v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Respondent.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT

Frank W. Snepp, III respectfully petitions for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit in this case.

OPINIONS BELOW

The memorandum opinion and order of the district court (Appendix A, infra, pp. 1a-14a) is reported at 456 F. Supp. 176 (E.D. Va. 1978). The opinion of the court of appeals (Appendix B, infra, pp. 18a-50a) is reported at 595 F.2d 926 (4th Cir. 1979).

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the court of appeals was entered on March 20, 1979. This Court's jurisdiction is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Does the First Amendment permit the federal courts to enforce prior restraints on publication by former government employees of information acquired during their government service when the restraints are based on secrecy agreements which are not authorized by statute?

2. Does a commitment by a former government employee not to publish classified information imply a further obligation to submit unclassified information for pre-publication review by the government?

3. May a court award punitive damages against a former government employee who breaches a secrecy agreement by failing to submit for pre-publication review a manuscript not alleged to contain classified or non-public information?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Petitioner Frank Snepp was employed by the Central Intelligence Agency from 1968 to 1976. Upon entering the CIA, he was required to sign a "secrecy agreement" designed to prevent unauthorized disclosure of classified information. This agreement contains a broad undertaking not to publish any information relating to the CIA or intelligence activities generally.[1] When he resigned from the CIA in January 1976,

[1] The 1968 document provides in pertinent part:

> 8. Inasmuch as employment by the Government is a privilege not a right, in consideration of my employment by CIA I undertake not to publish or participate in the publication of any information or material relating to the Agency, its activities or intelligence activities generally, either during or after the term of my employment by the Agency without specific prior approval by the Agency. I understand that it is established Agency policy to refuse approval to publication of or participation in publication of any such information or material.

Appendix D, infra, pp. 59a-60a.

Mr. Snepp signed a "termination secrecy agreement" which contains a more limited undertaking not to divulge any classified information or any information concerning intelligence or the CIA that has not been made public by the CIA, without the Agency's written consent.[2]

Mr. Snepp was stationed in Vietnam for four and a half years and was there during the final American evacuation in April 1975. After resigning from the Agency in January 1976, he published a book entitled Decent Interval in November 1977. The book is a highly critical account of the United States withdrawal from Vietnam at the close of the war. (Appendix B, infra, p. 23a). Since it contained no classified information and because petitioner feared that the CIA would attempt to suppress material which was critical of the Agency, he did not submit his book for pre-publication review.

After publication of Decent Interval, the United States sued Mr. Snepp, charging that he had breached purported contractual and fiduciary obligations under the 1968 secrecy agreement by not submitting the manuscript to the CIA for pre-publication review. The government explicitly stated that it does not contend that Decent Interval contains any classified information or any information concerning the CIA which has not been made public by the Agency. (Appendix B, infra, p. 24a). Nevertheless, the government asserted that publication of the book without pre-publication review damaged the United States by causing intelligence sources to lose confidence in the Agency's ability to maintain control over information which those sources furnish in confidence. The government, however, did not establish a direct connection between publication of Decent Interval and the loss of any intelligence source.

[2] The 1976 document provides in pertinent part:

> 3. I will never divulge, publish, or reveal by writing, word, conduct, or otherwise any classified information, or any information concerning intelligence or CIA that has not been made public by CIA, to any unauthorized person including, but not limited to, any future governmental or private employer or official without the express written consent of the Director of Central Intelligence or his representative.

Appendix E, infra, p. 61a.

The government sought both an injunction requiring Mr. Snepp to submit all future writings concerning the CIA to the Agency for pre-publication review and damages for his alleged breach of contract. The government also sought to recover petitioner's entire share of the proceeds from Decent Interval on the theory that he had breached a fiduciary duty.

Mr. Snepp asserted that the 1968 secrecy agreement on which the government relied could not be enforced because it imposes a system of prior restraint which violates the First Amendment to the Constitution. Petitioner also argued that even if such an agreement could be enforced with respect to classified information, as the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit had previously held in United States v. Marchetti, 466 F.2d 1309 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1063 (1972), and Alfred A. Knopf, Inc. v. Colby, 509 F.2d 1362 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 992 (1975), it could not be enforced with respect to unclassified information. Moreover, petitioner asserted that the 1976 agreement by its terms only applies to classified information.

After rejecting petitioner's demand for a jury trial, the district court held a two-day bench trial. The court found that Mr. Snepp "willfully, deliberately and surreptitiously" breached the secrecy agreement "for personal financial gain" (Appendix A, infra, p. 6a), and that petitioner's constitutional defenses were unavailing. (Appendix A, infra, pp. 8a-9a). The court also found that compensatory damages could not be quantified. (Appendix A, infra, p. 11a). Since the government had not claimed punitive damages, the court did not address that issue. However, the district court imposed a constructive trust as requested by the government and required that Mr. Snepp pay over to the United States all of his past and future profits from Decent Interval. (Appendix A, infra, p. 13a).

The court also entered a sweeping permanent injunction requiring Mr. Snepp "to submit any manuscript or other writing containing information which relates to the Central Intelligence Agency, its activities, intelligence activities generally or intelligence sources and methods, which information [he] gained during the course of or as a result of his employment with the Central Intelligence Agency, for Agency review prior to publication." (Appendix A, infra, pp. 16a-17a). Under the terms of this injunction, the CIA must complete its review within thirty days and may only withhold approval for information which it determines to be classified. If Mr. Snepp contests any deletion made by the CIA, the burden is on him to seek judicial review.

The injunction has imposed a severe prior restraint on petitioner since it was entered. In September 1978, while his appeal was pending, Mr. Snepp was prepared to submit two articles to The Atlantic Monthly and Esquire, which had expressed interest in publishing his work. (Appendix F, infra, pp. 64a-66a). One of the articles is a short fictional work concerning a romantic relationship between a CIA officer and a French woman in Saigon. The other is an essay concerning the tendency of government officials to compromise their personal beliefs in order to stay in step with official policies. Although Mr. Snepp has sworn that there is no classified information in either of these articles, he is nevertheless required by the injunction to submit them for CIA scrutiny because they contain "information which relates to the Central Intelligence Agency, its activities, [or] intelligence activities generally. . . which information the defendant gained during the course of or as a result of his employment with the Central Intelligence Agency."[3]

On appeal, the court held that petitioner is obliged under both the 1968 and 1976 secrecy agreements to submit all writings to the CIA for pre-publication review so that the Agency may determine whether they contain any classified information. Accordingly, the court held that Mr. Snepp had breached a contract by failing to submit his manuscript, even though the manuscript is not alleged to contain any classified information. The court of appeals also affirmed the injunction on the ground that "the danger to national security arising from an unauthorized publication of classified material is so great that we think that little proof of a probable future violation is required to justify injunctive relief." (Appendix B, infra, p. 32a).

On the issue of damages, the court of appeals held that the government is entitled to nominal damages, since no actual damages were quantifiable. (Appendix B, infra, p. 35a). With one judge dissenting (Appendix B, infra, pp. 40a-50a), the court of appeals reversed the district court's holding that a constructive trust could be imposed in the absence of an allegation that Mr. Snepp had published any classified information. (Appendix B, infra, pp. 33a-35a).[4] Although the government never requested punitive damages or sought to establish its entitlement to them, the court held that punitive damages are an available remedy for breach of a secrecy agreement, if the government can prove that petitioner published Decent Interval "willfully, deliberately and surreptitiously" for "personal financial gain," as the district court had found. However, since there were sharp factual disputes on these issues and since the district court had denied petitioner's demand for a jury trial, the court of appeals remanded the case for a jury trial on the issue of damages.

[3] Petitioner unsuccessfully sought a stay of the injunction with respect to these two articles in both the district court and the court of appeals.

[4] However, the court did not completely foreclose this theory of recovery, for it ruled that on remand the government could seek leave to alter its position to assert that petitioner did publish classified information. (Appendix B, infra, p. 33a).

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

I. THE DECISION BELOW PRESENTS AN IMPORTANT ISSUE FOR REVIEW BECAUSE THE SYSTEM OF PRIOR RESTRAINT SANCTIONED BY THE COURT OF APPEALS IMPERMISSIBLY BURDENS THE FIRST AMENDMENT RIGHTS OF THOUSANDS OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES AND THE PUBLIC.

The consequences of the decision below, not only for petitioner but also for thousands of other government employees and the public at large, require that the writ be granted.

1. The CIA secrecy agreements enforced by the courts below establish a classic system of prior restraint. The would-be author must seek and obtain the censor's approval before he can publish. If he bypasses the censor, he is liable to punishment solely on the ground that he has published, regardless of what he publishes. As this case demonstrates, the author cannot subsequently defend his publication on the ground that it posed no danger and is protected by the First Amendment. Judicial enforcement of a secrecy agreement by injunction additionally subjects an author to the threat of a contempt prosecution for subsequent publications, to which the unconstitutionality of the order is not a defense. Walker v. City of Birmingham, 388 U.S. 307 (1967).

This regime of censorship imposes an intolerable burden on the right of petitioner and other CIA employees to publish their views on matters of great public concern and on the right of the public to recieve such information. The sweep of this system is demonstrated by the fact that it even reaches the fictional short story and reflective essay which Mr. Snepp has written.

2. Secrecy agreements are not imposed by the CIA alone. The Departments of State, Defense, Energy, and Treasury, the military services, and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission all use some form of secrecy agreement. The decision of which review is sought might well encourage other departments and agencies to adopt this secrecy device to restrict the flow of information to the public.

3. Furthermore, this case presents very different issues from the previous cases in which the CIA's system of prior restraint based on secrecy agreements has been considered. United States v. Marchetti, supra, and Alfred A. Knopf, Inc. v. Colby, supra. Those cases concerned a former CIA employee who had published classified information and sought to continue to do so.[5] This is the first case involving only unclassified information which had previously been made public by the CIA. Also, in contrast to the Marchetti-Knopf litigation, the government in this case has succeeded

[5] The Marchetti and Knopf rulings on which the courts below relied have been severely criticized by legal scholars. Edgar and Schmidt, The Espionage Statutes and Publication of Defense Information, 73 Colum. L. Rev. 929, 1078-79 (1973); Hill, Defamation and Privacy Under the First Amendment, 76 Colum. L. Rev. 1205, 1294-95 (1976); Ryan, United States v. Marchetti and Alfred A. Knopf, Inc. v. Colby: Secrecy 2; First Amendment 0, 3 Hastings Const. L.Q. 1073 (1976); Note, Constitutional Law — Prior Restraint Enforced Against Publication of Classified Material by CIA Employee, 51 N.C. L. Rev. 865 (1973).

not only in enjoining publication, but also in winning the opportunity to collect substantial punitive damages based solely on the failure to submit unclassified information for pre-publication review by the CIA.

II. THE PRIOR RESTRAINT IMPOSED ON PETITIONER IS CONTRARY TO THE DECISIONS OF THIS COURT.

The decision below is in sharp conflict with the decisions of this Court concerning prior restraint in at least five respects.

1. This Court has repeatedly held that any system of prior restraint bears a heavy presumption against its constitutional validity, Bantam Books, Inc. v. Sullivan, 372 U.S. 58, 70 (1963), and that the government carries a heavy burden in justifying the imposition of any restraint, Organization for a Better Austin v. Keefe, 402 U.S. 415, 419 (1971). See Nebraska Press Ass'n v. Stuart, 427 U.S. 539 (1976); Near v Minnesota, 283 U.S. 697 (1931). Indeed, this Court has never sustained prior restraint of political speech, even when the government has contended that publication will cause grave danger to the national security. New York Times Co. v. United States, 403 U.S. 713 (1971). Mr. Justice Stewart, writing for himself and Mr. Justice White in that case, stated that prior restraints are prohibited in the absence of proof that disclosure "will surely result in direct, immediate, and irreparable damage to our Nation or its people." Id. at 730. See id. at 725-26 (Brennan, J., concurring); Nebraska Press Ass'n v. Stuart, supra, 427 U.S. at 559. In this case, the government has alleged only speculative injury from the publication of unclassified information, and such speculation cannot overcome the heavy presumption against prior restraint.

2. Judicial enforcement of the CIA's agency-created censorship system also conflicts with the decisions of this Court because that system lacks explicit statutory authorization. See Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 585-86 (1952); see also id. at 593-628 (Frankfurter, J., concurring). Without such authorization, the courts may not enjoin publication, except perhaps in extraordinary circumstances. In New York Times Co. v. United States, supra, 403 U.S. 713, five of the six concurring Justices – Justices Black, Douglas, Stewart, White and Marshall – based their decision in varying degrees on (1) the absence of any congressional authorization for the prior restraint which the government sought; and (2) the fact that Congress has enacted criminal statutes which penalize disclosure, thereby preempting unilateral executive action in this field.

3. The lack of any statutory authorization for the CIA's system of prior restraint conflicts with the decisions of this Court in another respect as well. This Court has held that an executive branch agency cannot impose such a severe burden on the fundamental constitutional rights of government employees in the absence of explicit authorization from either the Congress or the President. In Greene v. McElroy, 360 U.S. 474 (1959), the Court ruled that the Department of Defense could not in the absence of explicit authorization dismiss employees for security reasons without providing an opportunity to confront and refute the evidence against them. 360 U.S. at 507. Petitioner's First Amendment right to publish without prior restraint is at least as fundamental as the right to procedural due process which was at stake in Greene, and that right cannot be abridged through a system of censorship which has been devised by the Director of Central Intelligence without any higher authorization. See Hampton v. Mow Sun Wong, 426 U.S. 88 (1976); Kent v. Dulles, 357 U.S. 116 (1958).[6]

[6] The court of appeals' conclusion that the National Security Act of 1947 authorizes the CIA's system of prior restraint is clearly in

4. The decision below depends on the theory that petitioner waived his First Amendment rights by signing the 1968 secrecy agreement and accepting employment with the CIA.[7] This conclusion too is in conflict with the decisions of this Court. In Cole v. Richardson, 405 U.S. 676, 680 (1972), the Court stated that government employment may not "be conditioned on an oath that one has not engaged, or will not engage, in protected speech activities such as . . . criticizing institutions of government. . . ." See Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 358 n.11, 359-60 n.13 (1976); Perry v. Sindermann, 408 U.S. 593, 597 (1972); Pickering v. Bd. of Education, 391 U.S. 563, 568 (1968); Keyishian v. Bd. of Regents, 385 U.S. 589, 605 (1967).

5. The constitutional infirmities of the CIA's system of prior review are exacerbated in this case because the agency claims the right to review unclassified materials, even though petitioner has no contractual obligation to submit unclassified writings. To the extent that Mr. Snepp is contractually error. That statute charges the Director of Central Intelligence with responsibility for "protecting intelligence sources and methods from unauthorized disclosure." 50 U.S.C. § 403(d)(3). The statute does not contain an "express and appropriately limited congressional authorization for prior restraints." New York Times Co. v. United States, supra, 403 U.S. at 731 (White, J., concurring). See Greene v. McElroy, supra, 360 U.S. at 502-04. Indeed, the CIA itself has recognized that it lacks statutory authority to enforce its system of prior restraint. In 1974, when William E. Colby, then Director of Central Intelligence, sought legislation to authorize injunctions against disclosure, he acknowledged that "there is no existing statutory authority for injunctive relief." (Appendix G, infra, p. 68a). However, despite the fact that such legislation was proposed as recently as 1976 by President Ford, H.R. 12162, 94th Cong., 2d Sess. (1976), Congress has not acted.

[7] This waiver concept was developed in United States v. Marchetti, supra, 466 F.2d at 1316, and Alfred A. Knopf, Inc. v. Colby, supra, 509 F.2d at 1370.

bound to submit to pre-publication review, the duty is limited to the provisions of the 1976 agreement (Appendix E, infra), which require only that CIA employees obtain prior authorization to publish information which is classified or which has not been made public by the CIA. See note 2, supra.[8] The government does not contend that Mr. Snepp has published any such information, but the court of appeals nonetheless concluded that there was a contractual breach because the second agreement implies an obligation to submit all information so that classified information will not be published. This disregard for the plain language of the 1976 agreement ignored the principle that where government regulation affects First Amendment activity, "[p]recision of regulation must be the touchstone," NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 438 (1963), and any licensing authority must be guided by "narrow, objective and definite standards." Shuttlesworth v. City of Birmingham, 394 U.S. 147, 151 (1969). See Shelton v. Tucker, 364 U.S. 479, 488 (1960).

[8] The 1976 agreement is controlling because when the provisions of two contracts entered into by the same parties and covering the same subject matter are inconsistent with each other, "it is a well settled principle of law that the later contract supersedes the former contract as to inconsistent provisions." NLRB v. International Union of Operating Engineers, 323 F.2d 545, 548 (9th Cir. 1963). Restatement of Contracts, § 408 (1932); 6 Corbin on Contracts, § 1296 (1962). There was consideration to support the formation of the 1976 agreement because both the CIA and Mr. Snepp received something of value when he signed the 1976 document. Paragraphs 5, 7, and 8 contain at least three fresh promises to the CIA from Mr. Snepp. In exchange for these new commitments on his part, Mr. Snepp received a release from the requirements of paragraph 8 of the 1968 agreement that he submit unclassified material for pre-publication review and that he not publish such information without CIA approval.

III. THE COURT OF APPEALS' APPROVAL OF PUNITIVE DAMAGES CONFLICTS WITH DECISIONS OF THIS COURT.

The holding of the court of appeals that the government has the opportunity to recover punitive damages conflicts with the decisions of this Court which place strict limitations on the assessment of damages against those who publish information of public importance.

1. This case closely resembles the abuses which New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254 (1964), and related cases have sought to eliminate -- the use of damages to punish unpopular or controversial ideas or conduct. In New York Times, the Court was "adjudicating in an area which lay close to seditious libel," where "history dicated extreme caution in imposing liability" due to the possibility that a recovery would be "viewed as a vindication of governmental policy" which had been criticized. Curtis Publishing Co. v. Butts, 388 U.S. 130, 153-54 (1967) (plurality opinion of Harlan, J.). See New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, supra, 376 U.S. at 269-83. Where, as here, no classified information is alleged to have been published, a jury might assess substantial punitive damages because it disagrees with Decent Interval or disapproves of petitioner for writing it.

2. At worst, petitioner can be found to have refused to clear with the CIA a book which is not alleged to contain any classified information. Even as to false defamations, this Court has recognized that in the First Amendment area any recovery beyond "compensation for actual injury" must be carefully limited because of the threat to speech protected by the First Amendment. Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc., 418 U.S. 323, 349 (1974). See Carey v. Piphus, 435 U.S. 247, 254-55 (1978). In Gertz, this Court strictly limited punitive damages awards in libel cases because "juries assess punitive damages in wholly unpredictable amounts bearing no necessary relation to the actual harm caused," creating the risk that they will "use their discretion selectively to punish expressions of unpopular views." 418 U.S. at 350.

In Electrical Workers v. Foust, 47 U.S.L.W. 4600 (May 29, 1979), this Court held that punitive damages may never be awarded against a union in a fair representation case because of the general labor policy against punishment and the potentially disruptive consequences of such awards. As an improper use of the extraordinary sanction of punitive damages, this case is more compelling than Foust in several respects. The policy which would be adversely affected by the possibility of harsh punitive awards is not merely a labor relations policy legislated by Congress, but rather the core protection afforded by the First Amendment. If false defamation and union misconduct are insulated from punitive awards, surely a book about the United States evacuation from Vietnam deserves at least as much protection.[9]

3. The court of appeals also indicated that in its view it is proper to subject petitioner to the risk of a substantial punitive damage judgment in part because he received compensation for writing Decent Interval. See Appendix B, infra, p. 39a. Under the prior decisions of this Court, however,

[9] The decision below is also a departure from the rule that punitive damages are ordinarily not recoverable for breach of contract. Restatement of Contracts, § 342 (1932); 11 Williston on Contracts, § 1340 (3d ed., 1968); 5 Corbin on Contracts, § 1077 (1962); D. Dobbs, Law of Remedies, § 12.4 at 818 (1973); McCormick on Damages 289-90 (1935); Kraljic v. Berman Enterprises, Inc., 575 F.2d 412, 414 (2d Cir. 1978) ("It is well understood that punitive damages are not recoverable in an action for breach of contract."). Indeed the court of appeals recognized that it was creating a new exception to this rule. (Appendix B, infra, p. 36a).

the First Amendment rights of petitioner and the public are not reduced simply because the book was published as a commercial undertaking. Time, Inc. v. Hill, 385 U.S. 374, 396-97 (1967); First National Bank of Boston v. Bellotti, 435 U.S. 765, 778-83 (1978).

CONCLUSION

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
EASTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA

ALEXANDRIA DIVISION

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,	:
Plaintiff,	:	CIVIL ACTION NO.
v.	:
FRANK W. SNEPP, III,	:	78-92-A
Defendant.	:

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

In this case the United States does not seek to enjoin the publication of a book[1] but rather to redress through more commonly utilized remedies the defendant's breach of his contractual and fiduciary duties caused by his failure to submit to the CIA for its initial review all manuscripts which contain information gained by him as a result of his CIA employment.

The defendant admits he did not submit the said manuscripts to the Agency for pre-publication review – he says he was not under any legal obligations to so do because the secrecy agreement in question violates the First and Fifth Amendments to the United States Constitution.

He claims the United States lacks standing to bring this suit because it does not allege any harm to the national security or other cognizable interest of the United States.

[1] The book "Decent Interval" was published prior to the filing of this suit.

He further claims the termination secrecy agreement he signed when he resigned from the CIA relieved him of his obligation to submit the said manuscripts for pre-publication review – and that even if the September 16, 1968 secrecy agreement were enforceable, CIA breached the agreement by failing to provide him an opportunity for a hearing on the evacuation of Vietnam.

He also claims the CIA is estopped from enforcing the secrecy agreement against him because it has permitted other employees to make unauthorized disclosures of information concerning the Agency, including information concerning intelligence sources and methods.

He claims the CIA fraudulently induced him to accept employment with the Agency and to sign the secrecy agreement.

He also claims duress – lack of consideration – mutuality of obligations – perpetuity – and that it is an unreasonable contract of adhesion and an unconscionable agreement.

He says he did not and does not owe any fiduciary duty to the CIA and that the Government has failed to mitigate its purported damages.

He prays that the suit be dismissed with prejudice and in the event the action goes to trial, he demands a trial by jury.

The Government's motion for an immediate judgment on the pleadings was denied pending completion of the record by both parties via discovery.

After completion of extensive discovery, the defendant filed a motion for summary judgment – that motion was heard and denied and the case was set for a formal pretrial hearing to identify what factual issues, if any, remained to be heard by the Court and/or the jury on June 20.

Based on the record thus made, the Court concluded that all the material facts were undisputed – whereupon, the jury panel was excused and the matter was heard and determined by the Court on the stipulations and the live and documentary evidence tendered by the parties in support of their respective positions.

The parties stipulated:

1. The Central Intelligence Agency, an agency of the United States, was established by the National Security Act of 1947. Under the provisions of the Act and implementing provisions of Executive Order 12036 and predecessor Executive Orders, the Agency is authorized to collect intelligence information relating to National Security and to correlate, evaluate, and disseminate within the United States Government, intelligence relating to National Security.

2. The position of the Director of Central Intelligence was established by the National Security Act of 1947. The Director serves as head of the Agency. Section 102(d)(3) of the Act, Title 50, United States Code, §403(d)(3), charges the Director with responsiblity for "protecting intelligence sources and methods from unauthorized disclosure."

3. On September 16, 1968, prior to the commencement of his official duties as an employee of the Central Intelligence Agency, defendant Frank W. Snepp III signed a secrecy agreement with the Agency. A true and correct copy of that agreement is attached to the complaint as Exhibit A.

4. Defendant Frank W. Snepp III was employed by the Central Intelligence Agency from September 16, 1968, until he resigned, effective January 23, 1976. During the period of his Agency employment, defendant Snepp served two tours of duty in South Vietnam. The dates on his tours of duty were from June 2, 1969 to June 21, 1971 and from October 4, 1972 to April 29, 1975.

5. During the course of his employment by the Central Intelligence Agency, defendant Frank W. Snepp III was assigned to various positions of trust, including two tours of duty in South Vietnam during the periods June 2, 1969 to June 21, 1971 and from October 4, 1972 to April 29, 1975, and was granted frequent access to classified information, including information regarding intelligence sources and methods.

6. Defendant Frank W. Snepp III submitted to Random House, Inc., for publication a non-fiction book entitled "Decent Interval". The book concerns the activities of the Central Intelligence Agency in South Vietnam and elsewhere, and it is based in large part on information obtained by defendant Snepp in the course of his Agency employment, including his tours of duty in South Vietnam during the periods June 2, 1969 to June 21, 1971 and from October 4, 1972 to April 29, 1975.

7. In November, 1977, Random House, Inc. published and placed in the stream of commerce for ultimate retail sale the non-fiction book by the defendant Frank W. Snepp III, entitled "Decent Interval".

Snepp admits in his answer and in his deposition that he did not submit his manuscripts relating to his book, "Decent Interval", to the CIA for pre-publication review.

The Court finds from the evidence thus received that Frank W. Snepp III was fully briefed and advised before entering on duty with the CIA that he was undertaking a position of trust in that Agency of the Government responsible to the President and the National Security Counsel for intelligence relating tc the security of the United States of America;

That he understood that in the course of his employment he would acquire information about the CIA and its activities and about intelligence acquired or provided by the Agency;

That he knew that employment by the Government was a privilege – not a right;

That he had to sign a secrecy agreement upon entering on duty with the CIA;

That he read and fully understood the duties and responsibilities set forth in the said secrecy agreement; and

That he signed the said secrecy agreement on September 16, 1968 without any mental reservations or purpose of evasion.

Mr. Snepp knew – he was told by Admiral Turner, Associate Counsel and other CIA officials that he could not release his manuscripts on the evacuation of Vietnam for publication without prior Agency approval.

He knew this Court had enjoined Victor L. Marchetti, a former employee of the CIA, from publishing his proposed book in violation of his secrecy agreement.

Although he assured, or at least lead both Admiral Turner and Mr. Morrison of the CIA legal staff to believe that he would submit his manuscripts for Agency review before publication – the Court finds he had no intention of so doing because was then making secret arrangements with Random House, Inc. to publish the book – all negotiations were conducted on park benches, in restaurants and/or in the public library. Snepp admits he did everything he could to keep the CIA from knowing about it prior to publication.

The Court finds from this evidence that Frank W. Snepp III willfully, deliberately and surreptitiously breached his position of trust with the CIA and the secrecy agreement dated September 16, 1968 by causing Random House, Inc. to publish "Decent Interval" (an insider's [his]account of Saigon's indecent end) without specific prior approval by the Central Intelligence Agency.

The Court further finds Mr. Snepp published the book "Decent Interval" for personal financial gain – he admits he has already received some sixty thousand dollars in advance payments and the contract with Random House, Inc. calls for royalties and other potential profits.

The undisputed evidence discloses that the CIA collects intelligence by two generic ways – one is through human sources who tell us information – we call that "sources" – the other is through technical means of collecting data, where a machine does it for you in one way or another – we call those "methods" of collecting intelligence.

Most of CIA's sources and methods are classified – if you disclose sources you are subjecting them to possible death, possible loss of position, possible loss of job – if you disclose your methods, you are making available to others the development of counter-methods to your methods, that would in effect make them useless.

The National Security Act of 1947 – amended 1969 – requires the Director of the CIA to prohibit intelligence sources and methods from unauthorized disclosure.

Both Admiral Turner and Mr. Colby testified, "In order to maintain your secrets you must have some form of control over unauthorized release."

When Admiral Turner was asked if there had been any adverse effect resulting from Snepp's refusal to submit his book for pre-publication review, he replied:

> There clearly has. Over the last six to nine months, we have had a number of sources discontinue work with us. We have had more sources tell us that they are very nervous about continuing work with us. We have had very strong complaints from a number of foreign intelligence services with whom we conduct liaison, who have questioned whether they should continue exchanging information with us, for fear it will not remain secret. I cannot estimate to you how many potential sources or liaison arrangements have never germinated because people were unwilling to enter into business with us. . . .

Admiral Turner did not attribute all of this to Mr. Snepp — he said:

> [H]is is one, and a very serious one, of a number of incidents that have diminished this world-wide confidence in our ability.
> His, in particular, because it has flaunted the basic system of control that we have. If he is able to get away with this, it will appear to all those other people that we have no control, we have no way of enforcing the guarantee which we attempt to give them when we go to work with them.

Mr. Colby, a former Director of the CIA, was called by the defendant — he said substantially the same thing.

The Court finds that the publication of Snepp's book, "Decent Interval", absent CIA pre-publication review has caused the United States irreparable harm and loss. It has impaired CIA's ability to gather and protect intelligence relating to the security of the United States of America.

Snepp's attempts to justify his failure to submit his book to the CIA for pre-publication review on numerous grounds – all of which lack sufficient evidentiary and/or legal support.

He misreads Marchetti[2] – as supporting his First and Fifth Amendment claims – that case does not invalidate CIA's secrecy agreement.

Chief Judge Haynsworth, speaking for the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, held:

> [T]hat the secrecy agreement executed by Marchetti at the commencement of his employment was not in derogation of Marchetti's constitutional rights. Its provision for submission of material to the CIA for approval prior to publication is enforceable, provided the CIA acts promptly upon such submissions and withholds approval of publication only of information which is classified and which has not been placed in the public domain by prior disclosure.

Snepp's 1968 secrecy agreement and Marchetti's secrecy agreement are sufficiently similar to warrant the same holding.

Snepp's secrecy agreements are clear and unambiguous. His 1976 secrecy termination agreement is not limited to classified information, as he would have you read it – it reads classified information or any information concerning intelligence of CIA that has not been made public by CIA.

[2] United States v. Marchetti, 466 F.2d 1309 (1972).

Both secrecy agreements require submission of all such material for CIA pre-publication review.

Snepp's termination briefing indicates he was so told.

Further, Snepp is not the judge of what portions, if any, of CIA's intelligence may be made public.

On the question of whether the CIA breached ¶6 of the 1968 secrecy agreement -- the defendant says no one in the CIA would give him a hearing on his complaint in re the evacuation of Vietnam. The Government concedes the defendant was not given the requested hearing. He admits, however, he did not present his grievance or complaint to the Inspector-General as provided for in the said paragraph.

¶6 of the 1968 secrecy agreement is clear and unambiguous. That paragraph pertains to the carrying of grievances or complaints outside the Agency – had the CIA breached ¶6 – (and the Court did not so find) – that would not release the defendant from fully complying with ¶8 of the secrecy agreement.

Snepp was given every opportunity to prove his claims of fraud and duress – he withdrew his claim of duress before trial and said his only evidence of fraud was that a briefing officer had told him he could use his discretion in determining what should or should not be released to the public – he claims he would not have signed the secrecy agreement otherwise. He could neither name nor identify the briefing officer prior to the trial even though he had seen and talked to all three of them. He did name one, however, when the three were required to stand in the courtroom. The one named had no recollection of ever seeing or talking to Snepp in 1968.

Fraud, in the procurement of a contract, requires far more convincing evidence.

The secrecy agreement of 1968 is clear and unambiguous – oral testimony is inadmissible to vary the unambiguous terms of a written agreement. See Rock-Ola Manufacturing Corp. v. Wertz, 282 F.2d 208 (4th Cir. 1960).

Further, a CIA briefing officer has no authority to change or alter the terms of the CIA secrecy agreement.

Snepp's claim that the United States lacks standing to bring this suit – lacks merit.

> Jurisdiction arises from the presence of the United States as a party. 28 U.S.C. §1345. "The government can sue even if there is no specific authorization. In such cases, however, it must have some interest to be vindicated sufficient to give it standing." C.A. Wright, Federal Courts 68 (2d ed. 1970), ch. 3 § 22. Standing arises from the government's interest in protecting the national security.[3]

United States v. Marchetti, supra, at 1313. See also, id. n. 3.

The defendant's other defenses have been fully heard and denied for the reasons then stated – there is no need to repeat them again.

We now turn to the question of damages.

Counsel for Snepp says there is insufficient evidence in this case to support any award beyond nominal damages – we disagree – nominal damages in a case like this would be nothing more than a license to continue doing that which the law forbids.

This action involves a substantial wrong to the United States and to the public's interest in the effective functioning of its Government.

Snepp's willful refusal to comply with his pre-publication review obligations to the CIA demonstrates, unless redressed, the potential vulnerability of all information provided to the CIA on a confidential basis. It is elementary that the successful conduct of international diplomacy and the maintenance of an effective national defense require both confidentiality and secrecy. Other nations can hardly deal with this nation in an atmosphere of mutual trust unless they can be assured that their confidence will be kept.

Although such injury is not quantifiable with any reasonable degree of certainty, nominal damages are grossly inadequate as redress for Mr. Snepp's willful breach of trust.

As was said by Chief Judge Haynsworth in Marchetti, supra:

> Gathering intelligence information and the other activities of the Agency, including clandestine affairs against other nations, are all within the President's constitutional responsibility for the security of the Nation as the Chief Executive and as Commander in Chief of our Armed Forces. Const., art. II, § 2. Citizens have the right to criticize the conduct of our foreign affairs, but the Government also has the right and the duty to strive for internal secrecy about the conduct of governmental affairs in areas in which disclosure may reasonably be thought to be inconsistent with the national interest.
>
> Although the First Amendment protects criticism of the government, nothing in the Constitution requires the government to divulge information:

Congress has imposed on the Director of Central Intelligence the responsibility for protecting intelligence sources and methods. 50 U.S.C. § 403(d) (3). In attempting to comply with this duty, the Agency requires its employees as a condition of employment to sign a secrecy agreement, and such agreements are entirely appropriate to a program in implementation of the congressional direction of secrecy. Marchetti, of course, could have refused to sign, but then he would not have been employed, and he would not have been given access to the classified information he may now want to broadcast.

Confidentiality inheres in the situation and the relationship of the parties. Since information highly sensitive to the conduct of foreign affairs and the national defense was involved, the law would probably imply a secrecy agreement had there been no formally expressed agreement, but it certainly lends a high degree of reasonableness to the contract in its protection of classified information from unauthorized disclosure.

Moreover, the Government's need for secrecy in this area lends justification to a system of prior restraint against disclosure by employees and former employees of classified information obtained during the course of employment. One may speculate that ordinary criminal sanctions might suffice to prevent unauthorized disclosure of such information, but the risk of harm from disclosure is so great and maintenance of the confidentiality of the information so necessary that > greater and more positive assurance is warranted. Some prior restraints in some circumstances are approvable of course. See Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 85 S. Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed. 2d 649.

Although Snepp retains the right to speak and write about the CIA, and to criticize it as any other citizen may – he may not publish any information or material relating to the CIA, its activities or intelligence activities generally, obtained during the course of his employment, either during or after the term of his employment, without specific prior approval by the Agency.

The CIA cannot protect its intelligence sources and methods if its agents are allowed to determine what intelligence ought to be made public.

One who breaches his trust and secrecy agreements with the agency of the United States charged with the responsibility for protecting intelligence sources and methods ought not to be permitted to retain his ill-gotten gains.

Anything less will not suffice to prevent unauthorized disclosure of such information.

Courts of equity frequently go much further to give relief in furtherance of the public interest than they are accustomed to go when only private interests are at stake.

Therefore the Court will exercise its equity powers and impose a constructive trust over and require an accounting of any and all revenue, gains, profits, royalties and other advantages derived by the defendant from the sale, serialization, republication rights in any form, movie rights or other distribution for profit of the work entitled "Decent Interval".

In addition, the defendant will be enjoined from any further violation of his secrecy agreement by requiring him to submit to the Central Intelligence Agency for pre-publication review any manuscript which the defendant authors which concerns the Central Intelligence Agency, its activities or intelligence activities generally which the defendant gained during the course of or as a result of his employment with the Agency.

And It Is So Ordered.

Counsel for the Government should forthwith prepare an appropriate judgment and injunction in accordance with this Memorandum Opinion and Order, submit the same to counsel for the defendant for approval as to form, and then to the Court for entry.

The Clerk will send a copy of this Memorandum Opinion and Order to all counsel of record.

* Walter E. Hoffman, Senior District Judge, United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, sitting by designation.

WINTER, Circuit Judge:

The United States sued a former employee of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) alleging that defendant breached a secrecy agreement with the CIA by publishing a book about the activities of the CIA in South Vietnam and elsewhere without the prior permission and approval of the CIA. The CIA does not assert, however, that the book disclosed classified information or information that defendant had no right to publish. Although defendant prayed a jury trial, the district court heard the case without a jury and granted judgment for plaintiff, ruling that there were no factual issues to be tried by a jury, that the defendant was in breach of his agreement, that he should be enjoined from further publications except in strict compliance with his undertaking to submit proposed publications to the CIA for its prior approval, and that, for breach of his fiduciary obligation not to publish without CIA approval, a constructive trust for the benefit of the government should be imposed on all of the monies which defendant had earned and will earn from publication of his book. Defendant appeals, asserting numerous errors in the trial proceedings and the district court's judgment.

We conclude that defendant was under a valid contractual obligation to submit proposed publications to the CIA for its prior approval, that he breached this agreement, and that the entry of an injunction against further breaches was fully justified and not an abuse of discretion. But we think that it was not shown on this record that defendant breached a fiduciary obligation, and it was therefore improper for the district court to impose a constructive trust on the monies earned from publication of the book. We think that the government is entitled at least to nominal damages for breach of contract and it may be entitled to compensatory and punitive damages also. But if compensatory and punitive damages are sought to be recovered, the issues relating thereto must be submitted to a jury. We therefore affirm in part and reverse in part, remanding the case for further proceedings.

I.

Defendant was first employed by the CIA on September 16, 1968. At the time that he was employed he executed a secrecy agreement, the pertinent provisions of which are set forth in the margin, in which he undertook "not to publish . . . any information or material relating to the Agency . . . either during or after the term of my employment . . . without specific prior approval by the Agency."[1] In due course, he was assigned to two tours of duty in Vietnam where he served for four and one-half years. His service in Vietnam included the time that the United States withdrew from participation in the war and the CIA and the military liquidated their operations in that locale. By reason of his employment, defendant was granted frequent access to classified information, including information regarding intelligence sources and methods.

Defendant expressed dissatisfaction with the manner in which the CIA had conducted its affairs in Vietnam and the manner in which it withdrew, and he concluded to write a book on the subject. Defendant claims that he was motivated primarily by altruism and the desire to have the world and the American public know the truth as to

[1] Secrecy Agreement

I, I, Frank W. Snepp, III, understand that upon entering on duty with the Central Intelligence Agency I am undertaking a position of trust in that Agency of the Government responsible to the President and the National Security Council for intelligence relating to the security of the United States of America. I understand that in the course of my employment I will acquire information about the Agency and its activities and about intelligence acquired or produced by the Agency.

* * *

8. Inasmuch as employment by the Government is a privilege not a right, in consideration of my employment by CIA I undertake not to publish or participate in the publication of any information or material relating to the Agency, its activities or intelligence activities generally, either during or after the term of my employment by the Agency without specific prior approval by the Agency. I understand that it is established Agency policy to refuse approval to publication of or participation in publication of any such information or material what happened, but the government claims that his motive was one primarily of money. In any event, before resigning from the CIA, effective January 26, 1976, defendant negotiated an arrangement with a publisher whose identity he was assiduous in concealing, and he obtained a publication advance. Thereafter, he resigned from the CIA, and in connection with that resignation he executed the so-called "Termination Secrecy Agreement," the pertinent provisions of which are set forth in the margin, in which he agreed not to "publish . . . any classified information, or any information concerning intelligence or CIA that has not been made public by CIA . . . without the express written consent of the Director of Central Intelligence or his representative."[2] Defendant was told that his responsibilities under this agreement were the same as those under the agreement that he signed when he was employed.

Although defendant did not conceal from his CIA colleagues and former CIA colleagues the fact that he was writing a book, he represented on a number of occasions that he intended to submit the manuscript to the CIA for

[2] Termination Secrecy Agreement

1. I, Frank W Snepp, III, am about to terminate my association with the Central Intelligence Agency. I realize that, by virtue of my duties with that agency, I have been the recipient of information and intelligence that concern the present and future security of the United States of America.

3. I will never divulge, publish, or reveal by writing, word, conduct, or otherwise any classified information, or any information concerning intelligence or CIA that has not been made public by CIA, to any unauthorized person including, but not limited to, any future governmental or private employer or official without the express written consent of the Director of Central Intelligence or his representative prior approval before submitting it to his publisher. But this he failed to do, so he claims, because the CIA failed to act favorably, in accordance with its established procedures, on his several demands that it conduct a study and prepare a report concerning the deficiencies in its withdrawal from Vietnam. Apparently the CIA gave thought to the possibility of seeking an injunction against defendant to restrain him from publication of his book prior to submission of his manuscript to the CIA for its approval and the matter was considered by the Department of Justice. There was evidence that the CIA did not press the Department of Justice to take such action because it relied upon defendant's representations that he intended to honor his contracts.

In any event, defendant's book entitled Decent Interval was published in November 1977. It is a highly critical account of the United States' withdrawal from Vietnam at the close of the war and it also contains allegations that the CIA's intelligence reporting from Vietnam was fabricated and distorted, that the CIA manipulated press reporting from Vietnam by providing false information to reporters, that CIA officials in Vietnam engaged in corrupt practices, and that the CIA mishandled the evacuation from Vietnam by failing to evacuate its indigenous agents and employees.

The government sued on February 15, 1978, alleging that plaintiff had breached his contractual and fiduciary obligations to the CIA by failing to submit the manuscript of his book to the CIA for prepublication review pursuant to the original secrecy agreement. It sought a declaration that defendant had breached his contractual and fiduciary duties, damages for breach of contract, an injunction against further breaches, and an accounting and the imposition of a constructive trust over all past and future revenues from the sale of the book. Defendant, in answering, prayed a jury trial. There was extensive pretrial discovery during which the government responded to an interrogatory asserting that it did not contend that Decent Interval contains classified information or any information concerning intelligence or CIA that has not been made public by CIA. When the case came on for trial, the district court ruled that there were no factual issues on the merits for the jury to determine.

On the merits, the district court ruled that defendant had breached his contractual and fiduciary duty to submit his manuscript for prepublication review. Finding that the defendant's breach caused the government irreparable harm, the district court enjoined defendant from future violations and imposed a constructive trust on all revenues derived from Decent Interval for the benefit of the government. In so doing, it rejected, inter alia, defendant's defenses based upon the first amendment and his claim of illegal selective enforcement. These defenses and the facts which relate to them will be discussed more fully hereafter.

II.

We consider first defendant's contentions relating to his rights under the first amendment and to his contractual obligations. Defendant argues that the 1968 secrecy agreement is in violation of the first amendment and that, to the extent that it applies to classified data, the CIA lacked congressional or presidential authority to require its execution. Defendant also argues that he had no contractual obligation to submit his manuscript for prepublication review. This argument is based upon his assertion that the 1976 termination secrecy agreement superseded the 1968 secrecy agreement, executed when he was first employed, that the 1976 agreement only requires permission for publication of information that is classified or that has not been made public by CIA, while the latter requires prepublication submission of "all" material, and that the CIA has not claimed that defendant published anything required to be submitted under the 1976 agreement.

We see no merit in these arguments. In asserting them, we think that defendant has failed to appreciate our decisions in United States v. Marchetti, 466 F.2d 1309 (4 Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1063 (1972) (Marchetti I); and Alfred A. Knopf, Inc. v. Colby, 509 F.2d 1362 (4 Cir.), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 992 (1975) (Marchetti II); as well as the language in the agreements that he executed.

In Marchetti I and Marchetti II, we sustained the validity of secrecy agreements, such as those at issue here, prohibiting CIA employees from publishing classified information, from attack under the first amendment. More importantly, we sustained the constitutional validity of a prepublication review process for all intelligence-related materials for the sole purpose of permitting the CIA to identify and to withhold permission for the disclosure of classified information. Of course we recognized the first amendment right of an employee or former employee "to speak and write about the CIA and its operations, and to criticize it as any other citizen may," 466 F.2d at 1317, but we held that he had no first amendment right to "disclose classified information obtained by him during the course of his employment which is not already in the public domain." Id. Consistent with the first amendment, we recognized an obligation on the part of the CIA to respond promptly to a request for authority to publish, and we held that there was a right of judicial review if permission was withheld.

In Marchetti I and Marchetti II, we also noted that the National Security Act of 1947 charges the Director of Central Intelligence with the responsibility for "protecting intelligence sources and methods from unauthorized disclosure," 50 U.S.C. § 403(d)(3), and that secrecy agreements are "entirely appropriate to a program in implementation of the congressional direction of secrecy." 466 F.2d at 1316. Thus, defendant's contention that the CIA lacked congressional authority to execute such agreements is without merit.

We think it largely academic whether the 1976 agreement supersedes the 1968 agreement or not.[3] Under the 1968 agreement, defendant agreed "not to publish . . . any information or material relating to the Agency, its activities or intelligence activities generally . . . without specific prior approval by the Agency." (Emphasis added.) Of course, under Marchetti I and Marchetti II, this obligation was enforceable only to the extent that it required defendant to submit all information or material relating to the CIA, its activities and intelligence, so as to permit the CIA to determine what was classified and unpublishable as distinguished from what was unclassified and publishable, and not to publish classified information not already in the public domain.

The language of the 1976 agreement is indistinguishable in its effect. It placed on defendant the obligation not to "publish . . . any classified information, or any information concerning intelligence or CIA that has not been made public by CIA . . . without the express written consent of [CIA]." The obligation was to refrain from publishing any material concerning intelligence or the CIA without prior submission and prior approval of all material, but manifestly the first amendment would not permit the CIA to withhold consent to publication except with respect to classified information not in the public domain. Thus, the meaning and effect of the two agreements are identical.

[3] In Marchetti I, 466 F. 2d at 1317 n.6, we noted that an agreement like the 1976 agreement in the instant case lacked consideration and was for that reason unenforceable. If invalid, the 1976 agreement could not supersede the 1968 agreement.

We decline defendant's invitation to reexamine the correctness of Marchetti I and Marchetti II; and in reliance on them we therefore conclude that the secrecy agreements that bound defendant did not violate his first amendment rights and that each validly required him to submit to prepublication review all of the material he intended to publish relating in any manner to the CIA.

III.

There can be no doubt on the record before us that defendant breached his secrecy agreements. Before we turn to the rights of the government with respect to relief, we must consider some of defendant's other defenses to the breach.

Defendant contends that the district court improperly declined to consider his defense of selective enforcement. Specifically, defendant argues that he is the first CIA employee who has been sued for breach of an agreement to submit to prepublication review when, in fact, he published only materials that, although critical of the CIA, are not claimed to be classified, yet other CIA officials and officials in other branches of the government have published books and articles without prepublication review with impunity. In an answer to an interrogatory, the government admitted that two books about the CIA were published by former employees without prepublication review as required by a secrecy agreement and no action was taken to prevent the violation. Other evidence suggested that a number of articles were probably published under similar circumstances.

We see no merit in the defense of selective enforcement, and we think that the district court correctly rejected it. In the first place, defendant's contention of selective enforcement appears to be premised upon the fact that his book is critical of the CIA. To establish improper discrimination in enforcement proceedings, it would be necessary to show that uncritical books were treated differently from critical books with respect to enforcement of the obligation for prepublication review. The proofs that defendant tendered fall short of that objective since they do not identify the nature of the publications with regard to which the secrecy agreement was not enforced, and hence selective enforcement depending upon the critical or non-critical content is not established.

Aside from the factual inadequacies of defendant's claimed defense, there is a basic legal reason why the defense is unavailable. Defendant has cited, and we have found, no authority suggesting that the defense of selective enforcement, normally applied in criminal cases, should be extended to civil actions. Moreover, defendant voluntarily agreed to be bound by the contractual provision requiring prepublication review and he can have little complaint about its being enforced. United States v. Crowthers, 456 F.2d 1074 (4 Cir. 1972), on which defendant heavily relies, is inapposite because it was a criminal case – a prosecution for alleged violation of regulations prohibiting disturbances and limiting the distribution of handbills on government property.

At trial, defendant also raised the defenses of material breach by the CIA, a prior inconsistent oral agreement and fraud. On appeal, he asserts that with respect to all of them it was error to deny him a jury trial on the factual issues which these defenses present. Because we decide that the government was entitled to judgment as a matter of law on these defenses, no jury consideration was required.[4]

Defendant contends that the prepublication review provisions of the 1968 secrecy agreement are unenforceable because the government breached another material provision of that contract. Defendant argues that Paragraph 6 of the 1968 secrecy agreement, the text of which is set forth below,[5] gave him a right to a hearing on his grievance that the CIA mishandled the evacuation of its indigenous agents when it withdrew from Vietnam. He testified that he was denied a hearing, although he conceded that he discussed his views with his superiors and that the Inspector General sent for him to discuss his complaint but took no action thereon. This, he claims, was a material breach on the part of the government, rendering his obligation under the contract unenforceable.

First, we do not think that paragraph 6 of the 1968 agreement can be read to guarantee to the defendant a hearing for his grievances. The evident purpose of the paragraph is to prohibit the taking of internal grievances and complaints outside of the CIA. The CIA does not guarantee in that

[4] With exception of the issue of damages, see p. ____, infra, we agree with district court that the case presents no issue of fact for the jury to resolve.

[5] 6. I understand that for all grievances and complaints there are established procedures within the Agency permitting appeal by any employee of the Agency and to carry any such grievance or complaint outside the Agency will be considered a violation of the undertaking set forth above in paragraph 3 [obligation not to divulge classified information outside of the CIA except as authorized]. If the appeal procedures are inadequate in any situation, I am aware that the Inspector General is at all times available to any employee with a legitimate criticism, grievance, or complaint.

paragraph to provide any specific grievance procedure, and certainly there was no promise of a hearing. At most, the paragraph provides that the Inspector General will be available to consider employee complaints but not that he will make any specific response. Defendant's own testimony establishes that, at the instance of the Inspector General and not that of defendant, the Inspector General did consider his complaint. Certainly defendant can claim no breach of the paragraph because the complaint was not resolved favorably to defendant.

Second, even if the CIA could be viewed as having violated Paragraph 6, we deem it an independent clause of the overall agreement, the breach of which would not excuse defendant from his obligation to submit books for prepublication review. When defendant signed the secrecy agreement, his primary purpose and the primary consideration he received were not a promise of a grievance procedure, but rather employment by the CIA in a position involving access to national security secrets. "The breach of an independent provision in a contract which is incidental to its main purpose and which does not go to the whole consideration, does not justify the cancellation of a contract"; cancellation is warranted only if the failure is "a total one, resulting in the defeat of the object of the contract, or rendering that object unattainable." Arrow Petroleum Co. v. Johnston, 162 F.2d 269, 276 (7 Cir.), cert. denied, 332 U.S. 817 (1947). See also LeRoy Dyal Co. v. Allen, 161 F.2d 152, 155 (4 Cir. 1947).

Defendant's other defenses to enforcement of the contract require little discussion. We do not think that the plain and unambiguous language of the 1968 secrecy agreement requiring the submission of all material relating to the CIA intended to be published can be abrogated by proof of an oral statement by a CIA induction officer that defendant would have the discretion to determine what information was classified and thus what was required to be submitted for review. See Rock-Ola Manufacturing Corp. v. Wertz, 282 F.2d 208, 210 (4 Cir. 1960); see also Ross Engineering Co. v. Pace, 153 F.2d 35, 42-43 (4 Cir. 1946); G.L. Webster Co. v. Trinidad Bean & Elevator Co., 92 F.2d 177, 178-79 (4 Cir. 1937).

In the district court, defendant did not plead fraud as a defense in compliance with F.R. Civ. P. 8(c) and 9(b), and hence his argument that the statement of the CIA induction officer constituted fraud and vitiated defendant's obligation to submit material for prepublication review comes too late. In any event, the proof was insufficient to establish fraud. It did not show that the induction officer had knowledge of the falsity of his statement or that defendant acted in reliance on the statement. See Call Carl, Inc. v. BP Oil Corp., 554 F.2d 623 (4 Cir.), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 923 (1977).

Overall, we perceive no valid defense to defendant's breach of contract.

IV.

A.

As one item of relief, the district court enjoined defendant from further breaching the terms and conditions of the 1968 secrecy agreement by failing to submit any manuscript or other writing containing information about the CIA to the CIA for review prior to publication on condition that the CIA complete its review within thirty days after submission and that it withhold approval for publication of only materials which are classified. We think that this relief was appropriate and we affirm the district court in this respect.

As we have shown, defendant's obligation under the secrecy agreements was to submit for prepublication review all information or material relating to the CIA, its activities or intelligence activities generally, and not, as the defendant contends, only materials which were classified. Defendant breached this obligation, and the district court found that the breach occurred "willfully, deliberately and surreptitiously." The evidence of record supports these findings and they are not clearly erroneous. The record shows also that defendant has prepared other writings and that he does not intend to submit them for prepublication review because he claims that they do not contain classified information.[6] The testimony of top CIA officials supports the district court's finding that defendant's failure to submit his book for prepublication review has "impaired CIA's ability to gather and protect intelligence relating to the security of the United States . . . ," and thus the government has suffered irreparable harm from defendant's breach and will suffer future irreparable harm if further breaches are not enjoined. These findings collectively support the grant of injunctive relief under our decision in Marchetti I.

6 We reject defendant's argument that there is no evidence that he will not abide by his contract if we construe it to require prepublication review of all writings relating to the CIA and not merely those which divulge classified information. Our decisions in Marchetti I and Marchetti II as to the meaning of the secrecy agreements were well known before defendant undertook to publish his book, and he acted in flagrant violation of them. In any event, the danger to national security arising from an unauthorized publication of classified material is so great that we think that little proof of a probable future violation is required to justify injunctive relief.

B.

The substantial problem which this case presents is the correctness of the district court's imposing a constructive trust over the revenues from the book for the benefit of the government and ordering an accounting of those revenues. For the reasons which follow, we think that the imposition of a constructive trust was improper and that the government's sole remedy for breach of the contract should be the recovery of compensatory and punitive damages as the proof may support and as a jury may assess.[7]

At the outset we reiterate two factors on which all that follows is based: (1) there is in this case no present claim by the government that any classified material was published, and (2) defendant has a first amendment right to publish anything not classified. The second factor is constant; Marchetti I and Marchetti II, which we decline to reexamine, settle it. The first factor, however, is simply a lack of a claim on the part of the government; and if, on remand for good cause shown, the government should be allowed to amend its answer to the interrogatory and thereafter to prove that classified material was published, our conclusion with reference to the impropriety of imposing a constructive trust would be different.

To sustain the constructive trust, the government argues that the duty to submit writings for prepublication review

7 As relief, the complaint prayed, inter alia, that "the defendant be required to pay to the plaintiff such damages as plaintiff has sustained as a result of the defendant's breach of contract." There was no specific prayer for punitive damages. On remand, the government may conclude to amend its complaint to pray recovery of punitive damages. Leave to do so shall be "freely given." F. R. Civ. P. 15(a) and (b).

was a fiduciary one, the breach of which, to the defendant's benefit, justifies the imposition of a constructive trust. See United States v. Carter, 217 U.S. 286 (1910); Community Counselling Service, Inc. v. Reilly, 317 F.2d 239 (4 Cir. 1963); Restatement (Second) of Agency § 403 (1958).[8] The defendant argues, however, that the duty to submit writings to prepublication review, while a contractual one, was not a fiduciary one, the breach of which justifies resort only to usual contract remedies of damages and, in an appropriate case, an injunction.

An employment contract can unquestionably create a fiduciary relationship. See Restatement (Second) of Agency § 376, Comment a (1958). But not all contractual duties on the part of the employee are fiduciary in nature. Id. § 400, Comment c. The 1968 secrecy agreement does not place convenient labels on which, if any, of defendant's duties are fiduciary ones. It is apparently conceded by defendant, and we agree, that both from the language of that contract and the circumstances under which it was made, that contract does create a fiduciary relationship with regard to the duty not to disclose classified material. But we do not think, having regard to the defendant's first amendment right to publish unclassified information, that the contract, even in the light of the circumstances under which it was made, creates any fiduciary relationship to submit writings for prepublication review which do not dis-

[8] The government also asserts, somewhat tentatively, that a constructive trust may be imposed where legal remedies are inadequate. In view of our conclusion that the government is entitled to damages, see p.—— infra, its remedies at law are not insufficient, and its contention must fail.

close classified information.[9] At most, with regard to unclassified information, there is only a contractual duty to submit writings to prepublication review, although it is one that, because of the risk to national security of an inadvertent or ill-advised publication of classified information, should be rigorously enforced by injunction and otherwise.

Although we conclude that the government is not entitled to a constructive trust, it is not without remedy. Defendant has clearly breached his contract and the government is entitled to damages for the breach. The district court, of course, found that the government's damages were not quantifiable; but even if the government is unable to prove the dollar value of the injuries to it flowing from the breach, it is entitled to nominal damages. And we think that it is entitled to more.[10]

9 The government has not cited, nor have we found, any case holding that the duty to seek permission from an employer to disclose confidential information, however important to protect the confidential information, is in and of itself a fiduciary one. Rather, in the usual case, the fiduciary duty is not to disclose the information, the trade secret, or the like, or, as United States v. Kearns, __ F.2d __ (D.C. Cir. 1978), not to misuse an official position.

10 Because the 1968 secrecy agreement as a general form of contract as well as a specific agreement with defendant was intended to have nationwide as well as international effect, we think that the rights of the parties are to be determined by federal common law and not merely the law of a state having some nexus to its formation. In determining what is federal common law, we look however to general authorities and to state law as a convenient source of reference for fashioning the applicable federal rule. See Clearfield Trust Co. v. United States, 318 U.S. 363 (1943).

Ordinarily punitive damages are not recoverable for breach of contract. See Restatement of Contracts § 342 (1932); 11 S. Williston, Contracts § 1340 (3d ed. 1968); 5 A. Corbin, Contracts § 1077 (1951). But there are exceptions to the general rule where the acts constituting the breach also constitute the commission of a tort or are closely analogous thereto. See Williston, supra at 211-213; Corbin, supra at 367.[11] The usual examples are suits for breach of promise, suits against public service companies for breach of some contractual undertaking, and suits by a depositor against a bank for wrongfully failing to honor checks or drafts.[12] While the instant case does not fit nicely into any of these categories, we think nonetheless that it, too, should be deemed to constitute an exception to the general rule.

Viewed in the light most favorable to the government, the evidence in the case shows that prior to publication of his book defendant knew of his obligation to submit his manuscript for prepublication review. Not only did

[11] The Restatement takes the position that there are no exceptions to the general rule and that any punitive damages in an action for breach of contract are sustainable only by the tort aspects of the action. See Restatement of Contracts § 342, Comment c.

[12] Based upon the law of Virginia, three district court cases in this circuit have recognized that punitive damages may be recovered in contract actions, at least where malice, fraud, or criminal indifference is shown: Matney v. First Protection Life Ins. Co., 73 F.R.D. 696 (W.D. Va. 1977) (suit on health insurance policy for failure to pay claim); Material Handling Industries, Inc. v. Eaton Corp., 391 F.S 977 (E D. Va. 1975) (suit by retailer against manufacturer for breach of contract and antitrust violation); National Homes Corp. v. Lester Industries, Inc , 336 F.S 644 (W D. Va. 1972) (recovery of punitive damages for breach of contract not dischargeable by defendant's bankruptcy). See also Wright v. Everett, 197 Va. 608, 90 S.E. 2d 855 (1956).

he possess this knowledge, but he acknowledged it to his former superiors at the CIA on a number of occasions, at the same time falsely representing to them that he would submit the manuscript for review prior to publication. Manifestly, had defendant's former superiors known that defendant's representations were falsely made, they could have instituted an action to enjoin publication without prior submission, and undoubtedly they would have prevailed. See Marchetti I. The evidence shows that the possibility of such an action reached the stage of consultation with the Department of Justice but the idea was abandoned because of defendant's misrepresentations. The government's evidence shows that although not quantifiable, the government suffered damage from publication without prepublication review.

From the evidence, a trier of the fact could well conclude that defendant's actions, and the government's reliance thereon, amounted to deceit, so that defendant's breach of contract has implications of a tort where punitive damages may be assessed.

> Where the defendant's wrongdoing has been intentional and deliberate, and has the character of outrage frequently associated with crime, all but a few courts have permitted the jury to award in the tort action "punitive" or "exemplary" damages, or what is sometimes called "smart money." Such damages are given to the plaintiff over and above the full compensation for his injuries, for the purpose of punishing the defendant, of teaching him not to do it again, and of deterring others from following his example.

W. Prosser, Law of Torts § 2 at 9 (4th ed. 1971) (footnotes eliminated). Indeed, in its brief the government makes clear that its principal purpose in seeking recovery of monies from defendant is for the purposes both of punishing him and of deterring others. This is more properly the function of an award of punitive damages than of a constructive trust, since a constructive trust depends on the concept of unjust enrichment rather than deterrence and punishment. See D. Dobbs, Law of Remedies § 3.9 at 205 and § 4.3 at 246 (1973).

Further to define the punitive damages that the government may recover, we add these comments: Since the government contends and the district court found that the government's compensatory damages are not quantifiable and we view the function of punitive damages in a case such as this as the dual one of punishing the defendant and deterring others from like misconduct, we think it follows that there is no necessary correlation between the amount of punitive damages that may properly be assessed and the amount of compensatory damages that the government may prove. See, e.g., Harrison v. United Transportation Union, 530 F.2d 558, 563 (4 Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 958 (1976); Bucher v. Krause, 200 F.2d 576, 587 (7 Cir. 1952), cert. denied, 345 U.S. 997 (1953); D. Dobbs, supra, § 3.09 at 210-11. Of course, in reaching that conclusion, we necessarily align ourselves with those courts which have held that punitive damages may be recovered so long as there is a legal injury to support the award of at least nominal compensatory damages, and we reject the view that punitive damages may not be recovered unless there is proof of substantial compensatory damages. See Harrison v. United Transportation Union, supra. In our view, any punitive damages in this case, since their purpose will be both to deter and to punish, should be assessed not only with a view to the defendant's culpability but also with a view to the defendant's financial circumstances both at the time that he committed the breach and when he will have realized all of the fruits of the breach. D. Dobbs, supra, § 3.9 at 218-19.

Of course what we have said about the factual aspects of the government's right to recover punitive damages stems from our viewing the record in the light most favorable to the government and in the light also of the district court's finding that the defendant breached the contract "willfully, deliberately and surreptitiously" for "personal financial gain." Defendant does not concede the correctness of these findings and defendant offered evidence in opposition thereto. Should the government press the claim to punitive damages which we conclude that it possesses, the award and assessment of damages, if other than nominal, must be made by a jury. To that extent, we agree with defendant that he is entitled to a jury trial. But even if the issue of compensatory and punitive damages is tried to a jury, the government is entitled to partial summary judgment on the fact that defendant breached his contract and that he is liable at least for nominal damages.

AFFIRMED IN PART,
REVERSED IN PART,
AND REMANDED.

HOFFMAN, District Judge, concurring in part and dissenting in part:

Wnile I unhesitatingly agree with the majority that Snepp's actions in breaking the contract were willful, deliberate and surreptitious, and that an injunction against future acts was appropriate, my disagreement lies in the rejection of the constructive trust established by the district court. I would affirm the district court in the entirety.

The majority apparently contends that there was no breach of Snepp's fiduciary duties in publishing non-classified material, even though the secrecy agreement provided that all material would first be submitted to the CIA for approval prior to publication. It is true that, in answer to an interrogatory requesting information as to classified material contained in Snepp's book, the government did state that for the purposes of this litigation the government does not contend that any information was classified. The government did not affirmatively state that the book did not contain classified material. The majority states that, on remand for good cause shown, the government may amend its answer to the interrogatory and prove that classified material was published. Once this has been done, it is available to the public and the media and the purpose of any classification has been destroyed.[1] If Snepp had followed the dictates of the Marchetti cases, the CIA would have been afforded the opportunity of segregating classified from unclassified material. Indeed, the majority states that if the classified material is disclosed on remand, then its conclusion as to

1 In United States v. Marchetti (Marchetti I), 466 F. 2d 1309, 1311, Chief Judge Haynsworth, speaking for the court, said: "This case itself illustrates the point that the executive and judicial branches proceed on a case by case basis, the executive branch being dependent on the judiciary to restrict unwarranted disclosures."

the impropriety of imposing a constructive trust would be different. It seems to me that this is too great a penalty to exact where a constructive trust affords a ready solution to the problem and will act as a moderate deterrent, not only to Snepp but also to others similarly inclined.

Contrary to the view of the majority, the 1968 secrecy agreement does, in my judgment, establish a fiduciary relationship in that it requires all material to be submitted for review prior to publication. The majority agrees that a fiduciary relationship exists with regard to the duty not to disclose classified material, but expresses the view that this fiduciary relationship does not apply with respect to unclassified material. The 1968 secrecy agreement was no ordinary contract; it gave life to a fiduciary relationship and invested in Snepp the trust of the CIA. When Snepp accepted this trust, the disclosure of this same information from sources and methods available solely to the CIA did not release him from his fiduciary relationship to remain silent – at least until the CIA had an opportunity to review the material he intended to publish. Even without the secrecy agreement there existed a duty on Snepp not to reveal any confidential information obtained by reason of his employment by the CIA, even after he resigned. Restatement (Second) of Agency, §§ 395, 396, pp. 221-227.

The majority cites Restatement (Second) of Agency, § 400, comment c, as authority for the fact that not all contractual duties on the part of an employee are fiduciary in nature. I agree, but the very next sentence qualifies that comment by stating that "he [the employee] is not thereby liable for the profits made in such time if he does not use the facilities of the employer or confidential information, and does not act in competition with him." Assuredly, Snepp made use of confidential information in this case, whether classified or unclassified.

A constructive trust is defined as a relationship with respect to property subjecting the person by whom the property is held to an equitable duty to convey it to another on the ground that his acquisition or retention of property is wrongful and that he would be unjustly enriched if he were permitted to retain the property. Restatement (Second) on Trusts, § 1e, p. 5. Where a person holding title to property is subject to an equitable duty to convey it to another on the ground that he would be unjustly enriched if he were permitted to retain it, a constructive trust arises. Restatement of Restitution, § 160, p. 640. And in some situations "a benefit has been received by the defendant but the plaintiff has not suffered a corresponding loss or, in some cases, any loss, but nevertheless the enrichment of the defendant would be unjust. In such cases, the defendant may be under a duty to give to the plaintiff the amount by which he has been enriched. Thus where a person with knowledge of the facts wrongfully disposes of the property of another and makes a profit thereby, he is accountable for the profit and not merely for the value of the property of the other with which he wrongfully dealt." Restatement of Restitution, § 1e, p. 14.

Snepp's case fits the foregoing statements like a glove. All of the elements are present and it strikes me as improper that a court should literally require a demand for punitive damages, never demanded by the government, in order to accede to Snepp's demand for jury trial. Moreover, any judgment hereafter obtained against Snepp may indeed be worthless and the government's efforts to effect collection would go down the drain. The remedy afforded by the majority will operate as little or no deterrent in future cases.

I am uncertain as to whether the majority has attempted to establish a rule of punitive damages in federal law, or whether the court relies upon Virginia law, the forum in which this case was tried. Footnote 12 suggests that Virginia law applies.[2] Assuming that state law applies, it

[2] The Virginia law on punitive damages in contract actions is set forth in Wright v. Everett, 197 Va. 608, 90 S.E. 2d 855 (1956), in an action by the owners of real estate against a real estate agent to whom the responsibility of renting plaintiffs' home had been imposed. The agent agreed to investigate the credit reference of any prospective tenant and further agreed to transfer all utility bills to the name of the tenant. He did neither. A jury returned a small verdict for compensatory damages and $3,000 punitive damages. The action was brought in tort even though it arose out of privity of contract between the parties. In reversing the award for punitive damages, the Supreme Court of Appeals (now the Supreme Court) said:

> The general rule is that exemplary or punitive damages (with certain exceptions not here pertinent) are not allowed for breach of contract even though the action is ex delicto and not in assumpsit. (citations omitted)
> As a general rule, damages for breach of contracts are limited to the pecuniary loss sustained. According to the overwhelming weight of authority, exemplary damages are not recoverable in actions for breach of contract although there are dicta and intimations in some of the cases to the contrary. The rule does not obtain, however, in those exceptional cases where the breach amounts to an independent wilful tort, in which event exemplary damages may be recovered under proper allegations of malice, wantonness or oppression -- as, for example, in actions for breach of marriage contracts. 15 Am. Jur., Damages, sec. 273, pp. 708 and 709.

Wright v. Everett, supra, has been applied and cited with approval in opinions by Judges Widener and Merhige, respectively, in National Homes Corporation v. Lester Industries, Inc., 356 F. Supp. 644 (W.D. Va. 1972), and National Handling Industries, Inc. v. Eaton Corp., 391 F. Supp. 977 (E. D. Va. 1975) – the first case pertaining to the issue as to whether a punitive damage judgment is dischargeable in would subject the government, in similar cases, to the varying principles of state law applicable to punitive damages. Overlooked is the fact that different state courts limit, or even prevent altogether, any recovery of punitive damages even where a defendant is entirely culpable, as is Snepp in the instant case. As stated in Dobbs, Remedies, § 3.9, p. 208, the state rules have varying degrees of support, but all have some including (1) that the plaintiff may not recover punitive damages unless he can also recover compensatory damages; (2) that punitive damages must be commensurate with the amount of compensatory damages; (3) that equity will not entertain claims for punitive damages; (4) that mass disaster litigation against one or a small number of defendants should not yield punitive damages; and (5) that a principal is not vicariously liable for culpable torts of his servants.

During the pretrial proceedings in the present case, the government conceded that it could not prove any dollar damages and that it had no adequate remedy at law.[3] In bankruptcy; the second case involving a motion to strike a prayer for punitive damages as alleged in the complaint. Although National Homes Corporation reached the court of appeals on two different occasions, the propriety of an award for punitive damages was not pursued on appeal. National Homes Corporation was based upon a contract containing a covenant not to compete in which an injunction was awarded. Neither case considers the right to a jury trial.

While I assume that punitive damages grounded upon contract may be awarded in Virginia in exceptional cases, I do not believe that the government should be required or permitted to forum-shop for the state which applies the Virginia rule.

[3] Numerous pretrial hearings were conducted with briefs being submitted as to varying questions. The district judge had directed the call of a jury panel for the trial on June 20, 1978. Fifty-six pages of the transcript are devoted to the arguments of counsel as to federal courts located within states which require some recovery of compensatory damages before punitive damages are recoverable, the government would be left with a claim for nominal damages – not exactly an item which will deter former CIA employees and publishers who are anxious to profit commercially on national and international secrets available to the CIA. In fact, I express grave doubts whether the threat of punitive damages, assuming that they are recoverable under state law, will deter former employees who may be secretly or openly protected by the publisher, thereby protecting the former employees from any loss by reason of an adverse judgment.[4] whether any issues remained to be submitted to the jury. Appendix, Vol. II, pp. 4-60. The court made it clear that "if there is any issue of monetary damages other than an accounting, I will submit that to the jury." Appendix, Vol. II, p. 23. Snepp's counsel knew that monetary damages could not be established. His sole contention was that no injury flowed from the fact that Snepp's book had been published. Appendix, Vol. II, p. 25, 26, 31-33, 59, 60. The government responded that no showing of injury was required in this type of case. Appendix, Vol. II, p. 46, 51. Aside from the prayer for relief requesting that "defendant be required to pay to plaintiff such damages as plaintiff has sustained as a result of plaintiff's breach of contract," Joint Appendix, Vol. I, p. 5, it is abundantly clear that the damages sought by plaintiff were for "unjust enrichment." See Joint Appendix, Vol. I, p. 5, par. 21. It is also clear that this type of damage is merely another way of saying that equitable relief is sought on the ground of unjust enrichment. It was not until after hearing this lengthy argument that the court excused the jury. If, on remand, an amended complaint is filed, with the government electing to eliminate its claim for damages quoted above, it seems that, according to the majority opinion, a jury would not be required even on demand by defendant.

[4] It is argued that punitive damages have not been shown to have any effect as deterrents. See Morris, Rough Justice and Some Utopian Ideas, 24 Ill. L. Rev. 730, 736 (1930).

The majority agrees that, with the exception of the issue of damages, Snepp's case presented no issue of fact for the jury to resolve. See footnote 4 of majority opinion. The complaint alleged that Snepp failed to submit the manuscript for prepublication review pursuant to the 1968 secrecy agreement and sought a declaration that Snepp had breached his contractual and fiduciary duties, for which the government was entitled to (1) damages in an unspecified amount for breach of contract, (2) an injunction against further breaches, (3) an accounting of the past and future revenues from the sale of the book (Snepp had already received $60,000 from the publisher), and (4) the imposition of a constructive trust over all past and future revenues. No claim was made for exemplary or punitive damages. It is true that Snepp demanded a jury trial. Since the majority holds that only the request for damages required a jury trial, the issue is whether, in a purely equitable action where there is no dispute of fact, an isolated claim for damages in an unspecified amount requires a jury to make such finding where the plaintiff tacitly abandons its claim for damages. In the first place, it is not a certainty that punitive damages are prohibited in an equity action, although the traditional rule is otherwise. Dobbs, Remedies, § 3.9, p. 211-12. Similarly, a few authorities have held that, by electing to go into equity, plaintiff waives any claim to punitive damages. Karns v. Allen, 135 Wis. 48, 115 N.W. 357 (1908).

If the opinion is intended to create a new federal law on punitive damages, I submit that, in the absence of statute, this cannot be done. The "bounty approach" has been applied in securities fraud situations, environmental cases under 33 U.S.C. § 411, antitrust cases involving treble damages under 15 U.S.C. § 15, and perhaps other like actions, but it has not been applied under federal law without the authority of a statute. I cannot believe that the majority intended to create such a federal law on the subject.

Exemplary damages are not a favorite of the law, the power of giving them should be exercised with great caution, and they are properly confined within the narrowest limits. 22 Am. Jur. 2d, Damages, § 238. In general, there is no cause of action for exemplary damages alone. Id. § 241. There appears to be a split of authority as to whether nominal damages will support a claim for punitive damages. Id. § 242. While I agree that exemplary damages require a jury, when demanded, it is settled that if all the facts warranting such damages are admitted or established without reasonable controversy, there is nothing to submit to the jury on that subject but the amount to be awarded. Id. § 341. However, in this case the reversal in part will require a retrial of the entire proceeding to determine the extent of willfulness on Snepp's part in order to determine the amount of the punitive damage award.

We return to the fundamental question -- was a jury required as demanded by Snepp in this purely equitable action upon which there is no controversy as to facts and liability in the eyes of the majority, bearing in mind that no punitive damages were requested?

If the allegations of the complaint disclose a cause of action which is simply equitable, a jury trial will not be directed merely because the prayer is for judgment for a sum of money. 47 Am. Jur. 2d, Jury, § 42. While the constitutional right to trial by jury cannot be made to depend upon the choice of words used in the pleadings, Dairy Queen v. Wood, 369 U.S. 469 (1962), and courts are not bound by the pleadings or form of action, the determination of the essential character of the suit or remedy must be made by an examination of the entire pleadings and all issues.

47 Am. Jur. 2d, § 38. It is the real, meritorious controversy between the parties as shown by the whole case which is controlling. Id. § 38. In the present case the district court conducted several pretrial conferences and fully explored the pleadings and all issues prior to excusing the prospective jury panel. This action was not taken until the court was advised that no factual dispute existed.

Since the majority has properly held that there are no legal claims available which justify a jury trial except as to damages, I do not believe that Dairy Queen v. Wood, supra, and Beacon Theatres, Inc. v. Westover, 359 U.S. 500 (1959), are applicable. In the latter case, filed as a declaratory judgment action, a counterclaim alleging treble damages for violation of the antitrust laws was filed by the defendant with a demand for jury trial. The district court scheduled the trial of the equitable claim in advance of the law action. Since the equitable interests asserted by plaintiff and the legal issues alleged by defendant were interlocked, the Supreme Court held that a jury trial was mandated. Dairy Queen v. Wood deals more specifically with the problem where the district court granted plaintiff's motion to strike the demand for jury trial where plaintiff and defendant had a contract with respect to the use of the trademark "Dairy Queen." Payments were not made by defendant in accordance with the terms of the contract and plaintiff cancelled. Thereafter, defendant continued to use the trademark and plaintiff sued alleging, inter alia, a default with an indebtedness in excess of $60,000. The complaint asked for an injunction, an accounting to determine the amount of money owing and a judgment for that amount, and an injunction pending accounting to prevent defendant from collecting any money from "Dairy Queen" stores. Defendant denied any breach of contract because of a subsequent oral agreement, laches and estoppel, and denied any violations of antitrust laws. Defendant demanded a jury trial. There is language in Dairy Queen indicating that, where a money judgment is demanded, it presents a legal claim. However, in Snepp's case, while a claim for damages in an unspecified amount was contained within the complaint, it was later conceded by the government that it could not prove dollar damages and, in substance and fact, the claim for damages was abandoned. Manifestly, the only remedy available to the government was the establishment of a constructive trust and an injunction. I cannot believe that the right to nominal damages constitutes an adequate remedy at law; nor do I believe that a court may force a plaintiff to seek punitive damages under the guise of saying that this is an adequate remedy at law.

Since this case, as finally presented after an exhaustive discussion of the various issues, was purely an equitable action, it seems proper to invoke the "clean-up" doctrine as discussed in Katchen v. Landy, 382 U.S. 323 (1966), which permitted, in a bankruptcy proceeding, a judgment for the surrender of a preference in the face of timely jury demand, as being within the traditional equity powers to afford complete relief even though there may exist legal remedies.

Finally, what bothers me appreciably is the effect upon the proper administration of justice. In future cases, if the majority opinion is accepted, district courts, wherever there is a demand for jury trial in an equitable action, will be required to empanel a jury because of the possibility that it may be appropriate to award punitive damages even though plaintiff makes no demand for same. Although the majority does not specifically so state, it apparently stands for the proposition that the government has an adequate remedy at law, either through nominal damages or punitive damages, or both. The remedy at law which will defeat equitable jurisdiction of federal courts must be a remedy at common law. 47 Am. Jur. 2d, § 41. Clearly, in my opinion, there was no remedy at common law available to the government in Snepp's case.

I join the majority in concluding that, in light of the two Marchetti cases, the First Amendment claim is patently frivolous.

With all due respect, I must dissent in part.

APPENDIX C

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Plaintiff,

v. Civil Action No.

FRANK W. SNEPP, III,
Defendant.

COMPLAINT

The United States of America, by its undersigned attorneys, brings this civil action for declaratory and injunctive relief, monetary damages and an accounting of the defendant's profits and other gains hereinafter described, and for its complaint against the defendant alleges as follows:

1. This Court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of this action pursuant to Title 28, United States Code, Section 1345.

2. The defendant, Frank W. Snepp, III, is a resident of the state of Virginia within the jurisdiction of this Court.

3. Venue is proper in the Eastern District of Virginia.

4. This is a civil action arising from the breach of the terms and conditions of an Agreement entered into by defendant Snepp as a condition of his becoming an employee of the Central Intelligence Agency (hereinafter referred to at times as the Agency), which Agreement constitutes a contract between defendant Snepp and the United States, and the breach of the defendant's fiduciary duty to the Agency, by the failure of defendant Snepp to submit the manuscript of a non-fiction book, Decent Interval, for pre-publication review by the Agency.

5. The Central Intelligence Agency, an agency of the United States, was established by the National Security Act of 1947. Under the provisions of the Act and the implementing provisions of Executive Order 12036 and predecessor Executive Orders, the Agency is authorized to collect intelligence information relating to national security and to correlate, evaluate, and disseminate within the United States Government, intelligence relating to national security.

6. The position of Director of Central Intelligence was also established by the National Security Act of 1947. The Director serves as head of the Agency. Section 102(d)(3) of the Act, Title 50, United States Code, Section 403(d)(3), charges the Director with the responsibility for "protecting intelligence sources and methods from unauthorized disclosure."

7. Personnel employed by the Central Intelligence Agency, prior to beginning their official duties, as a condition of employment by the Agency and as a condition of being granted access to classified information, are required to execute an Agreement, such as is attached as Exhibit A. This requirement is in the furtherance of the statutory responsibility to protect intelligence sources and methods from unauthorized disclosure.

8. On September 16, 1968, prior to commencement of his official duties as an employee of the Agency, defendant Snepp entered into an Agreement with the Agency. A true and correct copy of that Agreement is attached to the Complaint as Exhibit A.

9. Defendant Snepp was employed by the Agency from September 16, 1968, until he resigned, effective January 26, 1976. During the period of his Agency employment, defendant Snepp served two tours of duty in South Vietnam. The dates of his tours of duty were from June 2, 1969 to June 21, 1971 and from October 4, 1972 to April 29, 1975.

10. As a condition of his employment, and under the terms of the Agreement, defendant Snepp was required to submit to the Agency for its review any information concerning the Agency or its activities intended for publication, which was gained as a result of his employment, prior to the publication of such information.

11. During the course of his Agency employment, defendant Snepp was assigned to various positions of trust, including those set forth in paragraph 9, supra, and was granted frequent access to classified information, including information regarding intelligence sources and methods. In assigning defendant Snepp to such positions, and granting defendant Snepp access to such information, the Agency relied on the expectation that defendant Snepp would respect the rights and obligations created by the Agreement, including the Agency's rights of pre-publication review.

12. Defendant Snepp recognized and agreed in the Agreement that the obligations undertaken by him in executing that Agreement would remain valid and binding upon him after the termination of his employment with the Central Intelligence Agency.

13. By virtue of the nature of his Agency employment, defendant Snepp had a fiduciary obligation to protect classified information and information pertaining to intelligence sources and methods from unauthorized disclosure and to submit to the Agency for its review any materials concerning the Agency or its activities intended for publication, which was gained as a result of his employment, prior to the publication of such materials. This obligation remained and continues to remain valid and binding on defendant Snepp after the termination of his employment.

14. At no time has the Central Intelligence Agency, expressly or impliedly, released defendant Snepp from the terms and conditions of the aforesaid Agreement and/or his fiduciary obligations. Nor at any time did defendant Snepp ever make a request of the Director of Central Intelligence or of his authorized representative, to be released from his contractual and/or fiduciary obligations.

15. In addition to acknowledging and undertaking his obligations by entering into the Agreement, defendant Snepp repeatedly expressed his intention to Agency representatives to abide by the terms of the Agreement, including the submission of the manuscript, notes, or drafts, in any form, of any writing containing information gained as a result of his employment to the Agency for review prior to publication of that material and the Agency relied upon on these representations to its detriment and to the defendant's unjust enrichment.

16. Notwithstanding his stated acceptance of the terms and conditions of the aforesaid Agreement, the defendant has intentionally breached these terms and conditions.

17. Defendant Snepp submitted to Random House, Inc., for publication a non-fiction book entitled Decent Interval. The book concerns the activities of the Agency in South Vietnam and elsewhere and indicates on its face that it is based in large part on information obtained by defendant Snepp in the course of his Agency employment, including the tours of duty referred to in paragraph 9, supra.

18. In November, 1977, Random House, Inc., published and placed in the stream of commerce for ultimate retail sale the aforementioned non-fiction work, Decent Interval.

19. At no time did defendant Snepp submit manuscripts, in any form, which relate to the non-fiction book entitled Decent Interval, to the Agency for pre-publication review in accordance with the Agreement and/or defendant's fiduciary obligations.

20. Defendant Snepp has breached his contract, the Agreement, with the United States and/or his fiduciary duty to the same by failing to submit his manuscript for pre-publication review.

21. As a result of defendant Snepp's breaches of his contractual and/or fiduciary duties, the United States has been damaged, inter alia, by the undermining of confidence and trust in the Agency, thereby hampering the ability of the Agency and of the Director of Central Intelligence to perform their respective statutory duties as set forth in paragraphs 5 and 6, supra, and defendant Snepp has been unjustly enriched in the amount of profits, advances, royalties and other advantages resulting from the publication of the non-fiction work Decent Interval.

22. In addition to the acts specified above, defendant Snepp has engaged in a course of conduct evidencing a propensity to commit further breaches of his contractual and/or fiduciary duties.

23. As a consequence of defendant Snepp's breach of the Agreement and his fiduciary duties by failing to submit the non-fiction book, Decent Interval, for pre-publication review by the Agency, and statements made by defendant Snepp subsequent to the publication of Decent Interval, the threat exists that defendant Snepp will commit further violations of his contractual and fiduciary obligations, and that such future violations will cause the United States to suffer irreparable injury for which it has no adequate remedy at law.

WHEREFORE plaintiff prays:

A. That this Court declare that defendant Snepp has breached his contract, the Agreement, with the Agency and breached his fiduciary obligations by failing to submit the manuscript, notes, or drafts, in any form, of Decent Interval for pre-publication Agency review.

B. That the defendant be required to pay to the plaintiff such damages as plaintiff has sustained as a result of the defendant's breach of contract.

C. That as a conseuqence of the defendant's breach of fiduciary duty and unjust enrichment, defendant Snepp be ordered to account for all gains, profits, royalties and other advantages derived by the defendant from the sale, serialization, republication rights, in any form, movie rights or other distribution for profit of the work entitled Decent Interval.

D. That the Court impose a constructive trust over the aforementioned gains, profits, royalties, and other advantages derived by the defendant as specified in the preceding paragraph.

E. That the Court order the defendant to relinquish the proceeds accounted for to the plaintiff.

F. That this Court grant to plaintiff such other relief as this Court may deem just and proper, including, but not limited to, an order enjoining any further violation of defendant's contractual and/or fiduciary duties and plaintiff's costs herein.

APPENDIX D

SECRECY AGREEMENT

1. I, Frank W. Snepp, III, understand that upon entering on duty with the Central Intelligence Agency I am undertaking a position of trust in that Agency of the Government responsible to the President and the National Security Council for intelligence relating to the security of the United States of America. I understand that in the course of my employment I will acquire information about the Agency and its activities and about intelligence acquired or produced by the Agency.

2. I have read and understand the provisions of the Espionage Act, Title 18, USC, secs. 793 and 794, and I am aware that uanuthorized disclosure of classified information relating to the national defense may subject me to prosecution for violation of that Act, whether such disclosure be made while I am an employee of the Central Intelligence Agency or at any time thereafter.

3. In addition, however, as I am undertaking a position of trust, I have a responsibility to the Central Intelligence Agency not to disclose any classified information relating to the Agency without proper authorization. I undertake, therefore, not to discuss with or disclose to any person not authorized to hear it such information relating to the Central Intelligence Agency, its activities, or to intelligence material under the control of the Agency. I further understand that this undertaking is a condition of my employment with the Central Intelligence Agency, that its violation may subject me to immediate dismissal for cause or other appropriate disciplinary action, and that this undertaking shall be equally binding upon me after my employment with the Agency as during it.

4. I understand that the burden is upon me to ascertain whether or not information is classified and if so, who is authorized to receive it, and, therefore, I will obtain the decision of authorized officials of the Agency on these points prior to disclosing information relating to the Agency, and failure to obtain such a decision will be grounds for my dismissal.

5. I understand that my unauthorized action or utterance in the nature of a publication or which would reasonably be expected to result in publicity on intelligence or intelligence activities would be in violation of Government and Agency regulations and would be grounds for my dismissal.

6. I understand that for all grievances and complaints there are established procedures within the Agency permitting appeal by any employee of the Agency and to carry any such grievance or complaint outside the Agency will be considered a violation of the undertaking set forth above in paragraph 3. If the appeal procedures are inadequate in any situation, I am aware that the Inspector General is at all times available to any employee with a legitimate criticism, grievance, or complaint.

7. I further understand and agree that my employment by the Central Intelligence Agency is conditioned upon my understanding of and strict compliance with CIA Security Regulations, and the appendices thereto.

8. Inasmuch as employment by the Government is a privilege not a right, in consideration of my employment by CIA I undertake not to publish or participate in the publication of any information or material relating to the Agency, its activities or intelligence activities generally, either during or after the term of my employment by the Agency without specific prior approval by the Agency. I understand that it is established Agency policy to refuse approval to publication of or participation in publication of any such information or material.

9. I agree that all information or intelligence acquired by me in connection with my official duties with the Central Intelligence Agency remains the property of the United States of America, and I will surrender, upon demand by an appropriate official of the Agency or upon separation from the Agency, any material relating to such information and intelligence in my possession.

10. I take the obligations set forth above freely, without any mental reservations or purpose of evasion.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have set my hand and seal this 16 day of Sept, 1968.

APPENDIX E

TERMINATION SECRECY AGREEMENT

1. I, Frank W. Snepp, III, am about to terminate my association with the Central Intelligence Agency. I realize that, by virtue of my duties with that agency, I have been the recipient of information and intelligence that concern the present and future security of the United States of America.

2. I have read and understand the provisions of the espionage laws (sections 793, 794, and 798 of Title 18, United States Code) and I am aware that unauthorized disclosure of classified information relating to the national defense may subject me to prosecution for violation of those laws. Further, I am aware that the National Security Act of 1947 specifically requires the protection of intelligence sources and methods from unauthorized disclosure.

3. I will never divulge, publish, or reveal by writing, word, conduct, or otherwise any classified information, or any information concerning intelligence or CIA that has not been made public by CIA, to any unauthorized person including, but not limited to, any future governmental or private employer or official without the express written consent of the Director of Central Intelligence or his representative.

4. I do not now have in my possession, custody, or control, nor am I retaining or taking away from CIA, any classified or unclassified documents or materials that are the property of CIA, or the custodial responsibility of CIA, having come into my possession as a result of my duties with CIA or otherwise.

5. I have been invited to submit in writing any monetary claims that I may have against CIA or the United States Government that may in any way necessitate the disclosure of information described herein. I have been advised that any such claims will receive full legal consideration. In the event, however, that I am not satisfied with the decisions of CIA concerning any present or future claims I may submit, I will not take any action to obtain satisfaction without prior written notice to CIA, and then only in accordance with such security advice as CIA will furnish me.

6. During my exit processing and during my period of employment with the Central Intelligence Agency, I have been given an opportunity to report all information about the Agency, its personnel, and its operation that I consider should receive official cognizance. Therefore, I am not aware of any information that it is my duty, in the national interest or otherwise, to disclose to the Central Intelligence Agency, nor am I aware of any violations or breaches of security that I have not officially reported, except as set forth on attachments to this sheet.

7. I will report without delay to the appropriate CIA officials, or the Federal Bureau of Investigation, any incident wherein an attempt is made by any unauthorized person to solicit classified information from me.

8. I have been advised that in the event I am called upon by the properly constituted authorities to testify or provide information that I am pledged hereby not to disclose, I will notify CIA immediately; I will also advise said authorities of my secrecy commitments to the United States Government, and I will request that my obligation to testify be established before I am required to do so.

9. I have read and understand the contents of this agreement and voluntarily affix my signature hereto with the full knowledge that it was executed for the mutual benefit of myself and the United States Government. I have read section 1001 of Title 18, United States Code and am aware that the making of a false statement herein or otherwise may be punished as a felony. With this understanding, I state that the information I have given is, to the best of my knowledge and belief, correct and complete, and agree that it may be used by the Government in carrying out its duty to protect the security of information that affects the national defense of the United States.

10. I understand that this agreement will be retained in the files of the Central Intelligence Agency for its future use or for reference by me at any time in the future that I may be requested or ordered to testify or disclose any of the matters included within the scope of this agreement.

APPENDIX F

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff,	)
v.	)	Civil Action
	)	No. 78-92-A
FRANK W. SNEPP, III, Defendant.	)

AFFIDAVIT OF FRANK W. SNEPP, III

I, Frank W. Snepp, III, state the following facts.

1. Since resigning from the Central Intelligence Agency in January, 1976 to the present, I have sought to make my living as a professional writer and I hope to continue in this pursuit.

2. I have retained an author's agent who has made inquiries on my behalf as to publication possibilities.

3. Two national magazines, The Atlantic Monthly and Esquire, have expressed an interest in publishing articles written by me. (Letters from these publications are attached hereto as Exhibits A and B).

4. On September 7, 1978, I completed work on an essay to the point where I am ready to submit it to publishers for possible publication. This essay is a reflection on how government officials compromise their personal beliefs and views in order to stay in step with official policies and perceptions of events. The essay includes a number of vignettes concerning State Department officials whom I knew in Vietnam while serving with the CIA. It also includes reflection on the compromises which I made while in government service. It additionally includes a discussion of the final days of U.S. involvement in Vietnam. This discussion has already been made a part of the public record in this case through my affidavit of March 30, 1978, my deposition, and my testimony in open court. This essay does not contain any classified information. The essay does, however, fall within the terms of the Court's Order of August 2, 1978 because it contains "information which relates to the Central Intelligence Agency [and] its activities. . . which [I] gained during the course of or as a result of [my] employment with the Central Intelligence Agency." Id., ¶(4).

5. On September 10, 1978 I completed work on a short story to the point where I am ready to submit a draft to publishers for consideration. (I had been working simultaneously on both this short story and the essay described above). This story is a fictional work, set in Saigon, concerning a romantic relationship between a CIA officer and a French woman. The story is based on observations which I made while serving with the CIA in Vietnam. This short story does not contain any classified information. However, this story falls within the terms of the Court's Order of August 2, 1978 because it contains information "which relates to the Central Intelligence Agency, its activities [and] intelligence activities generally . . . which [I] gained during the course of or as a result of [my] employment with the Central Intelligence Agency." Id., ¶(4).

6. Because the Court's Order of August 2, 1978 prohibits me from submitting either the essay or the short story described above to the publishers who have expressed interest in accepting my work without first submitting these writings to the CIA for review, the Court's Order imposes a real and present burden on my First Amendment right to publish and my Fifth Amendment right to practice my chosen profession.

7. If either of the two articles described above contained classified information or if I plan to write any other manuscripts which contain classified information, I would of course submit such material to the CIA so that the Agency could determine whether it would be possible to declassify such matters. Indeed, I am aware that if I publish information which damages the national defense or foreign relations, I could be subject to criminal prosecution.

I declare this eleventh day of September, 1978, under penalty of perjury that the foregoing statements are true and correct.

CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY
Washington, D.C. 20505

14 JAN 1974

Honorable Roy L. Ash, Director
Office of Management and Budget
Washington, D.C. 20503

Dear Mr. Ash:

This submits proposed legislation in accordance with Office of Management and Budget Circular No. A-19, revised. Enclosed are six copies of a draft bill, "To amend the National Security Act of 1947, as amended." Also enclosed are copies of a sectional analysis, a comparison with existing law, cost analysis, and drafts of the letters of transmittal to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The proposed legislation amends Section 102 of the National Security Act of 1947 by adding a new subsection (g) defining "information relating to intelligence sources and methods" as a separate category of classified information to be accorded statutory recognition and protection similar to that provided "Restricted Data" under the Atomic Energy Act. The proposed law grants the Director of Central Intelligence the authority to issue rules and regulations limiting the dissemination of information related to intelligence sources and methods of collection and provides for a criminal penalty for the disclosure of such information to unauthorized persons and for injunctive relief.

The continued effectiveness of the United States foreign intelligence collection effort is dependent upon the adequate protection of the intelligence sources and methods involved. In recognition of this, Congress, under Section 102(d)(3) of the National Security Act of 1947, made the Director of Central Intelligence responsible for the protection of intelligence sources and methods from unauthorized disclosure. Unfortunately, there is no statutory authority to implement this responsibility. In recent times, serious damage to our foreign intelligence effort has resulted from unauthorized disclosures of information related to intelligence sources and methods. The circumstances of these disclosures precluded punitive criminal action.

In most cases, existing law is ineffective in preventing disclosures of information relating to intelligence sources and methods. Except in cases involving communications intelligence, no criminal action lies against persons disclosing classified information without authorization unless it is furnished to a representative of a foreign power or the disclosure is made with intent to harm the United States or aid a foreign power. It also requires the revelation in open court of confirming or additional information of such a nature that the potential damage to the national security precludes prosecution. Furthermore, prevention of disclosure in order to avoid serious damage to the intelligence collection effort better serves the national interest than punishment after disclosure; however, there is no existing statutory authority for injunctive relief.

The greatest risks of disclosure come from persons who are entrusted with information relating to intelligence sources and methods through a privity of relationship with the U.S. Government. When such persons, without authorization, disclose information to representatives of the public media, it receives wide publication, and, of course, is revealed to the foreign nations which may be the subject of or otherwise involved in the intelligence activities, leading to their termination as well as political or diplomatic difficulties.

A fully effective security program might require legislation to encompass the willful disclosures of classified information by all persons knowing or having reason to know of its sensitivity. However, in order to limit the free circulation of information in our American society only to the degree essential to the conduct of a national foreign intelligence effort, this legislation proposes that prosectuion be provided only for persons who have authorized possession of such information or acquire it through a privity of relationship to the Government. Other persons collaterally involved in any offense would not be subject to prosectuion. Further, disclosures to Congress upon lawful demand would be expressly excluded from the provisions of the proposed law.

In order to provide adequate safeguards to an accused, while at the same time preventing damaging disclosures during the course of prosecution, subsection (g)(5) provides for an in camera determination by the court of the reasonableness of the designation for limited distribution of the information upon which prosecution is brought.

Finally, in order to prevent disclosures, subsection (g)(6) provides statutory authority for the enjoinder of threatened acts in violation of the subsection upon a showing by the Director of Central Intelligence that any person is about to commit a violation of the subsection or any rule and regulation issued thereunder.

Your advice is requested as to whether there is any objection to the submission of the proposed legislation to the Congress from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

W. E. Colby
Director
