City Manager's Resignation Paves the Way for Renewed Vision and Collaboration in City Governance

Dallas, TX (Feb. 21, 2024) – City Manager, T.C. Broadnax has resigned effective June 3, 2024, at the suggestion of the majority of the Dallas City Council. This resignation is a necessary step towards fostering an environment conducive to maximizing the potential of our beloved city.

After careful consideration, it has become apparent that the relationship between the mayor and the city manager has not been conducive to effective governance and the advancement of Dallas' interests. The dynamic between these key citywide figures has unfortunately hindered the realization of our city's full potential, and it is imperative that we address this issue head-on in order to move forward.

Dallas city council members are committed to stepping into the void of leadership and working collaboratively to chart a new course for the city. It is essential to recognize that effective governance requires collective effort and a shared commitment to the well-being of our community.

As we embark on this new chapter, the Dallas City Council is dedicated to continuing an environment of transparency, accountability, and inclusivity in city governance. We remain steadfast in our commitment to serving the interests of all residents and ensuring that Dallas continues to thrive and prosper.

In the near term, we will be working diligently to select an interim city manager. This presents us with a valuable opportunity to conduct a national search for a new city manager who shares our vision for the future of our city. We are confident that with the support of our residents and stakeholders, we will emerge from this transition stronger and more united.
