

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Wednesday, July 17, 2024

Northline Seafoods' Freezer Barge Returns to Full Operations

Production Capacity on the Hannah Restored After Successful Repairs and Safety Enhancements

Dillingham, Alaska — Bristol Bay salmon processor Northline Seafoods is back to full operations onboard their freezer barge, the Hannah, after an electrical fire under one of its three spiral freezers slowed production capacity earlier this season.

Due to the hard work and continued efforts of Northline engineers and our freezer manufacturers, all three spiral freezers are now operational.

In the last week, production onboard the Hannah has ramped up to include a period where more than 1,000,000 pounds of sockeye were purchased, frozen, and boxed in 48 hours. Production capacity onboard the Hannah will continue to increase as Northline's engineering team works through the systems.

"It is important that we communicate to our fleet and our partners that we are learning from the mechanical challenges so that we may come in even stronger and more competitive next year," said Ben Blakey, Northline Seafoods CEO.

Northline Seafoods is currently buying salmon in the Nushagak, Naknek, and Ugashik districts and will be a late-season buyer, operating until August 10th or later.

Media inquiries: media@northlineseafoods.com.

About Northline Seafoods:

Northline Seafoods is a seafood processing company dedicated to providing high-quality, sustainably sourced seafood. With a focus on technology and transparency, Northline Seafoods is leading change through groundbreaking innovations and modernization of the supply chain of wild Alaskan salmon.