2022 Outside Spending, by Candidate

SECTIONS

Some candidates attract a great deal of outside spending as various interests attempt to help or harm their election bids; others, not so much. Furthermore, some waves of spending come during the primary elections, and others don't hit until the general. Outside interest groups have a wide range of vehicles at their disposal to use for independent expenditures, electioneering communications and communication costs in contested races-- including super PACs, which may raise unlimited sums from almost any source and use the funds for ads that overtly advocate for or against a candidate. Special interest groups may also seek to influence voters through 501(c) nonprofit operations; these aren't primarily supposed to be involved in politics, but some appear to find ways to skirt the restriction. These nonprofit operations, as well as other kinds of committees known as 527 groups, both register with the IRS.
