

#4

You are right, I should have said, some black people. Sorry, I was incensed at the ignorance displayed by this woman. Now, back to your statement about being scared of someone like me. Is that because I speak the truth or something else? I have never had a complaint about the way I treat people, because I treat everyone the same.... courteous, but cautious. Having negative feelings about someone or a sub-group of certain people, is different than treating them differently because of it, which I do not. Actually, I treat them better, when possible, to prevent any such speculation. If you don't recognize the difference, you need to educate yourself. It's called self preservation. With ~~the~~ amount of violence and complete disregard for civility in much of the black sub-culture, one would have to be brain dead not to take the precautions necessary to preserve one's life. One group has facts to base their caution on. This lady is clearly looking for retribution and victim status based on nothing. Sorry, don't agree!

Thursday at 11:37 PM · Like · Reply