1. "The following information dates up to 4 Feb 54:

General Background on Stargard

- "Stargard is situated on the Ina River (German: Ihna). Because it was one of the most badly damaged parts of western Poland, it now has the status of a district town, with a population of around 12 to 15,000. (Before World War II, the population was around 40,000.) The old part of town received particularly heavy damage during the war.
- "There are no visible traces in present-day Stargard of its former role. It is connected to the Baltic Sea by the Ina and Odra Rivers and used to offer competition to Szczecin as a harbor. Although only a small river, the Ina used to be able to accommodate large ships. Only the old mill-gate (mlynska brama) and the salt warehouses are still there as reminders of Stargard's former importance.
- "Because of its situation within a rich agricultural area, Stargard used to play quite an important part as a trade center and, to some extent, as a reprocessing center for agricultural commodities. Shortly before and during World War II, Stargard was transformed into a huge center of repair-shops for railway cars and engines. Prior to the war, workshops and railway depots were built in the northern part of town. After 1940, another one [source does not specify what] - an even larger one - was added in the southern part of town. Both these objects [sic] were damaged during the war but have been rebuilt and are again in operation.

Present Industrial Role

- "Stargard has nothing of great importance to offer from an industrial point of view. There is a fairly large soap and laundry-flake factory and a few other smaller plants.

The Six Year Plan foresees the construction of a large condensed milk factory.  this construction has not yet been started.

6. "Near Stargard, in Kluczewo (German: Kluetzow), one of Pomerania's largest sugar plants is in operation. Very near the sugar plant are an electrically-run flour mill and a large brick factory used in the large town reconstruction program in Central Poland.

Military Role

7. "Although not very far from the large exercise-ground areas, Stargard itself is of only limited importance as a military garrison. A detachment of the 43rd Infantry Regiment is stationed in the reconstructed military barracks. [Source points out that the barracks have been reconstructed in a pre-World War II style.] This Regiment is a part of the 12th Infantry Division stationed in Szczecin. I have heard that this unit is motorized. The Stargard garrison is in daily contact with the tank regiment stationed in Slupsk (German: Stolp). It is said that some tank regiment supplies are kept in Stargard. On an almost daily basis, instructors from Slupsk go to Stargard.

Map of Stargard

8. "I have prepared a map of Stargard and the surrounding area drawn to a scale of 1: 10,000, to which the following legend applies. [The aforementioned map is available at the CIA Map Library.]

LEGEND

No.	Object	Location on Plan	Remarks
1	Main railway station	E-2	None.
2	Railway stop on the Osiedle-Pyrzyskie line. [Osiedle not in NIS Gazetteer for Poland]	E-5	This stopping-point is at the spot where the railway repair workshops constructed during World War II are located. [See Para 4.]
3	Narrow-gauge railway station	E-1/2	This narrow-gauge line connects Stargard, via Stara Dabrowa (German: Alt-Demerow), to Kolobrzeg (German: Kolberg). A freight-yard is attached to this station, from which sidings lead off to the nearby slaughterhouse, flour mills and gas works.
4	Railway workshops	D/E-1/2	Dating from the pre-World War II period.
5	Railway workshops	C/D/E-5/6	Constructed during World War II and now under further expansion.
6	PKS stopping-off point	E-2	On Dworcowa Street. There are no PKS hangars in Stargard. The PKS busses only go through Stargard on their way to localities located farther east or south. Their final stopping point is in Szczecin.
7	Electric transformers	E-2	Stargard serves as one of the main distributor-centers for the high-tension net covering Pomerania. From its huge distributing station, lines of 110 KV go to Szczecin, Gryfino (German: Greifenhagen), Corzow (German: Landsberg/Warthe), and Bialogard (German: Belgard). Stargard is also the distribution-center for another high-tension net with a voltage up to 80 KV.

No.	Object	Location on Plan	Remarks
59	Former airfield	C/D-8/9	Originally constructed by German military authorities. No longer used. Concrete runways still recognizable. It is said that the Polish military authorities have deliberately left the field in this run-down condition as a kind of camouflage for the new airfield constructed in 1952-53.
60	New airfield	A/B/C-7/8/9	South of Kluczewo. Bordered on the east by the Stargard-Pyrzyce (German: Pyritz) railway line and stretching westward to as far as the Slotnica (German: Schloetenitz) and Burzykowo (German: Buslar) PGMs. (Slotnica and Burzykowo not in NIS Gazetteer for Poland.) Parallel to the road connecting these two localities, hangars and other buildings have been constructed on the airfield terrain. It is said that a Soviet detachment (jet-propelled planes) is stationed on this airfield.
61	Gizynek kolkhoz (German: Giesenfeld)	C-5	State-controlled kolkhoz specially dedicated to youth. Introduced in 1953 as a new, experimental type of kolkhoz for youth brigades in order to make farming more attractive to young people. Conditions are exceptionally attractive. Young people considered not only as farmworkers but also as instructors and agitators for the farming nationalization program.
61a	Witkowo kolkhoz (German: Wittighof)	E/F-7	Along lines similar to the Gizynek kolkhoz."
