Yes. The congressman did a great job.

If he can stay, or come back, for another round, he might also ask:

Why did congress appropriate 10 billion for potential losses?

Did the company win awards for its technology?

Did DOE try to influence those awards?

How much private capital went into the company?

Did it go in before the loan?

Would those investors have done their own due diligence?

Etc

Do you think those and the other questions Mr. Dingell asked got good points across?
