Dear Mr. Lyon,

This will confirm our conversation a few minutes ago concerning the above FOIA response. You indicated that all the documents had been assembled some time ago and were ready to go out, but you were told not to release them because there were documents detrimental to the government's interests related to the termination, and because the termination was open, the legal office directed that no documents were to be released.

I responded that this is not the law and the government is bound by the law. I said there is no FOIA exception for documents detrimental to the government's interests and that your office had an independent duty to comply with the FOIA law. I also said that we were absolutely entitled to a written communication from your office stating this position, which I reiterated was improper and unlawful.

You said that you would send me the written communication this afternoon.

As a federal employee responsible for administering the FOIA, I assume you are aware of the FOIA amendments that permit sanctions against individual agency employees who are found to have acted arbitrarily or capriciously in improperly withholding records.

I would hope that serious reconsideration be given to this decision and that it be immediately reversed, and that the records be produced forthwith.

Sincerely,
