

authority and discretion to appoint amici.”) (internal citations omitted). Proposed amici have provided notice to counsel for the United States, the Defendants, and Non-Party Joshua Miller of proposed amici’s intent to file an amici curiae brief. Mr. Miller consents to the filing of the amici curiae brief. The United States, Defendant Brand, and Defendant Zhao take no position on the filing of the brief.

Amici curiae typically assist a district court “in cases of general public interest by making suggestions to the court, by providing supplementary assistance to existing counsel, and by insuring a complete and plenary presentation of difficult issues so that the court may reach a proper decision.” Students for Fair Admissions, Inc. v. President & Fellows of Harvard Coll., 308 F.R.D. 39, 52 (D. Mass. 2015) (cleaned up); see also NGV Gaming, Ltd. v. Upstream Point Molate, LLC, 355 F. Supp. 2d 1061, 1067 (N.D. Cal. 2005) (“District courts frequently welcome amicus briefs from non-parties concerning legal issues that have potential ramifications beyond the parties directly involved . . .”). Proposed amici are well-positioned to provide the Court with such assistance in this case.

As members and representatives of the news media and organizations that advocate on behalf of the First Amendment and newsgathering rights of journalists, proposed amici have a strong interest in ensuring that non-party reporters like Mr. Miller are properly protected from being compelled to testify about their communications with sources, particularly where, as here, the evidence sought by the United States could be obtained by less intrusive means. Proposed amici’s brief will provide the Court with their informed perspective concerning the chilling effect that such compelled testimony has on the news media’s ability to fulfill its constitutionally protected role of informing the public.

Lead amicus, the Reporters Committee, and other news media organizations have appeared as amici curiae in courts around the country in cases that implicate the compelled testimony of journalists or production of journalistic work product. See, e.g., Br. of Amicus Curiae the Reporters Committee in Support of Petitioner, Shriner v. the Superior Court of the State of California, et al., Case No. E076320 (Cal. Ct. Appeal) (filed Dec. 23, 2020); Br. of Amicus Curiae the Reporters Committee, Subpoena Duces Tecum to KIRO TV, Inc., et al., Case No. 20-0-616926 (Wash. Superior Ct.) (filed June 29, 2020); Br. of Amici Curiae the Reporters Committee and 19 Media Organizations in Support of Reporter Jamie Kalven’s Mot. to Quash Subpoena, People v. March, Case No. 2017-CR-9700 (Ill. Cir. Ct.) (filed Nov. 26, 2018); Br. for Amici Curiae the Reporters Committee and 48 Media Organizations in Support of Non-Party Respondent, People v. Juarez, APL-2017-00057 (N.Y.) (filed Oct. 6, 2017); Br. of Amicus Curiae the Reporters Committee in Support of Non-Party Witness John Sepulvado, United States v. Patrick, Civil No. 3:16-cr-00051-BR (D. Or.) (filed Feb. 22, 2017).

The perspective and experience of the proposed amici will assist the Court in resolving Mr. Miller’s pending Motion to Quash Trial Subpoena or for a Protective Order, which presents issues of great importance to the news media and the public at large. No prejudice to the Court or the parties will result from allowing proposed amici to file the attached amici curiae brief in this case, and the filing of the brief will not delay or otherwise interfere with the judicial process.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, proposed amici respectfully request that the Court grant their motion for leave to file the attached amici curiae brief.

Respectfully submitted,

Lead amicus, the Reporters Committee, is an unincorporated nonprofit association founded by journalists and media lawyers in 1970, when the nation's press faced an unprecedented wave of government subpoenas forcing reporters to name confidential sources. Today, its attorneys provide pro bono legal representation, amicus curiae support, and other legal resources to protect First Amendment freedoms and the newsgathering rights of journalists.

Amici agree with Mr. Miller that the Subpoena is unenforceable for the reasons set forth in his Memorandum in Support of the Motion to Quash. See ECF No. 187. Amici write to underscore the chilling effect that such non-party subpoenas have on journalists' ability to engage in First Amendment-protected newsgathering activity that is of critical value to the public. As members and representatives of the news media and organizations that advocate on behalf of the First Amendment and newsgathering rights of journalists, amici have a strong interest in ensuring that reporters are properly protected from government-issued subpoenas and other forms of compulsory process that would force them to testify about their communications with sources, or would otherwise disclose their journalistic work product, in connection with criminal investigations and prosecutions, particularly where, as here, the United States seeks evidence that would be largely peripheral, redundant, or could be obtained by less intrusive means. See id. at 2

Compelling reporters to testify about their communications with sources—even on-the-record, nonconfidential conversations—harms the newsgathering and reporting process, to the ultimate detriment of the public. It embroils reporters in time-consuming litigation and diverts news organizations' already scarce resources away from newsgathering and reporting—burdens that weigh especially heavily on journalists who regularly investigate and report on matters that could involve potential criminal activity, and thus whose interviews and other work product could regularly be the target of federal prosecutors. Moreover, enforcement of subpoenas like the one at issue here threatens to erode public trust in the independence of the news media by creating the misimpression that journalists are an investigative arm of prosecutors and courts. That risk is particularly acute in situations where, as here, a journalist’s testimony is sought in connection with a criminal investigation launched after publication of the relevant reporting. Simply put, enforcement of government subpoenas that seek to compel journalists like Mr. Miller to testify in criminal trials risks making reporters’ existing and potential sources—both confidential and non-confidential—more reluctant to speak candidly, or simply unwilling to speak at all.

For these reasons, federal courts of appeals, including the First Circuit, have long recognized the importance of protecting non-party journalists from compulsory process aimed at their work product and sources. See, e.g., Cusumano v. Microsoft Corp., 162 F.3d 708, 714 (1st Cir. 1998) (“Courts afford journalists a measure of protection from discovery initiatives in order not to undermine their ability to gather and disseminate information.”) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted); Shoen v. Shoen, 5 F.3d 1289, 1295 (9th Cir. 1993) (noting “a ‘lurking and subtle threat’ to the vitality of a free press if disclosure of non-confidential information ‘becomes routine and casually, if not cavalierly, compelled’”) (quoting United States v. La Rouche Campaign, 841 F.2d 1176, 1182 (1st Cir. 1988)).

Moreover, just last month, the Department of Justice itself further underscored the importance of protecting journalists from compelled process by issuing a revised Policy Regarding Obtaining Information From or Records of Members of the News Media; and Regarding Questioning, Arresting, or Charging Members of the News Media. See 28 C.F.R. § 50.10; see also Press Release, Department of Justice, Attorney General Garland Announces Revised Justice Department News Media Policy, U.S. DEP’T OF JUSTICE (Oct. 26, 2022), <https://www.justice.gov/opa/pr/attorney-general-garland-announces-revised-justice-department-news-media-policy> (“Because freedom of the press requires that members of the news media have the freedom to investigate and report the news, the new regulations are intended to provide enhanced protection to members of the news media from certain law enforcement tools and actions that might unreasonably impair newsgathering.”). Though it appears the Subpoena was issued pursuant to Section 50.10(c)(1), an exception to the prohibition on compulsory legal process to journalists that permits the Department to use such process for purposes of “authentica[ing] for evidentiary purposes information or records that have already been published,” the testimony sought by the open-ended Subpoena at issue here would, as a practical matter, go beyond that narrow purpose. Indeed, any time reporters are required to testify about their newsgathering or reporting, without limitation, the scope of questioning is likely to reach beyond mere authentication to, for example, confidential sources and methods of newsgathering relied upon in the course of reporting.

Especially here, where the testimony sought to be compelled from Mr. Miller, a non-party journalist, could be obtained through less-intrusive means, ECF No. 187 at 2, enforcement of the Subpoena not only would impose an undue burden on Mr. Miller, but also would unnecessarily chill future newsgathering and reporting about matters of significant public concern throughout Massachusetts. For these reasons, amici respectfully urge the Court to grant the Motion to Quash.

ARGUMENT

I. The use of compulsory process against a non-party journalist chills newsgathering by eroding trust between reporters and their sources and undermining the public’s perception of the news media’s independence.

Journalists depend on sources to gather and report the news. Developing and maintaining the trust of sources is, accordingly, vital to effective newsgathering. See Beth Winegarner, Five Tips for Journalists Who Want to Do a Better Job of Cultivating Sources, POYNTER (June 8, 2012), <https://perma.cc/2MFY-RFNM> (“Sources who trust and respect you will come to you first when they hear news on the down-low. But it takes time to earn that trust and respect.”). When journalists are forced to testify about their newsgathering efforts, including their communications with sources, their ability to build and maintain those important relationships is undermined. Indeed, sources who believe that reporters may be forced to testify against them in court may refuse to speak on the record—or at all—to reporters. See Gonzales v. NBC, Inc., 194 F.3d 29, 35 (2d Cir. 1998) (noting the threat of compelled disclosure to the news media’s ability to perform its duties when potential sources may be “deterred from speaking to the press, or insist[] on remaining anonymous, because of the likelihood that they w[ill] be sucked into litigation”).

This remains true when, as here, the government seeks to compel a journalist to testify about an interview with a non-confidential source. Id. (noting that the public policy concerns underlying the protection of sources and journalistic work product “are relevant regardless of whether the information sought from the press is confidential”); Delaney v. Superior Ct., 50 Cal.3d 785, 802 n.25 (1990) (“That the information sought is not confidential does not necessarily mean it is not sensitive and equally worthy of protection from disclosure.”).³

As an initial matter, even mostly on-the-record interviews with non-confidential sources can elicit information that is provided in confidence and not intended for publication. For example, during the course of an otherwise on-the-record interview, a reporter and source may have some discussion that they agree is off the record or on background. But even assuming an interview with a non-confidential source is entirely on the record, compelled testimony risks opening a reporter's entire newsgathering process to inquiry. And such questioning may, for example, touch on the means by which the reporter first learned of a potential story, how a source was identified, and how an interview was obtained. Under such questioning, reporters may be compelled to reveal information not only about their on-the-record conversations with non-confidential sources, but also information about confidential sources and methods of newsgathering. Put another way, even though Mr. Zhao's interview with Mr. Miller was on the record, should Mr. Miller be forced to testify at trial regarding that interview and his reporting for the Article, the scope of questioning could reach beyond the mere authentication of Mr. Zhao's on-the-record statements to, for example, seek information about other sources Mr. Miller may have relied on. See Baker v. Goldman Sachs & Co., 669 F.3d 105, 110 (2d Cir. 2012) (recognizing that questions asked on direct examination about "the accuracy of a particular news article" "cannot be divorced from unpublished material relating to the article."). Moreover, even if the prosecution could tailor its questions to avoid privileged subject matter, the defense may cross-examine Mr. Miller on the subject of the Article, and such cross-examination may compel disclosure of protected information. See id. at 111 (noting that once the prosecution has "conducted its desired direct examination [of a journalist], the Confrontation Clause requires that the usual cross examination as to credibility and matters within the scope of the direct examination be allowed.") (citing United States v. Treacy, 639 F.3d 32, 44-45 (2d Cir. 2011)). The compelled disclosure of such information erodes the trust of sources, and damages journalists' ability to write deeply-researched stories based on the input of multiple well-placed and knowledgeable sources.

These risks to newsgathering are particularly salient in situations like this one, where the government launched a criminal investigation into the subject of a news article after the publication of that article. Compelling the reporter who wrote that article to then testify in the resulting criminal trial increases the likelihood that members of the public, including existing and potential sources, will incorrectly view journalists as an extension of law enforcement, thus undermining journalists' ability to cultivate and maintain the trust of sources. Sources who believe that reporters are investigative agents for prosecutors and courts may refuse to speak candidly to reporters, or simply refuse to speak to them at all. Pugh v. Avis Rent A Car Sys., Inc., No. M8-85, 1997 WL 669876, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 28, 1997) (noting that “[m]any doors will be closed to reporters who are viewed as investigative resources of litigants”).

An independent press—that is, a press neither beholden to the state nor subject to political whims—is indispensable to an informed citizenry. See, e.g., New Regulations Regarding Obtaining Information from or Records of Members of the News Media; and Regarding Questioning, Arresting, or Charging Members of the News Media, U.S. Dep’t of Justice (Oct. 26, 2022), <https://www.justice.gov/ag/page/file/1547041/download> (announcing revised regulations) (“A free and independent press is vital to the functioning of our democracy.”); Pennkamp v. State of Fla., 328 U.S. 331, 355 (1946) (Frankfurter, J., concurring) (describing a “free press” as “indispensable to a free society”); Chevron Corp. v. Berlinger, 629 F.3d 297, 306 (2d Cir. 2011) (recognizing “the public’s interest in being informed by a vigorous, aggressive and independent press”) (quotation marks omitted). The fact of independence, however, is not enough. To play its crucial role, the press must not only be independent, but also be perceived as independent—just as courts must not only be fair, but also be perceived as fair. E.g., Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v. Virginia, 448 U.S. 555, 571–72 (1980) (“To work effectively, it is important that society’s criminal process satisfy the appearance of justice.”) (quotation marks omitted); Gonzales, 194 F.3d at 35 (acknowledging “the symbolic harm of making journalists appear to be an investigative arm of . . . the government” and emphasizing the “paramount public interest in the maintenance of a vigorous, aggressive and independent press capable of participating in robust, unfettered debate over controversial matters”); Shoen, 5 F.3d at 1295 (explaining that if journalists were not perceived as independent, they “might well be shunned by persons who might otherwise give them information without a promise of confidentiality, barred from meetings which they would otherwise be free to attend and to describe, or even physically harassed if, for example, observed taking notes or photographs at a public rally”) (quoting Duane D. Morse & John W. Zucker, The Journalist’s Privilege in Testimonial Privileges 474–75 (Scott N. Stone & Ronald S. Liebman eds., 1983)).

Compelled process not only undermines the perception of independence vital to an effective press, it also threatens to constrain the editorial discretion of the news media by impacting its “selection and choice of material” for publication. CBS, Inc. v. Democratic Nat’l Comm., 412 U.S. 94, 124 (1973). Journalists may hesitate to investigate newsworthy matters of public controversy for fear their work will be co-opted by prosecutors and, potentially, used in criminal prosecutions, and news organizations may be reluctant to publish “any information they fear would excite the interest of current or prospective litigants.” United States v. Marcos, No. SSSS 87 CR. 598 (JFK), 1990 WL 74521, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. June 1, 1990).

An independent press plays an essential role in a democratic society. The more closely journalists and news organizations are associated with the compelled disclosure of their work product and communications with sources at the behest of prosecutors, however, the less access journalists will have to people, places, and events that urgently call for press coverage.

Protections for reporters' communications with both confidential and non-confidential sources is thus essential to safeguarding the free flow of information to the public. And courts should not readily enforce government subpoenas compelling the testimony of non-party journalists, or requiring the production of other journalistic work-product, especially where—as here—the information sought from the non-party reporter could be obtained through less-intrusive means that are less damaging to First Amendment interests.

II. The use of compulsory process against non-party journalists imposes financial and other burdens that impede newsgathering and reporting on matters of public concern.

Compelling non-party journalists to testify about their communications with sources forces reporters and editors to devote scarce time and financial resources to participating in legal proceedings, rather than to investigating and reporting the news. Reviewing notes, gathering materials, conferring with editors and counsel, preparing for direct and cross-examination, and testifying at trial demand a significant time investment on the part of a reporter. And diverting journalists' time and attention away from newsgathering and reporting is not simply inconvenient; it can deprive the public of meaningful access to newsworthy information. Indeed, many newsrooms over the past decade have been forced to lay off journalists, leading to a decline in their ability to pursue in-depth, investigative stories; further reducing the number of reporters available to work on stories only exacerbates the problem. See, e.g., Clara Hendrickson, Local Journalism in Crisis: Why America Must Revive Its Local Newsrooms, BROOKINGS (Nov. 12, 2019), <https://perma.cc/W9X4-GHPQ>. Simply put, the time spent by journalists and their editors responding to non-party subpoenas, is time not spent on investigating and reporting news stories of importance to the public.

These burdens of compelled process weigh especially heavy on investigative reporters who regularly cover matters involving potential criminal activity. The very job of investigative reporters is to “gather information about accidents, crimes, and other matters of special interest that often give rise to litigation.” O’Neill v. Oakgrove Constr., 71 N.Y.2d 521, 526–27 (1988). It stands to reason then that “attempts to obtain evidence by subjecting the press to discovery as a nonparty would be widespread if not restricted on a routine basis,” id., and would most frequently target investigative reporters. See also La Rouche Campaign, 841 F.2d at 1182 (“[S]tate and federal authorities are [not] free to annex the news media as an investigative arm of government.”) (quoting Branzburg v. Hayes, 408 U.S. 665, 709 (1972) (Powell, J., concurring)). If investigative journalists who report on potential and actual criminal activity are routinely compelled to testify in criminal proceedings that relate to the subject matter of their reporting, the “practical burdens on time and resources” and the “disruption of newsgathering activity[] would be particularly inimical to the vigor of a free press.” O’Neill, 71 N.Y.2d at 527. Indeed, as the First Circuit has recognized, not only would the “frequency of subpoenas . . . preempt the otherwise productive time of journalists and other employees,” it would “measurably increase expenditures for legal fees.” La Rouche Campaign, 841 F.2d at 1182; see also Gonzales, 194 F.3d at 35 (explaining that “[i]f the parties to any lawsuit were free to subpoena the press at will, it would likely become standard operating procedure for those litigating against an entity that had been the subject of press attention to sift through press files in search of information supporting their claims,” resulting in the “wholesale exposure of press files to litigant scrutiny,” and burdening “the press with heavy costs of subpoena compliance”). Through investigative reporting, journalists like Mr. Miller provide a vital service to the public. Their ability to provide this service is threatened, however, when their reporting leads to time-consuming, compelled disclosure of their communications with sources and other journalistic work product in criminal matters.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, amici respectfully urge the Court to grant Mr. Miller's Motion to Quash.

Respectfully submitted,

APPENDIX A STATEMENT OF IDENTITY OF AMICI CURIAE

The Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press (the “Reporters Committee”) is an unincorporated nonprofit association. The Reporters Committee was founded by leading journalists and media lawyers in 1970 when the nation’s news media faced an unprecedented wave of government subpoenas forcing reporters to name confidential sources. Today, its attorneys provide pro bono legal representation, amicus curiae support, and other legal resources to protect First Amendment freedoms and the newsgathering rights of journalists.

The Associated Press (“AP”) is a news cooperative organized under the Not-for-Profit Corporation Law of New York. The AP’s members and subscribers include the nation’s newspapers, magazines, broadcasters, cable news services and Internet content providers. The AP operates from 280 locations in more than 100 countries. On any given day, AP’s content can reach more than half of the world’s population.

Association of Alternative Newsmedia (“AAN”) is a not-for-profit trade association which represents nearly 100 alternative newspapers across North America. There are a wide range of publications in AAN, but all share an intense focus on local news, culture and the arts; an emphasis on point-of-view reporting and narrative journalism; a tolerance for individual freedoms and social differences; and an eagerness to report on issues and communities that many mainstream media outlets ignore. AAN members speak truth to power.

The Atlantic Monthly Group LLC is the publisher of The Atlantic and TheAtlantic.com. Founded in 1857 by Oliver Wendell Holmes, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow and others, The Atlantic continues its 160-year tradition of publishing award-winning journalism that challenges assumptions and pursues truth, covering national and international affairs, politics and public policy, business, culture, technology and related areas.

Axios Media Inc. is a digital media company with a mission to deliver news in an efficient format that helps professionals get smarter faster across an array of topics, including politics, science, business, health, tech, media, and local news.

Californians Aware is a nonpartisan nonprofit corporation organized under the laws of California and eligible for tax exempt contributions as a 501(c)(3) charity pursuant to the Internal Revenue Code. Its mission is to foster the improvement of, compliance with and public understanding and use of, the California Public Records Act and other guarantees of the public's rights to find out what citizens need to know to be truly self-governing, and to share what they know and believe without fear or loss.

The Center for Investigative Reporting (d/b/a Reveal), founded in 1977, is the nation's oldest nonprofit investigative newsroom. Reveal produces investigative journalism for its website <https://www.revealnews.org/>, the Reveal national public radio show and podcast, and various documentary projects. Reveal often works in collaboration with other newsrooms across the country.

The Committee to Protect Journalists is an independent, nonprofit organization that promotes press freedom worldwide. We defend the right of journalists to report the news without fear of reprisal. CPJ is made up of about 40 experts around the world, with headquarters in New York City. A board of prominent journalists from around the world helps guide CPJ's activities.

Courthouse News Service is a California-based legal news service that publishes a daily news website with a focus on politics and law. The news service also publishes daily reports on new civil actions and appellate rulings in both state and federal courts throughout the nation. Subscribers to the daily reports include law firms, universities, corporations, governmental institutions, and a wide range of media including newspapers, television stations and cable news services.

Dow Jones & Company is the world's leading provider of news and business information. Through The Wall Street Journal, Barron's, MarketWatch, Dow Jones Newswires, and its other publications, Dow Jones has produced journalism of unrivaled quality for more than 130 years and today has one of the world's largest newsgathering operations. Dow Jones's professional information services, including the Factiva news database and Dow Jones Risk & Compliance, ensure that businesses worldwide have the data and facts they need to make intelligent decisions. Dow Jones is a News Corp company.

The E.W. Scripps Company is the nation's fourth-largest local TV broadcaster, operating a portfolio of 61 stations in 41 markets. Scripps also owns Scripps Networks, which reaches nearly every American through the national news outlets Court TV and Newsy and popular entertainment brands ION, Bounce, Grit, Laff and Court TV Mystery. The company also runs an award-winning investigative reporting newsroom in Washington, D.C., and is the longtime steward of the Scripps National Spelling Bee.

First Amendment Coalition ("FAC") is a nonprofit public interest organization dedicated to defending free speech, free press and open government rights in order to make government, at all levels, more accountable to the people. The Coalition's mission assumes that government transparency and an informed electorate are essential to a self-governing democracy. FAC advances this purpose by working to improve governmental compliance with state and federal open government laws. FAC's activities include free legal consultations on access to public records and First Amendment issues, educational programs, legislative oversight of California bills affecting access to government records and free speech, and public advocacy, including extensive litigation and appellate work. FAC's members are news organizations, law firms, libraries, civic organizations, academics, freelance journalists, bloggers, activists, and ordinary citizens.
