Tuesday, April 15: Minority leadership called a last-minute meeting on the night of the Juneau Passover Seder. As the only staffer in Juneau, I am required to attend, but am assured that it will not last long & I will not miss my religious observance. The meeting extended past the time my ride was supposed to pick me up, and Tarr ignored my requests to leave and continued asking questions. [REDACTED] wrote me a note that they were trying to finish so I can leave. By the time the meeting had concluded, I missed the majority of the event and would have arrived by cab over 2 hours late.

April 20: Amanda Coyne in ADN writes -
"More could have been made of those remarks, the ones that did matter and did follow a pattern — that is, if the women in the Legislature organized, forgot their differences and banded together to form their own caucus. There's enough of them now to constitute a force to be reckoned with, if some of them, two House members in particular — one Dem and one
