subjective offenses, like not cooperating, class disruption, insubordination or disrespect.<sup>73</sup> Black students were four and a half times as likely to be arrested at school for disorderly conduct than their white classmates.<sup>74</sup> For Black girls, the disparity was even larger. Despite white girls’ arrest rate for disorderly conduct increasing 23%, Black girls were arrested nearly 6 times as often.<sup>75</sup> Once such treatment begins, it is difficult to undo the harm. Black students and other students of color internalize a role as the “bad kids” in class and society, reinforcing a self-fulfilling prophecy.<sup>76</sup>

The human cost of policing in Florida schools

In an effort to protect students, Florida enacted a law that increased students' chances of being arrested at school. The law requiring police or security personnel in every school resulted in the near doubling of the number of officers stationed at schools in Florida<sup>77</sup> and brought an 8% increase in the student arrest rate.<sup>78</sup> This stands in mark contrast not only to past trends but the continued decrease in both juvenile and adult arrest rates in the community.

In addition to the serious disruption to a child's life and education, arresting a juvenile has serious, long term impacts. In Florida, juvenile records are not automatically expunged until age 21 at the earliest.<sup>79</sup> Some remain until age 26. These records are considered in a young adult's first applications for a job, to further their college or fund their education, and housing, etc. Juveniles who've been arrested are less likely to graduate high school and to go to secondary school,<sup>80</sup> more likely to be arrested in the future,<sup>81</sup> and more likely to be incarcerated as an adult.<sup>82</sup> These consequences are not warranted - or even logical - given the reality that youth largely grow out of delinquent behavior without intervention.<sup>83</sup> Instead, these interruptions and burdens make it harder for these kids to successfully age out of delinquency.

The percent of youth arrests that happened in school, as opposed to in the community, had been declining as more schools adopted pre-arrest diversion programs. After the state mandated school policing, that trend reversed, with 20% of the youth arrests in fiscal year 2018-19 happening at school.<sup>84</sup>

Even our youngest students have not been immune to these consequences. The arrest of 6-year-old Kaia Rolle at school forced Florida to face the harsh reality that our current laws do not have a minimum age of arrest. In the past five years, police officers arrested elementary-aged kids (between the ages of five and ten) 2,164 times.<sup>85</sup> In fiscal year 2018-19, police officers arrested elementary-aged kids 345 times, including an arrest of a five year old and 5 arrests of six-year olds.<sup>86</sup>

Racial disparities persisted in these rates: Black kids continue to be more than twice as likely as their white peers to be arrested at school.<sup>87</sup> One development identified by Florida’s experiment in mandated school policing is that arrest rates for white students are now increasing at a higher rate than Black students, and that police presence is driving this.<sup>88</sup> Yet, even with a 20% increase in the arrest rate for white students, the racial disparity in arrests persisted.

One criticism of the past research showing increased school policing is correlated with increased negative student outcomes is the notion that schools’ motivation for adding police officers may explain the increase in negative outcomes. For example, perhaps the school was already experiencing increased violence and administrators felt law enforcement presence was needed.

New research on Florida’s experiment in mandating school policing illustrates that even when all schools faced the same mandate, negative outcomes increased.<sup>89</sup>

Black kids continue to be more than twice as likely as their white peers to be arrested at school.

The study, which examined data from 2014-15 and 2018-19, found that:

- » The presence of law enforcement was related to a greater frequency of school arrests (40-82% more at the school-level). This relationship existed at elementary, middle and high school levels.
- » The presence of law enforcement predicted greater numbers of behavioral incidents being reported to law enforcement, particularly for less severe infractions and among middle schoolers.
- » There was little consistent evidence that the presence of law enforcement decreased the number of behavioral incidents occurring, indicating that school-based law enforcement were not necessarily making schools safer.

These findings persisted even when differences between schools and trends that affected all schools were controlled. The bottom line is that when you integrate a police officer into a school, the number of kids referred to police officers, and ultimately arrested, increases. Meanwhile, the number of behavioral incidents at the school largely remains the same - showing the school is no more calm or safe than before the officer's arrival.

Recommendations

This summer's civil uprising against police brutality and the misuse of the state's police power against its people has highlighted the need for a more nuanced, purposeful approach to public safety. School districts across the country are reassessing the efficacy of integrating police officers into schools and reweighing its costs and benefits. The impacts of COVID-19 on our schools and budgets cannot be overstated. Schools already struggling to provide the resources necessary for students to learn are now struggling to provide the resources necessary to protect student health. Students, meanwhile, will be bringing the stress and trauma of living during a worldwide pandemic to the classroom.

..... Repeal the school policing mandate

The Legislature must repeal the state mandate requiring police officers or security personnel on every campus. It is already clear that Florida will need to reduce spending due to the impacts COVID-19 has had on our state's economy. Policymakers must examine the cost, both fiscal and human, of school policing and account for the consequences of adding Tasers, handcuffs and guns to schools that struggle to provide enough textbooks and, now, hand sanitizer.

Mitigate the consequences of school policing

The MSD Commission must consider the expertise and experience of directly impacted students, educators and experts in mental health to ensure recommendations on school safety are balanced to better serve the needs of students.

The Legislature, and local policymakers, can mitigate the harms of expanded school policing by passing minimum requirements for training of police in schools, a minimum age for arrest and limitations on the use of force, including tasers and pepper spray, against children.

The employment of student support professionals, such as counselors, social workers and school psychologists, in adequate numbers can prevent unnecessary referrals to law enforcement.

Until the state mandate is repealed, local and state policymakers should establish clear training requirements and accountability measures for officers working in schools. Officers should also be assigned clear duties to ensure their mandate is controlling access to campus, not policing the hallways. Policymakers must address the overuse of Baker Acts on children, ensure parental and child rights are respected in the process, and pass legislation mandating disaggregated data collection and data transparency on Baker Act use in schools.

School districts should adopt clear student codes of conduct with clear consequences for specified behavior that limit the involvement of police officers to situations posing immediate safety risks. Although the Legislature revised the state's zero tolerance law, school districts continue to have discretion to define which acts pose a threat and require zero tolerance and which acts do not pose a threat to safety. Likewise, the law is very clear that threat assessment teams can use alternatives to referral to law enforcement and that zero tolerance policies may not be applied to petty acts of misconduct.<sup>90</sup> School districts should develop school-and community-based diversion programs to address disciplinary issues and limit undue student contact with the justice system.

School districts should adopt effective discipline policies and practices that teach and reinforce positive behavior. Districts should provide teachers and staff with effective behavior management tools and educate them about when it is appropriate to call the police on their students and when it is not.

Schools should teach students about their rights in police encounters and avoid blurring the lines between law enforcement and school staff when investigating, searching and interrogating students.

Abstract

The presence of law enforcement in public schools has been a common security practice in the state of Florida for several decades. Following the tragic 2018 school shooting in Parkland, FL, the state passed a law requiring all public schools to either have law enforcement or other armed personnel present. Drawing on state-wide data for the school years 2014-15 through 2018-19, this report examined the relationship between law enforcement in schools and a number of outcomes including reports of behavioral incidents to the state, incidents reported to law enforcement, school arrests, and exclusionary discipline. This analysis used statistical techniques that controlled for both observable characteristics of districts and schools as well as unobserved characteristics that were fixed over time. Findings suggest that the 2018 Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School Public Safety Act significantly increased the presence of law enforcement in schools, particularly in elementary schools. The presence of law enforcement in schools was related to increases in the number of behavioral incidents reported to the state, the number of such incidents reported to law enforcement, and student arrests. The results suggest a need to reconsider whether law enforcement should be present in schools, and, if they are, how they can be implemented in a way that minimizes unnecessary exposure of students to law enforcement and arrests.

Executive Summary

This research report presents findings from a state-wide analysis of law enforcement in Florida schools. It examines data from a five year period between the 2014-15 and 2018-19 school years, including the years before and after the 2018 passage of the Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School Public Safety Act. The analysis used a number of statistical techniques, including both district and school fixed effects, to account for underlying differences in districts/schools that had greater or fewer law enforcement in schools.

Key Findings

1. The number of law enforcement in Florida schools nearly doubled, and the number of Florida schools served by law enforcement increased by 40% between 2017-18 and 2018-19 school years.
2. The increase in law enforcement in schools was driven primarily by an increased presence in elementary schools, which had an approximately 56% increase in law enforcement presence between 2017-18 and 2018-19.
3. Between 2017-18 and 2018-19, there were increases statewide in the number of behavioral incidents reported to the state and to law enforcement, particularly for threats/intimidation, drug related incidents, and tobacco related incidents.
4. The presence of law enforcement in schools was related to a greater frequency of school arrests (40-82% more at the school-level). Surprisingly, this relationship was most consistent among white students.
5. The presence of law enforcement in schools predicted greater numbers of behavioral incidents being reported to law enforcement, particularly for less severe infractions and among middle schoolers.
6. There was little consistent evidence that the presence of law enforcement decreased the number of behavioral incidents occurring, indicating that school-based law enforcement were not necessarily making schools safer.
7. The presence of law enforcement was not consistently related to exclusionary school discipline such as suspensions.

Policy Implications

1. School districts should reconsider whether law enforcement should be present in schools, keeping in mind that state law limits alternatives.
2. The state requirement to have armed personnel in schools should be revisited with an eye toward returning control to local school districts and schools to determine how best to ensure a safe learning environment.
3. School districts and law enforcement agencies should adopt clear policies that restrict the ability to arrest to a limited set of serious infractions and prohibit arrest of young students.
4. If present, law enforcement in schools should be trained in conflict resolution, in ways to reduce implicit bias and disproportionate minority contact, and in alternatives to the use of force or arrest.

Introduction

The presence of law enforcement in schools has become an increasingly common feature of public schools in America. From 2005 to 2015, the percentage of public schools nationwide with law enforcement present at least part time increased by about 33% such that, as of 2017-18, around half of all public schools had a law enforcement presence (Correa & Diliberti, 2020; Musu-Gillette et al., 2018). Florida's rates of law enforcement presence in schools were similar, with about 48% of schools in FL reporting school-based law enforcement in the 2013-14 school year (Civil Rights Data Collection, 2014).

In the wake of the tragic 2018 mass shooting at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida, and several others across the nation, many states passed laws that served to further increase the likelihood that schools have law enforcement present. In particular, in Florida, the Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School Public Safety Act (Act), passed in 2018, requires that all public schools host either a law enforcement officer, an armed staff member, or an armed private security guard (Florida Statutes §1006.12 2018). As a result, schools across the state have been actively working to increase the presence of law enforcement in schools.

This trend towards greater use of law enforcement in schools has occurred despite research that finds a generally negative relationship between the presence of law enforcement in schools and student outcomes. For example, prior work has found that the presence of law enforcement is predictive of higher rates of student arrest and greater use of exclusionary discipline like suspensions (Fisher & Hennessy, 2016; Owens, 2017; Weisburst, 2019). This may be because, as qualitative ethnographies have suggested, the presence of law enforcement shifts school culture and practices in ways that result in more punitive environments (Kupchik, 2010; Nolan, 2011).

While such qualitative work and some recent quantitative work point to causal relationships, it is often difficult to disentangle whether the presence of law enforcement in schools is causing these negative outcomes or is merely a reflection of law enforcement being placed in settings where negative experiences like arrests and suspensions are more common (Owens, 2017; Weisburst, 2019). In Florida, recently passed state law requires schools to either have law enforcement or other armed personnel present. This law, which has prompted an expansion of law enforcement in schools, presents a unique opportunity to examine the impacts of law enforcement in schools on student outcomes.

This research report documents the increasing presence of law enforcement in Florida public schools and explores how law enforcement presence relates to a number of student outcomes including the number of behavioral incidents reported to the state, behavioral incidents reported to law enforcement, school arrests, and exclusionary discipline such as suspensions. This report documents substantial increases in the presence of law enforcement in Florida schools, particularly elementary schools. Furthermore, the findings suggest that the presence of law enforcement may be contributing to increased reports of behavioral incidents to law enforcement and increased arrests, particularly of white students. The results do not, however, find consistent evidence that law enforcement in schools result in greater use of exclusionary discipline, a finding that contrasts with some prior research.

Methodology

The analysis leveraged longitudinal district and school-level data to compare outcomes for districts/schools that had law enforcement to those that did not (or had fewer) between the 2014-15 and 2018-19 school years. The analysis took advantage of the 2018 Act that required schools to adopt one of several school security options (including law enforcement in schools) as a source of plausibly less biased variation in the placement of law enforcement in schools. By comparing frequency of behavioral incidents reported to the state, reports of incidents to law enforcement, school arrests, and discipline before and after the passage of the Act for districts/schools that added law enforcement, this analysis provides insights into the potential effects of law enforcement presence on schools and students.

Data

This analysis leveraged both district and school-level data on the presence of law enforcement in schools as well as multiple measures of student outcomes. Analyses were conducted separately with the school district as the unit of analysis (district-level) and with the school as the unit of analysis (school-level). While the school-level analysis had the advantage of being able to more accurately link the presence of law enforcement in a school to outcomes in that particular school, data on placement of law enforcement at the school-level were not available for all schools in the state. The district-level analysis, in comparison, covered all districts in the state, for the entire five year span. Both the district and school-level datasets were constructed using publicly available data from the FL Departments of Education (DOE) and Juvenile Justice (DJJ), school districts, and local law enforcement agencies.

Independent Variables (Law Enforcement Presence in Schools). The key independent variable in the analysis was the presence of law enforcement in a district or school. For the district-level analysis, data on the presence of law enforcement were drawn from the FL DOE's annual Safe Schools Appropriation Expenditures Report. These publicly available annual reports provide details on the number of schools in each district served by law enforcement as well as the number of law enforcement officers in each district (which can differ given that some schools have multiple officers and some officers cover multiple schools). Both the number of schools served and number of officers are also disaggregated by school level (elementary, middle, high). For the purpose of the district-level analysis, the presence of law enforcement was primarily operationalized as the number of schools served by school-based law enforcement, though in additional analyses included in the appendix, presence of law enforcement was operationalized as the number of school-based law enforcement in the district.

For the school-level analysis, data on the presence of law enforcement in schools were compiled through public records requests to school districts and local law enforcement agencies. Specifically, each school district in the state was asked to indicate which schools were covered by law enforcement for the school years 2014-15 through 2018-19. For school districts that were unresponsive to the public records requests, similar requests were made of the local law enforcement agencies located in the district's county. While not all districts or agencies provided data on the presence of school-based law enforcement, the final school-level dataset included information on 2,245 schools from 56 school districts (approximately 65% of schools in the state representing 84% of the school districts). The full list of school districts for which there was school-level information on law enforcement presence is provided in the appendix (see Appendix A). For the school-level analysis, the presence of school-based law enforcement was operationalized as a binary indicator for whether a school was served by school-based law enforcement (either full-time or part-time) as well as, in specifications included in appendices, as the number of school-based law enforcement present in a given school.

Dependent Variables \(Behavioral Incidents, Reports to Law Enforcement, Arrests, and Discipline\). The key dependent variables for this analysis were number of behavioral incidents reported to the state, number of incidents reported to law enforcement, number of arrests at school, and number of exclusionary discipline responses.

The Florida Department of Education reports the number of behavioral incidents occurring in schools at the school-level as part of the annual School Environmental Safety Incident Reporting (SESIR) system. As a part of the SESIR, schools report the number of behavioral incidents overall and within a number of categories. The SESIR includes 26 different infraction types that are categorized into four levels based on severity. Level 1 offenses are the most serious and include aggravated battery, arson, homicide, kidnapping, and sexual battery. Level 2 offenses include burglary, drug sale/distribution, physical attack, robbery, sexual assault, and weapons possession. Level 3 offenses include major disruption on campus, drug use/possession, fighting, hazing, larceny/theft, sexual harassment, other sexual offenses, threat/intimidation, trespassing, vandalism, and other major offenses. Finally, Level 4 includes alcohol, bullying, harassment, and tobacco. Importantly, though organized in levels, all SESIR incidents are considered “serious”. For the purpose of this study, I estimate relationships between law enforcement presence and the overall count of incidents reported to the state as well as counts of incidents aggregated to each of the four levels.

In addition to information on the frequency of particular behavioral incidents reported to the state, the SESIR also includes counts of the number of behavioral incidents that are reported to law enforcement. Incidents are considered reported to law enforcement if an official action was taken by a school-based law enforcement or other law enforcement officer. Such official actions could include assigning a case number, filing a report, conducting an investigation, issuing a civil citation, or making an arrest. Importantly, the category of reported to law enforcement does not necessarily include incidents in which school personnel merely consulted with or notified law enforcement. As with the behavioral incidents, the behavioral incidents reported to law enforcement are also categorized by the same four level system, ranging from severe (Level 1) to less severe (Level 4) infractions. This report used both the overall number of incidents reported to law enforcement as well as the number by level (1-4) as outcomes. For district-level analysis, the number of incidents was aggregated to the district level.

As noted, incidents reported to law enforcement do not necessarily result in arrest. Consequently, the analysis also included school arrests of juveniles as a distinct outcome. District and school arrests were compiled from public data available from the Florida DJJ. The FL DJJ provides data on juvenile arrests occurring both within schools and in the community through the Delinquency in Florida’s Schools Dashboard. For the purpose of this analysis, arrests occurring outside of school, in private schools, or in non K-12 settings were removed as were any arrests that were identified as occurring in an unknown location or school. The arrest data were then aggregated to the district and school levels to provide measures of the number of juvenile arrests at public schools. Frequency of arrests were calculated both in aggregate and by student race.

The final set of dependent variables in this analysis were number of students who experienced exclusionary discipline practices. School districts report annually to the state the number of students who were subject to out-of-school suspension (OSS), in-school suspension (ISS), and a number of other disciplinary outcomes both in aggregate and by student race/ethnicity. This analysis focused on the number of students who experienced OSS and ISS, both in aggregate and disaggregated by racial/ethnic subgroup.

Control Variables

The analysis also included a number of observable covariates as control variables. Tables 1 and 2 provide descriptive statistics on each of these control variables for the district-level and school-level analyses respectively. Of this full list of control variables, individual regressions omitted certain variables in order to reduce multi-collinearity and ensure variance inflation factors of less than 10. Specifically, the district-level analysis omitted the proportion of white students, total number of schools in a district, and number of schools by level due to high levels of multi-collinearity. The school-level analysis omitted the proportion of white students. As shown, the school-level dataset, while not including all schools in the state, largely reflected the district averages.

Methods

This analysis estimated the relationship between law enforcement in schools and the beforementioned outcomes using a regression framework with controls for observable characteristics of districts and schools as well as the use of year as well as district and/or school fixed effects. The fixed effects approach allowed for adjustments for unobserved, time-invariant characteristics of districts and schools as well as temporal trends affecting all districts and schools in the state. Furthermore, by leveraging the change of state law in 2018, this analysis exploited variation induced by the Act that prompted districts and schools to expand the use of law enforcement in schools.

The estimation strategy relied on an ordinary least squares regression model with panel longitudinal data at the school district, and, in other models, school-level. The general specification took the following form:

$$\text{Equation 1. } y_{st} = \beta_0 + \beta_1 \text{LawEnforcement}_{st} + \beta_2 \theta_{st} + \beta_3 \mu_s + \beta_4 \lambda_t + e$$

Where  $y$  represents the outcome of interest (described above and modeled separately for each outcome) for district or school  $s$  at time  $t$ . LawEnforcement represents the key independent variable of interest (number of schools served by law enforcement in the district-level models and, for school-level models, whether law enforcement was present in the school).  $\theta$  represents a vector of observable district and school characteristics such as enrollment, racial composition, socio-economic status of students served, and so forth. The  $\mu$  term represents a series of academic year fixed effects. Finally,  $\lambda$  represents a set of either school district or school fixed effects that implicitly control for time-invariant characteristics of districts or schools as well as their surrounding communities. The interest in these models was in estimating  $\beta_1$  which represents the relationship between law enforcement presence in districts or schools and the outcomes of interest after accounting for other factors in the model.

While various specifications and estimation strategies were used and are reported in the sensitivity and robustness analysis section, the primary models reported in this analysis used logged versions of the outcome variable for district-level analysis and employed the use of conditional fixed effects negative binomial regression in the case of the school-level analysis. These approaches were used to address the skewed nature of the outcome variables and to address the count nature of the outcome variables. For the district-level analysis, the results can be interpreted as percentage changes in the outcome given the logged version of the outcome. Similarly, for the school-level analysis, incidence rate ratios (IRR) are reported which can similarly be interpreted in terms of percentage changes in the outcomes.

In addition to this primary model, the analysis also explored potential heterogeneous relationships – such as whether the relationship between law enforcement in schools and outcomes looks different across grade level of schools (elementary, middle, high schools) as well as whether certain outcomes varied based on student race/ethnicity. These subgroup analyses were conducted by modeling versions of Equation 1 that used variants of the dependent variables that were specific to the subgroup (such as the frequency of school arrest of Black students) or restricted observations to those in a particular subgroup (such as estimating the equation separately for elementary, middle, and high schools).

The ideal study would randomly assign law enforcement to schools, allowing for a comparison of outcomes between two groups of schools that were otherwise identical on average. However, given that such random assignment was not logistically or politically feasible, this study attempted to approximate such a comparison through the use of observable control variables, year fixed effects, and district/school fixed effects. The first of these, observable controls, allowed relationships to be adjusted for characteristics of districts and schools such as their size, the racial/ethnic composition of students served, the socio-economic makeup of students served, and the ratios of school personnel to students. Next, the year fixed effects controlled for any time trends that affected all districts/schools in the state equally. For example, if all districts/schools in the state responded to the Parkland tragedy by increasing their use of arrests or increasing their practice of reporting behavioral incidents to the state, these changes would be accounted for by the year fixed effects. Finally, the district and school fixed effects allowed relationships to be adjusted for time-invariant observable and unobservable characteristics of districts/schools, the students they serve, and their surrounding communities. For example, the fixed effects approach controlled for quality of leadership, discipline policies, school climate, curriculum and pedagogical approach as well as characteristics such as community crime to the extent that they remained constant throughout the years of data included in the study. Collectively, these analytic techniques accounted for many potential sources of bias in the estimation of the relationship between law enforcement in schools and outcomes. While they may not entirely remove the possibility of selection bias, they produced estimates that more closely approximated causal estimates of law enforcement's effects on the various outcomes.

Findings

This section details the findings of the analysis. It begins with a descriptive overview of how the presence of law enforcement in schools in Florida has changed since the 2014-15 school year. It then presents results of the regression models that predict school behavioral incidents as reported to SESIR, the number of behavioral incidents reported to law enforcement, the number of school arrests, and the frequency of school discipline. Across each, results are presented from both the district-level and school-level analyses.

Overall, the findings of the report show that the presence of law enforcement in schools in Florida are above the national average and have been increasing, particularly in elementary schools, as a result of the 2018 Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School Public Safety Act. The results suggest that this increased presence of law enforcement in schools has resulted in no decreases in reports of behavioral incidents in school and a greater number of reports of such incidents to law enforcement. Furthermore, the evidence suggests that the presence of law enforcement increases juvenile arrests at school. Finally, the results show that the presence of law enforcement in schools does not reduce the frequency of school disciplinary incidents (i.e. suspensions).

Descriptive Statistics

The Presence of Law Enforcement in Florida Schools is Increasing

Nationally, the presence of law enforcement in public schools has increased significantly over the last several decades, reflecting an increasing use of law enforcement approaches in school settings. This trend towards placing law enforcement in schools has been particularly evident in Florida. As shown in Figures 1 and 2, during the 2014-15 school year, school districts reported 1,430.31 law enforcement officers serving 2,519 schools (reflecting many law enforcement officers being shared across schools). By the 2018-19 school year, districts would report 3,638.5 law enforcement officers serving 3,235 schools. While some schools continued to share law enforcement, these figures reflect a trend toward schools, particularly elementary schools, having their own dedicated law enforcement officer and for some schools, particularly larger high schools, to have multiple law enforcement officers.

Tables 3 and 4 show levels of law enforcement coverage at the district-level and school-level respectively. As is evident, the increasing presence of law enforcement in Florida schools was driven largely by the 2018 passage of the Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School Public Safety Act (represented by the vertical red line in Figures 1 and 2), which required either law enforcement, armed private security, or armed staff in schools. The number of law enforcement reported in schools almost doubled (increased by about 97%) between the 2017-18 and 2018-19 school years, from 1,844.5 to 3,638.5. Similarly, between the same years, the number of schools with law enforcement present increased by about 40% from 2,309 schools to 3,235. The relatively larger increase in the number of law enforcement in schools relative to the number of schools with law enforcement reflects the tendency for elementary schools to move from shared law enforcement to a dedicated officer as well as the trend toward larger schools housing multiple law enforcement officers.

With a few exceptions, the increased presence of law enforcement as a result of the 2018 Act was generally experienced across all districts in the state. Figure 3 shows the number of school-based law enforcement per 1,000 students enrolled by district as well as the change in the number per 1,000 students between the 2017-18 and 2018-19 school years.

Figure 3. Change in ratio of law enforcement in schools per 1,000 students from 2017-18 to 2018-19 school years

Source: School district reports to state Safe Schools Appropriation Expenditure Reports

As is clear from the figure, most districts experienced substantial increases in law enforcement presence. There were eleven districts that decreased the ratio, with only three of these representing substantially sized decreases. It is also worth noting that some districts reported potentially suspect numbers of school-based law enforcement to the state. For example, Santa Rosa County reported substantially more school-based law enforcement than schools, particularly at the elementary school level. In some other cases, such as Duval County, there is evidence that the numbers reported as school-based law enforcement may include individuals acting as school safety assistants – armed individuals trained by the Sheriff’s Office who wear uniforms but lack full arrest powers. For the purpose of the district-level analysis presented here, the data was used as reported by districts; however, the school-level analysis provides more precise identification of sworn law enforcement’s presence.

Elementary Schools Experienced the Largest Increase in Law Enforcement Presence

The overall upward trend in the presence of law enforcement in Florida schools hides the fact that this increase has been disproportionately felt by the state’s youngest learners. When disaggregating the presence of law enforcement by school level (elementary, middle, or high), it is clear that the increased presence of law enforcement driven by the 2018 Act has been almost exclusively driven by increases in law enforcement in elementary school settings.

Figure 5. Number of school law enforcement in state of FL from 2014-15 to 2018-19 school years by school level

As shown in Figures 4 and 5, the largest increases in law enforcement presence have occurred in elementary schools. During the 2014-15 school year, there were 272.75 law enforcement officers in elementary schools in the state of Florida. By the 2018-19 school year, there would be 1,830 law enforcement officers in elementary schools. Between the 2017-18 and 2018-19 school years, the number of law enforcement in elementary schools would increase by almost 221% or more than triple. Similarly, the number of elementary schools with law enforcement present would increase from 1,164 in 2014-15 to 1,754 in 2018-19. From 2017-18 to 2018-19, the number of elementary schools with law enforcement would increase by 56%. These trends reflect elementary schools in the state without law enforcement adding them and many elementary schools that had previously shared a law enforcement officer with another school moving to have full-time law enforcement coverage.

As will be shown next, these increases in the presence of law enforcement in schools largely trended in the same direction as reports of behavioral incidents, reports of behavioral incidents to law enforcement, school arrests, and student discipline during this time period.

Behavioral Incidents Reported to the State, Reports to Law Enforcement, School Arrests, and Exclusionary Discipline Increased following the 2018 Act

The goal of the 2018 Act was to increase the safety of schools, both to prevent acts of mass school violence such as the tragedy at Parkland but also to generally improve the overall safety of schools. Descriptively, however, data show that trends in reported behavioral incidents, reports to law enforcement, school arrests, and use of exclusionary discipline tended to increase rather than decrease following the Act's 2018 passage. This section describes trends in these outcomes before turning to analyses that explore whether these trends are linked to the presence of law enforcement in schools.

The number of behavioral incidents reported by school districts to SESIR, the state reporting mechanism, increased dramatically from the 2017-18 to 2018-19 school years. As shown in Figure 6, the number of reported behavioral incidents went from 71,159 in 2017-18 to 84,649 in 2018-19, an almost 19% increase in reported incidents. In raw numbers, this reflects an additional 13,490 behavioral incidents reported in Florida schools.

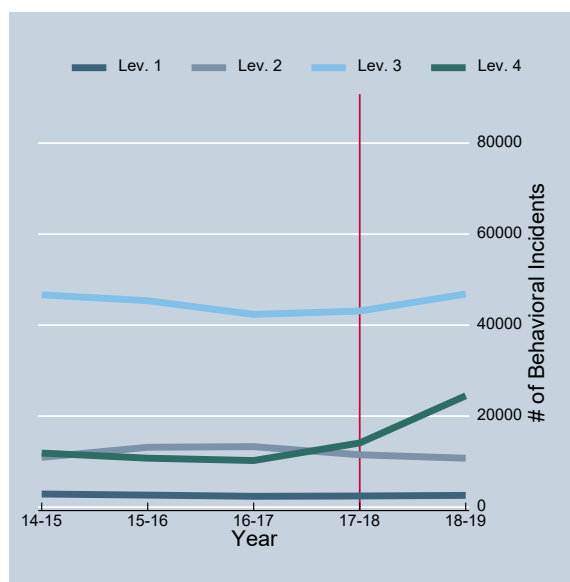

Figure 7. Number of reported behavioral incidents in state of FL from 2014-15 to 2018-19 school years by school level

The descriptive statistics suggest that this increase in reported behavioral incidents was largely driven by lower level incidents, categorized by the state as Level 3 and Level 4 incidents. As shown in Figure 7, the largest increase was seen in level 4 incidents, which increased by about 74% between 2017-18 and 2018-19. Within levels, however, the increases in reported behavioral incidents were driven by a handful of specific incident types. Specifically, there were meaningful increases in the district averages in the prevalence of bullying, threats/intimidation, drug related incidents, and tobacco related incidents (see Tables 5 and 6). Notably, in 2018-19, districts on average reported about 267 tobacco related incidents, more than doubling the previous year's average of 123. On a positive note, there were several incident types that showed notable decreases including physical attacks which decreased from a 2017-18 district average of 137 incidents to about 125 incidents in 2018-19.

These trends in reported behavioral incidents were largely mirrored by the trends in behavioral incidents reported to law enforcement. Figure 8 shows the number of behavioral incidents reported to law enforcement by year and Figure 9 shows these disaggregated by level. While only about a third of behavioral incidents reported to the state are reported to law enforcement in any given year, there was nevertheless a notable increase in the number of incidents reported to law enforcement following the 2018 Act. As shown, in 2017-18, there were 23,404 behavioral incidents reported to law enforcement. In the 2018-19 school year, school districts would report 29,275, an approximately 25% increase in the number of behavioral incidents reported to law enforcement. Notably, this percentage change in the number of incidents reported to law enforcement almost exactly matches the percentage change in the number of behavioral incidents reported to the state. In other words, the proportion of behavioral incidents reported to law enforcement appears relatively constant over time, despite increases in both reported behavioral incidents and their reporting to law enforcement.

Tables 7 and 8 show district-level and school-level averages of incidents reported to law enforcement. As with the incidents themselves, the increase in incidents reported to law enforcement was largely driven by increases in lower level offenses (Level 3 and 4). In particular, the number of Level 3 offenses increased by 21% between 2017-18 and 2018-19 while the number of Level 4 offenses increased by 73%. This means that schools were reporting significantly more Level 3 and 4 offenses to law enforcement following than 2018 Act than before. Specific increases were seen in the reporting of incidents of drug use/possession (district average of 120.19 in 2018-19 compared to 85.64 in 2017-18), tobacco-nicotine (district average of 52.70 in 2018-19 compared to 23.27 in 2017-18), threats/intimidation (district average of 38.54 in 2018-19 compared to 29.04 in 2017-18), and physical attacks (district average of 20.75 in 2018-19 and 12.70 in 2017-18). The last of these was particularly interesting given that the number of physical attacks reported to the state actually decreased between these two school years, suggesting that more of these incidents may be reported to law enforcement even though fewer are occurring.

With more reported behavioral incidents and more reported to law enforcement, it is perhaps little surprise that there were more arrests at school in 2018-19 than in the year prior (see Tables 9 and 10 for district-level and school-level averages, respectively). The frequency of school arrests had actually been decreasing steadily from 2014-15 to 2016-17 (see Figure 10); however, the trend began turning positive through the 2017-18 and 2018-19 school years. While still below the number in 2014-15, there were nearly 8,000 arrests in Florida public schools during the 2018-19 school year. These increases were driven by a leveling out of the number of misdemeanor arrests and an increase in the number of felony arrests in the 2018-19 school year.

Source: Florida DJJ

Interestingly, this recent uptick in school arrests has been largely due to increases in the number of white students being arrested at school (Figure 11). As shown, the number of white students arrested at school increased to 2,863 students in 2018-19 from only 2,393 the year before, an almost 20% increase. The number of arrests of Hispanic students also increased between 2017-18 and 2018-19, growing by about 24%. This contrasts with the number of arrests of Black students which has shown a steady decline over the time period examined. It is important to note, however, that Black students still remain grossly over-represented in school arrests. This is clear given that the number of Black students arrested remains much higher than white students, despite there being fewer Black students enrolled in Florida public schools. In other words, there is clear evidence that racial disparities in school arrests persist in Florida.

Finally, along with increases in school arrests, there were concurrent increases between 2017-18 and 2018-19 in the use of exclusionary discipline practices following several years of declines (see Tables 11 and 12). Figures 12 and 13 show the number of OSS and ISS reported by school districts, both in total and disaggregated by student race/ethnicity. As shown, ISS is slightly more common than OSS, but, combined there were over 343,000 suspensions during the 2018-19 school year. While Black and Hispanic students are over-represented in both OSS and ISS relative to their proportion of students in the state, the trends in suspensions across race/ethnicity were generally consistent over the time period examined.

Among other changes in school discipline rates, state data also revealed a significant increase in the number of districts reporting the use of physical restraint on students. Figure 14 shows the number of physical restraints per year. As shown, reports of physical restraints in 2018-19 were over four times as large as those in the prior school year. While it is unclear what accounts for this substantial increase in the reporting of the use of physical restraint, the trend is particularly concerning. It is possible that this increase merely reflects a change in reporting practices among school districts. The next section explores whether these descriptive trends in reported behaviors, reporting to law enforcement, arrests, and discipline are linked to the presence of law enforcement or reflect other, unrelated trends.

Law Enforcement Presence and Student Outcomes

From the descriptive statistics, it is clear that the increasing presence of law enforcement in schools has been correlated with an increased frequency of a number of undesirable student outcomes including increased reports of behavioral incidents, increased number of incidents reported to law enforcement, increased school arrests, and increased use of exclusionary discipline. An important question, however, is whether these relationships are driven by the presence of law enforcement in schools or by other factors. In other words, are law enforcement in schools causing increases in these outcomes?

Results of the regression analyses with observable controls and fixed effects provide more evidence to answer this question. As described previously, the analytic technique accounts for differences in school contexts that are observable, for time trends that affect all districts/schools in the state, and for fixed characteristics of districts/schools over time. The results presented in this section, then, more closely approximate the effect of law enforcement on each of the outcomes. I begin by discussing the relationship between law enforcement and reported behavioral incidents in schools and then present results for behavioral incidents reported to law enforcement, school arrests, and student discipline. For each outcome, results are presented both from the district-level analysis, which covers all districts in the state, and for the school-level sample, which covers schools in approximately 84% of districts in the state. As will be shown, results are generally consistent between both. Finally, this section concludes with a description of a set of sensitivity and robustness checks.

Law Enforcement Presence and Reported Behavioral Incidents in Schools

The presence of law enforcement in schools was generally predictive of a greater number of reports of behavioral incidents in schools. At the district-level, the number of schools served by law enforcement was a statistically significant predictor of the number of reported behavioral incidents, both in models without district fixed effects and with their inclusion. As shown in columns 1 and 2 of Panel A of Table 13, each additional school in a district served by a law enforcement officer predicted a .14 to .33 percent increase in the number of reported behavioral incidents in the district. Though this is less than a percentage point, this translates to approximately 1.5 to 3.6 more reported incidents for the average size district for each additional school with an officer present. Furthermore, it suggests that, if the average size district in the state had no schools with officers as compared to all schools with officers, there would be approximately 85 to 200 fewer behavioral incidents reported per year in that district.

At the school-level, results were generally similar, though the positive relationship between law enforcement and reported behavioral incidents became insignificant when school fixed effects were included. As shown in columns 1-2 of Panel B of Table 13, the presence of an officer predicted a 38.5% greater number of reported incidents in models with district fixed effects. In models with school fixed effects, however, the IRR was reduced to 1.024 and was statistically insignificant. This could be a function of the school fixed effect better accounting for underlying characteristics of the schools, or, it may also reflect the fact that the school fixed effects models were driven largely by variation at the elementary school level, given that there were far more elementary schools that went from not having an officer to having an officer than was the case for middle or high schools. Indeed, as shown in Figure 15, the relationship between law enforcement and reported behavioral incidents was largest in middle and high schools, suggesting that the lack of significance in the school fixed effects model may be a function of much of the within-school variation coming from elementary settings.

The increase in reported behavioral incidents as a result of law enforcement in schools appeared to be driven primarily by Level 2 offenses (see columns 3-10 of Table 13). As shown, the relationship between law enforcement and reported behavioral incidents was statistically significant and positive in both the district-level analysis and school-level analysis and across models with varying fixed effects for Level 2 offenses. In contrast, offenses at other levels were not consistently statistically significant, particularly in the fully specified models. The results are clear that the presence of law enforcement in schools was not systematically related to decreases in behavioral incidents and may result in more reports of such incidents, suggesting that schools were not made safer by the presence of law enforcement.

Law Enforcement Presence and Reports to Law Enforcement

In addition to potentially increasing the number of reported behavioral incidents in schools, the presence of law enforcement positively predicted the number of behavioral incidents that were reported to law enforcement by schools. At the district-level, each additional school with an officer present positively predicted a statistically significant increase in the number of behavioral incidents reported to law enforcement (see columns 1-2 of Panel A of Table 14). The coefficients ranged from 0.0011 in the model with district fixed effects to 0.00312 in the model without district fixed effects, which, relative to the average number of incidents reported, translates to an approximately 0.41 to 1.17 additional incidents reported to law enforcement by a district per year for each additional officer. This suggests that if the average size district in the state had no schools with officers as compared to all schools with officers, there would be between 6-17% fewer incidents reported to law enforcement or between 23 to 65 fewer incidents reported annually by such a district.

Similarly, at the school-level, the presence of a law enforcement officer in a school was a significant predictor of reports of behavioral incidents to law enforcement. As shown in columns 1-2 of Panel B of Table 14, having an officer in a school was related to a higher number of behavioral incidents reported to law enforcement, both in models with district fixed effects and school fixed effects. This positive relationship ranged from a 25.7% increase in incidents in the school fixed effect model to a 64.8% increase in the district fixed effects model which, based on the average number of incidents reported by a school, would equate to 2.12 to 5.35 additional incidents reported to law enforcement per year per school. While this positive relationship was generally significant across grade levels, the relationship was particularly pronounced at the middle school level (see Figure 16). This is consistent with prior research that has found that school disciplinary rates and effects of SROs can be more pronounced for middle schoolers.

Across both district and school-level analyses, the results suggest that the effects of law enforcement in schools on reports of behavioral incidents to law enforcement may be most pronounced among lower level offenses. As shown in columns 3-10 of Table 14 and in Figure 17, the relationship between law enforcement in schools and number of incidents reported to law enforcement tended to be highest for Level 4 offenses (the least serious) and lowest for Level 1 offenses (the most serious offenses). This suggests that the presence of law enforcement may be resulting in more frequent reporting of offenses that may otherwise have been handled by school staff without involving law enforcement.

Law Enforcement Presence and School Arrests

Given that law enforcement presence in schools appeared to result in more behavioral incidents being reported to law enforcement, it was also important to examine whether more students were arrested at school as a result. As shown in Table 15, results of models predicting the number of arrests of juveniles at public schools demonstrate that the presence of law enforcement in schools likely increased arrests of students. In the district-level analysis (Panel A of Table 15), the relationship between law enforcement presence and school arrests was consistently positive, though often statistically insignificant. The lack of consistent significance in the district-level models, however, may have been a function of the relatively smaller sample size and lack of ability to link arrests occurring in particular schools with the placement of law enforcement in those schools. Results from the school-level analysis (Panel B of Table 15) show that, with the additional precision afforded in the school-level dataset, these positive relationships held and were statistically significant, both in district and school fixed effects models. As shown, the presence of law enforcement in schools predicted 40 to 82% more arrests, on average. Relative to the average number of arrests (2.55), this suggests that the presence of a law enforcement officer in a school resulted in approximately 1-2 more arrests per school per year. Across the average sized district, the difference in arrests if the district had no law enforcement relative to having law enforcement in all schools would therefore equate to about 55 to 110 fewer arrests per year.

Interestingly, while a positive relationship with arrests was seen across racial/ethnic groups, the impact was most consistent for white students, rather than Black or Hispanic students. As shown, in the district-level analysis, only the coefficient on white students reached statistical significance at the  $p < .05$  level. Similarly, at the school-level, the impact on arrests was statistically significant for white students in both the district fixed effects and school fixed effects models, while, for Black and Hispanic students, the result, though still positive in direction, was statistically insignificant when the school fixed effects were included. Importantly, statistical tests of the difference in the coefficients for white student arrests were no different than those for Black or Hispanic students, suggesting that the impact of law enforcement is not necessarily larger for white students, despite being more consistently statistically significant. While prior research would have suggested larger impacts on racial/ethnic minority students, this finding was consistent with descriptive trends in the state which show increases in school-based arrests of white students between 2017-18 and 2018-19 without a similar increase for Black students. It is also important to note that the rate of school arrests remains higher for Black and Hispanic students, indicating that despite school-based law enforcement increasing arrests of white students, Black and Hispanic students remain disproportionately likely to experience an arrest at school relative to their white peers.

The relationship between law enforcement presence and school arrests was generally consistent across grade levels. As shown in Figure 18, the IRR was similar across elementary, middle, and high schools, suggesting that the presence of a law enforcement officer increases the probability of arrest fairly equally across grade levels. Importantly, however, each of these increases was relative to different base line rates of arrest. Given that elementary schools had far fewer school arrests than middle or high schools, the increase in the number of arrests as a result of school-based law enforcement was still more pronounced at higher grade levels.

Finally, an exploratory analysis was conducted examining the relationship between law enforcement presence and school arrests by offense type. Versions of the primary equation were estimated using arrests by offense type as the outcome. In the district-level analysis with district fixed effects, there were positive and at least marginally ( $p < 0.10$ ) significant relationships with assault/battery, burglary, disorderly conduct, and petit/larceny. At the school-level with district fixed effects, a number of offense types were statistically significant (significant ones are shown in Figure 19). When the school fixed effects were added to the school-level analysis, assault/battery and weapons arrests remained positive and statistically significant while felony drug arrests was marginally significant.

Law Enforcement Presence and Exclusionary Discipline

While law enforcement in schools would be expected to increase the likelihood of reports to law enforcement and arrests, prior research also suggests that their presence may contribute to a greater use of exclusionary discipline practices like suspension. Table 16 presents results of models predicting the use of OSS and ISS from indicators of law enforcement in schools as well as OSS broken out by race. As shown, there were few significant relationships in the district-level analysis and, while estimates were positive and significant in the school-level analysis with district fixed effects, these relationships were not robust to the inclusion of the school fixed effects. As a whole, then, these results suggest that, in the Florida context, the presence of law enforcement in schools were not necessarily resulting in increases in the use of exclusionary discipline.

Sensitivity and Robustness Checks

As discussed previously, for the district-level analysis, the primary analytic approach was to model the logged version of outcomes using an ordinary least squares regression framework with weights for district enrollment to account for differing sizes of districts. This approach was used to account for the skewed distribution of the outcome variables and was suitable given that few districts reported values of zero for the outcome (which would result in an unidentified value when log transformed and therefore drop from the analysis). In contrast, at the school-level, there were many schools that reported no incidents. Consequently, the primary school-level analyses were reported using conditional fixed effects negative binomial regression, an approach suitable for count outcome data that retains observations with values of zero.

In addition to these primary analytic approaches, a series of sensitivity checks were conducted to explore the robustness of the findings to alternative estimation approaches. In particular, versions of the primary equations were estimated that used ordinary least squares regression, used untransformed outcome variables, included or omitted weighting for enrollment, and used Poisson regression (another method appropriate for estimating count outcomes). Additionally, models were estimated that used the number of law enforcement in a district or in a school as the independent variable rather than the number of schools served or the binary indicator of whether a school had law enforcement. The results of these sensitivity analyses are presented in tables in Appendix B. Across these tables, the primary model is shown in the top row and other specifications are shown below. For ease of comparison, statistically significant positive relationships are highlighted in blue and statistically significant negative relationships are highlighted in orange. Statistically insignificant findings have a white background. While the coefficients were expected to be different in size across some models given the different estimation strategies, the sensitivity checks generally show that the primary results are robust to a number of specification choices.

Limitations

While this report provides the most comprehensive analysis of law enforcement in Florida schools to date, it is important to note several limitations. First, results of this study are limited to reports of law enforcement and outcomes by school districts. As noted earlier, there is some indication that school districts may report school safety assistants and other personnel as law enforcement to the state. While these individuals are not technically sworn law enforcement and generally lack arrest power, they are trained by a Sheriff's department, typically wear uniforms, and are armed. Consequently, it is likely that many students perceive and experience them in ways similar to sworn law enforcement.

Next, this analysis was unable to identify alternative forms of security in schools such as armed school staff, unarmed security guards, or other private security. Given the 2018 Act, any school without law enforcement in 2018-19 was required to have either an armed staff member or other armed security personnel. Consequently, the results of this analysis should be interpreted as comparing the use of law enforcement in schools to a mix of other alternatives that, depending on the year, may include no security personnel, unarmed security personnel, or armed non-law enforcement personnel. It is expected, however, that the impact of such comparisons to other security personnel would diminish relationships estimated in this analysis, meaning that the true impacts of law enforcement on student outcomes may be larger than those reported here.

Finally, it is worth noting that this study cannot definitively eliminate all sources of selection bias. While the research design accounts for a large number of potential confounding variables, it is nevertheless possible that districts/schools with and without law enforcement varied in unobservable ways that contributed to the observed relationships. That said, the analytic approach used here accounted for a robust set of differences in schools including observable characteristics of the students served, general time trends in the state as a whole, and time-invariant characteristics of the district/schools such as general crime or safety of areas that schools serve. As a result, this analysis provides a very rigorous estimate of law enforcement's relationship with student outcomes.

Conclusion

In the months following the killing of George Floyd by law enforcement, school districts and local governments across the country have reconsidered the role of law enforcement in their schools, with several large districts choosing to remove law enforcement. These discussions and actions are in distinct contrast to what had previously been a decades long trend toward increasing the number of schools across the nation that have law enforcement present (Correa & Diliberti, 2020; Musu-Gillette et al., 2018). This research report contributes to these ongoing policy discussions over whether law enforcement should be placed in schools.

The findings of this report suggest that, in Florida, the presence of law enforcement in schools is linked to a number of undesirable outcomes for students and schools. Despite being placed in schools largely to improve safety, the results of this analysis suggest that school-based law enforcement have not reduced the frequency of behavioral incidents occurring in schools. In fact, their presence appears to result in more behavioral incidents being reported to the state tracking system.

What is more, the results of this analysis suggest that law enforcement in schools results in greater exposure of students to law enforcement responses. The results consistently showed that, when law enforcement are in schools, a greater number of behavioral incidents are reported to law enforcement. Alarming, there is evidence that law enforcement in schools increases the frequency of lower level incidents being reported to law enforcement.

The results also suggests that this increased reporting of incidents to law enforcement leads to more students experiencing arrest at school. Results of the school-level analysis consistently showed that the presence of law enforcement in schools was related to a greater number of juvenile arrests in public schools. While district-level results were statistically insignificant, they nevertheless followed the same trend. In contrast to what might be suggested by prior research, the potential impact on school arrests appeared to be most consistent for white students, though Black students continue to be disproportionately over-represented among school arrests overall.

Finally, this report found little evidence that the presence of law enforcement in schools decreased the frequency with which schools reported using exclusionary discipline practices like OSS and ISS. This finding is consistent with there being little impact of school-based law enforcement on student safety, as it suggests that the frequency of incidents resulting in a serious disciplinary response was not decreased.

The findings of this analysis fit within a mixed set of prior evidence on the impacts of school-based law enforcement on school safety and rather consistent prior evidence that law enforcement increases students' exposure to arrest and exclusionary discipline. Some prior work has found that the presence of law enforcement in schools decreases school crime. For example, using national data, Owens found that principals reported 1-2% fewer disruptive criminal incidents at school when the county they were located in had received a federal grant to support the hiring of school-based law enforcement (2016). Similarly, prior studies have found that the presence of law enforcement in schools is related to higher perceptions of safety among students (Raymond, 2010). That said, other prior work has found that law enforcement do not increase school safety. In a national study of schools, Na & Gottfredson found that schools with law enforcement report more crimes involving weapons and drugs than those without (2013). Other emerging work suggests that, law enforcement in schools may increase students' sense of risk, heightening their perceived need of law enforcement to protect them from objectively unlikely to occur threats (Curran, Fisher, Viano, & Kupchik, 2020).

Even for the most serious of incidents, such as mass shootings, the prior evidence suggests the presence of law enforcement does little to prevent or limit the damage done during such an event. For example, a study of all school shootings that have occurred since the Columbine tragedy found that the presence of law enforcement at a school did not predict lower casualties (Livingston, Rosshem, & Hall, 2019). It is worth noting that many of the mass casualty school shootings, including those at Parkland and Columbine, occurred with law enforcement present on campus.

While prior work is somewhat mixed on the impact of school-based law enforcement on safety, prior work is clear that law enforcement in schools increases students' likelihood of interfacing with and experiencing a law enforcement response like arrest. Prior work has shown that law enforcement in schools result in a greater proportion of incidents being reported to law enforcement and in increases in arrests of students (Owens, 2016). This results in what many have termed the "school-to-prison" pipeline.

The findings of this study demonstrate a potentially similar phenomenon in which students are exposed to a higher level of surveillance by law enforcement. By placing law enforcement in schools, student behavior that would have otherwise occurred and been handled by school personnel is more likely to come to the attention of law enforcement. It is likely then that the increases in behavioral incidents reported to the state and those reported to law enforcement observed in this study are a product not of increased misconduct by students but of increased involvement of law enforcement in the response to such misconduct. Such law enforcement involvement, as seen in this study, potentially increases students' risk of arrest at school and involvement in the juvenile justice system.

Finally, while law enforcement presence in schools was not systematically related to increases in exclusionary discipline, it also did not appear to decrease school's use of exclusionary discipline. Prior research has often found law enforcement presence increases exclusionary discipline (Fisher & Hennessy, 2016; Kupchik, 2010). For example, prior studies have found that schools in Texas that received federal grants to support additional law enforcement in schools resulted in greater rates of school discipline, as much as a 6% increase among middle schoolers, and that these impacts were driven by increases in discipline for lower level offenses and among Black students (Weisburst, 2019). Qualitative work has shown that these increases may be driven by the ways that law enforcement take part in disciplinary activities such as reporting misconduct to school personnel and assisting with interrogations of misbehaving students as well as the ways that school-based law enforcement may contribute to shifts in school climate more broadly that result in a more punitive environment (Curran, Fisher, Viano, & Kupchik, 2019; Kupchik, 2010). Though there are some exceptions to the finding that law enforcement in schools increase exclusionary discipline, including one that uses a similar approach to this analysis with longitudinal school-level data (Na & Gottfredson, 2013), a meta-analytic review has confirmed that, on balance, most studies show that school-based law enforcement are related to higher rates of exclusionary discipline (Fisher & Hennessy, 2016).

Coupled with such prior research, the findings of this study suggest that schools should carefully consider their use of law enforcement in schools, both whether law enforcement should be present in schools at all and, if they are, the roles and interactions that law enforcement engage in with students. While many districts nationwide are considering removing law enforcement from schools, the decision in Florida is complicated by the restrictions of the 2018 Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School Public Safety Act which requires schools to have armed personnel. While schools in other states can decide to not have law enforcement or any armed personnel present, Florida schools that opt not to use school-based law enforcement are then required to either arm school personnel (such as teachers) or hire private armed security. Unfortunately, neither of these alternative solutions are evidence-based and each raises its own set of concerns around student safety and well-being. Consequently, there is a need for the state law to be revisited to return flexibility to local districts to determine whether law enforcement or armed personnel should be in schools. In the meantime, if schools determine that the use of law enforcement is preferable to the alternatives, they should actively take steps to reduce the potentially negative impacts of school-based law enforcement on student outcomes. To this end, the following policy recommendations are offered:

1. School districts should reconsider whether law enforcement should be present in schools, keeping in mind that state law limits alternatives.
2. The state requirement to have armed personnel in schools should be revisited with an eye toward returning control to local school districts and schools to determine how best to ensure a safe learning environment.
3. School districts and law enforcement agencies should adopt clear policies that restrict the ability to arrest to a limited set of serious infractions and prohibit arrest of young students.
4. If present, law enforcement in schools should be trained in age-appropriate conflict resolution, in ways to reduce implicit bias and disproportionate minority contact, and in alternatives to the use of force or arrest.

At the end of the day, all students deserve a safe, supportive, and equitable learning environment. The results of this analysis suggest that the use of law enforcement in schools may be compromising student well-being without increasing the safety of schools. It is important, therefore, for policymakers and educators to actively seek solutions to ensure students are safe from unnecessary exposure to law enforcement and arrest.

Sample sizes vary due to some districts with zero disciplinary incidents for outcome which is undefined when log transformed and some schools with all zero outcomes over time. Results in Panel A are from OLS regression with log transformed outcome, and results in Panel B are incidence rate ratios from conditional fixed effect negative binomial regressions. ** p<0.01, * p<0.05, + p<0.1

House and Senate File Legislation Proposed by Gov. Ron DeSantis to Protect Peaceful Protests, Combat Violent Disorder

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (Jan. 6, 2021) -- In response to the violent mobs in Washington, D.C., the Florida House of Representatives and Senate filed identical bills to combat violence, disorder and looting in Florida. Statements from Governor Ron DeSantis, House Speaker Chris Sprowls, Senate President Wilton Simpson, Representative Juan Fernandez-Barquin, sponsor of House Bill 1, and Senator Danny Burgess, sponsor of Senate Bill 484, are below.

Florida Governor Ron DeSantis

“While as Americans we all have a right to peacefully assemble, violence or rioting of any kind is not acceptable and will not be tolerated in the state of Florida. In 2020, I proposed legislation to stop violent assemblies, combat rioting and protect law enforcement. In light of today’s events at our United States Capitol, we have no time to waste to uphold public safety. I look forward to working with House Speaker Sprowls and Senate President Simpson to swiftly pass this bill during the upcoming Legislative Session so that we may protect the rule of law in our great state.”

House Speaker Chris Sprowls (R-Palm Harbor)

“In a democracy, rioting, violence and lawlessness are repugnant and unacceptable. This isn’t a peaceful protest. It’s an act of domestic terrorism. It’s a tragic, cowardly and un-American spectacle. Together we are taking immediate action in Florida by filing the Combating Violence, Disorder and Looting and Law Enforcement Protection Act. The House will work together with Governor DeSantis and the Senate to protect Floridians from this kind of nonsensical violence. And when these types of despicable acts happen, law enforcement and prosecutors will have the tools and the support they need to keep Floridians safe, communities whole and property undamaged.”

Senate President Wilton Simpson (R-Trilby)

“Our constitutional right to protest has played a critical role in the great history of our democracy. I fully respect the right of every American to peacefully protest; however, there is absolutely no excuse for attacking law enforcement and destroying property. Over the last few months, Governor DeSantis has discussed strengthening our state laws to increase penalties for bad actors who turn otherwise peaceful and constitutional protests into violent attacks on law enforcement officers. I am proud to support our Governor and join with our House colleagues to make it clear that peaceful protests are welcome, but violent, destructive mobs will not be tolerated in Florida.”

State Representative Juan Fernandez-Barquin (R-Miami-Dade)

“What I witnessed today in Washington was disgusting, and I repudiate the violence and destruction that took place there. Today I filed legislation in the Florida House to make sure it doesn’t happen here in Florida. It is never acceptable for a civil society to behave in this way, and this bill will ensure that it is unwelcome in Florida. It does not matter if you are Republican or Democrat, we are a society of laws, and all must follow the law.”

State Senator Danny Burgess (R-Zephyrhills)

“We are a nation of law and order, not violence, destruction and unrest. We respect the right to peacefully protest, but the shameful conduct we witnessed at the United States Capitol today and episodes of violent civil unrest that we have witnessed over the last several months have no place in our democracy. This legislation makes it clear that here in Florida criminals who seek to thwart peaceful protests by willfully inciting violence, attacking law enforcement and destroying public or private property will be held accountable.”

ICYMI: Florida Speaker Sprowls Targets Mob Violence with New Bill: 'You Will Go to Prison'

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (January 8, 2021) — Today, Florida Speaker of the House Chris Sprowls (R-Palm Harbor), a former state prosecutor, joined America's Newsroom on Fox News Channel to highlight HB 1, the first-in-the-nation bill that targets rioting and mob violence statewide in Florida.

Sprowls said, “We do not care about which viewpoint is being expressed. This is a nation of laws governed by the Constitution and in the state of Florida our message is very very clear: that kind of conduct, that kind of activity will not be tolerated, and you will go to prison.” (LINK)

HB 1 was filed in the House by Representatives by Representative Juan Fernandez-Barquin (R-Miami-Dade) on Wednesday night in timely response to the violent protests in Washington, D.C., and across the nation last summer.

Subject: PLEASE correct/update Exec Order 2020-180 to stop excluding homeowners decimated by loss of vacation rental income

Hello Governor and Anyone willing to help,

Executive order 2020-87 and all subsequent orders that essentially eliminated the vast majority of income for vacation rental owners for the season is about to land thousands, including my family, on the streets. Our home is a duplex... our primary residence is one half of a duplex; the other side is an Airbnb Vacation Rental.

Executive Order 2020-180 does not protect us from the imminent foreclosure. I know of dozens of people in this same situation because this order only protected single family residences, not primary residences. Statewide, thousands upon thousands of owner-occupied vacation home owners are in the process of losing their homes, their Florida dreams because of the excruciating loss of income and because Executive Order 180 excluded multi-family property owners from protection.

I prat this was an oversight.

PLEASE UPDATE EXECUTIVE ORDER 2020-180 by simply replacing "single family" homeowners to: "Primary Residence"...
-----or-----
just add "and Owner-Occupied multi-family" homes.

I fully understand the intention to limit the scope of the mortgage and eviction moratorium to weed out those taking advantage of the coronavirus situation, but literally thousands of owner-occupied multi-family homeowners who rely on vacation rental income to pay the mortgage, taxes, insurance, etc. are currently unprotected from the loss of income that is 100% the result of banning vacation rentals and the subsequent orders.

PLEASE UPDATE EXECUTIVE ORDER 2020-180 by simply replacing "single family" homeowners to: "Primary Residence"...
-----or-----
just add "and Owner-Occupied multi-family" homes.

Thank you.

Subject: SB 54 - Motor Vehicle Insurance

Dear Senator Burgess,

I wanted to circle back with you to discuss SB 54 – Motor Vehicle Insurance. We have discussed this legislation in the past and some of the concerns that the Florida Orthopaedic Society has with eliminating PIP without providing patients with clarity over what insurance coverage will cover any harm they may do to themselves and unambiguous language that will make it clear that health insurance will become the primary payer of care rendered in the event of an automobile accident.

Our specific concerns with the current bill are as follows:

1. We understand the argument that for drivers that have both health insurance and PIP, they are carrying duplicative coverage. But we also understand there are a significant number of Floridians that are uninsured because their employers do not offer them coverage and they are priced out of the health insurance market. The massive loss of jobs due to COVID has made this situation even worse. For those uninsured, the Florida no-fault coverage is their only health insurance coverage. Though the bill has a mandatory “offering” of med pay, we would encourage mandatory election of such coverage for those drivers that cannot provide proof of health insurance coverage when purchasing their auto policy. This would create a small risk pool of uninsured patients that are required to pay into Med Pay Coverage which should have a positive impact on rates with more people paying into that pool, rather than just relying on those that voluntarily choose to purchase the additional med pay. We support a strict definition of what is covered in that mandatory Med Pay coverage to be limited to only Emergency Care as defined in the Statutes. We strongly believe there will be a significant impact on emergency physicians and uninsured Floridians if there is no mandated coverage to pay for emergency care if the motorist cannot provide prove of health insurance.
2. It is current practice for health insurance carriers to deny claims that are related to automobile accidents. That is why our members routinely have to ask if an injury the patient has sustained is related to an auto accident or workers compensation. When other insurance products may be responsible, the health insurance carriers currently deny the claim. We would strongly encourage you to include clear language that establishes that health insurance is the primary payer for auto injuries and provides a process for coordination of benefits after the fact with an Auto Insurance Carrier that is ultimately found responsible for the claim. This will ensure timely access to care and treatment for injured motorists and a process for the health insurance carrier to be made whole for the payment of any treatment that was the responsibility of the auto carrier.
3. Finally, with more patients needing to utilize their health insurance to receive treatment for auto accidents in emergency rooms and outside of their usual primary care and specialist networks, physicians and insurance carriers will need a venue to address any out-of-network payment disputes that will arise. It would help to make it clear that any payment dispute between the health insurer, auto carrier, and physician, the appropriate venue for resolution is the Provider and Health Plan Dispute Resolution Program currently in statute and housed at AHCA. That dispute resolution process was last reviewed when the state addressed Surprise Medical Billing. We believe the need to use that process will increase as health insurance becomes primary for more auto related care. We do need to fix that Dispute Resolution Process to include mandatory participation from the insurance carriers as well as currently their participation is optional and we have seen many refuse to participate.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to provide these three concerns that we have with the current legislative proposal. We hope to work with you on your legislation as it moves through the process so we achieve clarity for all stakeholders and make sure patients are able to access care in a timely manner.

Sincerely,

SENATOR DEBBIE MAYFIELD
MAJORITY LEADER

Senate Bill 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance
by Senator Danny Burgess

Repealing PIP, requiring BI coverage, and creating a new framework for bad faith actions

Talking Points:

- Senate Bill 54 transforms ineffective and outdated insurance practices to result in a more stable insurance market and better outcomes for all insured Floridians.
- Florida is one of only two states that does not currently require drivers to carry liability coverage that immediately kicks in if they cause bodily injury or death.
- This legislation repeals Florida's No-Fault Law and instead enacts a bodily injury liability system, providing fairness to insured drivers and placing liability on the at-fault party in an accident.
- No-Fault Law, which requires Personal Injury Protection (PIP), has failed to substantially reduce litigation.
- PIP is far too expensive in relation to the lack of benefits and overall protection that it provides customers. The repeal of PIP will allow Floridians to receive better coverage.
- Enacting Senate Bill 54 will ~~deliver-ensure~~ more ~~sufficient-significant~~ bodily injury ~~liability~~ coverage for Floridians and require insurance companies to offer first party medical coverage (MedPay) of $5,000 or $10,000 to all drivers.
- Senate Bill 54 also reforms bad faith actions in order to reduce litigation by providing a set of standards that will govern conduct of both parties during the claims handling process.
- This legislation creates a framework to improve the claims handling process and lead to more favorable conclusions for both the insured and insurance company.
- Allowing insurers to conduct settlement negotiations that are more in line with insurer's evaluation of the claim can lead to less overall costs.
- Senate Bill 54 aims to lower the number of uninsured and underinsured drivers and provide a greater safety net in the event of an accident.

Commented [BK1]: I'm not sure about this sentence... they aren't really "receiving better coverage"... they would be required to purchase better coverage?... I think...

Commented [LC2]: Suggestion to delete this talking point and replace with something like, "For everyone's protection, drivers must be insured at sufficient levels."¶
"Insurance is not optional today, but PIP and the current levels of coverage are insufficient."

Bill Summary:

Repeal Personal Injury Protection (PIP) and Mandate Bodily Injury (BI) Coverage

- Repeals the Florida's No-Fault Law, which requires every owner and registrant of a motor vehicle in this state to maintain PIP coverage.
- Enacts financial responsibility requirements for liability for motor vehicle ownership or operation, as follows:
  - For bodily injury (BI) or death of one person in any one crash, $25,000, and;
  - Subject to that limit for one person, $50,000 for BI or death of two or more people in any one crash.
  - Retains the existing $10,000 financial responsibility requirement for property damage.
  - Revises required coverage amounts for garage liability and commercial motor vehicle insurance, and increases the cash deposit amount required for a certificate of self-insurance establishing financial responsibility for owners and operators of motor vehicles that are not for-hire vehicles.
  - Eliminates limitations on recovering pain and suffering damages from PIP, which currently require bodily injury that causes death or significant and permanent injury.

Mandate the Offer of Medical Payments Coverage (MedPay)

- Requires insurers to offer MedPay with limits of $5,000 or $10,000 to cover medical expenses of the insured.
  - Insurers may also offer other policy limits that exceed $5,000.
  - Insurers may offer deductibles of up to $500.
- Requires insurers to reserve $5,000 of MedPay to pay physicians or dentists who provide emergency services and care or who provide hospital inpatient care.

Create a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions

- Creates a new framework to govern all bad faith claims for failure to settle related to motor vehicle insurance.
- Requires insurers to follow claims handling best practices standards based on long-established good faith duties related to claim handling, claim investigation, defense of the insured, and settlement negotiations.
- Establishes that it is a condition precedent to bringing a third-party bad faith action not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., that the claimant serve a demand for settlement. The demand must:

LOCATION: 330 SENATE BUILDING | ADDRESS: 404 S. MONROE ST., TALLAHASSEE, FL 32399-1100 | PHONE: (850) 487-5184

- Identify the date and location of the loss, the claimant, and insured.
  - State the legal and factual basis of the claim.
  - Detail the claimant's injuries, medical treatment, and amount of current and reasonably anticipated future damages.
  - Demand a settlement amount, which may not exceed their policy limit.
  - Release, if accepted, the insured from any further liability.
  - Not provide conditions on the settlement other than payment of demand and ability of the claimant to take an examination under oath of the insured.
- Allows the third-party bad faith claimant to condition the demand for settlement on taking a 2 hour examination under oath (EUO) of the insured limited to discovering recoverable assets.
  - The claimant may withdraw the settlement demand after the EUO.
  - If the insured refuses to submit to the EUO, they may tender policy limits without obtaining a release of the insured and may not be held liable if there is an excess judgment against the insured.
  - Provides a safe harbor to the insurer in third-party bad faith action not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., providing that an insurer is not liable for bad faith if it tenders policy limits within 30 days of receiving a settlement demand.
  - Requires the trier of fact to consider certain actions of the insurer such as compliance with best practices.
  - Prohibits punitive damages in a bad faith failure to settle action.

Allow Named Driver Exclusions

- Authorizes the exclusion of a specifically named individual from specified insurance coverages under a private passenger motor vehicle policy, with the written consent of the policyholder.

SENATOR DEBBIE MAYFIELD
MAJORITY LEADER

Senate Bill 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance
by Senator Danny Burgess

Repealing PIP, requiring BI coverage, and creating a new framework for bad faith actions

Talking Points:

- Senate Bill 54 transforms ineffective and outdated insurance practices to result in a more stable insurance market and better outcomes for all insured Floridians.
- Florida is one of only two states that does not currently require drivers to carry liability coverage that immediately kicks in if they cause bodily injury or death.
- This legislation repeals Florida's No-Fault Law and instead enacts a bodily injury liability system, providing fairness to insured drivers and placing liability on the at-fault party in an accident.
- Florida's No-Fault Law, which requires Personal Injury Protection (PIP), has failed to substantially reduce litigation.
- For everyone's protection, drivers must be insured at sufficient levels. The repeal of PIP will allow Floridians to purchase better coverage.
- Enacting Senate Bill 54 will ensure more significant bodily injury liability coverage for Floridians and require insurance companies to offer first party medical coverage (MedPay) of $5,000 or $10,000 to all drivers.
- Senate Bill 54 also reforms bad faith actions in order to reduce litigation by providing a set of standards that will govern conduct of both parties during the claims handling process.
- This legislation creates a framework to improve the claims handling process and lead to more favorable conclusions for both the insured and insurance company.
- Allowing insurers to conduct settlement negotiations that are more in line with insurer's evaluation of the claim can lead to less overall costs.
- Senate Bill 54 aims to lower the number of uninsured and underinsured drivers and provide a greater safety net in the event of an accident.

Bill Summary:

Repeal Personal Injury Protection (PIP) and Mandate Bodily Injury (BI) Coverage

- Repeals the Florida's No-Fault Law, which requires every owner and registrant of a motor vehicle in this state to maintain PIP coverage.
- Enacts financial responsibility requirements for liability for motor vehicle ownership or operation, as follows:
  - For bodily injury (BI) or death of one person in any one crash, $25,000, and;
  - Subject to that limit for one person, $50,000 for BI or death of two or more people in any one crash.
  - Retains the existing $10,000 financial responsibility requirement for property damage.
  - Revises required coverage amounts for garage liability and commercial motor vehicle insurance, and increases the cash deposit amount required for a certificate of self-insurance establishing financial responsibility for owners and operators of motor vehicles that are not for-hire vehicles.
  - Eliminates limitations on recovering pain and suffering damages from PIP, which currently require bodily injury that causes death or significant and permanent injury.

Mandate the Offer of Medical Payments Coverage (MedPay)

- Requires insurers to offer MedPay with limits of $5,000 or $10,000 to cover medical expenses of the insured.
  - Insurers may also offer other policy limits that exceed $5,000.
  - Insurers may offer deductibles of up to $500.
- Requires insurers to reserve $5,000 of MedPay to pay physicians or dentists who provide emergency services and care or who provide hospital inpatient care.

Create a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Claims

- Creates a new framework to govern all bad faith claims for failure to settle related to motor vehicle insurance.
- Requires insurers to follow claims handling best practices standards based on long-established good faith duties related to claim handling, claim investigation, defense of the insured, and settlement negotiations.

- Establishes that it is a condition precedent to bringing a third-party bad faith action not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., that the claimant serve a demand for settlement. The demand must:
  - Identify the date and location of the loss, the claimant, and insured.
  - State the legal and factual basis of the claim.
  - Detail the claimant's injuries, medical treatment, and amount of current and reasonably anticipated future damages.
  - Demand a settlement amount, which may not exceed their policy limit.
  - Release, if accepted, the insured from any further liability.
  - Not provide conditions on the settlement other than payment of demand and ability of the claimant to take an examination under oath of the insured.
- Allows the third-party bad faith claimant to condition the demand for settlement on taking a 2-hour examination under oath (EUO) of the insured limited to discovering recoverable assets.
- The claimant may withdraw the settlement demand after the EUO.
- If the insured refuses to submit to the EUO, they may tender policy limits without obtaining a release of the insured and may not be held liable if there is an excess judgment against the insured.
- Provides a safe harbor to the insurer in third-party bad faith action not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., providing that an insurer is not liable for bad faith if it tenders policy limits within 30 days of receiving a settlement demand.
- Requires the trier of fact to consider certain actions of the insurer such as compliance with best practices.
- Prohibits punitive damages in a bad faith failure to settle action.

Allow Named Driver Exclusions

- Authorizes the exclusion of a specifically named individual from specified insurance coverages under a private passenger motor vehicle policy, with the written consent of the policyholder.

Danny:

based on SB484,. will that go into the Fla. State Stautes and we will truly enhance a sentence of agg battery; agg. assault, criminal mischeif and such, or will it be a stand alone statute? Also, freedom of speech far outweighs freedom of the press. Kind of one and the same, but now we are vicitimized by media for our free speech. Will thie bill introduced by you cover that/

Updates from the Florida Senate

Dear friends,

Yesterday I arrived in Tallahassee for my first committee week as your state senator. We have a lot of work ahead of us and the 2021 Legislative Session is just around the corner.

Over the next few months, I will be sending regular newsletters to update you about what's happening in Tallahassee.

In this inaugural newsletter, I provide a brief overview of the upcoming week and discuss a few of the bills I've filed so far.

It is an honor to serve you in the Florida Senate.

Forward March,

Danny Burgess
State Senator
District 20

SB 494: Administration of Vaccines

On Friday I filed legislation to improve access to vaccinations for Floridians. SB 494: Administration of Vaccines would amend Florida State Statutes to allow pharmacists who meet certain requirements to administer vaccines recommended by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices to adults.

This legislation will increase the number of vaccination sites by allowing licensed and approved pharmacists to vaccinate the public at their local pharmacy.

SB 484: Combatting Public Disorder

We are a nation of law and order, not violence, destruction, and unrest. We respect the right to peacefully protest, but the shameful conduct we witnessed at the United States Capitol and episodes of violent civil unrest that we have witnessed over the last several months have no place in our country.

Last week I filed SB 484: Combatting Public Disorder. SB 484 makes it clear that here in Florida criminals who seek to thwart peaceful protests by willfully inciting violence, attacking law enforcement, and destroying public or private property will be held accountable.

SB 520: Social Media Websites

For better or for worse, social media has become a major part of our everyday life and society. After hearing from our constituent that social media sites were banning users and deleting accounts without explanation, I filed SB 520: Social Media Websites.

This legislation would require social media companies to provide individual and business users notice when the website has suspended or disabled a user's account and requires the companies to detail the steps necessary to restore the account.

SB 520 signals to social media websites that regardless of a person's background, political history, religion, race, gender, or any other identifying measure, Twitter and Facebook cannot be the sole judge, jury, and executioner of Americans' First Amendment rights.

SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance Approved by Banking and Insurance Committee

This week the Senate Committee on Banking and Insurance, chaired by Senator Jim Boyd approved SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance.

opening_white_car_door.jpg

SB 54 is the first bill I presented in the Florida Senate. This legislation will replace Florida's no-fault system with a bodily injury liability system more appropriately places liability where it should be – with the party that caused the accident.

Additionally, the bill creates a new framework for handling bad faith litigation that provides a clear set of standards to govern the conduct of both parties in the claims handling process, which I believe will lead to better outcomes for both insured Floridians and their insurance companies.

- Repeals No-Fault, Requires Bodily Injury Liability Coverage
- Requires Insurance Companies to Offer Medical Payments Coverage
- Creates a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions
- Allows for Named Driver Exclusions

Senate Bill 54 transforms this ineffective and outdated insurance structure, which I believe will lead to a more stable insurance market and better outcomes for insured Floridians when they face the unfortunate and in some cases tragic circumstance of being involved in a serious vehicle accident.

Emergency Management Director and Florida National Guard Brief Committee on Pandemic Response

_____ This week in the Select Committee on Pandemic Preparedness and Response:

As chair of the Select Committee, I asked our Division of Emergency Management Director, Jared Moskowitz to update our committee members on the state's COVID-19 vaccination efforts.

Director Moskowitz gave an incredibly detailed presentation and provided a week-by-week review of Florida's vaccine distribution and administration progress. Although Florida leads the nation in vaccinations of seniors 65 years of age and older, there remains a critical need for increased vaccine supply from the federal government. The lack of vaccine supply from the federal government is currently the major impediment to vaccinating more Floridians.

I also asked the Florida National Guard's Director of Military Support, Col. John L. Steele, to brief the Select Committee on their response to COVID-19.

The Florida National Guard continues to support the state's COVID-19 response through operational support of Community Based Testing Sites, Community Vaccination Sites, Mobile Testing Teams, augmentation to airport screening, statewide logistics support, coordination, food distribution, planning, and operational mission sets.

Emergency Management Director and Florida National Guard Brief Committee on Pandemic Response

_____ This week in the Select Committee on Pandemic Preparedness and Response:

As chair of the Select Committee, I asked our Division of Emergency Management Director, Jared Moskowitz to update our committee members on the state's COVID-19 vaccination efforts.

Director Moskowitz gave an incredibly detailed presentation and provided a week-by-week review of Florida's vaccine distribution and administration progress. Although Florida leads the nation in vaccinations of seniors 65 years of age and older, there remains a critical need for increased vaccine supply from the federal government. The lack of vaccine supply from the federal government is currently the major impediment to vaccinating more Floridians.

I also asked the Florida National Guard's Director of Military Support, Col. John L. Steele, to brief the Select Committee on their response to COVID-19.

The Florida National Guard continues to support the state's COVID-19 response through operational support of Community Based Testing Sites, Community Vaccination Sites, Mobile Testing Teams, augmentation to airport screening, statewide logistics support, coordination, food distribution, planning, and operational mission sets.

This week in the Florida Senate

Dear friends,

I've just returned from another busy week in the Florida Senate.

This week, I presented (and passed) my first bill, cast my first votes, and attended quite a few virtual meetings. On Thursday, my committee received an update on vaccine distribution and the pandemic response from the National Guard and the Department of Emergency Management.

It is an honor to serve you in the Florida Senate.

Forward March,

Danny Burgess
State Senator
District 20

Some Pawsitive News!

In between meetings, my staff and I have been busy child-proofing (and puppy-proofing) the office.

I am very excited to announce that Courtney, the kids, and our newest addition, Briar, will be joining me in Tallahassee next week! If you follow me on social media you may have seen photos of Briar, our four-month-old King Charles Cavalier puppy.

SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance Approved by Banking and Insurance Committee

This week the Senate Committee on Banking and Insurance, chaired by Senator Jim Boyd approved SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance.

SB 54 is the first bill I presented in the Florida Senate. This legislation will replace Florida's no-fault system with a bodily injury liability system more appropriately places liability where it should be - with the party that caused the accident.

Additionally, the bill creates a new framework for handling bad faith litigation that provides a clear set of standards to govern the conduct of both parties in the claims handling process, which I believe will lead to better outcomes for both insured Floridians and their insurance companies.

- Repeals No-Fault, Requires Bodily Injury Liability Coverage
- Requires Insurance Companies to Offer Medical Payments Coverage
- Creates a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions
- Allows for Named Driver Exclusions

Senate Bill 54 transforms this ineffective and outdated insurance structure, which I believe will lead to a more stable insurance market and better outcomes for insured Floridians when they face the unfortunate and in some cases tragic circumstance of being involved in a serious vehicle accident.

Senator Burgess,
Will city councils be reluctant to increase police budgets if SB 484 passes? This is a horrible attack on home rule.

My town is experimenting with ways to keep people out of jail by utilizing social workers and monies to find the homeless places to live. IF you force the city council to keep the same budget for our sheriff's office, they might be less inclined to raise the budget one year for an experimental plan that might cost more in the initial year. Please QUIT attacking home rule.

There are multiple problems with your bill SB 484. One of the problems is an attack on home rule. Cities will be struggling with their budgets. What right does the state have to step in? Excerpt from SB 484:

Subject: Uninsured Motorist Issue

Senator Burgess,

The attached PDF is the official number of uninsured motorists in the state of Florida. For November 2020, it was 6.6 percent. I've included their uninsured motorist estimate as an attachment dated 12.16.2020.

Here is how DHSMV generates that number:

- Once a month a data pull is conducted for the number of vehicles registered in the state, and the number of vehicles that have meet the minimal insurance requirements as reported to the Department from the Insurance industry. Those numbers are reflected on the page and used to create a rate. Commercial vehicles are excluded from the pull since it is only to reflect personally owned vehicles.

The insurance industry generates a very different number. A 2017 Insurance Research Council report estimated that in 2015, 26.7 percent of Florida drivers were uninsured. This was the highest uninsured motorist rate in the country. In my experience, the insurance industry points to this number rather than the DHSMV number. I've included the 2017 IRC report as an attachment.

Here is how the IRC generates their number:

- Uninsured motorist rates were estimated by comparing the injury portion of UM insurance coverage with bodily injury (BI) liability coverage. If an insured person is injured in an auto accident caused by an at-fault driver, then he or she will file a BI liability claim against the at-fault driver seeking compensation for their injury. However, if the at-fault driver is uninsured or the injured person is a victim of a hit-and-run driver, then the injured person will file a UM claim with their own insurance company to seek compensation. Claim frequencies measure the number of insurance claims per 100 vehicles insured for an entire year. The ratio of UM claim frequency to BI claim frequency represents the chance that someone injured in an auto accident was the victim of an uninsured at-fault driver.

It think the IRC number likely overestimates the number of true uninsured in Florida because Florida does not require BI coverage. The most likely ways the DHSMV number is incorrect is if there are large numbers of unregistered vehicles on the roads, or the insurance industry data is somehow incorrect regarding the real number of insureds.

Personally, I think that by mandating BI, the IRC number of 26.7% is likely to decrease because more drivers will have BI, but the DHSMV number will increase because the coverage will likely be more expensive for some people that currently buy PIP/PD only policies.

Executive Summary

Most licensed drivers in the United States are required by state law to maintain liability insurance coverage that will compensate others for injuries or damages resulting from auto accidents in which the insured is found to be at fault. Forty-nine states and the District of Columbia have adopted compulsory insurance laws requiring drivers to maintain liability insurance coverage.<sup>1</sup> Even in New Hampshire, the only state without a compulsory auto insurance law, drivers who have demonstrated a lack of financial responsibility for past auto accidents must provide proof of financial responsibility for potential future accidents.<sup>2</sup>

Despite the near-universal requirement that drivers maintain liability insurance coverage, a significant number do not, and these uninsured drivers increase costs for drivers who do have coverage. Auto insurance policies typically include uninsured motorist (UM) coverage that will protect the insured if they are injured by an at-fault uninsured driver. The costs associated with UM insurance coverage can be significant. According to the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC), the countrywide average premium cost per covered vehicle for UM coverage in 2013 was $67.<sup>3</sup>

Uninsured motorists pose additional costs for insurance companies, state governments, and taxpayers. In 2012, the average UM claim included $11,379 in claimed medical losses and $7,960 in lost wages.<sup>4</sup> In addition to underwriting UM insurance coverage and processing UM insurance claims, auto insurance companies must comply with regulations in many states requiring insurers to inform the state any time auto insurance coverage is cancelled. State governments administer taxpayer-funded programs to monitor the insurance status of motor vehicles registered in the state.

The amount noted includes costs associated with underinsured, as well as uninsured, motorist claims. Texas is not included in the calculation.

This report updates previous Insurance Research Council (IRC) estimates of the percentage of drivers who are uninsured. New estimates for the years 2013–15 are presented, along with earlier estimates from 1999–2012. The new estimates are based on the analysis of auto injury claim frequency data provided by 143 insurance companies, representing 60 percent of the private passenger auto insurance market countrywide in 2015.

Uninsured motorist rates were estimated by comparing the injury portion of UM insurance coverage with bodily injury (BI) liability coverage. If an insured person is injured in an auto accident caused by an at-fault driver, then he or she will file a BI liability claim against the at-fault driver seeking compensation for their injury. However, if the at-fault driver is uninsured or the injured person is a victim of a hit-and-run driver, then the injured person will file a UM claim with their own insurance company to seek compensation. Claim frequencies measure the number of insurance claims per 100 vehicles insured for an entire year. The ratio of UM claim frequency to BI claim frequency represents the chance that someone injured in an auto accident was the victim of an uninsured at-fault driver.

Because an at-fault driver is either uninsured or insured, the UM to BI claim frequency ratio estimates the percentage of all drivers who are uninsured. For example, if, in a group of 10,000 vehicle owners, 1,000 (10 percent) do not have auto liability insurance and accidents involving injuries occur at a frequency of 5 percent per year, then 500 auto accidents with an injury would occur ( $5 \text{ percent} \times 10,000$ ), of which 50 would involve uninsured drivers ( $10 \text{ percent} \times 500$ ). Five of the 50 accidents (10 percent) would involve another uninsured motorist, while 45 of the accidents would involve insured motorists as the injured parties. As a result, these 45 injured individuals would submit UM claims to their own insurers, producing a claim frequency rate of 0.005 (45 UM claims for 9,000 insured vehicles). Meanwhile, there would be 450 BI claims for 9,000 insured vehicles, producing a BI claim frequency of 0.05. The ratio of UM to BI claim frequencies would be 0.10, or 10 percent ( $0.005/0.05$ ). Thus, the ratio of UM to BI claim frequencies produces a measure of the probability that an injury to an insured car occupant will have been the fault of an uninsured driver. This approach assumes that insured and uninsured drivers experience the same frequency of at-fault accidents resulting in injuries. If accident rates for uninsured drivers are greater than for insured drivers, then the IRC estimates understate the true prevalence of uninsured drivers. If, on the other hand, accident rates for insured drivers are greater than for uninsured drivers, then the IRC estimates overstate the true prevalence of uninsured drivers.

Major findings

- In 2015, when someone was injured in an auto accident in the U.S., the chances were about one in 8 that the at-fault driver in the accident was uninsured. From 2010 to 2015, the countrywide ratio of UM to BI claim frequencies increased from 12.3 percent to 13.0 percent, following a seven-year decline from a high of 14.9 percent in 2003.
- The percentage of uninsured drivers varied significantly by state. In 2015, the UM to BI claim frequency ratio was highest in Florida (26.7 percent) and lowest in Maine (4.5 percent). Other states with comparatively high uninsured motorist rates in 2015 were Mississippi (23.7 percent), New Mexico (20.8 percent), Michigan (20.3 percent) and Tennessee (20.0 percent). Figure 1 illustrates the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers in each state in 2015. In thirteen states and the District of Columbia, the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers was equal to or greater than 15 percent.

- Five states (Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, Florida, and North Dakota) experienced increases in their estimated uninsured motorist rates of 3 percentage points or more from 2006–15. Two of these states (Michigan and Florida) had uninsured motorist rates exceeding 20 percent in 2015. Massachusetts and North Dakota had comparatively low uninsured motorist rates in 2015, even after experiencing significant increases over the 2006–15 period.
- Several states experienced significant improvements in their uninsured motorist rates over the 2006–15 period. Oklahoma’s rate fell 13.5 percentage points, from 24.0 percent to 10.5 percent, likely due to legislation enacted in 2013 aimed at reducing the number of uninsured drivers. New Mexico also experienced a significant decline in its uninsured motorist rate—from 30.7 percent to 20.8 percent.
- High uninsured motorist rates do not always indicate high underlying claim frequencies. For example, Michigan had one of the highest uninsured motorist rates in the country in 2015 (20.3 percent), but also had one of the country’s lowest UM and BI claim frequency rates. Indiana experienced low BI claim frequency rates and medium UM claim frequency rates, but had one of the ten highest uninsured motorist estimates (16.7 percent).
- Uninsured motorist rates are likely influenced by several factors. Higher average expenditures for auto liability insurance coverage are associated with higher rates of uninsured motorists, although the relationship is relatively weak and insurance cost is not a strong predictor of uninsured motorist rates. Future IRC research will explore the factors and conditions that explain uninsured motorist rates across states and over time.

National Uninsured Motorists Trends

The IRC previously estimated that, in 2012, the countrywide uninsured motorist rate was 12.6 percent.<sup>5</sup> This report adds three additional years to the trend of uninsured motorist estimates. The IRC estimates that the percentage of drivers countrywide who were uninsured increased to 12.7 percent in 2013, and then to 13.0 percent in 2014. In 2015, the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers remained at 13.0 percent.

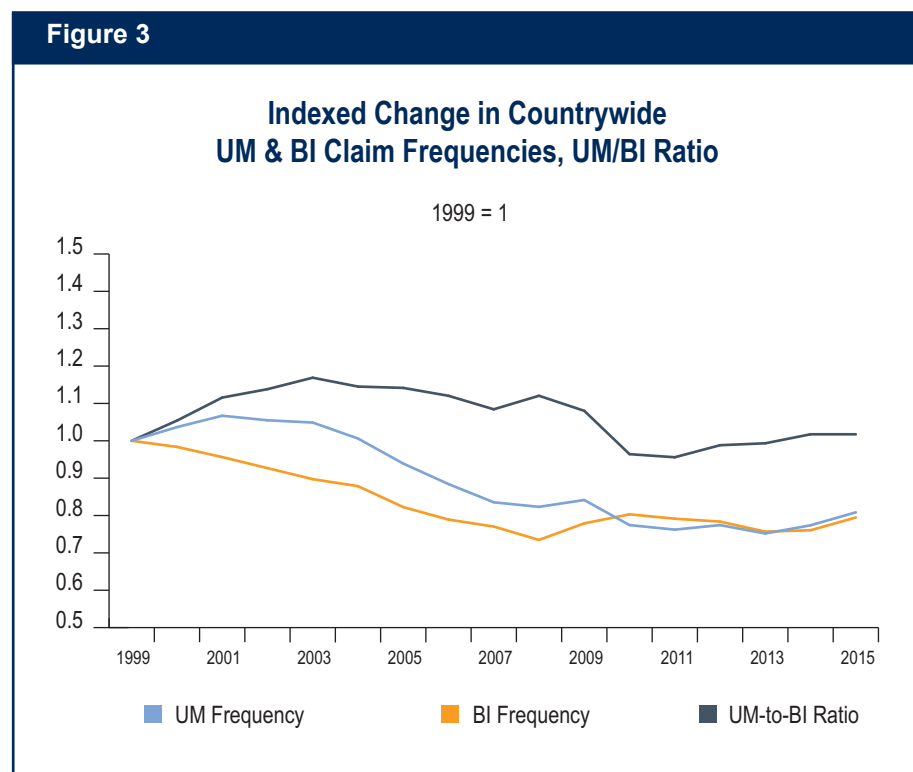

The percentage of drivers who are uninsured has increased slowly since 2011, when the UM rate was at its lowest since 1980, 12.2 percent (Figure 2). Uninsured motorist rates have typically fluctuated between 11 and 15 percent. Only 6 of the 37 years that the IRC has studied uninsured motorists had estimated rates that fell outside the 11 to 15 percent range. The current estimate of 13 percent is in the middle of that range.

The ratio of UM and BI claim frequency rates forms the basis for the IRC’s estimate of the prevalence of uninsured motorists. Figure 3 depicts change over time in UM and BI claim frequency rates and the UM to BI ratio by indexing each measure to 1, starting in 1999. The trends illustrate how changes in underlying claim frequencies affect the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers. The UM to BI claim frequency ratio (the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers) changes very little when UM and BI claim frequency trends follow each other closely. For example, from 2014 to 2015, the UM and BI claim frequency rates both increased, but at approximately the same rate, thus resulting in no change in the UM to BI ratio. When UM and BI claim frequency trends move in different directions, or move in the same direction but at different rates, then the UM to BI claim frequency ratio changes. For example, from 2007 to 2008, the UM claim frequency rate decreased, but not as rapidly as BI claim frequency. As a result, the UM to BI claim frequency rate increased. A more dramatic example can be seen with 2009 to 2010, when UM claim frequency decreased as BI claim frequency increased, resulting in a significant decline in the UM to BI ratio, from 13.8 to 12.3 percent.

Despite long-term declines in both UM and BI claim frequencies, the UM to BI claim frequency ratio was only slightly different in 2015, at 13.0 percent, than it was in 1999, when it was 12.7 percent. The UM to BI ratio was little changed because UM and BI claim frequency rates experienced very similar declines over the sixteen-year period. If the UM and BI claim frequency trends had experienced very different trends, then the UM to BI ratio in 2015 would have differed considerably from what it was in 1999.

Countrywide uninsured motorists and bodily injury claim frequency rates, as well as the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers (the UM to BI claim frequency ratio) are presented in Figure 4 for the years 1999–2015. Only claims involving bodily injury are included in the UM claim frequency rates. Claim frequency rates and uninsured motorist estimates prior to 1999 can be found in previous IRC Uninsured Motorists reports.

State UM Trends

Individual state UM to BI claim frequency ratios in 2015 ranged from 4.5 percent in Maine to 26.7 percent in Florida. Four other states, in addition to Florida, had UM to BI ratios of 20 percent or more: Mississippi (23.7 percent), New Mexico (20.8 percent), Michigan (20.3 percent), and Tennessee (20.0 percent). Wide variation in uninsured motorist rates across states is not a new phenomenon; similar differences have been documented in previous IRC UM studies. The 2015 ranking of states by the percentage of uninsured drivers, as measured by the UM to BI claim frequency ratio, is shown in figure 5.

*Number of paid claims per 100 insured exposures.

In 2015, twenty states had uninsured motorist rates equal to or greater than the countrywide rate (13.0 percent) while 30 states had rates below the countrywide rate. Most of the states with the highest uninsured motorist rates in 2015 also had high rates in 2006, but that was not the case for all of them. Indiana, for example, ranked eighth in 2015 but only twentieth in 2006. Similarly, Arkansas ranked ninth in 2015, but nineteenth in 2006. Conversely, some states with relatively high rankings in 2006 had significantly lower rankings 10 years later. Oklahoma, for example, had the fourth highest uninsured motorist rate in 2006, but ranked thirty-first by 2015.

Uninsured motorist rates for individual states often change from year-to-year, although the changes are typically small. Some states, however, have experienced significant changes over extended periods of time. Figure 6 lists states with the greatest increases or decreases in their UM to BI ratios from 2006 to 2015. Although the 2015 UM to BI ratio for Massachusetts (6.2 percent) was less than one-half the countrywide rate, the state experienced the largest percentage point increase, rising 4.8 points over the ten-year period. Many of the other states with the largest percentage point increases also are among the states with the highest UM to BI ratios in 2015. Michigan, for example, experienced a 3.8 percentage point increase in its UM to BI ratio, and Florida, which ranked fifth highest among all the states in 2006, ranked first in 2015, with a UM to BI ratio of 26.7 percent. This followed a 3.4 percentage point increase over 10 years.

Among the states with significant decreases in their UM to BI ratios, Oklahoma is particularly noteworthy. The dramatic decrease in Oklahoma's ratio (falling from 24.0 percent to 10.5 percent) may be attributed to the enactment of legislation in 2013 aimed at reducing the number of uninsured drivers.<sup>6</sup> Other states experiencing substantial decreases include New Mexico (declining 9.0 points to 20.8 percent) and Alabama (declining 8.0 points to 18.4 percent). Even with substantial decreases, however, New Mexico and Alabama are among the states with the highest estimated percentage of uninsured drivers. Another state to note is California, where the UM to BI ratio dropped 5.7 points, to 15.2 percent. In 2006, California had the sixth highest estimated percentage of uninsured drivers in the country. By 2015, California ranked twelfth among all the states.

Further insight into uninsured motorist rates is found in the underlying claim frequency rates used to calculate UM to BI claim frequency ratios. Figure 7 indicates for each state whether UM and BI claim frequencies are relatively low, medium, or high. The 10 states with the highest UM to BI ratios are shown in bold. Uninsured motorist rates may be high even when claim frequency rates are low, as was the case with Michigan, where strong no-fault rules limit all types of liability claims involving bodily injury. States with medium and high BI claim frequency rates and high UM claim frequency rates tend to have higher UM to BI ratios. Thirteen of 17 states with this combination of claim frequencies also experienced UM to BI ratios equal to or greater than the countrywide average (13.0 percent), in 2015.

BI Claim Frequency

States with the 10 highest UM to BI claim frequency ratios are in bold.

UM and BI claim frequency rates varied more across states than did UM to BI claim frequency ratios. The coefficient of variation (CV) is a commonly used measure of variation across a set of data. It is particularly useful in comparing different groups of data with different characteristics. Expressed as a percentage, a higher CV indicates greater variation among the data in a group, and a lower CV indicates less variation. The CV for UM claim frequency in 2015 was 65 percent, compared with 46 percent for BI claim frequency, which indicates that BI claim frequency varied less across states than UM claim frequency. The CV for state UM to BI claim frequency ratios was even lower at 39 percent, indicating that state uninsured motorist rates, as measured by UM to BI ratios, varied less than the underlying claim frequencies on which the uninsured motorist estimates are based.

Understanding why uninsured motorist rates vary significantly across states is a critical requirement to devise effective strategies to reduce the prevalence of uninsured drivers. For example, as might be expected, higher insurance costs are associated with higher uninsured motorist rates. Figure 8 illustrates the relationship between state UM to BI ratios and average liability premiums, as calculated by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners. Average liability premiums are the total premiums paid by policyholders for all auto liability coverages combined, divided by the number of insured liability exposures (that is, the number of vehicles insured for an entire year).<sup>7</sup> The slope of the line and the dispersion of states around the line indicates that only about 15 percent of the total variation in the UM to BI ratios of every state and the District of Columbia in 2014 was explained by average liability premium costs. In other words, the average cost of insurance (average liability premium) explains only a portion of the variation in uninsured motorist rates across states. A $200 difference in average liability premium costs was associated with an average 2.4 percentage point difference in UM to BI ratios. However, the wide dispersion of states at different premium cost levels indicates that cost alone is a poor predictor of uninsured motorist rates. States with similar insurance costs had uninsured motorist rates that varied widely. For example, in states with average liability premium costs ranging narrowly between $750 and $850, the UM to BI ratio ranged from 6.2 percent to 26.7 percent. This finding suggests that factors in addition to the cost of insurance likely contribute to the prevalence of uninsured drivers in any particular state.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>8</sup> This analysis could be strengthened by controlling for differences in liability coverage limits actually purchased. Information on coverage limits in force, however, was not available to the IRC.

Each point denotes the UM to BI ratio and average liability premium for a single state in 2014.

Many states have taken steps to encourage drivers to obtain auto insurance coverage and to reduce the frequency of uninsured driving. The most common approach to promoting insurance coverage is to enact compulsory auto insurance laws requiring motor vehicle owners to obtain property damage and bodily injury liability coverage with specific minimum coverage limits. Figure 9 lists the minimum insurance requirements for motorists in each state. In addition to requiring liability coverage, states with no-fault systems require Personal Injury Protection (PIP) coverage. Several states also require UM coverage to protect those who incur medical and/or property damage losses caused by an uninsured driver. Compulsory insurance requirements, while designed and intended to promote insurance coverage, may have the unintended effect of increasing the prevalence of uninsured drivers if the amount of coverage required, and the associated costs, are greater than what some drivers believe they are able to afford or prefer to pay.

Most states also prescribe specific penalties and fines for failing to comply with state insurance requirements. The penalties for driving without insurance vary widely, ranging from $100 for a first offense to a year in jail for multiple violations.<sup>9</sup> The states also take a variety of steps to enforce insurance requirements and identify drivers who fail to maintain minimum coverage. In several instances, state enforcement mechanisms require insurance companies to report detailed information to state agencies whenever a change in a policy that might indicate that a vehicle is no longer appropriately insured occurs.

Compulsory insurance requirements, fines and penalties for noncompliance, and the cost and affordability of insurance coverage are just some of the factors that may influence the prevalence of uninsured motorists. Future IRC research will explore how these factors work both independently and in concert to explain differences in uninsured motorist rates across states.

Methodology

IRC analyzed UM and BI liability exposure and claim count data provided by participating companies for the years 2013, 2014, and 2015. Data from previous IRC studies were also examined. Fourteen insurers, representing approximately 60 percent of the private passenger auto liability insurance business countrywide, participated in the study. Each insurer provided data for its total private passenger auto line of business (preferred, standard, and nonstandard lines) in each state. The number of earned car years and the number of incurred claims, including incurred but not reported claims, were combined to calculate UM and BI claim frequencies and the corresponding UM to BI claim frequency ratio.

The ratio of UM to BI claim frequencies produces a reasonable estimate of the proportion of injury-producing accidents caused by uninsured or hit-and-run motorists. Claim frequencies, rather than claim counts, were used to minimize distortions from different numbers of UM and BI earned car years. Calculating the size of the uninsured driver population is important in fashioning appropriate public policies to address the uninsured motorist issue and to measure the effectiveness of different approaches. The illegal nature of driving a vehicle without insurance makes obtaining an exact and accurate number of uninsured drivers in each state a difficult task. The ratio of UM to BI claim frequencies provides an estimate of the probability that an at-fault driver in an accident was uninsured and unable to satisfy their liability for someone else's injuries caused by the accident. Therefore, the UM to BI ratio provides a measure of the impact on society of uninsured motorists.

A limitation of the UM to BI ratio is that the UM claim frequency also includes injury claims from hit-and-run accidents in which it is unknown if the at-fault driver had insurance. Also, any potential underlying differences in claiming behavior between injured parties deciding to make a BI claim versus a UM claim could affect underlying claim frequencies. Vehicles that were not insured, but also not driven on the road, do not factor into the UM to BI ratio. Finally, this approach assumes that insured and uninsured drivers experience the same frequency of at-fault accidents resulting in injuries. If accident rates for uninsured drivers are actually greater than or less than the rates for insured drivers, then IRC estimates understate or overstate, respectively, the true prevalence of uninsured drivers. Considering these factors, the UM to BI ratio provides a consistent and reasonable measure for comparing the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers from state to state and over time within each state.

Description of Relevant Auto Insurance Coverages

The claim frequency information in this study relied on the UM and BI portions of private passenger auto injury insurance coverage. If an injury occurred to a person in an auto accident and the other driver was at fault, the injured person would file a BI claim against the at-fault driver. Because the injured claimant is typically someone outside the driver's household, BI claims are referred to as third-party claims. BI payments can include coverage for medical expenses and lost wages, as well as payments for general damages, sometimes referred to as pain and suffering payments.

However, if an injury occurred to a person in an auto accident and the other driver was at fault but did not have liability insurance, the injured person would file a UM claim with his or her own insurance company. The insured's UM coverage pays the amount the injured person would have otherwise received from the at-fault driver. Eligibility for payments from either BI or UM coverage depends on the other driver being at fault for the accident.

Other auto injury insurance coverages, such as medical payments (MP) and PIP, were not included in this analysis because neither involves a comparable group of claims to UM claims. UM is a fault-based coverage, whereas MP and PIP are no-fault, first-party coverages.

Auto Injury Claims & Trends

Motivation for Attorney Involvement in Auto Injury Claims, November 2016, 41 pages.

This study examines the role of attorneys in the process of settling of auto injury claims. In an on-line survey, respondents who were injured in auto accidents were asked about their experience, including satisfaction with the claim process, their decision whether to talk to or hire an attorney, and the services provided by attorneys.

Affordability in Auto Injury Insurance: Cost Drivers in Twelve Jurisdictions, June 2016, 132 pages.

This study identifies and documents the common and unique factors and conditions underlying rising auto injury insurance claim costs in 12 jurisdictions (Delaware, District of Columbia, Florida, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Mississippi, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island, and West Virginia).

Trends in Auto Injury Insurance Claims, 2015 Edition, September 2015, 69 pages.

This report examines the frequency, severity and loss costs associated with auto injury insurance claims under the property damage and bodily injury liability and personal injury protection coverages from 1990 to 2013. Countrywide and individual state outcomes and trends are analyzed.

Trends in Auto Insurance Affordability, August 2015, 48 pages.

This report monitors trends in auto insurance affordability across states and over time using the IRC's auto insurance expenditure-to-income ratio. Using data from the BLS's Consumer Expenditure Survey, the report also analyzes auto insurance affordability trends for low-to-moderate income consumers and inspects differences in affordability trends across various goods and services considered necessities.

Fraud and Buildup and Auto Injury Claims, January 2015, 48 pages.

This report provides a unique perspective on claim abuse among auto injury claims closed with payment. Using data from the 2012 closed claim data collection, it describes the prevalence of fraud and buildup among the five main private passenger coverages and includes analysis of different types of abuse, estimates of the excess payments attributable to fraud and buildup, and variations by state. It also examines the differences in claiming behavior between claims with the appearance of abuse and other claims and provides information about some of the fraud-fighting tools used by insurers.

Third-Party Bad Faith in Florida's Automobile Insurance System, August 2014, 12 pages.

Bad-faith lawsuits targeting automobile insurers in Florida impose a heavy burden on the state's auto insurance system and auto insurance consumers. This report examines the effect that potential bad-faith settlements have on underlying claiming behavior in Florida. Estimates of additional claim costs attributable to the bad-faith legal environment are included.

Attorney Involvement in Auto Injury Claims, July 2014, 50 pages.

This report uses data from the 2012 closed claim study to examine trends in the rate of attorney involvement in auto injury claims over time and across states. It also provides details on the interaction between the presence of attorneys and cost drivers such as medical treatment and claim abuse and looks at how represented claimants fare compared to claimants without attorneys with respect to claim payment and time to settlement.

Auto Injury Insurance Claims: Countrywide Patterns in Treatment, Cost, and Compensation, 2014 Edition,

March 2014, 65 pages.

This closed claim study is based on a sample of more than 35,000 auto injury claims paid in 2012. The report compares 2012 data to results from similar studies conducted in 2007 and earlier. The study examines trends in claim patterns, including characteristics of the accidents and those injured, medical treatment, losses and payments, the claim settlement process, attorney involvement, and fraud.

Automobile Insurance Affordability, November 2013, 30 pages.

This report seeks to establish a conceptually logical definition of automobile insurance affordability and examine changes and differences in automobile insurance affordability over time and across states. It also analyzes variables (including competition, regulation, residual market size, richness of the system, uninsured motorists, and the unemployment rate) that may influence the variance in automobile insurance affordability across states and over time. Using these variables, a multivariate model is estimated to determine each factor's impact and significance on affordability.

Interstate Differences in Medical Utilization in Auto Injury Claims, July 2013, 48 pages.

This report documents significant differences across states in the use of selected diagnostic and treatment services in auto injury insurance claims. The report also illustrates the potential savings available by bringing utilization rates in high-use states down to median state levels.

Insurance Fraud: A Public View, 2012 Edition, December 2012, 44 pages.

This report updates previous IRC studies surveying the public about the acceptability and perceived frequency of various types of insurance fraud, with special emphasis on auto insurance fraud. It also examines attitudes toward a variety of tools that insurers and law enforcement use to fight against insurance fraud, including claim handling techniques and consequences for fraudulent behavior, and the public's willingness to perform fraud-fighting efforts.

Uninsured Motorists

Uninsured Motorists, 2017 Edition, October 2017, 58 pages.

This study examines trends in uninsured motorists countrywide and in individual states based on uninsured motorists and bodily injury claim frequencies from 2013, 2014, and 2015. The report includes previous estimates, countrywide and by state, beginning in 1999.

The Potential Effects of No Pay, No Play Laws, November 2012, 31 pages.

This study seeks to measure the impact of no pay, no play laws on the percentage of uninsured motorists. It also estimates the costs of noneconomic damages awarded to uninsured motorists in states that have yet to enact such laws. The findings suggest that not only would a properly enforced no pay, no play law result in a moderate decrease in uninsured motorists, it may also reduce auto insurance costs.

Other Issues

Public Understanding of Hurricane Deductibles: Need for Consumer Education Persists, June 2017, 40 pages.

This report examines public understanding of the nature and effects of hurricane deductibles and other special deductibles that are applicable to storm-related homeowners insurance claims. The study is based on a survey of privately insured homeowners in five coastal states.

Attorney Involvement in Homeowners Insurance Claims in Texas, May 2017, 36 pages.

This study examines a sample of closed homeowners insurance claims for property damage occurring from 2008 to 2013, exploring the distribution of the number of claims and the dollars paid across regions within the state. The rate of attorney involvement is examined, with particular focus on claims stemming from wind and hail damage. The report documents the spread of attorney involvement across counties in Texas and provides estimates for the impact of continued increases.

The Sharing Economy: Public Participation and Views, August 2016, 58 pages.

This study examines public familiarity with and participation in the sharing economy. Also explored in the report are various insurance-related aspects of the sharing economy. The study is based on the responses of 1,105 participants in a survey fielded by GfK Public Affairs & Corporate Communications.

Auto Insurance Telematics: Consumer Attitudes and Opinions, November 2015, 25 pages.

This report explores consumer attitudes and opinions with respect to auto insurance telematics and usage-based insurance (UBI). The report finds that many drivers participating in the programs change their driving behavior in response to information provided by their insurance companies about their driving gathered with a telematics device. The report also confirms that many drivers are concerned about the privacy of their personal driving information.

Shopping for Auto Insurance and the Use of Internet-Based Technology, June 2015, 39 pages.

This report examines how often consumers shop for auto insurance, how they go about shopping, the choices made after shopping, satisfaction with the shopping experience, and the use of Internet-based personal technology when shopping for insurance. The report also looks at differences in shopping behavior and technology use across demographic groups.

The Affordable Care Act and Property-Casualty Insurance, February 2014.

The Affordable Care Act (ACA) dramatically alters healthcare markets and health insurance systems in the United States. Although the property-casualty insurance industry is not directly included or targeted by the act, it is not immune to its effects. This white paper identifies the ways in which the ACA may affect the property-casualty insurance industry.

Expert Views of Auto Insurance Rate Regulation, August 2013, 40 pages.

This report surveys academic experts in risk and insurance on the effectiveness of prior approval and market-oriented rate regulatory policies in automobile insurance. The results show that a vast majority believe the prior-approval regulation of auto insurance rates is unnecessary and does not benefit consumers.

Insurance Research Council

The Insurance Research Council is a division of The American Institute for Chartered Property and Casualty Underwriters (The Institutes), a not-for-profit organization dedicated to providing educational programs, professional certification, and research for the property-casualty insurance business. Senator Burgess,

The attached PDF is the official number of uninsured motorists in the state of Florida. For November 2020, it was 6.6 percent. I've included their uninsured motorist estimate as an attachment dated 12.16.2020.

Here is how DHSMV generates that number:

- Once a month a data pull is conducted for the number of vehicles registered in the state, and the number of vehicles that have meet the minimal insurance requirements as reported to the Department from the Insurance industry. Those numbers are reflected on the page and used to create a rate. Commercial vehicles are excluded from the pull since it is only to reflect personally owned vehicles.

The insurance industry generates a very different number. A 2017 Insurance Research Council report estimated that in 2015, 26.7 percent of Florida drivers were uninsured. This was the highest uninsured motorist rate in the country. In my experience, the insurance industry points to this number rather than the DHSMV number. I've included the 2017 IRC report as an attachment.

Here is how the IRC generates their number:

- Uninsured motorist rates were estimated by comparing the injury portion of UM insurance coverage with bodily injury (BI) liability coverage. If an insured person is injured in an auto accident caused by an at-fault driver, then he or she will file a BI liability claim against the at-fault driver seeking compensation for their injury. However, if the at-fault driver is uninsured or the injured person is a victim of a hit-and-run driver, then the injured person will file a UM claim with their own insurance company to seek compensation. Claim frequencies measure the number of insurance claims per 100 vehicles insured for an entire year. The ratio of UM claim frequency to BI claim frequency represents the chance that someone injured in an auto accident was the victim of an uninsured at-fault driver.

It think the IRC number likely overestimates the number of true uninsured in Florida because Florida does not require BI coverage. The most likely ways the DHSMV number is incorrect is if there are large numbers of unregistered vehicles on the roads, or the insurance industry data is somehow incorrect regarding the real number of insureds.

Personally, I think that by mandating BI, the IRC number of 26.7% is likely to decrease because more drivers will have BI, but the DHSMV number will increase because the coverage will likely be more expensive for some people that currently buy PIP/PD only policies.

Executive Summary

Most licensed drivers in the United States are required by state law to maintain liability insurance coverage that will compensate others for injuries or damages resulting from auto accidents in which the insured is found to be at fault. Forty-nine states and the District of Columbia have adopted compulsory insurance laws requiring drivers to maintain liability insurance coverage.<sup>1</sup> Even in New Hampshire, the only state without a compulsory auto insurance law, drivers who have demonstrated a lack of financial responsibility for past auto accidents must provide proof of financial responsibility for potential future accidents.<sup>2</sup>

Despite the near-universal requirement that drivers maintain liability insurance coverage, a significant number do not, and these uninsured drivers increase costs for drivers who do have coverage. Auto insurance policies typically include uninsured motorist (UM) coverage that will protect the insured if they are injured by an at-fault uninsured driver. The costs associated with UM insurance coverage can be significant. According to the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC), the countrywide average premium cost per covered vehicle for UM coverage in 2013 was $67.<sup>3</sup>

Uninsured motorists pose additional costs for insurance companies, state governments, and taxpayers. In 2012, the average UM claim included $11,379 in claimed medical losses and $7,960 in lost wages.<sup>4</sup> In addition to underwriting UM insurance coverage and processing UM insurance claims, auto insurance companies must comply with regulations in many states requiring insurers to inform the state any time auto insurance coverage is cancelled. State governments administer taxpayer-funded programs to monitor the insurance status of motor vehicles registered in the state.

This report updates previous Insurance Research Council (IRC) estimates of the percentage of drivers who are uninsured. New estimates for the years 2013–15 are presented, along with earlier estimates from 1999–2012. The new estimates are based on the analysis of auto injury claim frequency data provided by 143 insurance companies, representing 60 percent of the private passenger auto insurance market countrywide in 2015.

Uninsured motorist rates were estimated by comparing the injury portion of UM insurance coverage with bodily injury (BI) liability coverage. If an insured person is injured in an auto accident caused by an at-fault driver, then he or she will file a BI liability claim against the at-fault driver seeking compensation for their injury. However, if the at-fault driver is uninsured or the injured person is a victim of a hit-and-run driver, then the injured person will file a UM claim with their own insurance company to seek compensation. Claim frequencies measure the number of insurance claims per 100 vehicles insured for an entire year. The ratio of UM claim frequency to BI claim frequency represents the chance that someone injured in an auto accident was the victim of an uninsured at-fault driver.

Because an at-fault driver is either uninsured or insured, the UM to BI claim frequency ratio estimates the percentage of all drivers who are uninsured. For example, if, in a group of 10,000 vehicle owners, 1,000 (10 percent) do not have auto liability insurance and accidents involving injuries occur at a frequency of 5 percent per year, then 500 auto accidents with an injury would occur ( $5 \text{ percent} \times 10,000$ ), of which 50 would involve uninsured drivers ( $10 \text{ percent} \times 500$ ). Five of the 50 accidents (10 percent) would involve another uninsured motorist, while 45 of the accidents would involve insured motorists as the injured parties. As a result, these 45 injured individuals would submit UM claims to their own insurers, producing a claim frequency rate of 0.005 (45 UM claims for 9,000 insured vehicles). Meanwhile, there would be 450 BI claims for 9,000 insured vehicles, producing a BI claim frequency of 0.05. The ratio of UM to BI claim frequencies would be 0.10, or 10 percent ( $0.005/0.05$ ). Thus, the ratio of UM to BI claim frequencies produces a measure of the probability that an injury to an insured car occupant will have been the fault of an uninsured driver. This approach assumes that insured and uninsured drivers experience the same frequency of at-fault accidents resulting in injuries. If accident rates for uninsured drivers are greater than for insured drivers, then the IRC estimates understate the true prevalence of uninsured drivers. If, on the other hand, accident rates for insured drivers are greater than for uninsured drivers, then the IRC estimates overstate the true prevalence of uninsured drivers.

Major findings

- In 2015, when someone was injured in an auto accident in the U.S., the chances were about one in 8 that the at-fault driver in the accident was uninsured. From 2010 to 2015, the countrywide ratio of UM to BI claim frequencies increased from 12.3 percent to 13.0 percent, following a seven-year decline from a high of 14.9 percent in 2003.
- The percentage of uninsured drivers varied significantly by state. In 2015, the UM to BI claim frequency ratio was highest in Florida (26.7 percent) and lowest in Maine (4.5 percent). Other states with comparatively high uninsured motorist rates in 2015 were Mississippi (23.7 percent), New Mexico (20.8 percent), Michigan (20.3 percent) and Tennessee (20.0 percent). Figure 1 illustrates the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers in each state in 2015. In thirteen states and the District of Columbia, the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers was equal to or greater than 15 percent.

- Five states (Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, Florida, and North Dakota) experienced increases in their estimated uninsured motorist rates of 3 percentage points or more from 2006–15. Two of these states (Michigan and Florida) had uninsured motorist rates exceeding 20 percent in 2015. Massachusetts and North Dakota had comparatively low uninsured motorist rates in 2015, even after experiencing significant increases over the 2006–15 period.
- Several states experienced significant improvements in their uninsured motorist rates over the 2006–15 period. Oklahoma’s rate fell 13.5 percentage points, from 24.0 percent to 10.5 percent, likely due to legislation enacted in 2013 aimed at reducing the number of uninsured drivers. New Mexico also experienced a significant decline in its uninsured motorist rate—from 30.7 percent to 20.8 percent.
- High uninsured motorist rates do not always indicate high underlying claim frequencies. For example, Michigan had one of the highest uninsured motorist rates in the country in 2015 (20.3 percent), but also had one of the country’s lowest UM and BI claim frequency rates. Indiana experienced low BI claim frequency rates and medium UM claim frequency rates, but had one of the ten highest uninsured motorist estimates (16.7 percent).
- Uninsured motorist rates are likely influenced by several factors. Higher average expenditures for auto liability insurance coverage are associated with higher rates of uninsured motorists, although the relationship is relatively weak and insurance cost is not a strong predictor of uninsured motorist rates. Future IRC research will explore the factors and conditions that explain uninsured motorist rates across states and over time.

National Uninsured Motorists Trends

The IRC previously estimated that, in 2012, the countrywide uninsured motorist rate was 12.6 percent.<sup>5</sup> This report adds three additional years to the trend of uninsured motorist estimates. The IRC estimates that the percentage of drivers countrywide who were uninsured increased to 12.7 percent in 2013, and then to 13.0 percent in 2014. In 2015, the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers remained at 13.0 percent.

The percentage of drivers who are uninsured has increased slowly since 2011, when the UM rate was at its lowest since 1980, 12.2 percent (Figure 2). Uninsured motorist rates have typically fluctuated between 11 and 15 percent. Only 6 of the 37 years that the IRC has studied uninsured motorists had estimated rates that fell outside the 11 to 15 percent range. The current estimate of 13 percent is in the middle of that range.

The ratio of UM and BI claim frequency rates forms the basis for the IRC’s estimate of the prevalence of uninsured motorists. Figure 3 depicts change over time in UM and BI claim frequency rates and the UM to BI ratio by indexing each measure to 1, starting in 1999. The trends illustrate how changes in underlying claim frequencies affect the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers. The UM to BI claim frequency ratio (the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers) changes very little when UM and BI claim frequency trends follow each other closely. For example, from 2014 to 2015, the UM and BI claim frequency rates both increased, but at approximately the same rate, thus resulting in no change in the UM to BI ratio. When UM and BI claim frequency trends move in different directions, or move in the same direction but at different rates, then the UM to BI claim frequency ratio changes. For example, from 2007 to 2008, the UM claim frequency rate decreased, but not as rapidly as BI claim frequency. As a result, the UM to BI claim frequency rate increased. A more dramatic example can be seen with 2009 to 2010, when UM claim frequency decreased as BI claim frequency increased, resulting in a significant decline in the UM to BI ratio, from 13.8 to 12.3 percent.

Despite long-term declines in both UM and BI claim frequencies, the UM to BI claim frequency ratio was only slightly different in 2015, at 13.0 percent, than it was in 1999, when it was 12.7 percent. The UM to BI ratio was little changed because UM and BI claim frequency rates experienced very similar declines over the sixteen-year period. If the UM and BI claim frequency trends had experienced very different trends, then the UM to BI ratio in 2015 would have differed considerably from what it was in 1999.

Countrywide uninsured motorists and bodily injury claim frequency rates, as well as the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers (the UM to BI claim frequency ratio) are presented in Figure 4 for the years 1999–2015. Only claims involving bodily injury are included in the UM claim frequency rates. Claim frequency rates and uninsured motorist estimates prior to 1999 can be found in previous IRC Uninsured Motorists reports.

State UM Trends

Individual state UM to BI claim frequency ratios in 2015 ranged from 4.5 percent in Maine to 26.7 percent in Florida. Four other states, in addition to Florida, had UM to BI ratios of 20 percent or more: Mississippi (23.7 percent), New Mexico (20.8 percent), Michigan (20.3 percent), and Tennessee (20.0 percent). Wide variation in uninsured motorist rates across states is not a new phenomenon; similar differences have been documented in previous IRC UM studies. The 2015 ranking of states by the percentage of uninsured drivers, as measured by the UM to BI claim frequency ratio, is shown in figure 5.

*Number of paid claims per 100 insured exposures.

In 2015, twenty states had uninsured motorist rates equal to or greater than the countrywide rate (13.0 percent) while 30 states had rates below the countrywide rate. Most of the states with the highest uninsured motorist rates in 2015 also had high rates in 2006, but that was not the case for all of them. Indiana, for example, ranked eighth in 2015 but only twentieth in 2006. Similarly, Arkansas ranked ninth in 2015, but nineteenth in 2006. Conversely, some states with relatively high rankings in 2006 had significantly lower rankings 10 years later. Oklahoma, for example, had the fourth highest uninsured motorist rate in 2006, but ranked thirty-first by 2015.

Uninsured motorist rates for individual states often change from year-to-year, although the changes are typically small. Some states, however, have experienced significant changes over extended periods of time. Figure 6 lists states with the greatest increases or decreases in their UM to BI ratios from 2006 to 2015. Although the 2015 UM to BI ratio for Massachusetts (6.2 percent) was less than one-half the countrywide rate, the state experienced the largest percentage point increase, rising 4.8 points over the ten-year period. Many of the other states with the largest percentage point increases also are among the states with the highest UM to BI ratios in 2015. Michigan, for example, experienced a 3.8 percentage point increase in its UM to BI ratio, and Florida, which ranked fifth highest among all the states in 2006, ranked first in 2015, with a UM to BI ratio of 26.7 percent. This followed a 3.4 percentage point increase over 10 years.

Among the states with significant decreases in their UM to BI ratios, Oklahoma is particularly noteworthy. The dramatic decrease in Oklahoma's ratio (falling from 24.0 percent to 10.5 percent) may be attributed to the enactment of legislation in 2013 aimed at reducing the number of uninsured drivers.<sup>6</sup> Other states experiencing substantial decreases include New Mexico (declining 9.0 points to 20.8 percent) and Alabama (declining 8.0 points to 18.4 percent). Even with substantial decreases, however, New Mexico and Alabama are among the states with the highest estimated percentage of uninsured drivers. Another state to note is California, where the UM to BI ratio dropped 5.7 points, to 15.2 percent. In 2006, California had the sixth highest estimated percentage of uninsured drivers in the country. By 2015, California ranked twelfth among all the states.

Further insight into uninsured motorist rates is found in the underlying claim frequency rates used to calculate UM to BI claim frequency ratios. Figure 7 indicates for each state whether UM and BI claim frequencies are relatively low, medium, or high. The 10 states with the highest UM to BI ratios are shown in bold. Uninsured motorist rates may be high even when claim frequency rates are low, as was the case with Michigan, where strong no-fault rules limit all types of liability claims involving bodily injury. States with medium and high BI claim frequency rates and high UM claim frequency rates tend to have higher UM to BI ratios. Thirteen of 17 states with this combination of claim frequencies also experienced UM to BI ratios equal to or greater than the countrywide average (13.0 percent), in 2015.

BI Claim Frequency

UM and BI claim frequency rates varied more across states than did UM to BI claim frequency ratios. The coefficient of variation (CV) is a commonly used measure of variation across a set of data. It is particularly useful in comparing different groups of data with different characteristics. Expressed as a percentage, a higher CV indicates greater variation among the data in a group, and a lower CV indicates less variation. The CV for UM claim frequency in 2015 was 65 percent, compared with 46 percent for BI claim frequency, which indicates that BI claim frequency varied less across states than UM claim frequency. The CV for state UM to BI claim frequency ratios was even lower at 39 percent, indicating that state uninsured motorist rates, as measured by UM to BI ratios, varied less than the underlying claim frequencies on which the uninsured motorist estimates are based.

Understanding why uninsured motorist rates vary significantly across states is a critical requirement to devise effective strategies to reduce the prevalence of uninsured drivers. For example, as might be expected, higher insurance costs are associated with higher uninsured motorist rates. Figure 8 illustrates the relationship between state UM to BI ratios and average liability premiums, as calculated by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners. Average liability premiums are the total premiums paid by policyholders for all auto liability coverages combined, divided by the number of insured liability exposures (that is, the number of vehicles insured for an entire year).<sup>7</sup> The slope of the line and the dispersion of states around the line indicates that only about 15 percent of the total variation in the UM to BI ratios of every state and the District of Columbia in 2014 was explained by average liability premium costs. In other words, the average cost of insurance (average liability premium) explains only a portion of the variation in uninsured motorist rates across states. A $200 difference in average liability premium costs was associated with an average 2.4 percentage point difference in UM to BI ratios. However, the wide dispersion of states at different premium cost levels indicates that cost alone is a poor predictor of uninsured motorist rates. States with similar insurance costs had uninsured motorist rates that varied widely. For example, in states with average liability premium costs ranging narrowly between $750 and $850, the UM to BI ratio ranged from 6.2 percent to 26.7 percent. This finding suggests that factors in addition to the cost of insurance likely contribute to the prevalence of uninsured drivers in any particular state.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>8</sup> This analysis could be strengthened by controlling for differences in liability coverage limits actually purchased. Information on coverage limits in force, however, was not available to the IRC.

Each point denotes the UM to BI ratio and average liability premium for a single state in 2014.

Many states have taken steps to encourage drivers to obtain auto insurance coverage and to reduce the frequency of uninsured driving. The most common approach to promoting insurance coverage is to enact compulsory auto insurance laws requiring motor vehicle owners to obtain property damage and bodily injury liability coverage with specific minimum coverage limits. Figure 9 lists the minimum insurance requirements for motorists in each state. In addition to requiring liability coverage, states with no-fault systems require Personal Injury Protection (PIP) coverage. Several states also require UM coverage to protect those who incur medical and/or property damage losses caused by an uninsured driver. Compulsory insurance requirements, while designed and intended to promote insurance coverage, may have the unintended effect of increasing the prevalence of uninsured drivers if the amount of coverage required, and the associated costs, are greater than what some drivers believe they are able to afford or prefer to pay.

Most states also prescribe specific penalties and fines for failing to comply with state insurance requirements. The penalties for driving without insurance vary widely, ranging from $100 for a first offense to a year in jail for multiple violations.<sup>9</sup> The states also take a variety of steps to enforce insurance requirements and identify drivers who fail to maintain minimum coverage. In several instances, state enforcement mechanisms require insurance companies to report detailed information to state agencies whenever a change in a policy that might indicate that a vehicle is no longer appropriately insured occurs.

Compulsory insurance requirements, fines and penalties for noncompliance, and the cost and affordability of insurance coverage are just some of the factors that may influence the prevalence of uninsured motorists. Future IRC research will explore how these factors work both independently and in concert to explain differences in uninsured motorist rates across states.

Methodology

IRC analyzed UM and BI liability exposure and claim count data provided by participating companies for the years 2013, 2014, and 2015. Data from previous IRC studies were also examined. Fourteen insurers, representing approximately 60 percent of the private passenger auto liability insurance business countrywide, participated in the study. Each insurer provided data for its total private passenger auto line of business (preferred, standard, and nonstandard lines) in each state. The number of earned car years and the number of incurred claims, including incurred but not reported claims, were combined to calculate UM and BI claim frequencies and the corresponding UM to BI claim frequency ratio.

The ratio of UM to BI claim frequencies produces a reasonable estimate of the proportion of injury-producing accidents caused by uninsured or hit-and-run motorists. Claim frequencies, rather than claim counts, were used to minimize distortions from different numbers of UM and BI earned car years. Calculating the size of the uninsured driver population is important in fashioning appropriate public policies to address the uninsured motorist issue and to measure the effectiveness of different approaches. The illegal nature of driving a vehicle without insurance makes obtaining an exact and accurate number of uninsured drivers in each state a difficult task. The ratio of UM to BI claim frequencies provides an estimate of the probability that an at-fault driver in an accident was uninsured and unable to satisfy their liability for someone else's injuries caused by the accident. Therefore, the UM to BI ratio provides a measure of the impact on society of uninsured motorists.

A limitation of the UM to BI ratio is that the UM claim frequency also includes injury claims from hit-and-run accidents in which it is unknown if the at-fault driver had insurance. Also, any potential underlying differences in claiming behavior between injured parties deciding to make a BI claim versus a UM claim could affect underlying claim frequencies. Vehicles that were not insured, but also not driven on the road, do not factor into the UM to BI ratio. Finally, this approach assumes that insured and uninsured drivers experience the same frequency of at-fault accidents resulting in injuries. If accident rates for uninsured drivers are actually greater than or less than the rates for insured drivers, then IRC estimates understate or overstate, respectively, the true prevalence of uninsured drivers. Considering these factors, the UM to BI ratio provides a consistent and reasonable measure for comparing the estimated percentage of uninsured drivers from state to state and over time within each state.

Description of Relevant Auto Insurance Coverages

The claim frequency information in this study relied on the UM and BI portions of private passenger auto injury insurance coverage. If an injury occurred to a person in an auto accident and the other driver was at fault, the injured person would file a BI claim against the at-fault driver. Because the injured claimant is typically someone outside the driver's household, BI claims are referred to as third-party claims. BI payments can include coverage for medical expenses and lost wages, as well as payments for general damages, sometimes referred to as pain and suffering payments.

However, if an injury occurred to a person in an auto accident and the other driver was at fault but did not have liability insurance, the injured person would file a UM claim with his or her own insurance company. The insured's UM coverage pays the amount the injured person would have otherwise received from the at-fault driver. Eligibility for payments from either BI or UM coverage depends on the other driver being at fault for the accident.

Other auto injury insurance coverages, such as medical payments (MP) and PIP, were not included in this analysis because neither involves a comparable group of claims to UM claims. UM is a fault-based coverage, whereas MP and PIP are no-fault, first-party coverages.

This study examines the role of attorneys in the process of settling of auto injury claims. In an on-line survey, respondents who were injured in auto accidents were asked about their experience, including satisfaction with the claim process, their decision whether to talk to or hire an attorney, and the services provided by attorneys.

Affordability in Auto Injury Insurance: Cost Drivers in Twelve Jurisdictions, June 2016, 132 pages.

This study identifies and documents the common and unique factors and conditions underlying rising auto injury insurance claim costs in 12 jurisdictions (Delaware, District of Columbia, Florida, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Mississippi, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island, and West Virginia).

Trends in Auto Injury Insurance Claims, 2015 Edition, September 2015, 69 pages.

This report examines the frequency, severity and loss costs associated with auto injury insurance claims under the property damage and bodily injury liability and personal injury protection coverages from 1990 to 2013. Countrywide and individual state outcomes and trends are analyzed.

Trends in Auto Insurance Affordability, August 2015, 48 pages.

This report monitors trends in auto insurance affordability across states and over time using the IRC's auto insurance expenditure-to-income ratio. Using data from the BLS's Consumer Expenditure Survey, the report also analyzes auto insurance affordability trends for low-to-moderate income consumers and inspects differences in affordability trends across various goods and services considered necessities.

Fraud and Buildup and Auto Injury Claims, January 2015, 48 pages.

This report provides a unique perspective on claim abuse among auto injury claims closed with payment. Using data from the 2012 closed claim data collection, it describes the prevalence of fraud and buildup among the five main private passenger coverages and includes analysis of different types of abuse, estimates of the excess payments attributable to fraud and buildup, and variations by state. It also examines the differences in claiming behavior between claims with the appearance of abuse and other claims and provides information about some of the fraud-fighting tools used by insurers.

Third-Party Bad Faith in Florida's Automobile Insurance System, August 2014, 12 pages.

Bad-faith lawsuits targeting automobile insurers in Florida impose a heavy burden on the state's auto insurance system and auto insurance consumers. This report examines the effect that potential bad-faith settlements have on underlying claiming behavior in Florida. Estimates of additional claim costs attributable to the bad-faith legal environment are included.

Attorney Involvement in Auto Injury Claims, July 2014, 50 pages.

This report uses data from the 2012 closed claim study to examine trends in the rate of attorney involvement in auto injury claims over time and across states. It also provides details on the interaction between the presence of attorneys and cost drivers such as medical treatment and claim abuse and looks at how represented claimants fare compared to claimants without attorneys with respect to claim payment and time to settlement.

Auto Injury Insurance Claims: Countrywide Patterns in Treatment, Cost, and Compensation, 2014 Edition,

March 2014, 65 pages.

This closed claim study is based on a sample of more than 35,000 auto injury claims paid in 2012. The report compares 2012 data to results from similar studies conducted in 2007 and earlier. The study examines trends in claim patterns, including characteristics of the accidents and those injured, medical treatment, losses and payments, the claim settlement process, attorney involvement, and fraud.

Automobile Insurance Affordability, November 2013, 30 pages.

This report seeks to establish a conceptually logical definition of automobile insurance affordability and examine changes and differences in automobile insurance affordability over time and across states. It also analyzes variables (including competition, regulation, residual market size, richness of the system, uninsured motorists, and the unemployment rate) that may influence the variance in automobile insurance affordability across states and over time. Using these variables, a multivariate model is estimated to determine each factor's impact and significance on affordability.

Interstate Differences in Medical Utilization in Auto Injury Claims, July 2013, 48 pages.

This report documents significant differences across states in the use of selected diagnostic and treatment services in auto injury insurance claims. The report also illustrates the potential savings available by bringing utilization rates in high-use states down to median state levels.

Insurance Fraud: A Public View, 2012 Edition, December 2012, 44 pages.

This report updates previous IRC studies surveying the public about the acceptability and perceived frequency of various types of insurance fraud, with special emphasis on auto insurance fraud. It also examines attitudes toward a variety of tools that insurers and law enforcement use to fight against insurance fraud, including claim handling techniques and consequences for fraudulent behavior, and the public's willingness to perform fraud-fighting efforts.

Uninsured Motorists

Uninsured Motorists, 2017 Edition, October 2017, 58 pages.

This study examines trends in uninsured motorists countrywide and in individual states based on uninsured motorists and bodily injury claim frequencies from 2013, 2014, and 2015. The report includes previous estimates, countrywide and by state, beginning in 1999.

The Potential Effects of No Pay, No Play Laws, November 2012, 31 pages.

This study seeks to measure the impact of no pay, no play laws on the percentage of uninsured motorists. It also estimates the costs of noneconomic damages awarded to uninsured motorists in states that have yet to enact such laws. The findings suggest that not only would a properly enforced no pay, no play law result in a moderate decrease in uninsured motorists, it may also reduce auto insurance costs.

Other Issues

Public Understanding of Hurricane Deductibles: Need for Consumer Education Persists, June 2017, 40 pages.

This report examines public understanding of the nature and effects of hurricane deductibles and other special deductibles that are applicable to storm-related homeowners insurance claims. The study is based on a survey of privately insured homeowners in five coastal states.

Attorney Involvement in Homeowners Insurance Claims in Texas, May 2017, 36 pages.

This study examines a sample of closed homeowners insurance claims for property damage occurring from 2008 to 2013, exploring the distribution of the number of claims and the dollars paid across regions within the state. The rate of attorney involvement is examined, with particular focus on claims stemming from wind and hail damage. The report documents the spread of attorney involvement across counties in Texas and provides estimates for the impact of continued increases.

The Sharing Economy: Public Participation and Views, August 2016, 58 pages.

This study examines public familiarity with and participation in the sharing economy. Also explored in the report are various insurance-related aspects of the sharing economy. The study is based on the responses of 1,105 participants in a survey fielded by GfK Public Affairs & Corporate Communications.

Auto Insurance Telematics: Consumer Attitudes and Opinions, November 2015, 25 pages.

This report examines how often consumers shop for auto insurance, how they go about shopping, the choices made after shopping, satisfaction with the shopping experience, and the use of Internet-based personal technology when shopping for insurance. The report also looks at differences in shopping behavior and technology use across demographic groups.

The Affordable Care Act and Property-Casualty Insurance, February 2014.

The Affordable Care Act (ACA) dramatically alters healthcare markets and health insurance systems in the United States. Although the property-casualty insurance industry is not directly included or targeted by the act, it is not immune to its effects. This white paper identifies the ways in which the ACA may affect the property-casualty insurance industry.

Expert Views of Auto Insurance Rate Regulation, August 2013, 40 pages.

This report surveys academic experts in risk and insurance on the effectiveness of prior approval and market-oriented rate regulatory policies in automobile insurance. Senator Burgess Files Legislation to Repeal Florida's Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law

SB 54 Repeals PIP, Requires BI Coverage, Creates New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions

Tallahassee—State Senator Danny Burgess (R-Zephyrhills) today filed Senate Bill 54, Motor Vehicle Insurance. The legislation repeals Florida's current Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law, which requires drivers to carry personal injury protection coverage, instead requiring that drivers carry bodily injury liability coverage. The bill also creates a new framework to govern motor vehicle insurance claims for bad faith failure to settle.

"Florida is one of only two states in the country that does not currently require drivers to carry liability coverage that would immediately kick in if they cause the bodily injury or death of another person while operating a motor vehicle," said Senate President Wilton Simpson (R-Trilby). "PIP coverage is too expensive for the benefits it provides. It's the right time for Florida to move to mandatory coverage for bodily injury liability."

"Replacing our no-fault system with a bodily injury liability system more appropriately places liability where it should be – with the party that caused the accident," said Senator Burgess. "Additionally, the bill creates a new framework for handling bad faith litigation that provides a clear set of standards to govern the conduct of both parties in the claims handling process, which we believe will lead to better outcomes for both insured Floridians and their insurance companies."

Repeals No-Fault, Requires Bodily Injury Liability Coverage

SB 54 repeals the Florida Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law (No-Fault Law), which requires every owner and registrant of a motor vehicle in this state to maintain Personal Injury Protection (PIP) coverage. The bill enacts financial responsibility requirements for liability for motor vehicle ownership or operation, as follows:

For bodily injury (BI) or death of one person in any one crash, $25,000, and

Subject to that limit for one person, $50,000 for BI or death of two or more people in any one crash.

- Retains the existing $10,000 financial responsibility requirement for property damage.
- Revises required coverage amounts for garage liability and commercial motor vehicle insurance, and increases the cash deposit amount required for a certificate of self-insurance establishing financial responsibility for owners and operators of motor vehicles that are not for-hire vehicles.
- Repealing the No-Fault Law eliminates the limitations on recovering pain and suffering damages from PIP insureds, which currently require bodily injury that causes death or significant and permanent injury.

Requires Medical Payments Coverage

SB 54 requires insurers to offer medical payments coverage (MedPay) with limits of $5,000 or $10,000 to cover medical expenses of the insured. Insurers may also offer other policy limits that exceed $5,000, and may offer deductibles of up to $500. The bill requires that insurers must reserve $5,000 of MedPay benefits for 30 days to pay physicians or dentists who provide emergency services and care or who provide hospital inpatient care.

Creates a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions

SB 54 creates a new framework to govern all bad faith claims for failure to settle related to motor vehicle insurance. The bill requires insurers to follow claims handling best practices standards based on long-established good faith duties related to claim handling, claim investigation, defense of the insured, and settlement negotiations.

The bill establishes that it is a condition precedent to bringing a third-party bad faith action not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., that the claimant serve a demand for settlement. The demand must:

- Identify the date and location of the loss, the claimant, and insured.
- State the legal and factual basis of the claim.
- Detail the claimant's injuries, medical treatment, and the amount of current and reasonably anticipated future damages.
- Demand a settlement amount, which may not exceed the insured's policy limit.
- Release, if accepted, the insured from any further liability.
- Not provide conditions on the settlement other than payment of the demand and the ability of the claimant to take an examination under oath of the insured.

The bill allows the third-party bad faith claimant to condition the demand for settlement on taking a two hour examination under oath (EUO) of the insured limited to discovering recoverable assets. The bad faith claimant may withdraw the demand for settlement after the EUO. If the insured refuses to submit to the EUO, the insurer may tender policy limits without obtaining a release of the insured and may not be held liable if there is an excess judgment against the insured.

The bill provides that in a third-party action for bad faith failure to settle not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., the insurer is not liable for bad faith if the insurer tenders policy limits within 30 days of receiving a demand for settlement.

Allows for Named Driver Exclusions

SB 54 authorizes the exclusion of a specifically named individual from specified insurance coverages under a private passenger motor vehicle policy, with the written consent of the policyholder.

SB 54 Repeals PIP, Requires BI Coverage, Creates Best Practice Standards for Claim Handling

Tallahassee—The Senate Committee on Banking and Insurance, chaired by Senator Jim Boyd (R-Bradenton) today passed Senate Bill 54, Motor Vehicle Insurance, by Senator Danny Burgess (R-Zephyrhills). The legislation repeals Florida's current Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law, which requires drivers to carry personal injury protection coverage, instead requiring that drivers carry bodily injury liability coverage. The bill also creates best practice standards for handling motor vehicle insurance claims.

"For everyone's protection, drivers must be insured at sufficient levels. Our goal is to lower the number of uninsured and underinsured drivers and provide a greater safety net in the event of an accident," said Senate President Wilton Simpson (R-Trilby).

"Florida's No-Fault Law has failed to significantly reduce litigation. Meanwhile, the cost of PIP remains high, when compared to the benefits it provides," said Senator Burgess. "Senate Bill 54 transforms this ineffective and outdated insurance structure, which we believe will lead to a more stable insurance market and better outcomes for insured Floridians when they face the unfortunate and in some cases tragic circumstance of being involved in a serious vehicle accident.”

Repeals No-Fault, Requires Bodily Injury Liability Coverage

SB 54 repeals the Florida Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law (No-Fault Law), which requires every owner and registrant of a motor vehicle in this state to maintain Personal Injury Protection (PIP) coverage. The bill enacts financial responsibility requirements for liability for motor vehicle ownership or operation, as follows:

- For bodily injury (BI) or death of one person in any one crash, $25,000, and
- Subject to that limit for one person, $50,000 for BI or death of two or more people in any one crash.

- Revises required coverage amounts for garage liability and commercial motor vehicle insurance, and increases the cash deposit amount required for a certificate of self-insurance establishing financial responsibility for owners and operators of motor vehicles that are not for-hire vehicles.
- Repealing the No-Fault Law eliminates the limitations on recovering pain and suffering damages from PIP insureds, which currently require bodily injury that causes death or significant and permanent injury.

Requires Medical Payments Coverage

SB 54 requires insurers to offer medical payments coverage (MedPay) with limits of $5,000 or $10,000 to cover medical expenses of the insured. Insurers may also offer other policy limits that exceed $5,000, and may offer deductibles of up to $500. The bill requires that insurers must reserve $5,000 of MedPay benefits for 30 days to pay physicians or dentists who provide emergency services and care or who provide hospital inpatient care.

- Identify the date and location of the loss, the claimant, and insured.
- State the legal and factual basis of the claim.
- Detail the claimant’s injuries, medical treatment, and the amount of current and reasonably anticipated future damages.
- Demand a settlement amount, which may not exceed the insured’s policy limit.
- Release, if accepted, the insured from any further liability.
- Not provide conditions on the settlement other than payment of the demand and the ability of the claimant to take an examination under oath of the insured.

The bill allows the third-party bad faith claimant to condition the demand for settlement on taking a two hour examination under oath (EUO) of the insured limited to discovering recoverable assets. The Honorable Danny Burgess
The Florida Senate

404 South Monroe Street
Tallahassee, FL 32399-1100

Dear Rep. Fernandez-Barquin and Sen. Burgess:

On behalf of the Florida Police Chiefs Association and over 900 of Florida's top law enforcement executives from across every region of the state, we applaud your sponsorship of HB 1 and SB 484, respectively, that are intended to maintain public order and keep the peace.

The Florida Police Chiefs Association believes that peaceful protest is a defining hallmark of our society. The member agencies of the Florida Police Chiefs Association are committed to defending every citizen's right to peacefully protest. At the same time, violent protests endanger lives and threaten the rights of every other citizen whom law enforcement officers swear an oath to protect. Violent and disorderly assembly, destroying property, harassing, and threatening citizens going about their business, and attacking law enforcement are all unacceptable behavior that your legislation aims to prevent.

Finally, while we've long called for additional funding for mental health and social service support, we staunchly oppose any disproportionate reduction in funding for law enforcement that would jeopardize public safety.

Thank you for your leadership on these issues and your unwavering support for Florida's law enforcement and the rule of law.

Sincerely,

Amy Mercer
Executive Director

Hi Sen. Burgess,

I hope you're well. My name is Akela Lacy and I'm a reporter at The Intercept. I am writing to ask about your bill SB 484. Am working on a piece for mid-week, my deadline is 12pm tomorrow.

You introduced the bill in response to protests this summer, and filed it after the attacks at the Capitol last week. What was the original aim of the bill? And has that changed since what we saw at the Capitol last week? Can you comment on why you decided to file the bill now?

Thank you,

Akela

RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE JOINT ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURES COMMITTEE

---

JAPC Duties Under Joint Rule Four of the Florida Legislature

The committee's duties and responsibilities described in Joint Rule 4.6 include:

Maintaining a continuous review of the statutory authority on which each rule is based, and advising agencies whenever such authority is significantly affected.

Maintaining a continuous review of rules and identifying and requesting agencies to repeal any rule or rule provision which reiterates or paraphrases any statute or for which statutory authority has been repealed.

Reviewing administrative rules and advising agencies of its findings.

Performing the duties prescribed by chapter 120 regarding the adoption and promulgation of rules.

Generally reviewing agency action pursuant to the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act.

Reporting to the Legislature at least annually and recommending needed legislation or other appropriate action. The report shall include:

- The number of objections voted by the committee and the outcome of such objections.
- The number of suspensions recommended by the committee and the outcome of such recommendations.
- The number of administrative determinations filed on the invalidity of a proposed or existing rule and the outcome of such determinations.
- The number of petitions for judicial review filed on the invalidity of a proposed or existing rule and the outcome of such petitions.
- Any recommendations provided to the standing committees during the preceding year as to the advisability of considering changes to the delegated legislative authority to adopt rules in specific circumstances.

Consulting regularly with legislative standing committees regarding legislative authority for proposed rules and other matters relating to legislative authority for agency action.

Maintaining a continuous review of the rulemaking process, including a review of agency procedure and of complaints based on such procedure.

Establishing measurement criteria to evaluate whether agencies are complying with the delegation of legislative authority in adopting and implementing rules.

Maintaining a continuous review of statutes that authorize agencies to adopt rules and making recommendations to the appropriate standing committees of the House and Senate as to the advisability of considering changes to the delegated legislative authority to adopt rules in specific circumstances.

JAPC Responsibilities Under Section 120.54, F.S., Related to Agency Rulemaking

At least 21 days before the proposed adoption date, each agency is required to file with the committee a copy of each rule it proposes to adopt; a copy of any material incorporated by reference in the rule; a detailed written statement of the facts and circumstances justifying the proposed rule; a copy of any statement of estimated regulatory costs that has been prepared; a statement of the extent to which the proposed rule relates to federal standards or rules on the same subject; and the published notice of rulemaking. The published notice must include a short, plain explanation of the purpose and effect of the proposed action; the full text of the proposed rule or amendment and a summary thereof; a reference to the grant of rulemaking authority and a reference to the Florida Statutes or Laws of Florida being implemented or interpreted; a summary of the agency's statement of the estimated regulatory costs, if one has been prepared; a statement that any person may provide the agency with information regarding the statement of estimated regulatory costs or a proposal for a lower cost regulatory alternative within 21 days after publication of the notice; a statement as to whether the proposed rule is expected to require legislative ratification; and the procedure for requesting a public hearing on the proposed rule. 120.54(3)(a)

If an agency determines that a proposed rule will affect small businesses, the agency is required to send notice of the proposed rule to the rules ombudsman in the Executive Office of the Governor not less than 28 days prior to adoption. If the rules ombudsman in the Executive Office of the Governor offers to the agency regulatory alternatives and the agency does not adopt all alternatives offered, the agency is required to file a detailed written statement with the committee explaining the reasons for failure to adopt such alternatives. The agency is required to send a copy of the statement to the rules ombudsman in the Executive Office of the Governor. 120.54(3)(b)

The adopting agency is required to file with the committee a notice of no change or technical change in a proposed rule at least 7 days before adoption. When any change is made in a proposed rule, other than a technical change, the adopting agency is required to file with the committee a notice of the change, along with the reasons for such change, at least 21 days prior to adoption. 120.54(3)(d)

At the time the rule is filed for adoption, the committee is required to certify whether the agency has responded in writing to all material and timely written comments or written inquiries made on behalf of the committee. 120.54(3)(e)4.

If the committee notifies the agency that an objection to a rule is being considered, the agency may postpone the adoption of the rule to accommodate review of the rule by the committee.

When an agency postpones adoption for this purpose, the 90-day period for filing the rule is tolled until the committee notifies the agency that it has completed its review. 120.54(3)(e)6.

Notice of the adoption by an agency of emergency rules, other than those of educational units or units of local government, shall be provided to the committee along with any material incorporated by reference in the rules. 120.54(4)(a)

The committee is required to review uniform rules of procedure adopted by the Administration Commission. 120.54(5)(a)

Agencies are empowered to adopt rules substantively identical to federal regulations using an expedited rulemaking process, which requires that the committee receive a copy of the agency's notice of intent to adopt a rule at least 21 days prior to the date of filing for adoption. 120.54(6)

If a petition to initiate rulemaking by an agency is directed to an unadopted rule and the agency, after holding a public hearing, does not initiate rulemaking or otherwise comply with the requested action, the agency shall file a statement of its reasons with the committee. The committee is required to forward a copy of the statement to the substantive committees of the Legislature with primary oversight jurisdiction of the agency. JAPC or a committee with oversight jurisdiction may hold a hearing directed to the agency statement. The committee holding the hearing may recommend appropriate legislation. 120.54(7)

JAPC Review of Agency Rules Pursuant to 120.545, F.S.

The committee is required to examine each proposed rule, except for rules exempted by s. 120.81(1)(e) and (2), and its accompanying material, and each emergency rule, and may examine any existing rule to determine whether:

- The rule is an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority pursuant to s. 120.52(8).
- The statutory authority for the rule has been repealed.
- The rule reiterates or paraphrases statutory material.
- The rule is in proper form.
- The notice given prior to adoption was sufficient to give adequate notice of the purpose and effect of the rule.
- The rule is consistent with expressed legislative intent pertaining to the specific provisions of law which the rule implements.
- The rule is necessary to accomplish the objectives of the specific law implemented.
- The rule is a reasonable implementation of the law as it affects the convenience of the general public or persons particularly affected by the rule.
- The rule could be made less complex or more easily comprehensible to the general public.
- The rule's statement of estimated regulatory costs complies with the requirements of s. 120.541 and whether the rule imposes regulatory costs on the regulated person, county, or city which could be reduced by the adoption of less costly alternatives that substantially accomplish the statutory objectives.

- The rule will require additional appropriations.
- If the rule is an emergency rule, there exists an emergency justifying the rule, the agency is within its statutory authority, and the rule was adopted in compliance with s. 120.54(4). 120.545(1)

The committee may request from an agency any information reasonably necessary for examination of a rule. The committee is required to consult with legislative standing committees with jurisdiction over the subject matter of rules examined. 120.545(2)

If the committee votes to object to a rule, it shall certify that fact to the agency along with a statement detailing its objections with particularity, within 5 days after the objection. The committee must notify the House Speaker and Senate President of the objection concurrent with certification to the agency. The agency is required to notify the committee of its intention to comply with the objection or its refusal to do so within 30 days, if headed by an individual, or within 45 days, if headed by a collegial body. If the agency fails to respond to the committee's objection to a rule not yet in effect within the prescribed time limits, the committee is required to notify the Department of State that the agency, by its failure to respond, has elected to withdraw the rule. Failure of the agency to respond to an objection to a rule that is in effect constitutes a refusal to amend or repeal the rule. Failure of the agency to respond to an objection to a statement of estimated regulatory costs constitutes a refusal to prepare a corrected statement of estimated regulatory costs. If the agency refuses to meet the committee's objection, the committee is required to file with the Department of State a notice of the objection for publication in the Florida Administrative Weekly. 120.545(2) - (7)

The committee is authorized to submit to the Senate President and House Speaker a recommendation that legislation be introduced to address the committee's objection in the event that the agency fails to initiate administrative action consistent with the committee's objection within 60 days after the objection, or then fails to proceed in good faith to complete such action. If the committee votes to recommend the introduction of legislation, the committee is required to certify that fact to the agency within 5 days. The committee may request that the agency temporarily suspend the rule or suspend the adoption of a proposed rule, pending consideration of proposed legislation during the next regular session of the Legislature. The agency must respond to the certification within 30 days, if headed by an individual, or within 45 days, if headed by a collegial body, by either temporarily suspending the rule or the adoption of a proposed rule, or notifying the committee that it refuses to do so. The agency's failure to respond to the committee certification constitutes a refusal to suspend the rule or to suspend the adoption of the proposed rule. The committee is required to prepare proposed legislation to address the committee's objection in accordance with the rules of the Senate and the House for pre-filing and introduction in the next regular legislative session. The proposed legislation shall be presented to the Senate President and House Speaker with the committee recommendation. 120.545(8)

JAPC Responsibilities Under Miscellaneous Provisions of Chapter 120

The committee is authorized to notify the Department of State and the appropriate agency when a law is repealed that is implemented by an agency rule. 120.536(2)

An agency that is required to revise a statement of estimated regulatory costs must provide the statement to the committee at least 21 days before filing the rule for adoption. 120.541(1)(d)

A person subject to regulation by an agency rule may file a petition with the agency, with a copy to the committee, requesting a variance or waiver from the agency's rule. A copy of the agency's order granting or denying the petition shall be filed with the committee and shall contain a statement of the relevant facts and reasons supporting the agency's action. 120.542

Any form used by an agency in its dealings with the public, along with any accompanying instructions, must be filed with the committee before it is used. 120.55(1)(a)

When the Department of State is in doubt whether a rule published in the official version of the Florida Administrative Code is still in full force and effect, the department is required to submit to the agency a request for a statement to that effect, and provide a copy to the committee. 120.555

The Division of Administrative Hearings is required to forward to the committee a copy of each petition seeking an administrative determination of the validity of a proposed or existing rule. A written notice from the chair of the committee stating that the committee will consider an objection to a challenged rule at its next scheduled meeting is evidence of good cause for a continuance of a scheduled hearing on the petition. The division is required to provide a copy of the administrative law judge's final order to the committee. 120.56(1)

The final order of the administrative law judge on a petition challenging the validity of an agency statement not adopted as a rule pursuant to s. 120.54 is required to be transmitted to the committee by the division. 120.56(4)

A copy of each petition seeking a declaratory statement by an agency is required to be transmitted to the committee by the agency. 120.565

The Administration Commission is required to transmit to the committee a copy of a petition seeking an exemption from any requirement of chapter 120, a certified copy of the order granting or denying the petition, and a copy of any alternative procedures prescribed. 120.63

Not later than February 1 of each year, the Division of Administrative Hearings is required to issue a written report to the committee including: (1) a summary of the extent and effect of agencies' use of administrative law judges, court reporters, and other personnel in proceedings under chapter 120; (2) recommendations for change or improvement in the APA or any agency's practice or policy with respect thereto; (3) recommendations as to those types of cases or disputes which should be conducted under the summary hearing process described in s. 120.574; and (4) a report regarding each agency's compliance with the filing requirement in s. 120.57(1)(m). 120.65(8)

By October 1st of each year, each agency head and the agency's principal legal advisor, must file a certification with the committee indicating that they have reviewed the agency's regulatory plan and the agency regularly reviews its rules during the identified period to determine if the rules remain consistent with the agency's rulemaking authority and laws implemented.

120.74(2)

Each agency must file a certification with the committee once it has published a notice of rule development and upon filing a deadline extension of regulatory plan certification per the requirements in s.120.74(4) and (5). 120.74(6)

An agency must deliver a written explanation for failing to comply with the requirements of s. 120.74(2)(a) or s. 120.74(5), within 15 days after written demand from the committee.
120.74(8)

Joint Rule Four

Florida Legislature:

There shall be appointed to each standing joint committee no fewer than five and no more than seven members from each house.

(4)(a) The President of the Senate shall appoint a member of the Senate to serve as the chair, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall appoint a member of the House of Representatives to serve as the vice chair, for:

1. The Legislative Auditing Committee and the Committee on Public Counsel Oversight, for the period from noon on August 1 of the calendar year following the general election until the next general election.

2. The Administrative Procedures Committee for the period from the Organization Session until noon on August 1 of the calendar year following the general election.

(c) A vacancy in an appointed chair or vice chair shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

4.2—Procedures in Joint Committees

The following rules shall govern procedures in joint committees other than conference committees:

(2)(a) Joint committees shall meet only within the dates, times, and locations authorized by both the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

(b) Joint committee meetings shall meet at the call of the chair. In the absence of the chair, the vice chair shall assume the duty to convene and preside over meetings and such other duties as provided by law or joint rule. During a meeting properly convened, the presiding chair may temporarily assign the duty to preside at that meeting to another joint committee member until the assignment is relinquished or revoked.

(c) Before any joint committee may hold a meeting, a notice of such meeting shall be provided to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives no later than 4:30 p.m. of the 7th day before the meeting. For purposes of effecting notice to members of the house to which the chair does not belong, notice to the Secretary of the Senate shall be deemed notice to members of the Senate and notice to the Clerk of the House shall be deemed notice to members of the House of Representatives. Noticed meetings may be canceled by the chair with the approval of at least one presiding officer.

(d) If a majority of its members from each house agree, a joint committee may continue a properly noticed meeting after the expiration of the time called for the meeting. However, a joint committee may not meet beyond the time authorized by the presiding officers without special leave granted by both presiding officers.

(3) The presiding officers shall interpret, apply, and enforce rules governing joint committees by agreement when the rule at issue is a joint rule. Unless otherwise determined or overruled by an agreement of the presiding officers, the chair shall determine all questions of order arising in joint committee meetings, but such determinations may be appealed to the committee during the meeting.

4.3—Powers of Joint Committees

(1) A joint committee may exercise the subpoena powers vested by law in a standing committee of the Legislature. (3) A joint committee may not create subcommittees or workgroups unless authorized by both presiding officers.

(2) Subject to joint policies adopted under Joint Rule 3.2, the presiding officers shall appoint and remove the staff director and, if needed, a general counsel and any other staff necessary to assist each joint committee. All joint committee staff shall serve at the pleasure of the presiding officers. Upon the initial adoption of these joint rules in a biennium, each joint committee staff director position shall be deemed vacant until an appointment is made.

4.6—Special Powers and Duties of the Administrative Procedures Committee

The Administrative Procedures Committee shall:

appropriate action. Such report shall include the number of objections voted by the committee, the number of suspensions recommended by the committee, the number of administrative determinations filed on the invalidity of a proposed or existing rule, the number of petitions for judicial review filed on the invalidity of a proposed or existing rule, and the outcomes of such actions. Such report shall also include any recommendations provided to the standing committees during the preceding year under subsection (11).

(8) Subject to the approval of the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, have standing to seek judicial review, on behalf of the Legislature or the citizens of this state, of the validity or invalidity of any administrative rule to which the committee has voted an objection and that has not been withdrawn, modified, repealed, or amended to meet the objection. Judicial review under this subsection may not be initiated until the Governor and the head of the agency making the rule to which the committee has objected have been notified of the committee's proposed action and have been given a reasonable opportunity, not to exceed 60 days, for consultation with the committee. The committee may expend public funds from its appropriation for the purpose of seeking judicial review.

(9) Maintain a continuous review of the administrative rulemaking process, including a review of agency procedure and of complaints based on such agency procedure.

(10) Establish measurement criteria to evaluate whether agencies are complying with the delegation of legislative authority in adopting and implementing rules.

120.51 Short title.—This chapter may be known and cited as the “Administrative Procedure Act.”

*History.—*s. 1, ch. 74-310.

120.515 Declaration of policy.—This chapter provides uniform procedures for the exercise of specified authority. This chapter does not limit or impinge upon the assignment of executive power under Article IV of the State Constitution or the legal authority of an appointing authority to direct and supervise those appointees serving at the pleasure of the appointing authority. For purposes of this chapter, adherence to the direction and supervision of an appointing authority does not constitute delegation or transfer of statutory authority assigned to the appointee.

*History.—*s. 7, ch. 2012-116.

120.52 Definitions.—As used in this act:

(1) “Agency” means the following officers or governmental entities if acting pursuant to powers other than those derived from the constitution:

(2) “Agency action” means the whole or part of a rule or order, or the equivalent, or the denial of a petition to adopt a rule or issue an order. The term also includes any denial of a request made under s. 120.54(7).

(3) “Agency head” means the person or collegial body in a department or other governmental unit statutorily responsible for final agency action. An agency head appointed by and serving at the pleasure of an appointing authority remains subject to the direction and supervision of the appointing authority, but actions taken by the agency head as authorized by statute are official acts.

(4) "Committee" means the Administrative Procedures Committee.

(5) "Division" means the Division of Administrative Hearings. Any document filed with the division by a party represented by an attorney shall be filed by electronic means through the division's website. Any document filed with the division by a party not represented by an attorney shall, whenever possible, be filed by electronic means through the division's website.

A final order includes all materials explicitly adopted in it. The clerk shall indicate the date of filing on the order.

(8) "Invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority" means action that goes beyond the powers, functions, and duties delegated by the Legislature. A proposed or existing rule is an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority if any one of the following applies:

(a) The agency has materially failed to follow the applicable rulemaking procedures or requirements set forth in this chapter;

(b) The agency has exceeded its grant of rulemaking authority, citation to which is required by s. 120.54(3)(a)1.;

(c) The rule enlarges, modifies, or contravenes the specific provisions of law implemented, citation to which is required by s. 120.54(3)(a)1.;

(d) The rule is vague, fails to establish adequate standards for agency decisions, or vests unbridled discretion in the agency;

(e) The rule is arbitrary or capricious. A rule is arbitrary if it is not supported by logic or the necessary facts; a rule is capricious if it is adopted without thought or reason or is irrational; or

(f) The rule imposes regulatory costs on the regulated person, county, or city which could be reduced by the adoption of less costly alternatives that substantially accomplish the statutory objectives.

A grant of rulemaking authority is necessary but not sufficient to allow an agency to adopt a rule; a specific law to be implemented is also required. An agency may adopt only rules that implement or interpret the specific powers and duties granted by the enabling statute. No agency shall have authority to adopt a rule only because it is reasonably related to the purpose of the enabling legislation and is not arbitrary and capricious or is within the agency's class of powers and duties, nor shall an agency have the authority to implement statutory provisions setting forth general legislative intent or policy. Statutory language granting rulemaking authority or generally describing the powers and functions of an agency shall be construed to extend no further than implementing or interpreting the specific powers and duties conferred by the enabling statute.

(9) "Law implemented" means the language of the enabling statute being carried out or interpreted by an agency through rulemaking.

(10) "License" means a franchise, permit, certification, registration, charter, or similar form of authorization required by law, but it does not include a license required primarily for revenue purposes when issuance of the license is merely a ministerial act.

(11) "Licensing" means the agency process respecting the issuance, denial, renewal, revocation, suspension, annulment, withdrawal, or amendment of a license or imposition of terms for the exercise of a license.

(12) "Official reporter" means the publication in which an agency publishes final orders, the index to final orders, and the list of final orders which are listed rather than published.

(13) "Party" means:

(a) Specifically named persons whose substantial interests are being determined in the proceeding.

(b) Any other person who, as a matter of constitutional right, provision of statute, or provision of agency regulation, is entitled to participate in whole or in part in the proceeding, or whose substantial interests will be affected by proposed agency action, and who makes an appearance as a party.

(c) Any other person, including an agency staff member, allowed by the agency to intervene or participate in the proceeding as a party. An agency may by rule authorize limited forms of participation in agency proceedings for persons who are not eligible to become parties.

(d) Any county representative, agency, department, or unit funded and authorized by state statute or county ordinance to represent the interests of the consumers of a county, when the proceeding involves the substantial interests of a significant number of residents of the county and the board of county commissioners has, by resolution, authorized the representative, agency, department, or unit to represent the class of interested persons. The authorizing resolution shall apply to a specific proceeding and to appeals and ancillary proceedings thereto, and it shall not be required to state the names of the persons whose interests are to be represented.

The term "party" does not include a member government of a regional water supply authority or a governmental or quasi-judicial board or commission established by local ordinance or special or general law where the governing membership of such board or commission is shared with, in whole or in part, or appointed by a member government of a regional water supply authority in proceedings under s. 120.569, s. 120.57, or s. 120.68, to the extent that an interlocal agreement under FL-SEN-21-0182-A-000590

ss. 163.01 and 373.713 exists in which the member government has agreed that its substantial interests are not affected by the proceedings or that it is to be bound by alternative dispute resolution in lieu of participating in the proceedings. This exclusion applies only to those particular types of disputes or controversies, if any, identified in an interlocal agreement.

(14) "Person" means any person described in s. 1.01, any unit of government in or outside the state, and any agency described in subsection (1).

(15) "Recommended order" means the official recommendation of an administrative law judge assigned by the division or of any other duly authorized presiding officer, other than an agency head or member of an agency head, for the final disposition of a proceeding under ss. 120.569 and 120.57.

(16) "Rule" means each agency statement of general applicability that implements, interprets, or prescribes law or policy or describes the procedure or practice requirements of an agency and includes any form which imposes any requirement or solicits any information not specifically required by statute or by an existing rule. The term also includes the amendment or repeal of a rule. The term does not include:

(a) Internal management memoranda which do not affect either the private interests of any person or any plan or procedure important to the public and which have no application outside the agency issuing the memorandum.

(b) Legal memoranda or opinions issued to an agency by the Attorney General or agency legal opinions prior to their use in connection with an agency action.

(c) The preparation or modification of:

1. Agency budgets.
2. Statements, memoranda, or instructions to state agencies issued by the Chief Financial Officer or Comptroller as chief fiscal officer of the state and relating or pertaining to claims for payment submitted by state agencies to the Chief Financial Officer or Comptroller.

3. Contractual provisions reached as a result of collective bargaining.

4. Memoranda issued by the Executive Office of the Governor relating to information resources management.

(17) "Rulemaking authority" means statutory language that explicitly authorizes or requires an agency to adopt, develop, establish, or otherwise create any statement coming within the definition of the term "rule."

(18) "Small city" means any municipality that has an unincarcerated population of 10,000 or less according to the most recent decennial census.

(19) "Small county" means any county that has an unincarcerated population of 75,000 or less according to the most recent decennial census.

(20) "Unadopted rule" means an agency statement that meets the definition of the term "rule," but that has not been adopted pursuant to the requirements of s. 120.54.

(21) "Variance" means a decision by an agency to grant a modification to all or part of the literal requirements of an agency rule to a person who is subject to the rule. Any variance shall conform to the standards for variances outlined in this chapter and in the uniform rules adopted pursuant to s. 120.54(5).

(22) "Waiver" means a decision by an agency not to apply all or part of a rule to a person who is subject to the rule. Any waiver shall conform to the standards for waivers outlined in this chapter and in the uniform rules adopted pursuant to s. 120.54(5).

120.525 Meetings, hearings, and workshops.—

(1) Except in the case of emergency meetings, each agency shall give notice of public meetings, hearings, and workshops by publication in the Florida Administrative Register and on the agency's website not less than 7 days before the event. The notice shall include a statement of the general subject matter to be considered.

(2) An agenda shall be prepared by the agency in time to ensure that a copy of the agenda may be received at least 7 days before the event by any person in the state who requests a copy and who pays the reasonable cost of the copy. The agenda, along with any meeting materials available in electronic form excluding confidential and exempt information, shall be published on the agency's website. The agenda shall contain the items to be considered in order of presentation. After the agenda has been made available, a change shall be made only for good cause, as determined by the person designated to preside, and stated in the record. Notification of such change shall be at the earliest practicable time.

(3) If an agency finds that an immediate danger to the public health, safety, or welfare requires immediate action, the agency may hold an emergency public meeting and give notice of such meeting by any procedure that is fair under the circumstances and necessary to protect the public interest, if:

(a) The procedure provides at least the procedural protection given by other statutes, the State Constitution, or the United States Constitution.

(b) The agency takes only that action necessary to protect the public interest under the emergency procedure.

(c) The agency publishes in writing at the time of, or prior to, its action the specific facts and reasons for finding an immediate danger to the public health, safety, or welfare and its reasons for concluding that the procedure used is fair under the circumstances. The agency findings of immediate danger, necessity, and procedural fairness shall be judicially reviewable.

(4) For purposes of establishing a quorum at meetings of regional planning councils that cover three or more counties, a voting member who appears via telephone, real-time videoconferencing, or similar real-time electronic or video communication that is broadcast publicly at the meeting location may be counted toward the quorum requirement if at least one-third of the voting members of the regional planning council are physically present at the meeting location. A member must provide oral, written, or electronic notice of his or her intent to appear via telephone, real-time videoconferencing, or similar real-time electronic or video communication to the regional planning council at least 24 hours before the scheduled meeting.

120.53 Maintenance of agency final orders.—

(1) In addition to maintaining records contained in s. 119.021(3), each agency shall also electronically transmit a certified text-searchable copy of each agency final order listed in subsection (2) rendered on or after July 1, 2015, to a centralized electronic database of agency final orders maintained by the division. The database must allow users to research and retrieve the full texts of agency final orders by:

- (a) The name of the agency that issued the final order.
- (b) The date the final order was issued.
- (c) The type of final order.
- (d) The subject of the final order.
- (e) Terms contained in the text of the final order.

(2) The agency final orders that must be electronically transmitted to the centralized electronic database include:

(a) Each final order resulting from a proceeding under s. 120.57 or s. 120.573.

(b) Each final order rendered pursuant to s. 120.57(4) which contains a statement of agency policy that may be the basis of future agency decisions or that may otherwise contain a statement of precedential value.

(c) Each declaratory statement issued by an agency.

(d) Each final order resulting from a proceeding under s. 120.56 or s. 120.574.

(3) Each agency shall maintain a list of all final orders rendered pursuant to s. 120.57(4) that are not required to be electronically transmitted to the centralized electronic database because they do not contain statements of agency policy or statements of precedential value. The list must include the name of the parties to the proceeding and the number assigned to the final order.

(4) Each final order, whether rendered by the agency or the division, that must be electronically transmitted to the centralized electronic database or maintained on a list pursuant to subsection (3) must be electronically transmitted to the database or added to the list within 90 days after the final order is rendered. Each final order that must be electronically transmitted to the database or added to the list must have attached a copy of the complete text of any materials incorporated by reference; however, if the quantity of the materials incorporated makes attachment of the complete text of the materials impractical, the final order may contain a statement of the location of such materials and the manner in which the public may inspect or obtain copies of the materials incorporated by reference.

(5) Nothing in this section relieves an agency from its responsibility for maintaining a subject matter index of final orders rendered before July 1, 2015, and identifying the location of the subject matter index on the agency's website. In addition, an agency may electronically transmit to the centralized electronic database certified copies of all of the final orders that were rendered before July 1, 2015, which were required to be in the subject matter index. The centralized electronic database constitutes the official compilation of administrative final orders rendered on or after July 1, 2015, for each agency.

120.533 Coordination of the transmittal, indexing, and listing of agency final orders by Department of State.—The Department of State shall:

(1) Coordinate the transmittal, indexing, management, preservation, and availability of agency final orders that must be transmitted, indexed, or listed pursuant to s. 120.53.

(2) Provide guidelines for indexing agency final orders. More than one system for indexing may be approved by the Department of State, including systems or methods in use, or proposed for use, by an agency. More than one system may be approved for use by a single agency as best serves the needs of that agency and the public.

(3) Provide for storage and retrieval systems to be maintained by agencies pursuant to s. 120.53(5) for indexing, and making available agency final orders by subject matter. The Department of State may authorize more than one system, including systems in use by an agency. Storage and retrieval systems that may be used by an agency include, without limitation, a designated reporter or reporters, a microfilming system, an automated system, or any other system considered appropriate by the Department of State.

(4) Provide standards and guidelines for the certification and electronic transmittal of copies of agency final orders to the division, as required under s. 120.53, and, to protect the integrity and authenticity of information publicly accessible through the electronic database, coordinate and provide standards and guidelines to ensure the security of copies of agency final orders transmitted and maintained in the electronic database by the division under s. 120.53(1).

(5) For each agency, determine which final orders must be indexed or transmitted.

(6) Require each agency to report to the department concerning which types or categories of agency orders establish precedent for each agency.

(7) Adopt rules as necessary to administer its responsibilities under this section, which shall be binding on all agencies including the division acting in the capacity of official compiler of administrative final orders under s. 120.53, notwithstanding s. 120.65. The Department of State may provide for an alternative official compiler to manage and operate the division's database and related services if the Administration

Commission determines that the performance of the division as official compiler is unsatisfactory.

120.536 Rulemaking authority; repeal; challenge.—

(1) A grant of rulemaking authority is necessary but not sufficient to allow an agency to adopt a rule; a specific law to be implemented is also required. An agency may adopt only rules that implement or interpret the specific powers and duties granted by the enabling statute. No agency shall have authority to adopt a rule only because it is reasonably related to the purpose of the enabling legislation and is not arbitrary and capricious or is within the agency's class of powers and duties, nor shall an agency have the authority to implement statutory provisions setting forth general legislative intent or policy. Statutory language granting rulemaking authority or generally describing the powers and functions of an agency shall be construed to extend no further than implementing or interpreting the specific powers and duties conferred by the enabling statute.

(2) Unless otherwise expressly provided by law:

(a) The repeal of one or more provisions of law implemented by a rule that on its face implements only the provision or provisions repealed and no other provision of law nullifies the rule. Whenever notice of the nullification of a rule under this subsection is received from the committee or otherwise, the Department of State shall remove the rule from the Florida Administrative Code as of the effective date of the law effecting the nullification and update the historical notes for the code to show the rule repealed by operation of law.

(b) The repeal of one or more provisions of law implemented by a rule that on its face implements the provision or provisions repealed and one or more other provisions of law nullifies the rule or applicable portion of the rule to the extent that it implements the repealed law. The agency having authority to repeal or amend the rule shall, within 180 days after the effective date of the repealing law, publish a notice of rule development identifying all portions of rules affected by the repealing law, and if no notice is timely published the operation of each rule implementing a repealed provision of law shall be suspended until such notice is published.

(c) The repeal of one or more provisions of law that, other than as provided in paragraph (a) or paragraph (b), causes a rule or portion of a rule to be of uncertain enforceability requires the Department of State to treat the rule as provided by s. 120.555. A rule shall be considered to be of uncertain enforceability under this paragraph if the division notifies the Department of State that a rule or a portion of the rule has been invalidated in a division proceeding based upon a repeal of law, or the committee gives written notification to the Department of State and the agency having power to amend or repeal the rule that a law has been repealed creating doubt about whether the rule is still in full force and effect.

(3) The Administrative Procedures Committee or any substantially affected person may petition an agency to repeal any rule, or portion thereof, because it exceeds the rulemaking authority permitted by this section. Not later than 30 days after the date of filing the petition if the agency is headed by an individual, or not later than 45 days if the agency is headed by a collegial body, the agency shall initiate rulemaking proceedings to repeal the rule, or portion thereof, or deny the petition, giving a written statement of its reasons for the denial.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed to change the legal status of a rule that has otherwise been judicially or administratively determined to be invalid.

History.—s. 9, ch. 96-159; s. 3, ch. 99-379; s. 15, ch. 2000-151; s. 15, ch. 2005-2; s. 4, ch. 2008-104; s. 1, ch. 2012-31.

120.54 Rulemaking.—

(1) GENERAL PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO ALL RULES OTHER THAN EMERGENCY RULES.—

(a) Rulemaking is not a matter of agency discretion. Each agency statement defined as a rule by s. 120.52 shall be adopted by the rulemaking procedure provided by this section as soon as feasible and practicable.

1. Rulemaking shall be presumed feasible unless the agency proves that:

a. The agency has not had sufficient time to acquire the knowledge and experience reasonably necessary to address a statement by rulemaking; or

b. Related matters are not sufficiently resolved to enable the agency to address a statement by rulemaking.

2. Rulemaking shall be presumed practicable to the extent necessary to provide fair notice to affected persons of relevant agency procedures and applicable principles, criteria, or standards for agency decisions unless the agency proves that:

a. Detail or precision in the establishment of principles, criteria, or standards for agency decisions is not reasonable under the circumstances; or

b. The particular questions addressed are of such a narrow scope that more specific resolution of the matter is impractical outside of an adjudication to determine the substantial interests of a party based on individual circumstances.

(b) Whenever an act of the Legislature is enacted which requires implementation of the act by rules of an agency within the executive branch of state government, such rules shall be drafted and formally proposed as provided in this section within the times provided in s. 120.74(4) and (5).

(c) No statutory provision shall be delayed in its implementation pending an agency's adoption of implementing rules unless there is an express statutory provision prohibiting its application until the adoption of implementing rules.

(d) In adopting rules, all agencies must, among the alternative approaches to any regulatory objective and to the extent allowed by law, choose the alternative that does not impose regulatory costs on the regulated person, county, or city which could be reduced by the adoption of less costly alternatives that substantially accomplish the statutory objectives.

(e) No agency has inherent rulemaking authority, nor has any agency authority to establish penalties for violation of a rule unless the Legislature, when establishing a penalty, specifically provides that the penalty applies to rules.

(f) An agency may adopt rules authorized by law and necessary to the proper implementation of a statute prior to the effective date of the statute, but the rules may not be effective until the statute upon which they are based is effective. An agency may not adopt retroactive rules, including retroactive rules intended to clarify existing law, unless that power is expressly authorized by statute.

(g) Each rule adopted shall contain only one subject.

(h) In rulemaking proceedings, the agency may recognize any material which may be judicially noticed, and it may provide that materials so recognized be incorporated into the record of the proceeding. Before the record of any proceeding is completed, all parties shall be provided a list of these materials and given a reasonable opportunity to examine them and offer written comments or written rebuttal.

(i)1. A rule may incorporate material by reference but only as the material exists on the date the rule is adopted. For purposes of the rule, changes in the material are not effective unless the rule is amended to incorporate the changes.

2. An agency rule that incorporates by specific reference another rule of that agency automatically incorporates subsequent amendments to the referenced rule unless a contrary intent is clearly indicated in the referencing rule. A notice of amendments to a rule that has been incorporated by specific reference in other rules of that agency must explain the effect of those amendments on the referencing rules.

3. In rules adopted after December 31, 2010, material may not be incorporated by reference unless:

a. The material has been submitted in the prescribed electronic format to the Department of State and the full text of the material can be made available for free public access through an electronic hyperlink from the rule making the reference in the Florida Administrative Code; or

b. The agency has determined that posting the material on the Internet for purposes of public examination and inspection would constitute a violation of federal copyright law, in which case a statement to that effect, along with the address of locations at the Department of State and the agency at which the material is available for public inspection and examination, must be included in the notice required by subparagraph (3)(a)1.

4. A rule may not be amended by reference only. Amendments must set out the amended rule in full in the same manner as required by the State Constitution for laws.

5. Notwithstanding any contrary provision in this section, when an adopted rule of the Department of Environmental Protection or a water management district is incorporated by reference in the other agency's rule to implement a provision of part IV of chapter 373, subsequent amendments to the rule are not effective as to the incorporating rule unless the agency incorporating by reference notifies the committee and the Department of State of its intent to adopt the subsequent amendment, publishes notice of such intent in the Florida Administrative Register, and files with the Department of State a copy of the amended rule incorporated by reference. Changes in the rule incorporated by reference are effective as to the other agency 20 days after the date of the published notice and filing with the Department of State. The Department of State shall amend the history note of the incorporating rule to show the effective date of such change. Any substantially affected person may, within 14 days after the date of publication of the notice of intent in the Florida Administrative Register, file an objection to rulemaking with the agency. The objection shall specify the portions of the rule incorporated by reference to which the person objects and the reasons for the objection. The agency shall not have the authority under this subparagraph to adopt those portions of the rule specified in such objection. The agency shall publish notice of the objection and of its action in response in the next available issue of the Florida Administrative Register.

6. The Department of State may adopt by rule requirements for incorporating materials pursuant to this paragraph.

(j) A rule published in the Florida Administrative Code must be indexed by the Department of State within 90 days after the rule is filed. The Department of State shall by rule establish procedures for indexing rules.

(k) An agency head may delegate the authority to initiate rule development under subsection (2); however, rulemaking responsibilities of an agency head under subparagraph (3)(a)1., subparagraph (3)(e)1., or subparagraph (3)(e)6. may not be delegated or transferred.

(2) RULE DEVELOPMENT; WORKSHOPS; NEGOTIATED RULEMAKING.—

(a) Except when the intended action is the repeal of a rule, agencies shall provide notice of the development of proposed rules by publication of a notice of rule development in the Florida Administrative Register before providing notice of a proposed rule as required by paragraph (3)(a). The notice of rule development shall indicate the subject area to be addressed by rule development, provide a short, plain explanation of the purpose and effect of the proposed rule, cite the specific legal authority for the proposed rule, and include the preliminary text of the proposed rules, if available, or a statement of how a person may promptly obtain, without cost, a copy of any preliminary draft, if available.

(b) All rules should be drafted in readable language. The language is readable if:

1. It avoids the use of obscure words and unnecessarily long or complicated constructions; and

2. It avoids the use of unnecessary technical or specialized language that is understood only by members of particular trades or professions.

(c) An agency may hold public workshops for purposes of rule development. An agency must hold public workshops, including workshops in various regions of the state or the agency's service area, for purposes of rule development if requested in writing by any affected person, unless the agency head explains in writing why a workshop is unnecessary. The explanation is not final agency action subject to review pursuant to ss. 120.569 and 120.57. The failure to provide the explanation when required may be a material error in procedure pursuant to s. 120.56(1)(c). When a workshop or public hearing is held, the agency must ensure that the persons responsible for preparing the proposed rule are available to explain the agency's proposal and to respond to questions or comments regarding the rule being developed. The workshop may be facilitated or mediated by a neutral third person, or the agency may employ other types of dispute resolution alternatives for the workshop that are appropriate for rule development. Notice of a rule development workshop shall be by publication in the Florida Administrative Register not less than 14 days prior to the date on which the workshop is scheduled to be held and shall indicate the subject area which will be addressed; the agency contact person; and the place, date, and time of the workshop.

(d)1. An agency may use negotiated rulemaking in developing and adopting rules. The agency should consider the use of negotiated rulemaking when complex rules are being drafted or strong opposition to the rules is anticipated. The agency should consider, but is not limited to considering, whether a balanced committee of interested persons who will negotiate in good faith can be assembled, whether the agency is willing to support the work of the negotiating committee, and whether the agency can use the group consensus as the basis for its proposed rule. Negotiated rulemaking uses a committee of designated representatives to draft a mutually acceptable proposed rule.

2. An agency that chooses to use the negotiated rulemaking process described in this paragraph shall publish in the Florida Administrative Register a notice of negotiated rulemaking that includes a listing of the representative groups that will be invited to participate in the negotiated rulemaking process. Any person who believes that his or her interest is not adequately represented may apply to participate within 30 days after publication of the notice. All meetings of the negotiating committee shall be noticed and open to the public pursuant to the provisions of this chapter. The negotiating committee shall be chaired by a neutral facilitator or mediator.

3. The agency's decision to use negotiated rulemaking, its selection of the representative groups, and approval or denial of an application to participate in the negotiated rulemaking process are not agency action. Nothing in this subparagraph is intended to affect the rights of an affected person to challenge a proposed rule developed under this paragraph in accordance with s. 120.56(2).

(3) ADOPTION PROCEDURES.—

(a) Notices.—

1. Prior to the adoption, amendment, or repeal of any rule other than an emergency rule, an agency, upon approval of the agency head, shall give notice of its intended action, setting forth a short, plain explanation of the purpose and effect of the proposed action; the full text of the proposed rule or amendment and a summary thereof; a reference to the grant of rulemaking authority pursuant to which the rule is adopted; and a reference to the section or subsection of the Florida Statutes or the

Laws of Florida being implemented or interpreted. The notice must include a summary of the agency's statement of the estimated regulatory costs, if one has been prepared, based on the factors set forth in s. 120.541(2); a statement that any person who wishes to provide the agency with information regarding the statement of estimated regulatory costs, or to provide a proposal for a lower cost regulatory alternative as provided by s. 120.541(1), must do so in writing within 21 days after publication of the notice; and a statement as to whether, based on the statement of the estimated regulatory costs or other information expressly relied upon and described by the agency if no statement of regulatory costs is required, the proposed rule is expected to require legislative ratification pursuant to s. 120.541(3). The notice must state the procedure for requesting a public hearing on the proposed rule. Except when the intended action is the repeal of a rule, the notice must include a reference both to the date on which and to the place where the notice of rule development that is required by subsection (2) appeared.

2. The notice shall be published in the Florida Administrative Register not less than 28 days prior to the intended action. The proposed rule shall be available for inspection and copying by the public at the time of the publication of notice.

3. The notice shall be mailed to all persons named in the proposed rule and to all persons who, at least 14 days prior to such mailing, have made requests of the agency for advance notice of its proceedings. The agency shall also give such notice as is prescribed by rule to those particular classes of persons to whom the intended action is directed.

4. The adopting agency shall file with the committee, at least 21 days prior to the proposed adoption date, a copy of each rule it proposes to adopt; a copy of any material incorporated by reference in the rule; a detailed written statement of the facts and circumstances justifying the proposed rule; a copy of any statement of estimated regulatory costs that has been prepared pursuant to s. 120.541; a statement of the extent to which the proposed rule relates to federal standards or rules on the same subject; and the notice required by subparagraph 1.

(b) Special matters to be considered in rule adoption.—

1. Statement of estimated regulatory costs.—Before the adoption, amendment, or repeal of any rule other than an emergency rule, an agency is encouraged to prepare a statement of estimated regulatory costs of the proposed rule, as provided by s. 120.541. However, an agency must prepare a statement of estimated regulatory costs of the proposed rule, as provided by s. 120.541, if:

a. The proposed rule will have an adverse impact on small business; or

b. The proposed rule is likely to directly or indirectly increase regulatory costs in excess of $200,000 in the aggregate in this state within 1 year after the implementation of the rule.

2. Small businesses, small counties, and small cities.—

a. Each agency, before the adoption, amendment, or repeal of a rule, shall consider the impact of the rule on small businesses as defined by s. 288.703 and the impact of the rule on small counties or small cities as defined by s. 120.52. Whenever practicable, an agency shall tier its rules to reduce disproportionate impacts on small businesses, small counties, or small cities to avoid regulating small businesses, small counties, or small cities that do not contribute significantly to the problem the rule is designed to address. An agency may define "small business" to include businesses employing more than 200 persons, may define "small county" to include those with populations of more than 75,000, and may define "small city" to include those with populations of more than 10,000, if it finds that such a definition is necessary to adapt a rule to the needs and problems of small businesses, small counties, or small cities. The agency shall consider each of the following methods for reducing the impact of the proposed rule on small businesses, small counties, and small cities, or any combination of these entities:

(I) Establishing less stringent compliance or reporting requirements in the rule.

(II) Establishing less stringent schedules or deadlines in the rule for compliance or reporting requirements.

(III) Consolidating or simplifying the rule's compliance or reporting requirements.

(IV) Establishing performance standards or best management practices to replace design or operational standards in the rule.

(V) Exempting small businesses, small counties, or small cities from any or all requirements of the rule.

b.(I) If the agency determines that the proposed action will affect small businesses as defined by the agency as provided in sub-subparagraph a., the agency shall send written notice of the rule to the rules ombudsman in the Executive Office of the Governor at least 28 days before the intended action.

(II) Each agency shall adopt those regulatory alternatives offered by the rules ombudsman in the Executive Office of the Governor and provided to the agency no later than 21 days after the rules ombudsman's receipt of the written notice of the rule which it finds are feasible and consistent with the stated objectives of the proposed rule and which would reduce the impact on small businesses. When regulatory alternatives are offered by the rules ombudsman in the Executive Office of the Governor, the 90-day period for filing the rule in subparagraph (e)2. is extended for a period of 21 days.

(III) If an agency does not adopt all alternatives offered pursuant to this sub-subparagraph, it shall, before rule adoption or amendment and pursuant to subparagraph (d)1., file a detailed written statement with the committee explaining the reasons for failure to adopt such alternatives. Within 3 working days after the filing of such notice, the agency shall send a copy of such notice to the rules ombudsman in the Executive Office of the Governor.

(c) Hearings.—

1. If the intended action concerns any rule other than one relating exclusively to procedure or practice, the agency shall, on the request of any affected person received within 21 days after the date of publication of the notice of intended agency action, give affected persons an opportunity to present evidence and argument on all issues under consideration. The agency may schedule a public hearing on the rule and, if requested by any affected person, shall schedule a public hearing on the rule. When a public hearing is held, the agency must ensure that staff are available to explain the agency's proposal and to respond to questions or comments regarding the rule. If the agency head is a board or other collegial body created under s. 20.165(4) or s. 20.43(3)(g), and one or more requested public hearings is scheduled, the board or other collegial body shall conduct at least one of the public hearings itself and may not delegate this responsibility without the consent of those persons requesting the public hearing. Any material pertinent to the issues under consideration submitted to the agency within 21 days after the date of publication of the notice or submitted to the agency between the date of publication of the notice and the end of the final public hearing shall be considered by the agency and made a part of the record of the rulemaking proceeding.

2. Rulemaking proceedings shall be governed solely by the provisions of this section unless a person timely asserts that the person's substantial interests will be affected in the proceeding and affirmatively demonstrates to the agency that the proceeding does not provide adequate opportunity to protect those interests. If the agency determines that the rulemaking proceeding is not adequate to protect the person's interests, it shall suspend the rulemaking proceeding and convene a separate proceeding under the provisions of ss. 120.569 and 120.57. Similarly situated persons may be requested to join and participate in the separate proceeding. Upon conclusion of the separate proceeding, the rulemaking proceeding shall be resumed.

(d) Modification or withdrawal of proposed rules.—

1. After the final public hearing on the proposed rule, or after the time for requesting a hearing has expired, if the rule has not been changed from the rule as previously filed with the committee, or contains only technical changes, the adopting agency shall file a notice to that effect with the committee at least 7 days prior to filing the rule for adoption. Any change, other than a technical change that does not affect the substance of the rule, must be supported by the record of public hearings held on the rule, must be in response to written material submitted to the agency within 21 days after the date of publication of the notice of intended agency action or submitted to the agency between the date of publication of the notice and the end of the final public hearing, or must be in response to a proposed objection by the committee. In addition, when any change is made in a proposed rule, other than a technical change, the adopting agency shall provide a copy of a notice of change by certified mail or actual delivery to any person who requests it in writing no later than 21 days after the notice required in paragraph (a). The agency shall file the notice of change with the committee, along with the reasons for the change, and provide the notice of change to persons requesting it, at least 21 days prior to filing the rule for adoption. The notice of change shall be published in the Florida Administrative Register at least 21 days prior to filing the rule for adoption. This subparagraph does not apply to emergency rules adopted pursuant to subsection (4).

2. After the notice required by paragraph (a) and prior to adoption, the agency may withdraw the rule in whole or in part.

3. After adoption and before the rule becomes effective, a rule may be modified or withdrawn only in the following circumstances:

- a. When the committee objects to the rule;
- b. When a final order, which is not subject to further appeal, is entered in a rule challenge brought pursuant to s. 120.56 after the date of adoption but before the rule becomes effective pursuant to subparagraph (e)6.;
- c. If the rule requires ratification, when more than 90 days have passed since the rule was filed for adoption without the Legislature ratifying the rule, in which case the rule may be withdrawn but may not be modified; or
- d. When the committee notifies the agency that an objection to the rule is being considered, in which case the rule may be modified to extend the effective date by not more than 60 days.

4. The agency shall give notice of its decision to withdraw or modify a rule in the first available issue of the publication in which the original notice of rulemaking was published, shall notify those persons described in subparagraph (a)3. in accordance with the requirements of that subparagraph, and shall notify the Department of State if the rule is required to be filed with the Department of State.

5. After a rule has become effective, it may be repealed or amended only through the rulemaking procedures specified in this chapter.

(e) Filing for final adoption; effective date.—

1. If the adopting agency is required to publish its rules in the Florida Administrative Code, the agency, upon approval of the agency head, shall file with the Department of State three certified copies of the rule it proposes to adopt; one copy of any material incorporated by reference in the rule, certified by the agency; a summary of the rule; a summary of any hearings held on the rule; and a detailed written statement of the facts and circumstances justifying the rule. Agencies not required to publish their rules in the Florida Administrative Code shall file one certified copy of the proposed rule, and the other material required by this subparagraph, in the office of the agency head, and such rules shall be open to the public.

2. A rule may not be filed for adoption less than 28 days or more than 90 days after the notice required by paragraph (a), until 21 days after the notice of change required by paragraph (d), until 14 days after the final public hearing, until 21 days after a statement of estimated regulatory costs required under s. 120.541 has been provided to all persons who submitted a lower cost regulatory alternative and made available to the public, or until the administrative law judge has rendered a decision under s. 120.56(2), whichever applies. When a required notice of change is published prior to the expiration of the time to file the rule for adoption, the period during which a rule must be filed for adoption is extended to 45 days after the date of publication. If notice of a public hearing is published prior to the expiration of the time to file the rule for adoption, the period during which a rule must be filed for adoption is extended to 45 days after adjournment of the final hearing on the rule, 21 days after receipt of all material authorized to be submitted at the hearing, or 21 days after receipt of the transcript, if one is made, whichever is latest. The term “public hearing” includes any public meeting held by any agency at which the rule is considered. If a petition for an administrative determination under s. 120.56(2) is filed, the period during which a rule must be filed for adoption is extended to 60 days after the administrative law judge files the final order with the clerk or until 60 days after subsequent judicial review is complete.

3. At the time a rule is filed, the agency shall certify that the time limitations prescribed by this paragraph have been complied with, that all statutory rulemaking requirements have been met, and that there is no administrative determination pending on the rule.

4. At the time a rule is filed, the committee shall certify whether the agency has responded in writing to all material and timely written comments or written inquiries made on behalf of the committee. The department shall reject any rule that is not filed within the prescribed time limits; that does not comply with all statutory rulemaking requirements and rules of the department; upon which an agency has not responded in writing to all material and timely written inquiries or written comments; upon which an administrative determination is pending; or which does not include a statement of estimated regulatory costs, if required.

5. If a rule has not been adopted within the time limits imposed by this paragraph or has not been adopted in compliance with all statutory rulemaking requirements, the agency proposing the rule shall withdraw the rule and give notice of its action in the next available issue of the Florida Administrative Register.

6. The proposed rule shall be adopted on being filed with the Department of State and become effective 20 days after being filed, on a later date specified in the notice required by subparagraph (a)1., on a date required by statute, or upon ratification by the Legislature pursuant to s. 120.541(3). Rules not required to be filed with the Department of State shall become effective when adopted by the agency head, on a later date specified by rule or statute, or upon ratification by the Legislature pursuant to s. 120.541(3). If the committee notifies an agency that an objection to a rule is being considered, the agency may postpone the adoption of the rule to accommodate review of the rule by the committee. When an agency postpones adoption of a rule to accommodate review by the committee, the 90-day period for filing the rule is tolled until the committee notifies the agency that it has completed its review of the rule.

For the purposes of this paragraph, the term “administrative determination” does not include subsequent judicial review.

(4) EMERGENCY RULES.—

FL-SEN-21-0182-A-000597

(a) If an agency finds that an immediate danger to the public health, safety, or welfare requires emergency action, the agency may adopt any rule necessitated by the immediate danger. The agency may adopt a rule by any procedure which is fair under the circumstances if:

1. The procedure provides at least the procedural protection given by other statutes, the State Constitution, or the United States Constitution.

2. The agency takes only that action necessary to protect the public interest under the emergency procedure.

3. The agency publishes in writing at the time of, or prior to, its action the specific facts and reasons for finding an immediate danger to the public health, safety, or welfare and its reasons for concluding that the procedure used is fair under the circumstances. In any event, notice of emergency rules, other than those of educational units or units of government with jurisdiction in only one or a part of one county, including the full text of the rules, shall be published in the first available issue of the Florida Administrative Register and provided to the committee along with any material incorporated by reference in the rules. The agency's findings of immediate danger, necessity, and procedural fairness shall be judicially reviewable.

(b) Rules pertaining to the public health, safety, or welfare shall include rules pertaining to perishable agricultural commodities or rules pertaining to the interpretation and implementation of the requirements of chapters 97-102 and chapter 105 of the Election Code.

(c) An emergency rule adopted under this subsection shall not be effective for a period longer than 90 days and shall not be renewable, except when the agency has initiated rulemaking to adopt rules addressing the subject of the emergency rule and either:

1. A challenge to the proposed rules has been filed and remains pending; or

2. The proposed rules are awaiting ratification by the Legislature pursuant to s. 120.541(3).

Nothing in this paragraph prohibits the agency from adopting a rule or rules identical to the emergency rule through the rulemaking procedures specified in subsection (3).

(d) Subject to applicable constitutional and statutory provisions, an emergency rule becomes effective immediately on filing, or on a date less than 20 days thereafter if specified in the rule, if the adopting agency finds that such effective date is necessary because of immediate danger to the public health, safety, or welfare.

(5) UNIFORM RULES.—

(a)1. By July 1, 1997, the Administration Commission shall adopt one or more sets of uniform rules of procedure which shall be reviewed by the committee and filed with the Department of State. Agencies must comply with the uniform rules by July 1, 1998. The uniform rules shall establish procedures that comply with the requirements of this chapter. On filing with the department, the uniform rules shall be the rules of procedure for each agency subject to this chapter unless the Administration Commission grants an exception to the agency under this subsection.

2. An agency may seek exceptions to the uniform rules of procedure by filing a petition with the Administration Commission. The Administration Commission shall approve exceptions to the extent necessary to implement other statutes, to the extent necessary to conform to any requirement imposed as a condition precedent to receipt of federal funds or to permit persons in this state to receive tax benefits under federal law, or as required for the most efficient operation of the agency as determined by the Administration Commission. The reasons for the exceptions shall be published in the Florida Administrative Register.

3. Agency rules that provide exceptions to the uniform rules shall not be filed with the department unless the Administration Commission has approved the exceptions. Each agency that adopts rules that provide exceptions to the uniform rules shall publish a separate chapter in the Florida Administrative Code that delineates clearly the provisions of the agency's rules that provide exceptions to the uniform rules and specifies each alternative chosen from among those authorized by the uniform rules. Each chapter shall be organized in the same manner as the uniform rules.

(b) The uniform rules of procedure adopted by the commission pursuant to this subsection shall include, but are not limited to:

1. Uniform rules for the scheduling of public meetings, hearings, and workshops.

2. Uniform rules for use by each state agency that provide procedures for conducting public meetings, hearings, and workshops, and for taking evidence, testimony, and argument at such public meetings, hearings, and workshops, in person and by means of communications media technology. The rules shall provide that all evidence, testimony, and argument presented shall be afforded equal consideration, regardless of the method of communication. If a public meeting, hearing, or workshop is to be conducted by means of communications media technology, or if attendance may be provided by such means, the notice shall so state. The notice for public meetings, hearings, and workshops utilizing communications media technology shall state how persons interested in attending may do so and shall name locations, if any, where communications media technology facilities will be available. Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to diminish the right to inspect public records under chapter 119. Limiting points of access to public meetings, hearings, and workshops subject to the provisions of s. 286.011 to places not normally open to the public shall be presumed to violate the right of access of the public, and any official action taken under such circumstances is void and of no effect. Other laws relating to public meetings, hearings, and workshops, including penal and remedial provisions, shall apply to public meetings, hearings, and workshops conducted by means of communications media technology, and shall be liberally construed in their application to such public meetings, hearings, and workshops. As used in this subparagraph, "communications media technology" FL-SEN-21-0182-A-000598 means the electronic transmission of printed matter, audio, full-motion video, freeze-frame video, compressed video, and digital video by any method available.

3. Uniform rules of procedure for the filing of notice of protests and formal written protests. The Administration Commission may prescribe the form and substantive provisions of a required bond.

4. Uniform rules of procedure for the filing of petitions for administrative hearings pursuant to s. 120.569 or s. 120.57. Such rules shall require the petition to include:

a. The identification of the petitioner, including the petitioner's e-mail address, if any, for the transmittal of subsequent documents by electronic means.

b. A statement of when and how the petitioner received notice of the agency's action or proposed action.

c. An explanation of how the petitioner's substantial interests are or will be affected by the action or proposed action.

d. A statement of all material facts disputed by the petitioner or a statement that there are no disputed facts.

e. A statement of the ultimate facts alleged, including a statement of the specific facts the petitioner contends warrant reversal or modification of the agency's proposed action.

f. A statement of the specific rules or statutes that the petitioner contends require reversal or modification of the agency's proposed action, including an explanation of how the alleged facts relate to the specific rules or statutes.

g. A statement of the relief sought by the petitioner, stating precisely the action petitioner wishes the agency to take with respect to the proposed action.

5. Uniform rules for the filing of request for administrative hearing by a respondent in agency enforcement and disciplinary actions. Such rules shall require a request to include:

a. The name, address, e-mail address, and telephone number of the party making the request and the name, address, and telephone number of the party's counsel or qualified representative upon whom service of pleadings and other papers shall be made;

b. A statement that the respondent is requesting an administrative hearing and disputes the material facts alleged by the petitioner, in which case the respondent shall identify those material facts that are in dispute, or that the respondent is requesting an administrative hearing and does not dispute the material facts alleged by the petitioner; and

c. A reference by file number to the administrative complaint that the party has received from the agency and the date on which the agency pleading was received.

The agency may provide an election-of-rights form for the respondent's use in requesting a hearing, so long as any form provided by the agency calls for the information in sub-subparagraphs a. through c. and does not impose any additional requirements on a respondent in order to request a hearing, unless such requirements are specifically authorized by law.

6. Uniform rules of procedure for the filing and prompt disposition of petitions for declaratory statements. The rules shall also describe the contents of the notices that must be published in the Florida Administrative Register under s. 120.565, including any applicable time limit for the filing of petitions to intervene or petitions for administrative hearing by persons whose substantial interests may be affected.

7. Provision of a method by which each agency head shall provide a description of the agency's organization and general course of its operations. The rules shall require that the statement concerning the agency's organization and operations be published on the agency's website.

8. Uniform rules establishing procedures for granting or denying petitions for variances and waivers pursuant to s. 120.542.

(6) ADOPTION OF FEDERAL STANDARDS.— Notwithstanding any contrary provision of this section, in the pursuance of state implementation, operation, or enforcement of federal programs, an agency is empowered to adopt rules substantively identical to regulations adopted pursuant to federal law, in accordance with the following procedures:

(a) The agency shall publish notice of intent to adopt a rule pursuant to this subsection in the Florida Administrative Register at least 21 days prior to filing the rule with the Department of State. The agency shall provide a copy of the notice of intent to adopt a rule to the committee at least 21 days prior to the date of filing with the Department of State. Prior to filing the rule with the Department of State, the agency shall consider any written comments received within 14 days after the date of publication of the notice of intent to adopt a rule. The rule shall be adopted upon filing with the Department of State. Substantive changes from the rules as noticed shall require republishing of notice as required in this subsection.

(b) Any rule adopted pursuant to this subsection shall become effective upon the date designated by the agency in the notice of intent to adopt a rule; however, no such rule shall become effective earlier than the effective date of the substantively identical federal regulation.

(c) Any substantially affected person may, within 14 days after the date of publication of the notice of intent to adopt a rule, file an objection to rulemaking with the agency. The objection shall specify the portions of the proposed rule to which the person objects and the specific reasons for the objection. The agency shall not proceed pursuant to this subsection to adopt those portions of the proposed rule specified in an objection, unless the agency deems the objection to be frivolous, but may proceed pursuant to subsection (3). An objection to a proposed rule, which rule in no material respect differs from the requirements of the federal regulation upon which it is based, is deemed to be frivolous.

(d) Whenever any federal regulation adopted as an agency rule pursuant to this subsection is declared invalid or is withdrawn, revoked, repealed, remanded, or suspended, the agency shall, within 60 days thereafter, publish a notice of repeal of the substantively identical agency rule in the Florida Administrative Register. Such repeal is effective upon publication of the notice. Whenever any federal regulation adopted as an agency rule pursuant to this subsection is substantially amended, the agency may adopt the amended regulation as a rule. If the amended regulation is not adopted as a rule within 180 days after the effective date of the amended regulation, the original rule is deemed repealed and the agency shall publish a notice of repeal of the original agency rule in the next available Florida Administrative Register.

(e) Whenever all or part of any rule proposed for adoption by the agency is substantively identical to a regulation adopted pursuant to federal law, such rule shall be written in a manner so that the rule specifically references the regulation whenever possible.

(7) PETITION TO INITIATE RULEMAKING.—

(a) Any person regulated by an agency or having substantial interest in an agency rule may petition an agency to adopt, amend, or repeal a rule or to provide the minimum public information required by this chapter. The petition shall specify the proposed rule and action requested. Not later than 30 calendar days following the date of filing a petition, the agency shall initiate rulemaking proceedings under this chapter, otherwise comply with the requested action, or deny the petition with a written statement of its reasons for the denial.

(b) If the petition filed under this subsection is directed to an unadopted rule, the agency shall, not later than 30 days following the date of filing a petition, initiate rulemaking, or provide notice in the Florida Administrative Register that the agency will hold a public hearing on the petition within 30 days after publication of the notice. The purpose of the public hearing is to consider the comments of the public directed to the agency rule which has not been adopted by the rulemaking procedures or requirements of this chapter, its scope and application, and to consider whether the public interest is served adequately by the application of the rule on a case-by-case basis, as contrasted with its adoption by the rulemaking procedures or requirements set forth in this chapter.

(c) If the agency does not initiate rulemaking or otherwise comply with the requested action within 30 days after the public hearing provided for in paragraph (b), the agency shall publish in the Florida Administrative Register a statement of its reasons for not initiating rulemaking or otherwise complying with the requested action and of any changes it will make in the scope or application of the unadopted rule. The agency shall file the statement with the committee. The committee shall forward a copy of the statement to the substantive committee with primary oversight jurisdiction of the agency in each house of the Legislature. The committee or the committee with primary oversight jurisdiction may hold a hearing directed to the statement of the agency. The committee holding the hearing may recommend to the Legislature the introduction of legislation making the rule a statutory standard or limiting or otherwise modifying the authority of the agency.

(d) If the agency initiates rulemaking after the public hearing provided for in paragraph (b), the agency shall publish a notice of rule development within 30 days after the hearing and file a notice of proposed rule within 180 days after the notice of rule development unless, before the 180th day, the agency publishes in the Florida Administrative Register a statement explaining its reasons for not having filed the notice. If rulemaking is initiated under this paragraph, the agency may not rely on the unadopted rule unless the agency publishes in the Florida Administrative Register a statement explaining why rulemaking under paragraph (1)(a) is not feasible or practicable until the conclusion of the rulemaking proceeding.

(8) RULEMAKING RECORD.—In all rulemaking proceedings the agency shall compile a rulemaking record. The record shall include, if applicable, copies of:

- (a) All notices given for the proposed rule.
- (b) Any statement of estimated regulatory costs for the rule.
- (c) A written summary of hearings on the proposed rule.
- (d) The written comments and responses to written comments as required by this section and s. 120.541.
- (e) All notices and findings made under subsection (4).
- (f) All materials filed by the agency with the committee under subsection (3).
- (g) All materials filed with the Department of State under subsection (3).
- (h) All written inquiries from standing committees of the Legislature concerning the rule.

Each state agency shall retain the record of rulemaking as long as the rule is in effect. When a rule is no longer in effect, the record may be destroyed pursuant to the records-retention schedule developed under s. 257.36(6).

120.541 Statement of estimated regulatory costs.—

(1)(a) Within 21 days after publication of the notice required under s. 120.54(3)(a), a substantially affected person may submit to an agency a good faith written proposal for a lower cost regulatory alternative to a proposed rule which substantially accomplishes the objectives of the law being implemented. The proposal may include the alternative of not adopting any rule if the proposal explains how the lower costs and objectives of the law will be achieved by not adopting any rule. If such a proposal is submitted, the 90-day period for filing the rule is extended 21 days. Upon the submission of the lower cost regulatory alternative, the agency shall prepare a statement of estimated regulatory costs as provided in subsection (2), or shall revise its prior statement of estimated regulatory costs, and either adopt the alternative or provide a statement of the reasons for rejecting the alternative in favor of the proposed rule.

(b) If a proposed rule will have an adverse impact on small business or if the proposed rule is likely to directly or indirectly increase regulatory costs in excess of $200,000 in the aggregate within 1 year after the implementation of the rule, the agency shall prepare a statement of estimated regulatory costs as required by s. 120.54(3)(b).

(c) The agency shall revise a statement of estimated regulatory costs if any change to the rule made under s. 120.54(3)(d) increases the regulatory costs of the rule.

(d) At least 21 days before filing the rule for adoption, an agency that is required to revise a statement of estimated regulatory costs shall provide the statement to the person who submitted the lower cost regulatory alternative and to the committee and shall provide notice on the agency's website that it is available to the public.

(e) Notwithstanding s. 120.56(1)(c), the failure of the agency to prepare a statement of estimated regulatory costs or to respond to a written lower cost regulatory alternative as provided in this subsection is a material failure to follow the applicable rulemaking procedures or requirements set forth in this chapter.

(f) An agency's failure to prepare a statement of estimated regulatory costs or to respond to a written lower cost regulatory alternative may not be raised in a proceeding challenging the validity of a rule pursuant to s. 120.52(8)(a) unless:

1. Raised in a petition filed no later than 1 year after the effective date of the rule; and

2. Raised by a person whose substantial interests are affected by the rule's regulatory costs.

(g) A rule that is challenged pursuant to s. 120.52(8)(f) may not be declared invalid unless:

1. The issue is raised in an administrative proceeding within 1 year after the effective date of the rule;

2. The challenge is to the agency's rejection of a lower cost regulatory alternative offered under paragraph (a) or s. 120.54(3)(b)2.b.; and

3. The substantial interests of the person challenging the rule are materially affected by the rejection.

(2) A statement of estimated regulatory costs shall include:

(a) An economic analysis showing whether the rule directly or indirectly:

1. Is likely to have an adverse impact on economic growth, private sector job creation or employment, or private sector investment in excess of $1 million in the aggregate within 5 years after the implementation of the rule;

2. Is likely to have an adverse impact on business competitiveness, including the ability of persons doing business in the state to compete with persons doing business in other states or domestic markets, productivity, or innovation in excess of $1 million in the aggregate within 5 years after the implementation of the rule; or

3. Is likely to increase regulatory costs, including any transactional costs, in excess of $1 million in the aggregate within 5 years after the implementation of the rule.

(b) A good faith estimate of the number of individuals and entities likely to be required to comply with the rule, together with a general description of the types of individuals likely to be affected by the rule.

(c) A good faith estimate of the cost to the agency, and to any other state and local government entities, of implementing and enforcing the proposed rule, and any anticipated effect on state or local revenues.

(d) A good faith estimate of the transactional costs likely to be incurred by individuals and entities, including local government entities, required to comply with the requirements of the rule. As used in this section, "transactional costs" are direct costs that are readily ascertainable based upon standard business practices, and include filing fees, the cost of obtaining a license, the cost of equipment required to be installed or used or procedures required to be employed in complying with the rule, additional operating costs incurred, the cost of monitoring and reporting, and any other costs necessary to comply with the rule.

(e) An analysis of the impact on small businesses as defined by s. 288.703, and an analysis of the impact on small counties and small cities as defined in s. 120.52. The impact analysis for small businesses must include the basis for the agency's decision not to implement alternatives that would reduce adverse impacts on small businesses.

(f) Any additional information that the agency determines may be useful.

(g) In the statement or revised statement, whichever applies, a description of any regulatory alternatives submitted under paragraph (1)(a) and a statement adopting the alternative or a statement of the reasons for rejecting the alternative in favor of the proposed rule.

(3) If the adverse impact or regulatory costs of the rule exceed any of the criteria established in paragraph (2)(a), the rule shall be submitted to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives no later than 30 days prior to the next regular legislative session, and the rule may not take effect until it is ratified by the Legislature.

(a) Federal standards pursuant to s. 120.54(6).

(b) Triennial updates of and amendments to the Florida Building Code which are expressly authorized by s. 553.73.

(c) Triennial updates of and amendments to the Florida Fire Prevention Code which are expressly authorized by s. 633.202.

(5) For purposes of subsections (2) and (3), adverse impacts and regulatory costs likely to occur within 5 years after implementation of the rule include adverse impacts and regulatory costs estimated to occur within 5 years after the effective date of the rule. However, if any provision of the rule is not fully implemented upon the effective date of the rule, the adverse impacts and regulatory costs associated with such provision must be adjusted to include any additional adverse impacts and regulatory costs estimated to occur within 5 years after implementation of such provision.

Note.—As amended by s. 92, ch. 2013-183, which amended subsection (4) as amended by s. 1, ch. 2011-222. Section 2, ch. 2011-225, also amended subsection (4), and the language of that version conflicted with the version by s. 1, ch. 2011-222. As amended by s. 2, ch. 2011-225, subsection (4) reads:

(4) This section does not apply to the adoption of emergency rules pursuant to s. 120.54(4) or the adoption of federal standards pursuant to s. 120.54(6).

120.542 Variances and waivers.—

(1) Strict application of uniformly applicable rule requirements can lead to unreasonable, unfair, and unintended results in particular instances. The Legislature finds that it is appropriate in such cases to adopt a procedure for agencies to provide relief to persons subject to regulation. A public employee is not a person subject to regulation under this section for the purpose of petitioning for a variance or waiver to a rule that affects that public employee in his or her capacity as a public employee. Agencies are authorized to grant variances and waivers to requirements of their rules consistent with this section and with rules adopted under the authority of this section. An agency may limit the duration of any grant of a variance or waiver or otherwise impose conditions on the grant only to the extent necessary for the purpose of the underlying statute to be achieved. This section does not authorize agencies to grant variances or waivers to statutes or to rules required by the Federal Government for the agency's implementation or retention of any federally approved or delegated program, except as allowed by the program or when the variance or waiver is also approved by the appropriate agency of the Federal Government. This section is supplemental to, and does not abrogate, the variance and waiver provisions in any other statute.

(2) Variances and waivers shall be granted when the person subject to the rule demonstrates that the purpose of the underlying statute will be or has been achieved by other means by the person and when application of a rule would create a substantial hardship or would violate principles of fairness. For purposes of this section, "substantial hardship" means a demonstrated economic, technological, legal, or other type of hardship to the person requesting the variance or waiver. For purposes of this section, "principles of fairness" are violated when the literal application of a rule affects a particular person in a manner significantly different from the way it affects other similarly situated persons who are subject to the rule.

(3) The Governor and Cabinet, sitting as the Administration Commission, shall adopt uniform rules of procedure pursuant to the requirements of s. 120.54(5) establishing procedures for granting or denying petitions for variances and waivers. The uniform rules shall include procedures for the granting, denying, or revoking of emergency and temporary variances and waivers. Such provisions may provide for expedited timeframes, waiver of or limited public notice, and limitations on comments on the petition in the case of such temporary or emergency variances and waivers.

(4) Agencies shall advise persons of the remedies available through this section and shall provide copies of this section, the uniform rules on variances and waivers, and, if requested, the underlying statute, to persons who inquire about the possibility of relief from rule requirements.

(5) A person who is subject to regulation by an agency rule may file a petition with that agency, with a copy to the committee, requesting a variance or waiver from the agency's rule. In addition to any requirements mandated by the uniform rules, each petition shall specify:

(a) The rule from which a variance or waiver is requested.

(b) The type of action requested.

(c) The specific facts that would justify a waiver or variance for the petitioner.

(d) The reason why the variance or the waiver requested would serve the purposes of the underlying statute.

(6) Within 15 days after receipt of a petition for variance or waiver, an agency shall provide notice of the petition to the Department of State, which shall publish notice of the petition in the first available issue of the Florida Administrative Register. The notice shall contain the name of the petitioner, the date the petition was filed, the rule number and nature of the rule from which variance or waiver is sought, and an explanation of how a copy of the petition can be obtained. The uniform rules shall provide a means for interested persons to provide comments on the petition.

(7) Except for requests for emergency variances or waivers, within 30 days after receipt of a petition for a variance or waiver, an agency shall review the petition and request submittal of all additional information that the agency is permitted by this section to require. Within 30 days after receipt of such additional information, the agency shall review it and may request only that information needed to clarify the additional information or to answer new questions raised by or directly related to the additional information. If the petitioner asserts that any request for additional information is not authorized by law or by rule of the affected agency, the agency shall proceed, at the petitioner's written request, to process the petition.

(8) An agency shall grant or deny a petition for variance or waiver within 90 days after receipt of the original petition, the last item of timely requested additional material, or the petitioner's written request to finish processing the petition. A petition not granted or denied within 90 days after receipt of a completed petition is deemed approved. A copy of the order granting or denying the petition shall be filed with the committee and shall contain a statement of the relevant facts and reasons supporting the agency's action. The agency shall provide notice of the disposition of the petition to the Department of State, which shall publish the notice in the next available issue of the Florida Administrative Register. The notice shall contain the name of the petitioner, the date the petition was filed, the rule number and nature of the rule from which the waiver or variance is sought, a reference to the place and date of publication of the notice of the petition, the date of the order denying or approving the variance or waiver, the general basis for the agency decision, and an explanation of how a copy of the order can be obtained. The agency's decision to grant or deny the petition shall be supported by competent substantial evidence and is subject to ss. 120.569 and 120.57. Any proceeding pursuant to ss. 120.569 and 120.57 in regard to a variance or waiver shall be limited to the agency action on the request for the variance or waiver, except that a proceeding in regard to a variance or waiver may be consolidated with any other proceeding authorized by this chapter.

(9) Each agency shall maintain a record of the type and disposition of each petition, including temporary or emergency variances and waivers, filed pursuant to this section.

History.—s. 12, ch. 96-159; s. 5, ch. 97-176; s. 37, ch. 2010-102; s. 5, ch. 2013-14.

120.545 Committee review of agency rules.—

(1) As a legislative check on legislatively created authority, the committee shall examine each proposed rule, except for those proposed rules exempted by s. 120.81(1)(e) and (2), and its accompanying material, and each emergency rule, and may examine any existing rule, for the purpose of determining whether:

(a) The rule is an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority.

(b) The statutory authority for the rule has been repealed.

(c) The rule reiterates or paraphrases statutory material.

(d) The rule is in proper form.

(e) The notice given prior to its adoption was sufficient to give adequate notice of the purpose and effect of the rule.

(f) The rule is consistent with expressed legislative intent pertaining to the specific provisions of law which the rule implements.

(g) The rule is necessary to accomplish the apparent or expressed objectives of the specific provision of law which the rule implements.

(h) The rule is a reasonable implementation of the law as it affects the convenience of the general public or persons particularly affected by the rule.

(i) The rule could be made less complex or more easily comprehensible to the general public.

(j) The rule's statement of estimated regulatory costs complies with the requirements of s. 120.541 and whether the rule does not impose regulatory costs on the regulated person, county, or city which could be reduced by the adoption of less costly alternatives that substantially accomplish the statutory objectives.

(k) The rule will require additional appropriations.

(l) If the rule is an emergency rule, there exists an emergency justifying the adoption of such rule, the agency is within its statutory authority, and the rule was adopted in compliance with the requirements and limitations of s. 120.54(4).

(2) The committee may request from an agency such information as is reasonably necessary for examination of a rule as required by subsection (1). The committee shall consult with legislative standing committees having jurisdiction over the subject areas. If the committee objects to a rule, the committee shall, within 5 days after the objection, certify that fact to the agency whose rule has been examined and include with the certification a statement detailing its objections with particularity. The committee shall notify the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate of any objection to an agency rule concurrent with certification of that fact to the agency. Such notice shall include a copy of the rule and the statement detailing the committee's objections to the rule.

(3) Within 30 days after receipt of the objection, if the agency is headed by an individual, or within 45 days after receipt of the objection, if the agency is headed by a collegial body, the agency shall:

(a) If the rule is not yet in effect:

1. File notice pursuant to s. 120.54(3)(d) of only such modifications as are necessary to address the committee's objection;

2. File notice pursuant to s. 120.54(3)(d) of withdrawal of the rule; or

3. Notify the committee in writing that it refuses to modify or withdraw the rule.

(b) If the rule is in effect:

1. File notice pursuant to s. 120.54(3)(a), without prior notice of rule development, to amend the rule to address the committee's objection;

2. File notice pursuant to s. 120.54(3)(a) to repeal the rule; or

3. Notify the committee in writing that the agency refuses to amend or repeal the rule.

(c) If the objection is to the statement of estimated regulatory costs:

1. Prepare a corrected statement of estimated regulatory costs, give notice of the availability of the corrected statement in the first available issue of the Florida Administrative Register, and file a copy of the corrected statement with the committee; or

2. Notify the committee that it refuses to prepare a corrected statement of estimated regulatory costs.

(4) Failure of the agency to respond to a committee objection to a rule that is not yet in effect within the time prescribed in subsection (3) constitutes withdrawal of the rule in its entirety. In this event, the committee shall notify the Department of State that the agency, by its failure to respond to a committee objection, has elected to withdraw the rule. Upon receipt of the committee's notice, the Department of State shall publish a notice to that effect in the next available issue of the Florida Administrative Register. Upon publication of the notice, the rule shall be stricken from the files of the Department of State and the files of the agency.

(5) Failure of the agency to respond to a committee objection to a rule that is in effect within the time prescribed in subsection (3) constitutes a refusal to amend or repeal the rule.

(6) Failure of the agency to respond to a committee objection to a statement of estimated regulatory costs within the time prescribed in subsection (3) constitutes a refusal to prepare a corrected statement of estimated regulatory costs.

(7) If the committee objects to a rule and the agency refuses to modify, amend, withdraw, or repeal the rule, the committee shall file with the Department of State a notice of the objection, detailing with particularity the committee's objection to the rule. The Department of State shall publish this notice in the Florida Administrative Register. If the rule is published in the Florida Administrative Code, a reference to the committee's objection and to the issue of the Florida Administrative Register in which the full text thereof appears shall be recorded in a history note.

(8)(a) If the committee objects to a rule, or portion of a rule, and the agency fails to initiate administrative action to modify, amend, withdraw, or repeal the rule consistent with the objection within 60 days after the objection, or thereafter fails to proceed in good faith to complete such action, the committee may submit to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives a recommendation that legislation be introduced to address the committee's objection.

(b)1. If the committee votes to recommend the introduction of legislation to address the committee's objection, the committee shall, within 5 days after this determination, certify that fact to the agency whose rule or proposed rule has been examined. The committee may request that the agency temporarily suspend the rule or suspend the adoption of the proposed rule, pending consideration of proposed legislation during the next regular session of the Legislature.

2. Within 30 days after receipt of the certification, if the agency is headed by an individual, or within 45 days after receipt of the certification, if the agency is headed by a collegial body, the agency shall:

a. Temporarily suspend the rule or suspend the adoption of the proposed rule; or

b. Notify the committee in writing that the agency refuses to temporarily suspend the rule or suspend the adoption of the proposed rule.

3. If the agency elects to temporarily suspend the rule or suspend the adoption of the proposed rule, the agency shall give notice of the suspension in the Florida Administrative Register. The rule or the rule adoption process shall be suspended upon publication of the notice. An agency may not base any agency action on a suspended rule or suspended proposed rule, or portion of such rule, prior to expiration of the suspension. A suspended rule or suspended proposed rule, or portion of such rule, continues to be subject to administrative determination and judicial review as provided by law.

4. Failure of an agency to respond to committee certification within the time prescribed by subparagraph 2. constitutes a refusal to suspend the rule or to suspend the adoption of the proposed rule.

(c) The committee shall prepare proposed legislation to address the committee's objection in accordance with the rules of the Senate and the House of Representatives for prefiling and introduction in the next regular session of the Legislature. The proposed legislation shall be presented to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives with the committee recommendation.

(d) If proposed legislation addressing the committee's objection fails to become law, any temporary agency suspension shall expire.

120.55 Publication.—

(1) The Department of State shall:

(a)1. Through a continuous revision and publication system, compile and publish electronically, on a website managed by the department, the "Florida Administrative Code." The Florida Administrative Code shall contain all rules adopted by each agency, citing the grant of rulemaking authority and the specific law implemented pursuant to which each rule was adopted, all history notes as authorized in s. 120.545(7), complete indexes to all rules contained in the code, and any other material required or authorized by law or deemed useful by the department. The electronic code shall display each rule chapter currently in effect in browse mode and allow full text search of the code and each rule chapter. The department may contract with a publishing firm for a printed publication; however, the department shall retain responsibility for the code as provided in this section. The electronic publication shall be the official compilation of the administrative rules of this state. The Department of State shall retain the copyright over the Florida Administrative Code.

2. Rules general in form but applicable to only one school district, community college district, or county, or a part thereof, or state university rules relating to internal personnel or business and finance shall not be published in the Florida Administrative Code. Exclusion from publication in the Florida Administrative Code shall not affect the validity or effectiveness of such rules.

3. At the beginning of the section of the code dealing with an agency that files copies of its rules with the department, the department shall publish the address and telephone number of the executive offices of each agency, the manner by which the agency indexes its rules, a listing of all rules of that agency excluded from publication in the code, and a statement as to where those rules may be inspected.

4. Forms shall not be published in the Florida Administrative Code; but any form which an agency uses in its dealings with the public, along with any accompanying instructions, shall be filed with the committee before it is used. Any form or instruction which meets the definition of "rule" provided in s. 120.52 shall be incorporated by reference into the appropriate rule. The reference shall specifically state that the form is being incorporated by reference and shall include the number, title, and effective date of the form and an explanation of how the form may be obtained. Each form created by an agency which is incorporated by reference in a rule notice of which is given under s. 120.54(3)(a) after December 31, 2007, must clearly display the number, title, and effective date of the form and the number of the rule in which the form is incorporated.

5. The department shall allow adopted rules and material incorporated by reference to be filed in electronic form as prescribed by department rule. When a rule is filed for adoption with incorporated material in electronic form, the department's publication of the Florida Administrative Code on its website must contain a hyperlink from the incorporating reference in the rule directly to that material. The department may not allow hyperlinks from rules in the Florida

Administrative Code to any material other than that filed with and maintained by the department, but may allow hyperlinks to incorporated material maintained by the department from the adopting agency's website or other sites.

(b) Electronically publish on a website managed by the department a continuous revision and publication entitled the "Florida Administrative Register," which shall serve as the official publication and must contain:

1. All notices required by s. 120.54(2) and (3)(a), showing the text of all rules proposed for consideration.

2. All notices of public meetings, hearings, and workshops conducted in accordance with s. 120.525, including a statement of the manner in which a copy of the agenda may be obtained.

3. A notice of each request for authorization to amend or repeal an existing uniform rule or for the adoption of new uniform rules.

4. Notice of petitions for declaratory statements or administrative determinations.

5. A summary of each objection to any rule filed by the Administrative Procedures Committee.

6. A list of rules filed for adoption in the previous 7 days.

7. A list of all rules filed for adoption pending legislative ratification under s. 120.541(3). A rule shall be removed from the list once notice of ratification or withdrawal of the rule is received.

8. Any other material required or authorized by law or deemed useful by the department.

The department may contract with a publishing firm for a printed publication of the Florida Administrative Register and make copies available on an annual subscription basis.

(c) Prescribe by rule the style and form required for rules, notices, and other materials submitted for filing.

(d) Charge each agency using the Florida Administrative Register a space rate to cover the costs related to the Florida Administrative Register and the Florida Administrative Code.

(e) Maintain a permanent record of all notices published in the Florida Administrative Register.

(2) The Florida Administrative Register website must allow users to:

(a) Search for notices by type, publication date, rule number, word, subject, and agency.

(b) Search a database that makes available all notices published on the website for a period of at least 5 years.

(c) Subscribe to an automated e-mail notification of selected notices to be sent out before or concurrently with publication of the electronic Florida Administrative Register. Such notification must include in the text of the e-mail a summary of the content of each notice.

(d) View agency forms and other materials submitted to the department in electronic form and incorporated by reference in proposed rules.

(e) Comment on proposed rules.

(3) Publication of material required by paragraph (1)(b) on the Florida Administrative Register website does not preclude publication of such material on an agency's website or by other means.

(4) Each agency shall provide copies of its rules upon request, with citations to the grant of rulemaking authority and the specific law implemented for each rule.

(5) Each agency that provides an e-mail notification service to inform licensees or other registered recipients of notices shall use that service to notify recipients of each notice required under s. 120.54(2) and (3) and provide Internet links to the appropriate rule page on the Secretary of State's website or Internet links to an agency website that contains the proposed rule or final rule.

(6) Any publication of a proposed rule promulgated by an agency, whether published in the Florida Administrative Register or elsewhere, shall include, along with the rule, the name of the person or persons originating such rule, the name of the agency head who approved the rule, and the date upon which the rule was approved.

(7) Access to the Florida Administrative Register website and its contents, including the e-mail notification service, shall be free for the public.

(8)(a) All fees and moneys collected by the Department of State under this chapter shall be deposited in the Records Management Trust Fund for the purpose of paying for costs incurred by the department in carrying out this chapter.

(b) The unencumbered balance in the Records Management Trust Fund for fees collected pursuant to this chapter may not exceed $300,000 at the beginning of each fiscal year, and any excess shall be transferred to the General Revenue Fund.

(9) The failure to comply with this section may not be raised in a proceeding challenging the validity of a rule pursuant to s. 120.52(8)(a).

120.555 Summary removal of published rules no longer in force and effect.

—When, as part of the continuous revision system authorized in s. 120.55(1)(a)1. or as otherwise provided by law, the Department of State is in doubt whether a rule published in the official version of the Florida Administrative Code is still in full force and effect, the procedure in this section shall be employed.

(1) The Department of State shall submit to the head of the agency with authority to repeal or amend the rule, if any, or if no such agency can be identified, to the Governor, a written request for a statement as to whether the rule is still in full force and effect. A copy of the request shall be promptly delivered to the committee and to the Attorney General. The Department of State shall publish a notice of the request together with a copy of the request in the Florida Administrative Register next available after delivery of the request to the head of the agency or the Governor.

(2) No later than 90 days after the date the notice required in subsection (1) is published, the agency or the Governor, notified pursuant to subsection (1), shall file a written response with the Department of State stating whether the rule is in full force and effect and under the jurisdiction of an agency with full authority to amend or repeal the rule. Failure to respond timely under this subsection constitutes an acknowledgment by the agency or the Governor that the rule is no longer in effect and is subject to summary repeal under this section.

(3) The Department of State shall publish a notice of the agency's or Governor's timely response or the acknowledgment determined under subsection (2) in the Florida Administrative Register next available after receipt of the response or the expiration of the response period, whichever occurs first.

(4) If the response states that the rule is no longer in effect, or if no response is filed timely with the Department of State, the notice required in subsection (3) shall also give notice of the following:

(a) Based on the agency's or Governor's written response or the acknowledgment determined under subsection (2), the rule will be repealed summarily pursuant to this section and removed from the Florida Administrative Code.

(b) Any objection to the summary repeal under this section must be filed as a petition challenging a proposed rule under s. 120.56 and must be filed no later than 21 days after the date the notice is published in the Florida Administrative Register.

(c) For purposes only of challenging a summary repeal under this section, the agency with current authority to repeal the rule under s. 120.54 shall be named as the respondent in the petition and shall be the proper party in interest. In such circumstances, the Department of State shall not be named as a party in a petition filed under paragraph (b) and this paragraph.

(d) If no agency currently has authority to repeal the rule under s. 120.54, the Department of State shall be named as the respondent in a petition filed under paragraph (b) and this paragraph. The Attorney General shall represent the Department of State in all proceedings under this paragraph.

(5) Upon the expiration of the 21-day period to file an objection to a notice of summary repeal published pursuant to subsection (4), if no timely objection is filed, or, if a timely objection is filed, on the date a decision finding the rule is no longer in effect becomes final, the Department of State shall update the Florida Administrative Code to remove the rule and shall provide historical notes identifying the manner in which the rule ceased to have effect, including the summary repeal pursuant to this section.

History.—s. 2, ch. 2012-31; s. 7, ch. 2013-14.

120.56 Challenges to rules.—

(1) GENERAL PROCEDURES.—

(a) Any person substantially affected by a rule or a proposed rule may seek an administrative determination of the invalidity of the rule on the ground that the rule is an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority.

(b) The petition challenging the validity of a proposed or adopted rule under this section must state:

1. The particular provisions alleged to be invalid and a statement of the facts or grounds for the alleged invalidity.

2. Facts sufficient to show that the petitioner is substantially affected by the challenged adopted rule or would be substantially affected by the proposed rule.

(c) The petition shall be filed by electronic means with the division which shall, immediately upon filing, forward by electronic means copies to the agency whose rule is challenged, the Department of State, and the committee. Within 10 days after receiving the petition, the division director shall, if the petition complies with paragraph (b), assign an administrative law judge who shall conduct a hearing within 30 days thereafter, unless the petition is withdrawn or a continuance is granted by agreement of the parties or for good cause shown. Evidence of good cause includes, but is not limited to, written notice of an agency's decision to modify or withdraw the proposed rule or a written notice from the chair of the committee stating that the committee will consider an objection to the rule at its next scheduled meeting. The failure of an agency to follow the applicable rulemaking procedures or requirements set forth in this chapter shall be presumed to be material; however, the agency may rebut this presumption by showing that the substantial interests of the petitioner and the fairness of the proceedings have not been impaired.

(d) Within 30 days after the hearing, the administrative law judge shall render a decision and state the reasons for his or her decision in writing. The division shall forthwith transmit by electronic means copies of the administrative law judge's decision to the agency, the Department of State, and the committee.

(e) Hearings held under this section shall be de novo in nature. The standard of proof shall be the preponderance of the evidence. Hearings shall be conducted in the same manner as provided by ss. 120.569 and 120.57, except that the administrative law judge's order shall be final agency action. The petitioner and the agency whose rule is challenged shall be adverse parties. Other substantially affected persons may join the proceedings as intervenors on appropriate terms which shall not unduly delay the proceedings. Failure to proceed under this section does not constitute failure to exhaust administrative remedies.

(2) CHALLENGING PROPOSED RULES; SPECIAL PROVISIONS.—

(a) A petition alleging the invalidity of a proposed rule shall be filed within 21 days after the date of publication of the notice required by s. 120.54(3)(a); within 10 days after the final public hearing is held on the proposed rule as provided by s. 120.54(3)(e)2.; within 20 days after the statement of estimated regulatory costs or revised statement of estimated regulatory costs, if applicable, has been prepared and made available as provided in s. 120.541(1)(d); or within 20 days after the date of publication of the notice required by s. 120.54(3)(d). The petitioner has the burden to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the petitioner would be substantially affected by the proposed rule. The agency then has the burden to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the proposed rule is not an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority as to the objections raised. A person who is not substantially affected by the proposed rule as initially noticed, but who is substantially affected by the rule as a result of a change, may challenge any provision of the resulting proposed rule.

(b) The administrative law judge may declare the proposed rule wholly or partly invalid. Unless the decision of the administrative law judge is reversed on appeal, the proposed rule or provision of a proposed rule declared invalid shall not be adopted. After a petition for administrative determination has been filed, the agency may proceed with all other steps in the rulemaking process, including the holding of a factfinding hearing. In the event part of a proposed rule is declared invalid, the adopting agency may, in its sole discretion, withdraw the proposed rule in its entirety. The agency whose proposed rule has been declared invalid in whole or part shall give notice of the decision in the first available issue of the Florida Administrative Register.

(c) When any substantially affected person seeks determination of the invalidity of a proposed rule pursuant to this section, the proposed rule is not presumed to be valid or invalid.

(3) CHALLENGING RULES IN EFFECT; SPECIAL PROVISIONS.—

(a) A petition alleging the invalidity of an existing rule may be filed at any time during which the rule is in effect. The petitioner has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the existing rule is an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority as to the objections raised.

(b) The administrative law judge may declare all or part of a rule invalid. The rule or part thereof declared invalid shall become void when the time for filing an appeal expires. The agency whose rule has been declared invalid in whole or part shall give notice of the decision in the Florida Administrative Register in the first available issue after the rule has become void.

(4) CHALLENGING AGENCY STATEMENTS DEFINED AS UNADOPTED RULES; SPECIAL PROVISIONS.—

(a) Any person substantially affected by an agency statement that is an unadopted rule may seek an administrative determination that the statement violates s. 120.54(1)(a). The petition shall include the text of the statement or a description of the statement and shall state facts sufficient to show that the statement constitutes an unadopted rule.

(b) The administrative law judge may extend the hearing date beyond 30 days after assignment of the case for good cause. Upon notification to the administrative law judge provided before the final hearing that the agency has published a notice of rulemaking under s. 120.54(3), such notice shall automatically operate as a stay of proceedings pending adoption of the statement as a rule. The administrative law judge may vacate the stay for good cause shown. A stay of proceedings pending rulemaking shall remain in effect so long as the agency is proceeding expeditiously and in good faith to adopt the statement as a rule.

(c) If a hearing is held and the petitioner proves the allegations of the petition, the agency shall have the burden of proving that rulemaking is not feasible or not practicable under s. 120.54(1)(a).

(d) The administrative law judge may determine whether all or part of a statement violates s. 120.54(1)(a). The decision of the administrative law judge shall constitute a final order. The division shall transmit a copy of the final order to the Department of State and the committee. The Department of State shall publish notice of the final order in the first available issue of the Florida Administrative Register.

(e) If an administrative law judge enters a final order that all or part of an unadopted rule violates s. 120.54(1)(a), the agency must immediately discontinue all reliance upon the unadopted rule or any substantially similar statement as a basis for agency action.

(f) If proposed rules addressing the challenged unadopted rule are determined to be an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority as defined in s. 120.52(8)(b)-(f), the agency must immediately discontinue reliance upon the unadopted rule and any substantially similar statement until rules addressing the subject are properly adopted, and the administrative law judge shall enter a final order to that effect.

(g) All proceedings to determine a violation of s. 120.54(1)(a) shall be brought pursuant to this subsection. A proceeding pursuant to this subsection may be consolidated with a proceeding under subsection (3) or under any other section of this chapter. This paragraph does not prevent a party whose substantial interests have been determined by an agency action from bringing a proceeding pursuant to s. 120.57(1)(e).

(5) CHALLENGING EMERGENCY RULES; SPECIAL PROVISIONS.—Challenges to the validity of an emergency rule shall be subject to the following time schedules in lieu of those established by paragraphs (1)(c) and (d). Within 7 days after receiving the petition, the division director shall, if the petition complies with paragraph (1)(b), assign an administrative law judge, who shall conduct a hearing within 14 days, unless the petition is withdrawn. The administrative law judge shall render a decision within 14 days after the hearing.

120.565 Declaratory statement by agencies.—

(1) Any substantially affected person may seek a declaratory statement regarding an agency's opinion as to the applicability of a statutory provision, or of any rule or order of the agency, as it applies to the petitioner's particular set of circumstances.

(2) The petition seeking a declaratory statement shall state with particularity the petitioner's set of circumstances and shall specify the statutory provision, rule, or order that the petitioner believes may apply to the set of circumstances.

(3) The agency shall give notice of the filing of each petition in the next available issue of the Florida Administrative Register and transmit copies of each petition to the committee. The agency shall issue a declaratory statement or deny the petition within 90 days after the filing of the petition. The declaratory statement or denial of the petition shall be noticed in the next available issue of the Florida Administrative Register.

120.569 Decisions which affect substantial interests.—

(1) The provisions of this section apply in all proceedings in which the substantial interests of a party are determined by an agency, unless the parties are proceeding under s. 120.573 or s. 120.574. Unless waived by all parties, s. 120.57(1) applies whenever the proceeding involves a disputed issue of material fact. Unless otherwise agreed, s. 120.57(2) applies in all other cases. If a disputed issue of material fact arises during a proceeding under s. 120.57(2), then, unless waived by all parties, the proceeding under s. 120.57(2) shall be terminated and a proceeding under s. 120.57(1) shall be conducted. Parties shall be notified of any order, including a final order. Unless waived, a copy of the order shall be delivered or mailed to each party or the party's attorney of record at the address of record. Each notice shall inform the recipient of any administrative hearing or judicial review that is available under this section, s. 120.57, or s. 120.68; shall indicate the procedure which must be followed to obtain the hearing or judicial review; and shall state the time limits which apply.

(2)(a) Except for any proceeding conducted as prescribed in s. 120.56, a petition or request for a hearing under this section shall be filed with the agency. If the agency requests an administrative law judge from the division, it shall so notify the division by electronic means through the division's website within 15 days after receipt of the petition or request. A request for a hearing shall be granted or denied within 15 days after receipt. On the request of any agency, the division shall assign an administrative law judge with due regard to the expertise required for the particular matter. The referring agency shall take no further action with respect to a proceeding under s. 120.57(1), except as a party litigant, as long as the division has jurisdiction over the proceeding under s. 120.57(1). Any party may request the disqualification of the administrative law judge by filing an affidavit with the division prior to the taking of evidence at a hearing, stating the grounds with particularity.

(b) All parties shall be afforded an opportunity for a hearing after reasonable notice of not less than 14 days; however, the 14-day notice requirement may be waived with the consent of all parties. The notice shall include:

1. A statement of the time, place, and nature of the hearing.

2. A statement of the legal authority and jurisdiction under which the hearing is to be held.

(c) Unless otherwise provided by law, a petition or request for hearing shall include those items required by the uniform rules adopted pursuant to s. 120.54(5)(b). Upon the receipt of a petition or request for hearing, the agency shall carefully review the petition to determine if it contains all of the required information. A petition shall be dismissed if it is not in substantial compliance with these requirements or it has been untimely filed. Dismissal of a petition shall, at least once, be without prejudice to petitioner's filing a timely amended petition curing the defect, unless it conclusively appears from the face of the petition that the defect cannot be cured. The agency shall promptly give written notice to all parties of the action taken on the petition, shall state with particularity its reasons if the petition is not granted, and shall state the deadline for filing an amended petition if applicable. This paragraph does not eliminate the availability of equitable tolling as a defense to the untimely filing of a petition.

(d) The agency may refer a petition to the division for the assignment of an administrative law judge only if the petition is in substantial compliance with the requirements of paragraph (c).

(e) All pleadings, motions, or other papers filed in the proceeding must be signed by the party, the party's attorney, or the party's qualified representative. The signature constitutes a certificate that the person has read the pleading, motion, or other paper and that, based upon reasonable inquiry, it is not interposed for any improper purposes, such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay, or for frivolous purpose or needless increase in the cost of litigation. If a pleading, motion, or other paper is signed in violation of these requirements, the presiding officer shall impose upon the person who signed it, the represented party, or both, an appropriate sanction, which may include an order to pay the other party or parties the amount of reasonable expenses incurred because of the filing of the pleading, motion, or other paper, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

(f) The presiding officer has the power to swear witnesses and take their testimony under oath, to issue subpoenas, and to effect discovery on the written request of any party by any means available to the courts and in the manner provided in the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure, including the imposition of sanctions, except contempt. However, no presiding officer has the authority to issue any subpoena or order directing discovery to any member or employee of the Legislature when the subpoena or order commands the production of documents or materials or compels testimony relating to the legislative duties of the member or employee. Any subpoena or order directing discovery directed to a member or an employee of the Legislature shall show on its face that the testimony sought does not relate to legislative duties.

(g) Irrelevant, immaterial, or unduly repetitious evidence shall be excluded, but all other evidence of a type commonly relied upon by reasonably prudent persons in the conduct of their affairs shall be admissible, whether or not such evidence would be admissible in a trial in the courts of Florida. Any part of the evidence may be received in written form, and all testimony of parties and witnesses shall be made under oath.

(h) Documentary evidence may be received in the form of a copy or excerpt. Upon request, parties shall be given an opportunity to compare the copy with the original, if available.

(i) When official recognition is requested, the parties shall be notified and given an opportunity to examine and contest the material.

(j) A party shall be permitted to conduct cross-examination when testimony is taken or documents are made a part of the record.

(k)1. Any person subject to a subpoena may, before compliance and on timely petition, request the presiding officer having jurisdiction of the dispute to invalidate the subpoena on the ground that it was not lawfully issued, is unreasonably broad in scope, or requires the production of irrelevant material.

2. A party may seek enforcement of a subpoena, order directing discovery, or order imposing sanctions issued under the authority of this chapter by filing a petition for enforcement in the circuit court of the judicial circuit in which the person failing to comply with the subpoena or order resides. A failure to comply with an order of the court shall result in a finding of contempt of court. However, no person shall be in contempt while a subpoena is being challenged under subparagraph 1. The court may award to the prevailing party all or part of the costs and attorney's fees incurred in obtaining the court order whenever the court determines that such an award should be granted under the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure.

3. Any public employee subpoenaed to appear at an agency proceeding shall be entitled to per diem and travel expenses at the same rate as that provided for state employees under s. 112.061 if travel away from such public employee's headquarters is required. All other witnesses appearing pursuant to a subpoena shall be paid such fees and mileage for their attendance as is provided in civil actions in circuit courts of this state. In the case of a public employee, such expenses shall be processed and paid in the manner provided for agency employee travel expense reimbursement, and in the case of a witness who is not a public employee, payment of such fees and expenses shall accompany the subpoena.

(l) Unless the time period is waived or extended with the consent of all parties, the final order in a proceeding which affects substantial interests must be in writing and include findings of fact, if any, and conclusions of law separately stated, and it must be rendered within 90 days:

1. After the hearing is concluded, if conducted by the agency;

2. After a recommended order is submitted to the agency and mailed to all parties, if the hearing is conducted by an administrative law judge; or

3. After the agency has received the written and oral material it has authorized to be submitted, if there has been no hearing.

(m) Findings of fact, if set forth in a manner which is no more than mere tracking of the statutory language, must be accompanied by a concise and explicit statement of the underlying facts of record which support the findings.

(n) If an agency head finds that an immediate danger to the public health, safety, or welfare requires an immediate final order, it shall recite with particularity the facts underlying such finding in the final order, which shall be appealable or enjoined from the date rendered.

(o) On the request of any party, the administrative law judge shall enter an initial scheduling order to facilitate the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of the proceeding. The initial scheduling order shall establish a discovery period, including a deadline by which all discovery shall be completed, and the date by which the parties shall identify expert witnesses and their opinions. The initial scheduling order also may require the parties to meet and file a joint report by a date certain.

(p) For any proceeding arising under chapter 373, chapter 378, or chapter 403, if a nonapplicant petitions as a third party to challenge an agency's issuance of a license, permit, or conceptual approval, the order of presentation in the proceeding is for the permit applicant to present a prima facie case demonstrating entitlement to the license, permit, or conceptual approval, followed by the agency. This demonstration may be made by entering into evidence the application and relevant material submitted to the agency in support of the application, and the agency's staff report or notice of intent to approve the permit, license, or conceptual approval. Subsequent to the presentation of the applicant's prima facie case and any direct evidence submitted by the agency, the petitioner initiating the action challenging the issuance of the license, permit, or conceptual approval has the burden of ultimate persuasion and has the burden of going forward to prove the case in opposition to the license, permit, or conceptual approval through the presentation of competent and substantial evidence. The permit applicant and agency may on rebuttal present any evidence relevant to demonstrating that the application meets the conditions for issuance. Notwithstanding subsection (1), this paragraph applies to proceedings under s. 120.574.

120.57 Additional procedures for particular cases.—

(1) ADDITIONAL PROCEDURES APPLICABLE TO HEARINGS INVOLVING DISPUTED ISSUES OF MATERIAL FACT.—

(a) Except as provided in ss. 120.80 and 120.81, an administrative law judge assigned by the division shall conduct all hearings under this subsection, except for hearings before agency heads or a member thereof. If the administrative law judge assigned to a hearing becomes unavailable, the division shall assign another administrative law judge who shall use any existing record and receive any additional evidence or argument, if any, which the new administrative law judge finds necessary.

(b) All parties shall have an opportunity to respond, to present evidence and argument on all issues involved, to conduct cross-examination and submit rebuttal evidence, to submit proposed findings of facts and orders, to file exceptions to the presiding officer's recommended order, and to be represented by counsel or other qualified representative. When appropriate, the general public may be given an opportunity to present oral or written communications. If the agency proposes to consider such material, then all parties shall be given an opportunity to cross-examine or challenge or rebut the material.

(c) Hearsay evidence may be used for the purpose of supplementing or explaining other evidence, but it shall not be sufficient in itself to support a finding unless it would be admissible over objection in civil actions.

(d) Notwithstanding s. 120.569(2)(g), similar fact evidence of other violations, wrongs, or acts is admissible when relevant to prove a material fact in issue, such as proof of motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, or absence of mistake or accident, but it is inadmissible when the evidence is relevant solely to prove bad character or propensity. When the state in an administrative proceeding intends to offer evidence of other acts or offenses under this paragraph, the state shall furnish to the party whose substantial interests are being determined and whose other acts or offenses will be the subject of such evidence, no fewer than 10 days before commencement of the proceeding, a written statement of the acts or offenses it intends to offer, describing them and the evidence the state intends to offer with particularity. Notice is not required for evidence of acts or offenses which is used for impeachment or on rebuttal.

(e)1. An agency or an administrative law judge may not base agency action that determines the substantial interests of a party on an unadopted rule or a rule that is an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority. This subparagraph does not preclude application of valid adopted rules and applicable provisions of law to the facts.

2. In a matter initiated as a result of agency action proposing to determine the substantial interests of a party, the party's timely petition for hearing may challenge the proposed agency action based on a rule that is an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority or based on an alleged unadopted rule. For challenges brought under this subparagraph:

a. The challenge may be pled as a defense using the procedures set forth in s. 120.56(1)(b).

b. Section 120.56(3)(a) applies to a challenge alleging that a rule is an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority.

c. Section 120.56(4)(c) applies to a challenge alleging an unadopted rule.

d. This subparagraph does not preclude the consolidation of any proceeding under s. 120.56 with any proceeding under this paragraph.

3. Notwithstanding subparagraph 1., if an agency demonstrates that the statute being implemented directs it to adopt rules, that the agency has not had time to adopt those rules because the requirement was so recently enacted, and that the agency has initiated rulemaking and is proceeding expeditiously and in good faith to adopt the required rules, then the agency's action may be based upon those unadopted rules if the administrative law judge determines that rulemaking is neither feasible nor practicable and the unadopted rules would not constitute an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority if adopted as rules. An unadopted rule shall not be presumed valid. The agency must demonstrate that the unadopted rule:

a. Is within the powers, functions, and duties delegated by the Legislature or, if the agency is operating pursuant to authority vested in the agency by the State Constitution, is within that authority;

b. Does not enlarge, modify, or contravene the specific provisions of law implemented;

c. Is not vague, establishes adequate standards for agency decisions, or does not vest unbridled discretion in the agency;

d. Is not arbitrary or capricious. A rule is arbitrary if it is not supported by logic or the necessary facts; a rule is capricious if it is adopted without thought or reason or is irrational;

e. Is not being applied to the substantially affected party without due notice; and

f. Does not impose excessive regulatory costs on the regulated person, county, or city.

4. The recommended and final orders in any proceeding shall be governed by paragraphs (k) and (l), except that the administrative law judge's determination regarding an unadopted rule under subparagraph 1. or subparagraph 2. shall not be rejected by the agency unless the agency first determines from a review of the complete record, and states with particularity in the order, that such determination is clearly erroneous or does not comply with essential requirements of law. In any proceeding for review under s. 120.68, if the court finds that the agency's rejection of the determination regarding the unadopted rule does not comport with this subparagraph, the agency action shall be set aside and the court shall award to the prevailing party the reasonable costs and a reasonable attorney fee for the initial proceeding and the proceeding for review.

5. A petitioner may pursue a separate, collateral challenge under s. 120.56 even if an adequate remedy exists through a proceeding under this section. The administrative law judge may consolidate the proceedings.

(f) The record in a case governed by this subsection shall consist only of:

1. All notices, pleadings, motions, and intermediate rulings.

2. Evidence admitted.

3. Those matters officially recognized.

4. Proffers of proof and objections and rulings thereon.

5. Proposed findings and exceptions.

6. Any decision, opinion, order, or report by the presiding officer.

7. All staff memoranda or data submitted to the presiding officer during the hearing or prior to its disposition, after notice of the submission to all parties, except communications by advisory staff as permitted under s. 120.66(1), if such communications are public records.

8. All matters placed on the record after an ex parte communication.

9. The official transcript.

(g) The agency shall accurately and completely preserve all testimony in the proceeding, and, on the request of any party, it shall make a full or partial transcript available at no more than actual cost.

(h) Any party to a proceeding in which an administrative law judge has final order authority may move for a summary final order when there is no genuine issue as to any material fact. A summary final order shall be rendered if the administrative law judge determines from the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with affidavits, if any, that no genuine issue as to any material fact exists and that the moving party is entitled as a matter of law to the entry of a final order. A summary final order shall consist of findings of fact, if any, conclusions of law, a disposition or penalty, if applicable, and any other information required by law to be contained in the final order.

(i) When, in any proceeding conducted pursuant to this subsection, a dispute of material fact no longer exists, any party may move the administrative law judge to relinquish jurisdiction to the agency. An order relinquishing jurisdiction shall be rendered if the administrative law judge determines from the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with supporting and opposing affidavits, if any, that no genuine issue as to any material fact exists. If the administrative law judge enters an order relinquishing jurisdiction, the agency may promptly conduct a proceeding pursuant to subsection (2), if appropriate, but the parties may not raise any issues of disputed fact that could have been raised before the administrative law judge. An order entered by an administrative law judge relinquishing jurisdiction to the agency based upon a determination that no genuine dispute of material fact exists, need not contain findings of fact, conclusions of law, or a recommended disposition or penalty.

(j) Findings of fact shall be based upon a preponderance of the evidence, except in penal or licensure disciplinary proceedings or except as otherwise provided by statute, and shall be based exclusively on the evidence of record and on matters officially recognized.

(k) The presiding officer shall complete and submit to the agency and all parties a recommended order consisting of findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommended disposition or penalty, if applicable, and any other information required by law to be contained in the final order. All proceedings conducted under this subsection shall be de novo. The agency shall allow each party 15 days in which to submit written exceptions to the recommended order. The final order shall include an explicit ruling on each exception, but an agency need not rule on an exception that does not clearly identify the disputed portion of the recommended order by page number or paragraph, that does not identify the legal basis for the exception, or that does not include appropriate and specific citations to the record.

(l) The agency may adopt the recommended order as the final order of the agency. The agency in its final order may reject or modify the conclusions of law over which it has substantive jurisdiction and interpretation of administrative rules over which it has substantive jurisdiction. When rejecting or modifying such conclusion of law or interpretation of administrative rule, the agency must state with particularity its reasons for rejecting or modifying such conclusion of law or interpretation of administrative rule and must make a finding that its substituted conclusion of law or interpretation of administrative rule is as or more reasonable than that which was rejected or modified. Rejection or modification of conclusions of law may not form the basis for rejection or modification of findings of fact. The agency may not reject or modify the findings of fact unless the agency first determines from a review of the entire record, and states with particularity in the order, that the findings of fact were not based upon competent substantial evidence or that the proceedings on which the findings were based did not comply with essential requirements of law. The agency may accept the recommended penalty in a recommended order, but may not reduce or increase it without a review of the complete record and without stating with particularity its reasons therefor in the order, by citing to the record in justifying the action.

(m) If a recommended order is submitted to an agency, the agency shall provide a copy of its final order and any exceptions to the division within 15 days after the order is filed with the agency clerk.

(n) Notwithstanding any law to the contrary, when statutes or rules impose conflicting time requirements for the scheduling of expedited hearings or issuance of recommended or final orders, the director of the division shall have the authority to set the proceedings for the orderly operation of this chapter.

(2) ADDITIONAL PROCEDURES APPLICABLE TO HEARINGS NOT INVOLVING DISPUTED ISSUES OF MATERIAL FACT.—In any case to which subsection (1) does not apply:

(a) The agency shall:

1. Give reasonable notice to affected persons of the action of the agency, whether proposed or already taken, or of its decision to refuse action, together with a summary of the factual, legal, and policy grounds therefor.

2. Give parties or their counsel the option, at a convenient time and place, to present to the agency or hearing officer written or oral evidence in opposition to the action of the agency or to its refusal to act, or a written statement challenging the grounds upon which the agency has chosen to justify its action or inaction.

3. If the objections of the parties are overruled, provide a written explanation within 7 days.

(b) An agency may not base agency action that determines the substantial interests of a party on an unadopted rule or a rule that is an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority.

(c) The record shall only consist of:

1. The notice and summary of grounds.

2. Evidence received.

3. All written statements submitted.

4. Any decision overruling objections.

5. All matters placed on the record after an ex parte communication.

6. The official transcript.

7. Any decision, opinion, order, or report by the presiding officer.

(3) ADDITIONAL PROCEDURES APPLICABLE TO PROTESTS TO CONTRACT SOLICITATION OR AWARD.—Agencies subject to this chapter shall use

the uniform rules of procedure, which provide procedures for the resolution of protests arising from the contract solicitation or award process. Such rules shall at least provide that:

(a) The agency shall provide notice of a decision or intended decision concerning a solicitation, contract award, or exceptional purchase by electronic posting. This notice shall contain the following statement: "Failure to file a protest within the time prescribed in section 120.57(3), Florida Statutes, or failure to post the bond or other security required by law within the time allowed for filing a bond shall constitute a waiver of proceedings under chapter 120, Florida Statutes."

(b) Any person who is adversely affected by the agency decision or intended decision shall file with the agency a notice of protest in writing within 72 hours after the posting of the notice of decision or intended decision. With respect to a protest of the terms, conditions, and specifications contained in a solicitation, including any provisions governing the methods for ranking bids, proposals, or replies, awarding contracts, reserving rights of further negotiation, or modifying or amending any contract, the notice of protest shall be filed in writing within 72 hours after the posting of the solicitation. The formal written protest shall be filed within 10 days after the date the notice of protest is filed. Failure to file a notice of protest or failure to file a formal written protest shall constitute a waiver of proceedings under this chapter. The formal written protest shall state with particularity the facts and law upon which the protest is based. Saturdays, Sundays, and state holidays shall be excluded in the computation of the 72-hour time periods provided by this paragraph.

(c) Upon receipt of the formal written protest that has been timely filed, the agency shall stop the solicitation or contract award process until the subject of the protest is resolved by final agency action, unless the agency head sets forth in writing particular facts and circumstances which require the continuance of the solicitation or contract award process without delay in order to avoid an immediate and serious danger to the public health, safety, or welfare.

(d)1. The agency shall provide an opportunity to resolve the protest by mutual agreement between the parties within 7 days, excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and state holidays, after receipt of a formal written protest.

2. If the subject of a protest is not resolved by mutual agreement within 7 days, excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and state holidays, after receipt of the formal written protest, and if there is no disputed issue of material fact, an informal proceeding shall be conducted pursuant to subsection (2) and applicable agency rules before a person whose qualifications have been prescribed by rules of the agency.

3. If the subject of a protest is not resolved by mutual agreement within 7 days, excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and state holidays, after receipt of the formal written protest, and if there is a disputed issue of material fact, the agency shall refer the protest to the division by electronic means through the division's website for proceedings under subsection (1).

(e) Upon receipt of a formal written protest referred pursuant to this subsection, the director of the division shall expedite the hearing and assign an administrative law judge who shall commence a hearing within 30 days after the receipt of the formal written protest by the division and enter a recommended order within 30 days after the hearing or within 30 days after receipt of the hearing transcript by the administrative law judge, whichever is later. Each party shall be allowed 10 days in which to submit written exceptions to the recommended order. A final order shall be entered by the agency within 30 days of the entry of a recommended order. The provisions of this paragraph may be waived upon stipulation by all parties.

(f) In a protest to an invitation to bid or request for proposals procurement, no submissions made after the bid or proposal opening which amend or supplement the bid or proposal shall be considered. In a protest to an invitation to negotiate procurement, no submissions made after the agency announces its intent to award a contract, reject all replies, or withdraw the solicitation which amend or supplement the reply shall be considered. Unless otherwise provided by statute, the burden of proof shall rest with the party protesting the proposed agency action. In a competitive-procurement protest, other than a rejection of all bids, proposals, or replies, the administrative law judge shall conduct a de novo proceeding to determine whether the agency's proposed action is contrary to the agency's governing statutes, the agency's rules or policies, or the solicitation specifications. The standard of proof for such proceedings shall be whether the proposed agency action was clearly erroneous, contrary to competition, arbitrary, or capricious. In any bid-protest proceeding contesting an intended agency action to reject all bids, proposals, or replies, the standard of review by an administrative law judge shall be whether the agency's intended action is illegal, arbitrary, dishonest, or fraudulent.

(g) For purposes of this subsection, the definitions in s. 287.012 apply.

(4) INFORMAL DISPOSITION.—Unless precluded by law, informal disposition may be made of any proceeding by stipulation, agreed settlement, or consent order.

(5) APPLICABILITY.—This section does not apply to agency investigations preliminary to agency action.

120.573 Mediation of disputes.—Each announcement of an agency action that affects substantial interests shall advise whether mediation of the administrative dispute for the type of agency action announced is available and that choosing mediation does not affect the right to an administrative hearing. If the agency and all parties to the administrative action agree to mediation, in writing, within 10 days after the time period stated in the announcement for election of an administrative remedy under ss. 120.569 and 120.57, the time limitations imposed by ss. 120.569 and 120.57 shall be tolled to allow the agency and parties to mediate the administrative dispute. The mediation shall be concluded within 60 days of such agreement unless otherwise agreed by the parties. The mediation agreement shall include provisions for mediator selection, the allocation of costs and fees associated with mediation, and the mediating parties' understanding regarding the confidentiality of discussions and documents introduced during mediation. If mediation results in settlement of the administrative dispute, the agency shall enter a final order incorporating the agreement of the parties. If mediation terminates without settlement of the dispute, the agency shall notify the parties in writing that the administrative hearing processes under ss. 120.569 and 120.57 are resumed.

120.574 Summary hearing.—

(1)(a) Within 5 business days following the division's receipt of a petition or request for hearing, the division shall issue and serve on all original parties an initial order that assigns the case to a specific administrative law judge and provides general information regarding practice and procedure before the division. The initial order shall also contain a statement advising the addressees that a summary hearing is available upon the agreement of all parties under subsection (2) and briefly describing the expedited time sequences, limited discovery, and final order provisions of the summary procedure.

(b) Within 15 days after service of the initial order, any party may file with the division a motion for summary hearing in accordance with subsection (2). If all original parties agree, in writing, to the summary proceeding, the proceeding shall be conducted within 30 days of the agreement, in accordance with the provisions of subsection (2).

(c) Intervenors in the proceeding shall be governed by the decision of the original parties regarding whether the case will proceed in accordance with the summary hearing process and shall not have standing to challenge that decision.

(d) If a motion for summary hearing is not filed within 15 days after service of the division's initial order, the matter shall proceed in accordance with ss. 120.569 and 120.57.

(2) In any case to which this subsection is applicable, the following procedures apply:

- (a) Motions shall be limited to the following:
  1. A motion in opposition to the petition.
  2. A motion requesting discovery beyond the informal exchange of documents and witness lists described in paragraph (b). Upon a showing of necessity, additional discovery may be permitted in the discretion of the administrative law judge, but only if it can be completed not later than 5 days prior to the final hearing.
  3. A motion for continuance of the final hearing date.
  4. A motion requesting a prehearing conference, or the administrative law judge may require a prehearing conference, for the purpose of identifying: the legal and factual issues to be considered at the final hearing; the names and addresses of witnesses who may be called to testify at the final hearing; documentary evidence that will be offered at the final hearing; the range of penalties that may be imposed upon final hearing; and any other matter that the administrative law judge determines would expedite resolution of the proceeding. The prehearing conference may be held by telephone conference call.

5. During or after any preliminary hearing or conference, any party or the administrative law judge may suggest that the case is no longer appropriate for summary disposition. Following any argument requested by the parties, the administrative law judge may enter an order referring the case back to the formal adjudicatory process described in s. 120.57(1), in which event the parties shall proceed accordingly.

(b) Not later than 5 days prior to the final hearing, the parties shall furnish to each other copies of documentary evidence and lists of witnesses who may testify at the final hearing.

(c) All parties shall have an opportunity to respond, to present evidence and argument on all issues involved, to conduct cross-examination and submit rebuttal evidence, and to be represented by counsel or other qualified representative.

(d) The record in a case governed by this subsection shall consist only of:

1. All notices, pleadings, motions, and intermediate rulings.
  2. Evidence received.
  3. A statement of matters officially recognized.
  4. Proffers of proof and objections and rulings thereon.
  5. Matters placed on the record after an ex parte communication.
  6. The written decision of the administrative law judge presiding at the final hearing.
  7. The official transcript of the final hearing.
- (e) The agency shall accurately and completely preserve all testimony in the proceeding and, upon request by any party, shall make a full or partial transcript available at no more than actual cost.

(f) The decision of the administrative law judge shall be rendered within 30 days after the conclusion of the final hearing or the filing of the transcript thereof, whichever is later. The administrative law judge's decision, which shall be final agency action subject to judicial review under s. 120.68, shall include the following:

1. Findings of fact based exclusively on the evidence of record and matters officially recognized.
2. Conclusions of law.
3. Imposition of a fine or penalty, if applicable.
4. Any other information required by law or rule to be contained in a final order.

History.—s. 21, ch. 96-159; s. 10, ch. 97-176; s. 11, ch. 2000-158; s. 10, ch. 2000-336.

120.595 Attorney's fees.—

(1) CHALLENGES TO AGENCY ACTION PURSUANT TO SECTION 120.57(1).—

FL-SEN-21-0182-A-000613

(a) The provisions of this subsection are supplemental to, and do not abrogate, other provisions allowing the award of fees or costs in administrative proceedings.

(b) The final order in a proceeding pursuant to s. 120.57(1) shall award reasonable costs and a reasonable attorney's fee to the prevailing party only where the nonprevailing adverse party has been determined by the administrative law judge to have participated in the proceeding for an improper purpose.

(c) In proceedings pursuant to s. 120.57(1), and upon motion, the administrative law judge shall determine whether any party participated in the proceeding for an improper purpose as defined by this subsection. In making such determination, the administrative law judge shall consider whether the nonprevailing adverse party has participated in two or more other such proceedings involving the same prevailing party and the same project as an adverse party and in which such two or more proceedings the nonprevailing adverse party did not establish either the factual or legal merits of its position, and shall consider whether the factual or legal position asserted in the instant proceeding would have been cognizable in the previous proceedings. In such event, it shall be rebuttably presumed that the nonprevailing adverse party participated in the pending proceeding for an improper purpose.

(d) In any proceeding in which the administrative law judge determines that a party participated in the proceeding for an improper purpose, the recommended order shall so designate and shall determine the award of costs and attorney's fees.

(e) For the purpose of this subsection:

1. "Improper purpose" means participation in a proceeding pursuant to s. 120.57(1) primarily to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or for frivolous purpose or to needlessly increase the cost of litigation, licensing, or securing the approval of an activity.

2. "Costs" has the same meaning as the costs allowed in civil actions in this state as provided in chapter 57.

3. "Nonprevailing adverse party" means a party that has failed to have substantially changed the outcome of the proposed or final agency action which is the subject of a proceeding. In the event that a proceeding results in any substantial modification or condition intended to resolve the matters raised in a party's petition, it shall be determined that the party having raised the issue addressed is not a nonprevailing adverse party. The recommended order shall state whether the change is substantial for purposes of this subsection. In no event shall the term "nonprevailing party" or "prevailing party" be deemed to include any party that has intervened in a previously existing proceeding to support the position of an agency.

(2) CHALLENGES TO PROPOSED AGENCY RULES PURSUANT TO SECTION 120.56(2).—If the appellate court or administrative law judge declares a proposed rule or portion of a proposed rule invalid pursuant to s. 120.56(2), a judgment or order shall be rendered against the agency for reasonable costs and reasonable attorney's fees, unless the agency demonstrates that its actions were substantially justified or special circumstances exist which would make the award unjust. An agency's actions are "substantially justified" if there was a reasonable basis in law and fact at the time the actions were taken by the agency. If the agency prevails in the proceedings, the appellate court or administrative law judge shall award reasonable costs and reasonable attorney's fees against a party if the appellate court or administrative law judge determines that a party participated in the proceedings for an improper purpose as defined by paragraph (1)(e). No award of attorney's fees as provided by this subsection shall exceed $50,000.

(3) CHALLENGES TO EXISTING AGENCY RULES PURSUANT TO SECTION 120.56(3) AND (5). If the appellate court or administrative law judge declares a rule or portion of a rule invalid pursuant to s. 120.56(3) or (5), a judgment or order shall be rendered against the agency for reasonable costs and reasonable attorney's fees, unless the agency demonstrates that its actions were substantially justified or special circumstances exist which would make the award unjust. An agency's actions are "substantially justified" if there was a reasonable basis in law and fact at the time the actions were taken by the agency. If the agency prevails in the proceedings, the appellate court or administrative law judge shall award reasonable costs and reasonable attorney's fees against a party if the appellate court or administrative law judge determines that a party participated in the proceedings for an improper purpose as defined by paragraph (1)(e). No award of attorney's fees as provided by this subsection shall exceed $50,000.

(4) CHALLENGES TO AGENCY ACTION PURSUANT TO SECTION 120.56(4).—

(a) If the appellate court or administrative law judge determines that all or part of an agency statement violates s. 120.54(1)(a), or that the agency must immediately discontinue reliance on the statement and any substantially similar statement pursuant to s. 120.56(4)(f), a judgment or order shall be entered against the agency for reasonable costs and reasonable attorney's fees, unless the agency demonstrates that the statement is required by the Federal Government to implement or retain a delegated or approved program or to meet a condition to receipt of federal funds.

(b) Upon notification to the administrative law judge provided before the final hearing that the agency has published a notice of rulemaking under s. 120.54(3)(a), such notice shall automatically operate as a stay of proceedings pending rulemaking. The administrative law judge may vacate the stay for good cause shown. A stay of proceedings under this paragraph remains in effect so long as the agency is proceeding expeditiously and in good faith to adopt the statement as a rule. The administrative law judge shall award reasonable costs and reasonable attorney's fees accrued by the petitioner prior to the date the notice was published, unless the agency proves to the administrative law judge that it did not know and should not have known that the statement was an unadopted rule. Attorneys' fees and costs under this paragraph and paragraph (a) shall be awarded only upon a finding that the agency received notice that the statement may constitute an unadopted rule at least 30 days before a petition under s. 120.56(4) was filed and that the agency failed to publish the required notice of rulemaking pursuant to s. 120.54(3) that addresses the statement within that 30-day period. Notice to the agency may be satisfied by its receipt of a copy of the s. 120.56(4) petition, a notice or other paper containing substantially the same information, or a petition filed pursuant to s. 120.54(7). An award of attorney's fees as provided by this paragraph may not exceed $50,000.

(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of chapter 284, an award shall be paid from the budget entity of the secretary, executive director, or equivalent administrative officer of the agency, and the agency shall not be entitled to payment of an award or reimbursement for payment of an award under any provision of law.

(d) If the agency prevails in the proceedings, the appellate court or administrative law judge shall award reasonable costs and attorney's fees against a party if the appellate court or administrative law judge determines that the party participated in the proceedings for an improper purpose as defined in paragraph (1)(e) or that the party or the party's attorney knew or should have known that a claim was not supported by the material facts necessary to establish the claim or would not be supported by the application of then-existing law to those material facts.

(5) APPEALS.—When there is an appeal, the court in its discretion may award reasonable attorney's fees and reasonable costs to the prevailing party if the court finds that the appeal was frivolous, meritless, or an abuse of the appellate process, or that the agency action which precipitated the appeal was a gross abuse of the agency's discretion. Upon review of agency action that precipitates an appeal, if the court finds that the agency improperly rejected or modified findings of fact in a recommended order, the court shall award reasonable attorney's fees and reasonable costs to a prevailing appellant for the administrative proceeding and the appellate proceeding.

(6) OTHER SECTIONS NOT AFFECTED.—Other provisions, including ss. 57.105 and 57.111, authorize the award of attorney's fees and costs in administrative proceedings. Nothing in this section shall affect the availability of attorney's fees and costs as provided in those sections.

120.60 Licensing.—

(1) Upon receipt of a license application, an agency shall examine the application and, within 30 days after such receipt, notify the applicant of any apparent errors or omissions and request any additional information the agency is permitted by law to require. An agency may not deny a license for failure to correct an error or omission or to supply additional information unless the agency timely notified the applicant within this 30-day period. The agency may establish by rule the time period for submitting any additional information requested by the agency. For good cause shown, the agency shall grant a request for an extension of time for submitting the additional information. If the applicant believes the agency's request for additional information is not authorized by law or rule, the agency, at the applicant's request, shall proceed to process the application. An application is complete upon receipt of all requested information and correction of any error or omission for which the applicant was timely notified or when the time for such notification has expired. An application for a license must be approved or denied within 90 days after receipt of a completed application unless a shorter period of time for agency action is provided by law. The 90-day time period is tolled by the initiation of a proceeding under ss. 120.569 and 120.57. Any application for a license which is not approved or denied within the 90-day or shorter time period, within 15 days after conclusion of a public hearing held on the application, or within 45 days after a recommended order is submitted to the agency and the parties, whichever action and timeframe is latest and applicable, is considered approved unless the recommended order recommends that the agency deny the license. Subject to the satisfactory completion of an examination if required as a prerequisite to licensure, any license that is considered approved shall be issued and may include such reasonable conditions as are authorized by law. Any applicant for licensure seeking to claim licensure by default under this subsection shall notify the agency clerk of the licensing agency, in writing, of the intent to rely upon the default license provision of this subsection, and may not take any action based upon the default license until after receipt of such notice by the agency clerk.

(2) If an applicant seeks a license for an activity that is exempt from licensure, the agency shall notify the applicant and return any tendered application fee within 30 days after receipt of the original application.

(3) Each applicant shall be given written notice, personally or by mail, that the agency intends to grant or deny, or has granted or denied, the application for license. The notice must state with particularity the grounds or basis for the issuance or denial of the license, except when issuance is a ministerial act. Unless waived, a copy of the notice shall be delivered or mailed to each party's attorney of record and to each person who has made a written request for notice of agency action. Each notice must inform the recipient of the basis for the agency decision, inform the recipient of any administrative hearing pursuant to ss. 120.569 and 120.57 or judicial review pursuant to s. 120.68 which may be available, indicate the procedure that must be followed, and state the applicable time limits. The issuing agency shall certify the date the notice was mailed or delivered, and the notice and the certification must be filed with the agency clerk.

(4) When a licensee has made timely and sufficient application for the renewal of a license which does not automatically expire by statute, the existing license shall not expire until the application for renewal has been finally acted upon by the agency or, in case the application is denied or the terms of the license are limited, until the last day for seeking review of the agency order or a later date fixed by order of the reviewing court.

(5) No revocation, suspension, annulment, or withdrawal of any license is lawful unless, prior to the entry of a final order, the agency has served, by personal service or certified mail, an administrative complaint which affords reasonable notice to the licensee of facts or conduct which warrant the intended action and unless the licensee has been given an adequate opportunity to request a proceeding pursuant to ss. 120.569 and 120.57. When personal service cannot be made and the certified mail notice is returned undelivered, the agency shall cause a short, plain notice to the licensee to be published once each week for 4 consecutive weeks in a newspaper published in the county of the licensee's last known address as it appears on the records of the agency. If no newspaper is published in that county, the notice may be published in a newspaper of general circulation in that county.

(6) If the agency finds that immediate serious danger to the public health, safety, or welfare requires emergency suspension, restriction, or limitation of a license, the agency may take such action by any procedure that is fair under the circumstances if:

(a) The procedure provides at least the same procedural protection as is given by other statutes, the State Constitution, or the United States Constitution;

(b) The agency takes only that action necessary to protect the public interest under the emergency procedure; and

(c) The agency states in writing at the time of, or prior to, its action the specific facts and reasons for finding an immediate danger to the public health, safety, or welfare and its reasons for concluding that the procedure used is fair under the circumstances. The agency's findings of immediate danger, necessity, and procedural fairness are judicially reviewable. Summary suspension, restriction, or limitation may be ordered, but a suspension or revocation proceeding pursuant to ss. 120.569 and 120.57 shall also be promptly instituted and acted upon.

(7) No agency shall include as a condition of approval of any license any provision that is based upon a statement, policy, or guideline of another agency unless the statement, policy, or guideline is within the jurisdiction of the other agency. The other agency shall identify for the licensing agency the specific legal authority for each such statement, policy, or guideline. The licensing agency must provide the licensee with an opportunity to challenge the condition as invalid. If the licensing agency bases a condition of approval or denial of the license upon the statement, policy, or guideline of the other agency, any party to an administrative proceeding that arises from the approval with conditions or denial of the license may require the other agency to join as a party in determining the validity of the condition.

120.62 Agency investigations.—

(1) Every person who responds to a request or demand by any agency or representative thereof for written data or an oral statement shall be entitled to a transcript or recording of his or her oral statement at no more than cost.

(2) Any person compelled to appear, or who appears voluntarily, before any presiding officer or agency in an investigation or in any agency proceeding has the right, at his or her own expense, to be accompanied, represented, and advised by counsel or by other qualified representatives.

History.—s. 1, ch. 74-310; s. 763, ch. 95-147; s. 28, ch. 96-159.

120.63 Exemption from act.—

(1) Upon application of any agency, the Administration Commission may exempt any process or proceeding governed by this act from one or more requirements of this act:

(a) When the agency head has certified that the requirement would conflict with any provision of federal law or rules with which the agency must comply;

(b) In order to permit persons in the state to receive tax benefits or federal funds under any federal law; or

(c) When the commission has found that conformity with the requirements of the part or parts of this act for which exemption is sought would be so inconvenient or impractical as to defeat the purpose of the agency proceeding involved or the purpose of this act and would not be in the public interest in light of the nature of the intended action and the enabling act or other laws affecting the agency.

(2) The commission may not exempt an agency from any requirement of this act pursuant to this section until it establishes alternative procedures to achieve the agency's purpose which shall be consistent, insofar as possible, with the intent and purpose of the act.

(a) Prior to the granting of any exemption authorized by this section, the commission shall hold a public hearing after notice given as provided in s. 120.525. Upon the conclusion of the hearing, the commission, through the Executive Office of the Governor, shall issue an order specifically granting or denying the exemption and specifying any processes or proceedings exempted and the extent of the exemption; transmit to the committee and to the Department of State a copy of the petition, a certified copy of the order granting or denying the petition, and a copy of any alternative procedures prescribed; and give notice of the petition and the commission's response in the Florida Administrative Register.

(b) An exemption and any alternative procedure prescribed shall terminate 90 days following adjournment sine die of the then-current or next regular legislative session after issuance of the exemption order, or upon the effective date of any subsequent legislation incorporating the exemption or any partial exemption related thereto, whichever is earlier. The exemption granted by the commission shall be renewable upon the same or similar facts not more than once. Such renewal shall terminate as would an original exemption.

120.65 Administrative law judges.—

(1) The Division of Administrative Hearings within the Department of Management Services shall be headed by a director who shall be appointed by the
FL-SEN-21-0182-A-000616

Administration Commission and confirmed by the Senate. The director, who shall also serve as the chief administrative law judge, and any deputy chief administrative law judge must possess the same minimum qualifications as the administrative law judges employed by the division. The Deputy Chief Judge of Compensation Claims must possess the minimum qualifications established in s. 440.45(2) and shall report to the director. The division shall be a separate budget entity, and the director shall be its agency head for all purposes. The Department of Management Services shall provide administrative support and service to the division to the extent requested by the director. The division shall not be subject to control, supervision, or direction by the Department of Management Services in any manner, including, but not limited to, personnel, purchasing, transactions involving real or personal property, and budgetary matters.

(2) The director has the right to appeal actions by the Executive Office of the Governor that affect amendments to the division's approved operating budget or any personnel actions pursuant to chapter 216 to the Administration Commission, which shall decide such issue by majority vote. The appropriations committees may advise the Administration Commission on the issue. If the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives object in writing to the effects of the appeal, the appeal may be affirmed by the affirmative vote of two-thirds of the commission members present.

(3) Each state agency as defined in chapter 216 and each political subdivision shall make its facilities available, at a time convenient to the provider, for use by the division in conducting proceedings pursuant to this chapter.

(4) The division shall employ administrative law judges to conduct hearings required by this chapter or other law. Any person employed by the division as an administrative law judge must have been a member of The Florida Bar in good standing for the preceding 5 years.

(5) If the division cannot furnish a division administrative law judge promptly in response to an agency request, the director shall designate in writing a qualified full-time employee of an agency other than the requesting agency to conduct the hearing. The director shall have the discretion to designate such a hearing officer who is located in that part of the state where the parties and witnesses reside.

(6) The division is authorized to provide administrative law judges on a contract basis to any governmental entity to conduct any hearing not covered by this section.

(7) Rules promulgated by the division may authorize any reasonable sanctions except contempt for violation of the rules of the division or failure to comply with a reasonable order issued by an administrative law judge, which is not under judicial review.

(8) Not later than February 1 of each year, the division shall issue a written report to the Administrative Procedures Committee and the Administration Commission, including at least the following information:

(a) A summary of the extent and effect of agencies' utilization of administrative law judges, court reporters, and other personnel in proceedings under this chapter.

(b) Recommendations for change or improvement in the Administrative Procedure Act or any agency's practice or policy with respect thereto.

(c) Recommendations as to those types of cases or disputes which should be conducted under the summary hearing process described in s. 120.574.

(d) A report regarding each agency's compliance with the filing requirement in s. 120.57(1)(m).

(9) The division shall be reimbursed for administrative law judge services and travel expenses by the following entities: water management districts, regional planning councils, school districts, community colleges, the Division of Florida Colleges, state universities, the Board of Governors of the State University System, the State Board of Education, the Florida School for the Deaf and the Blind, and the Commission for Independent Education. These entities shall contract with the division to establish a contract rate for services and provisions for reimbursement of administrative law judge travel expenses and video teleconferencing expenses attributable to hearings conducted on behalf of these entities. The contract rate must be based on a total-cost-recovery methodology.

120.651 Designation of two administrative law judges to preside over actions involving department or boards.

—The Division of Administrative Hearings shall designate at least two administrative law judges who shall specifically preside over actions involving the Department of Health or boards within the Department of Health. Each designated administrative law judge must be a member of The Florida Bar in good standing and must have legal, managerial, or clinical experience in issues related to health care or have attained board certification in health care law from The Florida Bar.

History.—s. 32, ch. 2003-416.

120.655 Withholding funds to pay for administrative law judge services to school boards.

—If a district school board fails to make a timely payment for the services provided by an administrative law judge of the Division of Administrative Hearings as provided annually in the General Appropriations Act, the Commissioner of Education shall withhold, from any general revenue funds the district is eligible to receive, an amount sufficient to pay for the administrative law judge's services. The commissioner shall transfer the amount withheld to the Division of Administrative Hearings in payment of such services.

agency head, after the agency head has received a recommended order, or to the presiding officer by:

(a) An agency head or member of the agency or any other public employee or official engaged in prosecution or advocacy in connection with the matter under consideration or a factually related matter.

(b) A party to the proceeding, the party's authorized representative or counsel, or any person who, directly or indirectly, would have a substantial interest in the proposed agency action.

Nothing in this subsection shall apply to advisory staff members who do not testify on behalf of the agency in the proceeding or to any rulemaking proceedings under s. 120.54.

(2) A presiding officer, including an agency head or designee, who is involved in the decisional process and who receives an ex parte communication in violation of subsection (1) shall place on the record of the pending matter all written communications received, all written responses to such communications, and a memorandum stating the substance of all oral communications received and all oral responses made, and shall also advise all parties that such matters have been placed on the record. Any party desiring to rebut the ex parte communication shall be allowed to do so, if such party requests the opportunity for rebuttal within 10 days after notice of such communication. The presiding officer may, if necessary to eliminate the effect of an ex parte communication, withdraw from the proceeding, in which case the entity that appointed the presiding officer shall assign a successor.

(3) Any person who makes an ex parte communication prohibited by subsection (1), and any presiding officer, including an agency head or designee, who fails to place in the record any such communication, is in violation of this act and may be assessed a civil penalty not to exceed $500 or be subjected to other disciplinary action.

120.665 Disqualification of agency personnel.

(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of s. 112.3143, any individual serving alone or with others as an agency head may be disqualified from serving in an agency proceeding for bias, prejudice, or interest when any party to the agency proceeding shows just cause by a suggestion filed within a reasonable period of time prior to the agency proceeding. If the disqualified individual was appointed, the appointing power may appoint a substitute to serve in the matter from which the individual is disqualified. If the individual is an elected official, the Governor may appoint a substitute to serve in the matter from which the individual is disqualified. However, if a quorum remains after the individual is disqualified, it shall not be necessary to appoint a substitute.

(2) Any agency action taken by a duly appointed substitute for a disqualified individual shall be as conclusive and effective as if agency action had been taken by the agency as it was constituted prior to any substitution.

120.68 Judicial review.—

(1)(a) A party who is adversely affected by final agency action is entitled to judicial review.

(b) A preliminary, procedural, or intermediate order of the agency or of an administrative law judge of the Division of Administrative Hearings is immediately reviewable if review of the final agency decision would not provide an adequate remedy.

(2)(a) Judicial review shall be sought in the appellate district where the agency maintains its headquarters or where a party resides or as otherwise provided by law. All proceedings shall be instituted by filing a notice of appeal or petition for review in accordance with the Florida Rules of Appellate Procedure within 30 days after the rendition of the order being appealed. If the appeal is of an order rendered in a proceeding initiated under s. 120.56, the agency whose rule is being challenged shall transmit a copy of the notice of appeal to the committee.

(b) When proceedings under this chapter are consolidated for final hearing and the parties to the consolidated proceeding seek review of final or interlocutory orders in more than one district court of appeal, the courts of appeal are authorized to transfer and consolidate the review proceedings. The court may transfer such appellate proceedings on its own motion, upon motion of a party to one of the appellate proceedings, or by stipulation of the parties to the appellate proceedings. In determining whether to transfer a proceeding, the court may consider such factors as the interrelationship of the parties and the proceedings, the desirability of avoiding inconsistent results in related matters, judicial economy, and the burden on the parties of reproducing the record for use in multiple appellate courts.

(3) The filing of the petition does not itself stay enforcement of the agency decision, but if the agency decision has the effect of suspending or revoking a license, supersedeas shall be granted as a matter of right upon such conditions as are reasonable, unless the court, upon petition of the agency, determines that a supersedeas would constitute a probable danger to the health, safety, or welfare of the state. The agency also may grant a stay upon appropriate terms, but, whether or not the action has the effect of suspending or revoking a license, a petition to the agency for a stay is not a prerequisite to a petition to the court for supersedeas. In any event the court shall specify the conditions, if any, upon which the stay or supersedeas is granted.

(4) Judicial review of any agency action shall be confined to the record transmitted and any additions made thereto in accordance with paragraph (7)(a).

(5) The record for judicial review shall be compiled in accordance with the Florida Rules of Appellate Procedure.

(6)(a) The reviewing court's decision may be mandatory, prohibitory, or declaratory in form, and it shall provide whatever relief is appropriate irrespective of the original form of the petition. The court may:

1. Order agency action required by law; order agency exercise of discretion when required by law; set aside agency action; remand the case for further agency proceedings; or decide the rights, privileges, obligations, requirements, or procedures at issue between the parties; and

2. Order such ancillary relief as the court finds necessary to redress the effects of official action wrongfully taken or withheld.

(b) If the court sets aside agency action or remands the case to the agency for further proceedings, it may make such interlocutory order as the court finds necessary to preserve the interests of any party and the public pending further proceedings or agency action.

(7) The court shall remand a case to the agency for further proceedings consistent with the court's decision or set aside agency action, as appropriate, when it finds that:

(a) There has been no hearing prior to agency action and the reviewing court finds that the validity of the action depends upon disputed facts;

(b) The agency's action depends on any finding of fact that is not supported by competent, substantial evidence in the record of a hearing conducted pursuant to ss. 120.569 and 120.57; however, the court shall not substitute its judgment for that of the agency as to the weight of the evidence on any disputed finding of fact;

(c) The fairness of the proceedings or the correctness of the action may have been impaired by a material error in procedure or a failure to follow prescribed procedure;

(d) The agency has erroneously interpreted a provision of law and a correct interpretation compels a particular action; or

(e) The agency's exercise of discretion was:

1. Outside the range of discretion delegated to the agency by law;

2. Inconsistent with agency rule;

3. Inconsistent with officially stated agency policy or a prior agency practice, if deviation therefrom is not explained by the agency; or

4. Otherwise in violation of a constitutional or statutory provision;

but the court shall not substitute its judgment for that of the agency on an issue of discretion.

(8) Unless the court finds a ground for setting aside, modifying, remanding, or ordering agency action or ancillary relief under a specified provision of this section, it shall affirm the agency's action.

(9) A petition challenging an agency rule as an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority shall not be instituted pursuant to this section, except to review an order entered pursuant to a proceeding under s. 120.56 or s. 120.57(1)(e)1. or (2)(b) or an agency's findings of immediate danger, necessity, and procedural fairness prerequisite to the adoption of an emergency rule pursuant to s. 120.54(4), unless the sole issue presented by the petition is the constitutionality of a rule and there are no disputed issues of fact.

(10) If an administrative law judge's final order depends on any fact found by the administrative law judge, the court shall not substitute its judgment for that of the administrative law judge as to the weight of the evidence on any disputed finding of fact. The court shall, however, set aside the final order of the administrative law judge or remand the case to the administrative law judge, if it finds that the final order depends on any finding of fact that is not supported by competent substantial evidence in the record of the proceeding.

120.69 Enforcement of agency action.—

(1) Except as otherwise provided by statute:

(a) Any agency may seek enforcement of an action by filing a petition for enforcement, as provided in this section, in the circuit court where the subject matter of the enforcement is located.

(b) A petition for enforcement of any agency action may be filed by any substantially interested person who is a resident of the state. However, no such action may be commenced:

1. Prior to 60 days after the petitioner has given notice of the violation of the agency action to the head of the agency concerned, the Attorney General, and any alleged violator of the agency action.

2. If an agency has filed, and is diligently prosecuting, a petition for enforcement.

(c) A petition for enforcement filed by a nongovernmental person shall be in the name of the State of Florida on the relation of the petitioner, and the doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel shall apply.

(d) In an action brought under paragraph (b), the agency whose action is sought to be enforced, if not a party, may intervene as a matter of right.

(2) A petition for enforcement may request declaratory relief; temporary or permanent equitable relief; any fine, forfeiture, penalty, or other remedy provided by statute; any combination of the foregoing; or, in the absence of any other specific statutory authority, a fine not to exceed $1,000.

(3) After the court has rendered judgment on a petition for enforcement, no other petition shall be filed or adjudicated against the same agency action, on the basis of the same transaction or occurrence, unless expressly authorized on remand. The doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel shall apply, and the court shall make such orders as are necessary to avoid multiplicity of actions.

(4) In all enforcement proceedings:

(a) If enforcement depends on any facts other than those appearing in the record, the court may ascertain such facts under procedures set forth in s. 120.68(7)(a).

(b) If one or more petitions for enforcement and a petition for review involving the same agency action are pending at the same time, the court considering the review petition may order all such actions transferred to and consolidated in one court. Each party shall be under an affirmative duty to notify the court when it becomes aware of multiple proceedings.

(c) Should any party willfully fail to comply with an order of the court, the court shall punish that party in accordance with the law applicable to contempt committed by a person in the trial of any other action.

(5) In any enforcement proceeding the respondent may assert as a defense the invalidity of any relevant statute, the inapplicability of the administrative determination to respondent, compliance by the respondent, the inappropriateness of the remedy sought by the agency, or any combination of the foregoing. In addition, if the petition for enforcement is filed during the time within which the respondent could petition for judicial review of the agency action, the respondent may assert the invalidity of the agency action.

(6) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, upon receipt of evidence that an alleged violation of an agency's action presents an imminent and substantial threat to the public health, safety, or welfare, the agency may bring suit for immediate temporary relief in an appropriate circuit court, and the granting of such temporary relief shall not have res judicata or collateral estoppel effect as to further relief sought under a petition for enforcement relating to the same violation.

(7) In any final order on a petition for enforcement the court may award to the prevailing party all or part of the costs of litigation and reasonable attorney's fees and expert witness fees, whenever the court determines that such an award is appropriate.

120.695 Notice of noncompliance; designation of minor violation of rules.—

(1) It is the policy of the state that the purpose of regulation is to protect the public by attaining compliance with the policies established by the Legislature. Fines and other penalties may be provided in order to assure compliance; however, the collection of fines and the imposition of penalties are intended to be secondary to the primary goal of attaining compliance with an agency's rules. It is the intent of the Legislature that an agency charged with enforcing rules shall issue a notice of noncompliance as its first response to a minor violation of a rule in any instance in which it is reasonable to assume that the violator was unaware of the rule or unclear as to how to comply with it.

(2)(a) Each agency shall issue a notice of noncompliance as a first response to a minor violation of a rule. A "notice of noncompliance" is a notification by the agency charged with enforcing the rule issued to the person or business subject to the rule. A notice of noncompliance may not be accompanied with a fine or other disciplinary penalty. It must identify the specific rule that is being violated, provide information on how to comply with the rule, and specify a reasonable time for the violator to comply with the rule. A rule is agency action that regulates a business, occupation, or profession, or regulates a person operating a business, occupation, or profession, and that, if not complied with, may result in a disciplinary penalty.

(b) Each agency shall review all of its rules and designate those for which a violation would be a minor violation and for which a notice of noncompliance must be the first enforcement action taken against a person or business subject to regulation. A violation of a rule is a minor violation if it does not result in economic or physical harm to a person or adversely affect the public health, safety, or welfare or create a significant threat of such harm.

(c)1. No later than June 30, 2017, and after such date within 3 months after any request of the rules ombudsman in the Executive Office of the Governor, each agency shall review its rules and certify to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the committee, and the rules ombudsman those rules that have been designated as rules the violation of which would be a minor violation under paragraph (b), consistent with the legislative intent stated in subsection (1).

2. Beginning July 1, 2017, each agency shall:

a. Publish all rules that the agency has designated as rules the violation of which would be a minor violation, either as a complete list on the agency's website or by incorporation of the designations in the agency's disciplinary guidelines adopted as a rule.

b. Ensure that all investigative and enforcement personnel are knowledgeable about the agency's designations under this section.

3. For each rule filed for adoption, the agency head shall certify whether any part of the rule is designated as a rule the violation of which would be a minor violation and shall update the listing required by sub-subparagraph 2.a.

(d) The Governor or the Governor and Cabinet, as appropriate, may evaluate the review and designation effects of each agency subject to the direction and supervision of such authority and may direct a different designation than that applied by such agency.

(e) Notwithstanding s. 120.52(1)(a), this section does not apply to:

1. The Department of Corrections;
2. Educational units;
3. The regulation of law enforcement personnel; or
4. The regulation of teachers.

(f) Designation pursuant to this section is not subject to challenge under this chapter.

History.—s. 1, ch. 95-402; s. 6, ch. 2016-116.

120.72 Legislative intent; references to chapter 120 or portions thereof.—Unless expressly provided otherwise, a reference in any section of the Florida Statutes to chapter 120 or to any section or sections or portion of a section of chapter 120 includes, and shall be understood as including, all subsequent amendments to chapter 120 or to the referenced section or sections or portions of a section.

History.—s. 3, ch. 74-310; s. 1, ch. 76-207; s. 1, ch. 77-174; s. 57, ch. 78-95; s. 13, ch. 78-425; s. 38, ch. 96-159.

120.73 Circuit court proceedings; declaratory judgments.—Nothing in this chapter shall be construed to repeal any provision of the Florida Statutes which grants the right to a proceeding in the circuit court in lieu of an administrative hearing or to divest the circuit courts of jurisdiction to render declaratory judgments under the provisions of chapter 86.

History.—s. 11, ch. 75-191; s. 14, ch. 78-425.

120.74 Agency annual rulemaking and regulatory plans; reports.—

(1) REGULATORY PLAN.—By October 1 of each year, each agency shall prepare a regulatory plan.

(a) The plan must include a listing of each law enacted or amended during the previous 12 months which creates or modifies the duties or authority of the agency. If the Governor or the Attorney General provides a letter to the committee stating that a law affects all or most agencies, the agency may exclude the law from its plan. For each law listed by an agency under this paragraph, the plan must state:

1. Whether the agency must adopt rules to implement the law.

2. If rulemaking is necessary to implement the law:

a. Whether a notice of rule development has been published and, if so, the citation to such notice in the Florida Administrative Register.

b. The date by which the agency expects to publish the notice of proposed rule under s. 120.54(3)(a).

3. If rulemaking is not necessary to implement the law, a concise written explanation of the reasons why the law may be implemented without rulemaking.

(b) The plan must also include a listing of each law not otherwise listed pursuant to paragraph (a) which the agency expects to implement by rulemaking before the following July 1, except emergency rulemaking. For each law listed under this paragraph, the plan must state whether the rulemaking is intended to simplify, clarify, increase efficiency, improve coordination with other agencies, reduce regulatory costs, or delete obsolete, unnecessary, or redundant rules.

(c) The plan must include any desired update to the prior year's regulatory plan or supplement published pursuant to subsection (7). If, in a prior year, a law was identified under this paragraph or under subparagraph (a)1. as a law requiring rulemaking to implement but a notice of proposed rule has not been published:

1. The agency shall identify and again list such law, noting the applicable notice of rule development by citation to the Florida Administrative Register; or

2. If the agency has subsequently determined that rulemaking is not necessary to implement the law, the agency shall identify such law, reference the citation to the applicable notice of rule development in the Florida Administrative Register, and provide a concise written explanation of the reason why the law may be implemented without rulemaking.

(d) The plan must include a certification executed on behalf of the agency by both the agency head, or, if the agency head is a collegial body, the presiding officer; and the individual acting as principal legal advisor to the agency head. The certification must:

1. Verify that the persons executing the certification have reviewed the plan.

2. Verify that the agency regularly reviews all of its rules and identify the period during which all rules have most recently been reviewed to determine if the rules remain consistent with the agency's rulemaking authority and the laws implemented.

(2) PUBLICATION AND DELIVERY TO THE COMMITTEE.—

(a) By October 1 of each year, each agency shall:

1. Publish its regulatory plan on its website or on another state website established for publication of administrative law records. A clearly labeled hyperlink to the current plan must be included on the agency's primary website homepage.

2. Electronically deliver to the committee a copy of the certification required in paragraph (1)(d).

3. Publish in the Florida Administrative Register a notice identifying the date of publication of the agency's regulatory plan. The notice must include a hyperlink or website address providing direct access to the published plan.

(b) To satisfy the requirements of paragraph (a), a board established under s. 20.165(4), and any other board or commission receiving administrative support from the Department of Business and Professional Regulation, may coordinate with the Department of Business and Professional Regulation, and a board established under s. 20.43(3)(g) may coordinate with the Department of Health, for inclusion of the board's or commission's plan and notice of publication in the coordinating department's plan and notice and for the delivery of the required documentation to the committee.

(c) A regulatory plan prepared under subsection (1) and any regulatory plan published under this chapter before July 1, 2014, shall be maintained at an active website for 10 years after the date of initial publication on the agency's website or another state website.

(3) DEPARTMENT REVIEW OF BOARD PLAN.—By October 15 of each year:

(a) For each board established under s. 20.165(4) and any other board or commission receiving administrative support from the Department of Business and Professional Regulation, the Department of Business and Professional Regulation shall file with the committee a certification that the department has reviewed each board's and commission's regulatory plan. A certification may relate to more than one board or commission.

(b) For each board established under s. 20.43(3)(g), the Department of Health shall file with the committee a certification that the department has reviewed the board's regulatory plan. A certification may relate to more than one board.

(4) DEADLINE FOR RULE DEVELOPMENT.—By November 1 of each year, each agency shall publish a notice of rule development under s. 120.54(2) for each law identified in the agency's regulatory plan pursuant to subparagraph (1)(a)1. for which rulemaking is necessary to implement but for which the agency did not report the publication of a notice of rule development under subparagraph (1)(a)2.

(5) DEADLINE TO PUBLISH PROPOSED RULE.—For each law for which implementing rulemaking is necessary as identified in the agency's plan pursuant to subparagraph (1)(a)1. or subparagraph (1)(c)1., the agency shall publish a notice of proposed rule pursuant to s. 120.54(3)(a) by April 1 of the year following the deadline for the regulatory plan. This deadline may be extended if the agency publishes a notice of extension in the Florida Administrative Register identifying each rulemaking proceeding for which an extension is being noticed by citation to the applicable notice of rule development as published in the Florida Administrative Register. The agency shall include a concise statement in the notice of extension identifying any issues that are causing the delay in rulemaking. An extension shall expire on October 1 after the April 1 deadline, provided that the regulatory plan due on October 1 may further extend the rulemaking proceeding by identification pursuant to subparagraph (1)(c)1. or conclude the rulemaking proceeding by identification pursuant to subparagraph (1)(c)2. A published regulatory plan may be corrected at any time to accomplish the purpose of extending or concluding an affected rulemaking proceeding and is deemed corrected as of the October 1 due date. Upon publication of a correction, the agency shall publish in the Florida Administrative Register a notice of the date of the correction identifying the affected rulemaking proceeding by applicable citation to the Florida Administrative Register.

(6) CERTIFICATIONS.—Each agency shall file a certification with the committee upon compliance with subsection (4) and upon filing a notice under subsection (5) of either a deadline extension or a regulatory plan correction. A certification may relate to more than one notice or contemporaneous act. The date or dates of compliance shall be noted in each certification.

(7) SUPPLEMENTING THE REGULATORY PLAN. After publication of the regulatory plan, the agency shall supplement the plan within 30 days after a bill becomes a law if the law is enacted before the next regular session of the Legislature and the law substantively modifies the agency's specifically delegated legal duties, unless the law affects all or most state agencies as identified by letter to the committee from the Governor or the Attorney General. The supplement must include the information required in paragraph (1)(a) and shall be published as required in subsection (2), but no certification or delivery to the committee is required. The agency shall publish in the Florida Administrative Register notice of publication of the supplement, and include a hyperlink on its website or web address for direct access to the published supplement. For each law reported in the supplement, if rulemaking is necessary to implement the law, the agency shall publish a notice of rule development by the later of the date provided in subsection (4) or 60 days after the bill becomes a law, and a notice of proposed rule shall be published by the later of the date provided in subsection (5) or 120 days after the bill becomes a law. The proposed rule deadline may be extended to the following October 1 by notice as provided in subsection (5). If such proposed rule has not been filed by October 1, a law included in a supplement shall also be included in the next annual plan pursuant to subsection (1).

(8) FAILURE TO COMPLY.—If an agency fails to comply with a requirement of paragraph (2)(a) or subsection (5), within 15 days after written demand from the committee or from the chair of any other legislative committee, the agency shall deliver a written explanation of the reasons for noncompliance to the committee, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the chair of any legislative committee requesting the explanation of the reasons for noncompliance.

(9) EDUCATIONAL UNITS.—This section does not apply to educational units.

(1) DIVISION OF ADMINISTRATIVE HEARINGS.

(a) Division as a party.—Notwithstanding s. 120.57(1)(a), a hearing in which the division is a party may not be conducted by an administrative law judge assigned by the division. An attorney assigned by the Administration Commission shall be the hearing officer.

(b) Workers' compensation.—Notwithstanding s. 120.52(1), a judge of compensation claims, in adjudicating matters under chapter 440, is not an agency or part of an agency for purposes of this chapter.

(2) DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND CONSUMER SERVICES.—

(a) Marketing orders under chapter 527, chapter 573, or chapter 601 are not rules.

(b) Notwithstanding s. 120.57(1)(a), hearings held by the Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services pursuant to chapter 601 need not be conducted by an administrative law judge assigned by the division.

(3) OFFICE OF FINANCIAL REGULATION.—

(a) Notwithstanding s. 120.60(1), in proceedings for the issuance, denial, renewal, or amendment of a license or approval of a merger pursuant to title XXXVIII:

1.a. The Office of Financial Regulation of the Financial Services Commission shall have published in the Florida Administrative Register notice of the application within 21 days after receipt.

b. Within 21 days after publication of notice, any person may request a hearing. Failure to request a hearing within 21 days after notice constitutes a waiver of any right to a hearing. The Office of Financial Regulation or an applicant may request a hearing at any time prior to the issuance of a final order. Hearings shall be conducted pursuant to ss. 120.569 and 120.57, except that the Financial Services Commission shall by rule provide for participation by the general public.

2. Happy Monday, Kimberly and Natalie! I am following up on the meeting request below from early December to discuss pandemic preparedness and my text exchanges with Senator Burgess between January 8 and January 11 expressing some of our concerns with SB 484.

Would it be possible to schedule a meeting to discuss these two items with the senator? In preparation for the meeting, I am attaching our letter of opposition circulated to House Criminal Justice committee members as they prepared to consider the House companion to SB 484.

Thank you in advance,

Good morning, Kimberly:

I hope this email finds you well. We wanted to reach out and congratulate Sen. Burgess on his new role in the Florida Senate! We would also welcome the opportunity to briefly discuss some of the Catholic Conference's legislative priorities for the 2021 session, if it would be possible to fit us into his schedule. There are a few issues I'd like to highlight but, as he is Pandemic Preparedness and Response Chair, I'd especially like to share Catholic Charities' efforts in this regard and needs moving forward.

Thank you in advance for your kind attention,
Ingrid Delgado

RE: Opposition to HB 1 (Public Disorder)

Dear Representative Fernandez-Barquin:

The Florida Conference of Catholic Bishops struggles ardently against violence. However, we oppose HB 1, as it is unnecessary and entails foreseeable unintended consequences. Our concerns are the following:

HB 1 is unnecessary

The crimes committed in recent riots in Washington and across the county prompt outrage and deep concern. As we reflect on these events, it is necessary to recall that assault, battery, burglary, theft, and stealing are already crimes, and perpetrators are being held accountable for these actions. It seems unnecessary to create new and stiffer penalties for crimes if they occur during a riot, as long as the applicable laws are enforced.

Reflects a retributive approach to justice

The Conference supports increasing gain time, as it incentivizes rehabilitation. The longer sentences in HB 1 work against gain time reform efforts of reducing sentence lengths for individuals who demonstrate good behavior. Rigid formulations of mandatory minimum sentencing are one-size-fits-all solutions which are too often inappropriate, yet HB 1 creates a new mandatory minimum sentence.

Violates principle of subsidiarity

The provision that allows the governor to amend or override a local governing body's law enforcement budget prompts concern. A community of a higher order should not interfere in the internal life of a community of a lower order, depriving the latter of its functions. Put more simply, crime is largely a local issue; to the extent possible, local responses should be developed and respected.

Unintended consequences for churches, faith-based and other organizations

The terms "prohibited assemblies" and "riots" in HB 1 are undefined, as are "injury" and "force." Activities that we and many Floridians support, such as praying in front of an abortion facility, pro-life marches, and prayer vigils could be construed as prompting prosecution if this bill is enacted. This is a serious concern.

Alternative responses are available

There are other approaches to the civil unrest we have witnessed of late. Promoting de-escalation training is one.

Exacerbates existing ills

In its present form, HB 1 will further exacerbate the already disproportionate impact of incarceration among the poor and communities of color while increasing costs of incarceration.

We must oppose HB 1 but remain available to discuss our concerns further at your request.

Sincerely,

Michael B. Sheedy

ICYMI: Florida Speaker Sprowls Targets Mob Violence with New Bill: ‘You Will Go to Prison’

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (January 8, 2021) — Today, Florida Speaker of the House Chris Sprowls (R-Palm Harbor), a former state prosecutor, joined America’s Newsroom on Fox News Channel to highlight HB 1, the first-in-the-nation bill that targets rioting and mob violence statewide in Florida.

Sprowls said, “We do not care about which viewpoint is being expressed. This is a nation of laws governed by the Constitution and in the state of Florida our message is very very clear: that kind of conduct, that kind of activity will not be tolerated, and you will go to prison.” (LINK)

HB 1 was filed in the House by Representative Juan Fernandez-Barquin (R-Miami-Dade) on Wednesday night in timely response to the violent protests in Washington, D.C., and across the nation last summer.

Senate Bill 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance

by Senator Danny Burgess

Repealing PIP, requiring BI coverage, and creating a new framework for bad faith actions

Talking Points:

- Senate Bill 54 transforms ineffective and outdated insurance practices to result in a more stable insurance market and better outcomes for all insured Floridians.
- Florida is one of only two states that does not currently require drivers to carry liability coverage that immediately kicks in if they cause bodily injury or death.
- This legislation repeals Florida's No-Fault Law and instead enacts a bodily injury liability system, providing fairness to insured drivers and placing liability on the at-fault party in an accident.
- No-Fault Law, which requires Personal Injury Protection (PIP), has failed to substantially reduce litigation.
- PIP is far too expensive in relation to the lack of benefits and overall protection that it provides customers. The repeal of PIP will allow Floridians to receive better coverage.
- Enacting Senate Bill 54 will ~~deliver-ensure~~ more ~~sufficient-significant~~ bodily injury ~~liability~~ coverage for Floridians and require insurance companies to offer first party medical coverage (MedPay) of $5,000 or $10,000 to all drivers.
- Senate Bill 54 also reforms bad faith actions in order to reduce litigation by providing a set of standards that will govern conduct of both parties during the claims handling process.
- This legislation creates a framework to improve the claims handling process and lead to more favorable conclusions for both the insured and insurance company.
- Allowing insurers to conduct settlement negotiations that are more in line with insurer's evaluation of the claim can lead to less overall costs.
- Senate Bill 54 aims to lower the number of uninsured and underinsured drivers and provide a greater safety net in the event of an accident.

Commented [BK1]: I'm not sure about this sentence... they aren't really "receiving better coverage"... they would be required to purchase better coverage?... I think...

Commented [LC2]: Suggestion to delete this talking point and replace with something like, "For everyone's protection, drivers must be insured at sufficient levels."¶
"Insurance is not optional today, but PIP and the current levels of coverage are insufficient."

Bill Summary:

Repeal Personal Injury Protection (PIP) and Mandate Bodily Injury (BI) Coverage

- Repeals the Florida's No-Fault Law, which requires every owner and registrant of a motor vehicle in this state to maintain PIP coverage.
- Enacts financial responsibility requirements for liability for motor vehicle ownership or operation, as follows:
  - For bodily injury (BI) or death of one person in any one crash, $25,000, and;
  - Subject to that limit for one person, $50,000 for BI or death of two or more people in any one crash.
  - Retains the existing $10,000 financial responsibility requirement for property damage.
  - Revises required coverage amounts for garage liability and commercial motor vehicle insurance, and increases the cash deposit amount required for a certificate of self-insurance establishing financial responsibility for owners and operators of motor vehicles that are not for-hire vehicles.
  - Eliminates limitations on recovering pain and suffering damages from PIP, which currently require bodily injury that causes death or significant and permanent injury.

Mandate the Offer of Medical Payments Coverage (MedPay)

- Requires insurers to offer MedPay with limits of $5,000 or $10,000 to cover medical expenses of the insured.
  - Insurers may also offer other policy limits that exceed $5,000.
  - Insurers may offer deductibles of up to $500.
- Requires insurers to reserve $5,000 of MedPay to pay physicians or dentists who provide emergency services and care or who provide hospital inpatient care.

Create a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions

- Creates a new framework to govern all bad faith claims for failure to settle related to motor vehicle insurance.
- Requires insurers to follow claims handling best practices standards based on long-established good faith duties related to claim handling, claim investigation, defense of the insured, and settlement negotiations.
- Establishes that it is a condition precedent to bringing a third-party bad faith action not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., that the claimant serve a demand for settlement. The demand must:

LOCATION: 330 SENATE BUILDING | ADDRESS: 404 S. MONROE ST., TALLAHASSEE, FL 32399-1100 | PHONE: (850) 487-5184

- Identify the date and location of the loss, the claimant, and insured.
  - State the legal and factual basis of the claim.
  - Detail the claimant's injuries, medical treatment, and amount of current and reasonably anticipated future damages.
  - Demand a settlement amount, which may not exceed their policy limit.
  - Release, if accepted, the insured from any further liability.
  - Not provide conditions on the settlement other than payment of demand and ability of the claimant to take an examination under oath of the insured.
- Allows the third-party bad faith claimant to condition the demand for settlement on taking a 2 hour examination under oath (EUO) of the insured limited to discovering recoverable assets.
  - The claimant may withdraw the settlement demand after the EUO.
  - If the insured refuses to submit to the EUO, they may tender policy limits without obtaining a release of the insured and may not be held liable if there is an excess judgment against the insured.
  - Provides a safe harbor to the insurer in third-party bad faith action not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., providing that an insurer is not liable for bad faith if it tenders policy limits within 30 days of receiving a settlement demand.
  - Requires the trier of fact to consider certain actions of the insurer such as compliance with best practices.
  - Prohibits punitive damages in a bad faith failure to settle action.

Allow Named Driver Exclusions

- Authorizes the exclusion of a specifically named individual from specified insurance coverages under a private passenger motor vehicle policy, with the written consent of the policyholder.

Summary of SB 54 – Motor Vehicle Insurance

Repeal PIP and Mandate BI

- Repeals the Florida Motor Vehicle No-Fault Law (No-Fault Law), which requires every owner and registrant of a motor vehicle in this state to maintain Personal Injury Protection (PIP) coverage.
- Beginning January 1, 2021, the bill enacts financial responsibility requirements for liability for motor vehicle ownership or operation, as follows:
  - For bodily injury (BI) or death of one person in any one crash, $25,000, and
  - Subject to that limit for one person, $50,000 for BI or death of two or more people in any one crash.
  - The bill retains the existing $10,000 financial responsibility requirement for property damage (PD).
- Revises required coverage amounts for garage liability and commercial motor vehicle insurance, and increases the cash deposit amount required for a certificate of self-insurance establishing financial responsibility for owners and operators of motor vehicles that are not for-hire vehicles.
- Repealing the No-Fault Law eliminates the limitations on recovering pain and suffering damages from PIP insureds, which currently require bodily injury that causes death or significant and permanent injury.

Mandate the Offer of Medical Payments Coverage

- Requires insurers to offer medical payments coverage (MedPay) with limits of $5,000 or $10,000 to cover medical expenses of the insured.
  - Insurers may also offer other policy limits that exceed $5,000.
  - Insurers may offer deductibles of up to $500.
- Requires insurers must reserve $5,000 of MedPay benefits for 30 days to pay physicians or dentists who provide emergency services and care or who provide hospital inpatient care.

Create a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions

- Creates a new framework to govern all bad faith claims for failure to settle related to motor vehicle insurance.
- Requires insurers to follow claims handling best practices standards based on long-established good faith duties related to claim handling, claim investigation, defense of the insured, and settlement negotiations.
- Establishes that it is a condition precedent to bringing a third-party bad faith action not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., that the claimant serve a demand for settlement. The demand must:
  - Identify the date and location of the loss, the claimant, and insured.

- State the legal and factual basis of the claim.
- Detail the claimant's injuries, medical treatment, and the amount of current and reasonably anticipated future damages.
- Demand a settlement amount, which may not exceed the insured's policy limit.
- Release, if accepted, the insured from any further liability.
- Not provide conditions on the settlement other than payment of the demand and the ability of the claimant to take an examination under oath of the insured.
- Allows the third-party bad faith claimant to condition the demand for settlement on taking a 2 hour examination under oath (EUO) of the insured limited to discovering recoverable assets.
  - The bad faith claimant may withdraw the demand for settlement after the EUO.
  - If the insured refuses to submit to the EUO, the insurer may tender policy limits without obtaining a release of the insured and may not be held liable if there is an excess judgment against the insured.
- Provides a safe harbor to the insurer in third-party bad faith action not brought under s. 624.155, F.S., providing that an insurer is not liable for bad faith if it tenders policy limits within 30 days of receiving a demand for settlement.
- Requires the trier of fact, when determining if an insurer in bad faith failed to settle, to consider certain actions of the insurer such as compliance with best practices along with certain actions of the insured and claimant.
- Prohibits punitive damages in a bad faith failure to settle action.

Allow Named Driver Exclusions

- Authorizes the exclusion of a specifically named individual from specified insurance coverages under a private passenger motor vehicle policy, with the written consent of the policyholder.

Updates from the Florida Senate

Dear friends,

Yesterday I arrived in Tallahassee for my first committee week as your state senator. We have a lot of work ahead of us and the 2021 Legislative Session is just around the corner.

Over the next few months, I will be sending regular newsletters to update you about what's happening in Tallahassee.

In this inaugural newsletter, I provide a brief overview of the upcoming week and discuss a few of the bills I've filed so far.

It is an honor to serve you in the Florida Senate.

Forward March,

SB 494: Administration of Vaccines

On Friday I filed legislation to improve access to vaccinations for Floridians. SB 494: Administration of Vaccines would amend Florida State Statutes to allow pharmacists who meet certain requirements to administer vaccines recommended by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices to adults.

This legislation will increase the number of vaccination sites by allowing licensed and approved pharmacists to vaccinate the public at their local pharmacy.

SB 484: Combatting Public Disorder

We are a nation of law and order, not violence, destruction, and unrest. We respect the right to peacefully protest, but the shameful conduct we witnessed at the United States Capitol and episodes of violent civil unrest that we have witnessed over the last several months have no place in our country.

SB 484: Combatting Public Disorder makes it clear that here in Florida criminals who seek to thwart peaceful protests by willfully inciting violence, attacking law enforcement, and destroying public or private property will be held accountable.

SB 520: Social Media Websites

For better or for worse, social media has become a major part of our everyday life and society. First thing Monday morning, I filed SB 520: Social Media Websites.

This legislation would require social media companies to provide individual and business users notice when the website has suspended or disabled a user's account and requires the companies to detail the steps necessary to restore the account.

SB 520 signals to social media websites that regardless of a person's background, political history, religion, race, gender, or any other identifying measure, Twitter and Facebook cannot be the sole judge, jury, and executioner of Americans' First Amendment rights.

This week in the Florida Senate

Dear friends,

I've just returned from another busy week in the Florida Senate.

This week, I presented (and passed) my first bill, cast my first votes, and attended quite a few virtual meetings. On Thursday, my committee received an update on vaccine distribution and the pandemic response from the National Guard and the Department of Emergency Management.

It is an honor to serve you in the Florida Senate.

Forward March,

Danny Burgess
State Senator
District 20

Some Pawsitive News!

In between meetings, my staff and I have been busy child-proofing (and puppy-proofing) the office.

I am very excited to announce that Courtney, the kids, and our newest addition, Briar, will be joining me in Tallahassee next week! If you follow me on social media you may have seen photos of Briar, our four-month-old King Charles Cavalier puppy.

You can follow Briar's adventures on Twitter and Facebook at @legallybriar.

SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance Approved by Banking and Insurance Committee

This week the Senate Committee on Banking and Insurance, chaired by Senator Jim Boyd approved SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance.

SB 54 is the first bill I presented in the Florida Senate. This legislation will replace Florida's no-fault system with a bodily injury liability system more appropriately places liability where it should be - with the party that caused the accident.

Additionally, the bill creates a new framework for handling bad faith litigation that provides a clear set of standards to govern the conduct of both parties in the claims handling process, which I believe will lead to better outcomes for both insured Floridians and their insurance companies.

- Repeals No-Fault, Requires Bodily Injury Liability Coverage
- Requires Insurance Companies to Offer Medical Payments Coverage
- Creates a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions
- Allows for Named Driver Exclusions

Senate Bill 54 transforms this ineffective and outdated insurance structure, which I believe will lead to a more stable insurance market and better outcomes for insured Floridians when they face the unfortunate and in some cases tragic circumstance of being involved in a serious vehicle accident.

Emergency Management Director and Florida National Guard Brief Committee on Pandemic Response

This week in the Select Committee on Pandemic Preparedness and Response:

As chair of the Select Committee, I asked our Division of Emergency Management Director, Jared Moskowitz to update our committee members on the state's COVID-19 vaccination efforts.

Director Moskowitz gave an incredibly detailed presentation and provided a week-by-week review of Florida's vaccine distribution and administration progress. Although Florida leads the nation in vaccinations of seniors 65 years of age and older, there remains a critical need for increased vaccine supply from the federal government. The lack of vaccine supply from the federal government is currently the major impediment to vaccinating more Floridians.

I also asked the Florida National Guard's Director of Military Support, Col. John L. Steele, to brief the Select Committee on their response to COVID-19.

The Florida National Guard continues to support the state's COVID-19 response through operational support of Community Based Testing Sites, Community Vaccination Sites, Mobile Testing Teams, augmentation to airport screening, statewide logistics support, coordination, food distribution, planning, and operational mission sets.

This week in the Florida Senate

Dear friends,

I've just returned from another busy week in the Florida Senate.

This week, I presented (and passed) my first bill, cast my first votes, and attended quite a few virtual meetings. On Thursday, my committee received an update on vaccine distribution and the pandemic response from the National Guard and the Department of Emergency Management.

It is an honor to serve you in the Florida Senate.

Forward March,

Danny Burgess
State Senator
District 20

Some Pawsitive News!

In between meetings, my staff and I have been busy child-proofing (and puppy-proofing) the office.

I am very excited to announce that Courtney, the kids, and our newest addition, Briar, will be joining me in Tallahassee next week! If you follow me on social media you may have seen photos of Briar, our four-month-old King Charles Cavalier puppy.

You can follow Briar's adventures on Twitter and Facebook at @legallybriar.

SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance Approved by Banking and Insurance Committee

This week the Senate Committee on Banking and Insurance, chaired by Senator Jim Boyd approved SB 54: Motor Vehicle Insurance.

SB 54 is the first bill I presented in the Florida Senate. This legislation will replace Florida's no-fault system with a bodily injury liability system more appropriately places liability where it should be - with the party that caused the accident.

Additionally, the bill creates a new framework for handling bad faith litigation that provides a clear set of standards to govern the conduct of both parties in the claims handling process, which I believe will lead to better outcomes for both insured Floridians and their insurance companies.

- Repeals No-Fault, Requires Bodily Injury Liability Coverage
- Requires Insurance Companies to Offer Medical Payments Coverage
- Creates a New Framework for Motor Vehicle Insurance Bad Faith Actions
- Allows for Named Driver Exclusions

Senate Bill 54 transforms this ineffective and outdated insurance structure, which I believe will lead to a more stable insurance market and better outcomes for insured Floridians when they face the unfortunate and in some cases tragic circumstance of being involved in a serious vehicle accident.

Emergency Management Director and Florida National Guard Brief Committee on Pandemic Response

This week in the Select Committee on Pandemic Preparedness and Response:

As chair of the Select Committee, I asked our Division of Emergency Management Director, Jared Moskowitz to update our committee members on the state's COVID-19 vaccination efforts.

Director Moskowitz gave an incredibly detailed presentation and provided a week-by-week review of Florida's vaccine distribution and administration progress. Although Florida leads the nation in vaccinations of seniors 65 years of age and older, there remains a critical need for increased vaccine supply from the federal government. The lack of vaccine supply from the federal government is currently the major impediment to vaccinating more Floridians.

I also asked the Florida National Guard's Director of Military Support, Col. John L. Steele, to brief the Select Committee on their response to COVID-19.

The Florida National Guard continues to support the state's COVID-19 response through operational support of Community Based Testing Sites, Community Vaccination Sites, Mobile Testing Teams, augmentation to airport screening, statewide logistics support, coordination, food distribution, planning, and operational mission sets.

Subject: The state legislators need to STOP their attacks on HOME RULE

Senator Burgess,

Will city councils be reluctant to increase police budgets if SB 484 passes? This is a horrible attack on home rule.

My town is experimenting with ways to keep people out of jail by utilizing social workers and monies to find the homeless places to live. IF you force the city council to keep the same budget for our sheriff's office, they might be less inclined to raise the budget one year for an experimental plan that might cost more in the initial year. Please QUIT attacking home rule.

There are multiple problems with your bill SB 484. One of the problems is an attack on home rule. Cities will be struggling with their budgets. What right does the state have to step in? Excerpt from SB 484:

Starting at line 107

(4)(a) Within 30 days after a municipality posts its tentative budget to the official website under subsection (3), a resident of the municipality may file an appeal by petition to the Administration Commission if the tentative budget contains a funding reduction to the operating budget of the municipal law enforcement agency.

Beginning on line 118

The petition shall be filed with the Executive Office of the Governor,

Beginning on line 122

The governing body of the municipality has 5 working days after delivery of a copy of the petition to file a reply with the Executive Office of the Governor,

Beginning on line 135

The budget as approved, amended, or modified by the Administration Commission shall be final.

Thanks,
Susan Aertker

Subject: Greek Genocide Recognition
Attachment(s): "FL Senate Proposed Resolution.docx","GS - SENATE Genocide Recognition letter.docx"

Good Morning Senators,

Between the years of 1914 to 1923, the Ottoman Government and Turkish Nationalists began a pogrom to exterminate the minority Christian ethnicities that had existed on the Anatolian peninsula for thousands of years. Communities of Armenians, Assyrians, and Greeks were forced out of their homes to death camps where they were raped, converted, or died as laborers. During this time hundreds of thousands of Christian Orthodox cultural, historical and religious monuments were desecrated or destroyed. The lucky ones became refugees in Greece or North America, most never saw their family again.

In 2017 we began a fight in Florida to have the Greek Genocide recognized. In fact, approximately 1.2 million Greeks perished or were deported during this period. If you or your staff would be interested in learning more about this atrocity, the Greek Genocide Resource Center has much information including maps, eye-witness accounts, and newspaper reporting. You can find their resources and more information here: <http://greek-genocide.net/>

At this critical time in history, we would be honored and grateful for your support of this draft resolution. Recognition would be a huge step in remembrance of the horrors many Greek-Americans endured and their fight for religious and cultural freedom.

Please do not hesitate to reach out with any questions, I eagerly hope for your support on this important issue.

Thank you for your time,

Proposed Senate Resolution

A resolution celebrating the Bicentennial of Greece, recognizing the Greek Genocide of 1914-1923, and commemorating July 24, 1923
as “Greek Genocide Remembrance Day.”

WHEREAS, the year 2021 marks the 200th anniversary of the nation of Greece, after achieving independence from the Ottoman Empire, and

WHEREAS, the United States and Greece had a mutual influence on each other during their respective revolutionary eras, where our Founding Fathers drew on Hellenistic values during the American Revolution and, later, Greek Revolutionary heroes drew inspiration from the era of the American Revolution and the Enlightenment, and

WHEREAS, the independence of the nation of Greece was the start of 200 years of a shared friendship and history between the United States and Greece as champions of liberty, equality, and democracy, and

WHEREAS, as part of this modern Greek history, from 1914 to 1923, approximately 1.2 million men, women and children of Greek descent were victims of genocide or were deported and displaced from their homes at the direction of the Ottoman Turks, and

WHEREAS, American newspapers confirmed that Greeks in the region of Thrace and at Smyrna were subjected to systematic persecution and the persecution soon thereafter spread to other regions such as Pontus and Asia Minor, and

WHEREAS, Henry Morgenthau, the United States ambassador to the Ottoman Empire, in his 1918 published article, acknowledged this “whole devilish scheme to annihilate the Armenian, Greek and Syrian Christians of Turkey” and further found that “Greeks were the first victims of this nationalizing idea,” and

WHEREAS, on July 24, 1923, the parties signed the Treaty of Lausanne, formally ending the violence of Ottoman Turks against Greeks, Armenians, Assyrians, and other Christian minorities, and

WHEREAS, Greek-Americans and Greeks from across the world currently remember the genocide through several remembrance days specific to the regions of Thrace, Pontus, and Asia Minor, and

WHEREAS, eight other states have passed resolutions and commemorations on a regional basis honoring the memory of the Greeks who were victims of the Ottoman Empire, and

WHEREAS, the United States Congress, both in the House and the Senate, has passed a resolution commemorating, recognizing, and remembering the Armenian Genocide, in which the Greek victims are also mentioned, and

WHEREAS, the gravity of this atrocity and the strength of the modern Hellenic diaspora must be made aware, both to understand the unconscionability of this chapter of world history and to use this tragedy as a learning opportunity to eliminate hatred and division from our own communities, and

WHEREAS, the constituents of Florida are strong in their belief that all people should condemn crimes committed against any culture or people in order to prevent similar atrocities in the future, and

WHEREAS, Greek-Americans living in Florida have greatly enriched our state through leadership in business, agriculture, academia, government, and the arts, NOW, THEREFORE,

Be It Resolved by the Senate of the State of Florida:

That we recognize July 24, 1923 as “Greek Genocide Remembrance Day” in the State of Florida and commemorate the sacrifice of the Greek martyrs from 1914 to 1923.

The Honorable Senators of the Florida Legislature
Senate Office Building
Tallahassee, FL 32399-1100

Senators:

My name is George Sofikitis and I am a Florida resident and a current leader of the international nonprofit organization, the Sons of Pericles. The Sons of Pericles is a fraternal organization for young men dedicated to the promotion of Greek culture, service to our community and the fostering of brotherhood between our members. I am a proud member of the West Palm Beach member cluster and have been a resident and an active member of the Martin and Palm Beach county communities for several years.

During the 2021 legislative session, I am writing to request your support on a Senate Resolution, which has received great support throughout the State of Florida, across the several States, and from the international Greek community. We are pushing heavily for the formal recognition of the Greek Genocide of 1914 to 1923, where almost 1.2 million Greeks were massacred and hundreds of thousands more were deported and forced to flee from their homes as refugees. This year, Greek Americans throughout the United States are celebrating the 200th anniversary of the hard-fought independence of Greece in 1821. Just 100 years after independence, Greek minorities within the Ottoman Empire were still subject to the atrocities of a mass genocide of communities that existed for thousands of years. Our petition is sponsored by the international Sons of Pericles organization and supported by Hellenic organizations such as the American Hellenic Educational Progressive Association, the Greek Genocide Resource Center, the Hellenic American Leadership Council, and the American Hellenic Council.

At this crucial time, we would be honored and grateful for your support of this resolution in what is a huge step forward in the remembrance of this historical atrocity, a recognition of the horrors that the ancestors of many Greek-Americans endured, and a general condemnation of both the oppression of religious and cultural freedom and the systematic effort to eliminate human lives.

With high regard,

George Sofikitis

Dear Rep. Fernandez-Barquin and Sen. Burgess:

On behalf of the Florida Police Chiefs Association and over 900 of Florida's top law enforcement executives from across every region of the state, we applaud your sponsorship of HB 1 and SB 484, respectively, that are intended to maintain public order and keep the peace.

The Florida Police Chiefs Association believes that peaceful protest is a defining hallmark of our society. The member agencies of the Florida Police Chiefs Association are committed to defending every citizen's right to peacefully protest. At the same time, violent protests endanger lives and threaten the rights of every other citizen whom law enforcement officers swear an oath to protect. Violent and disorderly assembly, destroying property, harassing, and threatening citizens going about their business, and attacking law enforcement are all unacceptable behavior that your legislation aims to prevent.

Finally, while we've long called for additional funding for mental health and social service support, we staunchly oppose any disproportionate reduction in funding for law enforcement that would jeopardize public safety.

Thank you for your leadership on these issues and your unwavering support for Florida's law enforcement and the rule of law.

Sincerely,

Amy Mercer

Subject: HB1 is Unconstitutional and Violates the Rights of Florida's Citizens

Natalie Brown,

I am writing to you to ask you to please OPPOSE HB1 at the House Justice Appropriations meeting when it is scheduled for a hearing. I am outraged that this legislation even got assigned to a public hearing must less that it has been fast-tracked through the House on party lines. Florida currently faces the worst economic and public health crisis in history and instead of working to find solutions HB1 criminalizes free speech, peaceful assembly and dissent through unconstitutional language that is targeted at silencing voices demanding basic human rights, equality, and fair treatment by law enforcement. I repeat, our right to gather and demand redress of grievances from our government is a right of all US citizens through our constitution. HB1 is both unlawful and unconstitutional as a result and should be opposed.

Instead of addressing the horrendous housing crisis, the broken unemployment system, the failing healthcare system, the disorganized and chaotic education system, AND the rising number of deaths, poverty, job loss and sickness in Florida HB1 repackages legislation put forward by Governor DeSantis as a "response to the violent insurrectionist mobs" that attempted a coup on the nation's Capitol. This language is a smokescreen for the true intent of the bill which is to circumvent the mess that Florida has as a consequence of the pandemic and lack of support for Florida's poverty impacted and oppressed. I am not fooled by this. This is the same legislation it was back in September with the same purpose - to limit the basic civil rights of social justice protestors that is guaranteed to all people under the US Constitution.

I believe that HB1 is being used to distract media and organizers from focusing on the real problem: lack of support for those in need across the state. How dare the Governor and the Florida Legislature waste taxpayer time and money on proposing solutions to a made up problem. Section 870 of the Florida Statute already criminalizes riots, unlawful assemblies, and looting but this legislation would actually make it legal for motorists who strike protestors with their vehicle, even if the incident results in someone's death. It limits people's ability to apply to Florida's already broken unemployment system if they have been convicted under the proposed legislation and allows victims of violent crimes to recover civil damages from a local government that is deemed responsible for grossly negligent "policing" during a "riot". Meanwhile, the Florida Legislature is fast-tracking HB7/SB72 to create COVID19 liability immunity for the real victims of negligence by businesses, government agencies, schools, and religious organizations who have caused the spread of COVID19.

The Executive Director of the ACLU of Florida, Micah Kubic, stated that "This (bill) is not an attempt to make our communities safer. This proposed legislation by DeSantis is nothing more than a campaign political stunt. Now, it is being disguised as a response to the failed violent coup at the US Capitol. And, it is just as unconstitutional."

A statewide survey of Florida voters put out after the attack by Donald Trump's supporters on the US Capitol suggested a lack of support for HB1 and Governor DeSantis' push to amp up criminal penalties for "disorderly" protests. Ninety-percent of those asked stated their support for "protecting our constitutional right to free assembly and free speech by legally protesting without fear of criminal charges". Seventy-one percent of Democrats and 74% of Republicans deemed the issue a top priority. Eighty percent of respondents said they were more likely to support a legislator who voted to protect that priority, and 56% were "much more likely". On the other hand, 83% of respondents thought that it was important to strengthen unemployment protections for people who lost their jobs because of COVID-19, 63% said that this was "very important". (1)

Finally, this legislation also creates a preemptive attack on local municipalities that might want to "defund" the police and put their money towards more humanitarian initiatives to provide real solutions to small business and economic crises caused by the pandemic. Instead of restricting local government's ability to find solutions we need legislation that answers the call of the people in the streets. People only protest when they are being abused, oppressed, marginalized or violated. It's time the House Justice Appropriations Subcommittee address the calls of Florida voters and people who cared enough to peacefully assemble. We need to face the issues head on and answer to the humanity and dignity of working class, black, brown, and immigrant families in Florida who are suffering with workable policies that help the state grow and prosper.

If this legislation passes I will be letting people know that they should not travel in Florida, they should not move to Florida, they should not visit Florida, because our government does not support them and keep them safe. Public health and the economy should be your number one priority. You were elected to protect the best interests of the citizens of Florida and I believe that, regardless of political party that is the goal you seek. Please do your duty and OPPOSE HB1 and support legislation that provides real solutions to the real problems Floridians face today.

Subject: HB1 is Unconstitutional and Violates the Rights of Florida's Citizens

Kimberly Simon,

I am writing to you to ask you to please OPPOSE HB1 at the House Justice Appropriations meeting when it is scheduled for a hearing. I am outraged that this legislation even got assigned to a public hearing must less that it has been fast-tracked through the House on party lines. Florida currently faces the worst economic and public health crisis in history and instead of working to find solutions HB1 criminalizes free speech, peaceful assembly and dissent through unconstitutional language that is targeted at silencing voices demanding basic human rights, equality, and fair treatment by law enforcement. I repeat, our right to gather and demand redress of grievances from our government is a right of all US citizens through our constitution. HB1 is both unlawful and unconstitutional as a result and should be opposed.

Instead of addressing the horrendous housing crisis, the broken unemployment system, the failing healthcare system, the disorganized and chaotic education system, AND the rising number of deaths, poverty, job loss and sickness in Florida HB1 repackages legislation put forward by Governor DeSantis as a "response to the violent insurrectionist mobs" that attempted a coup on the nation's Capitol. This language is a smokescreen for the true intent of the bill which is to circumvent the mess that Florida has as a consequence of the pandemic and lack of support for Florida's poverty impacted and oppressed. I am not fooled by this. This is the same legislation it was back in September with the same purpose - to limit the basic civil rights of social justice protestors that is guaranteed to all people under the US Constitution.

I believe that HB1 is being used to distract media and organizers from focusing on the real problem: lack of support for those in need across the state. How dare the Governor and the Florida Legislature waste taxpayer time and money on proposing solutions to a made up problem. Section 870 of the Florida Statute already criminalizes riots, unlawful assemblies, and looting but this legislation would actually make it legal for motorists who strike protestors with their vehicle, even if the incident results in someone's death. It limits people's ability to apply to Florida's already broken unemployment system if they have been convicted under the proposed legislation and allows victims of violent crimes to recover civil damages from a local government that is deemed responsible for grossly negligent "policing" during a "riot". Meanwhile, the Florida Legislature is fast-tracking HB7/SB72 to create COVID19 liability immunity for the real victims of negligence by businesses, government agencies, schools, and religious organizations who have caused the spread of COVID19.

The Executive Director of the ACLU of Florida, Micah Kubic, stated that "This (bill) is not an attempt to make our communities safer. This proposed legislation by DeSantis is nothing more than a campaign political stunt. Now, it is being disguised as a response to the failed violent coup at the US Capitol. And, it is just as unconstitutional."

A statewide survey of Florida voters put out after the attack by Donald Trump's supporters on the US Capitol suggested a lack of support for HB1 and Governor DeSantis' push to amp up criminal penalties for "disorderly" protests. Ninety-percent of those asked stated their support for "protecting our constitutional right to free assembly and free speech by legally protesting without fear of criminal charges". Seventy-one percent of Democrats and 74% of Republicans deemed the issue a top priority. Eighty percent of respondents said they were more likely to support a legislator who voted to protect that priority, and 56% were "much more likely". On the other hand, 83% of respondents thought that it was important to strengthen unemployment protections for people who lost their jobs because of COVID-19, 63% said that this was "very important". (1)

Finally, this legislation also creates a preemptive attack on local municipalities that might want to "defund" the police and put their money towards more humanitarian initiatives to provide real solutions to small business and economic crises caused by the pandemic. Instead of restricting local government's ability to find solutions we need legislation that answers the call of the people in the streets. People only protest when they are being abused, oppressed, marginalized or violated. It's time the House Justice Appropriations Subcommittee address the calls of Florida voters and people who cared enough to peacefully assemble. If this legislation passes I will be letting people know that they should not travel in Florida, they should not move to Florida, they should not visit Florida, because our government does not support them and keep them safe. Public health and the economy should be your number one priority. You were elected to protect the best interests of the citizens of Florida and I believe that, regardless of political party that is the goal you seek. Subject: HB1 is unconstitutional

Elected Representative,

I am contacting you today so that you OPPOSE HB1, the Combatting Violence, Disorder, and Looting Law Enforcement Protection Act. There are already laws in place regarding violence, disorder, and looting, which do not infringe on protesters' due process protections and extra protections for Law Enforcement Officers in the state of Florida under FL §112.532.

While the events that took place at the Capitol on January 6, 2021, are abhorrent and a direct attack against democracy, it is also evident due to the circumstances of 2020 that law enforcement is not always capable of discerning civil disobedience. A constitutionally protected act, from rioting and other illegal activity. This bill language was drafted before the Capitol siege and targeted civil rights protesters, many of whom were eventually proven innocent.

Just this summer in Jacksonville, over 70 peaceful civil rights protesters were unlawfully detained. Among these protesters were families, students, pastors, business owners, teachers, medics, and lawyers. All charges were dropped. Four protesters even sued the Jacksonville Sheriff's Office and won a $100,000 settlement due to their rights being deliberately violated. With this new bill, these innocent people would have had incredible difficulty maintaining their freedom, even in the court of law.

As a concerned citizen, I am asking you not to allow fear and chaos to influence a hasty decision that could jeopardize honest Americans' freedom. We have seen the blatant double standards regarding protesting and treatment amongst groups, and this bill was proposed before this tyrannic event and is only being pushed into legislation in haste and to further suppress our freedoms.

Please VOTE NO on HB1.

Sincerely,
[YOUR NAME]

Comment or Question:

Dear Senator,

I am concerned about the attempt to repeal the PIP coverage that protects persons injured in motor vehicle collisions. Replacing the coverage with BI of minimum 25/50,000 is not sufficient to cover losses incurred by a motor vehicle accident. Mostly all other States have a minimum of 100/300,000 liability coverage. The Medical Benefits of minimum $5000 is not enough coverage for the emergency room visit should a person have to be transported there for treatment. Lastly, the requirement of legal counsel will increase since a lawsuit will be needed to get the third party insurers to pay for injuries sustained. Please protect patients and physicians by keeping a minimum of $10,000 for medical expenses while increasing the insurance minimums to 100/300,000.

Sincerely,
Dr. O'Hara

To: Hebel, Meagan <Hebel.Meagan@flsenate.gov>
Subject: I strongly oppose HB1 and Protect Floridian's First Amendment Rights

Meagan Hebel,

I am writing to you to ask you to please OPPOSE HB1 at the House Justice Appropriations meeting when it is scheduled for a hearing. I am outraged that this legislation even got assigned to a public hearing must less that it has been fast-tracked through the House on party lines. Florida currently faces the worst economic and public health crisis in its history and instead of working to find solutions HB1 criminalizes free speech, peaceful assembly and dissent through unconstitutional language that is targeted at silencing Black voices demanding basic human rights, equality, and fair treatment by law enforcement. Further, as a state employee, my presence at a protest can be used as an excuse for immediate termination, whether or not I participate in any unlawful activities. This limits my freedom of speech, and directly threatens my livelihood and family.

Instead of addressing the horrendous housing crisis, the broken unemployment system, the failing healthcare system, the disorganized and chaotic education system, AND the rising number of deaths, poverty, job loss and sickness in Florida HB1 repackages legislation put forward by Governor DeSantis as a "response to the violent insurrectionist mobs" that attempted a coup on the nation's Capitol. This language is a smokescreen for the true intent of the bill which is to circumvent the mess that Florida has as a consequence of the pandemic and lack of support for Florida's poverty impacted and oppressed. I am not fooled by this. This is the same legislation it was back in September with the same purpose - to limit the basic civil rights of BLM protestors that is guaranteed to all people under the US Constitution.

I believe that HB1 is being used to distract media and organizers from focusing on the real problem: lack of support for those in need across the state. How dare the Governor and the Florida Legislature waste taxpayer time and money on proposing solutions to a made up problem. Section 870 of the Florida Statute already criminalizes riots, unlawful assemblies, and looting but this legislation would actually make it legal for motorists who strike protestors with their vehicle, even if the incident results in someone's death. It limits people's ability to apply to Florida's already broken unemployment system if they have been convicted under the proposed legislation and allows victims of violent crimes to recover civil damages from a local government that is deems responsible for grossly negligent "policing" during a "riot". Meanwhile, the Florida Legislature is fast-tracking HB7/SB72 to create COVID19 liability immunity for the real victims of negligence by businesses, government agencies, schools, and religious organizations who have caused the spread of COVID19.

The Executive Director of the ACLU of Florida, Micah Kubic, stated that "This (bill) is not an attempt to make our communities safer. This proposed legislation by DeSantis is nothing more than a campaign political stunt. Now, it is being disguised as a response to the failed violent coup at the US Capitol. And, it is just as unconstitutional."

A statewide survey of Florida voters put out after the attack by Donald Trump's supporters on the US Capitol suggested a lack of support for HB1 and Governor DeSantis' push to amp up criminal penalties for "disorderly" protests. Ninety-percent of those asked stated their support for "protecting our constitutional right to free assembly and free speech by legally protesting without fear of criminal charges". Seventy-one percent of Democrats and 74% of Republicans deemed the issue a top priority. Eighty percent of respondents said they were more likely to support a legislator who voted to protect that priority, and 56% were "much more likely". On the other hand, 83% of respondents thought that it was important to strengthen unemployment protections for people who lost their jobs because of COVID-19, 63% said that this was "very important". (1)

Finally, this legislation also creates a preemptive attack on local municipalities that might want to "defund" the police and put their money towards more humanitarian initiatives to provide real solutions to small business and economic crises caused by the pandemic. Instead of restricting local government's ability to find solutions we need legislation that answers the call of the people in the streets. People only protest when they are being abused, oppressed, marginalized or violated. It's time the House Justice Appropriations Subcommittee address the calls of Florida voters and people who cared enough to peacefully assemble. We need to face the issues head on and answer to the humanity and dignity of working class, black, brown, and immigrant families in Florida who are suffering with workable policies that help the state grow and prosper.

If this legislation passes I will be letting people know that they should not travel in Florida, they should not move to Florida, they should not visit Florida, because our government does not support them and keep them safe. Public health and the economy should be your number one priority. Please OPPOSE HB1 and support legislation that provides real solutions to the real problems Floridians face today.

Kimberly Simon,

I am writing to you to ask you to please OPPOSE HB1 at the House Justice Appropriations meeting when it is scheduled for a hearing. I am outraged that this legislation even got assigned to a public hearing must less that it has been fast-tracked through the House on party lines. Florida currently faces the worst economic and public health crisis in its history and instead of working to find solutions HB1 criminalizes free speech, peaceful assembly and dissent through unconstitutional language that is targeted at silencing Black voices demanding basic human rights, equality, and fair treatment by law enforcement. Further, as a state employee, my presence at a protest can be used as an excuse for immediate termination, whether or not I participate in any unlawful activities. This limits my freedom of speech, and directly threatens my livelihood and family.

Instead of addressing the horrendous housing crisis, the broken unemployment system, the failing healthcare system, the disorganized and chaotic education system, AND the rising number of deaths, poverty, job loss and sickness in Florida HB1 repackages legislation put forward by Governor DeSantis as a "response to the violent insurrectionist mobs" that attempted a coup on the nation's Capitol. This language is a smokescreen for the true intent of the bill which is to circumvent the mess that Florida has as a consequence of the pandemic and lack of support for Florida's poverty impacted and oppressed. I am not fooled by this. This is the same legislation it was back in September with the same purpose - to limit the basic civil rights of BLM protestors that is guaranteed to all people under the US Constitution.

Subject: Insurer Reporting to DHSMV

Senators,

SB 54 does not change current Florida law regarding enforcement of automobile financial responsibility requirements, nor does the bill change the fees for reinstating a license or the penalties for driving on a suspended license. Here is current Florida law regarding the process by which DHSMV is made aware of cancelled insurance and the penalties for driving on a suspended license:

- Section 324.0221, F.S., requires insurers to notify the DHSMV within 10 days of the insurer cancelling, nonrenewing an auto insurance policy, or if the insurer writes a new auto insurance policy.
  - DHSMV must suspend the license and registration of any driver that fails to maintain the required security (usually through a PIP/PD policy).
  - An insured may reinstate his or her license and registration by procuring non-cancellable insurance coverage and paying a reinstatement fee. The fee is $150 for the first reinstatement, $250 for the second, and $500 for a third or subsequent reinstatement within a 3-year period.
- Under s. 322.34, F.S., knowingly driving on a suspended license is a second degree misdemeanor punishable by up to 60 days imprisonment and a fine of up to $500. Subsequent violations are first degree misdemeanors which are punishable by up to a $1,000 fine and 1 year imprisonment. A third or subsequent suspension must be punished by at least 10 days imprisonment. Receipt of a notice of suspension creates a presumption the violation was knowing.
- Under s. 320.02, F.S., using a false insurance card to register a vehicle is a first degree misdemeanor.

JAPC Duties Under Joint Rule Four of the Florida Legislature

The committee's duties and responsibilities described in Joint Rule 4.6 include:

Maintaining a continuous review of the statutory authority on which each rule is based, and advising agencies whenever such authority is significantly affected.

Maintaining a continuous review of rules and identifying and requesting agencies to repeal any rule or rule provision which reiterates or paraphrases any statute or for which statutory authority has been repealed.

Reviewing administrative rules and advising agencies of its findings.

Performing the duties prescribed by chapter 120 regarding the adoption and promulgation of rules.

Generally reviewing agency action pursuant to the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act.

Reporting to the Legislature at least annually and recommending needed legislation or other appropriate action. The report shall include:

- The number of objections voted by the committee and the outcome of such objections.
- The number of suspensions recommended by the committee and the outcome of such recommendations.
- The number of administrative determinations filed on the invalidity of a proposed or existing rule and the outcome of such determinations.
- The number of petitions for judicial review filed on the invalidity of a proposed or existing rule and the outcome of such petitions.
- Any recommendations provided to the standing committees during the preceding year as to the advisability of considering changes to the delegated legislative authority to adopt rules in specific circumstances.

Consulting regularly with legislative standing committees regarding legislative authority for proposed rules and other matters relating to legislative authority for agency action.

Maintaining a continuous review of the rulemaking process, including a review of agency procedure and of complaints based on such procedure.

Establishing measurement criteria to evaluate whether agencies are complying with the delegation of legislative authority in adopting and implementing rules.

Maintaining a continuous review of statutes that authorize agencies to adopt rules and making recommendations to the appropriate standing committees of the House and Senate as to the advisability of considering changes to the delegated legislative authority to adopt rules in specific circumstances.

JAPC Responsibilities Under Section 120.54, F.S., Related to Agency Rulemaking

At least 21 days before the proposed adoption date, each agency is required to file with the committee a copy of each rule it proposes to adopt; a copy of any material incorporated by reference in the rule; a detailed written statement of the facts and circumstances justifying the proposed rule; a copy of any statement of estimated regulatory costs that has been prepared; a statement of the extent to which the proposed rule relates to federal standards or rules on the same subject; and the published notice of rulemaking. The published notice must include a short, plain explanation of the purpose and effect of the proposed action; the full text of the proposed rule or amendment and a summary thereof; a reference to the grant of rulemaking authority and a reference to the Florida Statutes or Laws of Florida being implemented or interpreted; a summary of the agency's statement of the estimated regulatory costs, if one has been prepared; a statement that any person may provide the agency with information regarding the statement of estimated regulatory costs or a proposal for a lower cost regulatory alternative within 21 days after publication of the notice; a statement as to whether the proposed rule is expected to require legislative ratification; and the procedure for requesting a public hearing on the proposed rule. 120.54(3)(a)

If an agency determines that a proposed rule will affect small businesses, the agency is required to send notice of the proposed rule to the rules ombudsman in the Executive Office of the Governor not less than 28 days prior to adoption. If the rules ombudsman in the Executive Office of the Governor offers to the agency regulatory alternatives and the agency does not adopt all alternatives offered, the agency is required to file a detailed written statement with the committee explaining the reasons for failure to adopt such alternatives. The agency is required to send a copy of the statement to the rules ombudsman in the Executive Office of the Governor. 120.54(3)(b)

The adopting agency is required to file with the committee a notice of no change or technical change in a proposed rule at least 7 days before adoption. When any change is made in a proposed rule, other than a technical change, the adopting agency is required to file with the committee a notice of the change, along with the reasons for such change, at least 21 days prior to adoption. 120.54(3)(d)

At the time the rule is filed for adoption, the committee is required to certify whether the agency has responded in writing to all material and timely written comments or written inquiries made on behalf of the committee. 120.54(3)(e)4.

If the committee notifies the agency that an objection to a rule is being considered, the agency may postpone the adoption of the rule to accommodate review of the rule by the committee.

When an agency postpones adoption for this purpose, the 90-day period for filing the rule is tolled until the committee notifies the agency that it has completed its review. 120.54(3)(e)6.

Notice of the adoption by an agency of emergency rules, other than those of educational units or units of local government, shall be provided to the committee along with any material incorporated by reference in the rules. 120.54(4)(a)

The committee is required to review uniform rules of procedure adopted by the Administration Commission. 120.54(5)(a)

Agencies are empowered to adopt rules substantively identical to federal regulations using an expedited rulemaking process, which requires that the committee receive a copy of the agency's notice of intent to adopt a rule at least 21 days prior to the date of filing for adoption. 120.54(6)

If a petition to initiate rulemaking by an agency is directed to an unadopted rule and the agency, after holding a public hearing, does not initiate rulemaking or otherwise comply with the requested action, the agency shall file a statement of its reasons with the committee. The committee is required to forward a copy of the statement to the substantive committees of the Legislature with primary oversight jurisdiction of the agency. JAPC or a committee with oversight jurisdiction may hold a hearing directed to the agency statement. The committee holding the hearing may recommend appropriate legislation. 120.54(7)

JAPC Review of Agency Rules Pursuant to 120.545, F.S.

The committee is required to examine each proposed rule, except for rules exempted by s. 120.81(1)(e) and (2), and its accompanying material, and each emergency rule, and may examine any existing rule to determine whether:

- The rule is an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority pursuant to s. 120.52(8).
- The statutory authority for the rule has been repealed.
- The rule reiterates or paraphrases statutory material.
- The rule is in proper form.
- The notice given prior to adoption was sufficient to give adequate notice of the purpose and effect of the rule.
- The rule is consistent with expressed legislative intent pertaining to the specific provisions of law which the rule implements.
- The rule is necessary to accomplish the objectives of the specific law implemented.
- The rule is a reasonable implementation of the law as it affects the convenience of the general public or persons particularly affected by the rule.
- The rule could be made less complex or more easily comprehensible to the general public.
- The rule's statement of estimated regulatory costs complies with the requirements of s. 120.541 and whether the rule imposes regulatory costs on the regulated person, county, or city which could be reduced by the adoption of less costly alternatives that substantially accomplish the statutory objectives.

- The rule will require additional appropriations.
- If the rule is an emergency rule, there exists an emergency justifying the rule, the agency is within its statutory authority, and the rule was adopted in compliance with s. 120.54(4). 120.545(1)

The committee may request from an agency any information reasonably necessary for examination of a rule. The committee is required to consult with legislative standing committees with jurisdiction over the subject matter of rules examined. 120.545(2)

If the committee votes to object to a rule, it shall certify that fact to the agency along with a statement detailing its objections with particularity, within 5 days after the objection. The committee must notify the House Speaker and Senate President of the objection concurrent with certification to the agency. The agency is required to notify the committee of its intention to comply with the objection or its refusal to do so within 30 days, if headed by an individual, or within 45 days, if headed by a collegial body. If the agency fails to respond to the committee's objection to a rule not yet in effect within the prescribed time limits, the committee is required to notify the Department of State that the agency, by its failure to respond, has elected to withdraw the rule. Failure of the agency to respond to an objection to a rule that is in effect constitutes a refusal to amend or repeal the rule. Failure of the agency to respond to an objection to a statement of estimated regulatory costs constitutes a refusal to prepare a corrected statement of estimated regulatory costs. If the agency refuses to meet the committee's objection, the committee is required to file with the Department of State a notice of the objection for publication in the Florida Administrative Weekly. 120.545(2) - (7)

The committee is authorized to submit to the Senate President and House Speaker a recommendation that legislation be introduced to address the committee's objection in the event that the agency fails to initiate administrative action consistent with the committee's objection within 60 days after the objection, or then fails to proceed in good faith to complete such action. If the committee votes to recommend the introduction of legislation, the committee is required to certify that fact to the agency within 5 days. The committee may request that the agency temporarily suspend the rule or suspend the adoption of a proposed rule, pending consideration of proposed legislation during the next regular session of the Legislature. The agency must respond to the certification within 30 days, if headed by an individual, or within 45 days, if headed by a collegial body, by either temporarily suspending the rule or the adoption of a proposed rule, or notifying the committee that it refuses to do so. The agency's failure to respond to the committee certification constitutes a refusal to suspend the rule or to suspend the adoption of the proposed rule. The committee is required to prepare proposed legislation to address the committee's objection in accordance with the rules of the Senate and the House for pre-filing and introduction in the next regular legislative session. The proposed legislation shall be presented to the Senate President and House Speaker with the committee recommendation. 120.545(8)

JAPC Responsibilities Under Miscellaneous Provisions of Chapter 120

The committee is authorized to notify the Department of State and the appropriate agency when a law is repealed that is implemented by an agency rule. 120.536(2)

An agency that is required to revise a statement of estimated regulatory costs must provide the statement to the committee at least 21 days before filing the rule for adoption. 120.541(1)(d)

A person subject to regulation by an agency rule may file a petition with the agency, with a copy to the committee, requesting a variance or waiver from the agency's rule. A copy of the agency's order granting or denying the petition shall be filed with the committee and shall contain a statement of the relevant facts and reasons supporting the agency's action. 120.542

Any form used by an agency in its dealings with the public, along with any accompanying instructions, must be filed with the committee before it is used. 120.55(1)(a)

When the Department of State is in doubt whether a rule published in the official version of the Florida Administrative Code is still in full force and effect, the department is required to submit to the agency a request for a statement to that effect, and provide a copy to the committee. 120.555

The Division of Administrative Hearings is required to forward to the committee a copy of each petition seeking an administrative determination of the validity of a proposed or existing rule. A written notice from the chair of the committee stating that the committee will consider an objection to a challenged rule at its next scheduled meeting is evidence of good cause for a continuance of a scheduled hearing on the petition. The division is required to provide a copy of the administrative law judge's final order to the committee. 120.56(1)

The final order of the administrative law judge on a petition challenging the validity of an agency statement not adopted as a rule pursuant to s. 120.54 is required to be transmitted to the committee by the division. 120.56(4)

A copy of each petition seeking a declaratory statement by an agency is required to be transmitted to the committee by the agency. 120.565

The Administration Commission is required to transmit to the committee a copy of a petition seeking an exemption from any requirement of chapter 120, a certified copy of the order granting or denying the petition, and a copy of any alternative procedures prescribed. 120.63

Not later than February 1 of each year, the Division of Administrative Hearings is required to issue a written report to the committee including: (1) a summary of the extent and effect of agencies' use of administrative law judges, court reporters, and other personnel in proceedings under chapter 120; (2) recommendations for change or improvement in the APA or any agency's practice or policy with respect thereto; (3) recommendations as to those types of cases or disputes which should be conducted under the summary hearing process described in s. 120.574; and (4) a report regarding each agency's compliance with the filing requirement in s. 120.57(1)(m). 120.65(8)

By October 1st of each year, each agency head and the agency's principal legal advisor, must file a certification with the committee indicating that they have reviewed the agency's regulatory plan and the agency regularly reviews its rules during the identified period to determine if the rules remain consistent with the agency's rulemaking authority and laws implemented.

120.74(2)

Each agency must file a certification with the committee once it has published a notice of rule development and upon filing a deadline extension of regulatory plan certification per the requirements in s.120.74(4) and (5). 120.74(6)

An agency must deliver a written explanation for failing to comply with the requirements of s. 120.74(2)(a) or s. 120.74(5), within 15 days after written demand from the committee.
120.74(8)

Noticed meetings may be canceled by the chair with the approval of at least one presiding officer.

(d) If a majority of its members from each house agree, a joint committee may continue a properly noticed meeting after the expiration of the time called for the meeting. However, a joint committee may not meet beyond the time authorized by the presiding officers without special leave granted by both presiding officers.

(3) The presiding officers shall interpret, apply, and enforce rules governing joint committees by agreement when the rule at issue is a joint rule. The committee may expend public funds from its appropriation for the purpose of seeking judicial review.

(9) Maintain a continuous review of the administrative rulemaking process, including a review of agency procedure and of complaints based on such agency procedure.

(10) Establish measurement criteria to evaluate whether agencies are complying with the delegation of legislative authority in adopting and implementing rules.

*History.—*s. 1, ch. 74-310.

120.515 Declaration of policy.—This chapter provides uniform procedures for the exercise of specified authority. This chapter does not limit or impinge upon the assignment of executive power under Article IV of the State Constitution or the legal authority of an appointing authority to direct and supervise those appointees serving at the pleasure of the appointing authority. For purposes of this chapter, adherence to the direction and supervision of an appointing authority does not constitute delegation or transfer of statutory authority assigned to the appointee.

*History.—*s. 7, ch. 2012-116.

120.52 Definitions.—As used in this act:

(1) “Agency” means the following officers or governmental entities if acting pursuant to powers other than those derived from the constitution:

FL-SEN-21-0182-A-000754

agency head appointed by and serving at the pleasure of an appointing authority remains subject to the direction and supervision of the appointing authority, but actions taken by the agency head as authorized by statute are official acts.

(4) "Committee" means the Administrative Procedures Committee.

(5) "Division" means the Division of Administrative Hearings. Any document filed with the division by a party represented by an attorney shall be filed by electronic means through the division's website. Any document filed with the division by a party not represented by an attorney shall, whenever possible, be filed by electronic means through the division's website.

(6) "Educational unit" means a local school district, a community college district, the Florida School for the Deaf and the Blind, or a state university when the university is acting pursuant to statutory authority derived from the Legislature.

(7) "Final order" means a written final decision which results from a proceeding under s. 120.56, s. 120.565, s. 120.569, s. 120.57, s. 120.573, or s. 120.574 which is not a rule, and which is not excepted from the definition of a rule, and which has been filed with the agency clerk, and includes final agency actions which are affirmative, negative, injunctive, or declaratory in form. A final order includes all materials explicitly adopted in it. The clerk shall indicate the date of filing on the order.

(8) "Invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority" means action that goes beyond the powers, functions, and duties delegated by the Legislature. A proposed or existing rule is an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority if any one of the following applies:

(a) The agency has materially failed to follow the applicable rulemaking procedures or requirements set forth in this chapter;

(b) The agency has exceeded its grant of rulemaking authority, citation to which is required by s. 120.54(3)(a)1.;

(c) The rule enlarges, modifies, or contravenes the specific provisions of law implemented, citation to which is required by s. 120.54(3)(a)1.;

(d) The rule is vague, fails to establish adequate standards for agency decisions, or vests unbridled discretion in the agency;

(e) The rule is arbitrary or capricious. A rule is arbitrary if it is not supported by logic or the necessary facts; a rule is capricious if it is adopted without thought or reason or is irrational; or

(f) The rule imposes regulatory costs on the regulated person, county, or city which could be reduced by the adoption of less costly alternatives that substantially accomplish the statutory objectives.

A grant of rulemaking authority is necessary but not sufficient to allow an agency to adopt a rule; a specific law to be implemented is also required. An agency may adopt only rules that implement or interpret the specific powers and duties granted by the enabling statute. No agency shall have authority to adopt a rule only because it is reasonably related to the purpose of the enabling legislation and is not arbitrary and capricious or is within the agency's class of powers and duties, nor shall an agency have the authority to implement statutory provisions setting forth general legislative intent or policy. Statutory language granting rulemaking authority or generally describing the powers and functions of an agency shall be construed to extend no further than implementing or interpreting the specific powers and duties conferred by the enabling statute.

(9) "Law implemented" means the language of the enabling statute being carried out or interpreted by an agency through rulemaking.

(10) "License" means a franchise, permit, certification, registration, charter, or similar form of authorization required by law, but it does not include a license required primarily for revenue purposes when issuance of the license is merely a ministerial act.

(11) "Licensing" means the agency process respecting the issuance, denial, renewal, revocation, suspension, annulment, withdrawal, or amendment of a license or imposition of terms for the exercise of a license.

(12) "Official reporter" means the publication in which an agency publishes final orders, the index to final orders, and the list of final orders which are listed rather than published.

(13) "Party" means:

(a) Specifically named persons whose substantial interests are being determined in the proceeding.

(b) Any other person who, as a matter of constitutional right, provision of statute, or provision of agency regulation, is entitled to participate in whole or in part in the proceeding, or whose substantial interests will be affected by proposed agency action, and who makes an appearance as a party.

(c) Any other person, including an agency staff member, allowed by the agency to intervene or participate in the proceeding as a party. An agency may by rule authorize limited forms of participation in agency proceedings for persons who are not eligible to become parties.

(d) Any county representative, agency, department, or unit funded and authorized by state statute or county ordinance to represent the interests of the consumers of a county, when the proceeding involves the substantial interests of a significant number of residents of the county and the board of county commissioners has, by resolution, authorized the representative, agency, department, or unit to represent the class of interested persons. The authorizing resolution shall apply to a specific proceeding and to appeals and ancillary proceedings thereto, and it shall not be required to state the names of the persons whose interests are to be represented.

The term "party" does not include a member government of a regional water supply authority or a governmental or quasi-judicial board or commission established by local ordinance or special or general law where the governing membership of such board or commission is shared with, in whole or in part, or appointed by a member government of a regional water supply authority in proceedings under s. 120.569, s. 120.57, or s. 120.68, to the extent that an interlocal agreement under FL-SEN-21-0182-A-000755

ss. 163.01 and 373.713 exists in which the member government has agreed that its substantial interests are not affected by the proceedings or that it is to be bound by alternative dispute resolution in lieu of participating in the proceedings. This exclusion applies only to those particular types of disputes or controversies, if any, identified in an interlocal agreement.

(14) "Person" means any person described in s. 1.01, any unit of government in or outside the state, and any agency described in subsection (1).

(15) "Recommended order" means the official recommendation of an administrative law judge assigned by the division or of any other duly authorized presiding officer, other than an agency head or member of an agency head, for the final disposition of a proceeding under ss. 120.569 and 120.57.

(16) "Rule" means each agency statement of general applicability that implements, interprets, or prescribes law or policy or describes the procedure or practice requirements of an agency and includes any form which imposes any requirement or solicits any information not specifically required by statute or by an existing rule. The term also includes the amendment or repeal of a rule. The term does not include:

(a) Internal management memoranda which do not affect either the private interests of any person or any plan or procedure important to the public and which have no application outside the agency issuing the memorandum.

(b) Legal memoranda or opinions issued to an agency by the Attorney General or agency legal opinions prior to their use in connection with an agency action.

(c) The preparation or modification of:

1. Agency budgets.
2. Statements, memoranda, or instructions to state agencies issued by the Chief Financial Officer or Comptroller as chief fiscal officer of the state and relating or pertaining to claims for payment submitted by state agencies to the Chief Financial Officer or Comptroller.

3. Contractual provisions reached as a result of collective bargaining.

4. Memoranda issued by the Executive Office of the Governor relating to information resources management.

(17) "Rulemaking authority" means statutory language that explicitly authorizes or requires an agency to adopt, develop, establish, or otherwise create any statement coming within the definition of the term "rule."

(18) "Small city" means any municipality that has an unincarcerated population of 10,000 or less according to the most recent decennial census.

(19) "Small county" means any county that has an unincarcerated population of 75,000 or less according to the most recent decennial census.

(20) "Unadopted rule" means an agency statement that meets the definition of the term "rule," but that has not been adopted pursuant to the requirements of s. 120.54.

(21) "Variance" means a decision by an agency to grant a modification to all or part of the literal requirements of an agency rule to a person who is subject to the rule. Any variance shall conform to the standards for variances outlined in this chapter and in the uniform rules adopted pursuant to s. 120.54(5).

(22) "Waiver" means a decision by an agency not to apply all or part of a rule to a person who is subject to the rule. Any waiver shall conform to the standards for waivers outlined in this chapter and in the uniform rules adopted pursuant to s. 120.54(5).

120.525 Meetings, hearings, and workshops.—

(1) Except in the case of emergency meetings, each agency shall give notice of public meetings, hearings, and workshops by publication in the Florida Administrative Register and on the agency's website not less than 7 days before the event. The notice shall include a statement of the general subject matter to be considered.

(2) An agenda shall be prepared by the agency in time to ensure that a copy of the agenda may be received at least 7 days before the event by any person in the state who requests a copy and who pays the reasonable cost of the copy. The agenda, along with any meeting materials available in electronic form excluding confidential and exempt information, shall be published on the agency's website. The agenda shall contain the items to be considered in order of presentation. After the agenda has been made available, a change shall be made only for good cause, as determined by the person designated to preside, and stated in the record. Notification of such change shall be at the earliest practicable time.

(3) If an agency finds that an immediate danger to the public health, safety, or welfare requires immediate action, the agency may hold an emergency public meeting and give notice of such meeting by any procedure that is fair under the circumstances and necessary to protect the public interest, if:

(a) The procedure provides at least the procedural protection given by other statutes, the State Constitution, or the United States Constitution.

(b) The agency takes only that action necessary to protect the public interest under the emergency procedure.

(c) The agency publishes in writing at the time of, or prior to, its action the specific facts and reasons for finding an immediate danger to the public health, safety, or welfare and its reasons for concluding that the procedure used is fair under the circumstances. The agency findings of immediate danger, necessity, and procedural fairness shall be judicially reviewable.

(4) For purposes of establishing a quorum at meetings of regional planning councils that cover three or more counties, a voting member who appears via telephone, real-time videoconferencing, or similar real-time electronic or video communication that is broadcast publicly at the meeting location may be counted toward the quorum requirement if at least one-third of the voting members of the regional planning council are physically present at the meeting location. A member must provide oral, written, or electronic notice of his or her intent to appear via telephone, real-time videoconferencing, or similar real-time electronic or video communication to the regional planning council at least 24 hours before the scheduled meeting.

120.53 Maintenance of agency final orders.—

(1) In addition to maintaining records contained in s. 119.021(3), each agency shall also electronically transmit a certified text-searchable copy of each agency final order listed in subsection (2) rendered on or after July 1, 2015, to a centralized electronic database of agency final orders maintained by the division. The database must allow users to research and retrieve the full texts of agency final orders by:

- (a) The name of the agency that issued the final order.
- (b) The date the final order was issued.
- (c) The type of final order.
- (d) The subject of the final order.
- (e) Terms contained in the text of the final order.

(2) The agency final orders that must be electronically transmitted to the centralized electronic database include:

(a) Each final order resulting from a proceeding under s. 120.57 or s. 120.573.

(b) Each final order rendered pursuant to s. 120.57(4) which contains a statement of agency policy that may be the basis of future agency decisions or that may otherwise contain a statement of precedential value.

(c) Each declaratory statement issued by an agency.

(d) Each final order resulting from a proceeding under s. 120.56 or s. 120.574.

(3) Each agency shall maintain a list of all final orders rendered pursuant to s. 120.57(4) that are not required to be electronically transmitted to the centralized electronic database because they do not contain statements of agency policy or statements of precedential value. The list must include the name of the parties to the proceeding and the number assigned to the final order.

(4) Each final order, whether rendered by the agency or the division, that must be electronically transmitted to the centralized electronic database or maintained on a list pursuant to subsection (3) must be electronically transmitted to the database or added to the list within 90 days after the final order is rendered. Each final order that must be electronically transmitted to the database or added to the list must have attached a copy of the complete text of any materials incorporated by reference; however, if the quantity of the materials incorporated makes attachment of the complete text of the materials impractical, the final order may contain a statement of the location of such materials and the manner in which the public may inspect or obtain copies of the materials incorporated by reference.

(5) Nothing in this section relieves an agency from its responsibility for maintaining a subject matter index of final orders rendered before July 1, 2015, and identifying the location of the subject matter index on the agency's website. In addition, an agency may electronically transmit to the centralized electronic database certified copies of all of the final orders that were rendered before July 1, 2015, which were required to be in the subject matter index. The centralized electronic database constitutes the official compilation of administrative final orders rendered on or after July 1, 2015, for each agency.

120.533 Coordination of the transmittal, indexing, and listing of agency final orders by Department of State.—The Department of State shall:

(1) Coordinate the transmittal, indexing, management, preservation, and availability of agency final orders that must be transmitted, indexed, or listed pursuant to s. 120.53.

(2) Provide guidelines for indexing agency final orders. More than one system for indexing may be approved by the Department of State, including systems or methods in use, or proposed for use, by an agency. More than one system may be approved for use by a single agency as best serves the needs of that agency and the public.

(3) Provide for storage and retrieval systems to be maintained by agencies pursuant to s. 120.53(5) for indexing, and making available agency final orders by subject matter. The Department of State may authorize more than one system, including systems in use by an agency. Storage and retrieval systems that may be used by an agency include, without limitation, a designated reporter or reporters, a microfilming system, an automated system, or any other system considered appropriate by the Department of State.

(4) Provide standards and guidelines for the certification and electronic transmittal of copies of agency final orders to the division, as required under s. 120.53, and, to protect the integrity and authenticity of information publicly accessible through the electronic database, coordinate and provide standards and guidelines to ensure the security of copies of agency final orders transmitted and maintained in the electronic database by the division under s. 120.53(1).

(5) For each agency, determine which final orders must be indexed or transmitted.

(6) Require each agency to report to the department concerning which types or categories of agency orders establish precedent for each agency.

(7) Adopt rules as necessary to administer its responsibilities under this section, which shall be binding on all agencies including the division acting in the capacity of official compiler of administrative final orders under s. 120.53, notwithstanding s. 120.65. The Department of State may provide for an alternative official compiler to manage and operate the division's database and related services if the Administration

Commission determines that the performance of the division as official compiler is unsatisfactory.

120.536 Rulemaking authority; repeal; challenge.—

(1) A grant of rulemaking authority is necessary but not sufficient to allow an agency to adopt a rule; a specific law to be implemented is also required. An agency may adopt only rules that implement or interpret the specific powers and duties granted by the enabling statute. No agency shall have authority to adopt a rule only because it is reasonably related to the purpose of the enabling legislation and is not arbitrary and capricious or is within the agency's class of powers and duties, nor shall an agency have the authority to implement statutory provisions setting forth general legislative intent or policy. Statutory language granting rulemaking authority or generally describing the powers and functions of an agency shall be construed to extend no further than implementing or interpreting the specific powers and duties conferred by the enabling statute.

(2) Unless otherwise expressly provided by law:

(a) The repeal of one or more provisions of law implemented by a rule that on its face implements only the provision or provisions repealed and no other provision of law nullifies the rule. Whenever notice of the nullification of a rule under this subsection is received from the committee or otherwise, the Department of State shall remove the rule from the Florida Administrative Code as of the effective date of the law effecting the nullification and update the historical notes for the code to show the rule repealed by operation of law.

(b) The repeal of one or more provisions of law implemented by a rule that on its face implements the provision or provisions repealed and one or more other provisions of law nullifies the rule or applicable portion of the rule to the extent that it implements the repealed law. The agency having authority to repeal or amend the rule shall, within 180 days after the effective date of the repealing law, publish a notice of rule development identifying all portions of rules affected by the repealing law, and if no notice is timely published the operation of each rule implementing a repealed provision of law shall be suspended until such notice is published.

(c) The repeal of one or more provisions of law that, other than as provided in paragraph (a) or paragraph (b), causes a rule or portion of a rule to be of uncertain enforceability requires the Department of State to treat the rule as provided by s. 120.555. A rule shall be considered to be of uncertain enforceability under this paragraph if the division notifies the Department of State that a rule or a portion of the rule has been invalidated in a division proceeding based upon a repeal of law, or the committee gives written notification to the Department of State and the agency having power to amend or repeal the rule that a law has been repealed creating doubt about whether the rule is still in full force and effect.

(3) The Administrative Procedures Committee or any substantially affected person may petition an agency to repeal any rule, or portion thereof, because it exceeds the rulemaking authority permitted by this section. Not later than 30 days after the date of filing the petition if the agency is headed by an individual, or not later than 45 days if the agency is headed by a collegial body, the agency shall initiate rulemaking proceedings to repeal the rule, or portion thereof, or deny the petition, giving a written statement of its reasons for the denial.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed to change the legal status of a rule that has otherwise been judicially or administratively determined to be invalid.

History.—s. 9, ch. 96-159; s. 3, ch. 99-379; s. 15, ch. 2000-151; s. 15, ch. 2005-2; s. 4, ch. 2008-104; s. 1, ch. 2012-31.

120.54 Rulemaking.—

(1) GENERAL PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO ALL RULES OTHER THAN EMERGENCY RULES.—

(a) Rulemaking is not a matter of agency discretion. Each agency statement defined as a rule by s. 120.52 shall be adopted by the rulemaking procedure provided by this section as soon as feasible and practicable.

1. Rulemaking shall be presumed feasible unless the agency proves that:

a. The agency has not had sufficient time to acquire the knowledge and experience reasonably necessary to address a statement by rulemaking; or

b. Related matters are not sufficiently resolved to enable the agency to address a statement by rulemaking.

2. Rulemaking shall be presumed practicable to the extent necessary to provide fair notice to affected persons of relevant agency procedures and applicable principles, criteria, or standards for agency decisions unless the agency proves that:

a. Detail or precision in the establishment of principles, criteria, or standards for agency decisions is not reasonable under the circumstances; or

b. The particular questions addressed are of such a narrow scope that more specific resolution of the matter is impractical outside of an adjudication to determine the substantial interests of a party based on individual circumstances.

(b) Whenever an act of the Legislature is enacted which requires implementation of the act by rules of an agency within the executive branch of state government, such rules shall be drafted and formally proposed as provided in this section within the times provided in s. 120.74(4) and (5).

(c) No statutory provision shall be delayed in its implementation pending an agency's adoption of implementing rules unless there is an express statutory provision prohibiting its application until the adoption of implementing rules.

(d) In adopting rules, all agencies must, among the alternative approaches to any regulatory objective and to the extent allowed by law, choose the alternative that does not impose regulatory costs on the regulated person, county, or city which could be reduced by the adoption of less costly alternatives that substantially accomplish the statutory objectives.

(e) No agency has inherent rulemaking authority, nor has any agency authority to establish penalties for violation of a rule unless the Legislature, when establishing a penalty, specifically provides that the penalty applies to rules.

(f) An agency may adopt rules authorized by law and necessary to the proper implementation of a statute prior to the effective date of the statute, but the rules may not be effective until the statute upon which they are based is effective. An agency may not adopt retroactive rules, including retroactive rules intended to clarify existing law, unless that power is expressly authorized by statute.

(g) Each rule adopted shall contain only one subject.

(h) In rulemaking proceedings, the agency may recognize any material which may be judicially noticed, and it may provide that materials so recognized be incorporated into the record of the proceeding. Before the record of any proceeding is completed, all parties shall be provided a list of these materials and given a reasonable opportunity to examine them and offer written comments or written rebuttal.

(i)1. A rule may incorporate material by reference but only as the material exists on the date the rule is adopted. For purposes of the rule, changes in the material are not effective unless the rule is amended to incorporate the changes.

2. An agency rule that incorporates by specific reference another rule of that agency automatically incorporates subsequent amendments to the referenced rule unless a contrary intent is clearly indicated in the referencing rule. A notice of amendments to a rule that has been incorporated by specific reference in other rules of that agency must explain the effect of those amendments on the referencing rules.

3. In rules adopted after December 31, 2010, material may not be incorporated by reference unless:

a. The material has been submitted in the prescribed electronic format to the Department of State and the full text of the material can be made available for free public access through an electronic hyperlink from the rule making the reference in the Florida Administrative Code; or

b. The agency has determined that posting the material on the Internet for purposes of public examination and inspection would constitute a violation of federal copyright law, in which case a statement to that effect, along with the address of locations at the Department of State and the agency at which the material is available for public inspection and examination, must be included in the notice required by subparagraph (3)(a)1.

4. A rule may not be amended by reference only. Amendments must set out the amended rule in full in the same manner as required by the State Constitution for laws.

5. Notwithstanding any contrary provision in this section, when an adopted rule of the Department of Environmental Protection or a water management district is incorporated by reference in the other agency's rule to implement a provision of part IV of chapter 373, subsequent amendments to the rule are not effective as to the incorporating rule unless the agency incorporating by reference notifies the committee and the Department of State of its intent to adopt the subsequent amendment, publishes notice of such intent in the Florida Administrative Register, and files with the Department of State a copy of the amended rule incorporated by reference. Changes in the rule incorporated by reference are effective as to the other agency 20 days after the date of the published notice and filing with the Department of State. The Department of State shall amend the history note of the incorporating rule to show the effective date of such change. Any substantially affected person may, within 14 days after the date of publication of the notice of intent in the Florida Administrative Register, file an objection to rulemaking with the agency. The objection shall specify the portions of the rule incorporated by reference to which the person objects and the reasons for the objection. The agency shall not have the authority under this subparagraph to adopt those portions of the rule specified in such objection. The agency shall publish notice of the objection and of its action in response in the next available issue of the Florida Administrative Register.

6. The Department of State may adopt by rule requirements for incorporating materials pursuant to this paragraph.

(j) A rule published in the Florida Administrative Code must be indexed by the Department of State within 90 days after the rule is filed. The Department of State shall by rule establish procedures for indexing rules.

(k) An agency head may delegate the authority to initiate rule development under subsection (2); however, rulemaking responsibilities of an agency head under subparagraph (3)(a)1., subparagraph (3)(e)1., or subparagraph (3)(e)6. may not be delegated or transferred.

(2) RULE DEVELOPMENT; WORKSHOPS; NEGOTIATED RULEMAKING.—

(a) Except when the intended action is the repeal of a rule, agencies shall provide notice of the development of proposed rules by publication of a notice of rule development in the Florida Administrative Register before providing notice of a proposed rule as required by paragraph (3)(a). The notice of rule development shall indicate the subject area to be addressed by rule development, provide a short, plain explanation of the purpose and effect of the proposed rule, cite the specific legal authority for the proposed rule, and include the preliminary text of the proposed rules, if available, or a statement of how a person may promptly obtain, without cost, a copy of any preliminary draft, if available.

(b) All rules should be drafted in readable language. The language is readable if:

1. It avoids the use of obscure words and unnecessarily long or complicated constructions; and

2. It avoids the use of unnecessary technical or specialized language that is understood only by members of particular trades or professions.

(c) An agency may hold public workshops for purposes of rule development. An agency must hold public workshops, including workshops in various regions of the state or the agency's service area, for purposes of rule development if requested in writing by any affected person, unless the agency head explains in writing why a workshop is unnecessary. The explanation is not final agency action subject to review pursuant to ss. 120.569 and 120.57. The failure to provide the explanation when required may be a material error in procedure pursuant to s. 120.56(1)(c). When a workshop or public hearing is held, the agency must ensure that the persons responsible for preparing the proposed rule are available to explain the agency's proposal and to respond to questions or comments regarding the rule being developed. The workshop may be facilitated or mediated by a neutral third person, or the agency may employ other types of dispute resolution alternatives for the workshop that are appropriate for rule development. Notice of a rule development workshop shall be by publication in the Florida Administrative Register not less than 14 days prior to the date on which the workshop is scheduled to be held and shall indicate the subject area which will be addressed; the agency contact person; and the place, date, and time of the workshop.

(d)1. An agency may use negotiated rulemaking in developing and adopting rules. The agency should consider the use of negotiated rulemaking when complex rules are being drafted or strong opposition to the rules is anticipated. The agency should consider, but is not limited to considering, whether a balanced committee of interested persons who will negotiate in good faith can be assembled, whether the agency is willing to support the work of the negotiating committee, and whether the agency can use the group consensus as the basis for its proposed rule. Negotiated rulemaking uses a committee of designated representatives to draft a mutually acceptable proposed rule.

2. An agency that chooses to use the negotiated rulemaking process described in this paragraph shall publish in the Florida Administrative Register a notice of negotiated rulemaking that includes a listing of the representative groups that will be invited to participate in the negotiated rulemaking process. Any person who believes that his or her interest is not adequately represented may apply to participate within 30 days after publication of the notice. All meetings of the negotiating committee shall be noticed and open to the public pursuant to the provisions of this chapter. The negotiating committee shall be chaired by a neutral facilitator or mediator.

3. The agency's decision to use negotiated rulemaking, its selection of the representative groups, and approval or denial of an application to participate in the negotiated rulemaking process are not agency action. Nothing in this subparagraph is intended to affect the rights of an affected person to challenge a proposed rule developed under this paragraph in accordance with s. 120.56(2).

(3) ADOPTION PROCEDURES.—

(a) Notices.—

1. Prior to the adoption, amendment, or repeal of any rule other than an emergency rule, an agency, upon approval of the agency head, shall give notice of its intended action, setting forth a short, plain explanation of the purpose and effect of the proposed action; the full text of the proposed rule or amendment and a summary thereof; a reference to the grant of rulemaking authority pursuant to which the rule is adopted; and a reference to the section or subsection of the Florida Statutes or the

Laws of Florida being implemented or interpreted. The notice must include a summary of the agency's statement of the estimated regulatory costs, if one has been prepared, based on the factors set forth in s. 120.541(2); a statement that any person who wishes to provide the agency with information regarding the statement of estimated regulatory costs, or to provide a proposal for a lower cost regulatory alternative as provided by s. 120.541(1), must do so in writing within 21 days after publication of the notice; and a statement as to whether, based on the statement of the estimated regulatory costs or other information expressly relied upon and described by the agency if no statement of regulatory costs is required, the proposed rule is expected to require legislative ratification pursuant to s. 120.541(3). The notice must state the procedure for requesting a public hearing on the proposed rule. Except when the intended action is the repeal of a rule, the notice must include a reference both to the date on which and to the place where the notice of rule development that is required by subsection (2) appeared.

2. The notice shall be published in the Florida Administrative Register not less than 28 days prior to the intended action. The proposed rule shall be available for inspection and copying by the public at the time of the publication of notice.

3. The notice shall be mailed to all persons named in the proposed rule and to all persons who, at least 14 days prior to such mailing, have made requests of the agency for advance notice of its proceedings. The agency shall also give such notice as is prescribed by rule to those particular classes of persons to whom the intended action is directed.

4. The adopting agency shall file with the committee, at least 21 days prior to the proposed adoption date, a copy of each rule it proposes to adopt; a copy of any material incorporated by reference in the rule; a detailed written statement of the facts and circumstances justifying the proposed rule; a copy of any statement of estimated regulatory costs that has been prepared pursuant to s. 120.541; a statement of the extent to which the proposed rule relates to federal standards or rules on the same subject; and the notice required by subparagraph 1.

(b) Special matters to be considered in rule adoption.—

1. Statement of estimated regulatory costs.—Before the adoption, amendment, or repeal of any rule other than an emergency rule, an agency is encouraged to prepare a statement of estimated regulatory costs of the proposed rule, as provided by s. 120.541. However, an agency must prepare a statement of estimated regulatory costs of the proposed rule, as provided by s. 120.541, if:

a. The proposed rule will have an adverse impact on small business; or

b. The proposed rule is likely to directly or indirectly increase regulatory costs in excess of $200,000 in the aggregate in this state within 1 year after the implementation of the rule.

2. Small businesses, small counties, and small cities.—

a. Each agency, before the adoption, amendment, or repeal of a rule, shall consider the impact of the rule on small businesses as defined by s. 288.703 and the impact of the rule on small counties or small cities as defined by s. 120.52. Whenever practicable, an agency shall tier its rules to reduce disproportionate impacts on small businesses, small counties, or small cities to avoid regulating small businesses, small counties, or small cities that do not contribute significantly to the problem the rule is designed to address. An agency may define “small business” to include businesses employing more than 200 persons, may define “small county” to include those with populations of more than 75,000, and may define “small city” to include those with populations of more than 10,000, if it finds that such a definition is necessary to adapt a rule to the needs and problems of small businesses, small counties, or small cities. The agency shall consider each of the following methods for reducing the impact of the proposed rule on small businesses, small counties, and small cities, or any combination of these entities:

(I) Establishing less stringent compliance or reporting requirements in the rule.

(II) Establishing less stringent schedules or deadlines in the rule for compliance or reporting requirements.

(III) Consolidating or simplifying the rule’s compliance or reporting requirements.

(IV) Establishing performance standards or best management practices to replace design or operational standards in the rule.

(V) Exempting small businesses, small counties, or small cities from any or all requirements of the rule.

b.(I) If the agency determines that the proposed action will affect small businesses as defined by the agency as provided in sub-subparagraph a., the agency shall send written notice of the rule to the rules ombudsman in the Executive Office of the Governor at least 28 days before the intended action.

(II) Each agency shall adopt those regulatory alternatives offered by the rules ombudsman in the Executive Office of the Governor and provided to the agency no later than 21 days after the rules ombudsman’s receipt of the written notice of the rule which it finds are feasible and consistent with the stated objectives of the proposed rule and which would reduce the impact on small businesses. When regulatory alternatives are offered by the rules ombudsman in the Executive Office of the Governor, the 90-day period for filing the rule in subparagraph (e)2. is extended for a period of 21 days.

(III) If an agency does not adopt all alternatives offered pursuant to this sub-subparagraph, it shall, before rule adoption or amendment and pursuant to subparagraph (d)1., file a detailed written statement with the committee explaining the reasons for failure to adopt such alternatives. Within 3 working days after the filing of such notice, the agency shall send a copy of such notice to the rules ombudsman in the Executive Office of the Governor.

(c) Hearings.—

1. If the intended action concerns any rule other than one relating exclusively to procedure or practice, the agency shall, on the request of any affected person received within 21 days after the date of publication of the notice of intended agency action, give affected persons an opportunity to present evidence and argument on all issues under consideration. The agency may schedule a public hearing on the rule and, if requested by any affected person, shall schedule a public hearing on the rule. When a public hearing is held, the agency must ensure that staff are available to explain the agency’s proposal and to respond to questions or comments regarding the rule. If the agency head is a board or other collegial body created under s. 20.165(4) or s. 20.43(3)(g), and one or more requested public hearings is scheduled, the board or other collegial body shall conduct at least one of the public hearings itself and may not delegate this responsibility without the consent of those persons requesting the public hearing. Any material pertinent to the issues under consideration submitted to the agency within 21 days after the date of publication of the notice or submitted to the agency between the date of publication of the notice and the end of the final public hearing shall be considered by the agency and made a part of the record of the rulemaking proceeding.

2. Rulemaking proceedings shall be governed solely by the provisions of this section unless a person timely asserts that the person’s substantial interests will be affected in the proceeding and affirmatively demonstrates to the agency that the proceeding does not provide adequate opportunity to protect those interests. If the agency determines that the rulemaking proceeding is not adequate to protect the person’s interests, it shall suspend the rulemaking proceeding and convene a separate proceeding under the provisions of ss. 120.569 and 120.57. Similarly situated persons may be requested to join and participate in the separate proceeding. Upon conclusion of the separate proceeding, the rulemaking proceeding shall be resumed.

(d) Modification or withdrawal of proposed rules.—

1. After the final public hearing on the proposed rule, or after the time for requesting a hearing has expired, if the rule has not been changed from the rule as previously filed with the committee, or contains only technical changes, the adopting agency shall file a notice to that effect with the committee at least 7 days prior to filing the rule for adoption. Any change, other than a technical change that does not affect the substance of the rule, must be supported by the record of public hearings held on the rule, must be in response to written material submitted to the agency within 21 days after the date of publication of the notice of intended agency action or submitted to the agency between the date of publication of the notice and the end of the final public hearing, or must be in response to a proposed objection by the committee. In addition, when any change is made in a proposed rule, other than a technical change, the adopting agency shall provide a copy of a notice of change by certified mail or actual delivery to any person who requests it in writing no later than 21 days after the notice required in paragraph (a). The agency shall file the notice of change with the committee, along with the reasons for the change, and provide the notice of change to persons requesting it, at least 21 days prior to filing the rule for adoption. The notice of change shall be published in the Florida Administrative Register at least 21 days prior to filing the rule for adoption. This subparagraph does not apply to emergency rules adopted pursuant to subsection (4).

2. After the notice required by paragraph (a) and prior to adoption, the agency may withdraw the rule in whole or in part.

3. After adoption and before the rule becomes effective, a rule may be modified or withdrawn only in the following circumstances:

- a. When the committee objects to the rule;
- b. When a final order, which is not subject to further appeal, is entered in a rule challenge brought pursuant to s. 120.56 after the date of adoption but before the rule becomes effective pursuant to subparagraph (e)6.;
- c. If the rule requires ratification, when more than 90 days have passed since the rule was filed for adoption without the Legislature ratifying the rule, in which case the rule may be withdrawn but may not be modified; or
- d. When the committee notifies the agency that an objection to the rule is being considered, in which case the rule may be modified to extend the effective date by not more than 60 days.

4. The agency shall give notice of its decision to withdraw or modify a rule in the first available issue of the publication in which the original notice of rulemaking was published, shall notify those persons described in subparagraph (a)3. in accordance with the requirements of that subparagraph, and shall notify the Department of State if the rule is required to be filed with the Department of State.

5. After a rule has become effective, it may be repealed or amended only through the rulemaking procedures specified in this chapter.

(e) Filing for final adoption; effective date.—

1. If the adopting agency is required to publish its rules in the Florida Administrative Code, the agency, upon approval of the agency head, shall file with the Department of State three certified copies of the rule it proposes to adopt; one copy of any material incorporated by reference in the rule, certified by the agency; a summary of the rule; a summary of any hearings held on the rule; and a detailed written statement of the facts and circumstances justifying the rule. Agencies not required to publish their rules in the Florida Administrative Code shall file one certified copy of the proposed rule, and the other material required by this subparagraph, in the office of the agency head, and such rules shall be open to the public.

2. A rule may not be filed for adoption less than 28 days or more than 90 days after the notice required by paragraph (a), until 21 days after the notice of change required by paragraph (d), until 14 days after the final public hearing, until 21 days after a statement of estimated regulatory costs required under s. 120.541 has been provided to all persons who submitted a lower cost regulatory alternative and made available to the public, or until the administrative law judge has rendered a decision under s. 120.56(2), whichever applies. When a required notice of change is published prior to the expiration of the time to file the rule for adoption, the period during which a rule must be filed for adoption is extended to 45 days after the date of publication. If notice of a public hearing is published prior to the expiration of the time to file the rule for adoption, the period during which a rule must be filed for adoption is extended to 45 days after adjournment of the final hearing on the rule, 21 days after receipt of all material authorized to be submitted at the hearing, or 21 days after receipt of the transcript, if one is made, whichever is latest. The term “public hearing” includes any public meeting held by any agency at which the rule is considered. If a petition for an administrative determination under s. 120.56(2) is filed, the period during which a rule must be filed for adoption is extended to 60 days after the administrative law judge files the final order with the clerk or until 60 days after subsequent judicial review is complete.

3. At the time a rule is filed, the agency shall certify that the time limitations prescribed by this paragraph have been complied with, that all statutory rulemaking requirements have been met, and that there is no administrative determination pending on the rule.

4. At the time a rule is filed, the committee shall certify whether the agency has responded in writing to all material and timely written comments or written inquiries made on behalf of the committee. The department shall reject any rule that is not filed within the prescribed time limits; that does not comply with all statutory rulemaking requirements and rules of the department; upon which an agency has not responded in writing to all material and timely written inquiries or written comments; upon which an administrative determination is pending; or which does not include a statement of estimated regulatory costs, if required.

5. If a rule has not been adopted within the time limits imposed by this paragraph or has not been adopted in compliance with all statutory rulemaking requirements, the agency proposing the rule shall withdraw the rule and give notice of its action in the next available issue of the Florida Administrative Register.

6. The proposed rule shall be adopted on being filed with the Department of State and become effective 20 days after being filed, on a later date specified in the notice required by subparagraph (a)1., on a date required by statute, or upon ratification by the Legislature pursuant to s. 120.541(3). Rules not required to be filed with the Department of State shall become effective when adopted by the agency head, on a later date specified by rule or statute, or upon ratification by the Legislature pursuant to s. 120.541(3). If the committee notifies an agency that an objection to a rule is being considered, the agency may postpone the adoption of the rule to accommodate review of the rule by the committee. When an agency postpones adoption of a rule to accommodate review by the committee, the 90-day period for filing the rule is tolled until the committee notifies the agency that it has completed its review of the rule.

For the purposes of this paragraph, the term “administrative determination” does not include subsequent judicial review.

(4) EMERGENCY RULES.—

FL-SEN-21-0182-A-000762

(a) If an agency finds that an immediate danger to the public health, safety, or welfare requires emergency action, the agency may adopt any rule necessitated by the immediate danger. The agency may adopt a rule by any procedure which is fair under the circumstances if:

1. The procedure provides at least the procedural protection given by other statutes, the State Constitution, or the United States Constitution.

2. The agency takes only that action necessary to protect the public interest under the emergency procedure.

3. The agency publishes in writing at the time of, or prior to, its action the specific facts and reasons for finding an immediate danger to the public health, safety, or welfare and its reasons for concluding that the procedure used is fair under the circumstances. In any event, notice of emergency rules, other than those of educational units or units of government with jurisdiction in only one or a part of one county, including the full text of the rules, shall be published in the first available issue of the Florida Administrative Register and provided to the committee along with any material incorporated by reference in the rules. The agency's findings of immediate danger, necessity, and procedural fairness shall be judicially reviewable.

(b) Rules pertaining to the public health, safety, or welfare shall include rules pertaining to perishable agricultural commodities or rules pertaining to the interpretation and implementation of the requirements of chapters 97-102 and chapter 105 of the Election Code.

(c) An emergency rule adopted under this subsection shall not be effective for a period longer than 90 days and shall not be renewable, except when the agency has initiated rulemaking to adopt rules addressing the subject of the emergency rule and either:

1. A challenge to the proposed rules has been filed and remains pending; or

2. The proposed rules are awaiting ratification by the Legislature pursuant to s. 120.541(3).

Nothing in this paragraph prohibits the agency from adopting a rule or rules identical to the emergency rule through the rulemaking procedures specified in subsection (3).

(d) Subject to applicable constitutional and statutory provisions, an emergency rule becomes effective immediately on filing, or on a date less than 20 days thereafter if specified in the rule, if the adopting agency finds that such effective date is necessary because of immediate danger to the public health, safety, or welfare.

(5) UNIFORM RULES.—

(a)1. By July 1, 1997, the Administration Commission shall adopt one or more sets of uniform rules of procedure which shall be reviewed by the committee and filed with the Department of State. Agencies must comply with the uniform rules by July 1, 1998. The uniform rules shall establish procedures that comply with the requirements of this chapter. On filing with the department, the uniform rules shall be the rules of procedure for each agency subject to this chapter unless the Administration Commission grants an exception to the agency under this subsection.

2. An agency may seek exceptions to the uniform rules of procedure by filing a petition with the Administration Commission. The Administration Commission shall approve exceptions to the extent necessary to implement other statutes, to the extent necessary to conform to any requirement imposed as a condition precedent to receipt of federal funds or to permit persons in this state to receive tax benefits under federal law, or as required for the most efficient operation of the agency as determined by the Administration Commission. The reasons for the exceptions shall be published in the Florida Administrative Register.

3. Agency rules that provide exceptions to the uniform rules shall not be filed with the department unless the Administration Commission has approved the exceptions. Each agency that adopts rules that provide exceptions to the uniform rules shall publish a separate chapter in the Florida Administrative Code that delineates clearly the provisions of the agency's rules that provide exceptions to the uniform rules and specifies each alternative chosen from among those authorized by the uniform rules. Each chapter shall be organized in the same manner as the uniform rules.

(b) The uniform rules of procedure adopted by the commission pursuant to this subsection shall include, but are not limited to:

1. Uniform rules for the scheduling of public meetings, hearings, and workshops.

2. Uniform rules for use by each state agency that provide procedures for conducting public meetings, hearings, and workshops, and for taking evidence, testimony, and argument at such public meetings, hearings, and workshops, in person and by means of communications media technology. The rules shall provide that all evidence, testimony, and argument presented shall be afforded equal consideration, regardless of the method of communication. If a public meeting, hearing, or workshop is to be conducted by means of communications media technology, or if attendance may be provided by such means, the notice shall so state. The notice for public meetings, hearings, and workshops utilizing communications media technology shall state how persons interested in attending may do so and shall name locations, if any, where communications media technology facilities will be available. Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to diminish the right to inspect public records under chapter 119. Limiting points of access to public meetings, hearings, and workshops subject to the provisions of s. 286.011 to places not normally open to the public shall be presumed to violate the right of access of the public, and any official action taken under such circumstances is void and of no effect. Other laws relating to public meetings, hearings, and workshops, including penal and remedial provisions, shall apply to public meetings, hearings, and workshops conducted by means of communications media technology, and shall be liberally construed in their application to such public meetings, hearings, and workshops. As used in this subparagraph, "communications media technology" means the electronic transmission of printed matter, audio, full-motion video, freeze-frame video, compressed video, and digital video by any method available.

3. Uniform rules of procedure for the filing of notice of protests and formal written protests. The Administration Commission may prescribe the form and substantive provisions of a required bond.

4. Uniform rules of procedure for the filing of petitions for administrative hearings pursuant to s. 120.569 or s. 120.57. Such rules shall require the petition to include:

a. The identification of the petitioner, including the petitioner's e-mail address, if any, for the transmittal of subsequent documents by electronic means.

b. A statement of when and how the petitioner received notice of the agency's action or proposed action.

c. An explanation of how the petitioner's substantial interests are or will be affected by the action or proposed action.

d. A statement of all material facts disputed by the petitioner or a statement that there are no disputed facts.

e. A statement of the ultimate facts alleged, including a statement of the specific facts the petitioner contends warrant reversal or modification of the agency's proposed action.

f. A statement of the specific rules or statutes that the petitioner contends require reversal or modification of the agency's proposed action, including an explanation of how the alleged facts relate to the specific rules or statutes.

g. A statement of the relief sought by the petitioner, stating precisely the action petitioner wishes the agency to take with respect to the proposed action.

5. Uniform rules for the filing of request for administrative hearing by a respondent in agency enforcement and disciplinary actions. Such rules shall require a request to include:

a. The name, address, e-mail address, and telephone number of the party making the request and the name, address, and telephone number of the party's counsel or qualified representative upon whom service of pleadings and other papers shall be made;

b. A statement that the respondent is requesting an administrative hearing and disputes the material facts alleged by the petitioner, in which case the respondent shall identify those material facts that are in dispute, or that the respondent is requesting an administrative hearing and does not dispute the material facts alleged by the petitioner; and

c. A reference by file number to the administrative complaint that the party has received from the agency and the date on which the agency pleading was received.

The agency may provide an election-of-rights form for the respondent's use in requesting a hearing, so long as any form provided by the agency calls for the information in sub-subparagraphs a. through c. and does not impose any additional requirements on a respondent in order to request a hearing, unless such requirements are specifically authorized by law.

6. Uniform rules of procedure for the filing and prompt disposition of petitions for declaratory statements. The rules shall also describe the contents of the notices that must be published in the Florida Administrative Register under s. 120.565, including any applicable time limit for the filing of petitions to intervene or petitions for administrative hearing by persons whose substantial interests may be affected.

7. Provision of a method by which each agency head shall provide a description of the agency's organization and general course of its operations. The rules shall require that the statement concerning the agency's organization and operations be published on the agency's website.

8. Uniform rules establishing procedures for granting or denying petitions for variances and waivers pursuant to s. 120.542.

(6) ADOPTION OF FEDERAL STANDARDS.— Notwithstanding any contrary provision of this section, in the pursuance of state implementation, operation, or enforcement of federal programs, an agency is empowered to adopt rules substantively identical to regulations adopted pursuant to federal law, in accordance with the following procedures:

(a) The agency shall publish notice of intent to adopt a rule pursuant to this subsection in the Florida Administrative Register at least 21 days prior to filing the rule with the Department of State. The agency shall provide a copy of the notice of intent to adopt a rule to the committee at least 21 days prior to the date of filing with the Department of State. Prior to filing the rule with the Department of State, the agency shall consider any written comments received within 14 days after the date of publication of the notice of intent to adopt a rule. The rule shall be adopted upon filing with the Department of State. Substantive changes from the rules as noticed shall require republishing of notice as required in this subsection.

(b) Any rule adopted pursuant to this subsection shall become effective upon the date designated by the agency in the notice of intent to adopt a rule; however, no such rule shall become effective earlier than the effective date of the substantively identical federal regulation.

(c) Any substantially affected person may, within 14 days after the date of publication of the notice of intent to adopt a rule, file an objection to rulemaking with the agency. The objection shall specify the portions of the proposed rule to which the person objects and the specific reasons for the objection. The agency shall not proceed pursuant to this subsection to adopt those portions of the proposed rule specified in an objection, unless the agency deems the objection to be frivolous, but may proceed pursuant to subsection (3). An objection to a proposed rule, which rule in no material respect differs from the requirements of the federal regulation upon which it is based, is deemed to be frivolous.

(d) Whenever any federal regulation adopted as an agency rule pursuant to this subsection is declared invalid or is withdrawn, revoked, repealed, remanded, or suspended, the agency shall, within 60 days thereafter, publish a notice of repeal of the substantively identical agency rule in the Florida Administrative Register. Such repeal is effective upon publication of the notice. Whenever any federal regulation adopted as an agency rule pursuant to this subsection is substantially amended, the agency may adopt the amended regulation as a rule. If the amended regulation is not adopted as a rule within 180 days after the effective date of the amended regulation, the original rule is deemed repealed and the agency shall publish a notice of repeal of the original agency rule in the next available Florida Administrative Register.

(e) Whenever all or part of any rule proposed for adoption by the agency is substantively identical to a regulation adopted pursuant to federal law, such rule shall be written in a manner so that the rule specifically references the regulation whenever possible.

(7) PETITION TO INITIATE RULEMAKING.—

(a) Any person regulated by an agency or having substantial interest in an agency rule may petition an agency to adopt, amend, or repeal a rule or to provide the minimum public information required by this chapter. The petition shall specify the proposed rule and action requested. Not later than 30 calendar days following the date of filing a petition, the agency shall initiate rulemaking proceedings under this chapter, otherwise comply with the requested action, or deny the petition with a written statement of its reasons for the denial.

(b) If the petition filed under this subsection is directed to an unadopted rule, the agency shall, not later than 30 days following the date of filing a petition, initiate rulemaking, or provide notice in the Florida Administrative Register that the agency will hold a public hearing on the petition within 30 days after publication of the notice. The purpose of the public hearing is to consider the comments of the public directed to the agency rule which has not been adopted by the rulemaking procedures or requirements of this chapter, its scope and application, and to consider whether the public interest is served adequately by the application of the rule on a case-by-case basis, as contrasted with its adoption by the rulemaking procedures or requirements set forth in this chapter.

(c) If the agency does not initiate rulemaking or otherwise comply with the requested action within 30 days after the public hearing provided for in paragraph (b), the agency shall publish in the Florida Administrative Register a statement of its reasons for not initiating rulemaking or otherwise complying with the requested action and of any changes it will make in the scope or application of the unadopted rule. The agency shall file the statement with the committee. The committee shall forward a copy of the statement to the substantive committee with primary oversight jurisdiction of the agency in each house of the Legislature. The committee or the committee with primary oversight jurisdiction may hold a hearing directed to the statement of the agency. The committee holding the hearing may recommend to the Legislature the introduction of legislation making the rule a statutory standard or limiting or otherwise modifying the authority of the agency.

(d) If the agency initiates rulemaking after the public hearing provided for in paragraph (b), the agency shall publish a notice of rule development within 30 days after the hearing and file a notice of proposed rule within 180 days after the notice of rule development unless, before the 180th day, the agency publishes in the Florida Administrative Register a statement explaining its reasons for not having filed the notice. If rulemaking is initiated under this paragraph, the agency may not rely on the unadopted rule unless the agency publishes in the Florida Administrative Register a statement explaining why rulemaking under paragraph (1)(a) is not feasible or practicable until the conclusion of the rulemaking proceeding.

(8) RULEMAKING RECORD.—In all rulemaking proceedings the agency shall compile a rulemaking record. The record shall include, if applicable, copies of:

- (a) All notices given for the proposed rule.
- (b) Any statement of estimated regulatory costs for the rule.
- (c) A written summary of hearings on the proposed rule.
- (d) The written comments and responses to written comments as required by this section and s. 120.541.
- (e) All notices and findings made under subsection (4).
- (f) All materials filed by the agency with the committee under subsection (3).
- (g) All materials filed with the Department of State under subsection (3).
- (h) All written inquiries from standing committees of the Legislature concerning the rule.

Each state agency shall retain the record of rulemaking as long as the rule is in effect. When a rule is no longer in effect, the record may be destroyed pursuant to the records-retention schedule developed under s. 257.36(6).

120.541 Statement of estimated regulatory costs.—

(1)(a) Within 21 days after publication of the notice required under s. 120.54(3)(a), a substantially affected person may submit to an agency a good faith written proposal for a lower cost regulatory alternative to a proposed rule which substantially accomplishes the objectives of the law being implemented. The proposal may include the alternative of not adopting any rule if the proposal explains how the lower costs and objectives of the law will be achieved by not adopting any rule. If such a proposal is submitted, the 90-day period for filing the rule is extended 21 days. Upon the submission of the lower cost regulatory alternative, the agency shall prepare a statement of estimated regulatory costs as provided in subsection (2), or shall revise its prior statement of estimated regulatory costs, and either adopt the alternative or provide a statement of the reasons for rejecting the alternative in favor of the proposed rule.

(b) If a proposed rule will have an adverse impact on small business or if the proposed rule is likely to directly or indirectly increase regulatory costs in excess of $200,000 in the aggregate within 1 year after the implementation of the rule, the agency shall prepare a statement of estimated regulatory costs as required by s. 120.54(3)(b).

(c) The agency shall revise a statement of estimated regulatory costs if any change to the rule made under s. 120.54(3)(d) increases the regulatory costs of the rule.

(d) At least 21 days before filing the rule for adoption, an agency that is required to revise a statement of estimated regulatory costs shall provide the statement to the person who submitted the lower cost regulatory alternative and to the committee and shall provide notice on the agency's website that it is available to the public.

(e) Notwithstanding s. 120.56(1)(c), the failure of the agency to prepare a statement of estimated regulatory costs or to respond to a written lower cost regulatory alternative as provided in this subsection is a material failure to follow the applicable rulemaking procedures or requirements set forth in this chapter.

(f) An agency's failure to prepare a statement of estimated regulatory costs or to respond to a written lower cost regulatory alternative may not be raised in a proceeding challenging the validity of a rule pursuant to s. 120.52(8)(a) unless:

1. Raised in a petition filed no later than 1 year after the effective date of the rule; and

2. Raised by a person whose substantial interests are affected by the rule's regulatory costs.

(g) A rule that is challenged pursuant to s. 120.52(8)(f) may not be declared invalid unless:

1. The issue is raised in an administrative proceeding within 1 year after the effective date of the rule;

2. The challenge is to the agency's rejection of a lower cost regulatory alternative offered under paragraph (a) or s. 120.54(3)(b)2.b.; and

3. The substantial interests of the person challenging the rule are materially affected by the rejection.

(2) A statement of estimated regulatory costs shall include:

(a) An economic analysis showing whether the rule directly or indirectly:

1. Is likely to have an adverse impact on economic growth, private sector job creation or employment, or private sector investment in excess of $1 million in the aggregate within 5 years after the implementation of the rule;

2. Is likely to have an adverse impact on business competitiveness, including the ability of persons doing business in the state to compete with persons doing business in other states or domestic markets, productivity, or innovation in excess of $1 million in the aggregate within 5 years after the implementation of the rule; or

3. Is likely to increase regulatory costs, including any transactional costs, in excess of $1 million in the aggregate within 5 years after the implementation of the rule.

(b) A good faith estimate of the number of individuals and entities likely to be required to comply with the rule, together with a general description of the types of individuals likely to be affected by the rule.

(c) A good faith estimate of the cost to the agency, and to any other state and local government entities, of implementing and enforcing the proposed rule, and any anticipated effect on state or local revenues.

(d) A good faith estimate of the transactional costs likely to be incurred by individuals and entities, including local government entities, required to comply with the requirements of the rule. As used in this section, "transactional costs" are direct costs that are readily ascertainable based upon standard business practices, and include filing fees, the cost of obtaining a license, the cost of equipment required to be installed or used or procedures required to be employed in complying with the rule, additional operating costs incurred, the cost of monitoring and reporting, and any other costs necessary to comply with the rule.

(e) An analysis of the impact on small businesses as defined by s. 288.703, and an analysis of the impact on small counties and small cities as defined in s. 120.52. The impact analysis for small businesses must include the basis for the agency's decision not to implement alternatives that would reduce adverse impacts on small businesses.

(f) Any additional information that the agency determines may be useful.

(g) In the statement or revised statement, whichever applies, a description of any regulatory alternatives submitted under paragraph (1)(a) and a statement adopting the alternative or a statement of the reasons for rejecting the alternative in favor of the proposed rule.

(3) If the adverse impact or regulatory costs of the rule exceed any of the criteria established in paragraph (2)(a), the rule shall be submitted to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives no later than 30 days prior to the next regular legislative session, and the rule may not take effect until it is ratified by the Legislature.

(a) Federal standards pursuant to s. 120.54(6).

(b) Triennial updates of and amendments to the Florida Building Code which are expressly authorized by s. 553.73.

(c) Triennial updates of and amendments to the Florida Fire Prevention Code which are expressly authorized by s. 633.202.

(5) For purposes of subsections (2) and (3), adverse impacts and regulatory costs likely to occur within 5 years after implementation of the rule include adverse impacts and regulatory costs estimated to occur within 5 years after the effective date of the rule. However, if any provision of the rule is not fully implemented upon the effective date of the rule, the adverse impacts and regulatory costs associated with such provision must be adjusted to include any additional adverse impacts and regulatory costs estimated to occur within 5 years after implementation of such provision.

Note.—As amended by s. 92, ch. 2013-183, which amended subsection (4) as amended by s. 1, ch. 2011-222. Section 2, ch. 2011-225, also amended subsection (4), and the language of that version conflicted with the version by s. 1, ch. 2011-222. As amended by s. 2, ch. 2011-225, subsection (4) reads:

(4) This section does not apply to the adoption of emergency rules pursuant to s. 120.54(4) or the adoption of federal standards pursuant to s. 120.54(6).

120.542 Variances and waivers.—

(1) Strict application of uniformly applicable rule requirements can lead to unreasonable, unfair, and unintended results in particular instances. The Legislature finds that it is appropriate in such cases to adopt a procedure for agencies to provide relief to persons subject to regulation. A public employee is not a person subject to regulation under this section for the purpose of petitioning for a variance or waiver to a rule that affects that public employee in his or her capacity as a public employee. Agencies are authorized to grant variances and waivers to requirements of their rules consistent with this section and with rules adopted under the authority of this section. An agency may limit the duration of any grant of a variance or waiver or otherwise impose conditions on the grant only to the extent necessary for the purpose of the underlying statute to be achieved. This section does not authorize agencies to grant variances or waivers to statutes or to rules required by the Federal Government for the agency's implementation or retention of any federally approved or delegated program, except as allowed by the program or when the variance or waiver is also approved by the appropriate agency of the Federal Government. This section is supplemental to, and does not abrogate, the variance and waiver provisions in any other statute.

(2) Variances and waivers shall be granted when the person subject to the rule demonstrates that the purpose of the underlying statute will be or has been achieved by other means by the person and when application of a rule would create a substantial hardship or would violate principles of fairness. For purposes of this section, "substantial hardship" means a demonstrated economic, technological, legal, or other type of hardship to the person requesting the variance or waiver. For purposes of this section, "principles of fairness" are violated when the literal application of a rule affects a particular person in a manner significantly different from the way it affects other similarly situated persons who are subject to the rule.

(3) The Governor and Cabinet, sitting as the Administration Commission, shall adopt uniform rules of procedure pursuant to the requirements of s. 120.54(5) establishing procedures for granting or denying petitions for variances and waivers. The uniform rules shall include procedures for the granting, denying, or revoking of emergency and temporary variances and waivers. Such provisions may provide for expedited timeframes, waiver of or limited public notice, and limitations on comments on the petition in the case of such temporary or emergency variances and waivers.

(4) Agencies shall advise persons of the remedies available through this section and shall provide copies of this section, the uniform rules on variances and waivers, and, if requested, the underlying statute, to persons who inquire about the possibility of relief from rule requirements.

(5) A person who is subject to regulation by an agency rule may file a petition with that agency, with a copy to the committee, requesting a variance or waiver from the agency's rule. In addition to any requirements mandated by the uniform rules, each petition shall specify:

(a) The rule from which a variance or waiver is requested.

(b) The type of action requested.

(c) The specific facts that would justify a waiver or variance for the petitioner.

(d) The reason why the variance or the waiver requested would serve the purposes of the underlying statute.

(6) Within 15 days after receipt of a petition for variance or waiver, an agency shall provide notice of the petition to the Department of State, which shall publish notice of the petition in the first available issue of the Florida Administrative Register. The notice shall contain the name of the petitioner, the date the petition was filed, the rule number and nature of the rule from which variance or waiver is sought, and an explanation of how a copy of the petition can be obtained. The uniform rules shall provide a means for interested persons to provide comments on the petition.

(7) Except for requests for emergency variances or waivers, within 30 days after receipt of a petition for a variance or waiver, an agency shall review the petition and request submittal of all additional information that the agency is permitted by this section to require. Within 30 days after receipt of such additional information, the agency shall review it and may request only that information needed to clarify the additional information or to answer new questions raised by or directly related to the additional information. If the petitioner asserts that any request for additional information is not authorized by law or by rule of the affected agency, the agency shall proceed, at the petitioner's written request, to process the petition.

(8) An agency shall grant or deny a petition for variance or waiver within 90 days after receipt of the original petition, the last item of timely requested additional material, or the petitioner's written request to finish processing the petition. A petition not granted or denied within 90 days after receipt of a completed petition is deemed approved. A copy of the order granting or denying the petition shall be filed with the committee and shall contain a statement of the relevant facts and reasons supporting the agency's action. The agency shall provide notice of the disposition of the petition to the Department of State, which shall publish the notice in the next available issue of the Florida Administrative Register. The notice shall contain the name of the petitioner, the date the petition was filed, the rule number and nature of the rule from which the waiver or variance is sought, a reference to the place and date of publication of the notice of the petition, the date of the order denying or approving the variance or waiver, the general basis for the agency decision, and an explanation of how a copy of the order can be obtained. The agency's decision to grant or deny the petition shall be supported by competent substantial evidence and is subject to ss. 120.569 and 120.57. Any proceeding pursuant to ss. 120.569 and 120.57 in regard to a variance or waiver shall be limited to the agency action on the request for the variance or waiver, except that a proceeding in regard to a variance or waiver may be consolidated with any other proceeding authorized by this chapter.

(9) Each agency shall maintain a record of the type and disposition of each petition, including temporary or emergency variances and waivers, filed pursuant to this section.

History.—s. 12, ch. 96-159; s. 5, ch. 97-176; s. 37, ch. 2010-102; s. 5, ch. 2013-14.

120.545 Committee review of agency rules.—

(1) As a legislative check on legislatively created authority, the committee shall examine each proposed rule, except for those proposed rules exempted by s. 120.81(1)(e) and (2), and its accompanying material, and each emergency rule, and may examine any existing rule, for the purpose of determining whether:

(a) The rule is an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority.

(b) The statutory authority for the rule has been repealed.

(c) The rule reiterates or paraphrases statutory material.

(d) The rule is in proper form.

(e) The notice given prior to its adoption was sufficient to give adequate notice of the purpose and effect of the rule.

(f) The rule is consistent with expressed legislative intent pertaining to the specific provisions of law which the rule implements.

(g) The rule is necessary to accomplish the apparent or expressed objectives of the specific provision of law which the rule implements.

(h) The rule is a reasonable implementation of the law as it affects the convenience of the general public or persons particularly affected by the rule.

(i) The rule could be made less complex or more easily comprehensible to the general public.

(j) The rule's statement of estimated regulatory costs complies with the requirements of s. 120.541 and whether the rule does not impose regulatory costs on the regulated person, county, or city which could be reduced by the adoption of less costly alternatives that substantially accomplish the statutory objectives.

(k) The rule will require additional appropriations.

(l) If the rule is an emergency rule, there exists an emergency justifying the adoption of such rule, the agency is within its statutory authority, and the rule was adopted in compliance with the requirements and limitations of s. 120.54(4).

(2) The committee may request from an agency such information as is reasonably necessary for examination of a rule as required by subsection (1). The committee shall consult with legislative standing committees having jurisdiction over the subject areas. If the committee objects to a rule, the committee shall, within 5 days after the objection, certify that fact to the agency whose rule has been examined and include with the certification a statement detailing its objections with particularity. The committee shall notify the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate of any objection to an agency rule concurrent with certification of that fact to the agency. Such notice shall include a copy of the rule and the statement detailing the committee's objections to the rule.

(3) Within 30 days after receipt of the objection, if the agency is headed by an individual, or within 45 days after receipt of the objection, if the agency is headed by a collegial body, the agency shall:

(a) If the rule is not yet in effect:

1. File notice pursuant to s. 120.54(3)(d) of only such modifications as are necessary to address the committee's objection;

2. File notice pursuant to s. 120.54(3)(d) of withdrawal of the rule; or

3. Notify the committee in writing that it refuses to modify or withdraw the rule.

(b) If the rule is in effect:

1. File notice pursuant to s. 120.54(3)(a), without prior notice of rule development, to amend the rule to address the committee's objection;

2. File notice pursuant to s. 120.54(3)(a) to repeal the rule; or

3. Notify the committee in writing that the agency refuses to amend or repeal the rule.

(c) If the objection is to the statement of estimated regulatory costs:

1. Prepare a corrected statement of estimated regulatory costs, give notice of the availability of the corrected statement in the first available issue of the Florida Administrative Register, and file a copy of the corrected statement with the committee; or

2. Notify the committee that it refuses to prepare a corrected statement of estimated regulatory costs.

(4) Failure of the agency to respond to a committee objection to a rule that is not yet in effect within the time prescribed in subsection (3) constitutes withdrawal of the rule in its entirety. In this event, the committee shall notify the Department of State that the agency, by its failure to respond to a committee objection, has elected to withdraw the rule. Upon receipt of the committee's notice, the Department of State shall publish a notice to that effect in the next available issue of the Florida Administrative Register. Upon publication of the notice, the rule shall be stricken from the files of the Department of State and the files of the agency.

(5) Failure of the agency to respond to a committee objection to a rule that is in effect within the time prescribed in subsection (3) constitutes a refusal to amend or repeal the rule.

(6) Failure of the agency to respond to a committee objection to a statement of estimated regulatory costs within the time prescribed in subsection (3) constitutes a refusal to prepare a corrected statement of estimated regulatory costs.

(7) If the committee objects to a rule and the agency refuses to modify, amend, withdraw, or repeal the rule, the committee shall file with the Department of State a notice of the objection, detailing with particularity the committee's objection to the rule. The Department of State shall publish this notice in the Florida Administrative Register. If the rule is published in the Florida Administrative Code, a reference to the committee's objection and to the issue of the Florida Administrative Register in which the full text thereof appears shall be recorded in a history note.

(8)(a) If the committee objects to a rule, or portion of a rule, and the agency fails to initiate administrative action to modify, amend, withdraw, or repeal the rule consistent with the objection within 60 days after the objection, or thereafter fails to proceed in good faith to complete such action, the committee may submit to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives a recommendation that legislation be introduced to address the committee's objection.

(b)1. If the committee votes to recommend the introduction of legislation to address the committee's objection, the committee shall, within 5 days after this determination, certify that fact to the agency whose rule or proposed rule has been examined. The committee may request that the agency temporarily suspend the rule or suspend the adoption of the proposed rule, pending consideration of proposed legislation during the next regular session of the Legislature.

2. Within 30 days after receipt of the certification, if the agency is headed by an individual, or within 45 days after receipt of the certification, if the agency is headed by a collegial body, the agency shall:

a. Temporarily suspend the rule or suspend the adoption of the proposed rule; or

b. Notify the committee in writing that the agency refuses to temporarily suspend the rule or suspend the adoption of the proposed rule.

3. If the agency elects to temporarily suspend the rule or suspend the adoption of the proposed rule, the agency shall give notice of the suspension in the Florida Administrative Register. The rule or the rule adoption process shall be suspended upon publication of the notice. An agency may not base any agency action on a suspended rule or suspended proposed rule, or portion of such rule, prior to expiration of the suspension. A suspended rule or suspended proposed rule, or portion of such rule, continues to be subject to administrative determination and judicial review as provided by law.

4. Failure of an agency to respond to committee certification within the time prescribed by subparagraph 2. constitutes a refusal to suspend the rule or to suspend the adoption of the proposed rule.

(c) The committee shall prepare proposed legislation to address the committee's objection in accordance with the rules of the Senate and the House of Representatives for pre-filing and introduction in the next regular session of the Legislature. The proposed legislation shall be presented to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives with the committee recommendation.

(d) If proposed legislation addressing the committee's objection fails to become law, any temporary agency suspension shall expire.

120.55 Publication.—

(1) The Department of State shall:

(a)1. Through a continuous revision and publication system, compile and publish electronically, on a website managed by the department, the "Florida Administrative Code." The Florida Administrative Code shall contain all rules adopted by each agency, citing the grant of rulemaking authority and the specific law implemented pursuant to which each rule was adopted, all history notes as authorized in s. 120.545(7), complete indexes to all rules contained in the code, and any other material required or authorized by law or deemed useful by the department. The electronic code shall display each rule chapter currently in effect in browse mode and allow full text search of the code and each rule chapter. The department may contract with a publishing firm for a printed publication; however, the department shall retain responsibility for the code as provided in this section. The electronic publication shall be the official compilation of the administrative rules of this state. The Department of State shall retain the copyright over the Florida Administrative Code.

2. Rules general in form but applicable to only one school district, community college district, or county, or a part thereof, or state university rules relating to internal personnel or business and finance shall not be published in the Florida Administrative Code. Exclusion from publication in the Florida Administrative Code shall not affect the validity or effectiveness of such rules.

3. At the beginning of the section of the code dealing with an agency that files copies of its rules with the department, the department shall publish the address and telephone number of the executive offices of each agency, the manner by which the agency indexes its rules, a listing of all rules of that agency excluded from publication in the code, and a statement as to where those rules may be inspected.

4. Forms shall not be published in the Florida Administrative Code; but any form which an agency uses in its dealings with the public, along with any accompanying instructions, shall be filed with the committee before it is used. Any form or instruction which meets the definition of "rule" provided in s. 120.52 shall be incorporated by reference into the appropriate rule. The reference shall specifically state that the form is being incorporated by reference and shall include the number, title, and effective date of the form and an explanation of how the form may be obtained. Each form created by an agency which is incorporated by reference in a rule notice of which is given under s. 120.54(3)(a) after December 31, 2007, must clearly display the number, title, and effective date of the form and the number of the rule in which the form is incorporated.

5. The department shall allow adopted rules and material incorporated by reference to be filed in electronic form as prescribed by department rule. When a rule is filed for adoption with incorporated material in electronic form, the department's publication of the Florida Administrative Code on its website must contain a hyperlink from the incorporating reference in the rule directly to that material. The department may not allow hyperlinks from rules in the Florida

Administrative Code to any material other than that filed with and maintained by the department, but may allow hyperlinks to incorporated material maintained by the department from the adopting agency's website or other sites.

(b) Electronically publish on a website managed by the department a continuous revision and publication entitled the "Florida Administrative Register," which shall serve as the official publication and must contain:

1. All notices required by s. 120.54(2) and (3)(a), showing the text of all rules proposed for consideration.

2. All notices of public meetings, hearings, and workshops conducted in accordance with s. 120.525, including a statement of the manner in which a copy of the agenda may be obtained.

3. A notice of each request for authorization to amend or repeal an existing uniform rule or for the adoption of new uniform rules.

4. Notice of petitions for declaratory statements or administrative determinations.

5. A summary of each objection to any rule filed by the Administrative Procedures Committee.

6. A list of rules filed for adoption in the previous 7 days.

7. A list of all rules filed for adoption pending legislative ratification under s. 120.541(3). A rule shall be removed from the list once notice of ratification or withdrawal of the rule is received.

8. Any other material required or authorized by law or deemed useful by the department.

The department may contract with a publishing firm for a printed publication of the Florida Administrative Register and make copies available on an annual subscription basis.

(c) Prescribe by rule the style and form required for rules, notices, and other materials submitted for filing.

(d) Charge each agency using the Florida Administrative Register a space rate to cover the costs related to the Florida Administrative Register and the Florida Administrative Code.

(e) Maintain a permanent record of all notices published in the Florida Administrative Register.

(2) The Florida Administrative Register website must allow users to:

(a) Search for notices by type, publication date, rule number, word, subject, and agency.

(b) Search a database that makes available all notices published on the website for a period of at least 5 years.

(c) Subscribe to an automated e-mail notification of selected notices to be sent out before or concurrently with publication of the electronic Florida Administrative Register. Such notification must include in the text of the e-mail a summary of the content of each notice.

(d) View agency forms and other materials submitted to the department in electronic form and incorporated by reference in proposed rules.

(e) Comment on proposed rules.

(3) Publication of material required by paragraph (1)(b) on the Florida Administrative Register website does not preclude publication of such material on an agency's website or by other means.

(4) Each agency shall provide copies of its rules upon request, with citations to the grant of rulemaking authority and the specific law implemented for each rule.

(5) Each agency that provides an e-mail notification service to inform licensees or other registered recipients of notices shall use that service to notify recipients of each notice required under s. 120.54(2) and (3) and provide Internet links to the appropriate rule page on the Secretary of State's website or Internet links to an agency website that contains the proposed rule or final rule.

(6) Any publication of a proposed rule promulgated by an agency, whether published in the Florida Administrative Register or elsewhere, shall include, along with the rule, the name of the person or persons originating such rule, the name of the agency head who approved the rule, and the date upon which the rule was approved.

(7) Access to the Florida Administrative Register website and its contents, including the e-mail notification service, shall be free for the public.

(8)(a) All fees and moneys collected by the Department of State under this chapter shall be deposited in the Records Management Trust Fund for the purpose of paying for costs incurred by the department in carrying out this chapter.

(b) The unencumbered balance in the Records Management Trust Fund for fees collected pursuant to this chapter may not exceed $300,000 at the beginning of each fiscal year, and any excess shall be transferred to the General Revenue Fund.

(9) The failure to comply with this section may not be raised in a proceeding challenging the validity of a rule pursuant to s. 120.52(8)(a).

120.555 Summary removal of published rules no longer in force and effect.

—When, as part of the continuous revision system authorized in s. 120.55(1)(a)1. or as otherwise provided by law, the Department of State is in doubt whether a rule published in the official version of the Florida Administrative Code is still in full force and effect, the procedure in this section shall be employed.

(1) The Department of State shall submit to the head of the agency with authority to repeal or amend the rule, if any, or if no such agency can be identified, to the Governor, a written request for a statement as to whether the rule is still in full force and effect. A copy of the request shall be promptly delivered to the committee and to the Attorney General. The Department of State shall publish a notice of the request together with a copy of the request in the Florida Administrative Register next available after delivery of the request to the head of the agency or the Governor.

(2) No later than 90 days after the date the notice required in subsection (1) is published, the agency or the Governor, notified pursuant to subsection (1), shall file a written response with the Department of State stating whether the rule is in full force and effect and under the jurisdiction of an agency with full authority to amend or repeal the rule. Failure to respond timely under this subsection constitutes an acknowledgment by the agency or the Governor that the rule is no longer in effect and is subject to summary repeal under this section.

(3) The Department of State shall publish a notice of the agency's or Governor's timely response or the acknowledgment determined under subsection (2) in the Florida Administrative Register next available after receipt of the response or the expiration of the response period, whichever occurs first.

(4) If the response states that the rule is no longer in effect, or if no response is filed timely with the Department of State, the notice required in subsection (3) shall also give notice of the following:

(a) Based on the agency's or Governor's written response or the acknowledgment determined under subsection (2), the rule will be repealed summarily pursuant to this section and removed from the Florida Administrative Code.

(b) Any objection to the summary repeal under this section must be filed as a petition challenging a proposed rule under s. 120.56 and must be filed no later than 21 days after the date the notice is published in the Florida Administrative Register.

(c) For purposes only of challenging a summary repeal under this section, the agency with current authority to repeal the rule under s. 120.54 shall be named as the respondent in the petition and shall be the proper party in interest. In such circumstances, the Department of State shall not be named as a party in a petition filed under paragraph (b) and this paragraph.

(d) If no agency currently has authority to repeal the rule under s. 120.54, the Department of State shall be named as the respondent in a petition filed under paragraph (b) and this paragraph. The Attorney General shall represent the Department of State in all proceedings under this paragraph.

(5) Upon the expiration of the 21-day period to file an objection to a notice of summary repeal published pursuant to subsection (4), if no timely objection is filed, or, if a timely objection is filed, on the date a decision finding the rule is no longer in effect becomes final, the Department of State shall update the Florida Administrative Code to remove the rule and shall provide historical notes identifying the manner in which the rule ceased to have effect, including the summary repeal pursuant to this section.

History.—s. 2, ch. 2012-31; s. 7, ch. 2013-14.

120.56 Challenges to rules.—

(1) GENERAL PROCEDURES.—

(a) Any person substantially affected by a rule or a proposed rule may seek an administrative determination of the invalidity of the rule on the ground that the rule is an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority.

(b) The petition challenging the validity of a proposed or adopted rule under this section must state:

1. The particular provisions alleged to be invalid and a statement of the facts or grounds for the alleged invalidity.

2. Facts sufficient to show that the petitioner is substantially affected by the challenged adopted rule or would be substantially affected by the proposed rule.

(c) The petition shall be filed by electronic means with the division which shall, immediately upon filing, forward by electronic means copies to the agency whose rule is challenged, the Department of State, and the committee. Within 10 days after receiving the petition, the division director shall, if the petition complies with paragraph (b), assign an administrative law judge who shall conduct a hearing within 30 days thereafter, unless the petition is withdrawn or a continuance is granted by agreement of the parties or for good cause shown. Evidence of good cause includes, but is not limited to, written notice of an agency's decision to modify or withdraw the proposed rule or a written notice from the chair of the committee stating that the committee will consider an objection to the rule at its next scheduled meeting. The failure of an agency to follow the applicable rulemaking procedures or requirements set forth in this chapter shall be presumed to be material; however, the agency may rebut this presumption by showing that the substantial interests of the petitioner and the fairness of the proceedings have not been impaired.

(d) Within 30 days after the hearing, the administrative law judge shall render a decision and state the reasons for his or her decision in writing. The division shall forthwith transmit by electronic means copies of the administrative law judge's decision to the agency, the Department of State, and the committee.

(e) Hearings held under this section shall be de novo in nature. The standard of proof shall be the preponderance of the evidence. Hearings shall be conducted in the same manner as provided by ss. 120.569 and 120.57, except that the administrative law judge's order shall be final agency action. The petitioner and the agency whose rule is challenged shall be adverse parties. Other substantially affected persons may join the proceedings as intervenors on appropriate terms which shall not unduly delay the proceedings. Failure to proceed under this section does not constitute failure to exhaust administrative remedies.

(2) CHALLENGING PROPOSED RULES; SPECIAL PROVISIONS.—

(a) A petition alleging the invalidity of a proposed rule shall be filed within 21 days after the date of publication of the notice required by s. 120.54(3)(a); within 10 days after the final public hearing is held on the proposed rule as provided by s. 120.54(3)(e)2.; within 20 days after the statement of estimated regulatory costs or revised statement of estimated regulatory costs, if applicable, has been prepared and made available as provided in s. 120.541(1)(d); or within 20 days after the date of publication of the notice required by s. 120.54(3)(d). The petitioner has the burden to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the petitioner would be substantially affected by the proposed rule. The agency then has the burden to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the proposed rule is not an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority as to the objections raised. A person who is not substantially affected by the proposed rule as initially noticed, but who is substantially affected by the rule as a result of a change, may challenge any provision of the resulting proposed rule.

(b) The administrative law judge may declare the proposed rule wholly or partly invalid. Unless the decision of the administrative law judge is reversed on appeal, the proposed rule or provision of a proposed rule declared invalid shall not be adopted. After a petition for administrative determination has been filed, the agency may proceed with all other steps in the rulemaking process, including the holding of a factfinding hearing. In the event part of a proposed rule is declared invalid, the adopting agency may, in its sole discretion, withdraw the proposed rule in its entirety. The agency whose proposed rule has been declared invalid in whole or part shall give notice of the decision in the first available issue of the Florida Administrative Register.

(c) When any substantially affected person seeks determination of the invalidity of a proposed rule pursuant to this section, the proposed rule is not presumed to be valid or invalid.

(3) CHALLENGING RULES IN EFFECT; SPECIAL PROVISIONS.—

(a) A petition alleging the invalidity of an existing rule may be filed at any time during which the rule is in effect. The petitioner has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the existing rule is an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority as to the objections raised.

(b) The administrative law judge may declare all or part of a rule invalid. The rule or part thereof declared invalid shall become void when the time for filing an appeal expires. The agency whose rule has been declared invalid in whole or part shall give notice of the decision in the Florida Administrative Register in the first available issue after the rule has become void.

(4) CHALLENGING AGENCY STATEMENTS DEFINED AS UNADOPTED RULES; SPECIAL PROVISIONS.—

(a) Any person substantially affected by an agency statement that is an unadopted rule may seek an administrative determination that the statement violates s. 120.54(1)(a). The petition shall include the text of the statement or a description of the statement and shall state facts sufficient to show that the statement constitutes an unadopted rule.

(b) The administrative law judge may extend the hearing date beyond 30 days after assignment of the case for good cause. Upon notification to the administrative law judge provided before the final hearing that the agency has published a notice of rulemaking under s. 120.54(3), such notice shall automatically operate as a stay of proceedings pending adoption of the statement as a rule. The administrative law judge may vacate the stay for good cause shown. A stay of proceedings pending rulemaking shall remain in effect so long as the agency is proceeding expeditiously and in good faith to adopt the statement as a rule.

(c) If a hearing is held and the petitioner proves the allegations of the petition, the agency shall have the burden of proving that rulemaking is not feasible or not practicable under s. 120.54(1)(a).

(d) The administrative law judge may determine whether all or part of a statement violates s. 120.54(1)(a). The decision of the administrative law judge shall constitute a final order. The division shall transmit a copy of the final order to the Department of State and the committee. The Department of State shall publish notice of the final order in the first available issue of the Florida Administrative Register.

(e) If an administrative law judge enters a final order that all or part of an unadopted rule violates s. 120.54(1)(a), the agency must immediately discontinue all reliance upon the unadopted rule or any substantially similar statement as a basis for agency action.

(f) If proposed rules addressing the challenged unadopted rule are determined to be an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority as defined in s. 120.52(8)(b)-(f), the agency must immediately discontinue reliance upon the unadopted rule and any substantially similar statement until rules addressing the subject are properly adopted, and the administrative law judge shall enter a final order to that effect.

(g) All proceedings to determine a violation of s. 120.54(1)(a) shall be brought pursuant to this subsection. A proceeding pursuant to this subsection may be consolidated with a proceeding under subsection (3) or under any other section of this chapter. This paragraph does not prevent a party whose substantial interests have been determined by an agency action from bringing a proceeding pursuant to s. 120.57(1)(e).

(5) CHALLENGING EMERGENCY RULES; SPECIAL PROVISIONS.—Challenges to the validity of an emergency rule shall be subject to the following time schedules in lieu of those established by paragraphs (1)(c) and (d). Within 7 days after receiving the petition, the division director shall, if the petition complies with paragraph (1)(b), assign an administrative law judge, who shall conduct a hearing within 14 days, unless the petition is withdrawn. The administrative law judge shall render a decision within 14 days after the hearing.

120.565 Declaratory statement by agencies.—

(1) Any substantially affected person may seek a declaratory statement regarding an agency's opinion as to the applicability of a statutory provision, or of any rule or order of the agency, as it applies to the petitioner's particular set of circumstances.

(2) The petition seeking a declaratory statement shall state with particularity the petitioner's set of circumstances and shall specify the statutory provision, rule, or order that the petitioner believes may apply to the set of circumstances.

(3) The agency shall give notice of the filing of each petition in the next available issue of the Florida Administrative Register and transmit copies of each petition to the committee. The agency shall issue a declaratory statement or deny the petition within 90 days after the filing of the petition. The declaratory statement or denial of the petition shall be noticed in the next available issue of the Florida Administrative Register.

120.569 Decisions which affect substantial interests.—

(1) The provisions of this section apply in all proceedings in which the substantial interests of a party are determined by an agency, unless the parties are proceeding under s. 120.573 or s. 120.574. Unless waived by all parties, s. 120.57(1) applies whenever the proceeding involves a disputed issue of material fact. Unless otherwise agreed, s. 120.57(2) applies in all other cases. If a disputed issue of material fact arises during a proceeding under s. 120.57(2), then, unless waived by all parties, the proceeding under s. 120.57(2) shall be terminated and a proceeding under s. 120.57(1) shall be conducted. Parties shall be notified of any order, including a final order. Unless waived, a copy of the order shall be delivered or mailed to each party or the party's attorney of record at the address of record. Each notice shall inform the recipient of any administrative hearing or judicial review that is available under this section, s. 120.57, or s. 120.68; shall indicate the procedure which must be followed to obtain the hearing or judicial review; and shall state the time limits which apply.

(2)(a) Except for any proceeding conducted as prescribed in s. 120.56, a petition or request for a hearing under this section shall be filed with the agency. If the agency requests an administrative law judge from the division, it shall so notify the division by electronic means through the division's website within 15 days after receipt of the petition or request. A request for a hearing shall be granted or denied within 15 days after receipt. On the request of any agency, the division shall assign an administrative law judge with due regard to the expertise required for the particular matter. The referring agency shall take no further action with respect to a proceeding under s. 120.57(1), except as a party litigant, as long as the division has jurisdiction over the proceeding under s. 120.57(1). Any party may request the disqualification of the administrative law judge by filing an affidavit with the division prior to the taking of evidence at a hearing, stating the grounds with particularity.

(b) All parties shall be afforded an opportunity for a hearing after reasonable notice of not less than 14 days; however, the 14-day notice requirement may be waived with the consent of all parties. The notice shall include:

1. A statement of the time, place, and nature of the hearing.

2. A statement of the legal authority and jurisdiction under which the hearing is to be held.

(c) Unless otherwise provided by law, a petition or request for hearing shall include those items required by the uniform rules adopted pursuant to s. 120.54(5)(b). Upon the receipt of a petition or request for hearing, the agency shall carefully review the petition to determine if it contains all of the required information. A petition shall be dismissed if it is not in substantial compliance with these requirements or it has been untimely filed. Dismissal of a petition shall, at least once, be without prejudice to petitioner's filing a timely amended petition curing the defect, unless it conclusively appears from the face of the petition that the defect cannot be cured. The agency shall promptly give written notice to all parties of the action taken on the petition, shall state with particularity its reasons if the petition is not granted, and shall state the deadline for filing an amended petition if applicable. This paragraph does not eliminate the availability of equitable tolling as a defense to the untimely filing of a petition.

(d) The agency may refer a petition to the division for the assignment of an administrative law judge only if the petition is in substantial compliance with the requirements of paragraph (c).

(e) All pleadings, motions, or other papers filed in the proceeding must be signed by the party, the party's attorney, or the party's qualified representative. The signature constitutes a certificate that the person has read the pleading, motion, or other paper and that, based upon reasonable inquiry, it is not interposed for any improper purposes, such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay, or for frivolous purpose or needless increase in the cost of litigation. If a pleading, motion, or other paper is signed in violation of these requirements, the presiding officer shall impose upon the person who signed it, the represented party, or both, an appropriate sanction, which may include an order to pay the other party or parties the amount of reasonable expenses incurred because of the filing of the pleading, motion, or other paper, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

(f) The presiding officer has the power to swear witnesses and take their testimony under oath, to issue subpoenas, and to effect discovery on the written request of any party by any means available to the courts and in the manner provided in the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure, including the imposition of sanctions, except contempt. However, no presiding officer has the authority to issue any subpoena or order directing discovery to any member or employee of the Legislature when the subpoena or order commands the production of documents or materials or compels testimony relating to the legislative duties of the member or employee. Any subpoena or order directing discovery directed to a member or an employee of the Legislature shall show on its face that the testimony sought does not relate to legislative duties.

(g) Irrelevant, immaterial, or unduly repetitious evidence shall be excluded, but all other evidence of a type commonly relied upon by reasonably prudent persons in the conduct of their affairs shall be admissible, whether or not such evidence would be admissible in a trial in the courts of Florida. Any part of the evidence may be received in written form, and all testimony of parties and witnesses shall be made under oath.

(h) Documentary evidence may be received in the form of a copy or excerpt. Upon request, parties shall be given an opportunity to compare the copy with the original, if available.

(i) When official recognition is requested, the parties shall be notified and given an opportunity to examine and contest the material.

(j) A party shall be permitted to conduct cross-examination when testimony is taken or documents are made a part of the record.

(k)1. Any person subject to a subpoena may, before compliance and on timely petition, request the presiding officer having jurisdiction of the dispute to invalidate the subpoena on the ground that it was not lawfully issued, is unreasonably broad in scope, or requires the production of irrelevant material.

2. A party may seek enforcement of a subpoena, order directing discovery, or order imposing sanctions issued under the authority of this chapter by filing a petition for enforcement in the circuit court of the judicial circuit in which the person failing to comply with the subpoena or order resides. A failure to comply with an order of the court shall result in a finding of contempt of court. However, no person shall be in contempt while a subpoena is being challenged under subparagraph 1. The court may award to the prevailing party all or part of the costs and attorney's fees incurred in obtaining the court order whenever the court determines that such an award should be granted under the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure.

3. Any public employee subpoenaed to appear at an agency proceeding shall be entitled to per diem and travel expenses at the same rate as that provided for state employees under s. 112.061 if travel away from such public employee's headquarters is required. All other witnesses appearing pursuant to a subpoena shall be paid such fees and mileage for their attendance as is provided in civil actions in circuit courts of this state. In the case of a public employee, such expenses shall be processed and paid in the manner provided for agency employee travel expense reimbursement, and in the case of a witness who is not a public employee, payment of such fees and expenses shall accompany the subpoena.

(l) Unless the time period is waived or extended with the consent of all parties, the final order in a proceeding which affects substantial interests must be in writing and include findings of fact, if any, and conclusions of law separately stated, and it must be rendered within 90 days:

1. After the hearing is concluded, if conducted by the agency;

2. After a recommended order is submitted to the agency and mailed to all parties, if the hearing is conducted by an administrative law judge; or

3. After the agency has received the written and oral material it has authorized to be submitted, if there has been no hearing.

(m) Findings of fact, if set forth in a manner which is no more than mere tracking of the statutory language, must be accompanied by a concise and explicit statement of the underlying facts of record which support the findings.

(n) If an agency head finds that an immediate danger to the public health, safety, or welfare requires an immediate final order, it shall recite with particularity the facts underlying such finding in the final order, which shall be appealable or enjoined from the date rendered.

(o) On the request of any party, the administrative law judge shall enter an initial scheduling order to facilitate the just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of the proceeding. The initial scheduling order shall establish a discovery period, including a deadline by which all discovery shall be completed, and the date by which the parties shall identify expert witnesses and their opinions. The initial scheduling order also may require the parties to meet and file a joint report by a date certain.

(p) For any proceeding arising under chapter 373, chapter 378, or chapter 403, if a nonapplicant petitions as a third party to challenge an agency's issuance of a license, permit, or conceptual approval, the order of presentation in the proceeding is for the permit applicant to present a prima facie case demonstrating entitlement to the license, permit, or conceptual approval, followed by the agency. This demonstration may be made by entering into evidence the application and relevant material submitted to the agency in support of the application, and the agency's staff report or notice of intent to approve the permit, license, or conceptual approval. Subsequent to the presentation of the applicant's prima facie case and any direct evidence submitted by the agency, the petitioner initiating the action challenging the issuance of the license, permit, or conceptual approval has the burden of ultimate persuasion and has the burden of going forward to prove the case in opposition to the license, permit, or conceptual approval through the presentation of competent and substantial evidence. The permit applicant and agency may on rebuttal present any evidence relevant to demonstrating that the application meets the conditions for issuance. Notwithstanding subsection (1), this paragraph applies to proceedings under s. 120.574.

120.57 Additional procedures for particular cases.—

(1) ADDITIONAL PROCEDURES APPLICABLE TO HEARINGS INVOLVING DISPUTED ISSUES OF MATERIAL FACT.—

(a) Except as provided in ss. 120.80 and 120.81, an administrative law judge assigned by the division shall conduct all hearings under this subsection, except for hearings before agency heads or a member thereof. If the administrative law judge assigned to a hearing becomes unavailable, the division shall assign another administrative law judge who shall use any existing record and receive any additional evidence or argument, if any, which the new administrative law judge finds necessary.

(b) All parties shall have an opportunity to respond, to present evidence and argument on all issues involved, to conduct cross-examination and submit rebuttal evidence, to submit proposed findings of facts and orders, to file exceptions to the presiding officer's recommended order, and to be represented by counsel or other qualified representative. When appropriate, the general public may be given an opportunity to present oral or written communications. If the agency proposes to consider such material, then all parties shall be given an opportunity to cross-examine or challenge or rebut the material.

(c) Hearsay evidence may be used for the purpose of supplementing or explaining other evidence, but it shall not be sufficient in itself to support a finding unless it would be admissible over objection in civil actions.

(d) Notwithstanding s. 120.569(2)(g), similar fact evidence of other violations, wrongs, or acts is admissible when relevant to prove a material fact in issue, such as proof of motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, or absence of mistake or accident, but it is inadmissible when the evidence is relevant solely to prove bad character or propensity. When the state in an administrative proceeding intends to offer evidence of other acts or offenses under this paragraph, the state shall furnish to the party whose substantial interests are being determined and whose other acts or offenses will be the subject of such evidence, no fewer than 10 days before commencement of the proceeding, a written statement of the acts or offenses it intends to offer, describing them and the evidence the state intends to offer with particularity. Notice is not required for evidence of acts or offenses which is used for impeachment or on rebuttal.

(e)1. An agency or an administrative law judge may not base agency action that determines the substantial interests of a party on an unadopted rule or a rule that is an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority. This subparagraph does not preclude application of valid adopted rules and applicable provisions of law to the facts.

2. In a matter initiated as a result of agency action proposing to determine the substantial interests of a party, the party's timely petition for hearing may challenge the proposed agency action based on a rule that is an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority or based on an alleged unadopted rule. For challenges brought under this subparagraph:

a. The challenge may be pled as a defense using the procedures set forth in s. 120.56(1)(b).

b. Section 120.56(3)(a) applies to a challenge alleging that a rule is an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority.

c. Section 120.56(4)(c) applies to a challenge alleging an unadopted rule.

d. This subparagraph does not preclude the consolidation of any proceeding under s. 120.56 with any proceeding under this paragraph.

3. Notwithstanding subparagraph 1., if an agency demonstrates that the statute being implemented directs it to adopt rules, that the agency has not had time to adopt those rules because the requirement was so recently enacted, and that the agency has initiated rulemaking and is proceeding expeditiously and in good faith to adopt the required rules, then the agency's action may be based upon those unadopted rules if the administrative law judge determines that rulemaking is neither feasible nor practicable and the unadopted rules would not constitute an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority if adopted as rules. An unadopted rule shall not be presumed valid. The agency must demonstrate that the unadopted rule:

a. Is within the powers, functions, and duties delegated by the Legislature or, if the agency is operating pursuant to authority vested in the agency by the State Constitution, is within that authority;

b. Does not enlarge, modify, or contravene the specific provisions of law implemented;

c. Is not vague, establishes adequate standards for agency decisions, or does not vest unbridled discretion in the agency;

d. Is not arbitrary or capricious. A rule is arbitrary if it is not supported by logic or the necessary facts; a rule is capricious if it is adopted without thought or reason or is irrational;

e. Is not being applied to the substantially affected party without due notice; and

f. Does not impose excessive regulatory costs on the regulated person, county, or city.

4. The recommended and final orders in any proceeding shall be governed by paragraphs (k) and (l), except that the administrative law judge's determination regarding an unadopted rule under subparagraph 1. or subparagraph 2. shall not be rejected by the agency unless the agency first determines from a review of the complete record, and states with particularity in the order, that such determination is clearly erroneous or does not comply with essential requirements of law. In any proceeding for review under s. 120.68, if the court finds that the agency's rejection of the determination regarding the unadopted rule does not comport with this subparagraph, the agency action shall be set aside and the court shall award to the prevailing party the reasonable costs and a reasonable attorney fee for the initial proceeding and the proceeding for review.

5. A petitioner may pursue a separate, collateral challenge under s. 120.56 even if an adequate remedy exists through a proceeding under this section. The administrative law judge may consolidate the proceedings.

(f) The record in a case governed by this subsection shall consist only of:

1. All notices, pleadings, motions, and intermediate rulings.

2. Evidence admitted.

3. Those matters officially recognized.

4. Proffers of proof and objections and rulings thereon.

5. Proposed findings and exceptions.

6. Any decision, opinion, order, or report by the presiding officer.

7. All staff memoranda or data submitted to the presiding officer during the hearing or prior to its disposition, after notice of the submission to all parties, except communications by advisory staff as permitted under s. 120.66(1), if such communications are public records.

8. All matters placed on the record after an ex parte communication.

9. The official transcript.

(g) The agency shall accurately and completely preserve all testimony in the proceeding, and, on the request of any party, it shall make a full or partial transcript available at no more than actual cost.

(h) Any party to a proceeding in which an administrative law judge has final order authority may move for a summary final order when there is no genuine issue as to any material fact. A summary final order shall be rendered if the administrative law judge determines from the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with affidavits, if any, that no genuine issue as to any material fact exists and that the moving party is entitled as a matter of law to the entry of a final order. A summary final order shall consist of findings of fact, if any, conclusions of law, a disposition or penalty, if applicable, and any other information required by law to be contained in the final order.

(i) When, in any proceeding conducted pursuant to this subsection, a dispute of material fact no longer exists, any party may move the administrative law judge to relinquish jurisdiction to the agency. An order relinquishing jurisdiction shall be rendered if the administrative law judge determines from the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with supporting and opposing affidavits, if any, that no genuine issue as to any material fact exists. If the administrative law judge enters an order relinquishing jurisdiction, the agency may promptly conduct a proceeding pursuant to subsection (2), if appropriate, but the parties may not raise any issues of disputed fact that could have been raised before the administrative law judge. An order entered by an administrative law judge relinquishing jurisdiction to the agency based upon a determination that no genuine dispute of material fact exists, need not contain findings of fact, conclusions of law, or a recommended disposition or penalty.

(j) Findings of fact shall be based upon a preponderance of the evidence, except in penal or licensure disciplinary proceedings or except as otherwise provided by statute, and shall be based exclusively on the evidence of record and on matters officially recognized.

(k) The presiding officer shall complete and submit to the agency and all parties a recommended order consisting of findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommended disposition or penalty, if applicable, and any other information required by law to be contained in the final order. All proceedings conducted under this subsection shall be de novo. The agency shall allow each party 15 days in which to submit written exceptions to the recommended order. The final order shall include an explicit ruling on each exception, but an agency need not rule on an exception that does not clearly identify the disputed portion of the recommended order by page number or paragraph, that does not identify the legal basis for the exception, or that does not include appropriate and specific citations to the record.

(l) The agency may adopt the recommended order as the final order of the agency. The agency in its final order may reject or modify the conclusions of law over which it has substantive jurisdiction and interpretation of administrative rules over which it has substantive jurisdiction. When rejecting or modifying such conclusion of law or interpretation of administrative rule, the agency must state with particularity its reasons for rejecting or modifying such conclusion of law or interpretation of administrative rule and must make a finding that its substituted conclusion of law or interpretation of administrative rule is as or more reasonable than that which was rejected or modified. Rejection or modification of conclusions of law may not form the basis for rejection or modification of findings of fact. The agency may not reject or modify the findings of fact unless the agency first determines from a review of the entire record, and states with particularity in the order, that the findings of fact were not based upon competent substantial evidence or that the proceedings on which the findings were based did not comply with essential requirements of law. The agency may accept the recommended penalty in a recommended order, but may not reduce or increase it without a review of the complete record and without stating with particularity its reasons therefor in the order, by citing to the record in justifying the action.

(m) If a recommended order is submitted to an agency, the agency shall provide a copy of its final order and any exceptions to the division within 15 days after the order is filed with the agency clerk.

(n) Notwithstanding any law to the contrary, when statutes or rules impose conflicting time requirements for the scheduling of expedited hearings or issuance of recommended or final orders, the director of the division shall have the authority to set the proceedings for the orderly operation of this chapter.

(2) ADDITIONAL PROCEDURES APPLICABLE TO HEARINGS NOT INVOLVING DISPUTED ISSUES OF MATERIAL FACT.—In any case to which subsection (1) does not apply:

(a) The agency shall:

1. Give reasonable notice to affected persons of the action of the agency, whether proposed or already taken, or of its decision to refuse action, together with a summary of the factual, legal, and policy grounds therefor.

2. Give parties or their counsel the option, at a convenient time and place, to present to the agency or hearing officer written or oral evidence in opposition to the action of the agency or to its refusal to act, or a written statement challenging the grounds upon which the agency has chosen to justify its action or inaction.

3. If the objections of the parties are overruled, provide a written explanation within 7 days.

(b) An agency may not base agency action that determines the substantial interests of a party on an unadopted rule or a rule that is an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority.

(c) The record shall only consist of:

1. The notice and summary of grounds.

2. Evidence received.

3. All written statements submitted.

4. Any decision overruling objections.

5. All matters placed on the record after an ex parte communication.

6. The official transcript.

7. Any decision, opinion, order, or report by the presiding officer.

(3) ADDITIONAL PROCEDURES APPLICABLE TO PROTESTS TO CONTRACT SOLICITATION OR AWARD.—Agencies subject to this chapter shall use

the uniform rules of procedure, which provide procedures for the resolution of protests arising from the contract solicitation or award process. Such rules shall at least provide that:

(a) The agency shall provide notice of a decision or intended decision concerning a solicitation, contract award, or exceptional purchase by electronic posting. This notice shall contain the following statement: "Failure to file a protest within the time prescribed in section 120.57(3), Florida Statutes, or failure to post the bond or other security required by law within the time allowed for filing a bond shall constitute a waiver of proceedings under chapter 120, Florida Statutes."

(b) Any person who is adversely affected by the agency decision or intended decision shall file with the agency a notice of protest in writing within 72 hours after the posting of the notice of decision or intended decision. With respect to a protest of the terms, conditions, and specifications contained in a solicitation, including any provisions governing the methods for ranking bids, proposals, or replies, awarding contracts, reserving rights of further negotiation, or modifying or amending any contract, the notice of protest shall be filed in writing within 72 hours after the posting of the solicitation. The formal written protest shall be filed within 10 days after the date the notice of protest is filed. Failure to file a notice of protest or failure to file a formal written protest shall constitute a waiver of proceedings under this chapter. The formal written protest shall state with particularity the facts and law upon which the protest is based. Saturdays, Sundays, and state holidays shall be excluded in the computation of the 72-hour time periods provided by this paragraph.

(c) Upon receipt of the formal written protest that has been timely filed, the agency shall stop the solicitation or contract award process until the subject of the protest is resolved by final agency action, unless the agency head sets forth in writing particular facts and circumstances which require the continuance of the solicitation or contract award process without delay in order to avoid an immediate and serious danger to the public health, safety, or welfare.

(d)1. The agency shall provide an opportunity to resolve the protest by mutual agreement between the parties within 7 days, excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and state holidays, after receipt of a formal written protest.

2. If the subject of a protest is not resolved by mutual agreement within 7 days, excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and state holidays, after receipt of the formal written protest, and if there is no disputed issue of material fact, an informal proceeding shall be conducted pursuant to subsection (2) and applicable agency rules before a person whose qualifications have been prescribed by rules of the agency.

3. If the subject of a protest is not resolved by mutual agreement within 7 days, excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and state holidays, after receipt of the formal written protest, and if there is a disputed issue of material fact, the agency shall refer the protest to the division by electronic means through the division's website for proceedings under subsection (1).

(e) Upon receipt of a formal written protest referred pursuant to this subsection, the director of the division shall expedite the hearing and assign an administrative law judge who shall commence a hearing within 30 days after the receipt of the formal written protest by the division and enter a recommended order within 30 days after the hearing or within 30 days after receipt of the hearing transcript by the administrative law judge, whichever is later. Each party shall be allowed 10 days in which to submit written exceptions to the recommended order. A final order shall be entered by the agency within 30 days of the entry of a recommended order. The provisions of this paragraph may be waived upon stipulation by all parties.

(f) In a protest to an invitation to bid or request for proposals procurement, no submissions made after the bid or proposal opening which amend or supplement the bid or proposal shall be considered. In a protest to an invitation to negotiate procurement, no submissions made after the agency announces its intent to award a contract, reject all replies, or withdraw the solicitation which amend or supplement the reply shall be considered. Unless otherwise provided by statute, the burden of proof shall rest with the party protesting the proposed agency action. In a competitive-procurement protest, other than a rejection of all bids, proposals, or replies, the administrative law judge shall conduct a de novo proceeding to determine whether the agency's proposed action is contrary to the agency's governing statutes, the agency's rules or policies, or the solicitation specifications. The standard of proof for such proceedings shall be whether the proposed agency action was clearly erroneous, contrary to competition, arbitrary, or capricious. In any bid-protest proceeding contesting an intended agency action to reject all bids, proposals, or replies, the standard of review by an administrative law judge shall be whether the agency's intended action is illegal, arbitrary, dishonest, or fraudulent.

(g) For purposes of this subsection, the definitions in s. 287.012 apply.

(4) INFORMAL DISPOSITION.—Unless precluded by law, informal disposition may be made of any proceeding by stipulation, agreed settlement, or consent order.

120.573 Mediation of disputes.—Each announcement of an agency action that affects substantial interests shall advise whether mediation of the administrative dispute for the type of agency action announced is available and that choosing mediation does not affect the right to an administrative hearing. If the agency and all parties to the administrative action agree to mediation, in writing, within 10 days after the time period stated in the announcement for election of an administrative remedy under ss. 120.569 and 120.57, the time limitations imposed by ss. 120.569 and 120.57 shall be tolled to allow the agency and parties to mediate the administrative dispute. The mediation shall be concluded within 60 days of such agreement unless otherwise agreed by the parties. The mediation agreement shall include provisions for mediator selection, the allocation of costs and fees associated with mediation, and the mediating parties' understanding regarding the confidentiality of discussions and documents introduced during mediation. If mediation results in settlement of the administrative dispute, the agency shall enter a final order incorporating the agreement of the parties. If mediation terminates without settlement of the dispute, the agency shall notify the parties in writing that the administrative hearing processes under ss. 120.569 and 120.57 are resumed.

120.574 Summary hearing.—

(1)(a) Within 5 business days following the division's receipt of a petition or request for hearing, the division shall issue and serve on all original parties an initial order that assigns the case to a specific administrative law judge and provides general information regarding practice and procedure before the division. The initial order shall also contain a statement advising the addressees that a summary hearing is available upon the agreement of all parties under subsection (2) and briefly describing the expedited time sequences, limited discovery, and final order provisions of the summary procedure.

(b) Within 15 days after service of the initial order, any party may file with the division a motion for summary hearing in accordance with subsection (2). If all original parties agree, in writing, to the summary proceeding, the proceeding shall be conducted within 30 days of the agreement, in accordance with the provisions of subsection (2).

(c) Intervenors in the proceeding shall be governed by the decision of the original parties regarding whether the case will proceed in accordance with the summary hearing process and shall not have standing to challenge that decision.

(d) If a motion for summary hearing is not filed within 15 days after service of the division's initial order, the matter shall proceed in accordance with ss. 120.569 and 120.57.

(2) In any case to which this subsection is applicable, the following procedures apply:

- (a) Motions shall be limited to the following:
  1. A motion in opposition to the petition.
  2. A motion requesting discovery beyond the informal exchange of documents and witness lists described in paragraph (b). Upon a showing of necessity, additional discovery may be permitted in the discretion of the administrative law judge, but only if it can be completed not later than 5 days prior to the final hearing.
  3. A motion for continuance of the final hearing date.
  4. A motion requesting a prehearing conference, or the administrative law judge may require a prehearing conference, for the purpose of identifying: the legal and factual issues to be considered at the final hearing; the names and addresses of witnesses who may be called to testify at the final hearing; documentary evidence that will be offered at the final hearing; the range of penalties that may be imposed upon final hearing; and any other matter that the administrative law judge determines would expedite resolution of the proceeding. The prehearing conference may be held by telephone conference call.

5. During or after any preliminary hearing or conference, any party or the administrative law judge may suggest that the case is no longer appropriate for summary disposition. Following any argument requested by the parties, the administrative law judge may enter an order referring the case back to the formal adjudicatory process described in s. 120.57(1), in which event the parties shall proceed accordingly.

(b) Not later than 5 days prior to the final hearing, the parties shall furnish to each other copies of documentary evidence and lists of witnesses who may testify at the final hearing.

(c) All parties shall have an opportunity to respond, to present evidence and argument on all issues involved, to conduct cross-examination and submit rebuttal evidence, and to be represented by counsel or other qualified representative.

(d) The record in a case governed by this subsection shall consist only of:

1. All notices, pleadings, motions, and intermediate rulings.
  2. Evidence received.
  3. A statement of matters officially recognized.
  4. Proffers of proof and objections and rulings thereon.
  5. Matters placed on the record after an ex parte communication.
  6. The written decision of the administrative law judge presiding at the final hearing.
  7. The official transcript of the final hearing.
- (e) The agency shall accurately and completely preserve all testimony in the proceeding and, upon request by any party, shall make a full or partial transcript available at no more than actual cost.

(f) The decision of the administrative law judge shall be rendered within 30 days after the conclusion of the final hearing or the filing of the transcript thereof, whichever is later. The administrative law judge's decision, which shall be final agency action subject to judicial review under s. 120.68, shall include the following:

1. Findings of fact based exclusively on the evidence of record and matters officially recognized.
2. Conclusions of law.
3. Imposition of a fine or penalty, if applicable.
4. Any other information required by law or rule to be contained in a final order.

History.—s. 21, ch. 96-159; s. 10, ch. 97-176; s. 11, ch. 2000-158; s. 10, ch. 2000-336.

120.595 Attorney's fees.—

(1) CHALLENGES TO AGENCY ACTION PURSUANT TO SECTION 120.57(1).—
FL-SEN-21-0182-A-000778

(a) The provisions of this subsection are supplemental to, and do not abrogate, other provisions allowing the award of fees or costs in administrative proceedings.

(b) The final order in a proceeding pursuant to s. 120.57(1) shall award reasonable costs and a reasonable attorney's fee to the prevailing party only where the nonprevailing adverse party has been determined by the administrative law judge to have participated in the proceeding for an improper purpose.

(c) In proceedings pursuant to s. 120.57(1), and upon motion, the administrative law judge shall determine whether any party participated in the proceeding for an improper purpose as defined by this subsection. In making such determination, the administrative law judge shall consider whether the nonprevailing adverse party has participated in two or more other such proceedings involving the same prevailing party and the same project as an adverse party and in which such two or more proceedings the nonprevailing adverse party did not establish either the factual or legal merits of its position, and shall consider whether the factual or legal position asserted in the instant proceeding would have been cognizable in the previous proceedings. In such event, it shall be rebuttably presumed that the nonprevailing adverse party participated in the pending proceeding for an improper purpose.

(d) In any proceeding in which the administrative law judge determines that a party participated in the proceeding for an improper purpose, the recommended order shall so designate and shall determine the award of costs and attorney's fees.

(e) For the purpose of this subsection:

1. "Improper purpose" means participation in a proceeding pursuant to s. 120.57(1) primarily to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or for frivolous purpose or to needlessly increase the cost of litigation, licensing, or securing the approval of an activity.

2. "Costs" has the same meaning as the costs allowed in civil actions in this state as provided in chapter 57.

3. "Nonprevailing adverse party" means a party that has failed to have substantially changed the outcome of the proposed or final agency action which is the subject of a proceeding. In the event that a proceeding results in any substantial modification or condition intended to resolve the matters raised in a party's petition, it shall be determined that the party having raised the issue addressed is not a nonprevailing adverse party. The recommended order shall state whether the change is substantial for purposes of this subsection. In no event shall the term "nonprevailing party" or "prevailing party" be deemed to include any party that has intervened in a previously existing proceeding to support the position of an agency.

(2) CHALLENGES TO PROPOSED AGENCY RULES PURSUANT TO SECTION 120.56(2).—If the appellate court or administrative law judge declares a proposed rule or portion of a proposed rule invalid pursuant to s. 120.56(2), a judgment or order shall be rendered against the agency for reasonable costs and reasonable attorney's fees, unless the agency demonstrates that its actions were substantially justified or special circumstances exist which would make the award unjust. An agency's actions are "substantially justified" if there was a reasonable basis in law and fact at the time the actions were taken by the agency. If the agency prevails in the proceedings, the appellate court or administrative law judge shall award reasonable costs and reasonable attorney's fees against a party if the appellate court or administrative law judge determines that a party participated in the proceedings for an improper purpose as defined by paragraph (1)(e). No award of attorney's fees as provided by this subsection shall exceed $50,000.

(3) CHALLENGES TO EXISTING AGENCY RULES PURSUANT TO SECTION 120.56(3) AND (5). If the appellate court or administrative law judge declares a rule or portion of a rule invalid pursuant to s. 120.56(3) or (5), a judgment or order shall be rendered against the agency for reasonable costs and reasonable attorney's fees, unless the agency demonstrates that its actions were substantially justified or special circumstances exist which would make the award unjust. An agency's actions are "substantially justified" if there was a reasonable basis in law and fact at the time the actions were taken by the agency. If the agency prevails in the proceedings, the appellate court or administrative law judge shall award reasonable costs and reasonable attorney's fees against a party if the appellate court or administrative law judge determines that a party participated in the proceedings for an improper purpose as defined by paragraph (1)(e). No award of attorney's fees as provided by this subsection shall exceed $50,000.

(4) CHALLENGES TO AGENCY ACTION PURSUANT TO SECTION 120.56(4).—

(a) If the appellate court or administrative law judge determines that all or part of an agency statement violates s. 120.54(1)(a), or that the agency must immediately discontinue reliance on the statement and any substantially similar statement pursuant to s. 120.56(4)(f), a judgment or order shall be entered against the agency for reasonable costs and reasonable attorney's fees, unless the agency demonstrates that the statement is required by the Federal Government to implement or retain a delegated or approved program or to meet a condition to receipt of federal funds.

(b) Upon notification to the administrative law judge provided before the final hearing that the agency has published a notice of rulemaking under s. 120.54(3)(a), such notice shall automatically operate as a stay of proceedings pending rulemaking. The administrative law judge may vacate the stay for good cause shown. A stay of proceedings under this paragraph remains in effect so long as the agency is proceeding expeditiously and in good faith to adopt the statement as a rule. The administrative law judge shall award reasonable costs and reasonable attorney's fees accrued by the petitioner prior to the date the notice was published, unless the agency proves to the administrative law judge that it did not know and should not have known that the statement was an unadopted rule. Attorneys' fees and costs under this paragraph and paragraph (a) shall be awarded only upon a finding that the agency received notice that the statement may constitute an unadopted rule at least 30 days before a petition under s. 120.56(4) was filed and that the agency failed to publish the required notice of rulemaking pursuant to s. 120.54(3) that addresses the statement within that 30-day period. Notice to the agency may be satisfied by its receipt of a copy of the s. 120.56(4) petition, a notice or other paper containing substantially the same information, or a petition filed pursuant to s. 120.54(7). An award of attorney's fees as provided by this paragraph may not exceed $50,000.

(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of chapter 284, an award shall be paid from the budget entity of the secretary, executive director, or equivalent administrative officer of the agency, and the agency shall not be entitled to payment of an award or reimbursement for payment of an award under any provision of law.

(d) If the agency prevails in the proceedings, the appellate court or administrative law judge shall award reasonable costs and attorney's fees against a party if the appellate court or administrative law judge determines that the party participated in the proceedings for an improper purpose as defined in paragraph (1)(e) or that the party or the party's attorney knew or should have known that a claim was not supported by the material facts necessary to establish the claim or would not be supported by the application of then-existing law to those material facts.

(5) APPEALS.—When there is an appeal, the court in its discretion may award reasonable attorney's fees and reasonable costs to the prevailing party if the court finds that the appeal was frivolous, meritless, or an abuse of the appellate process, or that the agency action which precipitated the appeal was a gross abuse of the agency's discretion. Upon review of agency action that precipitates an appeal, if the court finds that the agency improperly rejected or modified findings of fact in a recommended order, the court shall award reasonable attorney's fees and reasonable costs to a prevailing appellant for the administrative proceeding and the appellate proceeding.

(6) OTHER SECTIONS NOT AFFECTED.—Other provisions, including ss. 57.105 and 57.111, authorize the award of attorney's fees and costs in administrative proceedings. Nothing in this section shall affect the availability of attorney's fees and costs as provided in those sections.

History.—s. 25, ch. 96-159; s. 11, ch. 97-176; s. 48, ch. 99-2; s. 6, ch. 2003-94; s. 13, ch. 2008-104; s. 3, ch. 2017-3.

120.60 Licensing.—

(1) Upon receipt of a license application, an agency shall examine the application and, within 30 days after such receipt, notify the applicant of any apparent errors or omissions and request any additional information the agency is permitted by law to require. An agency may not deny a license for failure to correct an error or omission or to supply additional information unless the agency timely notified the applicant within this 30-day period. The agency may establish by rule the time period for submitting any additional information requested by the agency. For good cause shown, the agency shall grant a request for an extension of time for submitting the additional information. If the applicant believes the agency's request for additional information is not authorized by law or rule, the agency, at the applicant's request, shall proceed to process the application. An application is complete upon receipt of all requested information and correction of any error or omission for which the applicant was timely notified or when the time for such notification has expired. An application for a license must be approved or denied within 90 days after receipt of a completed application unless a shorter period of time for agency action is provided by law. The 90-day time period is tolled by the initiation of a proceeding under ss. 120.569 and 120.57. Any application for a license which is not approved or denied within the 90-day or shorter time period, within 15 days after conclusion of a public hearing held on the application, or within 45 days after a recommended order is submitted to the agency and the parties, whichever action and timeframe is latest and applicable, is considered approved unless the recommended order recommends that the agency deny the license. Subject to the satisfactory completion of an examination if required as a prerequisite to licensure, any license that is considered approved shall be issued and may include such reasonable conditions as are authorized by law. Any applicant for licensure seeking to claim licensure by default under this subsection shall notify the agency clerk of the licensing agency, in writing, of the intent to rely upon the default license provision of this subsection, and may not take any action based upon the default license until after receipt of such notice by the agency clerk.

(2) If an applicant seeks a license for an activity that is exempt from licensure, the agency shall notify the applicant and return any tendered application fee within 30 days after receipt of the original application.

(3) Each applicant shall be given written notice, personally or by mail, that the agency intends to grant or deny, or has granted or denied, the application for license. The notice must state with particularity the grounds or basis for the issuance or denial of the license, except when issuance is a ministerial act. Unless waived, a copy of the notice shall be delivered or mailed to each party's attorney of record and to each person who has made a written request for notice of agency action. Each notice must inform the recipient of the basis for the agency decision, inform the recipient of any administrative hearing pursuant to ss. 120.569 and 120.57 or judicial review pursuant to s. 120.68 which may be available, indicate the procedure that must be followed, and state the applicable time limits. The issuing agency shall certify the date the notice was mailed or delivered, and the notice and the certification must be filed with the agency clerk.

(4) When a licensee has made timely and sufficient application for the renewal of a license which does not automatically expire by statute, the existing license shall not expire until the application for renewal has been finally acted upon by the agency or, in case the application is denied or the terms of the license are limited, until the last day for seeking review of the agency order or a later date fixed by order of the reviewing court.

(5) No revocation, suspension, annulment, or withdrawal of any license is lawful unless, prior to the entry of a final order, the agency has served, by personal service or certified mail, an administrative complaint which affords reasonable notice to the licensee of facts or conduct which warrant the intended action and unless the licensee has been given an adequate opportunity to request a proceeding pursuant to ss. 120.569 and 120.57. When personal service cannot be made and the certified mail notice is returned undelivered, the agency shall cause a short, plain notice to the licensee to be published once each week for 4 consecutive weeks in a newspaper published in the county of the licensee's last known address as it appears on the records of the agency. If no newspaper is published in that county, the notice may be published in a newspaper of general circulation in that county.

(6) If the agency finds that immediate serious danger to the public health, safety, or welfare requires emergency suspension, restriction, or limitation of a license, the agency may take such action by any procedure that is fair under the circumstances if:

(a) The procedure provides at least the same procedural protection as is given by other statutes, the State Constitution, or the United States Constitution;

(b) The agency takes only that action necessary to protect the public interest under the emergency procedure; and

(c) The agency states in writing at the time of, or prior to, its action the specific facts and reasons for finding an immediate danger to the public health, safety, or welfare and its reasons for concluding that the procedure used is fair under the circumstances. The agency's findings of immediate danger, necessity, and procedural fairness are judicially reviewable. Summary suspension, restriction, or limitation may be ordered, but a suspension or revocation proceeding pursuant to ss. 120.569 and 120.57 shall also be promptly instituted and acted upon.

(7) No agency shall include as a condition of approval of any license any provision that is based upon a statement, policy, or guideline of another agency unless the statement, policy, or guideline is within the jurisdiction of the other agency. The other agency shall identify for the licensing agency the specific legal authority for each such statement, policy, or guideline. The licensing agency must provide the licensee with an opportunity to challenge the condition as invalid. If the licensing agency bases a condition of approval or denial of the license upon the statement, policy, or guideline of the other agency, any party to an administrative proceeding that arises from the approval with conditions or denial of the license may require the other agency to join as a party in determining the validity of the condition.

120.62 Agency investigations.—

(1) Every person who responds to a request or demand by any agency or representative thereof for written data or an oral statement shall be entitled to a transcript or recording of his or her oral statement at no more than cost.

(2) Any person compelled to appear, or who appears voluntarily, before any presiding officer or agency in an investigation or in any agency proceeding has the right, at his or her own expense, to be accompanied, represented, and advised by counsel or by other qualified representatives.

History.—s. 1, ch. 74-310; s. 763, ch. 95-147; s. 28, ch. 96-159.

120.63 Exemption from act.—

(1) Upon application of any agency, the Administration Commission may exempt any process or proceeding governed by this act from one or more requirements of this act:

(a) When the agency head has certified that the requirement would conflict with any provision of federal law or rules with which the agency must comply;

(b) In order to permit persons in the state to receive tax benefits or federal funds under any federal law; or

(c) When the commission has found that conformity with the requirements of the part or parts of this act for which exemption is sought would be so inconvenient or impractical as to defeat the purpose of the agency proceeding involved or the purpose of this act and would not be in the public interest in light of the nature of the intended action and the enabling act or other laws affecting the agency.

(2) The commission may not exempt an agency from any requirement of this act pursuant to this section until it establishes alternative procedures to achieve the agency's purpose which shall be consistent, insofar as possible, with the intent and purpose of the act.

(a) Prior to the granting of any exemption authorized by this section, the commission shall hold a public hearing after notice given as provided in s. 120.525. Upon the conclusion of the hearing, the commission, through the Executive Office of the Governor, shall issue an order specifically granting or denying the exemption and specifying any processes or proceedings exempted and the extent of the exemption; transmit to the committee and to the Department of State a copy of the petition, a certified copy of the order granting or denying the petition, and a copy of any alternative procedures prescribed; and give notice of the petition and the commission's response in the Florida Administrative Register.

(b) An exemption and any alternative procedure prescribed shall terminate 90 days following adjournment sine die of the then-current or next regular legislative session after issuance of the exemption order, or upon the effective date of any subsequent legislation incorporating the exemption or any partial exemption related thereto, whichever is earlier. The exemption granted by the commission shall be renewable upon the same or similar facts not more than once. Such renewal shall terminate as would an original exemption.

120.65 Administrative law judges.—

(1) The Division of Administrative Hearings within the Department of Management Services shall be headed by a director who shall be appointed by the
FL-SEN-21-0182-A-000781

Administration Commission and confirmed by the Senate. The director, who shall also serve as the chief administrative law judge, and any deputy chief administrative law judge must possess the same minimum qualifications as the administrative law judges employed by the division. The Deputy Chief Judge of Compensation Claims must possess the minimum qualifications established in s. 440.45(2) and shall report to the director. The division shall be a separate budget entity, and the director shall be its agency head for all purposes. The Department of Management Services shall provide administrative support and service to the division to the extent requested by the director. The division shall not be subject to control, supervision, or direction by the Department of Management Services in any manner, including, but not limited to, personnel, purchasing, transactions involving real or personal property, and budgetary matters.

(2) The director has the right to appeal actions by the Executive Office of the Governor that affect amendments to the division's approved operating budget or any personnel actions pursuant to chapter 216 to the Administration Commission, which shall decide such issue by majority vote. The appropriations committees may advise the Administration Commission on the issue. If the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives object in writing to the effects of the appeal, the appeal may be affirmed by the affirmative vote of two-thirds of the commission members present.

(3) Each state agency as defined in chapter 216 and each political subdivision shall make its facilities available, at a time convenient to the provider, for use by the division in conducting proceedings pursuant to this chapter.

(4) The division shall employ administrative law judges to conduct hearings required by this chapter or other law. Any person employed by the division as an administrative law judge must have been a member of The Florida Bar in good standing for the preceding 5 years.

(5) If the division cannot furnish a division administrative law judge promptly in response to an agency request, the director shall designate in writing a qualified full-time employee of an agency other than the requesting agency to conduct the hearing. The director shall have the discretion to designate such a hearing officer who is located in that part of the state where the parties and witnesses reside.

(6) The division is authorized to provide administrative law judges on a contract basis to any governmental entity to conduct any hearing not covered by this section.

(7) Rules promulgated by the division may authorize any reasonable sanctions except contempt for violation of the rules of the division or failure to comply with a reasonable order issued by an administrative law judge, which is not under judicial review.

(8) Not later than February 1 of each year, the division shall issue a written report to the Administrative Procedures Committee and the Administration Commission, including at least the following information:

(a) A summary of the extent and effect of agencies' utilization of administrative law judges, court reporters, and other personnel in proceedings under this chapter.

(b) Recommendations for change or improvement in the Administrative Procedure Act or any agency's practice or policy with respect thereto.

(c) Recommendations as to those types of cases or disputes which should be conducted under the summary hearing process described in s. 120.574.

(d) A report regarding each agency's compliance with the filing requirement in s. 120.57(1)(m).

(9) The division shall be reimbursed for administrative law judge services and travel expenses by the following entities: water management districts, regional planning councils, school districts, community colleges, the Division of Florida Colleges, state universities, the Board of Governors of the State University System, the State Board of Education, the Florida School for the Deaf and the Blind, and the Commission for Independent Education. These entities shall contract with the division to establish a contract rate for services and provisions for reimbursement of administrative law judge travel expenses and video teleconferencing expenses attributable to hearings conducted on behalf of these entities. The contract rate must be based on a total-cost-recovery methodology.

120.651 Designation of two administrative law judges to preside over actions involving department or boards.

—The Division of Administrative Hearings shall designate at least two administrative law judges who shall specifically preside over actions involving the Department of Health or boards within the Department of Health. Each designated administrative law judge must be a member of The Florida Bar in good standing and must have legal, managerial, or clinical experience in issues related to health care or have attained board certification in health care law from The Florida Bar.

History.—s. 32, ch. 2003-416.

120.655 Withholding funds to pay for administrative law judge services to school boards.

—If a district school board fails to make a timely payment for the services provided by an administrative law judge of the Division of Administrative Hearings as provided annually in the General Appropriations Act, the Commissioner of Education shall withhold, from any general revenue funds the district is eligible to receive, an amount sufficient to pay for the administrative law judge's services. The commissioner shall transfer the amount withheld to the Division of Administrative Hearings in payment of such services.

agency head, after the agency head has received a recommended order, or to the presiding officer by:

(a) An agency head or member of the agency or any other public employee or official engaged in prosecution or advocacy in connection with the matter under consideration or a factually related matter.

(b) A party to the proceeding, the party's authorized representative or counsel, or any person who, directly or indirectly, would have a substantial interest in the proposed agency action.

Nothing in this subsection shall apply to advisory staff members who do not testify on behalf of the agency in the proceeding or to any rulemaking proceedings under s. 120.54.

(2) A presiding officer, including an agency head or designee, who is involved in the decisional process and who receives an ex parte communication in violation of subsection (1) shall place on the record of the pending matter all written communications received, all written responses to such communications, and a memorandum stating the substance of all oral communications received and all oral responses made, and shall also advise all parties that such matters have been placed on the record. Any party desiring to rebut the ex parte communication shall be allowed to do so, if such party requests the opportunity for rebuttal within 10 days after notice of such communication. The presiding officer may, if necessary to eliminate the effect of an ex parte communication, withdraw from the proceeding, in which case the entity that appointed the presiding officer shall assign a successor.

(3) Any person who makes an ex parte communication prohibited by subsection (1), and any presiding officer, including an agency head or designee, who fails to place in the record any such communication, is in violation of this act and may be assessed a civil penalty not to exceed $500 or be subjected to other disciplinary action.

120.665 Disqualification of agency personnel.

(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of s. 112.3143, any individual serving alone or with others as an agency head may be disqualified from serving in an agency proceeding for bias, prejudice, or interest when any party to the agency proceeding shows just cause by a suggestion filed within a reasonable period of time prior to the agency proceeding. If the disqualified individual was appointed, the appointing power may appoint a substitute to serve in the matter from which the individual is disqualified. If the individual is an elected official, the Governor may appoint a substitute to serve in the matter from which the individual is disqualified. However, if a quorum remains after the individual is disqualified, it shall not be necessary to appoint a substitute.

(2) Any agency action taken by a duly appointed substitute for a disqualified individual shall be as conclusive and effective as if agency action had been taken by the agency as it was constituted prior to any substitution.

Note.—Former s. 120.71.

120.68 Judicial review.—

(1)(a) A party who is adversely affected by final agency action is entitled to judicial review.

(b) A preliminary, procedural, or intermediate order of the agency or of an administrative law judge of the Division of Administrative Hearings is immediately reviewable if review of the final agency decision would not provide an adequate remedy.

(2)(a) Judicial review shall be sought in the appellate district where the agency maintains its headquarters or where a party resides or as otherwise provided by law. All proceedings shall be instituted by filing a notice of appeal or petition for review in accordance with the Florida Rules of Appellate Procedure within 30 days after the rendition of the order being appealed. If the appeal is of an order rendered in a proceeding initiated under s. 120.56, the agency whose rule is being challenged shall transmit a copy of the notice of appeal to the committee.

(b) When proceedings under this chapter are consolidated for final hearing and the parties to the consolidated proceeding seek review of final or interlocutory orders in more than one district court of appeal, the courts of appeal are authorized to transfer and consolidate the review proceedings. The court may transfer such appellate proceedings on its own motion, upon motion of a party to one of the appellate proceedings, or by stipulation of the parties to the appellate proceedings. In determining whether to transfer a proceeding, the court may consider such factors as the interrelationship of the parties and the proceedings, the desirability of avoiding inconsistent results in related matters, judicial economy, and the burden on the parties of reproducing the record for use in multiple appellate courts.

(3) The filing of the petition does not itself stay enforcement of the agency decision, but if the agency decision has the effect of suspending or revoking a license, supersedeas shall be granted as a matter of right upon such conditions as are reasonable, unless the court, upon petition of the agency, determines that a supersedeas would constitute a probable danger to the health, safety, or welfare of the state. The agency also may grant a stay upon appropriate terms, but, whether or not the action has the effect of suspending or revoking a license, a petition to the agency for a stay is not a prerequisite to a petition to the court for supersedeas. In any event the court shall specify the conditions, if any, upon which the stay or supersedeas is granted.

(4) Judicial review of any agency action shall be confined to the record transmitted and any additions made thereto in accordance with paragraph (7)(a).

(5) The record for judicial review shall be compiled in accordance with the Florida Rules of Appellate Procedure.

(6)(a) The reviewing court's decision may be mandatory, prohibitory, or declaratory in form, and it shall provide whatever relief is appropriate irrespective of the original form of the petition. The court may:

1. Order agency action required by law; order agency exercise of discretion when required by law; set aside agency action; remand the case for further agency proceedings; or decide the rights, privileges, obligations, requirements, or procedures at issue between the parties; and

2. Order such ancillary relief as the court finds necessary to redress the effects of official action wrongfully taken or withheld.

(b) If the court sets aside agency action or remands the case to the agency for further proceedings, it may make such interlocutory order as the court finds necessary to preserve the interests of any party and the public pending further proceedings or agency action.

(7) The court shall remand a case to the agency for further proceedings consistent with the court's decision or set aside agency action, as appropriate, when it finds that:

(a) There has been no hearing prior to agency action and the reviewing court finds that the validity of the action depends upon disputed facts;

(b) The agency's action depends on any finding of fact that is not supported by competent, substantial evidence in the record of a hearing conducted pursuant to ss. 120.569 and 120.57; however, the court shall not substitute its judgment for that of the agency as to the weight of the evidence on any disputed finding of fact;

(c) The fairness of the proceedings or the correctness of the action may have been impaired by a material error in procedure or a failure to follow prescribed procedure;

(d) The agency has erroneously interpreted a provision of law and a correct interpretation compels a particular action; or

(e) The agency's exercise of discretion was:

1. Outside the range of discretion delegated to the agency by law;

2. Inconsistent with agency rule;

3. Inconsistent with officially stated agency policy or a prior agency practice, if deviation therefrom is not explained by the agency; or

4. Otherwise in violation of a constitutional or statutory provision;

but the court shall not substitute its judgment for that of the agency on an issue of discretion.

(8) Unless the court finds a ground for setting aside, modifying, remanding, or ordering agency action or ancillary relief under a specified provision of this section, it shall affirm the agency's action.

(9) A petition challenging an agency rule as an invalid exercise of delegated legislative authority shall not be instituted pursuant to this section, except to review an order entered pursuant to a proceeding under s. 120.56 or s. 120.57(1)(e)1. or (2)(b) or an agency's findings of immediate danger, necessity, and procedural fairness prerequisite to the adoption of an emergency rule pursuant to s. 120.54(4), unless the sole issue presented by the petition is the constitutionality of a rule and there are no disputed issues of fact.

(10) If an administrative law judge's final order depends on any fact found by the administrative law judge, the court shall not substitute its judgment for that of the administrative law judge as to the weight of the evidence on any disputed finding of fact. The court shall, however, set aside the final order of the administrative law judge or remand the case to the administrative law judge, if it finds that the final order depends on any finding of fact that is not supported by competent substantial evidence in the record of the proceeding.

120.69 Enforcement of agency action.—

(1) Except as otherwise provided by statute:

(a) Any agency may seek enforcement of an action by filing a petition for enforcement, as provided in this section, in the circuit court where the subject matter of the enforcement is located.

(b) A petition for enforcement of any agency action may be filed by any substantially interested person who is a resident of the state. However, no such action may be commenced:

1. Prior to 60 days after the petitioner has given notice of the violation of the agency action to the head of the agency concerned, the Attorney General, and any alleged violator of the agency action.

2. If an agency has filed, and is diligently prosecuting, a petition for enforcement.

(c) A petition for enforcement filed by a nongovernmental person shall be in the name of the State of Florida on the relation of the petitioner, and the doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel shall apply.

(d) In an action brought under paragraph (b), the agency whose action is sought to be enforced, if not a party, may intervene as a matter of right.

(2) A petition for enforcement may request declaratory relief; temporary or permanent equitable relief; any fine, forfeiture, penalty, or other remedy provided by statute; any combination of the foregoing; or, in the absence of any other specific statutory authority, a fine not to exceed $1,000.

(3) After the court has rendered judgment on a petition for enforcement, no other petition shall be filed or adjudicated against the same agency action, on the basis of the same transaction or occurrence, unless expressly authorized on remand. The doctrines of res judicata and collateral estoppel shall apply, and the court shall make such orders as are necessary to avoid multiplicity of actions.

(4) In all enforcement proceedings:

(a) If enforcement depends on any facts other than those appearing in the record, the court may ascertain such facts under procedures set forth in s. 120.68(7)(a).

(b) If one or more petitions for enforcement and a petition for review involving the same agency action are pending at the same time, the court considering the review petition may order all such actions transferred to and consolidated in one court. Each party shall be under an affirmative duty to notify the court when it becomes aware of multiple proceedings.

(c) Should any party willfully fail to comply with an order of the court, the court shall punish that party in accordance with the law applicable to contempt committed by a person in the trial of any other action.

(5) In any enforcement proceeding the respondent may assert as a defense the invalidity of any relevant statute, the inapplicability of the administrative determination to respondent, compliance by the respondent, the inappropriateness of the remedy sought by the agency, or any combination of the foregoing. In addition, if the petition for enforcement is filed during the time within which the respondent could petition for judicial review of the agency action, the respondent may assert the invalidity of the agency action.

(6) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, upon receipt of evidence that an alleged violation of an agency's action presents an imminent and substantial threat to the public health, safety, or welfare, the agency may bring suit for immediate temporary relief in an appropriate circuit court, and the granting of such temporary relief shall not have res judicata or collateral estoppel effect as to further relief sought under a petition for enforcement relating to the same violation.

(7) In any final order on a petition for enforcement the court may award to the prevailing party all or part of the costs of litigation and reasonable attorney's fees and expert witness fees, whenever the court determines that such an award is appropriate.

120.695 Notice of noncompliance; designation of minor violation of rules.—

(1) It is the policy of the state that the purpose of regulation is to protect the public by attaining compliance with the policies established by the Legislature. Fines and other penalties may be provided in order to assure compliance; however, the collection of fines and the imposition of penalties are intended to be secondary to the primary goal of attaining compliance with an agency's rules. It is the intent of the Legislature that an agency charged with enforcing rules shall issue a notice of noncompliance as its first response to a minor violation of a rule in any instance in which it is reasonable to assume that the violator was unaware of the rule or unclear as to how to comply with it.

(2)(a) Each agency shall issue a notice of noncompliance as a first response to a minor violation of a rule. A "notice of noncompliance" is a notification by the agency charged with enforcing the rule issued to the person or business subject to the rule. A notice of noncompliance may not be accompanied with a fine or other disciplinary penalty. It must identify the specific rule that is being violated, provide information on how to comply with the rule, and specify a reasonable time for the violator to comply with the rule. A rule is agency action that regulates a business, occupation, or profession, or regulates a person operating a business, occupation, or profession, and that, if not complied with, may result in a disciplinary penalty.

(b) Each agency shall review all of its rules and designate those for which a violation would be a minor violation and for which a notice of noncompliance must be the first enforcement action taken against a person or business subject to regulation. A violation of a rule is a minor violation if it does not result in economic or physical harm to a person or adversely affect the public health, safety, or welfare or create a significant threat of such harm.

(c)1. No later than June 30, 2017, and after such date within 3 months after any request of the rules ombudsman in the Executive Office of the Governor, each agency shall review its rules and certify to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the committee, and the rules ombudsman those rules that have been designated as rules the violation of which would be a minor violation under paragraph (b), consistent with the legislative intent stated in subsection (1).

2. Beginning July 1, 2017, each agency shall:

a. Publish all rules that the agency has designated as rules the violation of which would be a minor violation, either as a complete list on the agency's website or by incorporation of the designations in the agency's disciplinary guidelines adopted as a rule.

b. Ensure that all investigative and enforcement personnel are knowledgeable about the agency's designations under this section.

3. For each rule filed for adoption, the agency head shall certify whether any part of the rule is designated as a rule the violation of which would be a minor violation and shall update the listing required by sub-subparagraph 2.a.

(d) The Governor or the Governor and Cabinet, as appropriate, may evaluate the review and designation effects of each agency subject to the direction and supervision of such authority and may direct a different designation than that applied by such agency.

(e) Notwithstanding s. 120.52(1)(a), this section does not apply to:

1. The Department of Corrections;
2. Educational units;
3. The regulation of law enforcement personnel; or
4. The regulation of teachers.

(f) Designation pursuant to this section is not subject to challenge under this chapter.

History.—s. 1, ch. 95-402; s. 6, ch. 2016-116.

120.72 Legislative intent; references to chapter 120 or portions thereof.—

Unless expressly provided otherwise, a reference in any section of the Florida Statutes to chapter 120 or to any section or sections or portion of a section of chapter 120 includes, and shall be understood as including, all subsequent amendments to chapter 120 or to the referenced section or sections or portions of a section.

120.73 Circuit court proceedings; declaratory judgments.—

Nothing in this chapter shall be construed to repeal any provision of the Florida Statutes which grants the right to a proceeding in the circuit court in lieu of an administrative hearing or to divest the circuit courts of jurisdiction to render declaratory judgments under the provisions of chapter 86.

120.74 Agency annual rulemaking and regulatory plans; reports.—

(1) REGULATORY PLAN.—By October 1 of each year, each agency shall prepare a regulatory plan.

(a) The plan must include a listing of each law enacted or amended during the previous 12 months which creates or modifies the duties or authority of the agency. If the Governor or the Attorney General provides a letter to the committee stating that a law affects all or most agencies, the agency may exclude the law from its plan. For each law listed by an agency under this paragraph, the plan must state:

1. Whether the agency must adopt rules to implement the law.

2. If rulemaking is necessary to implement the law:

a. Whether a notice of rule development has been published and, if so, the citation to such notice in the Florida Administrative Register.

b. The date by which the agency expects to publish the notice of proposed rule under s. 120.54(3)(a).

3. If rulemaking is not necessary to implement the law, a concise written explanation of the reasons why the law may be implemented without rulemaking.

(b) The plan must also include a listing of each law not otherwise listed pursuant to paragraph (a) which the agency expects to implement by rulemaking before the following July 1, except emergency rulemaking. For each law listed under this paragraph, the plan must state whether the rulemaking is intended to simplify, clarify, increase efficiency, improve coordination with other agencies, reduce regulatory costs, or delete obsolete, unnecessary, or redundant rules.

(c) The plan must include any desired update to the prior year's regulatory plan or supplement published pursuant to subsection (7). If, in a prior year, a law was identified under this paragraph or under subparagraph (a)1. as a law requiring rulemaking to implement but a notice of proposed rule has not been published:

1. The agency shall identify and again list such law, noting the applicable notice of rule development by citation to the Florida Administrative Register; or

2. If the agency has subsequently determined that rulemaking is not necessary to implement the law, the agency shall identify such law, reference the citation to the applicable notice of rule development in the Florida Administrative Register, and provide a concise written explanation of the reason why the law may be implemented without rulemaking.

(d) The plan must include a certification executed on behalf of the agency by both the agency head, or, if the agency head is a collegial body, the presiding officer; and the individual acting as principal legal advisor to the agency head. The certification must:

1. Verify that the persons executing the certification have reviewed the plan.

2. Verify that the agency regularly reviews all of its rules and identify the period during which all rules have most recently been reviewed to determine if the rules remain consistent with the agency's rulemaking authority and the laws implemented.

(2) PUBLICATION AND DELIVERY TO THE COMMITTEE.—

(a) By October 1 of each year, each agency shall:

1. Publish its regulatory plan on its website or on another state website established for publication of administrative law records. A clearly labeled hyperlink to the current plan must be included on the agency's primary website homepage.

2. Electronically deliver to the committee a copy of the certification required in paragraph (1)(d).

3. Publish in the Florida Administrative Register a notice identifying the date of publication of the agency's regulatory plan. The notice must include a hyperlink or website address providing direct access to the published plan.

(b) To satisfy the requirements of paragraph (a), a board established under s. 20.165(4), and any other board or commission receiving administrative support from the Department of Business and Professional Regulation, may coordinate with the Department of Business and Professional Regulation, and a board established under s. 20.43(3)(g) may coordinate with the Department of Health, for inclusion of the board's or commission's plan and notice of publication in the coordinating department's plan and notice and for the delivery of the required documentation to the committee.

(c) A regulatory plan prepared under subsection (1) and any regulatory plan published under this chapter before July 1, 2014, shall be maintained at an active website for 10 years after the date of initial publication on the agency's website or another state website.

(3) DEPARTMENT REVIEW OF BOARD PLAN.—By October 15 of each year:

(a) For each board established under s. 20.165(4) and any other board or commission receiving administrative support from the Department of Business and Professional Regulation, the Department of Business and Professional Regulation shall file with the committee a certification that the department has reviewed each board's and commission's regulatory plan. A certification may relate to more than one board or commission.

(b) For each board established under s. 20.43(3)(g), the Department of Health shall file with the committee a certification that the department has reviewed the board's regulatory plan. A certification may relate to more than one board.

(4) DEADLINE FOR RULE DEVELOPMENT.—By November 1 of each year, each agency shall publish a notice of rule development under s. 120.54(2) for each law identified in the agency's regulatory plan pursuant to subparagraph (1)(a)1. for which rulemaking is necessary to implement but for which the agency did not report the publication of a notice of rule development under subparagraph (1)(a)2.

(5) DEADLINE TO PUBLISH PROPOSED RULE. For each law for which implementing rulemaking is necessary as identified in the agency's plan pursuant to subparagraph (1)(a)1. or subparagraph (1)(c)1., the agency shall publish a notice of proposed rule pursuant to s. 120.54(3)(a) by April 1 of the year following the deadline for the regulatory plan. This deadline may be extended if the agency publishes a notice of extension in the Florida Administrative Register identifying each rulemaking proceeding for which an extension is being noticed by citation to the applicable notice of rule development as published in the Florida Administrative Register. The agency shall include a concise statement in the notice of extension identifying any issues that are causing the delay in rulemaking. An extension shall expire on October 1 after the April 1 deadline, provided that the regulatory plan due on October 1 may further extend the rulemaking proceeding by identification pursuant to subparagraph (1)(c)1. or conclude the rulemaking proceeding by identification pursuant to subparagraph (1)(c)2. A published regulatory plan may be corrected at any time to accomplish the purpose of extending or concluding an affected rulemaking proceeding and is deemed corrected as of the October 1 due date. Upon publication of a correction, the agency shall publish in the Florida Administrative Register a notice of the date of the correction identifying the affected rulemaking proceeding by applicable citation to the Florida Administrative Register.

(6) CERTIFICATIONS.—Each agency shall file a certification with the committee upon compliance with subsection (4) and upon filing a notice under subsection (5) of either a deadline extension or a regulatory plan correction. A certification may relate to more than one notice or contemporaneous act. The date or dates of compliance shall be noted in each certification.

(7) SUPPLEMENTING THE REGULATORY PLAN. After publication of the regulatory plan, the agency shall supplement the plan within 30 days after a bill becomes a law if the law is enacted before the next regular session of the Legislature and the law substantively modifies the agency's specifically delegated legal duties, unless the law affects all or most state agencies as identified by letter to the committee from the Governor or the Attorney General. The supplement must include the information required in paragraph (1)(a) and shall be published as required in subsection (2), but no certification or delivery to the committee is required. The agency shall publish in the Florida Administrative Register notice of publication of the supplement, and include a hyperlink on its website or web address for direct access to the published supplement. For each law reported in the supplement, if rulemaking is necessary to implement the law, the agency shall publish a notice of rule development by the later of the date provided in subsection (4) or 60 days after the bill becomes a law, and a notice of proposed rule shall be published by the later of the date provided in subsection (5) or 120 days after the bill becomes a law. The proposed rule deadline may be extended to the following October 1 by notice as provided in subsection (5). If such proposed rule has not been filed by October 1, a law included in a supplement shall also be included in the next annual plan pursuant to subsection (1).

(8) FAILURE TO COMPLY.—If an agency fails to comply with a requirement of paragraph (2)(a) or subsection (5), within 15 days after written demand from the committee or from the chair of any other legislative committee, the agency shall deliver a written explanation of the reasons for noncompliance to the committee, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the chair of any legislative committee requesting the explanation of the reasons for noncompliance.

(9) EDUCATIONAL UNITS.—This section does not apply to educational units.

(b) Workers' compensation.—Notwithstanding s. 120.52(1), a judge of compensation claims, in adjudicating matters under chapter 440, is not an agency or part of an agency for purposes of this chapter.

(2) DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND CONSUMER SERVICES.—

(b) Notwithstanding s. 120.57(1)(a), hearings held by the Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services pursuant to chapter 601 need not be conducted by an administrative law judge assigned by the division.

1.a. The Office of Financial Regulation of the Financial Services Commission shall have published in the Florida Administrative Register notice of the application within 21 days after receipt.

b. Within 21 days after publication of notice, any person may request a hearing. Failure to request a hearing within 21 days after notice constitutes a waiver of any right to a hearing. The Office of Financial Regulation or an applicant may request a hearing at any time prior to the issuance of a final order. Subject: KILL HB 1

Elected Representative,

I am contacting you today to urge you to OPPOSE HB1, the Combatting Violence, Disorder and Looting Law Enforcement Protection Act. There are already laws in place regarding violence, disorder and looting which do not infringe on the due process protections of protesters.

I was very concerned with the vote to push this bill through the Criminal Justice Subcommittee on 01/27/21, despite the overwhelming majority of commenters expressing opposition. It is as though our representatives are not representing the voice of their constituents, rather, attempting to fulfill their personal political agendas instead.

This bill will not stop assemblies, but it will fill more prisons; crowded prisons already at the mercy of covid-19, killing inmates and officers. Creating more felons is not the way to a better Florida.

In Florida, we had historic marches and businesses were not burned. In fact, many business owners supported the actions either financially, through goods and services, or by joining themselves, proud to make history. Protests brought communities across Florida together all summer, however, a bill like this will create an extra layer of fear and division.

It was shocking to see comments dismissed regarding the unclear 'mob intimidation' language, as well as the possibility that these restrictions would be used mainly to target communities of color protesting against police killings.

The response was that this is not the 'intent' of the bill, and that there are always some that can abuse any law; "bad apples." This is concerning to me as a citizen because our lawmakers should care if even one American's freedom is jeopardized. A law that can be manipulated to target innocent people is an unjust law, and that concern should not be brushed off. Giving bad apples more tools to exercise bad judgement is unnecessary.

The fact is, this bill language was drafted prior to the Capitol siege and targeted towards civil rights protesters, many of whom were proven innocent. We cannot ignore the hundreds of citizens, including the Tallahassee 19 and the over 70 protesters in Jacksonville, who were falsely targeted and arrested last summer. The police were wrong in their assessment, so it is very valid for people to not want more reasons for law enforcement to be 'on alert'.

As a concerned Floridian, I am asking you to not allow fear and chaos to influence a hasty decision which could jeopardize the freedom of honest Americans. Please VOTE NO on HB1/SB484.

Thank you

Kimberly Simon,

I am writing to you to ask you to please OPPOSE HB1 at the House Justice Appropriations meeting when it is scheduled for a hearing. I am outraged that this legislation even got assigned to a public hearing must less that it has been fast-tracked through the House on party lines. Florida currently faces the worst economic and public health crisis in history and instead of working to find solutions HB1 criminalizes free speech, peaceful assembly and dissent through unconstitutional language that is targeted at silencing Black voices demanding basic human rights, equality, and fair treatment by law enforcement.

Instead of addressing the horrendous housing crisis, the broken unemployment system, the failing healthcare system, the disorganized and chaotic education system, AND the rising number of deaths, poverty, job loss and sickness in Florida HB1 repackages legislation put forward by Governor DeSantis as a "response to the violent insurrectionist mobs" that attempted a coup on the nation's Capitol. This language is a smokescreen for the true intent of the bill which is to circumvent the mess that Florida has as a consequence of the pandemic and lack of support for Florida's poverty impacted and oppressed. I am not fooled by this. This is the same legislation it was back in September with the same purpose - to limit the basic civil rights of BLM protestors that is guaranteed to all people under the US Constitution.

I believe that HB1 is being used to distract media and organizers from focusing on the real problem: lack of support for those in need across the state. How dare the Governor and the Florida Legislature waste taxpayer time and money on proposing solutions to a made up problem. Section 870 of the Florida Statute already criminalizes riots, unlawful assemblies, and looting but this legislation would actually make it legal for motorists who strike protestors with their vehicle, even if the incident results in someone's death. It limits people's ability to apply to Florida's already broken unemployment system if they have been convicted under the proposed legislation and allows victims of violent crimes to recover civil damages from a local government that is deems responsible for grossly negligent "policing" during a "riot". Meanwhile, the Florida Legislature is fast-tracking HB7/SB72 to create COVID19 liability immunity for the real victims of negligence by businesses, government agencies, schools, and religious organizations who have caused the spread of COVID19.

The Executive Director of the ACLU of Florida, Micah Kubic, stated that "This (bill) is not an attempt to make our communities safer. This proposed legislation by DeSantis is nothing more than a campaign political stunt. Now, it is being disguised as a response to the failed violent coup at the US Capitol. And, it is just as unconstitutional."

A statewide survey of Florida voters put out after the attack by Donald Trump's supporters on the US Capitol suggested a lack of support for HB1 and Governor DeSantis' push to amp up criminal penalties for "disorderly" protests. Ninety-percent of those asked stated their support for "protecting our constitutional right to free assembly and free speech by legally protesting without fear of criminal charges". Seventy-one percent of Democrats and 74% of Republicans deemed the issue a top priority. Eighty percent of respondents said they were more likely to support a legislator who voted to protect that priority, and 56% were "much more likely". On the other hand, 83% of respondents thought that it was important to strengthen unemployment protections for people who lost their jobs because of COVID-19, 63% said that this was "very important". (1)

Finally, this legislation also creates a preemptive attack on local municipalities that might want to "defund" the police and put their money towards more humanitarian initiatives to provide real solutions to small business and economic crises caused by the pandemic. Instead of restricting local government's ability to find solutions we need legislation that answers the call of the people in the streets. People only protest when they are being abused, oppressed, marginalized or violated. It's time the House Justice Appropriations Subcommittee address the calls of Florida voters and people who cared enough to peacefully assemble. We need to face the issues head on and answer to the humanity and dignity of working class, black, brown, and immigrant families in Florida who are suffering with workable policies that help the state grow and prosper.

If this legislation passes I will be letting people know that they should not travel in Florida, they should not move to Florida, they should not visit Florida, because our government does not support them and keep them safe. Public health and the economy should be your number one priority. Please OPPOSE HB1 and support legislation that provides real solutions to the real problems Floridians face today.

- And now I'd like to introduce Wayne Gaither, our Director of the Southwest Area Office, to walk you through how FDOT and District One work hard every day to innovate and exceed the expectations of all Floridians.

Thank you L.K. Today we will be talking about the Florida Department of Transportation, which we also call FDOT or the Department. FDOT serves under the office of the Governor. Its primary statutory mandate is to coordinate the planning and development of a safe, viable, and balanced state transportation system serving all regions of the state, and to assure the compatibility of all components, including multimodal facilities. A multimodal transportation system combines two or more modes of movement of people or goods. Florida's transportation system includes roadway, air, rail, sea, spaceports, bus transit, and bicycle and pedestrian facilities.

In developing the state's transportation network, FDOT works with its transportation partners at the local, regional, and federal level to ensure the system is a fully integrated multimodal network moving people and goods safely and efficiently.

While the Department's highest priorities are safety and system preservation, we also place great emphasis on developing the system to enhance economic prosperity and preserve the quality of our environment and communities.

The slide features the FDOT logo (Florida Department of Transportation) in the top left corner. To the right of the logo, the text "Florida Department of TRANSPORTATION" is displayed. Further right, the title "Mission & Vision" is written in red. The slide is framed by a blue border. The main content is centered and includes two sections: "Our Mission" and "Our Vision", both underlined in red. The mission statement reads: "The department will provide a safe transportation system that ensures the mobility of people and goods, enhances economic prosperity and preserves the quality of our environment and communities." The vision statement reads: "As one FDOT team, we serve the people of Florida by providing a transportation network that is well planned, supports economic growth, and has the goal of being congestion and fatality free."

Mission & Vision

Our Mission

The department will provide a safe transportation system that ensures the mobility of people and goods, enhances economic prosperity and preserves the quality of our environment and communities.

Our Vision

As one FDOT team, we serve the people of Florida by providing a transportation network that is well planned, supports economic growth, and has the goal of being congestion and fatality free.

FDOT is a decentralized agency and is comprised of seven districts and the Florida Turnpike Enterprise.

We are also a highly privatized organization. Even before the current era of “public-private partnerships” or P3’s, FDOT was actively partnering with the private sector to achieve its core mission. While 100 percent of construction projects are contracted to the private sector, FDOT has also aggressively expanded private sector participation in other areas such as planning, design, construction inspection, and maintenance.

FDOT Secretary Kevin J. Thibault

Kevin J. Thibault was named Secretary of the FDOT by Governor Ron DeSantis. As Secretary, Thibault oversees the planning and development of a safe, viable, and balanced transportation system serving all regions of the state, and to assure the compatibility of all components, including multimodal facilities.

Secretary Thibault has focused the agency on implementing his "Vital Few" initiative, which places priority on:

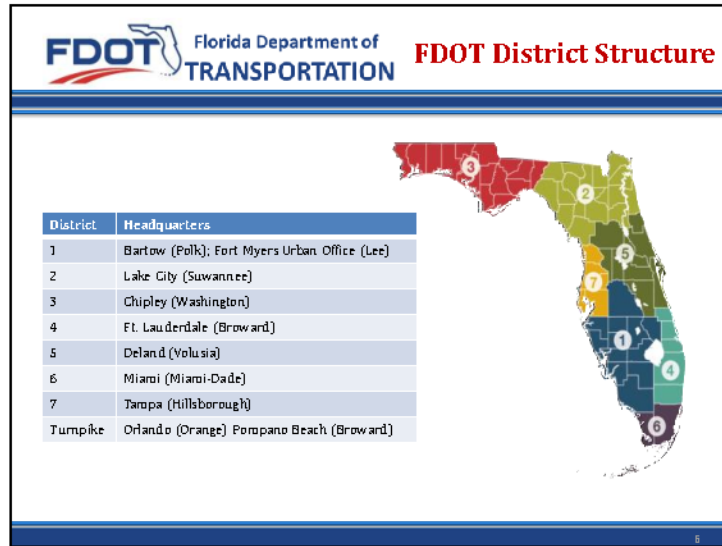

- Improving safety
- Enhancing mobility
- Inspiring innovation
- Fostering talent

FDOT is led by Secretary Kevin J. Thibault.

He was named the Secretary of the Florida Department of Transportation by Governor DeSantis in January of 2018.

Secretary Thibault has 30 years of experience in the transportation field split between the private sector and various roles within FDOT ranging from project management to executive leadership.

He has consistently remained focused on the importance of partnerships to deliver the transportation needs of the state.

- Our District Offices are charged with managing the daily operations of the Department and are the lead in the work program development process
- District Offices are led by a District Secretary who is appointed by the Department Secretary
- The District offices coordinate with the Assistant Secretary of Engineering and Operations concerning day-to-day workflow
- As a part of the Department’s Executive Management Team, District Secretaries provide critical regional/geographic representation and invaluable project management experience

FDOT District One Secretary L.K. Nandam

L. K. Nandam is the District Secretary for FDOT District One. He has extensive experience in the transportation industry in both the private and public sector.

He is a registered professional engineer in the State of Florida and is an active member of the Institute of Transportation Engineers.

Phone: (863) 519-2201

- District One is led by Secretary LK Nandam, who has over two decades of leadership in the fields of engineering and transportation
- LK's vision for the District over his first four years as Secretary has been to ensure the we work together internally and with our partners to move the needle on Secretary Thibault's Vital Few initiative, which focuses on improving safety, enhancing mobility, embracing innovation, and forwarding the attraction, retention, and training of the FDOT workforce.
- His priorities and focus are on ensuring our communities succeed through our collaborative partnerships, promoting the completion of projects that bring about a safer and more efficient transportation system
- Thanks to his tireless work on the subject, LK was selected as Florida's Statewide Champion for Pedestrian and Bicyclists Safety

Our leadership team has over a century of experience in transportation and proactively guides our district to exceed the expectations of our residents every day.

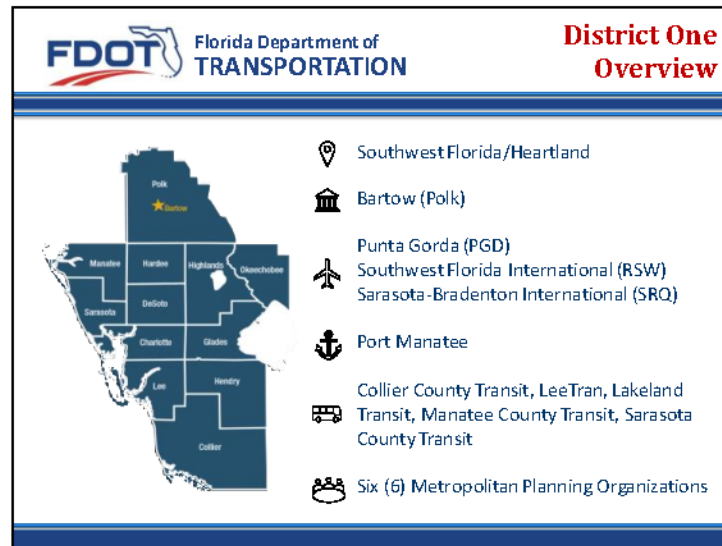

- As you know, I'm Wayne Gaither, Director of the Southwest Area Office -- which we'll discuss in a little more detail in our next slide -- and I bring 23 years of experience in various planning disciplines with 10 years of service directly related at the Metropolitan Planning Organization level. I've work in city and county governments as a comprehensive planner and came to FDOT after working with Lee County Transit as a Principal Planner
- Our longtime communications manager, Zac Burch, has recently left the district. This position is the primary point of contact for our legislative elected officials.
  - While we search for the next head of our public information office, I will act as the interim District One, government liaison
- John Kubler, our Director of Transportation Development, has more than thirty-five years of experience in the transportation industry and has served for more than 28 years in various positions within the FDOT
- Keith Slater, Director of Transportation Operations, has over 27 years of experience working with the Department, which includes Traffic Operations, Design, Project Management, PD&E and Construction
- Lori Albritton, our Transportation Support Manager, has been with FDOT for 22 years, holding positions in Facilities Management, Financial Services, Operational Management and Development

The Southwest Area Office, also known as the SWAO is established by Florida Statute. District One created the Urban Office to meet responsibilities such as the 5-year Transportation Plan for Charlotte, Collier, DeSoto, Glades, Hendry, and Lee Counties. Additionally, the SWAO provides policy, direction, and coordinates with local governments.

Several key positions are housed at this office, including: Traffic Operations, Transit, Community Liaisons, and the Communications Office. Three new planning positions are also being added to the Southwest Area Office team.

The District One Regional Traffic Management Center -- known as the RTMC -- is also housed here. This RTMC is operational 24/7/365 to monitor traffic and report incidents on I-75 in southwest Florida.

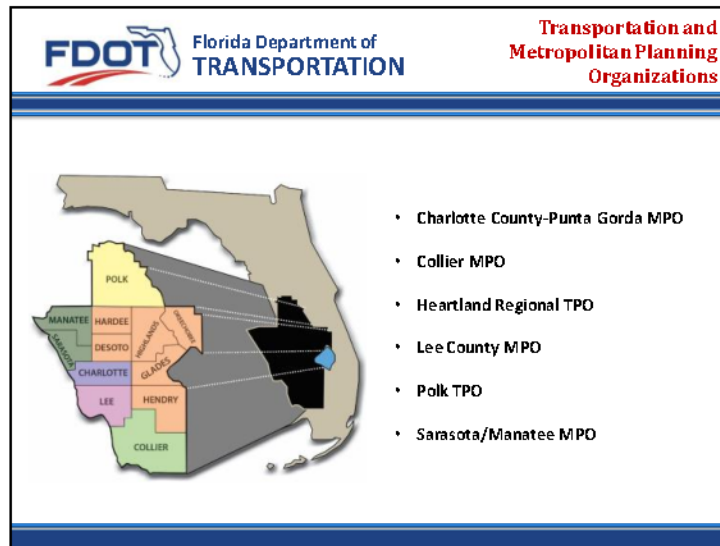

- District one is nearly 12,000 square miles
- Comprised of 12 counties in Southwest Florida, the district's 2.7 million residents contribute to the 42 million miles traveled daily on our state's highways
- Polk County is the northern most point of the district, which flows southward along US 41 and includes the southern portion of Florida's Gulf Coast
- Moving westward, the District's roadways are a primary component of the supply chain of Florida's Heartland, anchored by the citrus and cattle industry
- Although the District Headquarters is located in Bartow; our Southwest Area Office is located in Fort Myers to assist with the transportation planning efforts of the growing Southwest Florida region
- District One, Modal Development administers State and Federally-funded public transit and paratransit programs that provide capital and operating assistance to seven transit systems in urban areas and to seven recipient agencies for rural public transit services in ten counties; capital equipment and operating assistance for transportation of seniors and people with disabilities throughout the District; transit planning funds for Metropolitan Planning Organizations; mobility management funding for regional Heartland Rural Mobility Plan-related development of rural transit and cross-state transit services; Commuter Assistance Project including marketing and promotion of commuter mode choices; vanpool development and support; discretionary grants for transit corridor projects, new public transportation services, intermodal transfer centers, technology innovation, and provides technical assistance

- The District has one deep-water seaport in operation which is also a SIS hub, which receives state grant funds from the Seaports and Intermodal programs. District One is served by 5 Railroad Companies (CSX, Evansville Western Railway, Fla Midland, South Central Fla Express, Seminole Gulf Railway), 2 excursion trains (Murder Mystery Seminole Gulf and Florida Railroad in Parrish)
- The District now has one true intermodal logistics center called Central Florida Intermodal Logistics Center with freight movements by Rail (CSX & Evansville Western Railway) and Truck located in Winter Haven, Florida. Most of the Rail lines are either designated "Strategic Intermodal System" or an "Emerging Strategic Intermodal System"

- A Metropolitan Planning Organization, known by the acronym MPO, is a federally mandated and federally-funded transportation policy-making organization that is made up of representatives from local government and transportation providers. Congress created MPOs in order to ensure that existing and future expenditures of governmental funds for transportation projects and programs are based on a continuing, cooperative, and comprehensive (“3-C”) planning process
- MPOs in our district are: Charlotte County-Punta Gorda MPO, Collier MPO, Lee County MPO, Sarasota/Manatee MPO
- Created by federal law and Florida Statutes, Transportation Planning Organizations (TPO) exist to provide regional coordination of transportation investments, while ensuring that the public, especially those traditionally underserved by the transportation system, have opportunities to participate in the decision-making process
- TPOs in our district are: Heartland Regional TPO, Polk TPO

Two of the partners we work with to help guide our organization are the Florida Transportation Commission and the Florida Commission for the Transportation Disadvantaged. Although each commission is autonomous, they both work alongside FDOT, providing support as needed.

Florida Transportation Commission

- Serves as a citizen's oversight board for the FDOT, Florida's expressway authorities, and regional transportation authorities
- Commissioners are appointed by the Governor and confirmed by the Florida Senate for 4-year-terms
- Prohibited from involvement in day-to-day operations of FDOT

Transportation Disadvantaged Commission

- Coordinates and assures cost-provision of transportation for the needs of the transportation disadvantaged
- Collaborates with local coordinating boards, community transportation coordinators, MPOs and Designated Official Planning Agencies (DOPA) to achieve goals
- Meets quarterly across the state to discuss implementation, initiatives, and planning efforts

FDOT Florida Department of TRANSPORTATION

Financing
Methodology

- Multi-year transportation projects start before the total amount of cash is available to fund the entire project
- Future revenues pay for a project as actual expenditures occur
- The finance plan and cash forecast are used to measure and evaluate the anticipated future revenues against total planned project commitments

FDOT is the only state agency in Florida that operates this way

FDOT is the only state agency operating on a “cash flow” basis, which maximizes available revenue

- That means, for most transportation projects in Florida, the Department contracts for a project phase before the total amount of cash is available to fund the commitment
- The Department anticipates future revenues that will be available to finance current projects in much the same way that a family anticipates future earnings to pay for a mortgage
- Other Florida agencies require the entire contract amount to be on hand in the same year work begins. Changes in revenues can have a significant impact on the five-year work program.

FDOT Adopted Work Program is funded primarily with federal and state funds

- Federal funds make up approximately 25 percent of the Department’s funding sources
- The primary source of these funds is the federal motor fuel tax
- State funds, tolls and bond revenues make up the remaining 75 percent of the funding sources

Work Program 101

A five-year plan of transportation projects as defined in section s. 339.135, F.S.

- Developed in partnership with communities, metropolitan planning organizations, local governments, state and federal agencies, modal partners and regional entities
- Projects must be consistent with laws, policies, program objectives and priorities

The diagram, titled 'WORK PROGRAM OVERVIEW', illustrates the process from local priorities to implementation. It shows a flow from 'PRIORITY LIST' through 'STIP' (Statewide Transportation Improvement Program) to 'WORK PROGRAM' and finally to 'IMPLEMENTATION'. The diagram includes icons for 'TIP' (Metropolitan Planning Organization) and 'STIP' (Statewide Transportation Improvement Program) and shows a timeline of projects from 2021 to 2025.

- Transportation Planning begins at the local level through a priority setting process with a Metropolitan Planning Organization or Local Government in a Non-MPO area comprised of local leaders who submit local and regional priorities to the Department for funding consideration
- There are currently 27 MPO's in Florida, six of which are in District One
- This process takes into account local and regional mobility, economic condition and impacts to the area
- Priorities are then submitted to the Department for inclusion into the FDOT Work Program

FDOT is one of the few state agencies with a multi-year capital plan known as the five-year work program. The work program is complex and allows for projects to be financed through multiple phases over several years. The process in which a project moves from being an idea or a need to implementation is unique and must ensure improvements and investments function as part of the integrated and connected transportation system. FDOT's work program includes transportation projects at every stage of development – from initial planning to design, to construction to maintenance, and operations.

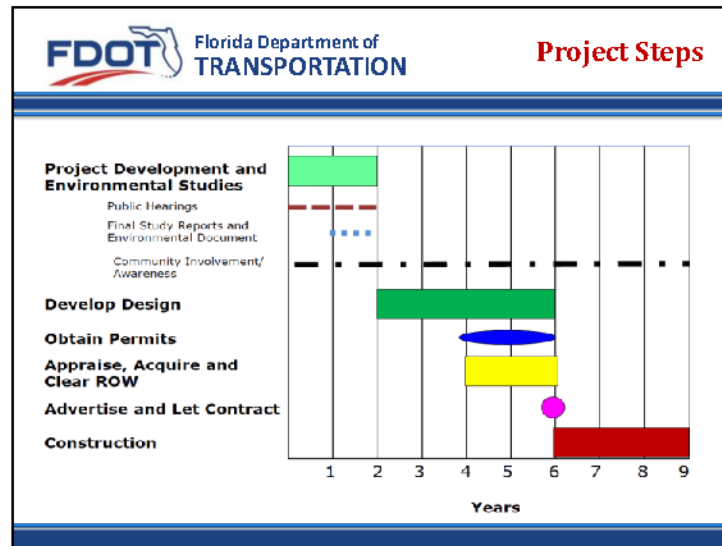

The life cycle of a transportation project begins at the local level through the long-range planning process:

- This process allows communities to self-identify short and long-term transportation needs in coordination with FDOT
- When a project is identified, a Project Development and Environment Study is performed to address potential project locations and forecasted impacts. The final project design will determine the necessary right of way, or land, that may be required for the project to be constructed
- Upon receipt of any necessary permits, a project will move into the construction phase
- Upon completion, FDOT routinely monitors the project and schedules any necessary work to preserve the investment

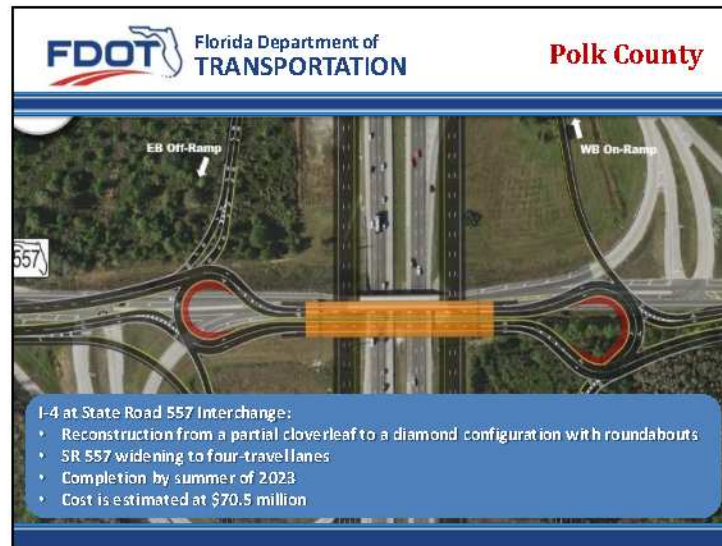

- The Maintenance Office keep up state rights of way to include roadways, bridges, and roadsides
- Routine maintenance activities include pavement preservation, inspection and rehabilitation of bridges, roadside mowing, litter removal, shoulder repairs, drainage system cleaning/inspection/repair, refurbishing signs and pavement markings
- We also support law enforcement as needed with traffic incident management
- The Department conducts 90 percent of our maintenance using contractors:
  - In some regions, we contract all of our State roadway maintenance to an Asset Maintenance Contractor who functions as an extension of our staff and provide service: I-75, I-275, I-4 and within Collier County, Charlotte County, NE Polk County, and Okeechobee County
- Local communities wishing to provide enhanced maintenance beyond FDOT's contracts may do so through agreements with District One
  - These services may include mowing, edging, litter removal, and highway lighting maintenance

There are many steps to deliver transportation infrastructure with each step representing a different funding budget category:

- As previously noted, the (PD&E) study is performed to address potential project locations and forecasted impacts. This process includes public hearings and facilitates community involvement/awareness throughout the entire project life cycle
- We then move into Design which includes permitting
- After this, acquisitions and clearing of Right of Way (ROW) takes place
- Next is advertising and letting of the contract all before construction begins
- Construction begins after project development phases have been completed and after funding is identified. Typical Project Construction will last between 1 ½ and 3 ½ years
- Lastly, although not included on this chart, is maintenance. Maintaining our investments is a top priority of the Department
- NOTE: System Preservation is funded first to ensure our existing facilities meet our maintenance standards for the traveling public

We have several projects we are excited about in District One, however these are a few that have garnered much attention.

We are reconstructing the existing I-4 at SR 557 interchange from a partial cloverleaf to a diamond configuration. As part of this work, we will widen SR 557 to four-travel lanes, two in each direction, within state right-of-way. Roundabouts will also be constructed on SR 557 at the I-4 on-ramp and off-ramp terminals to facility safe and efficient traffic flow.

Safety & Mobility enhancements include:

- Improve traffic circulation
- Enhance safety, emergency access, and truck access in Polk County

The anticipated completion for this project is summer of 2023 at an estimated cost of $70.5 million.

Construction of a roundabout has begun at SR 64 and Greyhawk Boulevard/Pope Road in Manatee County, which includes installing pedestrian activated crossings and adding lighting and landscaping.

Safety & Mobility enhancements include:

- Safety improvement for left turning vehicles
- Intersection efficiencies
- Speed Management for SR 64
- Shared Used Paths and buffered bike lanes

We estimate completion in the fall of 2021, at a cost of $4.8 million.

This design-build project widens I-75 and will provide for an eight-lane divided roadway. It will include auxiliary lanes between US 301 and SR 64 and reconstruct the I-75 at US 301 Interchange. New bridges will also be constructed over the Manatee River for a northbound exit ramp and a southbound entrance ramp which mitigates the backups of traffic onto the interstate mainline.

Safety & Mobility enhancements include:

- Improved traffic flow
- Potentially extends the acceptable level of service for I-75 well beyond 2050

Construction is anticipated to commence in the summer of 2021 and take approximately four years to complete. The project is estimated at $142 million.

We will widen River Road from north of US 41 to south of I-75 in Sarasota County starting in October of 2021. This project widens to a four-lane divided highway from Center Road to I-75 and then further expands to six lanes from US 41 to Center Road.

Safety & Mobility enhancements include:

- Raised median improves safety of the corridor
- Raise profile of the road to reduce flooding
- Improvements facilitate hurricane evacuation

We plan for completion of this project in the fall of 2025 at an estimated cost of just over $65 million, with $24 million of the cost paid for by our partnership with Sarasota County and the City of North Port.

This project widens SR 82 from Gator Slough Lane to SR 29 in Collier County from a two-lane undivided highway to a four-lane divided roadway.

The intersection at SR 29 will also be changed from a stop condition with flashing beacon to a roundabout.

Safety & Mobility enhancements include:

- Roundabout will control traffic speed and improve safety for motorists
- Additional lanes will enhance traffic flow

Estimated completion is scheduled for the summer of 2022 at a projected cost of $29 million.

Construction is underway on D1's second Diverging Diamond Interchange at I-75 and Colonial Boulevard in Fort Myers.

Safety & Mobility enhancements include:

- A continuous flow intersection at the intersection of Six Mile Cypress Parkway/Ortiz Avenue
- A superstreet intersection at the Colonial Boulevard/Forum Boulevard intersection.

It is planned to be finished in the summer of 2023. Contract was awarded at $53 million.

Approximately 4.5 miles of SR 31 will be widened, resulting in the expansion from a two-lane undivided road to a four-lane divided highway.

Safety & Mobility enhancements include:

- Raising profile to reduce flooding
- Roundabouts and intentional horizontal curvature is combined with strategic landscaping that will facilitate speed management along the corridor

Construction is planned to be complete in spring of 2025 at an estimated total cost of $46.8 million.

In District One, we are constantly pushing to use the most innovative technologies and strategies to bring success to our projects. A few of these improvements include:

FRAME: Florida's Regional Advanced Mobility Elements – Installation of CAV (Connected Vehicle) technology along D1 roadways to increase safety and mobility.

CAV APPLICATIONS: Signal Phase & Timing (SPaT), Map Data Message (MAP), Traveler Information Message (TIM), Personal Safety Message (PSM), Transit Signal Priority (TSP), Emergency Vehicle Pre-emption (EVP)

Re: HB 1/SB 484 - Combating Public Disorder

Dear Lawmaker,

The right to assemble and petition our government is intrinsic to the American experience and is a right guaranteed to the people by the United States Constitution. Like the right to vote, protest is one of the tools Americans have always used to create positive change in our country.

The racial violence and protests of 2020, spurred by the senseless murder of George Floyd, marks an inflection point in our nation's history. Over the past eight months, peaceful protestors have shined a much-needed spotlight on the structural racism and white supremacy that we as a society have failed to address for too long.

Protests for civil rights, social justice, and environmental protection are the foundation of some of our most important laws. Florida Conservation Voters will always stand in solidarity with peaceful protestors who strive to create a more perfect union and healthy communities for everyone.

Therefore, we urge you to oppose HB 1/SB 484. The intent of this legislation is to silence and punish protestors. It could not be more obvious that it is a direct response to the peaceful Black Lives Matter movement. This legislation infringes on Floridians' civil rights and is an attack on our very democracy.

Much of America's history is marked by inequality, oppression, and deep-rooted structural racism. When people rise up to demand justice before their lawmakers, government bodies, and fellow Floridians those efforts must be supported, not thwarted. If passed, HB 1/SB 484 would exacerbate racial and social inequities, encourage violent vigilante justice, criminalize peaceful protest, and threaten the safety of Floridians who choose to exercise their First Amendment rights.

We envision a world with clean air and water, thriving natural areas, a sustainable and livable climate, and a just and equitable democracy. We believe that Floridians are only as safe as those members of our community who are most at risk. As an organization that works to engage people in our democracy to protect our environment and healthy communities, we have a responsibility to advocate alongside those who are harmed by racist structures and systems.

Along with our partners and allied organizations across the state, FCV opposes this latest effort to extend protection of the law to those who would perpetuate violence against peaceful protestors exercising their rights under the U.S. Constitution.

Please oppose HB 1/SB 484.

Sincerely,

Alike Moncrief

Updates from the Florida Senate

Dear friends,

Yesterday I arrived in Tallahassee for my first committee week as your state senator. We have a lot of work ahead of us and the 2021 Legislative Session is just around the corner.

Over the next few months, I will be sending regular newsletters to update you about what's happening in Tallahassee.

In this inaugural newsletter, I provide a brief overview of the upcoming week and discuss a few of the bills I've filed so far.

It is an honor to serve you in the Florida Senate.

Forward March,

Danny Burgess
State Senator
District 20

SB 494: Administration of Vaccines

On Friday I filed legislation to improve access to vaccinations for Floridians. SB 494: Administration of Vaccines would amend Florida State Statutes to allow pharmacists who meet certain requirements to administer vaccines recommended by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices to adults.

This legislation will increase the number of vaccination sites by allowing licensed and approved pharmacists to vaccinate the public at their local pharmacy.

SB 484: Combatting Public Disorder

We are a nation of law and order, not violence, destruction, and unrest. We respect the right to peacefully protest, but the shameful conduct we witnessed at the United States Capitol and episodes of violent civil unrest that we have witnessed over the last several months have no place in our country.

SB 484: Combatting Public Disorder makes it clear that here in Florida criminals who seek to thwart peaceful protests by willfully inciting violence, attacking law enforcement, and destroying public or private property will be held accountable.

SB 520: Social Media Websites

For better or for worse, social media has become a major part of our everyday life and society. First thing Monday morning, I filed SB 520: Social Media Websites.

This legislation would require social media companies to provide individual and business users notice when the website has suspended or disabled a user's account and requires the companies to detail the steps necessary to restore the account.

SB 520 signals to social media websites that regardless of a person's background, political history, religion, race, gender, or any other identifying measure, Twitter and Facebook cannot be the sole judge, jury, and executioner of Americans' First Amendment rights.

Updates from the Florida Senate

Dear friends,

Today I arrived in Tallahassee for my first committee week as your state senator. We have a lot of work ahead of us and the 2021 Legislative Session is just around the corner.

Over the next few months, I will be sending regular newsletters to update you about what's happening in Tallahassee.

In this inaugural newsletter, I provide a brief overview of the upcoming week and discuss a few of the bills I've filed so far.

It is an honor to serve you in the Florida Senate.

Forward March,

Danny Burgess
State Senator
District 20

SB 494: Administration of Vaccines

On Friday I filed legislation to improve access to vaccinations for Floridians. SB 494: Administration of Vaccines would amend Florida State Statutes to allow pharmacists who meet certain requirements to administer vaccines recommended by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices to adults.

This legislation will increase the number of vaccination sites by allowing licensed and approved pharmacists to vaccinate the public at their local pharmacy.

SB 484: Combatting Public Disorder

We are a nation of law and order, not violence, destruction, and unrest. We respect the right to peacefully protest, but the shameful conduct we witnessed at the United States Capitol and episodes of violent civil unrest that we have witnessed over the last several months have no place in our country.

SB 484: Combatting Public Disorder makes it clear that here in Florida criminals who seek to thwart peaceful protests by willfully inciting violence, attacking law enforcement, and destroying public or private property will be held accountable.

Read the statements from Governor Ron DeSantis, House Speaker Chris Sprowls, Senate President Wilton Simpson, and Representative Juan Fernandez-Barquin HERE.

SB 520: Social Media Websites

For better or for worse, social media has become a major part of our everyday life and society. First thing this morning, I filed SB 520: Social Media Websites.

This legislation would require social media companies to provide individual and business users notice when the website has suspended or disabled a user's account and requires the companies to detail the steps necessary to restore the account.

SB 520 signals to social media websites that regardless of a person's background, political history, religion, race, gender, or any other identifying measure, Twitter and Facebook cannot be the sole judge, jury, and executioner of Americans' First Amendment rights.

Hello Amol -

Thank you so much for your time and for speaking with me today regarding a meeting request with Senator Burgess.

As we discussed, Mr. Tra Williams would like to expand on the issue he discussed at the Polk County Delegates meeting last week regarding the compliance deadline to develop minimum training requirements for entry-level commercial motor vehicle operators, and how FleetForce is positioned to work with the many businesses in Polk County who will be facing the challenges that will come with this change.

We understand that Senator Burgess may be tied up with legislative session, so we will be happy to schedule a virtual meeting at his convenience. Please feel free to offer some availability for the Senator and we will work with his calendar to make it happen.

Thank you again, and it was a true pleasure speaking with you.

Hi Natalie – I'm not sure you are the correct person to contact about meeting with Sen. Burgess. I'd like to set a meeting with the Sen. regarding SB 566 by Sen. Perry. I represent Enterprise Rent a Car and we support the measure.

The Senator is on the committee where it will first be heard and I'd like to discuss it with him.

I have also attached an overview of the issue from our standpoint. I can make myself available any time. Regards, Leslie

Tax Fairness for People Renting Cars in Florida

SB 566 by Sen. Keith Perry/HB 365 by Rep. Mike Caruso

The way consumers access transportation options continue to evolve. A new business model for renting cars – called peer to peer car-sharing - has emerged in Florida. This has resulted in renters of cars being taxed differently depending upon the business they rent from – a rental car company or a peer to peer car-sharing company. These bills seek to ensure all renters of cars are treated the same.

How Peer-to-Peer (P2P) Car-Sharing Works – P2P car-sharing companies are the AirBnb of cars. They contract with private individuals to rent their cars to the public through an app. They also enter agreements with the public who wish to rent cars from their app. The person uses the car for the set amount of time, and their credit card is charged through the company when the car is returned. The person who allows the P2P company to rent out their car is paid by the company via direct deposit. The P2P company keeps between 25-30% of the rental cost.

The activities of P2P companies - taking and confirming reservations online, offering delivery service, providing products such as insurance and roadside assistance, and handling payment for the service – are the same services provided by rental car companies.

Rental Car Surcharge Law – Section 212.0606, F.S. states that “a surcharge of $2 per day or any part of a day is imposed upon the lease or rental of a motor vehicle licensed for hire and designed to carry fewer than nine passengers regardless of whether the motor vehicle is licensed in this state.”

Florida law levies the surcharge on the rental for the first 30 days of a lease or rental. Further, the state sales tax is collected on the transaction. Exceptions are made for persons with a not for profit organization and those whose car is being repaired. This fee paid by car renters was established by the Legislature in 1987 to ensure vehicles using roads help pay for building and maintaining the roads.

In 2014, the law was updated to clarify people who rent cars from a car-sharing company for less than 24 hours must pay $1 per usage plus sales tax. If that car is kept for 24 hours or more, the $2/day rental car surcharge is levied on the renter of the car.

Unfair Tax Application for Persons Renting Cars – In Florida, the $2/day rental car surcharge and sales tax on that transaction is not being collected from a person renting a car from a P2P company. State law requires renters of cars to pay a $2/day rental car surcharge and the sales tax on the transaction. P2P companies say they only connect owners and renters but state law requires the levy of the taxes on the transaction, not the business model. This creates a disparate treatment of people paying for the same service.

The Department of Revenue Calls it a “Rental Transaction” - In a March 2019 informal Letter of Advice, the Department of Revenue stated P2P companies “...are engaged in the business (i.e. an activity either direct or indirect) of renting motor vehicles for a consideration.... Any rental made through the peer to peer car-sharing program is subject to the $2.00 surcharge.” The surcharge funds the following activities in Florida:

- 80% - Local infrastructure needs through the DOT District in which the surcharge was collected;
- 15.25% - VisitFlorida operations through the Tourism Promotional Trust Fund; and,
- 4.25% - Enterprise Florida for use in its international operations.

In 2019, car renters paid more than $142 million in rental car surcharges. For 2019-20, $182 million was projected to be collected from persons renting cars from rental car companies. The emergence of COVID-19 caused a major decrease in tourism and business travel, resulting in lower collections.

Below are the funds provided to DOT districts from the rental car surcharge, based on the rentals that were generated in that District.

Florida Revenue from People Renting Cars (Rental Car Surcharge only)

Dist #	Counties in District	2018 Actual	2019 Actual	2020 Actual	2021 Projected	2022 Projected

Total		$138.4 M	$142.2 M	$128.3 M	$78.4 M	$102.0 M

Other Concerns– The unfair treatment of people who rent cars in Florida is proliferating. Research has found that Florida used car dealers, small rental car companies, and others list several cars on P2P sites, and those renters do not pay any tax. One P2P site has over 30 Florida car owners managing nine to 41 cars, and those renters are not paying sales tax or the surcharge.

Some P2P companies advertise that their cars are cheaper than those provided by rental car companies. However, recent comparison found renters of cars from P2P sites pay more even without paying the surcharge or sales tax.

Proposal – The bills sponsored by Sen. Perry and Rep. Caruso clarify the “rules of the road” and ensure people renting cars in Florida are treated the same regardless of the business model they use. The main components of the bills are:

- Tax fairness – Clarifies that all car renters pay the rental car surcharge and subsequent sales tax.
- Insurance – Following the National Council of Insurance Legislators (NCOIL) model insurance language, establishes insurance requirements for the P2P programs and car owners when making a vehicle available to rent on a P2P site. People listing cars on the site would be required to maintain the same level of insurance required of all car owners and rental car companies in Florida (10/20/10).
- Consumer Protections – Mirroring the National Council of Insurance Legislators (NCOIL) model insurance language, the bills ensure vehicles rented on P2P sites do not have open safety recalls and require peer-to-peer car sharing companies to follow certain recordkeeping requirements.

Nine states have approved legislation like what is being proposed in Florida: Colorado, Indiana, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Ohio, Tennessee, Virginia and West Virginia. Thirty states are advancing or preparing to advance legislation in 2021

Attachment(s): "The Cost of School Policing Report.pdf"

Good afternoon, Senators:

I wanted to be sure to share with you our new report, "The Cost of School Policing: What Florida's students have paid for a pretense of security," which was created in partnership with SPLC, Equality Florida, LWV of Florida, and the Florida Social Justice in Schools Project. The report analyzes the impact of the Florida Legislature's decision to mandate that every public school have an officer or security personnel onsite, and finds that the heightened presence of police officers in Florida schools in the past two years has led to an unprecedented increase in school arrests.

Below are a few salient findings:

- The presence of law enforcement was related to a greater frequency of school arrests (40-82% more at the school-level). This relationship existed at the elementary, middle and high school levels.
- The presence of law enforcement predicted greater numbers of behavioral incidents being reported to law enforcement, particularly for less severe infractions and among middle schoolers.
- There was little consistent evidence that the presence of law enforcement decreased the number of behavioral incidents occurring, indicating that school-based law enforcement were not necessarily making schools safer.
- For the first time ever, there are more police officers working in Florida schools (3,650) than school nurses (2,286).
- The number of police officers in schools is more than double the number of school social workers (1,414) and school psychologists (1,452).
- During the 2018-19 school year, the number of youth arrests at school increased 8%, while the number of youth arrested in the community continued to decline by 12%.
- The percentage of youth arrests happening at school hit a five-year high of 20%.
- The number of students expelled from school increased 43%.
- Schools reported more than four times as many incidents of using physical restraints on students.
- Police officers arrested elementary-aged kids 345 times, including an arrest of a five year old and five arrests of six-year olds, during the 2018-19 school year.

We hope this information on the financial and human costs of school policing will be useful in reconsidering the mandate of requiring police officers and armed personnel in schools. Given our current budget crisis and data showing the harmful results to our children and increase in the school-to-prison pipeline, repealing the school policing mandate would be a step in the right direction and would free up significant budgetary resources.

Please do not hesitate to contact me if you have any questions or would like any additional information. # Executive Summary

School districts across the country are reassessing the efficacy of integrating police officers into schools. This comes after many years of advocacy from impacted youth and on the heels of increased awareness of police brutality and the misuse of law enforcement for social services. Many schools are beginning to feel the impacts of COVID-19 on their budgets and are struggling to provide the minimum resources needed for education, further calling into question the appropriateness of spending scarce education dollars on policing. Despite this, some school districts are paying for more police officers and security personnel than even required by state law.

In this conversation, Florida's school districts have been at the mercy of the Legislature. There has been a perception that they have only the false choice between placing a police officer or an armed civilian at every school due to a state mandate. Meanwhile, our students suffer:

- » For the first time ever, there are more police officers working in Florida schools (3,650) than school nurses (2,286).
- » The number of police officers in schools is more than double the number of school social workers (1,414) and school psychologists (1,452).
- » During the 2018-19 school year, the number of youth arrests at school increased 8%, while the number of youth arrested in the community continued to decline by 12%.

- » The percentage of youth arrests happening at school hit a five-year high of 20%.
- » The number of students expelled from school increased 43%.
- » Schools reported more than four times as many incidents of using physical restraints on students.
- » Police officers arrested elementary-aged kids 345 times, including an arrest of a five year old and five arrests of six-year olds, during the 2018-19 school year.

An analysis of Florida's experiment with school policing illustrates that the school policing mandate has only increased negative outcomes for our students:

- » The presence of law enforcement was related to a greater frequency of school arrests (40-82% more at the school-level). This relationship existed at elementary, middle and high school levels.
- » The presence of law enforcement predicted greater numbers of behavioral incidents being reported to law enforcement, particularly for less severe infractions and among middle schoolers.
- » There was little consistent evidence that the presence of law enforcement decreased the number of behavioral incidents occurring, indicating that school-based law enforcement were not necessarily making schools safer.

Florida lawmakers must repeal the mandate for police and stop the push for armed personnel in schools and return discretion to local communities over whether and how police should be involved in schools. In the meantime, school districts can adopt policies, both internal and as part of memorandums of understanding with law enforcement agencies, to mitigate the harm of increased school policing:

- » Increase the employment of student support staff.
- » Adopt minimum training requirements and accountability measures for police working in schools.
- » Adopt a minimum age of arrest.
- » Adopt limitations on the use of force against children.
- » Adopt student codes of conduct with consequences clearly outlined for specified behavior that limit the involvement of law enforcement to those situations posing immediate safety risks.
- » Assign clear duties to officers to focus on controlling access to campus, not policing the hallways or engaging in student discipline.
- » Adopt effective discipline policies and practices that teach and reinforce positive behavior.

- » Educate teachers and staff to effectively manage classroom behavior and about when it is appropriate to call the police on their students and when it is not.
- » Teach students about their rights in police encounters and avoid blurring the lines between law enforcement and school staff when investigating, searching and interrogating students.

We cannot continue asking our students to carry the weight of adult fear and inaction at a time when they are more vulnerable than ever.

Florida is failing to meet the emotional and mental health needs of its students

---

While for some students, school provides a safe, stable environment, for many, it is their primary source of stress.

---

Schools today in Florida look vastly different than they did five years ago. A school's status as the center of a community is largely becoming incompatible with security measures implemented due to fear of mass shootings. The evidence does not support the need for the recently enacted increases in school police officers - legislators have unfortunately allowed fear, and not evidence, to drive school policing policy in Florida.

- » Consistently fewer than 2% of all youth homicides each year happen at school.<sup>1</sup> This rate has not changed in decades.
- » The most recently available data, examining school-associated homicides between July 1994 and June 2017, found the rate of school-associated homicides in which there was a single victim was 0.03 per 100,000 students, while the rate of multiple-victim school-association homicides was 0.008 per 100,000 students.<sup>2</sup>
- » The rate of students being victimized, and the rate of specific crimes such as thefts and violent offenses, has been steadily declining.<sup>3</sup>

Students today are reporting more stress than any other generation,<sup>4</sup> and show significant declines in mental health and increasing suicidality.<sup>5</sup> While for some students, school provides a safe, stable environment, for many, it is their primary source of stress.<sup>6</sup> This reality is illustrated by increased suicide rates while school is in session.<sup>7</sup>

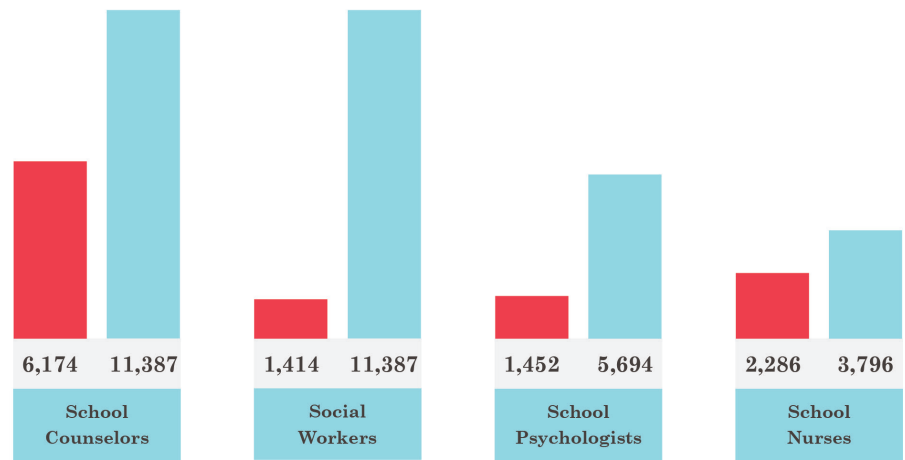

The current COVID-19 pandemic is adding to student stress and straining their access to support. It has also exposed inadequacies throughout our education and healthcare systems that work against our goal to meaningfully educate every Floridian.

Lastly, we know that mental health issues are most likely to emerge in adolescence - and are more efficiently treated early in their development.<sup>8</sup> One in five adolescents have a mental illness that will persist into adulthood, underscoring the need to take student stress seriously in an effort to prevent worsening of symptoms.<sup>9</sup>

Professionals trained to meet these needs exist. Over time, school-based mental health and student support professionals, including school counselors, school social workers, nurses and school psychologists, have emerged as effective at identifying and addressing student needs, either through direct service or referrals to resources. The majority of children and adolescents who receive mental and developmental health services do so at school.<sup>10</sup> These professionals also play a key role in designing school programs and structures that promote a healthy school climate.<sup>11</sup>

Ultimately, they are trained to do exactly the work the U.S. Secret Service identified as a key prevention practice for preventing school shootings - address and end bullying in schools, address the mental health needs of students, and foster high-quality relationships between staff and students so threats are better detected and reported.<sup>12</sup>

No school district met the industry standards for the number of students served by a single student support professional

■ 2018-19 FTE Staff   ■ Staff required to meet industry standard ratio.

Unfortunately, 52 percent of public schools nationwide report that inadequate funding was a major limitation in their efforts to provide mental health services to students.<sup>13</sup> In Florida, during the 2018-19 school year, no school district met the industry standards for the number of students served by a single student support professional. School counselors recommend a ratio of 250 students per counselor, but in Florida the average ratio is 461:1.<sup>14</sup> School nurses, meanwhile, recommend ratios below 750:1 at the highest, but in Florida, an average of 1,240 students were served by a single Registered Nurse or Licensed Practice Nurse.<sup>15</sup> School psychologists recommend ratios of 500 students per psychologist, but in Florida there is only one school psychologist for every 1,961 students.<sup>16</sup> Like school counselors, social workers in schools work best with caseloads of no more than 250. But Florida has only one social worker for every 2,013 students.<sup>17</sup>

At least $383 million was spent at the state and local levels to embed police officers or security personnel in schools during the 2018-19 school year - more than twice the amount spent in 2016-17.

---

In the aftermath of the tragic mass shooting at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School, Florida policymakers took their guidance from law enforcement. The Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School Public Safety Commission (MSD Commission), established to examine the tragedy and identify lessons, was dominated by law enforcement officers, with no current teachers, no students or student organizations, no community or mentorship organizations, and only one member with mental health training.<sup>18</sup> The MSD Commission included no people of color as voting members. When students tried to engage in the process and provide their testimony, the MSD Commission ended its hearing before the public testimony portion had been scheduled.<sup>19</sup>

Despite finding significant failures in the provision of special education services to the perpetrator of the mass shooting and recognizing the need for closer examination of the mental health issues, the MSD Commission failed to provide meaningful recommendations to address these issues. Instead, it focused on its area of expertise: policing.

The Florida Legislature has largely adopted the MSD Commission's recommendations, at significant expense to Florida's taxpayers and students. It provided a total of $225.5 million in FY 2018-19 to embed police officers or armed personnel in schools. More was provided to harden schools with gates, bulletproof glass and security cameras and to surveil social media and track students as potential threats.

Recognizing the power of prevention, safe schools funding can be used for after-school programs, behavior-driven intervention programs, bullying intervention, and suicide prevention, and historically it was. Today, however, 98% of the state safe schools funding pays for police officers.

Today, students in Florida’s schools are more likely to interact with law enforcement at school than a nurse, a social worker or a psychologist.

Two years after Parkland, the amount spent to place police officers in schools only grows, eclipsing funding streams for mental health support in schools.<sup>20</sup> Meanwhile, overall spending at schools largely remained relatively stagnant, despite this increased spending on policing.<sup>21</sup>

It’s important to note that these funds are only state funds - an additional $157.6 million from local budgets was also spent to fund police in schools in 2018-19.<sup>22</sup> Today, students in Florida’s schools are more likely to interact with law enforcement at school than a nurse, a social worker or a psychologist.

What do police in schools actually do?

The only given when a police officer is placed in a school in Florida is that they have the power to arrest students. Their role varies from school to school, and is often at odds with the purported rationale for posting them at schools. Like many states, Florida fails to have a uniform state policy on just what an officer working in a school should do or what training they should have before they work with our kids.<sup>24</sup> Likewise, the Florida Department of Education provides no guidance to schools or districts on appropriate school policing policies or policies related to arresting students in public schools.<sup>25</sup>

While the justification for Florida's school policing mandate was to protect students from mass shootings, there is very little evidence that integrating police into schools makes schools safe.<sup>26</sup> In the aftermath of the mass shooting at Columbine High School, the federal and state governments provided grants to fund police in schools, which drove the expansion of school policing.<sup>27</sup> However, a study of all school shootings since the Columbine tragedy found that the presence of law enforcement at a school did not predict lower casualties.<sup>28</sup> Ultimately, when asked what schools could do to prevent future school shootings, only 8% of officers working in schools said use armed security staff or police officers.<sup>29</sup>

Part of the reason for this is that police working in schools spend their time policing normal adolescent misbehavior, not facing high-risk situations like an armed attack. Thus, the MSD Commission found that for the officer stationed at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School during the attack, decades of experience policing schools “may have contributed to his inadequate response to [the] shooting.”<sup>30</sup>

School administrations see police officers as another resource to manage behavior in an otherwise under-resourced environment. Surveys of Florida school districts on their use of police officers from 2000 through 2012 indicate that districts cited student disrespect toward teachers as one of the top three critical issues for school safety.<sup>31</sup> For a couple years, students considered “disrespectful” were cited as a critical safety issue more often than controlling access to campus.<sup>32</sup>

Lines between discipline and security have been further blurred by the National Association of School Resource Officers (NASRO) advocating for police working in schools to adopt a “triad role” of teacher, informal counselor/mentor, and law enforcement officer despite there being exceptionally limited training requirements across the country preparing them for these roles.<sup>33</sup> Only 41% of surveyed police officers in schools reported that their primary role involved law enforcement.<sup>34</sup> Despite the fact that NASRO states that police officers should not be involved in disciplinary decision-making,<sup>35</sup> seven percent see their primary role as disciplinarian. Only 17% reported engaging in mentoring and just 2% reported teaching.<sup>36</sup>

There is no evidence that officers in schools are trained to be counselors, teachers, or even to police children or teens.

When it comes to mentoring, there is evidence that police officers approach their work in schools as a sort of ambassador, shaping students’ perceptions of law enforcement generally, “teaching students that police are to be trusted and used as a resource, and that negative interactions with police (including the arrest of a loved one) are the result of an individual’s criminality.”<sup>37</sup> This can be especially troubling for youth of color who have personally had negative interactions with police.

Florida largely leaves how officers working in schools should be trained, and what they should do while at schools, to local discretion. State law requires only that officers working in schools complete mental health crisis intervention training.<sup>38</sup> While the Attorney General’s Office offers training for school resource officers on the “basic knowledge and skills necessary to implement crime prevention programming in a school setting,” the state offers no recognized state certification for school resource officers, and there is no requirement for officers to complete this training in order to work in schools or be called “school resource officers.”<sup>39</sup>

There is no evidence that officers in schools are trained to be counselors, teachers, or even to police children or teens. In one survey, only a quarter of police officers stationed at schools reported having any experience working with youth before being placed in a school.<sup>40</sup> In another, despite reporting that more than a third of incidents they responded to involved a student receiving special education services, only 59% had received training related to special education students.<sup>41</sup> Despite this lack of training and expertise, officers often take a leading role in deciding how to respond to youth misbehavior.

Police officers are also being relied on for youth mental health. The Baker Act is a law intended to require a person with a mental illness to be evaluated in emergency situations when they pose a real and present threat of substantial harm to themselves or others if not immediately taken to a psychiatric hospital.<sup>42</sup> In such situations, a court, specified medical and mental health professionals, and police can initiate an involuntary 72-hour hold for examination. Evidence shows, however, that the Baker Act is increasingly being used on school children who make jokes, act out, exhibit normal manifestations of a known disability, or express ordinary sadness. This has had devastating results, including trauma and abuse, for these children, as young as 6, and their families.<sup>43</sup>

Because subjecting someone to an involuntary psychiatric examination and hold is so serious, not even all social workers have the authority to use the Baker Act.<sup>44</sup> Even school psychologists, with advanced degrees and years of experience in mental health assessment and crisis response have yet to be authorized in statute despite Florida Department of Children and Families (DCF) recommendations to do so.<sup>45</sup> Clinical social workers must have a master's degree in social work, a passing score on a national exam, and two years of experience working under a licensed clinical social worker to use the Baker Act.<sup>46</sup> Meanwhile, there are no prerequisites for police officers to handcuff a child and have them committed.

Over the last 15 years, the use of the Baker Act on children has more than doubled, with the largest increase among kids 11 to 13 years old.<sup>47</sup> A DCF analysis found that police officers initiated more than 68% of involuntary examinations of youth in fiscal year 2017-18.<sup>48</sup> Although available data is limited, we know that children were subjected to involuntary examinations more than 36,000 times that year,<sup>49</sup> which DCF found was likely an undercount due to inadequacies in data collection.<sup>50</sup> Additionally, at least 21 youth were subjected to involuntary examinations more than 10 times each, and police officers initiated 88% of these examinations. Nearly a quarter of these examinations were initiated at school.<sup>51</sup>

When there are no student support resources, and there is an officer with no clear role and no clear threat to respond to, officers end up being the person to respond when teachers cannot quickly address student outbursts.

---

The roles police are taking in schools have significant implications for student and parental rights:

- » Parents do not have to provide consent for their child to be subjected to an involuntary examination under the Baker Act, and are powerless to help their children once it has been initiated.<sup>52</sup>
- » Parents do not have to be notified before police interrogate a child at school.<sup>53</sup>
- » Although officers must stop an interrogation if the child tells them that they want to talk to their parents first, officers don't have to tell the child they have this right.<sup>54</sup>
- » Police officers only have to attempt to notify parents when they take a child into custody so the parents know where the child is.<sup>55</sup>
- » Although police officers have to read children their rights when they are taken into custody, school staff does not have to do this, even when the police officer is in the room during an interrogation.<sup>56</sup>
- » Parents, and students, may lose their right to consent before their records are shared with law enforcement and others.<sup>57</sup>

It comes as no surprise then that schools where police officers are stationed have more student arrests on campus.<sup>58</sup> Often, these arrests are for misbehavior better handled by teachers and administrators.<sup>59</sup> During the 2018-19 school year, 1,129 arrests were made in schools for “disorderly conduct”—nearly four times as many as made outside of schools. When there are no student support resources, and there is an officer with no clear role and no clear threat to respond to, officers end up being the person to respond when teachers cannot quickly address student outbursts.

What is more hidden is that stationing a police officer in a school fundamentally changes the school climate. Trends suggest that discipline increases, with more kids being pushed out of school through suspensions and expulsions.<sup>60</sup> Even when a memorandum of understanding dictates that officers should stay out of discipline, they shape how student behavior is managed.<sup>61</sup> Their presence is associated with decreased feelings of school connectedness among students<sup>62</sup>—a variable considered critical to school climate and ensuring students report threats.<sup>63</sup>

A key issue is that police officers have nearly unlimited discretion to arrest even the youngest students. In a study of how they use that discretion, 77% of officers reported arresting students “to calm them down.” The majority has also arrested students to show them that actions have consequences (68%) or because a teacher wanted them arrested for a minor offense (55%).<sup>64</sup>

Ultimately, the research consistently shows that the presence of law enforcement negatively impacts school climate:

- » The presence of law enforcement shifts school culture and practices in ways that result in more punitive environments.<sup>65</sup>
- » The presence of law enforcement is predictive of higher rates of student arrests,<sup>66</sup> and contributes to disproportionate arrests of Black and brown students and students with disabilities.<sup>67</sup>
- » Most studies show that school-based law enforcement are related to higher rates of exclusionary discipline.<sup>68</sup>
- » There is evidence that the presence of law enforcement in schools may increase students’ fear, heightening their perceived need for law enforcement to protect them from objectively unlikely to occur threats.<sup>69</sup>

The impact of school policing has never been evenly felt. Since the earliest programs, police have been more likely to be stationed at schools that serve predominantly low-income students of color.<sup>70</sup> Unlike how they approach predominately white schools, police stationed at these schools are more likely to see students as suspects.<sup>71</sup>

This exacerbates the consequences of an already unjust system. From early on, youth of color are more likely to be seen as troublemakers, regardless of their actual behavior.<sup>72</sup> For example, a study of Pinellas County discipline found that more than half of suspended Black students were suspended for subjective offenses, like not cooperating, class disruption, insubordination or disrespect.<sup>73</sup> Black students were four and a half times as likely to be arrested at school for disorderly conduct than their white classmates.<sup>74</sup> For Black girls, the disparity was even larger. Despite white girls’ arrest rate for disorderly conduct increasing 23%, Black girls were arrested nearly 6 times as often.<sup>75</sup> Once such treatment begins, it is difficult to undo the harm. Black students and other students of color internalize a role as the “bad kids” in class and society, reinforcing a self-fulfilling prophecy.<sup>76</sup>

The human cost of policing in Florida schools

In an effort to protect students, Florida enacted a law that increased students' chances of being arrested at school. The law requiring police or security personnel in every school resulted in the near doubling of the number of officers stationed at schools in Florida<sup>77</sup> and brought an 8% increase in the student arrest rate.<sup>78</sup> This stands in mark contrast not only to past trends but the continued decrease in both juvenile and adult arrest rates in the community.

In addition to the serious disruption to a child's life and education, arresting a juvenile has serious, long term impacts. In Florida, juvenile records are not automatically expunged until age 21 at the earliest.<sup>79</sup> Some remain until age 26. These records are considered in a young adult's first applications for a job, to further their college or fund their education, and housing, etc. Juveniles who've been arrested are less likely to graduate high school and to go to secondary school,<sup>80</sup> more likely to be arrested in the future,<sup>81</sup> and more likely to be incarcerated as an adult.<sup>82</sup> These consequences are not warranted - or even logical - given the reality that youth largely grow out of delinquent behavior without intervention.<sup>83</sup> Instead, these interruptions and burdens make it harder for these kids to successfully age out of delinquency.

The percent of youth arrests that happened in school, as opposed to in the community, had been declining as more schools adopted pre-arrest diversion programs. After the state mandated school policing, that trend reversed, with 20% of the youth arrests in fiscal year 2018-19 happening at school.<sup>84</sup>

Even our youngest students have not been immune to these consequences. The arrest of 6-year-old Kaia Rolle at school forced Florida to face the harsh reality that our current laws do not have a minimum age of arrest. In the past five years, police officers arrested elementary-aged kids (between the ages of five and ten) 2,164 times.<sup>85</sup> In fiscal year 2018-19, police officers arrested elementary-aged kids 345 times, including an arrest of a five year old and 5 arrests of six-year olds.<sup>86</sup>

Racial disparities persisted in these rates: Black kids continue to be more than twice as likely as their white peers to be arrested at school.<sup>87</sup> One development identified by Florida’s experiment in mandated school policing is that arrest rates for white students are now increasing at a higher rate than Black students, and that police presence is driving this.<sup>88</sup> Yet, even with a 20% increase in the arrest rate for white students, the racial disparity in arrests persisted.

One criticism of the past research showing increased school policing is correlated with increased negative student outcomes is the notion that schools’ motivation for adding police officers may explain the increase in negative outcomes. For example, perhaps the school was already experiencing increased violence and administrators felt law enforcement presence was needed.

New research on Florida’s experiment in mandating school policing illustrates that even when all schools faced the same mandate, negative outcomes increased.<sup>89</sup>

Black kids continue to be more than twice as likely as their white peers to be arrested at school.

The study, which examined data from 2014-15 and 2018-19, found that:

- » The presence of law enforcement was related to a greater frequency of school arrests (40-82% more at the school-level). This relationship existed at elementary, middle and high school levels.
- » The presence of law enforcement predicted greater numbers of behavioral incidents being reported to law enforcement, particularly for less severe infractions and among middle schoolers.
- » There was little consistent evidence that the presence of law enforcement decreased the number of behavioral incidents occurring, indicating that school-based law enforcement were not necessarily making schools safer.

These findings persisted even when differences between schools and trends that affected all schools were controlled. The bottom line is that when you integrate a police officer into a school, the number of kids referred to police officers, and ultimately arrested, increases. Meanwhile, the number of behavioral incidents at the school largely remains the same - showing the school is no more calm or safe than before the officer's arrival.

Recommendations

This summer's civil uprising against police brutality and the misuse of the state's police power against its people has highlighted the need for a more nuanced, purposeful approach to public safety. School districts across the country are reassessing the efficacy of integrating police officers into schools and reweighing its costs and benefits. The impacts of COVID-19 on our schools and budgets cannot be overstated. Schools already struggling to provide the resources necessary for students to learn are now struggling to provide the resources necessary to protect student health. Students, meanwhile, will be bringing the stress and trauma of living during a worldwide pandemic to the classroom.

..... Repeal the school policing mandate

The Legislature must repeal the state mandate requiring police officers or security personnel on every campus. It is already clear that Florida will need to reduce spending due to the impacts COVID-19 has had on our state's economy. Policymakers must examine the cost, both fiscal and human, of school policing and account for the consequences of adding Tasers, handcuffs and guns to schools that struggle to provide enough textbooks and, now, hand sanitizer.

Mitigate the consequences of school policing

The MSD Commission must consider the expertise and experience of directly impacted students, educators and experts in mental health to ensure recommendations on school safety are balanced to better serve the needs of students.

The Legislature, and local policymakers, can mitigate the harms of expanded school policing by passing minimum requirements for training of police in schools, a minimum age for arrest and limitations on the use of force, including tasers and pepper spray, against children.

The employment of student support professionals, such as counselors, social workers and school psychologists, in adequate numbers can prevent unnecessary referrals to law enforcement.

Until the state mandate is repealed, local and state policymakers should establish clear training requirements and accountability measures for officers working in schools. Officers should also be assigned clear duties to ensure their mandate is controlling access to campus, not policing the hallways. Policymakers must address the overuse of Baker Acts on children, ensure parental and child rights are respected in the process, and pass legislation mandating disaggregated data collection and data transparency on Baker Act use in schools.
