The Illinois State Board of Education (ISBE) is in the process of revising our media permission policy and related media consent forms and has determined that the creation and implementation of a standardized process is needed to specify an orderly means for obtaining and using photographs of people, including students and educators in print and digital media.

Specifically, we are interested in knowing whether your state education agency (SEA) has a standardized procedure for taking pictures of people attending conferences and posting pictures of students and educators participating in school-related activities in its press releases, social media, publications, and on its website? If so, would you please describe? Would your SEA have any model media permission policies or procedures that we might review as we revise our own? We would be interested to see state administrative rules as well, if available.

Finally, how does your SEA address privacy issues surrounding the use and publication of such personal images/photographs (e.g., Federal Educational Rights and Privacy Act (20 U.S.C. § 1232g)(FERPA))?

We very much appreciate any assistance you might provide regarding this matter.

If you have any questions, you may contact me at (312) 814-2227.

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR Governor Terry E. Branstad ★ Lt. Governor Kim Reynolds

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: Monday, May 1, 2017
CONTACT: Governor's Office 515-281-5211

Gov. Branstad, Lt. Gov. Reynolds respond to Attorney General Miller's reversal of opinion

Gov. Terry Branstad

"Tom Miller was crystal clear last December when he said Lt. Governor Reynolds could act upon existing law and appoint a Lt. Governor when she becomes Governor upon my resignation.

'Our office has researched the law and consulted with the Governor's office. We concur with the Governor's conclusion that, upon resignation of Governor Branstad, Lt. Governor Reynolds will become Governor and will have the authority to appoint a new Lt. Governor.' – Tom Miller's Office, December 13, 2016.

No new facts or laws have changed since December 13, 2016. Tom Miller has allowed politics to cloud his judgment and is ignoring Iowa law. This politically motivated opinion defies common sense. Iowans expect a Governor and Lt. Governor working on their behalf. This is disappointing."

Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds

"In December, Attorney General Tom Miller researched the law and concurred with the Secretary of State and our office that, upon Gov. Branstad's resignation, I become Governor and have the authority to appoint a new Lt. Governor. Since then, I've been moving forward with that understanding. Now, five months later, just one day before Governor Branstad testifies before the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the Attorney General has reversed himself, but the law hasn't changed. The law still states that as Governor, I vacate my role as Lt. Governor and am able to appoint a new Lt. Governor. With the law on our side we will move forward with his first conclusion as we examine our options in light of Tom Miller's reversal."

Ben Hammes, Communications Director

"The power of a Governor to appoint a new Lt. Governor was put into the law in 2009 by the democrats. That law says: 'An appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term.' This bill passed unanimously by both parties and signed into law by a democrat Governor. Now, just because the democrats do not control the Governor's office, Attorney General Miller wants to pretend like this law does not exist, and issue a non-binding opinion. Quite frankly, this is what Iowans are sick and tired of. The Attorney General should be upholding the law, not ignoring it."

Background Information:

Attorney General Miller now says that Lt. Gov. Reynolds will be both Governor and Lt. Governor at the same time and that Lt. Gov. Reynolds will not be able to appoint a new Lt. Governor. That defies common sense and the law.

- (1) When Gov. Branstad resigns, the Iowa Constitution states that his powers will devolve upon Lt. Gov. Reynolds. Lt. Gov. Reynolds will become Governor. Attorney General Miller agrees with this conclusion.
- (2) Iowa law prevents someone from holding two offices at the same time. Because Kim Reynolds will become Governor, she will automatically vacate the Office of the Lt. Governor.
- (3) In 2009, the Iowa Legislature (led by democrats) passed a statute to clarify that if there is a vacancy in the Office of Lt. Governor, the Governor appoints someone to fill that vacancy. That law is clear: "An appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term."
- (4) When Terry Branstad resigns, Kim Reynolds becomes Governor; the Office of Lt. Governor is then vacant, and under the Iowa Code (passed unanimously by the Legislature) Gov. Reynolds appoints someone to fill that vacancy.

Similar situations have occurred before in other states. For example:

- (1) In 2003, President Bush picked Utah Gov. Michael Leavitt to head the EPA. The state's Attorney General, in a thorough legal opinion, concluded that Leavitt's Lt. Governor became Governor and vacated the Lt. Governor's Office. The new Governor, then, was free to appoint a new Lt. Governor (and he did).

- (2) Similarly, when then-Gov. Bill Clinton became president in 1993, the Arkansas Supreme Court ruled — based upon constitutional provisions that are nearly identical to Iowa’s — that his Lt. Governor became Governor. The Office of the Lt. Governor was then vacant, and Mike Huckabee filled that vacancy mid-term.
- (3) Finally, and most recently, the New York’s highest court ruled that when Gov. Elliot Spitzer resigned, Lt. Governor David Patterson became Governor, vacated the Office of Lt. Governor, and was free to appoint a new Lt. Governor.

In December 2016, Attorney General Miller agreed with this view of the law. Since then, the Constitution hasn’t changed. Neither has the Iowa Code. While Attorney General Miller's opinion is not binding on anybody, Iowans should ask why Attorney General Miller suddenly reversed course.

Re: HF 524 (medical use of cannabis)

Dear Senator Schneider,

HF 524 appears to set up a continuing criminal enterprise here in Iowa, in violation of federal law, 21 U.S.C. § 848 (2017). Anyone participating in the program would be in violation of federal law, 21 U.S.C. § 844 (2017). Anyone manufacturing or distributing cannabis products would be committing federal crimes carrying penalties of 10 years to life in federal prison and a fine of $10 to $50 million, 21 U.S.C. § 841 (2017). Penalties can double for conspiracy to commit any of these acts, 21 U.S.C. § 846 (2017). Because HF 524 authorizes the cultivation, manufacture, and distribution, and possession of cannabis products in the state of Iowa without explaining how any of it would be in compliance with federal law, HF 524 creates a positive conflict between federal and state law so that the two cannot consistently stand together, 21 U.S.C. § 903 (2017).

Please request an opinion from the Attorney General of Iowa, Tom Miller, on the legality of HF 524 before Governor Branstad signs HF 524 into law.

Current federal law can be found at 21 U.S.C. §§ 801 et seq., Pub. L. 91–513, Oct. 27, 1970, 84 Stat. 1236 (“Controlled Substances Act”).

In my opinion, federal schedules of controlled substances are ordinary administrative regulations and cannot be used to interfere with state medical marijuana programs, but HF 524 does not address this matter.

Alliance for Cannabis Therapeutics v. DEA, 930 F.2d 936, 939 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (“neither the statute nor its legislative history precisely defines the term ‘currently accepted medical use’; therefore, we are obliged to defer to the Administrator’s interpretation of that phrase if reasonable.”)

Gonzales v. Oregon, 546 U.S. 243, 258 (2006) (“The Attorney General has rulemaking power to fulfill his duties under the CSA. The specific respects in which he is authorized to make rules, however, instruct us that he is not authorized to make a rule declaring illegitimate a medical standard for care and treatment of patients that is specifically authorized under state law.”)

Grinspoon v. DEA, 828 F.2d 881, 886 (1st Cir. 1987) (“Congress did not intend ‘accepted medical use in treatment in the United States’ to require a finding of recognized medical use in every state or, as the Administrator contends, approval for interstate marketing of the substance.”)

I look forward to hearing from you at your earliest convenience.

Thank you very much!

Sincerely,

Litigation Highlights of the Past 40 Years:

Availability of Fee Waivers

Iowa Legal Aid has worked on behalf of vulnerable children for its entire 40 years. In the early 1990s, Iowa Legal Aid staff often received calls from parents who were not allowed to enroll their children in school because of unpaid school fees. School fees often totaled more than $100 per child, depending on the grade level and other factors. There were cases where the names of students who had not paid fees were read over the public address system at the beginning of the school day, where children's names were posted on a bulletin board, where students were denied participation in graduation ceremonies, where students were not allowed to have their report cards—all because of their parents' poverty. One year, an elementary principal actually stood in the door way, and extended his arm to block the entry of an impoverished child whose parents had not paid school fees. Iowa Legal Aid filed a request for rule making with the Department of Education. It took four years to get a rule that required school districts to waive fees for low-income families, but now, each fall, low-income families are notified of the availability of fee waivers. There were no more back-to-school calls to Iowa Legal Aid after 1996, when the rule became final.

13th Annual Dean's Cup Golf Challenge

May 15, 2017 - Finkbine Golf Course - Iowa City

This event is for all law graduates, faculty, staff and students of Drake Law School and the Iowa College of Law – of every skill level – to support their law school, and, at the same time, raise funds for Iowa Legal Aid, which provided Hope, Dignity and Justice to nearly 38,000 Iowans in 2016, but still had to turn away or underserve at least 10,000 others.

Over 110 lawyers and judges from around the state participated in the 2016 event. Drake, led by Captain Chief Justice Mark Cady, won the Cup from a spirited Iowa squad and its Captain Judge Eliza Ovrom. In addition to playing in the event, many alums and businesses supported the event by donating items for the silent auction, sponsoring a hole or making other contributions to the event. Also, a lawyer who is not a graduate of either school may participate in the best shot format by declaring temporary allegiance to one of the two schools at the time of registration.

The Registration fee is partially tax deductible. To sign up and secure your spot in this prestigious event, or indicate your desire to be a sponsor, click here.

In its 40-year history, Iowa Legal Aid has made a significant impact on the lives of low-income Iowans. Throughout the year, we will continue to share client stories, significant cases, and other examples of our long history of seeking justice and improving lives.

Thank you for your support as we celebrate our history and fulfill our mission to provide Hope Dignity and Justice to all Iowans. Please contact me with questions, comments or concerns.

Iowa Legal Aid:

Celebrating 40 Years of Seeking Justice and Improving Lives

PLEASE JOIN US!! Equal Justice After Hours 2017

For the past 40 years, Iowa Legal Aid has helped ensure that everyone is treated fairly in the justice system. The importance of access to the court system is best illustrated through the comments of an Iowa Legal Aid client:

"Thank you! For years, I didn't know how or when to get out of the situation I was in when in all reality, one phone call to Iowa Legal Aid made a huge impact on my life! I now have a nice place to live that is safe for me and my children. We can now learn to live without domestic violence in our home. My children can now grow up to respect others. Iowa Legal Aid saved my life!"

In 2017, Iowa Legal Aid is celebrating 40 YEARS OF SEEKING JUSTICE AND IMPROVING LIVES. Iowa Legal Aid will be kicking off its celebration with its annual event, Equal Justice After Hours. The event will be held Thursday, March 30 from 5:00-7:00 p.m. at American Enterprise Group, located at 601 6th Avenue in downtown Des Moines. Tickets are $50 and can be purchased at the door or online HERE.

Iowa State Bar Association Board of Governors has issued a challenge for donations made that evening!

For the fourth year the President-Elect of the Iowa State Bar Association (ISBA), Steve Eckley, has initiated a Board of Governors challenge at Equal Justice After Hours. The challenge is a dollar-for-dollar match from Steve and individual members of the Board of Governors of the ISBA for pledges and donations made at the event. Individual Board of Governors members have raised over $7,000 to initiate the challenge!!

Join us on March 30 to celebrate 40 Years of Seeking Justice and Improving Lives. If you are unable to attend, but would like to support Iowa Legal Aid, click HERE to donate.

Litigation Highlights of the Past 40 Years:

Iowa Legal Aid's Assistance to Veterans

Iowa Legal Aid helped a disabled veteran with a garnishment problem. All of the money in his bank account had been seized. As a result, he had no money to pay expenses. The money in his account was from his Army pension and the VA. His money was protected by law from garnishment. However, he did not know it was protected and did not know he could do anything about it. Iowa Legal Aid brought a lawsuit challenging the lack of notice to the veteran and lack of an opportunity to challenge the legality of taking his property. In response to his lawsuit, the Iowa Supreme Court approved an administrative directive, providing all the relief Iowa Legal Aid asked for on his behalf. In fact, the change in procedure was broader in scope than the lawsuit, as it applied to the entire state. Now, someone in this situation will receive a notice explaining exempt property, and how to assert the claim. (Burr v. Des Moines County -- Federal District Court)

Iowa Legal Aid's Iowa City Regional Office

 Hawkeye Legal Aid in Iowa City was one of the "original" county legal aid offices that merged to form the Legal Services Corporation of Iowa, now Iowa Legal Aid. Hawkeye Legal Aid was formed in 1967. Iowa Legal Aid celebrates its 40th anniversary this year, but it is also the 50th anniversary of legal aid in Johnson County.

You asked me to look into whether the new governor appointed a lieutenant governor after the court concluded that the lt. governor "became" governor.
Short answer – No for each state.

Arkansas – Arkansas held a special election to fill the position of lt. governor after the lt. governor became governor following the election of President Clinton. Mike Huckabee won that special election. However, Arkansas is like Iowa pre-1988, where the lt. governor is elected separately from the governor.

Oklahoma – After the court in Oklahoma determined that the lt governor became governor in 1926, the office of lt. governor was "vacant" and held open until the next election. Just a few years later, the Governor of Oklahoma was impeached and the lt. governor again became governor, leaving the lt. governor office vacant.

Oregon – The Court in Oregon determined that the SOS became governor in 1877. For over a year Chadwick held BOTH the office of governor and the SOS until the next election.

Although there is not a specific paragraph to this effect in the memo as it stands now, I also realized that article IV, section 19 states the people further down the line "act as" governor, while "devolve" applies only to the lieutenant. That provision was amended to its current form as part of the 1988 amendments. Several other states noted that the difference in language suggests the lieutenant governor is not merely acting governor.

Subject: Lt. Governor / Attorney General situation

Hi there,

My name is Beau Bowman and I have a question about the recent release by the attorney general concerning the Lt. Governor's new title and power to appoint a new Lt. Governor.

I agree with the Attorney General that Lt. Governor Kim Reynolds should not be able to appoint a new Lt. Governor.

What I do not agree with is her title "Governor Reynolds."

The Iowa Constitution (Article IV sec. 17) states: "In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor."

The legal definition of the word devolve is: "when property is automatically transferred from one party to another"

No where in the constitution does it say that Reynolds would become the Governor, but only take on the responsibility of Governor for the remainder of the term.

Therefore, Reynolds' title should stay as Lt. Governor. She should not be able to appoint a new Lt. Governor because there is no vacancy in that office.

My email and phone number are listed at the bottom of this email. Thank you for hearing me out.

WCF COURIER: Black Hawk County keeps courthouse gun ban

TIM JAMISON

Black Hawk County will continue banning firearms from the courthouse.

Members of the county Board of Supervisors decided Tuesday to maintain the weapons ban despite sweeping changes in Iowa gun laws approved by the Legislature and signed by Gov. Terry Branstad.

County Attorney Brian Williams said language in the law has been misconstrued by some as pre-empting local governments from having policies about gun possession in city and county buildings.

"I certainly hope that wasn't (the legislators') intent," Williams said. "My recommendation to the board is that we maintain the policy as is."

The only guns allowed in the courthouse are those carried by certified police officers or being used as evidence in trials. Metal detectors and security guards enforce the ban at the courthouse's public entrance.

The omnibus gun bill passed by both the Iowa House and Senate includes controversial "stand-your-ground" language among other provisions. It also allows individuals with proper permits to carry concealed weapons in the state Capitol buildings and grounds.

The law, effective July 1, also would allow a person "adversely affected" by a local government policy or rule regulating the legal possession and transfer of a firearm to sue in court for injunctive relief and damages.

"There's a lot of ambiguity in the statute," said Assistant County Attorney Pete Burk. "But I think we're on appropriate legal grounds to simply keep the policy we have."

A person carrying a weapon will not be allowed to enter the courthouse. If that person files a petition with the court, the county would then respond, Burk said.

All five county supervisors said they supported the current policy.

Bottom of Form

"We've got our employees to worry about, especially with the business we do here in the courthouse," said Supervisor Craig White. "We have situations where it's divorces, stuff like that, and if we allow guns in here it can only lead to problems."

Supervisor Chris Schwartz noted he received a death threat during his election campaign.

“The idea that we would allow guns into this building that aren’t being held by police officers is personally frightening to me, but also just out of concern for our employees and the people that come here to conduct business,” he said. “When people come to the courthouse they should have a right to feel safe.”

Board chairman Frank Magsamen resented the idea state government could restrict counties from adopting their own building policies.

“As local government I believe we have a better understanding about our needs and facilities,” he said.

Nice pic!

From Des Moines Register:
Frustrated by lack of progress, Iowa education board member calls for ending state tests The move could save millions of dollars while nixing tests that are no longer relevant, Mary Ellen Miller told the lieutenant governor Thursday.

Subject: Licensing reform

FYI – There is a new licensing bill that has been introduced. The explanation is pasted below. Let me know if you have comments/feedback.

<https://www.legis.iowa.gov/docs/publications/LGI/87/HSB174.pdf>

EXPLANATION

The inclusion of this explanation does not constitute agreement with the explanation's substance by the members of the general assembly.

This bill relates to certain state regulations, including certificate of need requirements, the practice of certain professions, and the oversight of state preserves. The bill is organized into divisions.

CERTIFICATE OF NEED REQUIREMENT. This division removes the requirement for a hospital to apply to the Iowa department of public health for a certificate of need prior to the offering or development of a new or changed institutional health service unless the hospital plans to expand its swing-bed capacity above 25 beds or plans to add any nursing facility beds or skilled nursing beds. The division also requires a certificate of need for the construction, development, or other establishment of a hospital in a county with a population of less than 80,000, or a hospital in a county with a population of greater than 80,000 if the hospital is within 35 miles of a hospital located in a county with a population of less than 80,000.

The division exempts facilities that provide services to a person with a primary diagnosis of mental illness, as defined in Code section 229.1, from the certificate of need requirement.

The division takes effect upon enactment.

PRACTICE OF DENTISTRY MODIFICATION AND INTERIOR DESIGN EXAMINING BOARD REPEAL. This division eliminates the interior design examining board and removes all registration requirements for interior designers.

The division removes tooth whitening from the practice of dentistry as provided in Code section 153.13.

REPEAL OF STATE ADVISORY BOARD FOR PRESERVES. This division eliminates the state advisory board for preserves and assigns the duties of the board to the natural resource commission of the department of natural resources.

ELECTRICAL EXAMINING BOARD. This division reassigns the regulatory authority of the electrical examining board to the department of public safety, which shall regulate the licensure of electricians. The division changes the electrical examining board to an electrical examining advisory council, which shall have authority to approve administrative rules relating to professions governed by Code chapter 103 before they are adopted by the department.

LICENSING MORATORIUM AND TASK FORCE. This division prohibits an executive branch administrative unit from imposing new licensing regulations for a profession not regulated prior to July 1, 2017. The division also establishes a professional licensing task force made up of legislators, executive branch department representatives, a representative of the governor's office, and public members with professional licensure experience to review all aspects of professional licensure in the state.

IOWA CAPITAL INVESTMENT BOARD. This division of the bill eliminates the Iowa capital investment board established in Code section 15E.63 and transfers the duties and authority of that board to the economic development authority.

Eric,

Sorry to barge in this morning, but it was good to see you. I appreciate Leader Hogg's time in discussing the ICCC update bill, SF 418. I'm forwarding along the thoughts we shared with Senator Petersen and Julie Simon last week. Please let me know if we can answer any further questions.

Thanks,
Nathan

Sent: Wednesday, March 08, 2017 9:36 AM
To: Petersen, Janet [LEGIS]
Cc: Simon, Julie [LEGIS]
Subject: SF 418 - ICCC update

Senator Petersen:

I write to encourage your support of SF 418, the bill that would update the Iowa Consumer Credit Code's fees and penalties. Here's a quick summary of our office's thinking:

- 1) While our office, of course, is not generally in favor of raising the cap on fees that can be charged to consumers, we believe that after 40 years without an increase, there is some justification for raising the fees based on inflation alone. Furthermore, even though the ceiling of the late fee is raised, it will continue to be assessed as the lesser of 5% or $30.00.
- 2) More importantly, the bill also includes a valuable provision that allows consumers to void certain illegal (usually internet-based) triple-digit interest loans that make their way into Iowa. This area of law is exceedingly difficult for our office to prosecute because the perpetrators often live elsewhere and are difficult to pin down. This gives consumers themselves a simple option of voiding the contract, stopping payment, and not being responsible for any further payments.
- 3) All the penalties that can be assessed to financial institutions that violate the various ICCC sections have been updated. This is similar to the increase in fees to consumers and needed because there hasn't been an update since the 1970s.
- 4) In addition to the penalties that the ICCC Administrator can assess being increased, the penalties that consumers themselves can seek in a private right of action have also been increased.
- 5) Finally, this bill contains a much-needed update to the fees assessed to lenders who have to file with our office each year. This will help our office cover the costs of oversight and maintaining the ICCC registrants database.

When this bill was introduced as a Study Bill, it was far worse. It included the fee increases on consumers but not the penalty increases on financial institutions. There were a couple of other provisions had been included that were substantively anti-consumer. Our office worked with the credit unions and the bankers to forge a compromise that we believe updates the ICCC in a reasonable way and continues to serve consumers well.

I would love the opportunity to answer any questions, if you have any. Please don't hesitate to reach out. While I'm not up at the capitol all day, I am able to get there quickly.

Eric,

Sorry to barge in this morning, but it was good to see you. I appreciate Leader Hogg's time in discussing the ICCC update bill, SF 418. I'm forwarding along the thoughts we shared with Senator Petersen and Julie Simon last week. Please let me know if we can answer any further questions.

Thanks,
Nathan

Subject: SF 418 - ICCC update

Senator Petersen:

I write to encourage your support of SF 418, the bill that would update the Iowa Consumer Credit Code's fees and penalties. Here's a quick summary of our office's thinking:

- 1) While our office, of course, is not generally in favor of raising the cap on fees that can be charged to consumers, we believe that after 40 years without an increase, there is some justification for raising the fees based on inflation alone. Furthermore, even though the ceiling of the late fee is raised, it will continue to be assessed as the lesser of 5% or $30.00.
- 2) More importantly, the bill also includes a valuable provision that allows consumers to void certain illegal (usually internet-based) triple-digit interest loans that make their way into Iowa. This area of law is exceedingly difficult for our office to prosecute because the perpetrators often live elsewhere and are difficult to pin down. This gives consumers themselves a simple option of voiding the contract, stopping payment, and not being responsible for any further payments.
- 3) All the penalties that can be assessed to financial institutions that violate the various ICCC sections have been updated. This is similar to the increase in fees to consumers and needed because there hasn't been an update since the 1970s.
- 4) In addition to the penalties that the ICCC Administrator can assess being increased, the penalties that consumers themselves can seek in a private right of action have also been increased.
- 5) Finally, this bill contains a much-needed update to the fees assessed to lenders who have to file with our office each year. This will help our office cover the costs of oversight and maintaining the ICCC registrants database.

When this bill was introduced as a Study Bill, it was far worse. It included the fee increases on consumers but not the penalty increases on financial institutions. There were a couple of other provisions had been included that were substantively anti-consumer. Our office worked with the credit unions and the bankers to forge a compromise that we believe updates the ICCA in a reasonable way and continues to serve consumers well.

I would love the opportunity to answer any questions, if you have any. Please don't hesitate to reach out. While I'm not up at the capitol all day, I am able to get there quickly.

"DeVos dials back consumer protections for student loan borrowers"

Posted: 12 Apr 2017 08:40 AM PDT

The Washington Post reports that Education Secretary Betsy DeVos on Tuesday withdrew a series of policy memos issued by the Obama administration to strengthen consumer protections for student loan borrowers.

The Education Department is in the middle of issuing new contracts to student loan servicing companies that collect payments on behalf of the agency. These middlemen are responsible for placing borrowers in affordable repayment plans and keeping them from defaulting on their loans. But in the face of mounting consumer complaints over poor communication, mismanaged paperwork and delays in processing payments, the previous administration included contract requirements to shore up the quality of servicing. Companies complained that the demands would be expensive and unnecessarily time consuming.

An op-ed on the Washington Post's website today uses the United Airlines incident as a starting point to discuss lack of consumer choice in today's world.

We are told that this is the era of the empowered consumer: The savvy shopper has oodles of time to browse around comparing prices among various retailers, perhaps consulting Yelp, Glassdoor or the Better Business Bureau. An almost unlimited menu of choices and information means that anything may be purchased, often at a discount from a warehouse on the other side of the world. Service is king, and business-school professors complain of the "tyranny of the consumer." Better information means more competition, which means lower prices — all features, of course, an open marketplace ostensibly presided over by a regulatory authority that, while distant, exists to protect our safety.

This vision is a lie.

"Plenty More Villains at Wells Fargo"

Posted: 12 Apr 2017 08:32 AM PDT

A New York Times editorial today argues that revoking bonuses from two former Wells Fargo executives "is not enough to punish their misconduct, deter wrongdoing by others and restore trust in the bank — or in the rule of law when it comes to investigating and prosecuting bank executives."

The editorial is here.

Hi Eric;

Can you provide information regarding Internet sales of e-cigarettes? Is the online sale of e-cigarettes currently legal and, if so, what are the restrictions? Thank you for any information you can provide. I know this may not be a simple question, but perhaps there is a helpful website you could direct me to? Again, thank you!

Has the Consumer Affairs Division reviewed HF 295? In particular, several of my members are asking about amendment H-1164 and whether that could preempt local communities from doing familial or non-familial restrictions, in effect having the same impact as HF 134. Thanks as always and if you have any questions feel free to let me know.

Reps. Mohr, Cownie and McConkey,

Sorry for the confusion this morning as I had an email from Gus Harb from LSA that he had prepared and delivered the amendment to you all. Attached are talking points for both the bill (first attachment) and the amendment (second attachment). The final attachment is a shortened amendment talking point that just covers the policy of what we are doing instead of a section by section analysis. Please let me know by return email or by phone at 515-669-5509 if you have any questions. Thanks. Bob Hartwig, IBA

Rep. Oldson,

Good morning. I know you're busy today but I wanted to draw your attention to HF 196, the so-called flexible lending bill. We had thought it was dead but it was revived this morning and looks destined for full committee as soon as this afternoon. If there's a good time that I could talk with you for a couple minutes this morning about our continued concerns with the bill (even with amendment), I would really appreciate it.

Bridget,

Thanks again for reaching out. The Consumer Protection Division does not have great concerns about a realistic probability of harm to consumers from this proposed change. While we can see how this would make the regulators' oversight job more difficult, we leave it to them to opine on that front. For consumers, it seems that the possibility of harm arising from non-CPAs certifying compliance and licensure of a CPA firm is pretty attenuated.

Please let me know if you, Senator Anderson, or Senator Jochum have any further questions.

Nathan,

Senators Anderson and Jochum asked me to contact you for you to quickly review SSB 1033, Sec. 3 subsection c. This small section strikes “person with a practice privilege under section 542.20” and replaces it with “nonlicensee” as it relates to people working in CPA firms.

The senators would like you to review this section to ensure the AG’s consumer protection division has no concerns with this proposed changes. Your colleague, Luke Dawson was part of the workgroup that developed this bill language, but senators want to make sure an attorney from consumer protection also had a review.

Please let me know any thoughts or concerns you have with this language changes.

Subject: SF 418 - ICCC update

Senator Petersen:

I write to encourage your support of SF 418, the bill that would update the Iowa Consumer Credit Code's fees and penalties. Here's a quick summary of our office's thinking:

- 1) While our office, of course, is not generally in favor of raising the cap on fees that can be charged to consumers, we believe that after 40 years without an increase, there is some justification for raising the fees based on inflation alone. Furthermore, even though the ceiling of the late fee is raised, it will continue to be assessed as the lesser of 5% or $30.00.
- 2) More importantly, the bill also includes a valuable provision that allows consumers to void certain illegal (usually internet-based) triple-digit interest loans that make their way into Iowa. This area of law is exceedingly difficult for our office to prosecute because the perpetrators often live elsewhere and are difficult to pin down. This gives consumers themselves a simple option of voiding the contract, stopping payment, and not being responsible for any further payments.
- 3) All the penalties that can be assessed to financial institutions that violate the various ICCC sections have been updated. This is similar to the increase in fees to consumers and needed because there hasn't been an update since the 1970s.
- 4) In addition to the penalties that the ICCC Administrator can assess being increased, the penalties that consumers themselves can seek in a private right of action have also been increased.
- 5) Finally, this bill contains a much-needed update to the fees assessed to lenders who have to file with our office each year. This will help our office cover the costs of oversight and maintaining the ICCC registrants database.

When this bill was introduced as a Study Bill, it was far worse. It included the fee increases on consumers but not the penalty increases on financial institutions. There were a couple of other provisions had been included that were substantively anti-consumer. Our office worked with the credit unions and the bankers to forge a compromise that we believe updates the ICCC in a reasonable way and continues to serve consumers well.

I would love the opportunity to answer any questions, if you have any. Please don't hesitate to reach out. While I'm not up at the capitol all day, I am able to get there quickly.

- 1) While our office, of course, is not generally in favor of raising the cap on fees that can be charged to consumers, we believe that after 40 years without an increase, there is some justification for raising the fees based on inflation alone. Furthermore, even though the ceiling of the late fee is raised, it will continue to be assessed as the lesser of 5% or $30.00.
- 2) More importantly, the bill also includes a valuable provision that allows consumers to void certain illegal (usually internet-based) triple-digit interest loans that make their way into Iowa. This area of law is exceedingly difficult for our office to prosecute because the perpetrators often live elsewhere and are difficult to pin down. This gives consumers themselves a simple option of voiding the contract, stopping payment, and not being responsible for any further payments.
- 3) All the penalties that can be assessed to financial institutions that violate the various ICCC sections have been updated. This is similar to the increase in fees to consumers and needed because there hasn't been an update since the 1970s.
- 4) In addition to the penalties that the ICCC Administrator can assess being increased, the penalties that consumers themselves can seek in a private right of action have also been increased.
- 5) Finally, this bill contains a much-needed update to the fees assessed to lenders who have to file with our office each year. This will help our office cover the costs of oversight and maintaining the ICCC registrants database.

When this bill was introduced as a Study Bill, it was far worse. It included the fee increases on consumers but not the penalty increases on financial institutions. There were a couple of other provisions had been included that were substantively anti-consumer. Our office worked with the credit unions and the bankers to forge a compromise that we believe updates the ICCC in a reasonable way and continues to serve consumers well.

I would love the opportunity to answer any questions, if you have any. Please don't hesitate to reach out. While I'm not up at the capitol all day, I am able to get there quickly.

Thank you,

John,

We have the hearing on the motion to quash discovery tomorrow in Jasper. I will get my resistance on file. I am in a civil trial in Dallas County tomorrow that we thought we would get submitted today. We are doing closings tomorrow at 9:30 a.m. but I need to hang around to put on more evidence if the jury finds that punitive damages are warranted.

Do you resist if I ask for a continuance of the hearing? I can have someone cover, but they are not going to know the file in a way to make the hearing meaningful.

John,

Attached you will find interrogatories and requests for production.

You had asked about mootness? As I understand his PCR application, his biggest gripe is completing SOTP and then being told he did not satisfactorily complete it because of a discipline report. It appears he was told that his was going to lose his earned time credits if he didn't do SOTP again and that his TDD was pushed out to 2024. He thinks it should be 05/09/16. But, looking on the IDOC website, his TDD 05/02/2020.

For it to be moot, I think there would require: (1) providing him with certificate of completion for SOTP; (2) rescission of the second SOTP classification decision; and (3) restoration of the earned time credits.

It appears there is a phantom EDMS filing. On 11/23/2016, Benford filed a pleading that was not served upon me via EDMS. But, it does show up on the EDMS docket. I have attached a copy of it to this email.

I believe the November 23rd filing is intended to be a reply brief in the FECR014434 case, but he also asks that it be docketed in this case as an application for a temporary injunction on page 22.

Gary,

The trial setting order in the Krapf case is a little confusing. Normally, we do these by phone and they are set up by Plaintiff (it is left blank). This appears to be in person. We need to make sure this is by phone, can you clear this up?

Attached is a draft discovery plan for your consideration in advance of tomorrow's trial scheduling conference. Please let me know if you have time to visit together by phone to discuss the plan before the 2:15 p.m. call or whether we need to continue the scheduling conference. Based on the responses to open records requests, suspect that electronic discovery will be an issue in this case. I would offer attachment "A" as a placeholder.

Gary- I need to get together with George to discuss a few of these deadlines and your proposed attachment on electronic discovery. George is in a deposition today. Can you get today's scheduling conference pushed back a few days? I have spoken with George and he is fine with doing that. That way we will have time to provide a specific response to your proposed order. If not, have you set up a dial -in for this call?( but we won't be able to agree to all dates today if it goes forward). Thanks. Dick

Gents,

Attached is a draft discovery plan for your consideration in advance of tomorrow's trial scheduling conference. Please let me know if you have time to visit together by phone to discuss the plan before the 2:15 p.m. call or whether we need to continue the scheduling conference. Based on the responses to open records requests, suspect that electronic discovery will be an issue in this case. I would offer attachment "A" as a placeholder.

All of the defendants have asked for an extension to April 10th in which to answer the first round of discovery requests. That is fine by me.

Since we all submitted our requests the same day, can we agree that all of the parties have until April 10th in which to respond?

Medicaid says they won't pay because the county has to pay. Pharmacy asks us for advice. Our office is Mitchell County attorney so I am familiar with the fact that there is county liability for prisoner's medical bills, in many circumstances, etc. However, I don't believe that relieve Medicaid of their responsibility. Sent: Thursday, March 03, 2016 1:43 PM
To: criminallaw@iabar.org
Subject: RE: [ISBA CriminalLaw] Confrontation

I'd read Davis v. Washington, 547 U.S. 813 (2006):

Statements are nontestimonial when made in the course of police interrogation under circumstances objectively indicating that the primary purpose of the interrogation is to enable police assistance to meet an ongoing emergency. They are testimonial when the circumstances objectively indicate that there is no such ongoing emergency, and that the primary purpose of the interrogation is to establish or prove past events potentially relevant to later criminal prosecution.

This is not to say that a conversation which begins as an interrogation to determine the need for emergency assistance cannot, as the Indiana Supreme Court put it, "evolve into testimonial statements," once that purpose has been achieved. In this case, for example, after the operator gained the information needed to address the exigency of the moment, the emergency appears to have ended (when Davis drove away from the premises). The operator then told McCottry to be quiet, and proceeded to pose a battery of questions. It could readily be maintained that, from that point on, McCottry's statements were testimonial, not unlike the "structured police questioning" that occurred in Crawford. This presents no great problem. Just as, for Fifth Amendment purposes, "police officers can and will distinguish almost instinctively between questions necessary to secure their own safety or the safety of the public and questions designed solely to elicit testimonial evidence from a suspect," trial courts will recognize the point at which, for Sixth Amendment purposes, statements in response to interrogations become testimonial. Through in limine procedure, they should redact or exclude the portions of any statement that have become testimonial, as they do, for example, with unduly prejudicial portions of otherwise admissible evidence.

Amy, I am 100% in agreement with Mary's comments on this. You can also charge a reasonable fee for any copies made (as well as the time the employee spends making the copies). There have been many times we've received massive requests ("any/all documents regarding all projects Ms. Smith worked on during her 15 years as a planner with the city"). Usually when you send them the time/cost estimate and explain they need to pay in advance, you don't hear from them again. I'm not stating this as a way to avoid the open records law, but it's just a reality that people make these requests without having any idea of the employee time & effort and cost required to comply with the request.

Amy - the law doesn't require you to develop records that don't already exist and that kind of sounds like what they're looking for. That said, yes, you can charge for the retrieval, collection, etc. But, only the employee's hourly rate not overhead such as bennies. You can also give them the estimate and ask them to pay in advance. (I got that amendment passed when still lobbying due to the deadbeats who go on fishing trips.) So, yes, you can charge time for both the compilation and copying. Good luck!

Below are e-mails I am being asked by a person interested in our water use in _____ County. I was able to answer the first two e-mails fairly simply because we have that information readily available. She is now asking questions that will cause [client] to manually go through our records to get most of the answers to the questions in red. Can we charge to get this information from our system? I'm fairly certain this will take 20 to 30 hours of our staffs time if not more. Can we give them an estimate of the costs before we proceed? They are asking for this information under the Freedom of Information Act.

To be clear, my client has no objection to providing the requested information. The question is specifically about whether they can charge anything for their expenses in providing the information (staff time, copies, items such as that).

Thanks!

Friend,

Planned Parenthood announced yesterday it would be closing four health centers in Iowa, including centers in three districts represented by Republican Senators who voted to shut them down. Senator Roby Smith of Scott County, Senator Rick Bertrand of Woodbury County, and Senator Tom Greene of Des Moines County voted to close the facilities in their very own districts.

This devastating news is what happens when Republican politicians think they can take charge of women's health care.

Before Republicans voted to dismantle it, Iowa's network of family planning clinics was working well. It was inexpensive for Iowa taxpayers and helped reduce abortions and unintended pregnancies for Iowa women.

We don't want to go backward. We must stand up for Iowa families and stand against Republican extremists like Sen. Smith, Sen. Bertrand, and Sen. Greene. Their vote to defund Planned Parenthood has cost women in their districts access to vital health services.

Please chip in $14.67 or more for the 14,676 people who will lose access to family planning services.

Friend,

As you know, Iowa Republicans took total control of Iowa's state government last November for the first time in 20 years with an unprecedented onslaught of false and misleading negative advertisements.

Iowa Senate Democrats fought hard against these proposals, including the historic 30-hour, all-night, debate on the bill that attacks the rights of 180,000 teachers, firefighters, police officers, social workers, sanitation workers, and other public service workers.

Please join us as we work to stop the damage they are doing to the state and get Iowa going in the right direction again.

You can help us get Iowa going again by making a recurring monthly contribution over the next 18 months to the Iowa Senate Democrats' Majority Fund.

Your commitment now will provide the resources we need to recruit top-notch candidates to challenge the 10 Republican Senators up for re-election in 2018 and get our message out to every county, every district, and every corner of Iowa. Please consider the following monthly contributions:

Friends,

He compared it to a "time share." Really?

Republican Senator Mark Chelgren said a three-day waiting period for an abortion is like a "time share clause" you might talk about to your family and friends. The GOP's outrageous bill shames women into having an ultrasound, view it and listen to a fetal heartbeat. And the bill has, even more, mandates that turn back the clock and turns my stomach.

We know Senate Republicans have no respect for women who want to make their own health care choices. The GOP is patting us on the head saying, "... there, there now honey we know what's best for you." What's best for us is following the law that's been in place since 1973.

We can't allow people like Senator Chelgren to represent us. Help us retire him. Chip in $25, or whatever you can now, to send him his walking papers.

Friend,

I promise this is the last email we will send today! We need your help one more time before midnight. Can you chip in $3 so we can close out March on a high note?

Because of your tremendous support, we are $258 away from our goal! Can you help us cross the finish line?

Your donations will help our candidates defend their seats and take the fight to the Republicans across Iowa.

Sincerely,

Friends,

Last night Senate Republicans' showed their true plans for Iowa women when voting on SF 471, which would restrict women's access to make their own health decisions.

Senator Rick Bertrand of Sioux City said during floor debate that he was disappointed that Republicans were unable to impose abortion restrictions that are so onerous that no other state has imposed them on women.

"We'll do it next time," Bertrand promised.

This is not the first time the Republicans have attacked women's health care this session, and it will not be the last. We need your help to fight extreme anti-women policies like this one. If Senator Bertrand thinks it's OK to restrict the health care decisions of women further, let's replace him!

Help us elect a Democrat to replace him and retake the majority so we can stop these bills protect women's rights and women can make their own health care decisions.

Sincerely,

Janet Petersen, Iowa State Senator

PS- Senator Bertrand made it clear his real intention is to force the Supreme Court to overturn Roe v Wade. Join us in making sure we don't turn the clock back on women's health by donating today and retiring Senator Bertrand.

Hi Jane,

I can't remember what times AG Miller had available today, but would 11 am work to meet with Leader Hagenow today? We had something come up during the 10-11 block.

Thanks!

Geoff,

Would you let Atty Gen. Miller know that former long-time state legislator Johnie Hammond of Ames lost her husband Earl yesterday?

Earl had been in a memory care unit at a nursing home in Ames for a while, and in hospice care the last few days.

Johnie's phone number is 515-292-2275. I talked to her yesterday, so I know she's taking calls. I thought Tom might want to call her.

Funeral/visitation arrangements have not been announced yet, though Johnie said it would likely be next week some time.

Geoff,

Under what circumstances can a city council in Iowa instruct a city attorney to begin proceedings to remove a mayor from office before the end of his or her term? Can this be done even if the mayor has committed no crime?

I realize the Attorney General's Office may not want to comment on the current situation in Muscatine (though I would welcome a comment on that if possible). I am just trying to understand what needs to happen before a city council can take that step against a mayor.

Hello Geoff,

I realize that you may have no further comment on this issue before Attorney General Miller completes his opinion requested by Senator Johnson.

However, if Attorney General Miller or Solicitor General Thompson would like to respond to my latest post on this topic, I would be happy to update with their comments.

Geoff, sorry for the delay in circling back. Where does it say in Iowa Code that "the lieutenant governor, after taking office as governor, appoints a new lieutenant governor"? I see where the governor appoints a new LG if there is a vacancy in the LG position, but that says nothing about "the lieutenant governor, after taking office as governor."

In the Griffin case, Jeffrey Thompson told the Iowa Supreme Court that it was very significant Iowa lawmakers did not change the "infamous crimes" language when they amended the same part of the Iowa Constitution to remove the word "idiot." It strikes me as significant that lawmakers in the 1950s and 1980s did not change language referring to the LG performing the duties of the office of governor. They could have changed the wording to make it more like the US Constitution's language regarding the presidential succession, but they did not.

Why doesn't Attorney General Tom Miller want to ask the Iowa Supreme Court to weigh in on this issue? Doing so would allow the justices to provide a definitive interpretation of the Iowa Constitution. There is plenty of time for the justices to prepare an opinion. Governor Branstad does not intend to step down until he is confirmed as ambassador to China, which will take 4-8 months.

Thanks,

Laurie

Here's a little more explanation.

Notably, Iowa courts have never addressed this issue.

In all four historical cases of vacancies by Iowa governors, the lieutenant governor who succeeded the governor was viewed and regarded in all respects as the governor.

Our office carefully reviewed the Iowa Constitution.

A significant formal attorney general opinion from 1923 states that (in case of death, resignation or removal from office of the governor) the lieutenant governor becomes governor (I attached the opinion and highlighted the pertinent section on page 2).

Case law, statutory, and constitutional analyses from other states are consistent with this provision.

Finally, the Iowa Code supports this position. State law establishes that, the lieutenant governor, after taking office as governor, appoints a new lieutenant governor.

This research leads us to concur with Governor Branstad's conclusion that, upon his resignation, Lt. Governor Reynolds will become Governor. In her capacity as Governor, Governor Reynolds will have the authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Geoff, I'm seeking further explanation on the basis for that reading of the Iowa Constitution. Wouldn't the framers and lawmakers who later amended the text have said that the lieutenant governor would become the governor, instead of using phrases like, "The lieutenant governor, while acting as governor, shall be paid the compensation and expenses prescribed for the governor"?

Also, can Attorney General Miller explain why Joshua Newbold did not appoint a lieutenant governor during the nearly a year that he performed the duties of governor?

Hello Geoff,

What is the time frame for Attorney General Miller to issue an opinion on 1) whether Kim Reynolds will become governor or merely "acting governor" after Governor Branstad leaves for China, and 2) whether Reynolds will be able to appoint a new lieutenant governor in that scenario? I am requesting a copy of that opinion as soon as it becomes available

I saw you told Jason Noble last week, "We're going to have to review this and confer with the governor's office." Does that mean Attorney General Miller plans to clear his opinion with the governor's staff ahead of time? Or will his analysis of Iowa Constitution Section 4 be independent?

I assume the governor's office will want Kim Reynolds to have the title of governor as well as the powers of the office.

Geoff and Eric,

FYI, a very astute comment on Laurie Belin's blog post by Darrell Hanson, longtime Republican (former) legislator:

Darrell Hanson I'm not an attorney or a constitutional scholar, so I don't know if the following is significant: Every time the Iowa constitution refers to someone taking over after the governor's position becomes vacant, whether it is the Lt. Gov., the President of the Senate, or the Speaker of the House, very similar language is used to refer to them as the person acting as governor, not as the new governor. In addition, the section Mark quoted (Article IV, section 17) that describes what happens when the governor resigns is the same section that describes what happens if a governor is temporarily disabled, and the same language applies to both situations. So it would seem to me that the same type of transfer of powers occurs under both circumstances. If a governor was temporarily disabled and the Lt. Gov. assumed the powers and duties of the governor during that time, nobody would argue that the Lt. Gov. position had become vacant. Since the same provision governs both a temporary assumption of power and a permanent assumption of power, I would assume the status of the Lt. Gov. office would be the same in both types of vacancies. But again, I'm not an attorney, so take those arguments for what they are worth.

Geoff and Eric,

Just one more thing (I promise!). I note the Iowa Constitution says upon a vacancy in the position of Governor, the Governor's power shall "devolve" to the Lt. Governor. (It does not say the Lt. Gov. assumes the office of Governor). I think this wording is important.

Note this dictionary definition of "devolve":

VERB

1. transfer or delegate (power) to a lower level, especially from central government to local or regional administration:

"measures to devolve power to the provinces" ·

"devolved and decentralized government"

synonyms: delegate · depute · pass (down/on) · download ·

hand down/over/on · transfer · transmit · assign · consign · convey · entrust · turn over · give · cede · surrender · relinquish · deliver · bestow · grant

- (devolve on/upon/to)

(of duties or responsibility) pass to (a body or person at a lower level):

"his duties devolved on a comrade"

- formal

degenerate or be split into:

"the Empire devolved into separate warring states"

Ok, I just find this fascinating. Good luck with your research!

Subject: Constitutional issue re: Lt. Gov assuming Gov's powers

Importance: High

Eric and Geoff:

In Massachusetts, when Governor William Weld resigned in 1997, Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci became “Acting Governor” – not “Governor.” When Cellucci resigned to become US Ambassador to Canada during the Bush Administration in 2001, his Lt. Gov. Jane Swift became “Acting Governor.”

Massachusetts Constitution has a similar provision to the Iowa Constitution:

III.--Whenever the chair of the Governor shall be vacant, by reason of his death, or absence from the Commonwealth, or otherwise, the Lieutenant-Governor, for the time being, shall, during such vacancy, perform all the duties incumbent upon the Governor, and shall have and exercise all the powers and authorities, which by this Constitution the Governor is vested with, when personally present.

Hope this is helpful.

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR Governor Terry E. Branstad ★ Lt. Governor Kim Reynolds

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: Tuesday, Jan. 10, 2017

Gov. Branstad delivers the 2017 Condition of the State address to the Iowa General Assembly

(DES MOINES) – Gov. Terry E. Branstad today delivered the 2017 Condition of the State address, entitled “Smaller and Smarter Government,” to the Iowa General Assembly and the people of Iowa.

In his address, Gov. Branstad struck an enthusiastic tone that this new General Assembly brings new dynamics, new expectations and new opportunities to deliver positive results for Iowans. The governor spoke about the need for a responsible budget including submitting adjustments to the current fiscal year and the need for a biennial budget for fiscal year 2018 and 2019 that sets supplemental state aid for K-12 education in the first 30 days of the legislative session.

Gov. Branstad and Lt. Gov. Reynolds’ program initiatives for this upcoming session include a commitment to a smaller and smarter government, a focus on the jobs of today and tomorrow, obtaining a 21st century education for all students and making our Iowa roads safer.

VIEW THE BUDGET IN BRIEF HERE INCLUDING THE FISCAL YEAR 2017 BUDGET ADJUSTMENTS \(PAGE 73 & 74\)

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE BUDGET ADJUSTMENTS:

- Adjustments are required by law.
- Does not include across-the-board cuts.

- Does not reduce funding for supplemental state aid for K through 12 education.
- Does not reduce property tax credits.
- Modernized Medicaid resulting in over $110 million in savings for Iowa taxpayers.

VIEW THE FULL FISCAL YEAR 2018 AND 2019 BUDGET HERE

HIGHLIGHTS:

- The governor and Lt. governor's 2-year budget is again balanced and stable.
- The budget fits within five-year budget projections.
- Based on the principles laid out by the Iowa Taxpayers Association.
- Prioritizes education, health care, economic development and public safety.
- Gives schools the predictability and stability they need with an increase of over $78.8 million in supplemental state aid in fiscal year 2018 and includes an additional $63.5 million for fiscal year 2019.
- Modernized Medicaid resulting in $232 million in savings for Iowa taxpayers.
- Redirects family planning money to organizations that focus on providing health care for women and eliminates taxpayer funding for organizations that perform abortions.

SMALLER AND SMARTER GOVERNMENT:

HIGHLIGHTS:

- Gov. Branstad & Lt. Gov. Reynolds are calling for replacing the current antiquated collective bargaining system for public employees.
  - Move to one comprehensive statewide health care contract for public employees.
  - This will provide quality health care to public employees at a significantly lower cost and give local governments more flexibility to provide better wages and meet other needs.
  - Rewards public employees for taking ownership of their own health by conducting health risk assessments and taking other actions that improve their own health.
- Work with the General Assembly to address unnecessary barriers that prevent competition and raise costs through a series of regulatory and licensing reforms.

FOCUSING ON THE JOBS OF TODAY AND TOMORROW:

HIGHLIGHTS:

- Modernizing water quality infrastructure that will create jobs in rural Iowa and promote cleaner water.
  - Calling on discussions to begin with the House-passed water quality bill from last session which provided for a long-term, dedicated source of revenue for implementation of projects outlined in the Nutrient Reduction Strategy.
- Prioritizes initiatives that will grow the state's talent pipeline including STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering & Math), Future Ready Iowa, registered apprenticeships and work-based learning for Iowa students.

21st CENTURY EDUCATION:

HIGHLIGHTS:

- Legislation encouraging all elementary, middle and high school students to have access to high-quality computer science programs by 2019. We want them to:
  - Offer at least one high-quality computer science course in every high school;
  - Provide exploratory computer science curriculum in every middle school and;
  - Include an introduction to computer science basics in every elementary school.
- Establish high-quality computer science standards.
- Create a computer science professional development incentive fund to train teachers.
- Convene an advisory group to recommend how to count computer science as a math credit toward high school graduation.

SAFER IOWA ROADS:

HIGHLIGHTS:

- Traffic fatalities spiked from 315 in 2015, to 402 in 2016.
- Gov. Branstad & Lt. Gov. Reynolds believe this is unacceptable.
- They are calling for legislation that drastically reduces the amount of distracted and impaired drivers on Iowa roads.
  - Restrict the use of mobile devices while driving.
- Gov. Branstad & Lt. Gov. Reynolds are also calling on the legislature to examine and implement strategies from the Department of Public Safety's task force that will make Iowa's roads safer.

Gov. Branstad's 2017 Condition of the State Address, as prepared for delivery, is as follows:

Madam Lieutenant Governor

Mr. President

Madam Speaker

Legislative leaders, legislators, justices and judges, elected officials, distinguished guests, family, friends and fellow Iowans.

I'm honored and humbled to once again address a joint session of the General Assembly delivering the Condition of the State for the final time as your governor.

For 22 years, I have addressed this body as governor and today I want to especially welcome the 22 new legislators with us—from both sides of the aisle— who were elected in November.

Your constituents sent you to work hard, to work for them, and help make Iowa a better place.

I hope you are filled with the same sense of excitement and eagerness that I had when I first served in the Legislature in 1973.

Lt. Gov. Reynolds and I look forward to working with each of you and listening to your ideas on how to make our state an even better place for families to live, work and grow.

In that spirit, I am today extending an invitation to each legislator to meet with me personally during this legislative session.

We also gather again with shared sadness, returning to do our work without our friend, Sen. Joe Seng of Davenport.

Joe was a devout Catholic and a true statesman.

We enjoyed his contagious and positive personality and working with him.

As I look back on my years of public service, I am thankful for those Iowans who have stepped forward to serve their fellow citizens.

In particular, please join me in applauding those Iowans who have helped make our state and nation safer by serving in the military, law enforcement or as first responders.

Since taking office in 2011, we have made the necessary changes to strengthen our economy and improve the quality of life across our state.

We've made tough decisions to give Iowans a smaller and smarter government.

We have stayed the course with an unwavering commitment to create jobs, increase family incomes, reduce the size of government, and give Iowa students a globally competitive education.

We have provided significant tax relief for Iowans the past five years, especially for commercial property taxpayers.

And last month, Lt. Gov. Reynolds and leaders from the Economic Development Authority and Department of Transportation unveiled Iowa's most comprehensive Energy Plan.

The plan was developed after collaboration with the private sector, public sector, educators, non-profits and utilities.

Iowa is already a leader in low-cost and renewable energy.

The comprehensive new energy plan will help build on our past energy successes and reaffirms our commitment to maintaining Iowa's energy leadership in the future.

I'm proud that we have made government smaller and smarter.

We've seen unemployment in our state drop from 6.2 percent to 3.8 percent.

The state has helped attract more than 13 and a half billion in private-sector capital investment, which has translated into great-paying jobs across Iowa.

And more Iowans have been employed these past few years than at any other period in our state's history.

We have also made the tough decisions to ensure government lives within its means like Iowa families must do.

We have accomplished this with a relentless focus on fiscal discipline, demanding budget predictability, fully restoring Iowa's reserve accounts and reducing the state's debt liability.

Together we have made progress toward our goal of restoring Iowa's schools to best in the nation through a series of landmark reforms and innovative policies.

To improve Iowa's education standing, we needed to make sure our hardworking teachers had all the tools necessary to succeed given higher expectations for all students.

So, we created a new Teacher Leadership System that better utilizes the expertise of top teachers to improve education, instruction and foster greater collaboration.

I'm proud to say that every public school in Iowa today is participating in our Teacher Leadership System.

To ensure that our children are prepared for a 21st century economy we advanced a nationally recognized STEM initiative that gives students the confidence and skills for rewarding careers.

The STEM initiative is led by Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds and Kemin Industries President & CEO Dr. Chris Nelson and has seen outstanding growth and success.

Sustaining these measures over time is critical to get the right results for our students and our state.

The ability of Iowans to overcome challenges bolsters my optimism for our state's future.

When faced with challenges, Iowans consistently seek opportunities.

Some of the challenges we have overcome--like the Farm Crisis of the 1980s--tore at the very fabric of our communities.

In the 1980s, Bloomfield, Ia.--a community in Davis County in southeast Iowa--struggled like many communities across the state.

An uninsured bank in Bloomfield closed in 1983 and caused great losses for area families and businesses.

And area farmers were straddled with debt and limited market opportunities for their crops.

However, through a persistent focus on economic diversification and an entrepreneurial spirit to rebuild its community, Bloomfield now has new manufacturers that are growing alongside innovative startups.

And, to continue their effort to stay on the cutting edge community leaders are instituting aggressive strategies to become Iowa's first energy independent community by 2030.

I visited Bloomfield last year and was impressed with the Main Street revitalization, a new hardware store and the M3 Fabrication manufacturing plant.

And Woodbine, Ia., is another example of a community that took its future into its own hands.

The community showed how an integrated approach to community revitalization that focuses on historic preservation and community sustainability can redefine a struggling, small rural community.

Woodbine also had a bank closure in the 1980s, but the community turned its challenges into future growth and diversification.

Lt. Gov. Reynolds and I visited Woodbine and were impressed with the success of their Main Street program.

And Waterloo, Ia., after experiencing economic challenges throughout the previous three decades embraced the challenge of reshaping its industrial heritage to succeed in modern times.

Cedar Valley Tech Works has made Waterloo a nationally recognized leader for manufacturing innovation.

And John Deere continues to be a leading manufacturer and innovator in Waterloo.

In the balcony, we have leaders from Bloomfield, Woodbine and Waterloo.

Please join me in congratulating their accomplishments and supporting their future success.

Iowa's industries are increasingly high tech, including advanced manufacturing.

In total, Iowa has over 6,100 manufacturers that contribute more than $31 billion to Iowa's economy and employ over 200,000 Iowans.

Over the next year, the Iowa Economic Development Authority will work with Iowa's manufacturers to advance a "Year of Manufacturing" in Iowa to help grow this important part of the Iowa economy.

We should also be proud that Iowa remains an agricultural powerhouse that feeds and fuels the world thanks to the hard work and innovation of Iowa's farmers and agricultural producers.

We just set an all-time record for ethanol production, set a new record for biodiesel production by an additional 55 million gallons and lead the nation in percentage of electricity generated by wind.

We now generate over 35 percent of our electricity from wind and expect this number to exceed 40 percent by 2020.

Over the past 30 years, we've significantly added value to our agricultural commodities.

We've also diversified the Iowa economy by expanding exports and supporting growth in biofuels, wind energy, data centers, fertilizer plants, bio-renewable chemicals, advanced manufacturing, insurance and financial services.

These newer industries employ hundreds of thousands of Iowans in rewarding careers.

And while I am pleased with this progress and optimistic about Iowa's future, I believe there is more work to be done.

We must seize the opportunities before us.

This new General Assembly brings new dynamics, new expectations and new opportunities to deliver positive results for Iowans.

Our state is in an admirable position.

Many states are strapped with crushing debt, poor credit ratings and a bleak economic outlook.

But Iowa is a shining example of what hard work and smart, tough choices can do for growing businesses and nurturing families.

While the December Revenue Estimate is lower than previous projections the estimate still shows a modest increase in state revenues.

Although we have faced a headwind out of Washington, D.C., that is stifling our agricultural economy, we still have positive state revenue growth.

But we must proceed with caution and not repeat the mistakes of the past.

With that prudence in mind, I present my proposed adjustments to the current fiscal year budget to you today.

These adjustments are required by law.

My proposal does not include across-the-board cuts, does not reduce funding for K through 12 education, does not reduce property tax credits and does not include furloughs for state employees.

The budget reductions I am recommending for this fiscal year are difficult.

But they maintain funding for our mutual priorities.

I am committed to working with legislative leaders to implement these adjustments.

For the coming biennium, I am presenting a complete two-year budget that is balanced each year and meets our five-year projections for a sustainable future.

This budget is based on the principles laid out by the Iowa Taxpayers Association.

It prioritizes education, health care, economic development and public safety.

And it redirects family planning money to organizations that focus on providing health care for women and eliminates taxpayer funding for organizations that perform abortions.

On my first trip to China in 1984, I learned that the Chinese word for danger and opportunity is one in the same.

Today, America and Iowa exist in a challenging world.

But we must seize the opportunity to make it a better place.

In 2010, Lt. Gov. Reynolds and I promised to reduce the size and scope of government.

I'm proud to report that we have a smaller, smarter government with a steady focus on improving services for our citizens in a more timely and efficient manner.

Yet, while the size of government is smaller, benefits for public employees at the state and local level have increased.

Unfortunately, the cost of these benefits has grown dramatically because of our antiquated collective bargaining system that has led to over 500 health-care plans, many of which are inefficient and way too costly for public employees and Iowa taxpayers.

Under our present system, a few adverse health outcomes will destroy the budget of a city, county or school district.

By replacing this system with one comprehensive statewide health-care contract we can spread the risk and dramatically reduce costs.

Using a uniform health-care benefit system similar to the IPERS program for retirement we can provide quality health care at a significantly lower cost and give local governments more flexibility to provide better wages and meet other needs.

The statewide health-care contract also needs to reward employees who take ownership of their own health by conducting health risk assessments and taking actions to improve their own health.

We have made a commitment to examine every dollar of revenue and expenditure in order to maximize efficiency and respect hardworking taxpayers.

We are committed to a smaller, smarter government that seeks innovative ways to provide services rather than blind adherence to the way things have always been done.

I'm asking the General Assembly to take a comprehensive review of all of our state's boards and commissions to address unnecessary barriers that prevent competition and raise costs.

I encourage you to ask the tough questions that challenge the status quo.

In Iowa, 90 percent of our general fund budget is spent on three items; K through 12 education, Medicaid and employee wages and benefits.

The state has significantly increased funding for education since 2011, amounting to over 654 million additional dollars.

Education and job training are the foundation for our future economic growth.

Growing our state's talent pipeline needs to be a top priority.

Even with our modest revenue growth my recommendation includes an increase of $73 million for K-12 education for fiscal year 2018 and an additional $61 million for fiscal year 2019 which equates to roughly 2 percent growth each year.

So this year, let's show Iowans we can make these decisions early and meet the legal requirements of setting supplemental state aid for fiscal year 2018 and fiscal year 2019 in the first 30 days.

The second largest driver of our state budget is health and human services spending.

Together, we have transformed our mental health system to a community-based model, we obtained a federal waiver for our Iowa Health and Wellness Plan which has reduced charity care for hospitals and, like 39 other states, we have modernized our Medicaid program.

As a result, we have created a new system where more Iowans have access to mental health services closer to home than ever before; more Iowans are covered with health insurance than ever before; and more than 80 new value-added services are now being offered under our modernized Medicaid program.

We've also replaced the old Medicaid system with a coordinated team of health-care professionals to ensure patients see the right provider at the right time.

As a result of these reforms and innovation, we have improved the focus on health outcomes and saved the taxpayers $110 million.

Our increase in education funding last year was made possible because of our modernized Medicaid efforts.

Without these vital reforms, the budget choices before us today would be twice as hard.

In order to grow Iowa, we must also look at policies and reforms that will continue growing family incomes.

One way to do this is to close the skills gap which in many ways is the biggest challenge our state faces over the next decade.

That is why Lt. Governor Reynolds and I set the Future Ready Iowa goal that 70 percent of Iowans in the workforce should have education or training beyond high school by 2025.

Today, less than half of our workforce does.

Accomplishing this ambitious goal will create unprecedented opportunities for Iowans and better position our state to compete in an increasingly knowledge-based, digital economy.

That is why we established the Future Ready Iowa Alliance, co-chaired by Lt. Governor Reynolds and Dan Houston of Principal, which will make recommendations by Oct. 31, 2017, to assure more Iowans have the careers they deserve and employers can hire the skilled workers they need to grow and innovate.

Even with a tight budget, we should continue to prioritize initiatives that will grow the state's talent pipeline like the STEM initiative, registered apprenticeships and work-based learning for Iowa's students.

Please help me recognize the students here with us today from Jackson Elementary School in Des Moines, Bondurant-Farrar Middle School and Waukee High School, which has one of the premier work-based learning programs in our state.

The students in the gallery represent children across Iowa who are counting on all of us to modernize schools for the 21st century.

That's why Lt. Governor Reynolds and I are launching a comprehensive computer science initiative.

We are encouraging every high school to offer at least one high-quality computer science course, every middle school to provide exploratory computer science, and every elementary school to include an introduction to computer science.

All students need to learn how computers operate because it is fundamental to life and work today.

Computer science will provide students a chance to join one of the fastest-growing and best-paying fields.

No student should miss out on this opportunity because of where they live.

This is another step to better align education and training with essential workforce needs.

We all care deeply for the safety of our families, our friends, and our neighbors.

However, a troubling trend has begun to emerge that threatens Iowans' safety on our roads.

Earlier this year, I called on the Department of Public Safety and the Governor's Traffic Safety Bureau to lead a working group to study this disturbing trend.

The group, with the support of key stakeholders, including law enforcement, made recommendations worth your consideration.

I am asking you to take a hard look at these recommendations and evaluate which can be put into law to make our roads safer.

Unfortunately, too many innocent bicyclists, motorcyclists, pedestrians and passengers have lost their lives on our roads.

Last year, I received a handwritten note from Christine and Darrel Harken, parents of Grace Harken, who live near Riceville.

They wrote "our daughter Gracie's life was so sadly ended July 29, 2015, by someone who was driving and texting."

Grace was biking safely and lawfully during a morning bike ride, when a driver who was texting struck and killed her.

They went on to write, "Grace would have forgiven the driver and moved forward.

"That is what we have chosen to do. But we miss her so."

Grace Harken's life was tragically ended way too early.

Modern technologies should come with new responsibilities.

I ask that all Iowans join the Iowa law-enforcement community, first responders, the League of Cities, all the major cell-phone carriers, the insurance industry, and the medical community in demanding real change in the laws for distracted and impaired drivers.

Last year, I called on the Legislature to send me a water-quality improvement bill.

I was pleased to see bipartisan progress made on this front with the House passing House File 2541 last session.

This bill was approved by the Agriculture, Ways and Means and Appropriations Committees and passed the House with 65 votes.

This bill provided for a long-term, dedicated and growing source of revenue to help implement projects to improve habitat and water quality directed by the Iowa Nutrient Reduction Strategy.

The bill also provided funding for community conservation practices and improvements to wastewater and drinking water facilities.

By leading on this issue, together we have the opportunity to modernize Iowa's agricultural infrastructure, create jobs in rural Iowa and promote collaboration between urban and rural communities.

I believe our discussions should begin with the House-passed bill from last session.

I hope we can work together to perfect and improve the legislation that will provide a long-term, dedicated and growing source of revenue for water-quality improvements.

I've been so blessed to serve as your governor, leading the state I love, for 22 years. .

I am confident Iowa will continue to move forward because Iowans care deeply about their neighbors, their communities and creating an even better future.

And I'm extremely thankful for perhaps the most patient person in the state -- my wife, Chris -- as she has also served Iowa as first lady with grace.

She has welcomed Iowans and visitors from around the world to Terrace Hill and she has volunteered to help in many ways, including reading with Jackson Elementary students.

To Chris and my entire family, thank you for your sacrifice during my time in public service.

I am also thankful for the friendships we have made in all 99 counties -- friendships that we will always cherish.

And I am grateful for the prayers from Iowans who have encouraged me along the way.

There is no better job in the world than being the governor of the state that you love.

But sometimes we are called to serve in ways we had never imagined.

As I approach the U.S. Senate confirmation process my main priority is to continue serving the people of Iowa with the same energy and passion that I have brought to this office each and every day.

Thank you.

God Bless you and all the people of Iowa.

The Iowa Department of Transportation said Wednesday that it has awarded the contract to build the new Interstate-74 bridge to Wisconsin-based Lunda Construction Co.

The DOT said the contract is for about $322.1 million. The next lowest bid was at $357.8 million.

It's not clear yet precisely when work on the bridge will begin. Sam Shea, a transportation planner for the Iowa DOT, said Wednesday he had not seen a schedule yet, but that work likely would begin in the Mississippi River by sometime next month. "I imagine they'll have quite a bit of staging to do," he said. Most of it will be in downtown Bettendorf.

Shea said people will likely see barges in the river fairly quickly, but that as far as anything being erected in the water, that is likely a few months away.

Construction of the bridge is expected to take three years. Much of the impact to traffic will be in 2019 and 2020. The project consists of two bridges, each about 3,400 in length, with two 795-foot basket handle arches over the Mississippi River navigational channel.

Selecting a contractor is a key milestone in the Interstate-74 corridor project, which has been in the planning stages for years.

Lunda, which is based in Black River Falls, Wisconsin, could not be immediately reached for comment Wednesday afternoon. But the company's web site cited work it's done on a number of bridges in Wisconsin and Minnesota, including in the Minneapolis/St. Paul area. Lunda was founded in 1938. It's now a subsidiary of Tutor Perini, a large construction firm based in the Los Angeles area.

The $322 million bid came in significantly less than the DOT had anticipated. It had estimated that the I-74 project would cost between $400 million and $450 million, which included a viaduct and off-ramp over downtown Bettendorf estimated at about $30 million. A contract for that work has not been announced yet, Shea said.

Despite the savings, the project still is the largest contract the state DOT has ever awarded, Shea said. He added the local share of the contract's cost came in somewhat higher than expected, but he did not have a figure available Wednesday afternoon. The cities of Moline and Bettendorf are responsible for those costs.

Bettendorf City Administrator Decker Ploehn said Wednesday the city was expecting to pay $14 million for its share. "I think this is up a couple hundred thousand over that," he said.

Ploehn said he didn't consider it a major problem, but that the city is talking to the DOT about why it happened and is hoping to lower the amount.

Wednesday's award is the first of a number of I-74 related contracts that will be handed out this summer.

The state of Illinois is expected to award a contract in June for work from the river to 7th Avenue in Moline, which will include the viaduct over downtown and street improvements to accommodate the interchanges. That's estimated at $120 million. Then, probably in September, contracts will be awarded for work on the interstate from 7th Avenue to just south of Avenue of the Cities, as well as street improvements, including reconstruction of 19th Street. That work has been estimated at $128 million.

Stepfather's killing could be first test of Iowa's new 'stand your ground' law

Grant Rodgers , groddgers@dmreg.com Published 12:08 p.m. CT May 17, 2017 | Updated 10 minutes ago

Iowa's new "stand your ground" law could have its first test in the murder trial of a Des Moines woman accused of shooting and killing her stepfather this month.

Defense attorney F. Montgomery Brown confirmed at a court hearing Wednesday that he plans to invoke the controversial law in defending Sera Alexander, who is accused of shooting her stepfather, Anthony Hartmann, several times in the basement of her family's south Des Moines home May 8.

The Republican-backed legislation, which was signed into law by Gov. Terry Branstad in April, says that "law abiding" people who are in a place legally do not have a duty to retreat before using deadly force to defend themselves if they believe their life is in danger. Brown told a judge that change made Iowa law "vastly more favorable" to a defendant like Alexander, 29.

"She has substantive defenses that, on their face, could very well be successful," Brown said.

The announcement came during a request from Brown to have Alexander's bail reduced from $1 million so she could be released from Polk County Jail ahead of her trial. Judge Robert Hanson granted the reduction, allowing Alexander to be released on a $100,000 cash or surety bond.

Susan McCall Hartmann, Alexander's mother, said she expected her daughter would be released from jail sometime Wednesday. McCall Hartmann sat in the courtroom alongside another daughter, Amanda, through the 20-minute hearing.

"She's got a job, she's got things to do. She will have some restrictions of course, but minor compared to what we've been through in this past week," McCall Hartmann said. "We're going to try to keep things as normal as possible."

In granting the bond reduction, Hanson noted that Alexander has no past criminal history and called the shooting an "aberration." "It doesn't look like the defendant is a flight risk, it doesn't look like she is a danger to anybody else," he said.

McCall Hartmann told the Register in a Friday interview that Hartmann, 49, abused her throughout their 19-year marriage. Brown told Hanson at the hearing that Alexander in recent years sought treatment for post-traumatic stress disorder related to violence Hartmann brought into the home.

Hartmann was not living at the family home due to a no-contact order that was put in place after he grabbed his wife by the hair and pushed her into a car window in November, according to court records. McCall Hartmann began divorce proceedings that month.

But the no-contact order was lifted May 2 so that Hartmann could return to the Southwest 17th Street home to retrieve some tools and other belongings.

McCall Hartmann told the Register that her daughter had been out of town and was not aware her stepfather was allowed in the home. The mother believes that Hartmann must have done something to make Alexander feel in danger, even though police have said he did not threaten or assault his stepdaughter before the killing.

Brown outlined his "stand your ground" defense at the hearing as part of his arguments that Alexander's bond should be lowered. Brown argued that the new law allows a person who uses deadly force to be mistaken about whether his or her life is threatened. The person would be covered if there was a "reasonable basis" to believe the threat was real and the person acted reasonably, he said.

Brown noted several instances in which Hartmann reportedly threatened the family, including a situation in which he threw a "heavy object" that broke his wife's hand and a prison sentence he received in 2001 for stabbing her in the arm.

Alexander legally obtained the handgun that was used in the shooting and had the proper permit to acquire the gun required by Iowa law, Brown said.

The law also presumes that lethal force is reasonable if the person killed unlawfully entered a house or building through "stealth," Brown said. Though Hartmann may have been allowed inside temporarily, Brown said that section of the law will be central to the case.

"From the defendant's perspective, she did not know Anthony Hartmann would be entering the house," he said. "He entered the house without her knowledge, so that presumption appears to apply."

Brown said in an interview after the hearing that he does expect litigation with prosecutors over whether the new law will even apply to the case. The "stand your ground" portion of the new law takes effect July 1.

As part of the request for a bond reduction, Brown said that Alexander would be willing to undergo electronic monitoring using an ankle bracelet, be subject to a curfew and remain at her house when not in court or at work.

Shannon Archer, an assistant Polk County attorney prosecuting the case, opposed the motion for bond reduction. Alexander should be considered a flight risk because she faces a first-degree murder charge that would carry a mandatory life-without-parole prison sentence if convicted, she said.

"Obviously, I am not unsympathetic to the violence that may have occurred in their home," Archer said. "As a seven-year domestic abuse prosecutor, I understand domestic abuse and what it can do to a family. But what we are dealing with here is an isolated incident where ... this defendant, without justification, went up, grabbed her firearm and shot Mr. Hartmann multiple times. In no way was Mr. Hartmann threatening her or assaulting her at the time that that happened."

Archer also countered the defense attorney's portrayal of Hartmann as a violent drug abuser. "The law protects every victim equally and Mr. Hartmann should be entitled to the same protection of the law as any victim," she said.

An obituary for Hartmann said he graduated from Carlisle High School before finishing an electrician apprenticeship. McCall Hartmann has declined to tell the Register how the two met, but her husband was an Iowa Hawkeyes football fan with a "beautiful" singing voice, according to the obituary.

By Sen. Janet Petersen, guest columnist

May 10, 2017 at 1:31 pm | Print View

Governor Branstad is a sore loser who still doesn't get it.

After leading the charge to cut or even deny Iowa women access to critical medical services, the governor is now whining about one of his few legislative defeats in 2017.

In his recent opinion piece in The Gazette, Gov. Branstad makes it clear that he and Lt. Governor Kim Reynolds are ready to do almost anything to impose their own personal and religious beliefs on all Iowa women.

Iowans must never forget what the governor, lieutenant governor and the Iowa Board of Medicine tried to do.

In 2013, Gov. Branstad's appointees to that Board of Medicine voted to ban the existing legal access Iowa women had to telemedicine abortions.

Two years later, the Iowa Supreme Court unanimously ruled that by doing so, the Iowa Board of Medicine and the Branstad/Reynolds administration had violated the Iowa Constitution.

Here's part of that unanimous ruling:

"While undoubtedly at an abstract level everyone would prefer to see a doctor in person every time they have a medical issue, the reality of modern medicine is otherwise. In this case, the record indicates the physician plays an important role in reviewing the ultrasound images and dispensing the prescribed medications, but those roles can be performed without the physician being personally present.

"The record also provides almost no medical support for the necessity of a pelvic exam before dispensing the medication. At the same time, the record indicates that the telemedicine rule would make it more challenging for many women who wish to exercise their constitutional right to terminate a pregnancy in Iowa to do so."

Suzanna de Baca, CEO of Planned Parenthood of the Heartland, summarized the decision perfectly: "Medical experts opposed this law because it harms women by blocking access to safe medical care. When it comes to health care, politics should never trump medicine."

The simple truth is that Gov. Branstad played politics with the Iowa Board of Medicine and got caught. That's why two of his appointees were not reconfirmed this spring by the Iowa Senate.

Get over it, governor. Iowans have much more to worry about than two people who weren't reappointed to a committee.

We all live in the real world. We all live in a state where a Republican-controlled Legislature has just made health care much more insecure for everyone. Legislative Republicans make it harder for Iowa women — especially rural Iowa women — to get cancer screenings, STD tests, and birth control. Republicans also passed a severe 20-week abortion ban without any exceptions for rape, incest, or even severe fetal anomalies. Republicans even slashed state funding to help victims of domestic abuse and sexual assault.

Don't feel sorry for Gov. Branstad and his rejected appointees to the Iowa Board of Medicine. They aren't victims. The real victims of the 2017 session are Iowa women. They will have to travel farther and pay more for health care — and ultimately have worse health outcomes — because of the actions taken by the Republican-controlled Legislature, the governor and lieutenant governor.

Kevin, I am working on a chapter 802 bill that lists you as a person who has authorization to discuss the bill. Below is part of the language submitted in the draft. What does "unknown" mean? Does it mean legal name, nickname, face? My other question is more practical, don't these two new subsections in 802 basically override most if not all limitations under Code chapter 802—is that your intent? If a person is known to the prosecuting attorney that person is usually indicted? What criminal does not conceal their crime--very few—if they don't conceal their crime then usually indicted quickly?

Sec. ____ . Section 802.6, Code 2017, is amended by adding the following new subsections:

NEW SUBSECTION. 3. The time within which an indictment or information must be found shall not include the time during which the person committing the crime is unknown to the prosecuting attorney.

NEW SUBSECTION. 4. The time which an indictment or information must be found shall not include the time during which the accused person conceals evidence of the offense, and evidence sufficient to charge the person with that offense is unknown to the prosecuting attorney and could not have been discovered by that authority through the exercise of due diligence.

Hi Dave,

The Department has not changed its position on this question since you received an answer in September from Phil Wise. Here is the Student Activities Fund Guidance that is available on our website. The short answer is that our interpretation remains that the SAF should be used for the purchase of Protective Athletic Equipment for student activities.

I just got off a conference call with the Attorney General's Office regarding the issue of if a school district is allowed to use their General Fund to purchase athletic equipment. A local school district provided Patti Ruff a 1992 AG opinion which states that it was allowed. However, in 1994, chapter 298A.8 was passed as part of the GAAP bill (see below).

298A.8 Student activity fund.

The student activity fund is a special revenue fund. A student activity fund must be established in any school corporation receiving money from student-related activities such as admissions, activity fees, student dues, student fund-raising events, or other student-related cocurricular or extracurricular activities. Moneys in this fund shall be used to support only the cocurricular program defined in department of education administrative rules.

94 Acts, ch 1029, §8

Referred to in §298A.15

My question to the AG was that this AG opinion touted by the district, was it mute with the 94 law passage? Essentially yes, was the answer, but they then questioned if the dept. had set in policy that a school district could not pay for athletic equipment with GF dollars.

The AG Office then told me that Nicole Proesch is coming fourth with an opinion on if it is allowed or not. I would simply like to request that I be included on what that decision is.

Prior to the district digging up a 1992 AG opinion, I had already requested a bill for Patti Ruff on this topic that could be debated in the 2017 session. I had also received clarification from the department on rules and guidance. I also have an e-mail from Jeff Berger explaining the dept. position or interpretation of those rules and guidance (which is complex), but that may be mute since he was recently fired.

I do not want to influence whatever the decision the dept. comes up with on the matter, but if you need the 1992 AG opinion on the matter, or Jeff Berger's interpretation, let me know.

It was 97-3 in favor of it. Those who voted no were Jesse Helms, Robert Byrd, and Harlan Matthews of Tennessee who was the Democrat who filled in after Gore became Vice President.

In the House, the vote was apparently on a voice vote.

It looks to me like we can support this.

(More photos of us online - spent about an hour with the photographer on Friday - Karen and I made sure to get dressed first, no PJ's hah!) Didn't expect front page, but what the heck! Rachel is a bit embarrassed about it, but she'll live. All is mostly fine with us. Saw Cheryl this a.m. at Des Moines Orthopedic Surgeons office. She seems to be recovering well from the surgery she told me about today. Darned right knee of mine had an arthritis flare-up this weekend so was learning all about that this a.m. Couldn't put any weight on it Sunday evening. Mostly better now. Off to usual Spring Break Florida trip over the weekend. BTW, I have gotten only one auto complaint from Marti. I can't imagine you folks have had only one no-pursue going out in the last few weeks. But, maybe I'm wrong about that. Thought we'd be looking at these over a few weeks, maybe a month, to see if it was worth it for me to view them more frequently. So, could you please touch base with her just to make sure she understands what we're asking her to do? Much appreciated! Hope, you, Adam, and the kids are all well.

Geoff, sorry for the delay in circling back. Where does it say in Iowa Code that "the lieutenant governor, after taking office as governor, appoints a new lieutenant governor"? I see where the governor appoints a new LG if there is a vacancy in the LG position, but that says nothing about "the lieutenant governor, after taking office as governor."

In the Griffin case, Jeffrey Thompson told the Iowa Supreme Court that it was very significant Iowa lawmakers did not change the "infamous crimes" language when they amended the same part of the Iowa Constitution to remove the word "idiot." It strikes me as significant that lawmakers in the 1950s and 1980s did not change language referring to the LG performing the duties of the office of governor. They could have changed the wording to make it more like the US Constitution's language regarding the presidential succession, but they did not.

Why doesn't Attorney General Tom Miller want to ask the Iowa Supreme Court to weigh in on this issue? Doing so would allow the justices to provide a definitive interpretation of the Iowa Constitution. There is plenty of time for the justices to prepare an opinion. Governor Branstad does not intend to step down until he is confirmed as ambassador to China, which will take 4-8 months.

Thanks,

Laurie

Notably, Iowa courts have never addressed this issue.

In all four historical cases of vacancies by Iowa governors, the lieutenant governor who succeeded the governor was viewed and regarded in all respects as the governor.

Our office carefully reviewed the Iowa Constitution.

A significant formal attorney general opinion from 1923 states that (in case of death, resignation or removal from office of the governor) the lieutenant governor becomes governor (I attached the opinion and highlighted the pertinent section on page 2).

Case law, statutory, and constitutional analyses from other states are consistent with this provision.

Finally, the Iowa Code supports this position. State law establishes that, the lieutenant governor, after taking office as governor, appoints a new lieutenant governor.

This research leads us to concur with Governor Branstad's conclusion that, upon his resignation, Lt. Governor Reynolds will become Governor. In her capacity as Governor, Governor Reynolds will have the authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Geoff, I'm seeking further explanation on the basis for that reading of the Iowa Constitution. Wouldn't the framers and lawmakers who later amended the text have said that the lieutenant governor would become the governor, instead of using phrases like, "The lieutenant governor, while acting as governor, shall be paid the compensation and expenses prescribed for the governor"?

Also, can Attorney General Miller explain why Joshua Newbold did not appoint a lieutenant governor during the nearly a year that he performed the duties of governor?

Hello Geoff,

What is the time frame for Attorney General Miller to issue an opinion on 1) whether Kim Reynolds will become governor or merely "acting governor" after Governor Branstad leaves for China, and 2) whether Reynolds will be able to appoint a new lieutenant governor in that scenario? I am requesting a copy of that opinion as soon as it becomes available

I saw you told Jason Noble last week, "We're going to have to review this and confer with the governor's office." Does that mean Attorney General Miller plans to clear his opinion with the governor's staff ahead of time? Or will his analysis of Iowa Constitution Section 4 be independent?

I assume the governor's office will want Kim Reynolds to have the title of governor as well as the powers of the office.

Thanks in advance for any information or clarification you can provide.

As Branstad prepares for China, transfer of power process unfolds

Iowa officials say they need more time to determine how governmental power is transferred to Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds.

Geoff and Eric,

FYI, a very astute comment on Laurie Belin's blog post by Darrell Hanson, longtime Republican (former) legislator:

Darrell Hanson I'm not an attorney or a constitutional scholar, so I don't know if the following is significant: Every time the Iowa constitution refers to someone taking over after the governor's position becomes vacant, whether it is the Lt. Gov., the President of the Senate, or the Speaker of the House, very similar language is used to refer to them as the person acting as governor, not as the new governor. In addition, the section Mark quoted (Article IV, section 17) that describes what happens when the governor resigns is the same section that describes what happens if a governor is temporarily disabled, and the same language applies to both situations. So it would seem to me that the same type of transfer of powers occurs under both circumstances. If a governor was temporarily disabled and the Lt. Gov. assumed the powers and duties of the governor during that time, nobody would argue that the Lt. Gov. position had become vacant. Since the same provision governs both a temporary assumption of power and a permanent assumption of power, I would assume the status of the Lt. Gov. office would be the same in both types of vacancies. But again, I'm not an attorney, so take those arguments for what they are worth.

Amanda Krenz just called asking for an interview about succession. I politely declined and let her know we're reviewing the law and are conferring with your office.

It's possible she may call over there. FYI.

I just want to make sure I haven't missed anything--has Attorney General Miller responded in writing to Senator David Johnson yet regarding the succession questions?

Do you have any idea when that written opinion will be available?

1. Resignation of the Governor – Must be made in writing to the General Assembly, if in session, if not, to the Secretary of State. Iowa Code § 69.4(1).
2. Upon resignation, the Office of Governor is considered vacant. § 69.2(1)(d).
3. The vacancy is filled by the Lieutenant Governor. Iowa Const. Art. IV, Sec. 17 (“In the case of the death, impeachment, resignation . . . of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, . . . shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.”)
4. Once the Lt. Governor becomes governor, it creates a vacancy in the Lt. Governor’s office because of the prohibition against simultaneously holding more than one elective office. See Iowa Code § 69.2(1)(h).
5. In general, vacancies in state offices are filled by the governor. § 69.8(2).
6. The Code specifically provides, “an appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of the lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term.” § 69.8(2).

Accordingly, a resignation by Gov. Branstad would create a vacancy that would be filled by Lt. Gov. Reynolds. Once she assumed the office of Governor, a vacancy would be created in the Lt. Governor’s office. The governor has the power and authority to appoint a new Lt. Governor who would serve for the balance of the Branstad/ Reynolds term.

We have reviewed for any relevant case law or Attorney General Opinions, and have not found any that would alter the above analysis.

Hi Rox:

That was a fun event.

Thanks for the reminder. Here's our thinking on succession:

Notably, Iowa courts have never addressed this issue.

In all four historical cases of vacancies by Iowa governors, the lieutenant governor who succeeded the governor was viewed and regarded in all respects as the governor.

Our office carefully reviewed the Iowa Constitution.

A significant formal attorney general opinion from 1923 states that (in case of death, resignation or removal from office of the governor) the lieutenant governor becomes governor (I attached the opinion and highlighted the pertinent section on page 2).

Case law, statutory, and constitutional analyses from other states are consistent with this provision.

Finally, the Iowa Code supports this position. State law establishes that, the lieutenant governor, after taking office as governor, appoints a new lieutenant governor.

This research leads us to concur with Governor Branstad's conclusion that, upon his resignation, Lt. Governor Reynolds will become Governor. In her capacity as Governor, Governor Reynolds will have the authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Hopefully that helps clear things up.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Lieutenant Governor to Serve as Governor, But Lacks Authority to Appoint Lieutenant, Attorney General Opinion Concludes

*Formal opinion responds to request by state senator as Governor Branstad prepares to resign
for ambassadorship*

DES MOINES – Attorney General Tom Miller Monday issued a formal legal opinion stating that if a governor resigns, the lieutenant governor becomes governor for all intents and purposes, but does not have legal authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Sen. David Johnson, I-Ocheyedan, requested the opinion following Governor Terry Branstad’s announcement that, if confirmed by the U.S. Senate, he will serve as U.S. ambassador to China.

The 23-page opinion, following extensive legal and historical research, concludes, “...the powers and duties of the office of Governor fall upon the lieutenant governor.” The conclusion is based on an Iowa Constitution provision addressing a governor’s resignation, which states, “...the powers and duties of the office...shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.” Under that provision, the opinion adds, “The lieutenant governor takes on this authority because she is lieutenant governor.”

Significantly, according to Miller, Article IV, section 1 provides that “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.”

While the “the lieutenant governor becomes governor and has the title of Governor,” the opinion further adds that that person does not have constitutional authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor. “In other words, upon a governor’s resignation, the lieutenant governor will hold both the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. There is no vacancy to be filled,” according to the opinion.

“This opinion conveys that, in a sense, the two offices merge,” Miller said. “This is consistent with numerous cases in other states that addressed this question,” Miller added. “It is also consistent with a close reading of the Iowa governor's succession provision—Article IV, section 19 of the Iowa Constitution, which establishes a precise order of gubernatorial succession without providing for the appointment of a lieutenant governor.”

Miller's opinion notes that in all four previous instances when an Iowa governor resigned or died while in office, the lieutenant governor was always considered governor, but never appointed or named a new lieutenant governor. The opinion also concludes, “The framers intended that those in the gubernatorial line of succession be elected.”

At the federal level, prior to Congress amending the U.S. Constitution in 1967 to establish that the vice president becomes president and grants the president authority to appoint a new vice president with Congressional approval, no vice president who assumed the powers and duties of a president who died while in office appointed a new vice president.

The formal opinion departs from a public statement Miller's office issued in December, following an informal legal review in response to media inquiries, which stated the office concurred with “Governor Branstad's conclusion that...in her capacity as Governor, Governor Reynolds will have the authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor.”

The December statement was based, in part, on an Iowa Code section addressing vacancies of office holders. Miller's formal opinion concludes this statute does not apply when a governor resigns and the powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

About Attorney General Opinions

A formal attorney general opinion addresses legal questions relating to a public official's duties by interpreting laws and offering legal guidance.

While not a legal precedent, a formal attorney general opinion is similar to one and stands until a court or later opinion overrules it or new legislation is enacted to change a statute in question. Opinions are not legally binding, but courts generally give them careful consideration and deference.

Hi Jerry,

We don't have a definitive answer quite yet. Our office is reviewing pertinent sections of the Iowa Constitution (see attached) and Iowa Code regarding succession, and we're consulting with the Governor's office.

I don't have a timetable, but I think the Governor's office plans to release a transition plan at some point.

Best wishes,

Geoff

Geoff,

Good morning!

I know you're busy... When/if you get time, we're interested in getting a synopsis of what needs to be interpreted in the Iowa constitution as Kim Reynolds makes the transition from lieutenant governor. I know there are some questions about what "official" title she'll have.

Thanks!

Following up on your question from Thursday.

Our office has researched the law and consulted with the Governor's office. We concur with the Governor's conclusion that, upon the resignation of Governor Branstad, Lt. Governor Reynolds will become Governor and will have the authority to appoint a new Lieutenant Governor.

Thanks,

Geoff

Hello Geoff,

A short while ago on the Iowa Senate floor, Senator David Johnson said he has not yet received a written response from Attorney General Miller regarding the senator's questions about the succession of power.

When will Attorney General Miller reply to Senator Johnson?

Will Attorney General Miller provide a full written opinion answering the nine questions?

I am requesting a copy of Attorney General Miller's response as soon as it is available.

Thanks,

We heard a report late yesterday that the Iowa attorney general's office has been delaying the release of the opinion requested by Sen. Geoff/Eric:

We heard a report late yesterday that the Iowa attorney general's office has been delaying the release of the opinion requested by Sen. Johnson because the attorney general's office anticipates a lawsuit over the succession plans, and therefore will not be issuing a formal legal opinion on this matter. Is this correct?

DMR: IOWA POLL: Tax hike backed for water projects

Support for increase to also fund outdoor recreation is split largely along party lines

Linda Ellis says she's willing to pay more at the store if it means investing more money in cleaning up Iowa's rivers, lakes and streams and boosting the trails and parks that residents use for fun. "Water quality is a key issue around us," said Ellis, a 65-year-old Democrat and lifelong resident of the Iowa Great Lakes area.

"It's a unique part of the state, and tourism is really important to us." Like Ellis, 56 percent of Iowans support increasing the state sales tax three-eighths of 1 cent to pay for water quality projects and outdoor recreation, according to a new Des Moines Register/Mediacom Iowa Poll.

Thirty-eight percent of Iowans oppose a tax increase, and 5 percent are unsure how they feel about the proposal.

Selzer & Co. polled 802 Iowans Feb. 6-9.

The poll has a margin of error of plus or minus 3.5 percentage points.

Poll respondent Dan Bushman of Cedar Rapids said he also is concerned about improving water quality, particularly beefing up conservation that can reduce flooding. But he opposes raising the sales tax.

The excavation contractor wants to see more common-sense approaches to conservation and water-quality spending.

“We’ve got to get more value from what we’re spending,” said Bushman, 44, a Republican.

In 2010, 63 percent of Iowa voters approved a constitutional amendment creating the Iowa Natural Resources and Outdoor Trust Fund to aid water quality and calling for a dedicated funding source.

Providing the financing for the trust fund, however, requires legislative action.

Several proposals were floated in last year’s Legislature, but none gained traction.

Several conservation, farm, sportsmen and business groups support raising the sales tax, a move that would generate $180 million annually.

Advocates have said about 60 percent of the spending would benefit water quality, but many of the proposed initiatives would provide multiple benefits. For example, building wetlands in key locations would improve water quality, reduce flooding and erosion and provide habitat for wildlife.

Support for the tax hike splits largely along party lines, the Iowa Poll showed: 71 percent of Democrats support the sales tax, as do 57 percent of independents, while 52 percent of Republicans oppose it. Support also splits along generational lines: 67 percent of Iowans younger than 35 support the tax, while 51 percent of Iowans 65 and older oppose it.

Kirk Leeds, CEO of the Iowa Soybean Association, said it’s a tough time to get a majority of Iowans behind a sales tax increase, given intense national political partisanship — and tight state finances.

“Many Iowans, including farmers, recognize that if we’re going to seriously address long-term conservation, water quality and recreation needs — we’re going to have to find additional resources, and that may require increasing taxes,” Leeds said.

Leeds and Jan Glendening, state director of The Nature Conservancy, said some lawmakers are looking at tying a sales tax increase with tax reforms, making the plan revenue neutral.

“That will generate even more support,” Glendening said.

Lawmakers also are expected to take another look at a proposal introduced last year that calls for shifting funding from other infrastructure projects and using money that Iowans pay on water utility bills.

Glendening said the poll results send a “mandate to lawmakers” to take action on sales tax to finance the trust fund.

Leeds worries, though, whether lawmakers will have the political energy to tackle another potentially divisive issue after battling over changes in collective bargaining for public employees.

“Will there be a willingness to come together for that kind of grand compromise” needed to pull together a funding package? he asked. “It could be an uphill battle.”

Iowa has been under pressure to improve water quality on several fronts.

In 2015, Des Moines Water Works sued drainage districts in three northwest Iowa counties, claiming that underground field tiles are funneling high levels of nitrates into the Raccoon River, a source of drinking water for 500,000 residents.

Earlier this month, the Iowa Supreme Court issued a ruling saying that the Des Moines utility couldn't ask the drainage districts to pay damages. But the remainder of the lawsuit, seeking regulatory oversight of the districts and, indirectly, farmers, is slated to go to trial this summer. Poll respondent Andrew Delisi of Runnells sees a clear need to support the sales tax increase.

"We all like drinking clean water, and if this is what we need to ensure that, I don't see why we wouldn't support it," said Delisi, a 49-year-old independent.

DMR: Support seen for role of unions at table

Concerns palpable on collective bargaining

JASON NOBLE

JNOBLE2@DMREG.COM

Union reforms sharply limiting public employees' bargaining rights are barreling toward passage in the Iowa Legislature, but across the state, views on the matter are far less clear cut and show more favorability to organized labor.

A sampling of Iowans from Sioux City to Clinton, across party lines and throughout industries, reveals a general support for unions' role in Iowa workplaces, even amid some skepticism for the way labor groups operate.

Out of 20 Iowans reached by phone on Thursday and Friday, just two expressed genuine opposition to the notion of public employees bargaining on wages, benefits and working conditions. But roughly a dozen voiced support for unionized labor, even in occupations funded with taxpayer dollars. "There needs to be a little bit more protection there," said Angie Buck, 37, a Republican and stay-at-home mom from Marion. "Those jobs are what this country was founded on. Society doesn't work without those jobs." Buck and the others were contacted last week after participating in the latest Des Moines Register/ Mediacom Iowa Poll, although the poll did not include a question about the collective bargaining measures now pending in the Legislature. Interviewees were selected to ensure gender, age, geographic and ideological diversity.

The measures under consideration make farreaching changes to the union organizing and collective bargaining laws governing 184,000 public sector workers, including teachers, prison guards, city and county workers, and others. In its most sweeping change, the legislation shrinks the number of issues subject to collective bargaining from 18 to one — wages. Public safety workers such as police and firefighters are exempted from some of those changes. Additionally, the legislation mandates changes in the ways unions collect dues and political donations and require them to hold recertification elections with every new contract — putting the union itself up for a vote among its members every two to three years. The legislation was introduced early last week and has moved forward on a legislative fast track. It could be sent to Gov. Terry Branstad to be signed into law as early as this week.

Among those defending public employees' collective bargaining rights was Beverly Abbott, who called herself a "strong believer" in organized labor because of her husband's long and positive experience with unions as a railroad worker.

"Just take school teachers," said Abbott, 61 and a political independent from Clinton. "They are so underpaid and underrated, and if it weren't for the unions, I don't think they'd have what they've got now." Even though she's not in a union, Laura Cullen, 50, of Iowa City, said she recognizes that many public-sector workers have made a choice to forgo higher private-sector pay for the stability and better benefits of the public sector.

If the proposed reforms pass, she worries, public workers will lose the benefits that make their wages more competitive. And, she added, she just doesn't believe that the promise of lower-cost government is worth the potential losses in workers and the services they provide.

"When we are endlessly trying to cut taxes, cut taxes, cut taxes, I think it's problematic," said Cullen, a political independent. "I really want someone to answer the phone when I call 911. I really want to have someone who empties the trash once a week. I really want those services, and the trade-off is that I pay taxes." Several outstate Iowans who hold publicsector jobs said the pay and benefits were a big reason why they've remained in rural in Iowa.

That's true for Julie Froah, a nurse who worked for Maytag in Newton but now teaches at Des Moines Area Community College's Newton campus. She called her community college compensation the "anchor" that keeps her in the community.

Edward Olson, meanwhile, offered support for the aims of the legislation, suggesting the changes might spur new and more individualized incentives for workers to do their best on the job. "I'm giving the bill the benefit of the doubt," he said. "Causing some pain is probably not a horrible thing, because otherwise change doesn't happen, and some change in that space is a good thing."

Olson, 47, a Democrat and a manager at John Deere from Bettendorf, said he's seen instances in which unionized workers do what's mandated by their contract — and nothing more.

"They may not be as interested in doing what other people consider the right thing, because it's not required," he said. "Having a desire to do the right thing is an important thing in life, and if we're too comfortable in what we're doing, we probably need to make some changes." And when it comes to government work, Olson said, his impression is that there may be more of that complacency than in other fields. David Bolsenga, an over-the-road trucker from Grimes, likewise questioned unions' value in the workplace and their effect on employees' work ethic. In an earlier career as a glazer, Bolsenga, 57 and a political independent, said he saw unions play favorites and play politics — and he resented less skilled or less diligent workers earning the same pay. "If you're a good worker, you're going to have a job, period," he said. "And if you have good work values, you should be rewarded. Just because you put time in doesn't mean you should be paid." Among the changes proposed in the legislation is banning seniority-based benefits as an item for bargaining among non-public safety workers. Among many, though, is a general ambivalence about the role of unions in Iowa workplaces, often informed by mixed personal experiences with organized labor. That includes Kevin Terwilliger, a 57-year-old groundskeeper for the Clear Lake school district. He described mounting frustrations with the union representing district employees that ultimately led him to end his membership.

But he also saw great value in bargaining collectively, regardless of his individual frustrations with the union representatives. Critical to that, he added, is bargaining for benefits as well as wages. He recalled past negotiations in which district employees sought higher annuity payments and additional vacation time in lieu of raises — something that would be prohibited under the new law. "That's not right," Terwilliger, a Republican, said. "That should be on the table."

AP: Of 1.6 million votes cast in November, Iowa aware of only 10 improper ballots

RYAN J. FOLEY

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Iowa's top elections official, who is pushing for a voter identification requirement that could make it harder for some to vote, has only been informed of 10 votes that were potentially improper out of nearly 1.6 million counted statewide in the November election. Iowa Secretary of State Paul Pate's office learned of a handful of cases of alleged double votes and votes cast by ineligible felons on Election Day that were counted, according to a summary of "general election irregularities" obtained by The Associated Press under the open records law.

Further review by the AP showed that most of the instances were mistakes rather than fraud, and may not have been stopped by an identification requirement. They included a non-English speaking citizen who mistakenly voted when he registered and again on Election Day, a felon whose voting rights had been restored in Wisconsin but not Iowa, and a noncitizen who turned herself in after learning later she shouldn't have been eligible to vote.

Donald Trump easily beat Hillary Clinton in Iowa to carry the state's six electoral votes in the Nov. 8 election.

The review shows that instances of improper voting were minuscule in Iowa, even as Trump calls for an investigation into voter fraud and Republicans who control the state Legislature consider restrictions. A Pate-backed bill introduced Wednesday calls for mandating that voters show certain state-approved identification, which would require 85,000 residents who lack driver's licenses, passports and other accepted IDs to obtain new state voting cards and bring them to polls.

Iowa has been one of the most convenient places for residents to vote in the nation, and has among the highest voter turnout. The state has a long window for voting early, Election Day registration and polls that are required to stay open until 9 p.m.

A group representing Iowa's 99 county auditors, who run elections in their jurisdictions, has opposed Pate's plan.

"Our system is incredible here in the state," said Johnson County Auditor Travis Weipert, noting that one vote out of 80,000 cast in his county remains under investigation. "Incredible. We have 99 auditors who work their tails off ... The system works perfect and they are trying to fix a problem that isn't there."

The only person charged with election misconduct in Iowa is Terri Rote of Des Moines, a Trump supporter who told police she voted twice because she believed the candidate's claims that the election was rigged and that her first ballot wouldn't be counted. Her attorney has argued in court documents that Rote is likely mentally ill and a judge is considering whether she's competent to stand trial.

Polk County Attorney John Sarcone has said two other double voters will not be charged because they were confused and lacked criminal intent.

Police in Storm Lake declined to charge the non-English speaking man, who wasn't sure whether he had voted absentee when he registered at the auditor's office days before the election. Told by poll workers that he hadn't voted, he cast another ballot on Election Day. The county later turned up his second ballot.

"It was an accident involving human error and it was unfounded as an actual fraud case," said the city's public safety director, Mark Prosser. "We found absolutely no skullduggery at all."

Pate spokesman Kevin Hall said the summary obtained by AP was incomplete because county elections officials are not required to report all irregularities. He said the office would like to see that changed, and the voter ID bill would require local officials to report to the state all cases of suspected election misconduct that have been referred for investigation.

Pate has conceded that Iowa elections are clean but argues his plan is needed to keep them that way.

Asked which, if any, of the known irregularities the identification requirement would prevent, Hall was non-specific: "Secretary Pate's Election Integrity Act is a comprehensive, technology-driven proposal aimed at streamlining the system, reducing human error and protecting against fraud."

State data show that some voters who register on Election Day and confusion over Iowa's restrictions on voting rights for felons have presented challenges for elections administrators.

Hall said auditors were still trying to confirm that an unspecified number of voters who registered Nov. 8 were legitimate. About 40 same-day registrants in the 2014 election listed addresses that were either wrong or didn't respond to official inquiries, making their eligibility to vote where they did unclear.

Pate's office says it learned of five felons who registered on Election Day and were allowed to vote. More than 35 others were flagged as potentially ineligible and cast provisional ballots, which were not counted after elections officials confirmed they had lost their voting rights.

"There were no irregularities here. It worked exactly as it should," said Fayette County deputy auditor Ruth Ann Kearney, who said a felon's provisional ballot wasn't counted after further review.

Collective bargaining issue draws throngs to Iowa's Capitol

JOEY AGUIRRE

JAGUIRRE@DMREG.COM

More than a thousand people supporting teachers and other public employees gathered in front of the Iowa Capitol Sunday afternoon urging legislators to not rewrite Iowa's collective bargaining law.

The theme of the March for Iowa's Teachers was simple: resist and persist.

"This is an attack on every educator, every student and really, every member of the state of Iowa," Iowa State Education Association President Tammy Wawro said.

Iowa public employees and union leaders have implored legislators to reject a Republican-sponsored collective bargaining bill that would restrict public-sector workers' ability to negotiate contracts with state and local governments and school districts.

The proposed changes would limit contract negotiations only to base wages, cutting out negotiations over issues such as health insurance, evaluation procedures, seniority-related benefits, vacation and overtime policies.

Iowa Republican leaders and Gov. Terry Branstad say reforming the way the state negotiates contracts with its workers is necessary because the current model is in favor of the workers who, they say, receive benefits beyond what private-sector workers typically earn.

They say it's a drain on the state budget.

It has drawn criticism from the state's 184,000 public-sector union workers, hundreds of whom showed up Sunday afternoon at the Capitol.

In a teacher-dominated crowd, several current teachers and two legislators spoke to the crowd, urging them to contact their state legislators.

"We will not go down quietly," Wawro said.

T.J. Foley, a senior at Valley High School, gave a passionate speech.

"The rights of our teachers and workers are under siege," Foley said. "It is up to us to stop these attacks on Iowa's future. As the son of a teacher, I stand before you today as a representation of the 485,000 publicschool students who will be adversely affected by this ill-informed and misguided legislation."

Members of the grassroots organization Iowans for Public Education said they hoped the rally would help spread awareness to others who may not know how exactly this legislation impacts them.

"But defeating these bills is our number one goal for today," said Tonya Kehoe, a professor at Kirkwood Community College. "That's why we all came here today. We all share that, no matter what our associations are."

Kyrstin Shelley, a librarian at Northview Middle School in Ankeny, said if this is really what the public wants, there needs to be public hearings.

"We haven't had a chance to weigh in," Shelley said.

"This is an election-cycle discussion, not a one-week-in-the-middle-of-February, dropped-in-the-middle-of-abunch-of-others-things discussion."

William "Porkchop" Lairsey, a member of the Local 347 IBEW in Des Moines, said the act proves how little legislators care about their constituents.

"You start taking teachers' rights away and diminishing the quality of education, that doesn't lead to a good future for anybody," said Lairsey, 40. "Once you get anti-union legislators, it snowballs and is to the detriment of unions and the working class in general. People run on religion and fear of immigration to get into office, then they get into office and worry about corporate interests. It all boils down to money."

A public hearing is being held at 5 p.m. today at the Iowa Capitol regarding this legislation.

DMR: IOWA POLL: Majority oppose travel ban

Just more than half of Iowans disagree with controversial Trump order

A slim majority of Iowans disagree with President Donald Trump's executive order pausing refugee resettlement and barring travel to the U.S. from seven Muslim- majority countries.

Fifty-one percent of respondents to the new Des Moines Register/ Mediacom Iowa Poll disagree with the policy, which sparked massive demonstrations amid a chaotic rollout late last month and has since been put on hold by the federal courts.

Mark Scherer, a manufacturer's representative from Johnston, said he opposes the substance of the order as well as the way it was implemented. Despite the careful wording, Scherer said, Trump's order appears to him to target Muslims and make dire situations even more difficult for refugees seeking to escape war zones.

"It was done in just the completely wrong manner, and then the substance of it was so poorly written and explained," he said.

Scherer, 64 and a political independent, recalled coaching soccer in the late 1990s and early 2000s when Bosnian Muslims were settling in Iowa as refugees from that wartorn country. He found great satisfaction, he said, in coaching young Bosnians, getting to know their families and watching them thrive.

Forty-three percent agree with the order, and 6 percent of Iowans aren't sure how they feel about it. The poll of 802 Iowans was conducted Feb. 6-9 by Selzer & Co. and has a margin of error of plus or minus 3.5 percentage points.

Trump campaigned on promises to "ban Muslims" from entering the country — arguing such a step was necessary to prevent terrorist attacks — and to review the vetting procedures for admitting immigrants and refugees.

On Jan. 27, the Trump administration moved to fulfill that promise by issuing a more narrowly tailored executive order prohibiting entry to the U.S. by Iraqi, Syrian, Iranian, Sudanese, Libyan, Somali and Yemeni nationals for 90 days, pausing all new refugee resettlement for 120 days and blocking Syrian refugees indefinitely.

The order sparked dramatic scenes at international airports across the country, as travelers who were in the air when the order was signed were detained and in some cases sent back to their country of origin.

In the weeks since, the federal courts have temporarily blocked implementation of the order amid judicial review of its legality and constitutionality.

The court actions mean refugee resettlement has resumed, including here in Iowa.

Support and opposition to the order here falls sharply along partisan lines. Eighty-two percent of Republicans agree with the executive order, while 85 percent of Democrats disagree with it. Cari Hague, a 38-year-old photographer from Ames and a Republican who supports Trump's order, said national security policy is a matter best left to experts. "I think the advisers in his administration know more about the details of our security than I do, and I trust them to make that decision to protect our safety," she said. Hague agreed with the underlying justification for the order: that travelers from certain countries with ongoing conflicts and ties to terrorism deserve more scrutiny.

"It's not everywhere," she said. "They're specifying places that harbor terrorism." But Democrat Shaun Winters looked at the order and saw an administration painting with too broad a brush. "Just saying 'If you're from this country, you're not allowed in' is ridiculous," said Winters, 41, a construction supervisor from Wellman. "We're all from somewhere else."

Similarly, Iowans' feelings on the executive order also correlate strongly with their feelings for Trump: 86 percent of Iowans who approve of Trump's job performance also approve of the ban, while 89 percent of those who disapprove of Trump also disapprove of the ban.

Fifty-four percent of self-identified independents disagree with the order.

The poll also reveals a sharp urban-rural split. Sixty-one percent of Iowans who live in cities disagree with Trump's executive order, while 70 percent of rural residents agree with it.

Disagreement with the executive order rates highest in Iowa's 3rd Congressional District, which includes Des Moines, where there are several immigrant and refugee enclaves.

Support for the order runs highest in the vast and rural 4th District — the only district in the state where a majority say they agree with the ban.

Keith Anger, a political independent from rural Hornick, conceded that Trump "initiated" the order poorly but said he remains supportive of the underlying objective — to slow immigration while stricter vetting procedures are put in place.

"It's a temporary ban, period," he said. "It's not something to stop all Muslims or just certain groups. I think what Trump is saying is that we don't want open borders. We don't need that here."

One more factor dividing people's views on the executive order is their age. Among Iowans under 35, 62 percent say they disagree with the order.

"People are just trying to live their lives," said Chloe Kaplan, a 23-year-old political independent and chef from Keystone in eastern Iowa. "We can't assume that every single one of them is a threat."

DMR: Schools gird for sweeping changes

MACKENZIE RYAN

MRYAN@DMREG.COM

Republican-backed legislation that would overhaul collective bargaining for public employees in Iowa could open the door for sweeping changes in the state's public schools.

Educators and school leaders who have studied the legislation told the Register it could usher in a new era where districts compete for the best educators, with star teachers or principals earning higher pay or bonuses, and under-performers being rooted out. That could be particularly hard on rural schools, who could be out-bid by metro districts.

The legislation greatly reduces unions' bargaining ability, requiring negotiations only on base wages. It allows some bargaining, such as holidays and hours, only if a district chooses. It prohibits collective bargaining over additional pay, seniority, grievances, employment benefits, insurance, union dues made through payroll, and layoff procedures, among others.

While the exact impact is not clear, almost everyone agrees that the implications of the collective bargaining legislation being fast-tracked in the Statehouse are far-reaching.

“These changes are necessary,” Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds said this week. “It gives them (school districts) the opportunity to reward good employees — and good teachers — and, most importantly, make employment decisions based on merit, and not simply time served.”

If House Study Bill 84 and Senate File 213 become law, they would take effect immediately, sending pending contract negotiations back to square one, officials said. Iowa’s state teachers’ union says it is prepared to go to court to fight them. Opponents are comparing the legislation to Wisconsin’s Act 10, which vastly curtailed collective bargaining in that state. Since the legislation went into effect in 2011, the influence of unions and veteran teachers has waned. One libertarian-leaning nonpartisan think tank, the MacIver Institute for Public Policy, estimated that union membership has declined 58 percent.

In addition, nearly 3,000 teachers retired, a Wisconsin union said.

“This is so much bigger than a union conversation,” Iowa State Education Association president Tammy Wawro said. “This is about dismantling the profession of education.”

A March for Iowa’s Teachers has been planned for Sunday to protest the bill as it moves forward.

But proponents say the bill could bring muchneeded flexibility to Iowa schools, allowing districts to offer higher wages for hard-to-fill positions in science or special education.

Districts could decide where to place teachers, rounding out school staffs, instead of transfers based on seniority that can leave less desirable schools stocked with rookie staff.

Wisconsin’s ‘free agent’ teachers

Wisconsin’s Act 10 fundamentally changed how schools operate, the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel found during an in-depth look, five years after the act’s passage. The state’s teachers now largely act as “free agents,” moving between schools as they seek better benefits or pay.

“This has created a whole new marketplace for education, and for teachers,” said C.J. Szafir, vice president for policy at Wisconsin Institute for Law & Liberty, a conservative law firm that defended Act 10. Superstar educators sign five-figure bonuses, and skills trump seniority. But the effect on student academics is murky, at best, the Journal Sentinel found. The changes varied among districts. Some adopted employee handbooks similar to their previously negotiated contracts.

Todd Gray, president of the Wisconsin Association of School District Administrators, said in his district, the primary change was to seniority, which no longer is a factor in layoffs. “The sky did not fall,” MacIver Institute President Brett Healy said. “We still have teachers in front of the classroom. Our children are still doing relatively well compared to the rest of the country.” But the wave of subsequent teacher retirements did have an impact, said Christina Brey, spokeswoman for the Wisconsin Education Association Council. “There’s a lot of unrest,” she said. “There’s a revolving door of teachers.”

Without the ability to strike (Wisconsin and Iowa both make it illegal for teachers to strike) and little other recourse to take, teachers are now focusing their efforts at the community level, appealing to parents or school board members. “Schools became places where the stability was gone,” Brey said.

Rural impact in Iowa

Ramifications are hard to predict in Iowa. But multiple superintendents, union and association leaders, and college professors said the legislation could herald vast changes in how schools operate that could further the rural-metro divide.

Suburban or urban districts with financial flexibility may be in a position to recruit the best teachers with desirable pay or benefits packages, leaving rural or low-income schools with little ability to compete. Districts that border metros could be particularly vulnerable, as the best staff could find better pay without the cost or complications of moving, said Lee Adler, a senior lecturer at Cornell University who's studied labor and unions.

"The teachers are going to leave those rural districts or the state altogether because they won't work for chicken feed," he said. "They're professionals."

Remote schools already have a difficult time recruiting teachers and have been hit by a national teacher shortage.

"That's my biggest fear," said Duane Willhite, superintendent of North Fayette Schools and a member of the Rural School Advocates of Iowa. "Those positions could get even harder to fill."

Trying to reassure teachers

Iowa superintendents sent messages to their staffs this week, including assurances that they're valued. Some intend to keep collaborative processes in place — or create advisory committees to ensure staff concerns are heard. A competitive hiring environment puts the onus on districts, multiple leaders said. "If people are happy and being treated well and feel appreciated, they won't want to move anywhere else," said Anne Sullivan, Des Moines Public Schools' chief human resources officer. In addition, students could benefit from the ability to retain "your best and your brightest teacher," she said.

Other employment protections — such as having fair and equitable hiring processes and not discriminating based on age — will still apply. But it can cause disruptions, said Sally Klingel, the director of labor-management relations programming for the Scheinman Institute at Cornell.

"If there's no incentive to stay — and, in fact, another district is paying more because they've got a larger budget — teachers are starting to move at a substantially higher rate than the past," she said.

The role of politics

Other changes could depend largely on local dynamics or school board politics. In districts such as Fort Dodge, administrators and teachers meet every month to work together to improve schools. "I wouldn't necessarily change a lot of the process," Superintendent Doug Van Zyl said. But not all schools have that relationship. "The potential is, you could have management styles that want to make sweeping changes," he said. Even if much of the contract is written into board policies, as some districts have done in Wisconsin, changes likely are to occur if the legislation passes. Employees with poor performance could be given less time to improve or be let go immediately. The costs of a district's insurance could be reined in — by deferring it to employees — freeing money for other programs.

But some fear local politics will influence decisions, with bigger paychecks going to football coaches, or cuts favoring popular staff. Teachers "will be let go next week or next year because someone on their school board's niece needs a job," said Wawro, president of the state teachers union. "There's no safety."

DMR: UPTICK IN IOWA'S CHILD HOMICIDES RAISES CONCERNS

Among questions: How many deaths are too many?

Arising number of Iowa children have been victims of homicide the past three years — from abuse, shootings and unsupervised accidents.

At least 20 Iowa children died last year, including 11 from suspected abuse, a Reader's Watchdog probe of cases statewide found.

The children included Natalie Finn, the West Des Moines 16-year-old who was tortured and starved to death in October. But they also included six children who drowned, four who were fatally shot, one who died when his father crashed his car and another who was left in a sweltering vehicle.

The six blue handprints represent deaths by drowning.

*Some of the drownings were also confirmed cases of abuse.

READER'S WATCHDOG LEE ROOD

The four gray handprints represent deaths involving guns. These 20 handprints represent the number of child homicides in Iowa in 2016.

The 10 red handprints represent deaths from suspected abuse.

The review of 2016 deaths, culled from media reports across the state, underscores what Iowa's Child Death Review Team noticed after completing research on child deaths from 2013 and 2014. "It's safe to say homicide deaths are on the increase," said John Kraemer, coordinator of the volunteer team, which operates out of the State Medical Examiner's Office.

The death-review team is charged with making recommendations to help prevent child deaths. But legislators zeroed out the team's budget in 2009, shifting duties from public health to the busy State Medical Examiner's Office. As a result, publication of the volunteer group's findings has been slowed. Some advocates believe more timely recommendations are needed to promptly benefit Iowa's children. In recent years, child homicides — those caused by another regardless of intent — hit a low mark of seven in 2013. But they climbed to 13 in 2014, then hit at least 14 last year, according to Iowa's Department of Public Health.

The uptick raises questions about possible causes, prevention steps and how many deaths are too many in a state many perceive as being a safe place for children.

Iowa's higher abuse rates

In recent years, Iowa has had a higher rate of children in foster care as a result of neglect and abuse — eight for every 1,000 in 2014, versus five for every 1,000 nationally, according to the Kids Count Data Center supported by the Annie E.

Casey Foundation. But the rate of abuse reports Iowa investigated was lower — 39 per 1,000 in 2014 versus 41 per 1,000 nationally. The rate of confirmed abuse fell in 2014, as the Iowa Department of Human Services shifted more cases toward informal services and less formal investigation and court intervention. The rate that year was the same as the national average: 11 per 1,000.

The increase in homicides and other preventable deaths the past three years coincides with the decision to focus investigations on the most serious abuse and steer thousands of reports of suspected low-level abuse to voluntary services. Some attorneys for at-risk children have criticized that shift, but those overseeing the annual child-death reviews say they don't know what effect, if any, the state's focus on the most serious abuse has had on families who are not being monitored.

“That's outside my expertise,” state Medical Examiner Dr. Dennis Klein said. Human Services counted more deaths after child abuse or neglect before 2014, including as many as 28 in 2012. Some of those deaths, like those Watchdog counted for 2016, were the result of unsupervised accidents, not homicides. Natalie Finn and her siblings were the subjects of numerous child abuse reports last school year, but the suspected abuse was not confirmed, according to a state lawmaker briefed on the case. State Sen. Matt Mc-Coy, D-West Des Moines, told Watchdog last month that police and a social worker obtained a court order and pushed their way into the West Des Moines home of Natalie's adoptive mother, Nicole But Natalie was pulled from her alternative high school last fall and died of starvation Oct. 24 in her mother's care.

Nicole Finn, 42, and her ex-husband, Joseph Finn II, of Urbandale, have pleaded not guilty to multiple felony charges and are scheduled to go to trial in March. Nicole Finn has been charged with first-degree murder.

Kraemer and Klein say they are reviewing Natalie's death, along with other 2016 child fatalities. But a more thorough investigation is being done by Iowa's state ombudsman.

Child abuse: A leading cause of deaths

At least half of the children who suffered preventable deaths last year were allegedly abused or neglected by parents or caregivers.

The abuse children suffer in such cases is diverse. In 2013, for example, the seven homicides investigated by the child death review team were mostly caused by caregivers involved in drug use or altercations, Kraemer said. The 2014 and 2015 child-death reports are still being finalized by the team, but many of those deaths were caused by blunt-force trauma, often to children younger than 5, he said. Nationally, homicides are one of the leading causes of child deaths.

One 1996 study found it was the leading cause of infant deaths due to injury, accounting for a third of all such fatalities. But data is notoriously underreported, and often poor because of how it is defined, collected and reported among states, according to the Child Welfare Information Gateway.

Young children often suffer fatal abuse at the hands of their parents. In 2014, more than 72 percent of children who died from maltreatment also suffered neglect, according to the Child Welfare Information Gateway.

Some child-abuse experts in Iowa have pushed for those who work closely with at-risk families to place more emphasis on learning about past trauma and mental health as a way of preventing such tragedies. Dr. Resiyme Oral, a pediatrician at the University of Iowa Hospitals in Iowa City, has examined thousands of children who have been potential victims of abuse.

As part of the first line of defense, Oral and others are making the case for all of the state's pediatric hospitals to employ social workers who can help evaluate family history and wellbeing when abuse is alleged.

By better understanding a parent or caregiver's past, medical professionals are better equipped to help the family — whether a child stays in the home or is removed for safety reasons, she said.

Drug use targeted

Use of hard drugs by parents and caregivers and its link to child abuse also has become a bigger concern among professionals in the Iowa childwelfare system.

This year, a work group created by the Legislature has recommended that lawmakers pass a measure that would call for formal child-abuse investigations of families whenever children are exposed to certain dangerous drugs in their homes, vehicles or premises.

The work group zeroed in on methamphetamine, cocaine, opiates and heroin, as well as drug-making precursors and other chemicals that could injure children or cause explosions.

In the past, it was possible that no formal investigation would be launched into an allegation of abuse of an older child whose parents used meth. That's because Human Services rules called for immediate, formal investigations only in cases of children younger than 6.

Other families would be assessed but likely directed toward voluntary services.

But Human Services has developed new criteria for flagging reports of hard drug use — and, in some high-risk cases, marijuana exposure — for immediate child abuse investigations, rather than sending them on another path toward services.

The work group's proposed changes to Iowa code are intended to assure cases involving heroin, meth or cocaine use by parents or caregivers receive formal investigation and court oversight.

Jane Harvey, a bureau chief for child welfare at Human Services, said the recommendations are based on two years of data suggesting that children exposed to drugs such as meth, cocaine, heroin and opioids are far more likely to require intervention.

"Some drugs are substantively more dangerous in the presence of kids," she said.

Needed: Supervision near water

The Watchdog review also showed child drownings were higher in 2016 than past years. Among the six counted, some were believed to be accidents and others the fault of a neglectful caregiver.

Circumstances often decide whether some of those deaths are ultimately labeled accidents or homicides. In 2016, Anna Sothman was sentenced to 50 years in prison because her child drowned in a bathtub in Pella after she left her for more than half an hour.

But no criminal charges were brought against the Nebraska parents whose child also died after being left in a bathtub in Panora over Thanksgiving.

"If a child was left unattended by a caregiver, that can be an accident. If we have suspicion or evidence that it was intentional, it can be homicide," Klein said "It's hard to generalize. There are subtleties to each case, and it can be subjective." All the drownings — in bathtubs and swimming holes — point to the need for more supervision by adults, Kraemer said.

The Watchdog review did not include a count of deaths not reported in news accounts, like those caused by Sudden Infant Death Syndrome or suicide. But the death review team has found recent suicide numbers troubling. In 2014, 14 child suicides were recorded statewide. In 2013, there were 17.

“What we want to do is education and work with schools and parents to look for signs of emotional stress, relationship problems or even acts of bullying,” Kraemer said.

Toxicology data isn’t always available, so it’s hard to know whether drug use is also a factor in suicides, he said.

Deaths involving guns

At least five homicides last year stemmed from gun violence. Nationally, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reported 460 children ages 14 and younger died in 2014 from incidents involving firearms, compared with 369 such deaths in 2010.

Seventy-four of those deaths in 2014 were unintentional, compared with 62 in 2010. In Iowa, intentional shootings last year led to the death of Kedarie Johnson, the 16-year-old gender-fluid teen shot several times in March in Burlington; Yore Thuok Jieng, a 14-year-old Roosevelt High School freshman gunned down in Des Moines in October; and Ayana Culbreath, a 15-year-old Davenport teen who was shot at a backyard party in June.

In addition, 10-year-old Cade Hartwig of Garner was killed accidentally by his grandfather at a shooting range in August, and 13-year-old Ireshia Parks of Cedar Rapids accidentally was shot by a friend in September.

Four-year-old Jayden Choate also fatally shot himself last year while left unsupervised in a trailer home in Elgin with his 2-year-old brother and 5-month-old sister.

Children’s access to firearms in their homes is a persistent concern, increasing the risk of homicides and suicides, Kraemer said.

DMR: Children’s residential facilities to get new oversight

Proposals part of legislation passed in wake of ’16 raids

LEE ROOD

LROOD@DMREG.COM

Proposed rules requiring the certification and oversight of boarding schools and other children’s residential facilities in Iowa could take effect as soon as May.

The rules are part of legislation passed in the wake of the January 2016 raids of an unregulated boarding school in far southeast Iowa where troubled children were reportedly sexually assaulted and abused. “I think they will make a difference,” said Wendy Rickman, a top administrator for Iowa’s Department of Human Services. “We have always had the ability to take a look at abuse cases, but not the (operation of the facility) itself. This also sets it up so these schools have to become known to us.”

Midwest Academy near Keokuk and Montrose was closed after the 2016 raids. It now faces two civil suits from parents and children alleged to have been abused, as well as a former employee who said she was wrongfully fired.

Iowa's Division of Criminal Investigation and the Attorney General's office have not filed any criminal charges after more than a year of investigation, but the probe continues, officials said.

The rules require all residential facilities for children to obtain state certification to operate and subject employees to criminal, abuse and sex offender background checks.

The facilities would be required to have an annual fire inspection, meet building codes and provide children with adequate food and shelter, as well as opportunities to sleep and exercise.

Corporal punishment, physical restraint and child abuse would be prohibited.

Any founded abuse report on a director or proprietor could be cause to pull the certification. Human Services is aware of roughly a dozen such facilities in Iowa that would be affected. After a hearing Friday before the Legislature's bipartisan Administrative Rules Review Committee, the rules now are subject to a public comment period until Feb. 21.

Once an old county hospital, Midwest was started by a Utah millionaire, Robert Lichfield, who with others started numerous tough-love schools across the country.

Ben Trane, a former employee at one of those schools, ran Midwest until he was accused of sexually abusing a student last year. The World Wide Association of Specialty Programs and Schools founded by Lichfield and others has faced a series of lawsuits and federal criminal probes over the years stemming from allegations similar to those leveled at Midwest Academy, including child abuse, sex abuse, fraud, false marketing and bogus accreditation claims.

Sheriffs' reports from the three years leading to the raids showed the troubled teens who were sent there by their often-desperate parents ran away in crowds as large as 11, cut themselves, sexually assaulted others, and attempted suicide on numerous occasions.

The criminal probe began after two staff members alleged that a staff member had sexually assaulted a student. One of the two staffers who contacted law enforcement was mandated by law to report child abuse. Search warrant documents later revealed Trane was being investigated for fraud, abuse and sexually abusing the student.

A lawsuit filed by parents and former students showed Iowa's Department of Human Services already had found Trane responsible for child abuse in 2015 for failing to properly supervise sexually abused children in his care. Lee County Sheriff Jim Sholl and others said after the probe began that boarding schools such as Midwest should be required to have state oversight.

Trane has not commented publicly on the criminal probe and has moved from Keokuk. He could not be reached for comment. The National Institutes of Health has said teen programs using "fear and tough treatment" are not successful and can worsen existing behavioral problems.

DMR: 'It feels like I'm living my purpose in this position'

Waterloo mayor Hart did not campaign as a symbol of racial progress, but symbolism comes with job

WATERLOO, Ia. — Quentin Hart clutches his throat, realizing he lacks a necktie seconds before he's ready to stroll into a Rotary International meeting as the featured speaker.

If the Waterloo mayor ever thought running a city was glamorous, his whirlwind first year in office — with controversies over policing, hiring practices, prayer — has long since disabused him of the notion. Hart began his two-year term at the start of 2016 after eight years on city council. He routinely visits local schools where some kids assume he gets chauffeured around the city.

No, the mayor drives himself. And there's no fashion consultant sitting next to him in his city-issued Ford Taurus. So he grabs a tie off the seat and twirls a fast half-Windsor knot while gazing in the rear-view mirror. Soon, fellow mayor Jim Brown of Cedar Falls peers through the driver's window. It's time to make a beeline indoors for the buffet lunch and polite banter.

Hart, 45, is the first African-American mayor of predominantly white Iowa's most concentrated black community. Waterloo is 15.6 percent black, compared to a 3.3 percent demographic share statewide. He has spent his first year entangled in few issues steeped in race and racism. But he also has boosted ambitions for the city's economic development and a burnished image.

Hart took office as President Barack Obama's racially historic tenure in the White House wound down. Although he leads what technically is nonpartisan local government, Hart is a stalwart Democrat. Hillary Clinton clung to Black Hawk County in the presidential election by nearly eight points as scores of other Midwest and "rust belt" counties flipped in favor of Donald Trump. But Trump's win jarred Hart enough that he purchased a copy of the billionaire's 30-year-old ghostwritten autobiography, "The Art of the Deal."

"I need to understand how a person thinks and the way that they function," he said.

So what did he learn from the book?

"Think big," he said. "Talk big.

"But at the end of the day it makes no difference if you're not able to put things in motion and move the needle forward."

Symbolism comes with the job

In struggling to move forward Waterloo has been hampered by the lingering effects of entrenched residential segregation that have exacerbated blight, crime and poverty. Strike-breaking African-American railroad workers were drawn here from the South in the early 20th century and confined to the city's northeast corner. Hart's own family in the 1960s was among a second wave from the South as blacks sought manufacturing jobs and fresh opportunities.

Hart did not campaign as a symbol of racial progress.

Yet sort of like reaching for that nonexistent necktie and feeling naked, Hart has had to get comfortable with those moments where suddenly he senses the constant scrutiny of his office. He already was on display as a councilman, but not in such a way that his every gesture was parsed for meaning. Hart remembers "throwing out all these ideas" as the representative of his ward. Now all eyes turn to him to sift through the big brainstorming pile.

His predecessor left a Bible quote from Joshua 1:9 engraved on a nameplate that stares the mayor in the face as he oversees epic, sometimes contentious council meetings: “Be strong and courageous. Do not be afraid. God will be with you and He will never forsake you.”

Hart now is the face of his city. Like it or not, symbolism comes with the job.

“It just kind of hit me,” he said. “Everything I do. Everything I say. What I don’t do and what I don’t say, people are really paying attention to it.”

Police reforms dominate first year

In his mayoral campaign Hart offered himself up as a “bridge” to unify his city — whether across race, neighborhoods or other divides.

But, inevitably, there have been roadblocks.

Hart’s effort to polish Waterloo’s prevailing narrative included hiring a part-time communications director.

That led to a squabble with the council over his power to even add the position.

An email from Councilman Tom Lind included the line: “You work for us. Obama (yesterday) is gone.”

Hart objected to what he called “racist, derogatory, partisan remarks.” Lind denied they were racist. (Lind didn’t respond to requests for comment from the Register.) Hart reinstated prayer at the start of city council meetings — also welcoming secular invocation as some residents objected to the return of religion to the chamber for the first time in more than a decade.

But the biggest hurdle for Hart’s first year has been law enforcement. The troubled relationship between Waterloo’s overwhelmingly white police and its black residents has included millions of dollars paid in settlements to suspects who alleged use of excessive force by officers.

Chief Trelka touts an overall decline in both serious and minor crime statistics in the last seven years, including use of force. He insists that a calm now permeates the city after a troubling spike in shootings included six gun murders within the last five months of 2014.

He acknowledges that racial disparity persists on his force despite intensive recruitment efforts: Two African-Americans, one Latino and two Pacific Islanders currently wear badges.

“The solution has been very elusive,” Trelka said.

Local media reported that Trelka’s job was in jeopardy at the height of last year’s furor, with calls for the U.S. Department of Justice to step in for a full investigation. But both the chief and the mayor have repeatedly declined to elaborate on what they call a personnel matter.

Hart did strip Trelka of his broader public safety oversight of Waterloo Fire Rescue so that the chief could focus solely on policing.

In lieu of federal intervention, a number of new local initiatives have been launched. Work with consultants as well as police in Charlotte, Va., led to creation of a police foundation to fund programs for Waterloo youth.

An “ex-offenders task force” began last month as a series of forums with former felons to help promote mutual understanding.

Hart says that he’s satisfied with the progress so far and that Trelka is “making great strides in the right direction.”

Elvis, chili and economic development

Several days ago Hart awoke at 4:45 a.m. to lift weights and try to sweat out a nagging cold. The previous night’s council meeting had dragged on for three hours.

Hart’s days usually begin at the gym, followed by the occasional breakfast downtown at Morg’s Diner. In the evening he often takes one or more of his three young kids to yet another gym. Hart’s wife, Cassandra, teaches at Lowell Elementary.

As we drive through the city I ask the mayor to name his most controversial decision in the last year. “Which week?” he turns and says with his trademark deadpan delivery.

Being mayor isn’t all flash points and policy. Sometimes Hart gets to judge a chili-tasting contest. Or help pick, of all things, the best Elvis impersonator.

Hart has made a sustained push for economic development. He likes to cite $250 million in recent investment in the broader Cedar Falls-Waterloo metro with its 170,000 or so residents.

Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad even singled out Waterloo in his recent Condition of the State address. The governor praised how the city, “after experiencing economic challenges throughout the previous three decades embraced the challenge of reshaping its industrial heritage to succeed in modern times.”

Branstad went on to cite not only one of the city’s traditional staple employers, John Deere, but also Cedar Valley TechWorks. The 30-acre campus converts former Deere tractor plants into a tech and industrial hub with a 3-D manufacturing center and design lab. One of the refurbished six-story factories soon will boast a Marriott hotel.

During my partial day with the mayor we drive past TechWorks and other new or emerging landmarks.

Downtown, ID8 is a co-working space and “innovation incubator” converted from what had been a movie theater, bank and railroad headquarters. It opened last year and so far has cultivated a membership of 18 clients who pay a $500 annual fee plus daily rates.

Hawkeye Community College, Hart’s former employer where he worked on the main campus on the south edge of town as associate director of multicultural affairs, is building an Adult Learning Center in the heart of the city.

Grand Crossing Condos soon will add 68 rental units downtown.

Redevelopment of portions of U.S. Highway 63 that cuts through the city is intended in part to make neighborhoods more prominent and pedestrian- friendly.

A former abandoned strip mall on the city’s northeast side has been razed to make way for a new mix of medical clinics near Allen Hospital, plus a hotel and retail.

Common refrain: 'Tell Me Why'

On his first visit to the Cedar Falls Rotary, housed in an ornate Victorian home run by the Cedar Falls Woman's Club, the mayor is serenaded by a ballroom full of about 40 members. Each Rotary meeting begins with a rousing sing-along.

Barbara Hatinger stands on stage next to the grand piano and declares "Tell Me Why" to be the perfect song to help welcome politician: The title is a question that dogs elected officials everywhere.

After his speech the first question posed to Hart is a request for more detail on the ex-offenders task force that he had briefly mentioned.

Mayors everywhere may wish they could spend more time talking about some gorgeous redevelopment they helped lure to the city. But they tend to get pulled back into difficult but necessary conversations on the elusive nature of justice.

After more than a year on the job, Hart understands that all too well.

I couldn't pin down Hart on his plans to run for reelection this fall. No doubt because he knows that everything he says — or doesn't say — will be parsed. But I feel like I got my answer, anyway.

At one point in the hectic day he says, "It feels like I'm living my purpose in this position."

That sounds like a mayor who has made peace with the scrutiny, with or without a necktie.

DMR: At GOP forum, issue updates, laughter, boos

KELLY MCGOWAN

Ankeny's Neveln Center overflowed on Saturday with educators, mental health advocates and others who attended a legislative open forum.

Polk County Supervisor Steve Van Oort, state Sen. Jack Whitver and Reps. John Landon and Kevin Koester, all Republicans, updated the roughly 500-person crowd on recently contentious issues, including education funding and the Republican-backed bill that would overhaul collective bargaining rights for Iowa's public employees. The proposal strips some bargaining rights for non-public safety workers while making it harder for unions to organize and raise funds, the Register previously reported.

If signed into law, the changes would take place immediately.

By overhauling the process, Whitver said the proposals "rebalance the scales between employers, employees and taxpayers."

"It's about empowering our local schools and superintendents," Whitver said. Many in the crowd, however, did not agree. A chorus of boos or laughter followed some of the legislators' statements, and some audience members held signs of protest against the changes.

Rachel Borich, a nurse at Ankeny's Southview Middle School, was in the audience as a community member, mother and public employee, she said.

"With a drop in funding and an increase in enrollment, Ankeny is going to struggle to stay afloat," Borich said.

She was not impressed with the proposed changes to collective bargaining, she said.

"I really don't think they should touch collective bargaining," she said. "It doesn't cost the district anything. We pay our own union dues."

DMR: UI tightens rules for out-of-state students seeking in-state tuition

JEFF CHARIS- CARLSON

JCHARISC@PRESS-CITIZEN.COM

IOWA CITY, Ia. — As Iowa's public universities consider how to implement cuts in state revenue, University of Iowa officials are raising the bar for incoming out-of-state students seeking in-state residency after beginning their studies. UI officials began exploring the need to tighten the requirements after the university saw 317 parttime freshmen enrolling at the university during fall 2016. "That's a record number," said UI Registrar Larry Lockwood. Many of those nonresidents were not taking enough credit hours to trigger the higher tuition rate that full-time out-ofstate students are required to pay. That scenario adds up to about $6 million in tuition that otherwise would be going to the university if those prime-time, outof- state students — including those living in dormitories — had been registered full-time. Out-of-state students have to live in Iowa for at least a 12-month period and provide evidence that they moved to Iowa primarily for reasons other than higher education.

But where nonresident students previously had to show that they worked an average of 20 hours a week over that 12-month period, students enrolling after May 1 will now have to show they're working at least 30 hours per week on average. Many of those students met the minimum, onecredit- hour requirement to be eligible for student housing, but their off-campus work schedules required them to come and go at odd hours of the night, disturbing the rest and study needs of fulltime students, Lockwood said. Iowa's public universities offer lower tuition to resident students because the state government is offsetting some of those costs through general fund appropriations. With a nearly $20,000 gap between the annual costs for resident and nonresident students, out-ofstate students can pay as much as $80,000 more in base tuition and fees over four years of undergraduate study.

The changes in residency requirements come at a time when UI is now having to trim at least $8 million in state funding promised for the current academic year. Iowa State University is facing a similar midyear cut, and the University of Northern Iowa has to trim $2 million. More state cuts for the current fiscal year could still be on the way. The changes do not need to be approved by the Iowa Board of Regents, UI officials said, because the policies are within the general residency requirements already outlined in board policy. "We want to put some common sense into the process," Lockwood said. "If you really want to be an Iowa resident, you'll have to meet the criteria that everyone else is going to meet."

Iowa Administrative Code states that out-ofstate students may be eligible for resident reclassification following 12 consecutive months in the state, "provided the student is not enrolled as more than a half-time student" and "provides sufficient evidence of the establishment of an Iowa domicile."

The code makes exceptions for the students whose parents move to Iowa during their studies as well as for students who are active military, veterans or have refugee status.

But the gist of the law states that people coming to Iowa from another state to enroll more than halftime in any institution of postsecondary education “shall be presumed to have come to Iowa primarily for educational reasons, rather than to establish a domicile in Iowa.”

UI Housing officials also are increasing the minimum number of credit hours required for students to be eligible to live in the dorms or other university housing options.

In the past, that number has been only one credit hour.

Starting this fall, however, the minimum will be seven credit hours — enough to qualify students for half-time status.

“We’ve generally had more bodies than we’ve had beds,” said Von Stange, director of University Housing and Dining. “We know that some of those students are parttime students, and we want to provide our limited residence hall space for students who are spending most of their time on campus and in class.”

Students will have until the 10th day of class to register for the minimum number of credit hours, Stange said. Those who fail to do so will be notified that they will have to move elsewhere.

For out-of-state UI students still looking to become Iowa residents, at least some of the increased work requirements will have to be off campus, Lockwood said.

Work-study jobs on campus cap at 20 hours per week.

“There are a lot of local business that would be more than happy to hire them on,” said Lockwood, pointing out that the Iowa City area has one of the lowest unemployment rates in the state.

DMR: DNR officer saves fisherman who fell through Osceola ice

MOLLY LONGMAN

MLONGMAN@DMREG.COM

One Iowa Department of Natural Resources officer saved a man who fell through the ice while ice fishing in Osceola late Friday morning, according to a DNR release. Two Iowa men set up an ice fishing shelter on West Lake in southern Iowa.

DNR State Conservation Officer Michael Miller was on a routine patrol when he observed the men setting up shop for a day of ice fishing. “I saw them out there and yelled, ‘How much ice are you on?’” Miller said, according to the release. “And they said, ‘3 inches.’ I told them to get off the ice immediately.” DNR officials say one of the anglers made it off the ice safely but the other wasn’t so lucky: He broke through the ice about 10 yards from the shore. Upon seeing this, Miller sprang into action, grabbing his rescue throw bag (a handy rescue device with a length of rope stuffed loosely into a bag) from his vehicle, tossing it to the man in the lake and pulling him to shore with the help of the other angler. Miller said this all happened in a span of about five minutes. After the angler was safely on land, paramedics arrived on the scene to to examine the angler, who was released from the scene.

“He said he was losing feeling in his hands and his hands were hurting,” Miller said.

“At this point I was more worried about the threat from exposure than from drowning.”

Miller, who patrols Clarke and Decatur counties for the Iowa DNR, said he’d seen anglers break through the ice before but had never pulled one out, according to the release.

“I told them next time they want to go ice fishing this time of year, to go north,” Miller said.

“It’s 48 degrees here with a south wind. Our ice conditions have been deteriorating quickly for some time.”

DNR officials said ice fishing isn’t recommended in the southern third of Iowa. They ask anglers to be extremely cautious during the latter half of winter as longer days, thaw-freeze cycles and warmer winds weaken the ice.

The DNR recommends staying in and ordering your trout from the store if ice is fewer than 4 inches thick.

They release a weekly fishing report with ice conditions included, which is a good place to check if you’ll be in danger of going for an accidental dip.

DMR Editorial: Here's one state job we don't need

The Register's Editorial

With Gov. Terry Branstad expected to leave office soon and assume the role of U.S. ambassador to China, Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds is making plans to move into the governor’s office.

She’s also making plans to appoint her own lieutenant governor, saying she wants someone who will function as a full-fledged “partner,” just as she has with Branstad.

This means that should Reynolds, for any reason, be unable to serve as governor through January 2019, Iowa could be saddled with a non-elected governor who didn’t run on any sort of a statewide ballot. (If she were to leave office with no lieutenant governor appointed, the duties of the governor would fall to the president of the Iowa Senate.)

Iowa Attorney General Tom Miller has backed up the Branstad administration, providing informal guidance that suggests once the governor leaves office, Reynolds will not simply assume his responsibilities and duties, but will be sworn in as governor of Iowa and will have the power to appoint her own lieutenant governor.

Miller’s thinking appears to be consistent with some provisions of Iowa law, but it also seems to plainly contradict the Iowa Constitution, which says the lieutenant governor, when filling out the term of the governor, is merely “acting as governor” and “performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor.”

It’s also worth noting that none of Iowa’s four previous lieutenant governors who were elevated to the governor’s office in this fashion took it upon themselves to appoint a new lieutenant governor. In fact, Joshua Newbold served as governor for almost a full year after Samuel Kirkwood resigned from the office in 1877.

Thankfully, Sen. David Johnson, an independent from Ocheyedan, is asking the attorney general for a formal opinion on the matter — one that directly addresses the language in the Iowa Constitution and answers several critical questions related to the succession of power in the governor’s office.

But there's a larger question here that also needs to be addressed at some point: Why does Iowa even have a lieutenant governor?

As Reynolds and her predecessors have demonstrated, the position is largely ceremonial, with the lieutenant governor handling public appearances and acting, at best, as a mouthpiece for the administration and, at worse, as a smiling prop for photo opportunities. One look at the lieutenant governor's official schedule proves that.

So why, when our state is slashing spending, eliminating thousands of jobs and possibly closing courthouses, do we continue to have a lieutenant governor? The Code of Iowa doesn't even include a list of duties related to the job, further underscoring the disposable nature of the position.

Seven states don't even bother to elect a lieutenant governor, although a few of those bestow the title on whoever happens to be presiding in the state Senate at the moment.

Amending the Iowa Constitution and eliminating the job would save the taxpayers not just the $103,000 salary, but all of the travel, administration and staffing expenses tied to the job.

There's has never been a better time for the Iowa Legislature to initiate the process of amending the Iowa Constitution to eliminate the lieutenant governor's job — which soon will be filled by a person who wasn't even elected to the position.

DMR: Planned Parenthood funding protested

KELLY MCGOWAN

The words "We love you and your baby," written in marker in a child's handwriting next to a colored-in heart, were among the messages greeting drivers as they passed Planned Parenthood in Des Moines Saturday morning.

The phrase, written by a 9-year-old parishioner of St. Joseph Catholic Church in Des Moines summed up what about 50 people who gathered with signs, crosses and rosaries outside of the clinic at 1000 E. Army Post Road, wanted to say. It was one of 225 rallies at sites nationwide that day protesting federal funding of Planned Parenthood, organized through the #ProtestPP anti-abortion organization, according its website. Other Iowa rallies took place in Cedar Falls, Council Bluffs, Iowa City and Sioux City.

People at the rally called for federal funds to instead support organizations that provide free services to women but do not perform abortions, such as InnerVisions Healthcare in West Des Moines. They also wanted to let women know that there are other options, event spokesperson Geneveve Loraditch of Ankeny said.

"We're mostly here to pray," Loraditch said. "And we're united in that this is not a place where we want our money to go."

Exclamations of disapproval like "Stay out of my vagina!" were shouted at protesters from passing cars. "People say they have a right to their bodies," protester Daryl Chicoine of Ankeny said. "But these babies also have a right to their lives. ... Planned Parenthood is not parenthood. It's destruction." Chicoine and fellow protesters Marie Fitch and Jackie Corey, both of Ankeny, said America is at a pivotal point and the Trump administration brings some hope to the anti-abortion cause.

Corey added that while she appreciates the administration's anti-abortion stance, she is concerned about its actions on immigration.

"We support the rights of all people to find freedom and justice," Corey said. "We welcome the immigrants."

The group hoped its "prayerful, peaceful presence" conveyed love to the people that passed by, Fitch said.

"They have a right to their own body, but that right stops when it infringes on an innocent (person)," she said. "That baby needs the support of bigger people."

DMR Editorial: Legislators should repay state for cheap health care

Ignorance of the law is no excuse

Gov. Terry Branstad said in 2012 he would begin voluntarily paying 20 percent of his state-funded health insurance premiums. He encouraged other state workers, including lawmakers, to follow suit. The next year, the governor said some legislators, who had previously enjoyed premium-free health insurance, had started contributing 20 percent.

But not a single lawmaker is paying that share, according to December 2016 data obtained by The Des Moines Register. And it appears they are violating state law.

Iowa Code Section 2.40 extends health insurance to legislators, which is a generous benefit compared with what some other states offer members of a part-time Legislature. The law also specifies the plans offered should be the same as those available to state employees "excluded from collective bargaining."

Iowa lawmakers, however, have enrolled in plans with significantly lower premiums negotiated by unions on behalf of union-covered state workers. Ninety-two legislators pay as little as $20 per month, a Register investigation found. They should be paying $142 to $334 per month. An additional 39 lawmakers pay up to $344 monthly instead of the $446 called for by their plan.

It's not clear why this is happening, but the day after this newspaper reported the information, Senate Majority Leader Bill Dix, a Republican from Shell Rock, predicted the underpayments would end during this legislative session. (On Wednesday a subcommittee passed a bill requiring all legislative branch employees to enroll in non-union health plans.) Dix should certainly be able to ensure that happens, and the public should be able to confirm it does. Dix is, after all, the chairman of the Legislative Council, which establishes policies for lawmakers and reviews the employee handbook and what insurance plans are offered.

"Senate Republicans have long felt that we should be paying a larger share of our health insurance," he said.

Except they didn't.

Dix and House Democratic Minority Leader Mark Smith of Marshalltown, also a member of the council, said they were unaware of the law regarding their own health insurance.

That's right. The people who make the laws in this state are unaware of what those laws require.

Then there's the hypocrisy. Republican lawmakers are seeking to make changes to Iowa's collective bargaining law. They target unions and complain about the cost of public workers while they sponge off union-negotiated health, dental, life and long-term disability insurance plans.

In fact, the public paid $23,150 last year for all the fringe benefits Dix enrolled in, more than any other lawmaker. He also collected $37,500 in salary and $23,409 for travel and other reimbursements in fiscal year 2016. This one member of Iowa's citizen Legislature costs taxpayers more than $84,000 annually.

It's not a bad part-time job if you can get it.

And claiming to be unaware of the law does not absolve lawmakers of responsibility when they break it. If that were the case, child molesters and drug dealers would show up in court, claim they didn't know their actions were illegal and avoid punishment. The government will not allow people to avoid paying taxes owed because they say they didn't know about them.

Every single Iowa lawmaker should repay the state for the share of their health coverage they failed to pay. They could write checks, set up payment plans or arrange payroll deductions.

That is what honest stewards of public dollars who are genuinely concerned about government spending would do.

DMR: 'Local control' is an Iowa legislative lie

I've been covering the Iowa Legislature for 25 years, but it didn't take that long to recognize legislators' favorite little lies.

"I'll be brief," is probably the most common, a phrase that typically precedes some longwinded rant. "I didn't mean to speak on this bill," is another eye-roller. If lawmakers could find a way to eliminate all the accidental speeches, they could probably cut the legislative session down to 50 days.

The one I want to address today is more mythical idea than idiotic idiom, but it's just as delusional. It's the notion that state lawmakers respect local control.

"Local control," broadly, is the ability for governments below the state level — cities, counties and school boards, for the most part — to make their own decisions.

This year, Iowans are hearing the phrase most often as Republican legislators' rationale for taking a machete to Chapter 20, the law dealing with collective bargaining for public employees.

And yet, the same week legislators were so generously bestowing power and flexibility to local governments with their right hand, they were preparing to rip it away with the left. Legislation to forbid local governments from setting their own minimum wage has been introduced and is likely to pass this year.

Contradictory? Not at all, House Speaker Linda Upmeyer said Thursday.

"Those things in the preemption bill have always been not the responsibility of the local government. They have always been functions of state government and federal government," she said.

Upmeyer drew a distinction with the collective bargaining bill. "The way we handle budgets is absolutely a function of a school board, of a city council, of county supervisors," she said.

Uh-huh. Where was the concern for the budgeting responsibility of local school boards the last several years? Lawmakers flouted their own legal requirement for setting state aid for schools in a timely fashion. They made it difficult and sometimes impossible for school districts to meet the state's deadline for certifying their budgets.

Lawmakers did approve state aid in a timely way this year, but the GOP majority cut the governor's proposed 2 percent increase almost in half. That's their prerogative, but the fact is the state controls local school budgets in many ways and will continue to do so.

For most of the last quartercentury, however, the tug-of-war over local control has been all about manure. In the early 1990s, local governments started using their zoning authority to prevent concentrated livestock operations — mostly hog lots, in those days — from locating too close to neighbors and waterways.

The Legislature soon put a stop to that, preempting local governments and reserving regulation over livestock operations to itself. In return, lawmakers put in place some new regulations, but they didn't exactly clear the air. Many rural Iowans have their noses out of joint over this issue to this day.

The minimum-wage issue started in a similar way. Frustrated by inaction at the state and federal level, some Iowa counties have moved to address the ridiculously outdated $7.25-per-hour minimum wage. They apparently have acted within their authority, or this conflict would be playing out in the courts instead of the Statehouse.

Gov. Terry Branstad and Republicans who control the Legislature want to put a stop to that. They argue it is difficult for businesses to deal with a patchwork of different wage laws. House Study Bill 71 also stops local governments from making their own laws related to hiring practices, employment benefits, scheduling practices or other terms and conditions of employment. So cities can't have stricter antidiscrimination laws than the state's, nor can they require local employers to offer health for example.

Lawmakers, however, have made no move toward actually addressing the problem that some local governments wanted to fix: raising the minimum wage. Upmeyer was noncommittal when asked if an increase would be proposed in a separate bill. I suspect that if Republicans had the votes to raise the minimum wage, it would be in the bill.

What is in the bill instead is a provision to stop cities from banning non-recyclable plastic bags. Apparently, Republican legislators feel the state should have plastic-bag primacy, even though local communities have to manage their local landfills with their local budgets.

Lawmakers like to pretend they are apologetic about taking up time with their remarks, accidental or deliberate. Everybody knows it's nothing more than a social gesture that means nothing. Everybody also knows that no matter how much legislators profess to care about local control, it is always and only on their own terms. It's time to give up that favorite little legislative lie.

DMR Iowa View: Collective bargaining: Why dismantle landmark law?

JOHN W. MCKERLEY is an oral historian at the University of Iowa Labor Center.

Compromise created one of the best bipartisan bills in the last 50 years, interviews show

On Tuesday, the Republican majority in the Iowa legislature filed bills that would radically and negatively amend one of the finest bipartisan pieces of Iowa legislation drafted in the last 50 years — the Iowa Public Employment Relations Law (Chapter 20 of the Iowa Code).

I know this because I've spent much of the last three years documenting the original legislation's history.

Since 2013, I have spoken with dozens of Iowans who worked in the public sector before Chapter 20 was enacted in 1974, legislators from both parties who voted for it, employees of the board charged with administering it, and representatives of the generations of workers who have labored and negotiated under its rules. While some of these Iowans have criticisms of particular elements of the law, none of them favors the fundamental restructuring set forth in the current Republican plans.

Before Chapter 20, Iowa's public employees had little say in their pay or conditions of work. For example, teachers report being disciplined and discharged for conduct outside of school hours, with women, in particular, being singled out for discipline for "indecent" conduct, which could include nothing more than being seen in a two-piece bathing suit on weekends. By the late 1960s and early 1970s, such experiences resulted in a wave of strikes by public employees like firefighters, nurses and teachers, all of whom felt pushed into a corner by a legal system that refused to force their employers to engage in honest and meaningful collective bargaining.

By 1974, these tensions resulted in wide, bipartisan support for a collective bargaining law for public employees. The final law — signed by Republican Gov. Robert Ray — rested on three major compromises. The first was a strong no-strike provision. Next was a provision limiting the "scope" of bargaining — meaning that employers and employees were not forced by law to negotiate over anything other than a particular list of topics, including pay, health insurance and a grievance procedure. Finally, in cases in which the two sides could not settle a contract, the law set up a system by which a neutral outside arbitrator would pick from proposals to reach the most reasonable settlement based on several conditions, including comparing similar contracts across the state, the ability of the employer to pay (taking into account the possibility of tax increases but not encouraging them), and the public interest.

The law also established a Public Employment Relations Board (under the direction of the governor's appointees) who administered the law. These industrial relations professionals helped to establish a system that, over time, settled the overwhelming majority of contracts without the need for arbitrators.

Indeed, by 2016, no more than 3 percent of contracts went to arbitration.

The system established by Chapter 20 has meant slow but steady improvements in pay and working conditions for Iowa's public employees. Moreover, none of the dire warnings about unsustainable tax increases — made in the 1970s as today — have ever come to pass.

Indeed, arguably, such circumstances were more likely before Chapter 20 than after it. Perhaps it was for this reason that David Stanley, the co-founder of Iowans for Tax Relief, was among the conservative Republicans who voted for Chapter 20 in 1974.

As one of the people most familiar with the long history of Chapter 20, I can identify no rationale for the current Republicans' proposed bills other than ideological motivations or pressure from out-of-state groups that have no interest in the long-term well-being of Iowans. If successful, I fear that the proposed changes to Chapter 20 will have the effect of further hollowing out Iowa's middle class, especially in rural areas and small towns, where public-sector jobs are some of the best to be found. I implore Iowans of good will from all parties to reach out to their legislators and urge them to oppose these bills.

DMR Iowa View: Congress must correct error over terrorist law

By: Leonard Boswell

During my 16 years as a member of the Iowa delegation in Congress, I witnessed on more than one occasion the idea that “some of the worst acts committed have been done with the best of intentions.”

citizens to sue nations for terrorist acts], it was passed with noble intentions. Unfortunately, the consequences of this legislation have a worst-case scenario effect on members of our military and foreign diplomatic corps.

As other nations look to reciprocate our law, the shortcomings become more apparent. For example, sovereign immunity has been the legal precedent that has prevented nations from being subjected to criminal prosecution.

With the adoption of JASTA, the stronghold of sovereign immunity has been questioned and will continue to be questioned by nations that may not be our friends. Several countries including Turkey, Iraq and Pakistan are beginning to consider laws that resemble our own.

As a leader on the world stage, the United States often sets precedent in diplomatic relationships across the world. When we fail to abide by our own idea of sovereign immunity, other nations will be enticed to follow suit. Sadly, the consequences for our military men and woman could be catastrophic.

I know and am friends with many members who supported this act. I can attest to them as individuals who want to do what is right for America and the American people. Unfortunately, what was meant to provide justice for families who were affected so tragically by the events of 9/11 has unintentionally put members of our military in harm's way. As a veteran myself, I aim to keep our military heroes safe from harm.

As it currently stands, JASTA legislation comprises language that promotes uncertain consequences on a global scale. It allows foreign nations the opportunity to exercise legal jurisdiction over members of our military.

This in turn opens Pandora's box to the possibility that our nation's leaders will be forced to decide between divulging secret or sensitive information or subjecting our service members to the ruling decided in a foreign court.

These issues are best avoided.

As a former member of Congress, I understand why its members make the decisions they do. Representatives must realize when they have made a grave mistake and to immediately rectify the error. In this case they need to make substantive changes that protect those who protect us. That is why I ask Congress to make the politically hard decision on this issue.

DMR Iowa View: Branstad's leadership made wind energy a big success

Tom Kiernan, American Wind Energy Association

Led by Iowa's example, wind power has officially gone mainstream nationwide. There are now enough turbines installed to power 20 million American homes, and more than 100,000 U.S. workers have well-paying jobs in the wind industry. It's impossible to tell this success story without Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad.

As he continues his public service as the next ambassador to China, on behalf of American wind power I want to express a heartfelt “thank you.” Led by Branstad's determination and forwardlooking policy, Iowa consistently shows the rest of the country what's possible with homegrown wind energy.

In 1983, Iowa took a remarkable step: It became the first state to create a renewable portfolio standard, signed into law by Branstad in his first year in office. History proves this was a ground-breaking piece of legislation. Today, 29 states and the District of Columbia their own RPS.

These successful policies have brought a host of benefits to the country's families and businesses. They have created 200,000 American jobs, billions of dollars in savings from lower energy prices and substantial public health benefits from cleaner air. In Newton, wind came along when the local economy needed a boost the most. Once dubbed the "washing machine capital of the world," the town faced a crisis when Maytag and other manufacturers shut down and moved jobs overseas. Then two new wind factories opened, one in part of the old Maytag plant, ultimately offering thousands of new jobs that gave Newton another chance.

Branstad's support for wind energy benefits all Iowans. The state recently became the first to generate more than onethird of its electricity from wind. And Iowans didn't need to sacrifice affordable electricity to get there — they pay among the lowest rates in the country, sitting far below the national average.

The results speak for themselves: Up to 7,000 Iowans have wind power jobs. Eleven in-state factories build wind turbines and parts for them. And nearly $12 billion of private investment has already been added to the state's economy. Just one of the additional projects now underway, MidAmerican Energy's Wind XI farm, will invest another $3.6 billion as the state's largest renewable energy project, yet.

Crucially, wind has also bolstered the cornerstone of Iowa's economy: agriculture. The state's farmers receive up to $20 million every year for hosting turbines. That's income they can count on when commodity prices fluctuate or weather hurts the harvest. Some observers have even called wind "the new corn."

"One turbine has changed my life," Ed Woolsey, a fifth-generation Iowa farmer, recently told Bloomberg Businessweek. "Before, I raised corn and soybeans and cattle." Now, he said, "I'm a wind farmer."

"Every wind turbine you see while driving across our state means income for farmers, revenue for local governments and jobs for Iowa families," Branstad said during 2016's Condition of the State address. As he heads to China, we recognize his pivotal leadership in making this all possible for millions of Americans in Iowa and beyond.

DMR: Door ajar for statewide insurance program

Speaker anticipates options by Jan. 1; Branstad aide mum

BRIANNE PFANNENSTIEL

BPFANNENST@DMREG.COM

Sweeping changes proposed to Iowa's collective bargaining laws would block most public-sector unions from negotiating over health insurance, though they stop short of instituting a mandatory statewide health insurance system Gov. Terry Branstad has floated.

Republican leaders say they considered including such a plan in the legislation, but felt it could be too restrictive. Instead, the bill leaves open the possibility for a voluntary statewide health insurance program that employers could opt into.

“We want to make sure people are able to look at what best meets their needs,” said House Speaker Linda Upmeyer, R-Clear Lake. She said she anticipates a statewide program would be made available as an option for employers around the first of the year.

Branstad’s spokesman Ben Hammes declined to answer questions about when such a proposal might be made or what provisions it would include. He said in a statement that if the proposed collective bargaining changes were to become law, “we would begin working to develop common sense solutions” related to health insurance.

But Branstad has spoken extensively about the possibility in recent months. In his Condition of the State address in January, he proposed removing health insurance from collective bargaining negotiations and instead shifting all of Iowa’s public workers into a single health benefit program.

Iowa has more than 500 health care plans for an estimated 184,000 public employees working in cities, counties and school districts across the state. Merging all of those employees into one plan would help spread the risk in an attempt to keep costs low while maintaining benefits, Branstad argues.

He and other Republicans have said the state’s collective bargaining laws don’t give employers enough flexibility to negotiate reasonable health care policies, resulting in overly generous benefits for which taxpayers foot the bill. “When you have public employees getting these Cadillac benefits and paying virtually nothing — $20 a month — and the taxpayers are paying in some cases over $23,000 (for health insurance) ... it’s not fair,” Branstad told reporters Monday.

“It needs to be addressed, and that is why we are going to continue to work with the Legislature and labor committees in both houses to address it.” Legislation proposed last week in the statehouse would make changes to nearly every aspect of the state’s collective bargaining laws. Among the most significant are changes to what public-sector union workers are allowed to negotiate over.

Currently, unions negotiate for wages and health insurance, as well as a wide range of other workplace conditions and employment benefits.

The legislation — House Study Bill 84 and Senate File 213 — specifically prohibits negotiations over health insurance, though it exempts public safety workers from that provision. Rep. Dave Deyoe, R-Nevada and House Labor Committee chair, said removing health insurance from negotiations removes barriers on employers that currently prevent them from seeking less costly alternatives.

“It’s not necessarily making people pay more for health care,” he said of the changes. “It might be a situation where they can find a policy that’s less expensive that provides the same benefits.” But union leaders, who would no longer have a voice in choosing which health plans would be available to their members, say they absolutely expect to see higher health insurance costs. For those currently paying $20 a month, that increase could be dramatic.

Danny Homan, president of AFSCME Iowa Council 61, has said that many unions have agreed to lower salaries in exchange for better health benefits. And although Branstad and legislative leaders have said a statewide pool could provide a low-cost alternative, Homan said he’s not convinced.

“When the governor and Republican leadership claim that a statewide health insurance program would provide savings, they are doing so out of pure speculation and without any facts or figures to back them up,” Homan said in a statement. “The last time we trusted the governor on his cost savings plan, we ended up with the disaster that is privatized Medicaid. This is a baseless claim and I cannot comment further until I see something on paper.” Deyoe said that the governor’s staff made it clear to him that any statewide system would be voluntary. Upmeyer said that’s because legislators had some concerns, including about people who live along the state's borders. "If it doesn't allow somebody in Council Bluffs to get some health care in Omaha, it might be a problem," she said. "It might not be what they want. So I think the fact that we have a pool available, that may offer great opportunity. That's an option. That's something people can take a look at. But if it doesn't meet their needs, then they can go and look at or create perhaps a different pool."

That statewide plan would be just one option for employers shopping for new health insurance options, she said. The bill lets employers pick the plan they like best for their employees.

"I think people will be innovative and creative about what kind of pools they put together, who they work with," Upmeyer said. "And I think that'll be positive."

DMR: Rastetter won't seek 2nd regents term

President, president pro tem tenure received mixed reviews

JEFF CHARIS- CARLSON

JCHARISC@PRESS-CITIZEN.COM

IOWA CITY, Ia. — The president of the Iowa Board of Regents announced Friday that he will not seek a second term on the board that oversees Iowa's three public universities.

Bruce Rastetter, instead, will allow his six-year term to expire April 30, according to a news release Friday.

"I want to thank Gov. Branstad for the opportunity to serve our state these past six years and his confidence in me as a regent," Rastetter said in the release. "Because of the importance of our three public universities and the pride I have in them, this was a tough decision. However, I will leave the board satisfied that we made significant strides improving the value of higher education in Iowa."

For the past few weeks, Rastetter has said he was "undecided" about whether to seek reappointment to the nine-member board. Officials with the governor's office say Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad is scheduled March 1 to release the names of his appointments to three seats on the regents and more than 160 other boards.

Rastetter was not among the 20 board applications the governor's office had received by Feb. 3. Regents Katie Mulholland and Sherry Bates, whose terms also expire in April, submitted applications for reappointment.

Rastetter said his departure from the Iowa Board of Regents will allow him to return to his agribusiness interests in the Midwest and in South America.

"I'm excited about several significant projects that we have in the initial planning stages, and I look forward to announcing details about them very soon," he said.

Controversial tenure

Rastetter's tenure as the board's president and president pro tem has received mixed reviews. He has said his focus has been on ensuring that quality higher education remains affordable and accessible to all Iowans. His news release included a list of accomplishments that ranged from 2 1/2 years of tuition freezes for resident undergraduates, record student enrollment, record growth in private philanthropy and expansion of the University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics. He also credited the universities, state legislators and the governor for working more collaboratively to financially support the state's three universities so they remain leading institutions of academic and innovative excellence.

Rastetter's many critics, however, say his four years as board president have led to widespread concerns about encouraging political favoritism, undermining academic leadership and pitting the state's public universities against each other. "Mr. Rastetter has created more division and distrust at our three public universities than any time I can remember," Sen. Joe Bolkcom, D-Iowa City, said Friday in an emailed statement. "We are still trying to fix the damage caused by his disastrous performancebased funding proposal. ... I join thousands of Iowa students, parents and staff who are relieved that Mr. Rastetter has decided to move on."

Critics have raised concerns about Rastetter's supposed too cozy relationships with current presidents Steve Leath at ISU and Bruce Harreld at UI, as well as with his often antagonistic relationships with former presidents Sally Mason at UI and William Ruud at UNI.

President searches

Rastetter played an active role in the 2015 search process that led to the hiring of Harreld, a former IBM executive, as the 21st president of the University of Iowa. Rastetter not only recruited Harreld, who had no previous experience in university administration, but he also facilitated meetings between Harreld and four other members of the board. Questions and concerns about the search process led to a vote of "no confidence" against the regents by the UI Faculty Senate. The national American Association of University Professors also voted this summer to approve sanctions against UI for failures of the search. AAUP officials say that last year's search for a new president of the University of Northern Iowa avoided many of the problems that plagued last year's search. Rastetter was not a member of UNI search committee.

State funding

In 2012, the regent leadership began using the strategy of promising to freeze resident undergraduate tuition levels if the Iowa Legislature provided a specific amount of additional funding for the state's three public universities.

The gamble paid off during the 2013 and 2014 legislative sessions. But lower than requested state funding increases in 2015 and 2016 legislative session led to mid-year and last-minute tuition increases. To demonstrate to lawmakers that the universities were making every state dollar count, Rastetter also called for an efficiency study of the three universities. The resulting Transparent, Inclusive Efficiency Review process has led to major changes in HR, IT, procurement and other issues across the regent enterprise.

Rastetter was much less successful, however, with a plan to change the basic formula by which the state divides funding among the three universities. The so-called "performance based funding" formula approved by the board in 2014 would have redirected millions of state dollars from UI to pay for the larger percent of in-state students at ISU and UNI.

Board presidency

If Branstad had reappointed Rastetter, it's unclear whether the agribusinessman and Republican donor would have had the 34 votes needed in the Republican-controlled Iowa Senate for confirmation. Rastetter first became president of the board in 2013 after the Iowa Senate, then under Democratic control, refused to confirm his predecessor, Regent Craig Lang, for reappointment.

What happens to Rastetter's board presidency after April 30 depends on whether Mulholland, the board's president pro tem, is reappointed by the governor and confirmed by the Senate.

DMR: Officer's search of stepson is ruled lawful

Davenport cop did not violate man's constitutional rights

GRANT RODGERS

GRODGERS@DMREG.COM

A Davenport police officer acted lawfully when he searched his adult stepson without a warrant, once for a weapon and another time after he became suspicious that the 20-yearold was selling marijuana, the Iowa Supreme Court ruled Friday.

The ruling came in an appeal from Christopher Brown, who argued that evidence obtained during two searches by his stepfather, Officer Brent Kilburg, should have been suppressed from his trials on felony gun and drug charges.

Though the Fourth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution prevents law enforcement officers in most situations from searching a person without a warrant, the justices unanimously ruled that Kilburg was not acting as an "agent of the government" when he searched his stepson, the court ruled. "We conclude that Brent was not acting in his capacity as a law enforcement officer during either of the searches," Justice Bruce Zager wrote. "When initially confronted with with the situations, Brent was at all times acting as a concerned parent and not as a law enforcement officer."

The justices had never encountered the unusual facts in Brown's appeal, Zagar wrote. But courts have heard arguments for decades over when, exactly, police and law enforcement officers are acting in their official job capacities rather than as private citizens. For instance, the Nebraska Supreme Court ruled in 1990 that a police officer who also worked as a landlord conducted a legal search when he found drug paraphernalia in a tenant's apartment and alerted narcotics officers, according to the ruling.

Kilburg physically searched his stepson on Feb. 5, 2015, after Brown's mother and other family members became concerned that he had stolen a firearm and might be suicidal. The officer found the gun in Brown's waistband and decided to call two of his supervisors after his wife told him that she'd found marijuana in her son's backpack, according to the ruling.

Kilburg turned over the backpack to police, and Brown was arrested on two drug charges and one count of being a felon in possession of a firearm.

Kilburg searched the trunk of his stepson's car later that month after becoming concerned that Brown was selling marijuana. Brown was unemployed at the time and living with his mother and stepfather, and both became suspicious when they learned that he'd purchased an Xbox video game console. Kilburg found a handgun and marijuana in the trunk of his stepson's car and turned over the evidence to a sheriff's deputy.

Brown, now 22, was charged again with possession of a controlled substance, being a felon in possession of a firearm and conspiracy to commit a non-forcible felony. After two trials in front of a judge, he was convicted of numerous charges and given a five-year suspended prison sentence at a hearing in August 2015.

"There is no doubt that both of the searches in this case were purely private in nature," Zagar wrote in the ruling. "In each search, Brent confronted the situation in his capacity as a private citizen — a stepparent — and his conduct moving forward indicated that he continued to act in his role as a concerned parent."

AP: Court: Officers can't ask for driver's license without a suspicion of crime

DAVID PITT

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Iowa Supreme Court has made it significantly more difficult for police to continue to ask questions or even ask for a driver's license during routine traffic stops if there is no reasonable suspicion a crime has been committed. In a ruling Friday, the majority of a divided 4-3 court overturned a 30-year-old Iowa legal precedent that said officers could at least ask drivers to produce their license during routine stops. "We conclude that when the reason for a traffic stop is resolved and there is no other basis for reasonable suspicion, article I, section 8 of the Iowa Constitution requires that the driver must be allowed to go his or her way without further ado," wrote Justice Brent Appel in the majority opinion.

The court decision throws out the conviction of an Eldridge man who was stopped in August 2014 by a police officer conducting random checks on license plates of passing cars.

Jayel Antrone Coleman was driving his sister's car which was flagged when Officer James Morris ran its license plate and records indicated the owner had a suspended license.

He continued the stop even after finding the car's owner wasn't driving by asking for Coleman's license, registration and proof of insurance.

The justices said once Morris determined the car's driver was not the owner, the reason for the stop was satisfied and further inquiry was unconstitutional.

Appel said unlimited discretion to stop vehicles on the open road have given rise to allegations of racial profiling. The court affirmed that "limitations on searches and seizures by law enforcement protect fundamental values of liberty and human dignity and are a bulwark against arbitrary governmental intrusions into the lives of citizens." As it turned out Coleman had no license since he had been barred from driving by the state. His record indicated he'd been arrested two days before the stop for second-offense drunken driving and had a previous record that included driving while barred, driving while suspended and several narcotics convictions.

He was charged with driving while barred and convicted by a Scott County judge but appealed claiming the evidence obtained by the officer was part of an unlawful seizure.

The opinion reveals a deep division among Iowa justices about how they view the balance between law enforcement duties and constitutional limits on police power. Justice Thomas Waterman, opposing the majority opinion, said Coleman's stop was not unduly prolonged by the officer's request to see a driver's license.

"Until today, a police officer who lawfully stopped a motorist could ask to see his or her driver's license, especially when the officer knew the driver was not the car's registered owner," Waterman said. "Almost all Iowans, I believe, would find this activity completely unobjectionable and, indeed, mundane."

Assistant Iowa Attorney General Kevin Cmelik said the ruling may make officers more hesitant to approach the window of a car if they can't ask for identification to know who they're dealing with.

"It certainly is going to change the dynamics for officers in those situations where they do dispel their reasonable suspicion and have to decide what to do," he said.

Coleman's attorney, Micki Meier, said the decision "limits officers' ability to just be able to randomly choose vehicles to pull over based on license plates" and forces them to have some other reason for stopping cars.

DMR: Iowa GOP chief chides 'thuggish comments' in email

WILLIAM PETROSKI

BPETROSK@DMREG.COM

An insulting email circulated by a union lobbyist is sparking criticism from the head of the Republican Party of Iowa, who decried the use of "sexist, thuggish comments" in an increasingly bitter debate at the Iowa Capitol over a collective bargaining bill. The email from Erich Schmidt, political director for the Laborers International Union of North America in Des Moines, provides tips for union supporters when contacting Republican legislators. It includes bluntly worded talking points to use when discussing the GOP-sponsored proposal, which would dramatically weaken contract negotiating rights now held by Iowa's public employee unions.

Schmidt's email, which was obtained by The Des Moines Register, includes the names of 13 Republicans in the Iowa House. It offers a brief description of each lawmaker, with most characterized as "douche." In addition, first-term Rep. Ashley Hinson, R-Marion, is characterized as "Cute but still douche," while Rep. Walt Rogers, R-Cedar Falls, is labeled "Super Duper Douche."

Email addresses on Schmidt's message indicate it was circulated this week among staff of the Des Moines Public Schools, as well to other individuals concerned about the collective bargaining bill. The Laborers International Union represents some blue-collar public employees in central Iowa as well as the Waterloo area.

Jeff Kaufmann, chairman of the Republican Party of Iowa, issued a statement Friday denouncing Schmidt's email.

"Frankly, I am dismayed that Iowans would stoop this low and act in this manner," Kaufmann said. "The sexist, thuggish comments in this leaked email are shocking and inexcusable. In addition, this email was disseminated widely on taxpayer-funded equipment during taxpayer-funded work hours. Iowans now expect the union responsible for this email to take the appropriate actions and hold this person accountable. We also expect those aligned with this union will demand changes as well."

Schmidt said Friday his email was an unedited internal document that was accidentally released to the public and it was not approved by his union. However, he refused to apologize, saying, "If mild locker room talk is what it takes to get the public's attention to what Republicans in this Legislature are doing to working Iowans, then the Municipal Laborers have succeeded. Republicans are ramming prepackaged legislation down Iowa employees' throats which would take us back 43 years. They are stripping worker rights and keeping Iowa's minimum wage at poverty levels. What should be shocking is this legislation."

Democrats and union leaders have harshly criticized House Study Bill 84 and Senate File 213, saying the identical proposals would destroy collective bargaining for Iowa's public employees, which has been in place since the 1970s. Republicans say the legislation would restore control to local elected officials and state officials and help Iowa taxpayers. Under the two bills, public employees who are not engaged in public safety work would be able to bargain only on wages, while other issues, such as health insurance and working conditions, would be explicitly banned from contract talks.

Schmidt's email suggests that opponents of the collective bargaining bill contact Republican legislators multiple times. It also recommends that callers use different voices or different phone numbers.

One of Schmidt's talking points suggests that callers tell the designated legislators, "Hey, I didn't hear you campaign on this (expletive). You lied to me, not a good idea, bro!"

Kaufmann said Friday the email was forwarded to the media by a teacher disgusted with the contents. He said it contains "shockingly sexist comments and inappropriate language." He specifically made reference to the description of Hinson, a former reporter, anchor and producer for KCRGTV in Cedar Rapids.

Hinson told The Des Moines Register she considers Schmidt's email to be "petty bullying." The fact it was circulated among Des Moines Public Schools employees serves as evidence of the need for reform in Iowa's collective bargaining process, she said.

"They are making their point for us because people were doing this when they should have been teaching. I find this to be offensive and I think it is misogynistic and hypocritical," Hinson said.

"You know, I am a smart woman. I am an elected representative. I deserve respect like any other representative on that list, or among my peers," Hinson said. She suggested that she is owed an apology.

Rep. Shannon Lundgren, RPeosta, whose name was included in Schmidt's email, said it is disheartening that people would think bullying and being negative would change a legislator's mind. She said she is talking with school officials, county supervisors, union officials and others in her northeast Iowa legislative district to gather as many comments as possible about the proposed collective bargaining legislation. At this point, she added, she wants to see some amendments before she can say she will vote for it.

Phil Roeder, a spokesman for Des Moines Public Schools, described Schmidt's email as "crude and inappropriate." He also suggested it gives "lousy advice" about contacting state legislators.

"It does not represent Des Moines Public Schools in any way, shape or form.," Roeder said. "Any employees who did share this document using their district email account will be counseled by our human resources office, including a reminder that their emails are public, and that their use or misuse of district email reflects on both their school and the school district. Beyond that, any discipline would be a personnel matter that we cannot publicly discuss."

However, Roeder said he takes issue with claims the email was widely disseminated in Des Moines schools, adding it appears to have been forwarded to 10 of 5,000 school employees. If other instances are found, they will be shared with the school's human resources office, he said.

DMR Editorial: Don't eliminate ban on politically active churches

Trump would turn churches into tax-exempt political machines if Johnson Amendment were revoked

When President Donald Trump attended the National Prayer Breakfast, he assured the assembled clergy that he intends to "totally destroy" the 60-year-old law that prohibits tax-exempt churches from supporting political candidates.

It's easy to see why he'd make such a promise.

Trump claimed an astonishing 81 percent of the white evangelical vote in the November election, despite his many personal peccadilloes. That's the sort of support money can't buy. It's also the sort of support that can generate an avalanche of campaign contributions, which could explain the president's desire to dismantle the Johnson Amendment. That amendment has long prevented churches and other nonprofits from claiming tax-exempt status if they choose to promote, or oppose, the political campaigns of candidates running for public office.

Eliminating the law would more explicitly legalize that which is already commonplace: clergy members freely expressing their political views from the pulpit. That is worth applauding, but there's a corresponding, unavoidable downside to eliminating the Johnson Amendment, and it's a doozy.

With no Johnson Amendment, the flow of "dark money" that has corrupted our political process with untraceable campaign contributions would become a torrential flood. The change would also create an entirely new animal: the tax-exempt political machine.

As things stand now, a citizen can contribute $100 to a church and claim a tax deduction for doing so, or he can donate that $100 to a political campaign and forgo the deduction. If Trump has his way, the $100 donation to the church can then be routed directly to the political campaign, and the donor could still claim a tax deduction, and the church could continue to enjoy tax-exempt status even if its sole function was that of a money-laundering operation for political candidates.

That is a recipe for disaster.

As Richard Schmalbeck, a professor of law at Duke University, says, "If wealthy people and institutions can deduct the cost of their political activities, but only if those activities are funneled through a church, they will do precisely that. If for some reason they cannot find a cooperative church to be their mouthpiece, they can easily create one."

Schmalbeck points out that the IRS is prohibited from randomly auditing churches, and churches, unlike other charities, are automatically assumed to be deserving of tax-exempt status.

The Johnson Amendment doesn't bar clergy or parishioners from voicing their opinions on matters of public policy — the late Jerry Falwell is Exhibit A of that — but it does prohibit churches from funding candidates' campaigns if, at the same time, they are claiming tax-exempt status.

That's important because tax deductions and exemptions are, in effect, a form of taxpayer-provided subsidies — and no one wants to see taxpayer subsidies used to support political candidates, regardless of party.

Eliminating the Johnson Amendment won't add to the ability of churches to express themselves. But it will result in taxpayers underwriting that exercise, while simultaneously creating new ways to secretly finance political campaigns.

LEE: Proposed procedural hurdles indicate political attack, Iowa union leaders say

Erin Murphy

Unions that represent Iowa's public employees think they are on the receiving end of a politically motivated attack from state lawmakers who seek to change dramatically the way some of those public employees collectively bargain for benefits.

Republican state lawmakers this week introduced sweeping legislation that essentially rewrites the state's collective bargaining laws. GOP officials say the current system, which was established in the 1970s, favors public employees at the expense of taxpayers.

Among the many in the proposal are provisions that would significantly weaken unions' bargaining position on employee benefits and make it more difficult for unions to retain their bargaining authority.

Those provisions, in particular, have led union officials to claim that Iowa Republican lawmakers are not trying to save taxpayer money, but rather weaken the influence of public employee unions, a bloc that in elections typically votes for Democratic candidates.

A similar law implemented in Wisconsin in 2011 led to a 34 percent reduction in union membership between 2011 and 2015, according to the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel.

One top Iowa union leader described Iowa Republicans' proposals as a copy of Wisconsin's but "on steroids."

"They are doing everything in their power to make it hard for unions to exist in this state," said Danny Homan, president of AFSCME Iowa Council 61, which represents 40,000 workers in law enforcement, corrections, mental health care and other fields.

Statehouse Republican leaders denied allegations that they are attempting to "bust" public employee unions.

"That's not what this is about," Republican Gov. Terry Branstad said. "The fact is, I think Iowans appreciate and want us to be fair, and they want a system that is not antiquated and isn't tilted in one (side's) favor, but (a system) that's going to be fair to all Iowans. And I believe that these changes are designed to do that."

The proposal adds or strengthens procedural hurdles for unions to retain their bargaining authority. Chief among them is a measure that would require unions to be certified by a majority of their members, instead of merely by a majority of members who vote, as current law is written.

In other words, if a union has 5,000 members, it would have to receive 2,501 votes in support of recertification. Under current law, unions need only a majority of however many members vote, like most public elections.

Republicans say such a measure is warranted to keep union bargaining units accountable to their members and is justifiable even though most elections, including for state legislator and governor, are decided by a majority of votes cast, not a majority of the population represented.

"The rule on that is the same that we have here in the House: It's a majority here of the House members," said Rep. Dave Deyoe, R-Nevada, referring to the requirement of a majority vote in the chamber for the passage of legislation. Deyoe is chairman of the House Labor Committee through which the collective bargaining bill is running. "It doesn't matter how many people are here in the chambers. If you have a vote up there, we have to have 51 votes."

Union leaders said that because Iowa is a right-to-work state, no public employee may be required to pay union dues and any employee can opt out of a union at any time. Therefore, they say, the higher threshold for recertification is unnecessary and an indication of a political attack.

"It's totally unnecessary. It's vindictive," Homan said. "They have now taken that bar (to recertify) and given us a bar that is really, really, really unfair and high."

Homan said participation in union certification votes varies from bargaining unit to bargaining unit, often depending on the size. Smaller units will have high voter turnout, but larger units often do not, he said.

“You may have half of them vote. So that means I need to get 100 percent yeses? We have absolutely no margin for error,” Homan said, noting a recent unit’s vote on whether members wish to accept the state’s bargaining offer of a 1.25-percent raise. “We have 5,000 members here in Des Moines, and I guarantee you 5,000 of them didn’t come to vote yesterday. For whatever reason. They’re good members. They pay their dues.

“For whatever reason, they just don’t show up. Does that mean that they want to get rid of the union? I don’t think so.”

The proposal also doubles — from one to two years — the amount of time before a bargaining unit may try again, if it fails in a recertification vote.

Tammy Wawro, president of the Iowa State Education Association, which represents more than 34,000 Iowa educators, called the proposed recertification threshold “purely punitive.”

“It’s just a lot of process (for no) reason,” Wawro said. “If people want to decertify now, they have a plan. ... People can get together and ask a bargaining unit to not represent them.”

SCJ: Inside the Capitol

Editor's note: Every other Sunday through the conclusion of this year's session of the Iowa Legislature, local lawmakers will share their Statehouse views.

Sen. Bill Anderson, R-Sioux City

Legislation allowing for the sale and use of fireworks passed last week on a bipartisan vote of 11-3 in the Senate State Government Committee.

This is an issue I have become very familiar with over the past four years. A similar version of the fireworks bill was adopted by the State Government Committee last year on a bipartisan vote. That bill never came to the full Senate for debate.

Senate Study Bill 1051, if it becomes law, would give county boards of supervisors or city councils the ability to prohibit the use of consumer fireworks through a simple ordinance or resolution. The bill also has language which would allow the sale of consumer fireworks in both permanent and temporary structures. Currently in the state, Iowans are permitted to possess as many consumer fireworks as they want, you just can’t set them off.

Retailers in permanent structures would be permitted to sell consumer fireworks from June 1 through July 8 and between Dec. 10 and Jan. 3 annually. Those selling fireworks in temporary structures would be permitted to sell from June 13 to July 8 each year. The bill also creates procedures and penalties for violators. Sales would be prohibited to consumers under the age of 18.

With the enactment of this bill, Iowans would have the freedom to use fireworks during the specified dates. Fireworks must be used on personal property or with a landowner’s permission.

I expect the bill will now move to the Senate Ways and Means Committee, from there to the full Senate for debate.

Rep. Jim Carlin, R-Sioux City

Given the degree of interest, misunderstanding and concern around proposed changes to Chapter 20, it's important to lay out the facts as they now stand. I encourage all to review House Study Bill (HSB 84) before drawing final conclusions.

What the bill does not do:

The bill does not affect private-sector unions.

The bill does not repeal the right to collectively bargain.

The bill does not affect pensions in any way.

The bill does not take away health insurance.

The bill does not mandate that local governments must join a statewide health insurance pool.

What the bill does do:

The bill rebalances the scales to insure a fair and equitable system that works for public employers, employees, and taxpayers, giving taxpayers a seat at the table.

For example, arbitrators cannot now consider if the state has enough funds to pay for wage and benefit increases, but they can consider government's ability to increase taxes in order to generate more funds to pay for these benefits. Collective bargaining agreements need to live within current financial realities, just as in the private sector.

HSB 84 gives local governments the ability to recruit and reward exceptional employees while making it easier to get rid of the occasional bad employees. Currently, it can take up to three years to terminate an ineffective teacher. That is a disservice to taxpayers, parents, students and quality teachers within the system.

HSB 84 will change the mandated items that must be bargained for, allowing management the ability to actually manage. Greater flexibility for school boards, city councils, mayors and boards of supervisors, along with state government officials, allows for more effective allocation of resources.

As this legislative session continues, I welcome your feedback. Please feel free to contact me at jim.carlin@legis.iowa.gov or 515-281-3221 or 712-253-4270

Rep. Chris Hall, D-Sioux City

Over the past several years, I've done my best to approach the Legislature without partisanship as my first pivot.

Republicans and Democrats both have good ideas, and there has been balance in shared control of the Legislature over the last six years. That has taken a drastic turn this year as one-party control by the GOP does not appear to give even moderate Republicans much voice within their party.

Monday evening, after hours of testimony from school officials and debate, aid for K-12 public schools was set at a dismal 1.1 percent. Initially, Gov. Terry Branstad proposed 2 percent growth, which was then decreased by legislative Republicans. A recent survey of superintendents found that this will likely cause increases in class sizes (71 percent), layoffs of teachers (61 percent) and an increase in property taxes for Iowans (179 school districts). The Republican school funding proposal of 1 percent this year is the third lowest since 1973.

Think about these two facts. Seven of the past eight years account for the lowest investments in public schools in Iowa's history. Yet during the same period of the Branstad era, business tax cuts have increased six times faster than education funding. Elected GOP officials have prioritized corporate welfare over Iowa's own taxpayers.

Steamrolling behind those sad facts, the GOP has proposed to make public jobs less competitive. Law enforcement, firefighters, teachers, snowplow drivers, social workers – your friends and neighbors – would have less retirement and health care coverage under their proposal, and it will be harder to attract young families to this state. It will make attracting teachers to rural communities more difficult. Iowans value public service and our current laws have worked for more than 40 years. We owe these people better than to demonize and scapegoat them.

Please ask your legislators to oppose HSB 84. Visit saveiowaworkers.com for their contact information.

Rep. Tim Kacena, D-Sioux City

Police officers and state troopers putting their lives on the line every day to protect us. Nurses taking care of your spouse, parents or children. Teachers and coaches in your school district. Correctional officers working at one of the state prisons. Snow plow drivers working all night during a blizzard to keep our streets and highways safe. Veterans who have served in combat but have returned home and now serve their local community. These are just a few of the public workers who make Iowa a great place to live.

However, House and Senate Republican lawmakers and the governor believe these dedicated public servants are underworked and overpaid. That's why they have spent months writing a bill in secret to strip away rights from these workers and didn't even bring the issue up during the campaigns last fall.

Originally passed to stop strikes, the bipartisan state collective bargaining law has served Iowans, employees and public employers across Iowa well for more than 40 years. It simply requires Iowans and their public employer (school, city, county, etc.) to sit down and work together to discuss issues and reach mutually agreeable solutions in the workplace.

Unveiled on Tuesday, Gov. Terry Branstad and Republicans are now trying to fast track the bill through the Legislature. Hundreds of Iowans came to the Capitol last week to have their voice heard, but Republicans don't want to hear from Iowans or even consider the unintended consequences.

I believe that law enforcement officers, firefighters, teachers, nurses and other Iowa workers deserve fairness and a voice in their own workplace.

On Monday, the Iowa House debated supplemental state aid for our public schools and one-half million kids.

The proposed 1.1 percent is the third lowest increase since 1973 and half of what was recommended by the governor. This increase amounts to about $73 per student, which would buy one-half of a textbook. Districts have had eight consecutive years of budget decline, averaging about 1.8 percent per year. Administrators say they need 3 to 3.5 percent just to stay above water.

In the end, I voted against a 1.1 percent increase in funding to schools.

LEE: Recurring themes in Branstad's state of state speeches

ERIN MURPHY

The longest-serving governor in the nation's history, Terry Branstad has delivered to Iowans a Condition of the State address 22 times.

The speech is given each year in January during the first week of the legislative session. Delivered in the House chamber at the Iowa Capitol, lawmakers, state Supreme Court justices and other statewide elected officials attend, and it is broadcast live on public television.

Typically, it is the largest audience the governor attracts each year.

On Jan. 10, Branstad delivered what likely will be his final Condition of the State address. The governor has been selected by President Donald Trump to serve as the next U.S. ambassador to China, and his confirmation is expected to come this spring.

To mark the occasion, a news researcher analyzed the texts of each of the six Condition of the State addresses Branstad has made since returning to the governor's office in 2011 — starting with his 2012 speech. Obviously, his messages vary, but the analysis shows some recurring topics and word choices. Here are the most common:

We (295 times)

Together (81 times)

Us (51 times)

When Branstad says “we” and “together,” he most often is referring to himself and lawmakers and the work ahead.

“Together we can make our schools safer,” he said in 2015, using both words in the same sentence.

Another example, from 2013: “It is the promise of a good people, who demand a good government and expect the men and women serving in that government to put aside their differences and come together to make good public policy.”

Iowa (368 times)

This one should come as no surprise. From touting its successes to laying out visions for its future, the state's name is going to come up often when a governor is giving a speech on the condition of the state.

Branstad used “Iowa” more than any other word in the past six speeches, and it's probably safe to assume that would hold true for all 22 of his addresses, not to mention those of other Iowa governors.

An example from 2017: “I am confident Iowa will continue to move forward because Iowans care deeply about their neighbors, their communities and creating an even better future.”

Students (72 times)

Schools (91 times)

Education (78 times)

Branstad has a complicated relationship with education — public education in particular. The state continues to devote a healthy portion of its budget — more than half — to public education, but advocates say funding has been inadequate since Branstad’s return to office in 2011.

Branstad also led an effort to enact significant K-12 education reforms in 2013, which he spoke about in the next year’s Condition of the State.

An example from 2014: “We have begun to reform Iowa’s education system, and we can expect Iowa schools to pull away from the middle of the pack and reclaim pre-eminence in student achievement as measured against the rest of the United States.”

I (160 times)

It would be hard to be a state’s chief executive, speak for a half-hour about one’s plans to meet the state’s challenges and not refer to oneself fairly regularly. Still, his use of the first-person singular didn’t rise above 30 times each in five earlier speeches. It peaked at 36 this year, likely his last.

An example from 2012: “This year I will submit to the General Assembly a revised plan to reduce commercial and industrial property taxes by 40 percent over the next eight years.”

Jobs (81 times)

Economy (64 times)

Branstad has placed a primary focus on the state’s workforce, pledging when he returned to office in 2011 to create more than 200,000 jobs. In fact, his use of the two words was highest in his 2012 speech. It is natural that he would regularly refer to jobs and the economy in his speeches, but both have ticked downward a bit over the years. He used the word “jobs” 27 times in 2012, but only five times in 2017.

An example from 2015: “The proposals outlined today will impact every Iowan. They will help to create jobs, protect students and families and open up our government.”

Opportunity (73 times)

When Branstad talks about opportunity, often it is to lay out a piece of his agenda as he did during his first Condition of the State address since returning to the governor’s office.

An example from 2012: “Now, with our fiscal house much improved, and our fiscal year 2013 budget already substantially completed, we have a tremendous opportunity to focus the next few months on two other critical priorities: first, creating new jobs and careers for Iowans to significantly raise family incomes, and second, adopting common sense solutions for our schools to give our children a world class education.”

New (68 times)

Branstad often describes his proposals as “new.” He also regularly refers to “new jobs” when discussing a need to increase employment.

An example from 2016: "Together we can forge a new path that will lead us to stable and predictable funding for school infrastructure and historic long-term protection for water quality."

Today (62 times)

Branstad uses "today" most commonly in two ways: To tell Iowans about what he thinks are good things happening in the state and to make pledges for the future.

An example of the latter from 2014: "Today, I am calling on members of the Iowa Legislature to join me in working to reduce costs to make college affordable and reduce the amount of debt incurred by Iowa students and their families.

Future (43 times)

The annual addresses are all about looking forward, having a plan for what's next.

An example from 2017: "And while I am pleased with this progress and optimistic about Iowa's future, I believe there is more work to be done."

KMA Land: Questions raised regarding Clarinda lodge's shutdown

Local lawmakers and union leaders, alike, are expressing concerns over the suspension of services at the Clarinda Correctional Facility's lodge unit.

State Department of Corrections officials announced this week that the lodge--a minimum security facility--would be closed temporarily because of $5.5 million in cuts to the department's budget for fiscal 2017. The department's reductions were part of the $117 million in deappropriations to the current fiscal year's budget approved by the Iowa House and Senate and Governor Terry Branstad. State Representative Cecil Dolecheck says he was upset over the new of the lodge's closing. Dolecheck tells KMA News he spoke with a department of corrections liaison concerning the reductions, and was informed it was a temporary shutdown.

"They're planning on temporarily shutting down the lodge," said Dolecheck. "There are inmates that are closed to being terminated. Their terms are about up. They're being reacquainted to go back in (into society). They're going to try and place those inmates--if they don't go back in and complete their parole--into community-based corrections centers in other areas.

"I said, 'what's that doing to do, because the lodge is what does the cooking and cleaning for the whole prison?' They said they would have to use other inmates in the prison, and take them over to the lodge, and have them do that," he added.

Dolecheck also expressed concerns about the lodge's employees.

"It's going to be a transition period," he said. "It's kind of unfortunate. The lodge had been working well. There's 17 employees in the community that are employed there. So, I'm concerned about those employees, and their employment, and where they end up, or get transferred to. But, I guess I'll just wait and see."

The exact number of workers impacted by the shutdown was unavailable.

Danny Homan is president of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees Local 61--the state's largest employees union. In an interview on KMA's 7:35 news segment Friday morning, Homan expressed concerns about the lodge's prisoners being paroled or placed on work release. He also says the lodge's closing comes on the heels of other layoffs of state prison employees in recent months.

"They've laid off, I think it's about 16 probationary employees," said Homan. "I don't know if we've had any layoffs down at Clarinda, but those aren't even layoffs--those are terminations. These are people that gave up another job to come and work for the department, and now they're being fired during their probationary period.

"That's another concern we have. Those people gave up jobs to work for the state of Iowa--and this is how the state of Iowa treats them," he added.

Homan believes Governor Terry Branstad and Lieutenant Governor Kim Reynolds could have taken steps to avoid the reductions--such as eliminating corporate tax breaks.

"When they came into office six years ago," he said, "they bragged about having a $700,000-$900,000 surplus in state government. They didn't create that surplus--Governor Culver did. But, they bragged about it. They inherited it. And, where's that surplus today? It's gone. Where did it go? Into the pockets of corporate tax breaks."

Dolecheck says he would be open to reviewing the tax incentives given to big corporations in Iowa. However, the Mount Ayr Republican says it all goes back to lower-than-expected revenues indicated in the State Revenue Estimating Conference's report in December. Homan, meanwhile, expressed fears that riots and other incidents at the Tecumseh State Prison in Nebraska could happen at Clarinda or other facilities in Iowa.

Also targeted for cuts were the Luster Heights Camp at Harper's Ferry, the John Bennett Unit at Fort Madison, and the residential treatment services at Sheldon's community-based corrections.

WHOTV: Iowa No Longer Utilizing Unemployment Kiosk System

It was a controversial move in 2011 when Governor Terry Branstad chose to close down the state's unemployment offices and replace them with more than 700 self-help kiosks around the state.

But now, those kiosks aren't even being serviced or tracked by Iowa Workforce Development. The Des Moines Register first reported the kiosks were abandoned Friday, prompting a response from Governor Branstad's Communications Director, Ben Hammes.

"This is an old issue that dates back before Director Townsend," he said. "Our relentless focus on economic development and providing good paying jobs across Iowa have led to unemployment in Iowa dropping to 3.6 percent, well below the national average. We are interested in looking forward and are confident in Iowa Workforce Development and their focus on utilizing technology to provide the best service to Iowans in all areas of our state."

Iowa Workforce Development officials say, because of technology advancements, these kiosks had become obsolete. The virtual access point, once only accessible via kiosk computer, can now be logged into from any Internet-connected device.

"The majority of calls we have received about the kiosks in the past few years have been a request for us to pick up the equipment because it's no longer necessary to access the virtual access page that provides the service to Iowans," said Beth Townsend, director of Iowa Workforce Development.

But some labor activists are crying foul, saying that without a public announcement that these kiosks would no longer be serviced or tracked, this is another slant against unemployed Iowans.

"When they decided they were going to close those offices, we actually fought against that," said Ken Sagar, president of the Iowa Federation of Labor. "In the alternative, when they put the kiosk in, that was a pretty big disappointment, at the time. And now, the fact that we are fundamentally throwing the kiosk out the window, too, it's kind of like asking Iowans to, 'Go help yourself.'"

AP: Powerful Iowa higher education leader won't seek 2nd term

Bruce Rastetter, the powerful and polarizing leader of the board that governs Iowa's three public universities, announced Friday that he will be stepping down April 30 after deciding not to seek a second six-year term.

Rastetter, a Republican who has been president of the nine-member Board of Regents since 2013, said he would not ask Gov. Terry Branstad to reappoint him. He said it was a "tough decision" but that he will leave satisfied with accomplishments that include freezing tuition for resident undergraduate students for 2 ½ years, a first in 40 years.

The announcement came after some Democrats in the Iowa Senate indicated they would likely vote against confirming Rastetter had he been reappointed. While Republicans control the chamber, Rastetter would have needed to earn votes from some Democrats to obtain the two-thirds support needed.

Rastetter said he would focus on his work as CEO of Summit Agricultural Group, his investment company that is working to develop ethanol production in Brazil. Later this year, regents will choose one of their own to be board president.

Branstad thanked Rastetter for his service, calling him a "hard-working, conscientious leader" and praising him for helping attract "outstanding university presidents."

"We were also able to make dramatic changes to improve efficiency of the institutions and control costs for Iowa students and their families," he said.

Branstad in 2011 appointed Rastetter, who was his top donor in the 2010 campaign in which Branstad unseated Gov. Chet Culver. The governor orchestrated a leadership shakeup in which the board's top leaders were demoted and Rastetter was elevated to the no. 2 position. Rastetter became president two years later despite controversy that often swirled around him.

Rastetter backed plans that froze tuition rates for in-state undergraduates, saying students needed relief from Iowa's notoriously high debt loads. The freezes proved popular with students and parents but were ultimately unsustainable after lawmakers didn't provide funding increases sought by the schools.

A businessman who made fortunes in pork production and ethanol, Rastetter had been accused of showing favoritism toward Iowa State University and antipathy at times toward his alma mater, the University of Iowa, where he's a major football booster.

Rastetter had been leading an investment group working with Iowa State to develop a major western-style farming operation in Tanzania on land where the government was evicting thousands of settlers. The project continued after his appointment, drawing accusations of a conflict of interest and protests. Iowa State eventually ended its involvement with the project, which Rastetter defended as a well-intentioned plan to help feed Africans.

More recently, critics were angered by Rastetter's moves to nudge University of Iowa President Sally Mason into retirement in 2015 and the process by which the board installed businessman Bruce Harreld to replace her.

Critics said Rastetter orchestrated the search to favor Harreld, a former IBM executive who had no prior higher education management experience, over more qualified candidates. Rastetter backed the hire as a way to shake up the school. He and other regents face trial later this year in a lawsuit alleging they violated the open meetings law when they met privately with Harreld during the search.

Rastetter also faced questions about his relationship with Iowa State University President Steven Leath, who turned to Rastetter's company for help finding, buying and dividing a $1.1 million plot of land to build a home in central Iowa in 2015.

Rastetter announced in December that the board would keep Leath as president despite an audit that found he used university airplanes for personal flight training, to attend medical appointments and to take relatives to an NCAA basketball game.

Critics had accused Leath, a pilot, of keeping quiet a 2015 hard landing in which he damaged one of the planes while returning home from vacation. But Leath had informed Rastetter about the landing weeks after it happened.

AP: Toledo residents unsure how to use former Iowa Juvenile Home

Residents in Toledo are unsure what they want the state to do with the 27-acre former Iowa Juvenile Home that Gov. Terry Branstad ordered closed in 2014.

The Courier (<http://bit.ly/2knvSOa>) reports that Matrix Design Group has presented three options for the 27 acres, 16 buildings and nearly 143,000 square feet of the facility that closed in 2014. The Iowa Economic Development Authority Board hired the company to determine how to develop the facility.

Two options would keep part of the grounds as an educational facility and devote the rest to residential living. The third makes the entire area a mix of senior housing and residential living.

More than 50 people who attended the meeting offered questions and critiques but didn't unite behind a specific plan.

Daily Non-Pareil: Legislature's actions could significantly hurt Council Bluffs' budget

By Jon Leu

With Iowa lawmakers scrambling to address a $117 million shortfall in the state's budget and debating changes that could potentially reduce the degree of control that cities and counties could exercise over local governments, Council Bluffs Mayor Matt Walsh said he has "concerns" about the viability of the balanced budget for the coming fiscal year that he has presented to the City Council.

While Walsh's proposed budget does not call for any reductions in the city's workforce, he said that three employees planning to retire will not be replaced. The mayor said that while he has not instituted a citywide hiring freeze, vacancies on the city staff, which now numbers 480, will be replaced on a case-by-case basis.

But he said there are two bills on the floor of the Legislature now dealing with traffic cameras that could create the potential for a required layoff of city workers.

The first of those bills would end the use of traffic cameras throughout the state of Iowa.

Walsh said his budget proposal for the coming year includes $704,000 in revenue that would be generated by the city's red-light cameras. If the cameras are banned in Iowa, it would create a $700,000 shortfall in the city's budget.

He said while the city has the ability to raise the current 2 percent franchise fee by as much as 3 percent, with each 1 percent increase in the franchise fee generating slightly more than $1 million, those costs would be passed on to consumers by the utilities forced to pay the higher franchise fees.

"Raising the franchise fee would have the same impact on residents as a tax increase, and I don't think we should raise taxes," he said.

Walsh said the average cost of a city employee for wages and benefits is approximately $75,000. The loss of $700,000 in revenue could force the city to lay off nine to 10 employees.

A second traffic camera bill would require cities using the cameras to obtain permission from the Iowa Department of Transportation and would shift revenue from any cameras the DOT approved from a city's general fund to the city's road-use tax fund.

If that version of the law is approved by lawmakers and signed by the governor, a portion of the $700,000 generated by Council Bluffs' red-light cameras would become unavailable for employee salaries and benefits and could result in the lay off of three to four workers, Walsh said.

Of even greater concern is the potential loss of state reimbursement of property tax revenue the city lost when the Legislature approved a property tax rollback on commercial properties several years ago.

Walsh said his budget anticipates a commercial and industrial property tax replacement payment of $2.2 million for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

He said Gov. Terry Branstad, who has been nominated by President Donald Trump to become U.S. Ambassador to China, has said he would veto any legislation that cut the commercial and industrial property tax replacement to cities.

Branstad's heir-apparent, Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds, indicated last Tuesday that she, too, would veto legislation that would eliminate the reimbursement. Ben Hammes, a spokesman for Branstad, told The Nonpareil on Friday the governor has made a commitment to honor the property tax reimbursement.

Walsh said while he is reasonably confident the city will receive the property tax replacement, a change of heart in Des Moines, coupled with the potential loss of $700,000 in red light camera revenue would be a "perfect storm" that could force the city to reduce its workforce by 30 or more employees.

Walsh said Council Bluffs' low property tax base continues to cause budgeting problems for the city.

“Like many smaller cities, we’ve been maxed out at the allowable property tax levy of $8.10 per $1,000 of taxable valuation for years,” he said. “To address that, the Legislature, many years ago, allowed cities to add a 27-cent emergency levy. We’ve been maxed out at that for years, too.”

Walsh compared Council Bluffs, with a population of 62,230, to Iowa City, with a population of 67,862. Although the two cities are comparable in terms of population, the property tax base is lower and relatively stagnant in Council Bluffs, while the property tax base in Iowa City is more than twice as great and growing.

The low property tax base here takes away the city’s flexibility in addressing budget issues, he said.

LEE: Iowa party leaders assess political landscape

ROD BOSHART

The state’s top Republican said Friday he sides with GOP legislators on issues of state preemption of some local decisions and collective bargaining changes that may impact his other roles as a county supervisor and member of a community college employees’ union.

Jeff Kaufmann, chairman of the Republican Party of Iowa who also is a Cedar County supervisor and instructor at Muscatine Community College, said his party’s platform “is very clear about we believe in local control” but he there also are appropriate times for the state to set uniform policies in areas like the minimum wage and local siting of livestock confinement operations.

“I think there is an appropriate time for preemption, but I would rather it be the exception than the rule,” Kaufmann said in an interview at Friday’s taping of Iowa Public Television’s “Iowa Press” show where he appeared jointly with Iowa Democratic Party chairman Derek Eadon.

“I think the Legislature is going to have to make the decision as to when preemption is appropriate. But they’ve got to make their case to county supervisors,” the Iowa GOP chief said. “We have a ton of new Republican county supervisors. There are a lot more Republican supervisors than Democratic supervisors — overwhelming, and so they’re going to have to make their case.”

A bill that would preempt cities and counties from going beyond the state standard in areas of minimum wage, civil rights, consumer product restrictions and other employment areas has cleared the committee level and is awaiting floor debate in the Iowa House. Republicans who control the Legislature also are moving ahead with a sweeping rewrite of Iowa’s collective bargaining law.

Kaufmann, a former negotiator for his community college’s bargaining unit, said he welcomed the requirement that unions periodically recertify and the effort to include taxpayers in the discussion by revamping a binding arbitration process that pressures local officials to raise taxes to pay for contract awards.

“We’re still going to bargain salaries,” he said and just because health insurance and other issues will no longer be mandatory items for bargaining “that doesn’t say you can’t bargain those items. What it says is they have to be agreed upon. Since when is it a bad idea for both bodies involved in negotiations to talk about something?”

Kaufmann said he liked Branstad’s idea of creating a statewide health insurance pool but was unaware that GOP legislators had scrapped that idea and did not include it in the collective bargaining bill working its way on parallel tracks through the House and Senate.

He said he expected that will still be a topic of conversation given the governor's support even if it meant schools, counties or other local units banding together to create health insurance pools presuming they would not run afoul of state preemption rules. "Common sense will tell you that it's numbers that drive down costs," he said.

During the IPTV taping, Eadon said voter backlash over GOP efforts to defund Planned Parenthood, revamp collective bargaining and make other changes that weren't part of their 2016 campaign messages could give Democrats an opening in 2018 when Republicans won't have Branstad or U.S. Sen. Chuck Grassley at the top of the ticket.

"I think we're optimistic that there's an opportunity to be able to show some of these folks that we have their back and that Republicans are not proposing anything that's going to help the middle class or job growth with this agenda. But obviously our base is going to be reeling from a lot of these bills," Eadon said.

"I think we're already seeing this restlessness and this fear of some very dangerous policies being proposed at the federal level and at the state level and I think we're going to see more and more of this," the Democratic leader added. "I don't think these rallies are going to stop with this disastrous union-busting bill that the Republicans are proposing."

Kaufmann conceded that having Branstad resign as governor to become President Trump's ambassador to China "is a loss. I can't sugarcoat that." But he said Republicans have a strong bench with Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds waiting in the wings and while he conceded Republicans have to "guard against" overplaying their hand the same is true of Democrats.

"We're going to fight complacency," Kaufmann said. "That would be an easy trap to fall into, and I didn't do a victory dance. I moved right into 2018."

Eadon said Democrats also have a strong bench and Branstad's departure is "absolutely an opening," but he conceded the party is "starting from scratch" without high profile candidates like Tom Harkin and Tom Vilsack. "We still have a lot of time before that June primary of next year," he noted.

LEE: Response to collective bargaining proposal shades of, but not quite, Wisconsin 2011

ERIN MURPHY

It wasn't quite a repeat of Wisconsin in 2011.

Nonetheless it was an interesting week at the Iowa Capitol as the collective bargaining battle began in earnest.

On Tuesday morning, statehouse Republicans unveiled their plan to alter the way many of Iowa's public employees collectively bargain for their benefits. The legislation was expected, but unknown to most statehouse observers. The scope was unknown until its unveiling.

Like Wisconsin in 2011, the Iowa proposal makes dramatic changes to collective bargaining laws, weakening the negotiating strength of public employee unions while carving out exceptions for public safety unions.

The response was immediate and dramatic.

People flooded to the Capitol to protest and speak at the various committee hearings that were held on the bill. Extra security was brought in just in case — at times there were at least a dozen state troopers stationed throughout the Capitol, keeping an eye on the proceedings.

To this reporter's knowledge, there were no incidents of troublemaking.

The scene was reminiscent of — but not quite as dramatic — as Madison, Wisconsin, at the height of the 2011 protests there. Tens of thousands of people protested daily at the Wisconsin Capitol in February of 2011. The crowds that came to the Iowa Capitol this week didn't quite reach that level.

But hundreds — maybe even into the thousands — of people came to the Iowa Capitol on Tuesday and Wednesday to have their voices heard.

The vast majority of public reaction to the Republican collective bargaining proposal — like Wisconsin 2011 — was negative. And it wasn't just at the Capitol; rallies took place across the state this past week.

Statehouse Republicans said supporters of the proposal simply are not as vocal as those who oppose it, but that they are nonetheless grateful the legislation has been introduced and is moving forward.

A public hearing on the proposal has been scheduled for Monday night at the Capitol. What will the crowd be like for that? Will it be even larger than the throngs at the Capitol this week? Will there be more supporters of the proposal?

We shall see.

You may have read or heard this week about one particular aspect of statehouse Republicans' collective bargaining proposal: whether it is being "fast-tracked" to being signed.

Here's a quick clarification on that.

The allegation is that Republicans are moving the bill swiftly to avoid public scrutiny. Democrats and opponents of the bill say Republicans are "fast-tracking" the legislation.

Republicans deny the allegation, saying they are following all established legislative rules and procedures.

The truth, as is almost always the case, lies somewhere in the middle.

Republicans are correct: They are following legislative procedures in advancing the bill. Rules are in place that dictate when a bill can be debated at each step of the process — after it is passed by subcommittee, full committee, and ultimately the full chamber. Thus far, Republicans have followed those rules, and they have given assurances they will continue to do so. And, as mentioned earlier in this column, they scheduled a public hearing on the bill, giving anyone in the state an opportunity to voice their feelings to lawmakers.

So Republicans are not fast-tracking the bill, at least as far as procedural rules go.

However, the bill is moving swiftly through that established legislative process. It was just introduced for the first time on Tuesday morning, and by the end of Thursday it had passed Senate subcommittee and committee, making it eligible for floor debate early this coming week. The expectation is the bill will be fully debated and approved by both chambers — the Senate and House — by the end of this coming week, and could be signed into law by the governor the following week.

That's pretty quick movement for legislation; bills regularly take weeks — even months to go through the full legislative process.

So, to summarize, Republicans are not “fast-tracking” the collective bargaining bill according to established procedures. But compared to most pieces of legislation, they're advancing it pretty quickly.

The Gazette: Iowa teachers rally against Legislature's collective bargaining bill

Hundreds met on the steps of the statehouse Sunday

Hundreds of Iowa teachers, school children and other activists rallied outside the statehouse Sunday, voicing opposition to legislation filed last week that would overhaul the state's collective bargaining law.

The legislation threatens the “backbone of society” by targeting public educators, said Roxann Dittmer, who has spent most of the past 25 years working as an early education teacher in the Cedar Rapids Community School District.

“I didn't choose to be an activist for education,” Dittmer said. “I chose to be a teacher, and it falls to you because you have to fight for what's right for the good of children and for the families of Iowa.”

The legislation would gut Chapter 20 — which sets the parameters for contract negotiations with public employee unions — Iowa Democrats have said, while Republicans have argued the changes would provide more local control and modernize the 1974 law.

Under the proposed legislation, public employees except for police and firefighters would only be able to bargain for base wages.

“It's going to be hard to find people to go into public service when we treat them this way,” Sen. Nate Boulton, D-Des Moines, said at Sunday's march.

Other speakers, including representatives from the Iowa State Education Association and the march's organizer Iowans for Public Education, said they hope Iowa will avoid the fate of states like Wisconsin that have gutted their collective bargaining laws.

“Wisconsin has become a state that teachers avoid,” Des Moines Education Association President Andrew Rasmussen told the crowd.

Kelly McMahon, a Cedar Rapids kindergarten teacher at the rally, spent the first nine years of her career teaching in Milwaukee. She said the political climate around public education there drove her from the state.

“We have to be able to attract the brightest people to the profession,” she said. “And when you attack the profession like this, and then you put in scams like education vouchers or education savings accounts, you're doing nothing but great harm.”

More than losing the ability to bargain for benefits, McMahon said she is worried the proposed changes to Iowa's collective bargaining law will stop teachers from voicing concerns for fear of reprimand.

"There are not only these attacks on our schools and our profession, but also things are happening in our classroom every single day that aren't OK," she said. "And we need to be able to speak up and be a voice for our kids."

Dozens of school-aged children attended the rally with their families. Jenna Pressley, who works for the Ankeny Community School District, attached a sign to her seven-month-old daughter's stroller that read "attacking teachers attacks my future."

"She's going to be directly impacted by what happens to public schools," Pressley said. "Her mom and dad are both public school teachers, and I want her future to be full of bright, empowered teachers."

Organizers urged demonstrators to attend a public forum on the collective bargaining changes scheduled for Monday evening at the statehouse. Both Dittmer and McMahon said they'll be making the trip again from Cedar Rapids.

"I'm just at the point in my life where I'm tired of apologizing," Dittmer said. "I'm good at what I do, I love my students, I am an advocate for public education. That's why I'm here — because this is important to me."

"I've read about what has happened in other states, and it's scary. I don't want that for our state."

The Gazette: Cedar Rapids casino backers 'thread the needle' with options

Wary of previous denial, group offers smaller choice

A new push for a casino in Cedar Rapids is getting support locally from people saying it would be a good addition to downtown, but there's also skepticism state regulators would allow it.

"Talking about it is a good idea, but the problem I see is the hurdle in Des Moines," said John Opperman, 57, of Marion, who was with family members Sunday in Cedar Rapids. "I don't see anyone on the commission or legislators saying they support it. The same thing is going to happen again. I think it is good to have a plan, but I hate to get everyone all worked up for nothing."

Three proposals have been presented publicly in advance of the Iowa Racing and Gaming Commission's application deadline Monday for a Linn County gaming license: the $165 million Cedar Crossing on the River on the west side of the Cedar River; the $105 million Cedar Crossing Central replacing the Five Seasons Parking Ramp with a skydeck to the DoubleTree Hotel and U.S. Cellular Center; and the $42 million Wild Rose Cedar Rapids "boutique" casino next to the Skogman building and kitty-corner to the DoubleTree. .

The Cedar Crossing on the River option is virtually the same pitch the state commission rejected in 2014 by a 4-1 vote, in large part due to economic studies predicting heavy cannibalization of revenues from other casinos, including Riverside Casino & Golf Resort to the south.

"It was a larger facility that we learned in the spring of 2014 was everything we wanted it to be, but one thing it was also was probably too big," said Brent Stevens, of Peninsula Pacific.

Peninsula and partner Cedar Rapids Development Group are bringing forth the old project, which had amenities and entertainment components to go with a large gaming operation, and also a smaller version about two-thirds the size that still offers amenities so it isn't just a "slot house," he said.

The two partners formally presented the proposals at a Sunday morning news conference at the DoubleTree.

Wild Rose Entertainment, along with development partners Steve Emerson and Hunter Parks, introduced their plan in September.

The gaming commission has a lengthy process for deciding if one or more — or none — of the proposals get a license. A decision could come in November.

Amy Opperman, 33, of Cedar Rapids, who was spending Sunday morning at NewBo City Market with her dad, John, and mom, Laurie Opperman, was supportive of building a casino in Cedar Rapids.

"It will be an income generator," she said. "I think financially it will really help the city, so I am glad to see it coming back."

All three said they preferred the Cedar Crossing Central concept, for among other reasons the likely boost it would bring to the city-owned DoubleTree.

Others cast more doubt.

"I don't know if it can support one," Bob Leslie, 58, of West Branch, said of a new casino in Cedar Rapids. "I question whether it is needed. You have Meskwaki, Riverside, Dubuque, Davenport has a couple. It would be good for the people here and good for the people who own it, but I don't know if enough people would use it."

Steve Gray, head of the Cedar Rapids Development Group, acknowledged it is a challenging prospect. The gaming market in Iowa is flat.

"We are trying to thread the needle of, one, generating new revenue for the state, and two, having less impact on other casinos," Gray said.

But he said the backers won't give up even if this effort falls short. "We are back and, quite frankly, we aren't going away until we are told 'yes,'" he said.

Cedar Rapids city officials are bound by an earlier memorandum of understanding to support the Cedar Rapids Development Group. The agreement is expected Tuesday to be extended to 2029, so if this effort fails the city would continue to support the group for years.

The city and the Wild Rose boutique casino have no such deal.

Cedar Rapids Mayor Ron Corbett, who attended the news conference Sunday, called on the commission to look to the future of the gaming industry, and said the commission needs to balance all the criteria for a license and not just focus on cannibalization of other revenues.

"Industries have had to reinvent themselves," Corbett said. "Think about the old riverboats and Mark Twain-style casinos, and what there is now. The commission has to look forward to how the industry can evolve and not just protect what they have in place."

The Cedar Crossing casinos plan to provide benefits the community.

The Cedar Crossing on the River design includes a portion of the flood control system, and Cedar Crossing Central would upgrade the Five Seasons Parking Ramp, which needs to be replaced in the next 10 years at a cost of $35 million or so, Corbett and Cedar Rapids City Manager Jeff Pomeranz said.

The Gazette: Program for Eastern Iowa girls teaches hundreds about STEM careers

Annual program shines light on science- and math-related fields

CPR. How to suture wounds. The importance of noting observations during a scientific experiment.

These are just a handful of topics that nearly 200 middle school girls from Eastern Iowa learned about this past weekend during a University of Iowa program that aimed to reverse a longtime trend.

On Saturday, 191 middle school students gathered in the Medical Education Research Facility on the UI campus for the sixth annual Girls Go STEM event, which focuses on teaching participants about STEM — Science, Technology, Engineering and Math — careers.

“Historically, women have not been represented in STEM, so we need to catch ourselves up with that and not put our girls in that situation to say, ‘this will be hard for you, just because you’re a girl,’ ” said Jackie Kleppe, director of collegiate and community relations with the University of Iowa Health Care, which hosts the program as part of the Southeast Iowa STEM Hub.

Gov. Terry Branstad has promoted STEM curriculum as a part of the Governor’s STEM Advisory Council since 2013.

The free Girls Go STEM program is for girls in sixth, seventh and eighth grades, which organizers say is a key age to retain a young woman’s interest in a science- or math-related field.

Participating students chose four of 16 sessions — hosted by various departments across the university — that featured hands-on activities specific to a particular field. Students who attended the College Dentistry’s session learned how to fill cavities, while those who attended the chemical engineering session learned how to test air quality using high-tech gadgets.

While the program in the past has focused on general health sciences, organizers say they’ve opened up the programs for other departments to participate in the last two years.

Kara Thomas, 11, a sixth-grader at Wickham Elementary School in Coralville, said her favorite session involved learning how to make lip balm as part of a pharmaceuticals program. This was her first time attending Girls Go STEM.

Thomas said before the program, she hadn’t thought about a job in any of the STEM fields.

“But now that I’ve learned about it, I’m thinking about it,” Thomas said. “I thought the pharmacy was really interesting.”

Encouraging participants to consider a career in one of the featured departments is the main goal of the program, said organizers and instructors.

“It’s very much important to me,” said Radhika Anareddy, a graduate student at the University of Iowa working toward her Ph.D. in analytical chemistry who was an instructor on Saturday in the chemistry department’s session. “I think more female students should go into science because right now, I see that many girls are not in the program, so we’d like to encourage more girls to go into science and be independent.”

Researchers have found that middle school is often a time young women lose interest in subjects pertaining to math or science, according to data from the Southern Poverty Law Center.

According to the center, women account for about 20 percent of STEM-related bachelor’s degrees in the United States, despite the fact the majority of college graduates and master’s degree holders are women.

According to the U.S. Department of Commerce, women make up less than a quarter of the STEM-related workforce.

“Last year, we did an evaluation after the event, and I think 80-some percent said their interest in STEM has increased after attending this event,” said Jayme Crawford, coordinator for collegiate health at the University of Iowa Health Care.

Aside from the girls, 195 parents also attended Saturday’s event, where they learned about adolescent health and about women in STEM-related fields.

Crawford, who manages the adult programming, said the goal is to help parents understand how to help their girls pursue STEM interests.

“(We want them to) deter away from those stereotypes that (their daughters) are not good at math and science,” Crawford said.

The Gazette: 3 casino options for Cedar Rapids try their luck

License applications due Monday to Iowa Racing and Gaming Commission

Investors rebuffed for a Cedar Rapids casino license in 2014 are back with a plan to reintroduce the initial Cedar Crossing proposal as well as pitch the option of a new Cedar Crossing Central concept with a giant skydeck over railroad tracks to the DoubleTree Hotel and U.S. Cellular Center.

The two options will be introduced in a new bid for a Linn County gaming license to the Iowa Racing and Gaming Commission, investor Steve Gray and partner Brent Stevens, chairman of Los Angeles-based Peninsula Pacific, told The Gazette

“When we think about the good and meaningful broad community support, we feel pretty good about this project and believe things have changed enough over the last three years to have a reasonable chance of success with the Racing and Gaming Commission,” said Gray, head of the Cedar Rapids Development Group of local investors behind the proposal.

While the Cedar Crossing plan offers two distinct choices, there are no guarantees either — or a previously released downtown “boutique” casino proposal from Wild Rose Entertainment — will fly with the commission.

The deadline for submitting new license applications is 3 p.m. Monday, but the commission is not expected to make a decision until late fall.

Wild Rose, which has three casinos in Iowa, and local developers Steve Emerson and Hunter Parks triggered the application process after pitching a downtown casino and office project last September.

Here's what the commission is likely to see in the applications:

- Wild Rose Entertainment: A $40 million casino with 600 to 700 slot machines and 15 to 20 table games, but no additional amenities such as dining or a bar, and a projected $42 million in annual revenue. It would employ 200 to 225 people. The casino would be on the second floor of a four-story mixed-use structure with a skywalk, kitty-corner to the DoubleTree along First Avenue and the Fourth Street SE rail corridor.

- Cedar Crossing on the River: A $165 million complex with 840 slot machines and 22 table games, multiple restaurants, a bar, a retail area and entertainment space. The site is along First Avenue W and First Street SW on 8 acres of vacant city-owned land. The plan calls for 355 permanent jobs, 1,283 short-term construction jobs and annual revenue of $83.8 million. This concept is nearly identical to what was rejected in 2014, including incorporating a portion of the flood control system.

PROPOSED LOCATION FOR CEDAR CROSSING ON THE RIVER

- Cedar Crossing Central: A $105 million investment with 550 slot machines and 15 table games, dining and beverage service and annual revenue of $63 million, The facility would replace the Five Seasons Parking Ramp with new parking, gaming floor and a landing hovering above the railroad tracks to the DoubleTree and U.S. Cellular Center between First Avenue E, A Avenue NE and Fifth Street NE. The plan estimates 231 permanent jobs and 601 short-term jobs during construction.

PROPOSED LOCATION FOR CEDAR CROSSING CENTRAL

At least 3 percent of gambling revenue from any proposal is required by law to be distributed to community projects through a local nonprofit board, which also would hold the license. An application costs $25,000, plus a fee of $30,000 as a deposit for criminal background checks. An additional fee of $20 million is payable over five years if a license is granted.

A key aspect of the Cedar Crossing Central proposal is its impact on the Five Seasons Parking Ramp. The garage, which officials say needs replacing in the near future, would be demolished and replaced with the casino and parking being incorporated. The city would continue to own the land, while the development group owns the space. Backers say it could save the city millions on a necessary infrastructure project.

Another issue is the busy — and noisy — railway through downtown.

Stevens, who has been involved with three Iowa casino projects including launching Diamond Jo in Dubuque, said he has assurances the railroad would allow the structure, and sought to minimize the noise disruptions. Cedar Rapids has a deal with Union Pacific to enact a “quiet zone” in that area possibly by the end of the year.

Union Pacific has not been contacted about a structure over the Fourth Street SE corridor railroad tracks, said Calli Hite, a company spokeswoman, but didn't rule it out.

“Union Pacific engineering and real estate experts would review the proposal to ensure it meets established standards, such as vertical and horizontal clearances and real estate requirements,” Hite said.

Gray said he had always intended to bring forth another casino proposal but moved the schedule ahead by a year because of the recent Wild Rose proposal.

“We had never planned to go away. It was all a matter of when we were going to reinvigorate our effort,” Gray said. “Since Wild Rose hijacked the process and is jumping ahead of 100 local investors who spent a lot of time and spent a lot of money and made a lot of commitments, we need to respond.”

Officials from Wild Rose declined an interview, but provided a written statement.

“Our proposal reflects the priorities and guidance of the Iowa Racing and Gaming Commission, and it is designed to complement the growing downtown Cedar Rapids entertainment district, while providing a valuable source of new revenue for Linn County,” said Tom Timmons, Wild Rose president and chief operating officer.

Gray reported “100 percent” buy-in on the Cedar Crossing proposals from the previous investor group, and said they would be fully reimbursed if approved.

Gray led an expensive and combative but successful public referendum campaign to open the door to gaming in Linn County. With the original Cedar Crossing plan driving the debate, voters supported gaming by a 61-39 margin in March 2013. The referendum expires in 2021.

As part of the deal to develop a casino on city land and lead the referendum, the city of Cedar Rapids and Linn County signed a memorandum of understanding to support a casino license application only from the Cedar Rapids Development Group. The agreement runs through 2017 with the county and 2019 with Cedar Rapids.

Cedar Rapids Mayor Ron Corbett said he expects the City Council to pass a resolution of support for the Cedar Rapids Development Group on Tuesday without casting a preference for either option. He did not comment on the Wild Rose plan, but noted the group has not asked for an endorsement and one won't be forthcoming.

Corbett said he personally prefers the larger concept, but is supportive of both Cedar Crossing models.

“I like option ‘b’ only because it is an option,” he said. “I'd rather have a larger casino. If we have to go to a boutique style facility, then I'm willing to be supportive of it.”

The multimillion-dollar question is whether the gaming market, which appears flat, has shifted enough or whether a smaller casino reduces the potential of taking revenue from nearby casinos enough to justify a new license.

OVERHEAD MAP OF THE TWO PROPOSED CEDAR CROSSING LOCATIONS

Studies ordered by the commission leading up to the 2014 denial predicted 73 percent to 81 percent of Cedar Crossing revenue would come through cannibalization of nearby casinos, most notably from Riverside Casino & Golf Resort south of Iowa City.

New studies will be ordered up this time.

“The studies are going to have a pretty significant impact in our decision,” said Jeff Lamberti, an Ankeny lawyer and chairman of the state commission. “Whether the type of facilities being proposed will change the market outlook we saw in the past is unknown at this point.”

Lamberti said there isn’t a “magic number” for how much revenue cannibalization is too much, and it isn’t the only factor. But historically, the commission moves forward with a license if the percentage of revenue cannibalization is in the single digits. It could go either way if the percentage hits the teens.

“These projects require a big investment and for that they are going to get some protection in their territory,” Lamberti said, adding the commission likes to see additional amenities such as hotels, restaurants and entertainment.

Dan Kehl, who owns three Iowa casinos including Riverside, did not respond to a request for comment. He has vocally and financially opposed a Cedar Rapids casino.

Ten of 19 Iowa casinos posted year-to-year losses and overall admissions slipped by more than 90,000 patrons to a total of 21,538,433, according to the most recent annual Iowa gambling industry report. Iowa casino profits grew by more than 1 percent in the most recent reporting year, but gaming revenue peaked at $1.466 billion three years ago.

If anything, commission members have discouraged more applications, saying the market doesn’t appear to have changed, but vowed to keep an open mind.

The commission has the same make up as it did in 2014, although the terms of Lambert and Carl Heinrich of Council Bluffs — two of the previous Cedar Rapids ‘no’ votes — expire April 30.

Both applied for reappointment, among 18 applicants. The only Linn County applicant was Rene Gadelha, of Marion, who was the Republican nominee for the District 34 state Senate seat retained by Liz Mathis.

An aide to Gov. Terry Branstad said recommendations will be forwarded March 1 to the Iowa Senate for confirmation, but there’s no indication if Branstad would make changes.

Brian Ohorilko, administrator with the Iowa Racing and Gaming Commission, said no gaming license applications have been submitted yet, but it’s normal for applications to arrive close to deadline. He said two entities have been in touch about applying.

“There’s some concerns by applicants if they submit too early, competitors will get the opportunity to look at applications,” he said.

The gaming commission will consider the applications over the next several months.

One or two vendors will be hired likely in April to conduct market studies, followed by project presentation, site visits, background checks, public hearings and other aspects before the commission makes a ruling, possibly at a November meeting.

THE STORY SO FAR

- November 2003: Linn County voters defeat a casino measure, 53 to 47 percent.
- Oct. 3, 2012: The Cedar Rapids Development Group of mostly local investors, led by Steve Gray, announce a goal of building a 110,000- to 120,000-square-foot complex with a casino, restaurants, meeting spaces and other amenities in Cedar Rapids at a cost of $80 to $100 million.
- Oct. 8, 2012: The Linn County Board of Supervisors approves a memorandum of understanding with the Linn County Gaming Association and Cedar Rapids Development Group to support only their application for a gambling license. The city of Cedar Rapids also approves a similar agreement about this time.
- March 5, 2013: Voters approve a referendum allowing gambling in Linn County on a 61-to-39 percent vote. The $2.2 million campaign pitted casino investors and supporters against a Just Say No Casino effort funded in large measure by Dan Kehl, chief executive of the Riverside Casino & Golf Resort south of Iowa City.
- September 2014: The Cedar Rapids Development group submits an application for a license.
- January 2014: Cedar Crossing Casino makes its presentation to the appointed Iowa Racing and Gaming Commission.
- February 2014: The commission releases results of market studies concluding a Cedar Rapids facility would “cannibalize” customers from existing casinos, particularly from Riverside.
- April 17, 2014: The commission votes 4-1 to reject a license for the Cedar Crossing Casino.
- June 12, 2014: After approving a gambling license for a casino in Greene County, commissioners discuss an informal, three-year moratorium on any new casino licenses.
- Sept. 15, 2016: Wild Rose Entertainment, which operates three casinos in Iowa, and local developers Steve Emerson and Hunter Parks announce a proposal for a $40 million “boutique casino” on downtown's First Avenue E across from the DoubleTree Hotel and Convention Center.
- Nov. 17, 2016: The gaming commission — despite observations that little in the casino landscape has changed — sets a Feb. 13 deadline for accepting applications for a Linn County gaming license and orders two studies of market conditions.
- February 2017: Gray, backed by his original investors as well as partners from Los Angeles-based Peninsula Gaming, which owns the Diamond Jo Casino, lays out a new bid for a casino license with two options: the original large-scale project now called Cedar Crossing on the River, or a smaller casino called Cedar Crossing Central that would be connected to the DoubleTree as a skydeck over actively used railroad tracks.

WHAT COMES NEXT

- 3 p.m., Monday: Feb. 13, 2017: Applications for a Linn County casino license are due.
- March 7, 2017: Vendors seeking contracts to perform a market study make presentations.
- April 13, 2017: The commission likely selects vendors for the studies and sets a timeline for a decision process.
- April 30, 2017: Terms of commission members Jeff Lamberti and Carl Heinrich expire. Both are seeking reappointment, among 18 applicants submitted to Gov. Terry Branstad's office.
- July/August 2017: Applicants pitch casino proposals to commissioners.
- Late summer/early fall 2017: Results from market studies are presented. The Iowa Division of Criminal Investigation privately reports background checks on casino applicants. Commissioners have a site visit to Cedar Rapids. A public comment period is held, possibly in Cedar Rapids. A question-and-answer is held between commissioners and applicants.

- o November 2017: The commission is expected to make a decision.

WHO DECIDES

- o Iowa Racing and Gaming Commission members are:
- o Richard Arnold, a Republican from Russell, voted against the Cedar Rapids license in 2014. The farmer and small business owner's term expires April 30, 2019.
- o Carl Heinrich, a Republican from Council Bluffs, voted against the Cedar Rapids license in 2014. The past president of Iowa Western Community College and American Red Cross board member's term expires April 30, 2017.
- o Kristine Kramer, a Democrat from New Hampton, voted against the Cedar Rapids license in 2014. The K & W Motors Ltd. owner's term expires on April 30, 2018.
- o Jeff Lamberti, the Republican chairman from Ankeny, voted against the Cedar Rapids license in 2014. The term of the lawyer and president of Block Lamberti Gocke & Ahlman expires on April 30, 2017.
- o Dolores Mertz, a Democrat from Algona, voted for the Cedar Rapids license in 2014. The retired state representative's term expires April 30, 2018.

The Gazette: Drone regulations taking flight at Iowa Statehouse

Legislators weighing entrepreneurship with privacy concerns

Lawmakers are taking a 30,000-foot look at unmanned aircraft systems, commonly known as drones.

A growing number of businesses and government agencies have received Federal Aviation Administration approval to fly their drones in Iowa, prompting lawmakers to consider state standards in tandem with existing federal regulations to balance legitimate uses with privacy concerns associated with a rapidly evolving technology and hobby.

House Study Bill 88 sets parameters for the use of unmanned aircraft systems employed by farmers, engineers, surveyors, utilities railroads, photographers, hobbyists, law enforcement and other government agencies and sets penalties for the misuse of aerial vehicles in photographing or gathering data on private property without permission.

Federal rules already put limits on speeds, altitudes and distances from airports that pilots can fly their drones.

Rep. Jarad Klein, a Keota Republican who uses a drone on his farming operation to scout crop development, monitoring flooding or conduct other management functions, said the Legislature is considering how best to balance privacy concerns with personal freedoms without stifling business enterprises and commercial applications.

The Legislature's initial foray into regulating unmanned aerial vehicles came in 2014 when lawmakers approved and Gov. Terry Branstad signed a bill to prohibit state or local law enforcement authorities from using drone surveillance for traffic enforcement. The law also states that evidence obtained by law enforcement using an unmanned drone is not admissible in a criminal or civil trial unless it was obtained legally pursuant to a search warrant or in a manner consistent with state and federal law.

The proposed changes being contemplated this session deal with the use of drones by governmental agencies for research or for gathering and archiving data related to the search for a criminal suspect, providing support to another tactical operation, conducting crowd monitoring or in cases where there is “a reasonable belief” that an emergency exists that threatens lives or safety.

Other parts of the bill deal with nuisances such as drones emitting peculiar sounds or excessive noise, spraying a gas or liquid or dropping an object, as well as specifying criminal penalties for using drones to stalk a victim, commit a terrorist act or to improperly “control” or “enter” an animal facility or crop operation property.

The bill also bars drones from being equipped with a dangerous weapon — with exemptions for the military or Iowa National Guard.

The bill’s initial subcommittee debut last week drew concerns from businesses like Terraplane that worried parts of the measure could hinder businesses doing video tracking of power line rights of way or aerial surveying that would move along public and private property. Such uses could involve “spillover imagery” where it would be impractical to get permission from every private property owner.

“It’s about intent,” Klein said. “What it really boils down to is if you’ve got permission, you’re good to go.

If you don’t have permission and you’re over private property, that’s when it starts to raise concerns.”

Representatives of county attorneys and civil libertarians also sparred over the admissibility in a criminal proceeding of evidence obtained through general crowd monitoring without a warrant and whether such activity potentially could chill free speech. A lobbyist for the motion picture association and broadcast news companies also wondered how the bill’s provisions would be applied to breaking news, car chases or other newsgathering functions.

“We have a lot of great people around the state and they’re the ones that I don’t want to get into their way, but the ones are out there to cause harm, we need to have some of these tools in place,” Klein said. “Will it stop them, not necessarily but what it will do is it will be a deterrent.”

The Gazette: University of Iowa graduate students file complaint against regents

Union accuses the board of bargaining in bad faith

As discussion heats up around proposed legislation that would strip Iowa unions of their collective bargaining rights, the University of Iowa graduate student union is joining its counterparts by filing a “prohibited practice” against the state, by way of the Board of Regents.

The Campaign to Organize Graduate Students or COGS, which represents 2,183 UI graduate students employed as teaching or research assistants, earlier this week filed its complaint with the Iowa Public Employment Relations Board alleging bad-faith bargaining in its negotiations for a 2017-2019 contract.

AFSCME Iowa Council 61, which represents about 40,000 public employees including some at Iowa State University, and United Faculty, representing about 550 University of Northern Iowa faculty members, filed similar complaints last week.

The complaints come as the Republican-controlled Legislature is moving through a proposed measure some say acts as a “union busting bill” in that it limits mandatory bargaining topics to just wages. If it passes, unionized employees — like public school teachers, some public safety workers, public works employees, and many across Iowa's public university campuses — would be stripped of their right to bargain for things like insurance, hours, vacations, holidays, and overtime pay.

Even wage-related bargaining would be limited to increases no higher than three percent or the consumer price index. And the proposal includes additional provisions challenging union existence, including one requiring union recertification and another prohibiting payroll deductions for union dues.

Murmurs about proposed changes to Chapter 20 have infiltrated union and lawmaker circles for months — even as the state and the regents negotiated new two-year contracts with unions like COGS, AFSCME, United Faculty, and Service Employees International Union Local 199, which represents about 5,000 workers, including professional and scientific UI Health Care employees.

The new complaints — including the one COGS filed this week — accuse the state and regents of refusing to continue bargaining “until the Iowa Legislature passed a bill amending Chapter 20.”

Josh Lehman, a spokesman for the Board of Regents, has said the board is “continuing to follow the prescribed process of negotiation.” He also has provided a bargaining schedule showing United Faculty and COGS previously agreed to reserve Feb. 20 and 21, respectively, for mediation and March 1 and 2 for arbitration.

But the COGS complaint accuses the regents — despite efforts involving a state mediator — of being “unavailable for bargaining.”

“The Board of Regents stated its position that it would not meet for bargaining or mediation until after a date by which the employer perceived the Legislature would have taken action to change the statutory provisions of Chapter 20,” according to the COGS complaint.

Although SEIU hasn't filed a complaint with the state Public Employment Relations Board, or PERB, earlier this week it did agree to ratify the regents' last contract offer and urged them to respond to reports it would “not honor the offer that it made to these nurses and other health care professionals.”

When asked on Friday if the regents have responded to the SEIU's ratification, Lehman told The Gazette, “We continue to follow the collective bargaining process.”

Landon Elkind, president of COGS, told The Gazette on Friday that PERB has started the process toward mediation.

Jan Berry, an administrative law judge with the state, told The Gazette that complaints can go to a judge or to the full board. If the board sides with the complainant, it can order “remedial relief.”

“The general philosophy is they try to put the parties back in the position they would have been had the violation not occurred,” Berry said.

The Gazette: More than 20 apply for Iowa Board of Regent vacancies

'I would hope that we could go in a little different direction'

Bruce Rastetter's announcement Friday that he won't seek another term as president of the Board of Regents guarantees at least one new face on the nine-member panel this spring.

Rastetter's six-year term is set to expire April 30, as are the terms of board President Pro Tem Katie Mulholland and Sherry Bates, who in December 2014 was appointed to replace Nicole Carroll after she resigned and moved to Texas.

The Iowa Senate confirmed Bates to serve out the remainder of Carroll's term, which runs through April. Both Bates and Mulholland have filed paperwork seeking reappointment.

Mike Richards — who was appointed to the board last May to replace Mary Andringa after she resigned — also must receive Senate confirmation this spring.

Ben Hammes, a spokesman for the governor's office, said Gov. Terry Branstad must submit regent appointments to lawmakers by March 1. The Senate then will have 45 days to act on them — with the next term on the Board of Regents beginning May 1.

To date, 23 people have applied for appointment to the Board of Regents — including Mulholland and Bates, according to documents from the governor's office. That group includes a senior associate registrar at the University of Iowa, a program director at the Roy J. Carver Charitable Trust, the executive vice president of Federal Home Loan Bank of Des Moines, and the manager of the Boone Municipal Airport.

Van Meter City Administrator Jacob Anderson also has applied, as has Timothy Fitzgibbon, who lists his current employer as National Council on Higher Education Resources in Washington, D.C. — although he indicates he lives locally.

Michael Hammer, who lists his job as librarian with the Wisconsin Department of Corrections, also has applied.

The applicants' current residencies were omitted from documents provided to The Gazette from the governor's office, but Iowa Code states that eight of the board's nine members must be "selected from the state at large." The ninth applicant is a student representing one of the campuses.

The applicants cite an array of reasons for wanting to serve:

Fitzgibbon, an Iowa State University graduate, said he wants to give back to the state.

"My job is nationally based, and serving on an Iowa board or commission would allow me to contribute and volunteer at a local level," he wrote in his application.

Anderson, of Van Meter, wrote his skills equip him to "work on delivering good government in the State of Iowa."

Daniel Clute, executive vice president with Federal Home Loan Bank of Des Moines, noted in his application this "unprecedented period in higher education."

"I have a strong belief in the vital importance of these schools to the future of our state and its citizens," he wrote.

Dale Farnham, Boone Municipal Airport manager, seemed to — like Rastetter — have an agricultural slant, noting in his application he wants to "make an impact on the direction of Iowa's agricultural industry."

"Having spent most of my life and professional career involved in agriculture, I have developed a great deal of respect and admiration for Iowa farmers and agribusiness people," he wrote.

The applicants vary by political party, and some lawmakers said they'd like to see more balance in the future.

State law requires the board have no more than five members of one political party, and right now the scale is tipped strongly Republican — with five from the conservative cohort, three independents, and just one Democrat — Mulholland.

As a registered and politically-active Republican, Rastetter's departure will provide an opportunity for more balance, some lawmakers said.

"We very definitely need more adherence to the requirement in state law that the board have party balance," said Sen. Herman Quirnbach, D-Ames. "The spirit of that law has been violated in my view, rather egregiously."

Quirnbach said he'd like to see someone with strong education credentials, adding, "I don't think an appointment to the board should be a reward to a political donor."

Both Rastetter and Richards have been big political donors to Gov. Terry Branstad.

"Both for substantive and appearance reasons, I would hope that we could go in a little different direction in the future," Quirnbach said.

Sen. Joe Bolkcom, D-Iowa City, put it more plainly.

"Gov. Branstad should do something novel and appoint a real Democrat to the board," he said.

QC Times: Crowd rallies against pending bargaining legislation

Linda Cook

The cry of "Union busting is disgusting!" went up from a crowd of about 100 Sunday afternoon near the Scott County Administrative Center on the 600 block of West 4th Street.

As some of those in attendance carried signs reading "Resist" and "Democracy, not facism," speakers rallied the crowd against the proposed Republican changes to Iowa's collective bargaining law.

A public hearing in the House on the proposal, which would limit bargaining rights for more than 180,000 Iowa public-sector workers who are not public safety workers, is set for today. Votes are expected in the Legislature this week.

The proposal prevents bargaining on a number of benefits and grievance procedures, and would change arbitration procedures and civil service standards.

Supporters of the proposal say public employees, including teachers, are better compensated than many private sector-employees.

But community activist Bob Babcock was among the participants who compared the legislation to Wisconsin's 2011 law that removed most collective bargaining rights from public employees. He is "concerned about the race to the bottom that legislation like this is going to create."

When similar legislation passed in Wisconsin, the state began to lose its quality teachers, he said.

Monica Kurth, D-Davenport, said the gathering was held "hopefully to have an impact on the decision making in Des Moines. Kurth was elected to the seat Jan. 31, after the incumbent, Democrat Jim Lykam, won the Senate District 45 seat in a Dec. 27 special election.

"This bill basically eliminates collective bargaining for the majority of workers," Kurth said, including teachers and other staff in schools, probation officers, and those who work in the prison system, including food-service employees.

"It's a huge policy shift with no reason for doing it," said Sandra Larew of Bettendorf, who said she is a product of Iowa public schools and moved to Iowa so her children could be educated here. "That's what I'm concerned about, is the future. I'm terrified about the future of Iowa."

Dan Flaherty, a teacher at Davenport Central High School, said he completely supports Chapter 20, which is the section in the Iowa Code that governs collective bargaining. "Without quality teachers, we can't have quality education," he said.

"As far as a national level, it all filters down," said Jane Duax, of Davenport, whose children attend Davenport schools. She referred to Elisabeth Dee "Betsy" DeVos, U.S. secretary of education in the Trump administration. "(DeVos) is such a proponent for defunding public schools," she said.

"It's not just about wages. It's about the right to negotiate," said Ed Curley of Davenport, political liaison for the American Federation of Government Employees Local 2119. "Labor unions have fought for this country."

Also attending the rally was 1st Ward Alderman Rick Dunn of Davenport. "I've been a union worker all my life," he said.

QC Times Editorial: Editorial: What's good enough for Iowa's teachers should be good enough for cops

Quad-City Times editorial board

A "heroes exemption" should be needless, if the Full Wisconsin collective bargaining overhaul rocketing through Iowa Legislature is truly a good deal for taxpayers and public employees. But Republicans have backed themselves into a political corner.

Iowa's public employee unions' worst nightmare was realized last week, when the bill dropped to severely restrict Chapter 20 bargaining on health care insurance, bonus pay and vacations. Dissenters call it "union busting," pointing to the exodus of teachers and bureaucrats from Wisconsin and Michigan after those states imposed similar restrictions on what could be collectively bargained.

But it's the reform package's sweeping carve-out for police and firefighters -- the creation of two classes of public employees -- that poses the greatest questions about whether facts or ideology are running the show. Under the plan, unions representing officers and firefighters could still negotiate health care benefits and vacations, for instance. The remainder of the public employee class would be left dealing in base pay and little else, yet another assault on home-rule.

There's reason behind the move to limit bargaining on health care, in particular. Costs annually skyrocket and, by and large, are absorbed by the local tax base. A more stringent system of negotiation among a larger cohort of employees is very likely to cut costs. The rest, however -- vacation days, bonus pay -- could sour the employee-management relationship at local governments. There needs to be chips with which to bargain, after all.

And this uniform system should apply to all employees, whether they wear work boots, a tie, or a badge and a gun.

The "put their lives on the line" defense is already swirling around the arbitrary division between bureaucrat and cop. But a quick glimpse at federal and state work-place fatality data prove the argument to be little more than emotion and politics. Loggers and truck drivers, per capita, are substantially more likely to die on the job than police officers or firefighters. In fact, police officers had the 15th most dangerous job in the U.S. in 2014, the most recent year available, says the U.S. Bureau of Labor statistics. While 2016 saw a saddening spike in fatal attacks on officers of more than 50 percent, it's highly unlikely that policing will even crack the top 10 when the numbers are crunched.

It might not fit into the present narrative, but a state or city employee hauling gravel and clearing trees is, in a statistical sense, indeed risking life and limb.

The segregation between the uniformed and the plain-clothed reeks of politics. It reeks of ideology. It reeks of a party that's so married to a worldview -- which elevates the uniformed and denigrates teachers and city planners -- that it now can't escape.

Fact is, few professions can whip up public support faster than officers and firefighters. And few professions are easier to politically bludgeon than teachers and bureaucrats. It's the result of a targeted campaign against regulation, government and the hardworking men and women who make it all function.

Police are worthy of appreciation. Firefighters do make sacrifices. But the not-so-sexy work done by clerks, budget analysts and parks and recreation staff is the very foundation of local government.

What's good enough for them, should be good enough for all public employees.

RI: Statehouse hearing tonight on Iowa collective bargaining changes

FEBRUARY 12, 2017 BY O. KAY HENDERSON

The Iowa legislature is poised to pass a bill this week that will dramatically eliminate items that teachers and government workers in Iowa may bargain for during union contract negotiations. House Speaker Linda Upmeyer of Clear Lake suggests with Republicans holding a majority of seats in both the House and Senate now, this move should not be a surprise.

“This is about doing the right thing for Iowans,” Upmeyer said during a news conference last Thursday. “This is something we’ve worked on for a number of years. We’ve had bills on this topic before.”

Critics say under the bill, state and local government workers will only be able to negotiate over base wages during contract talks. Republican legislators who held forums in their districts this weekend were quizzed by large crowds upset about the bill. More than 100 people gathered in an Oskaloosa coffee shop to confront three local legislators. Suzy Card of Pella, a regional representative for the state teachers’ union, drew applause from the crowd when she questioned whether the GOP had “campaigning on getting rid of collective bargaining.”

“That’s a yes or no questions, guys,” Card said and a man in the crowd said loudly, “Pretty simple,” prompting the crowd to applaud.

More than 400 attended a forum in Ankeny. Jody Butler, a former education advisor to Governor Terry Branstad in the 1990s, asked the two Republican legislators there to “have a meaningful conversation” and make adjustments in the bill.

“Take your time instead of shoving this through,” Butler said.

On Sunday afternoon, there was a large rally at the statehouse in support of teachers and other government workers. A public hearing on the bill is scheduled this evening in a committee room at the statehouse.

RI: Study finds SAVE fund has helped schools with facility needs

FEBRUARY 10, 2017 BY PAT CURTIS

A new study shows a one-cent statewide sales tax has helped Iowa schools address overdue facility and equipment needs.

The Secure an Advanced Vision for Education — or SAVE — fund was created by the legislature in 2008 to replace another tax program that led to inequities between urban and rural districts. Iowa State University economist Dave Swenson says districts have use money from the SAVE fund for a variety of purposes, depending on their size and student population trends.

“Growing districts have way more demand for new bricks and mortar. Stable districts are looking to be able to maintain maybe both their bricks and mortar and their equipment needs, while some of the declining rural districts are having to invest in technology and alternative education systems and mechanisms,” Swenson said.

The ISU study, compiled for the Iowa Association of School Boards, covered SAVE spending from 2009 to 2015. During that time, SAVE has generated just under three-billion dollars ($3 billion) for school infrastructure construction projects. But, Swenson notes districts can also borrow, based on future SAVE revenues, and they’ve taken on a combined $2.42 billion in debt.

“That penny sales tax appears to not be sufficient to fund all of their incremental equipment and infrastructure needs,” Swenson said. One of the selling points for the SAVE fund was the promise of property tax relief.

The ISU researchers found that 30 percent of Iowa school districts used SAVE funds for direct property tax relief in 2011. However, that level dropped to just under 17 percent four years later. The SAVE fund is due to expire in 2029.

RI: Pro-union rallies in Wisconsin ‘didn’t work,’ Iowa unions go local

FEBRUARY 10, 2017 BY O. KAY HENDERSON

Union members clapping during a hearing on the collective bargaining law.

Republicans in the state legislature who’re poised to change Iowa’s collective bargaining law may get an earful at weekend forums in their districts.

The leaders of Iowa’s public sector unions have said they do not plan to mimic what happened in Wisconsin when lawmakers in that state took steps to retract union bargaining rights.

“I was in Wisconsin. I participated in those large rallies. That didn’t work very well,” AFSCME Council 61 president Danny Homan said. “We don’t have the time if we wanted to because I believe this bill’s signed (into law) Monday or Tuesday of next week.”

Iowa State Education Association president Tammy Wawro said government workers can’t take time off to drive to Des Moines for a pro-union rally.

“They are actually working their tail off to try to do the best they can every day, taking care of people across this state,” Wawro said.

But Wawro is encouraging members of the teachers’ union to go to forums Saturday, to speak with their local legislators.

“They need to go talk to the people maybe they even voted for and say, ‘Hey, this isn’t what we elected you to do,’” Wawro said.

There will be a public hearing at the statehouse Monday night. Bill backers say it’s likely the labor bill will pass the Republican-led House and Senate early next week.

REUTERS: White House official attacks court after legal setbacks on immigration

Ruling blasted as ‘judicial usurpation of power’

A White House official launched a blistering attack on the federal appeals court that blocked President Donald Trump’s executive order on immigration on Sunday, calling its ruling a “judicial usurpation of power.”

The Trump administration has faced multiple legal setbacks to its travel ban issued on Jan. 27, and the Republican president has said he may issue a new executive order rather than go through lengthy court challenges.

“The president’s powers here are beyond question,” White House adviser Stephen Miller said on the “Fox News Sunday” program.

Miller referred to immigration law that the executive order is based on that gives the U.S. president broad powers to restrict who enters the country on national security grounds.

However, the same law forbids discrimination on race, sex, nationality or place of birth or residence. The case also could involve First Amendment protections involving religion.

The executive order Trump issued banned entry into the United States to refugees and citizens of seven Muslim-majority countries, triggering nationwide protests and legal challenges.

A week later, a federal judge in Seattle issued a temporary restraining order that put the president’s travel ban on hold, eliciting a barrage of angry Twitter messages from Trump. The judge’s suspension was upheld by a three-judge panel of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco on Thursday.

Miller, appearing on several television news shows, criticized the court and its ruling.

“The 9th Circuit has a long history of being overturned and the 9th Circuit has a long history of overreaching,” he said on the Fox news show. “This is a judicial usurpation of power.”

The powers to restrict entry into the United States “represent the very apex of presidential authority,” he added.

“We have multiple options and we are considering all of them,” Miller said while appearing on ABC’s “This Week.”

Those include formulating a new executive action, appealing the 9th Circuit panel’s decision to the full appeals court and appealing the emergency stay to the Supreme Court, he said.

If the Seattle lawsuit goes to trial, Washington State Attorney General Bob Ferguson said on Sunday he will depose Trump administration officials to uncover “what truly motivated” the president’s executive order.

Documents and emails authored by administration officials may contain evidence that the order was an unconstitutional attempt to ban Muslims from entering the United States, and Ferguson said on ABC’s “This Week” that he will use “every tool” at his disposal to bring those to light.

Chicago Tribune Editorial: Wake up, Illinois. You're surrounded.

Flanked by fellow lawmakers, Missouri Gov. Eric Greitens signs legislation to make Missouri the 28th "right-to-work" state during a ceremonial signing at the abandoned Amelex warehouse in Springfield, Mo. on Monday, Feb. 6, 2017. The law, which goes into effect on Aug. 28, prohibits unions from charging membership dues as a condition of employment.

To chants from union protesters, new Missouri Gov. Eric Greitens signed legislation Monday making Missouri the 28th right-to-work state in the nation. Republican House. Republican Senate. Republican governor. Done, done, done.

By comparison: When Gov. Bruce Rauner two years ago championed a scaled back right-to-work concept — local, voter-approved right-to-work zones, not a statewide proposal — it got no traction in the Democrat-led General Assembly. A bill introduced by House Speaker Michael Madigan to test its popularity, and to embarrass Rauner, got zero "yes" votes. No support whatsoever.

ADVERTISING

Right-to-work laws — which are a threat to unions because they remove mandatory membership dues as a condition for employment — are an important tool in attracting businesses and especially manufacturing jobs. Just ask lawmakers, economic development recruiters and big employers in Iowa, Wisconsin, Indiana, Michigan, Kentucky and now Missouri, our neighbors who have adopted right-to-work laws.

We wonder how lucrative the wagers have gotten between governors Terry Branstad, Scott Walker, Eric Holcomb, Rick Snyder, Matt Bevin and Greitens on which of their states will be next to poach an Illinois business or job or taxpayer. Here's what each of them is thinking: By right-to-work and so many other measures, Illinois is chasing away employers. Can I steal jobs there?

We aren't here to argue that Illinois should be the 29th right-to-work state. We're here instead to warn that while Illinois lawmakers deadlock on policy reforms that would attract more jobs here, including reforms struggling to get support in the Senate, the six surrounding states have positioned themselves to attract more jobs there, there, there, there, there and there.

When will Illinois lawmakers recognize that the house is on fire? When will they make job creation, job retention, their do-or-die priority?

With Democrats controlling the House and Senate, and even Republican lawmakers in the General Assembly preferring to duck the issue, Illinois won't be a right-to-work state any time soon. One community that tried on its own, Lincolnshire, had its right-to-work ordinance struck down by a federal judge.

But right-to-work laws in every border state are all the more reason for Illinois to make itself attractive to employers. We agree with Illinois Chamber of Commerce President Todd Maisch that if lawmakers won't even debate right-to-work legislation, they have to get behind other pro-growth policies — tougher workers' compensation laws, tax credits to encourage businesses to locate or expand here, fewer nanny-state regulations and schools that better prepare students for the workforce.

Property taxes here are among the highest in the nation. And certain parts of the state aren't just jobs deserts, they're becoming depopulated deserts. More people moved away from Illinois during the last two years than from any other state in the country. Many moved to other Midwestern states. So don't repeat the lie that it's the weather.

Here's what else a prospective employer sees in Illinois: No state budget in nearly two years. A credit rating nearing junk status. Inability to pay bills as they come due, a basic definition of insolvency. And political impasse in the General Assembly. An attempt at compromise legislation to get a budget passed hit a snag in the Senate on Wednesday. Senators, keep working.

Iowa enacted a right-to-work law in 1947. Michigan and Indiana in 2012. Wisconsin in 2015. Kentucky in January 2017. And now Missouri.

Yet which state in this region most needs a jobs rebound? The most dramatic intervention? The most ambitious pro-business reforms? Illinois.

We realize the very phrase "right-to-work" is toxic in Illinois.

We wish another phrase were toxic, too: "Good jobs are leaving our state."

Washington Post: North Korea fires ballistic missile, first since Trump elected

North Korea fired a ballistic missile Sunday morning, its first provocation since Donald Trump was elected president of the United States and one that sets up a test for the new administration in Washington.

The launch happened while Trump was hosting Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe at his golf resort in Florida, and analysts said that the hawkish Abe will likely push Trump issue a strong rebuke.

"I don't think this is designed to respond to Trump, I think this is part of Kim Jong Un's continued efforts to try to advance his programs," said Jon Wolfsthal, a senior non-proliferation official in former President Barack Obama's administration now at Harvard's Belfer Center. "But it has the added effect of calling Trump's bluff. The real question is not what North Korea has done, but what the U.S. is going to do about it," he said.

Trump, who dined with Abe at his Florida home Saturday evening, declined to respond to reporters' questions about the missile test.

The missile was fired shortly before 8 a.m. from a known test site in North Pyongan province in the west of the country, not far from the border with China, and flew over the Korean Peninsula and into the Sea of Japan, South Korea's Joint Chiefs of Staff said.

They were still working to analyze data from the projectile but said it appeared to be a medium-range Musudan missile, the type that North Korea had been trying to perfect last year. The Musudan is technically capable of flying as far as 2,400 miles, putting Guam within range and almost reaching Alaska. But the joint chiefs said this missile appeared to fly only 300 miles.

"The military is determining if the missile is a modified Musudan intermediate-range ballistic missile or the shorter range Rodong missile," a military official told the South's Yonhap News Agency.

But some analysts thought the launch could have been the first stages of an intercontinental ballistic missile capable of reaching the United States.

"I think we're all waiting for the first two stages of the ICBM," said Jeffrey Lewis of the Center for Non-proliferation Studies at the Middlebury Institute of International Studies. "They finished testing that engine on the stand so now it's time to test it in the air."

Kim Jong Un's regime has declared a goal of producing an inter-continental missile that can deliver a nuclear payload to the U.S. and last year appeared to be making a concerted effort toward achieving that goal. It conducted two nuclear tests and dozens of missile tests, including eight Musudan tests. Only one, in June, was a success, flying about 250 miles and reaching a surprisingly high altitude.

But the regime had not fired any since October, perhaps to avoid influencing domestic politics in the U.S. ahead of the presidential election and in South Korea, where the conservative president has been suspended from office and there is now a good chance of a progressive administration that is friendlier to Pyongyang.

In his New Year's address, Kim said that North Korea had test-fired in various ways for a nuclear strike "to cope with the imperialists' nuclear war threats" and said that the country had "entered the final stage of preparation for the test launch of intercontinental ballistic missile."

In response, President Trump tweeted: “North Korea just stated that it is in the final stages of developing a nuclear weapon capable of reaching parts of the U.S. It won’t happen!”

However, apart from repeating the usual pledges to work stop North Korea from reaching its nuclear goals, the Trump administration has said little on what it would do to stop Kim. The administration is understood to be embarking on a view of North Korea after eight years in which the Obama administration practiced “strategic patience” — hoping that it could wait out North Korea.

In Seoul, Acting President Hwang Kyo-Ahn convened a meeting of the national security council and said the South Korean government would work with its allies to ensure a “concerted response to punish North Korea.”

Washington Post: Trump insists he can bring the cost of $21.6 billion border wall 'way down'

President Donald Trump vowed in a pair of tweets Saturday morning to negotiate the costs of constructing a wall along the U.S.-Mexico border “way down,” after a government analysis estimated the price at a whopping $21.6 billion.

The Department of Homeland Security said this past week that the wall would cost $21.6 billion and take 3 1/2 years to construct. Reacting to the estimate, Trump tweeted:

“I am reading that the great border WALL will cost more than the government originally thought, but I have not gotten involved in the . . . design or negotiations yet. When I do, just like with the F-35 FighterJet or the Air Force One Program, price will come WAY DOWN!”

Trump sent his tweets from his Mar-a-Lago estate in Palm Beach, Fla., where he and first lady Melania are hosting Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe and his wife, Akie.

During his transition period before being sworn in as president, Trump spoke with executives of Lockheed Martin and Boeing to try to negotiate down the costs of the government’s contracts to build new F-35 fighter jets and a modern Air Force One jumbo jet. After the discussions, both companies, highly dependent on government defense contracts, announced efforts to reduce costs on the programs.

The border wall is a signature campaign promise of Trump’s. He said on the campaign trail that it would cost only about $8 billion, but that seems to have been an unreasonably low estimate.

Trump prides himself on his negotiating abilities. As a real estate developer, he famously squeezed contractors for profits, yet still often experienced massive cost overruns. Government contracting is more prescribed than in the private sector, of course, and involves an open bidding process.

REUTERS: Top Federal Reserve official resigns as bank deregulation looms

The Federal Reserve Board’s top bank regulator said on Friday he would resign, giving a boost to President Donald Trump’s plans to ease reforms put in place after the 2007-09 financial crisis.

Daniel Tarullo, a strong regulator who was dovish on monetary policy in his seven years on the board, said in his resignation letter to Trump he would leave the U.S. central bank on or around April 5.

With his resignation, Trump will have three positions to fill on the Fed's Board of Governors, which at full strength has seven members.

Much of Tarullo's legacy involves erecting safeguards after the 2007-2009 financial crisis and accompanying recession, where big banks crumbled or were driven by the Fed and U.S. Treasury into shotgun mergers intended to make them stronger.

With the goal of never needing taxpayer bailouts of failed banks, Tarullo has been strict about carrying out the 2010 Dodd-Frank Wall Street reform law and administering rigorous "stress tests" annually to banks on how prepared they are to withstand unexpected shocks.

The tests gave Tarullo huge control over the largest U.S. banks. Performance in the exams dictates how much money they can return to shareholders in dividends or spend on stock buybacks. Failure puts bank bosses under pressure and lenders devote thousands of staff and hundreds of millions of dollars to passing the tests.

Tarullo has also pushed for bigger capital buffers and other checks on potential risks banks may pose to the world's financial system.

His departure leaves many questions about the future of financial regulation. Tarullo sees the direction of changes under Trump as unclear, but said he expects the core elements put in place during his tenure of increasing capital requirements, risk management, and a resolution regime for big banks may survive.

"I'm hopeful that they really do command a broad enough consensus that this was a way to combat the 'too big to fail' problems which obviously bedeviled the system in the years leading up to and in the crisis itself," he said in an interview with Reuters.

One bank executive, who declined to be quoted by name, said the industry is relieved the Tarullo era is over. Bankers had long complained he and his staff kept changing the stress tests and balance-sheet reviews in ways that arbitrarily ratcheted up capital requirements behind closed doors.

"He made up rules in a black box and would not bother to explain their rationale to banks," the executive said.

Tarullo said changes to the stress tests, known by the acronym CCAR, that he and Yellen have proposed, on including capital buffers and a Global Systemically Important Bank surcharge, are "moving along right now."

"It's going to provide more certainty to the banks about what the next final stage of CCAR will look like," he said.

Liberal and progressive groups said Tarullo had fought to protect Americans from another financial crisis or economic catastrophe.

"Governor Tarullo has stood steadfast as a sentinel on the front lines of a six-year war to turn the Dodd Frank financial reform law into a reality," said Dennis Kelleher, president of Better Markets, a group created to promote economic stability.

Besides crafting regulation, Tarullo is a voter on interest rate policy, with a record of tending toward caution on raising rates. The Fed signaled in December it could raise rates three times this year. Tarullo plans to attend the March meeting.

LIFE AFTER TARULLO

Bank stocks moved higher in the moments following Tarullo's resignation announcement, with the S&P banks industry group index rising 0.35 percent.

The Trump administration has already said it would appoint a new Fed governor charged with heading financial regulation, a post created in Dodd-Frank. Tarullo was never formally confirmed for it, but stepped into the role.

In addition to the three appointments Trump will be able to make soon, he will be able to nominate a replacement for Fed chief Janet Yellen when her four-year term as chair ends in January 2018. Fed Vice Chairman Stanley Fischer also completes his term in 2018.

David Nason, a former deputy to Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson in 2008 and General Electric executive, is the front runner for the regulation post, according to sources familiar with the matter. John Allison, a former BB&T CEO who has said he would like to abolish the Fed, has also been mentioned as a potential nominee.

In recent months, Tarullo sharply questioned moves by Republican lawmakers to roll back post-crisis regulations, putting him at odds with House Financial Services Committee Chairman Jeb Hensarling. Last year he criticized Hensarling's proposal to give banks a choice between complying with Dodd-Frank or holding higher amounts of capital, saying the capital ratio was too low. Hensarling is expected to introduce a new draft of the bill soon.

POLITICO: Trump reviews top White House staff after tumultuous start

Michael Flynn is under fire, but he's not the only one about whom Trump is voicing his doubts.

By JOSH DAWSEY and ALEX ISENSTADT

President Donald Trump, frustrated over his administration's rocky start, is complaining to friends and allies about some of his most senior aides — leading to questions about whether he is mulling an early staff shakeup.

Trump has told several people that he is particularly displeased with national security adviser Michael Flynn over reports that he had top-secret discussions with Russian officials and lied about it. The president, who spent part of the weekend dealing with the Flynn controversy, has been alarmed by reports from top aides that they don't trust Flynn. "He thinks he's a problem," said one person familiar with the president's thinking. "I would be worried if I was General Flynn."

Yet Trump's concern goes beyond his embattled national security adviser, according to conversations with more than a dozen people who have spoken to Trump or his top aides. He has mused aloud about press secretary Sean Spicer, asking specific questions to confidants about how they think he's doing behind the podium. During conversations with Spicer, the president has occasionally expressed unhappiness with how his press secretary is talking about some matters — sometimes pointing out even small things he's doing that he doesn't like.

Others who've talked with the president have begun to wonder about the future of Chief of Staff Reince Priebus. Several Trump campaign aides have begun to draft lists of possible Priebus replacements, with senior White House aides Kellyanne Conway and Rick Dearborn and lobbyist David Urban among those mentioned. Gary Cohn, a Trump economic adviser who is close with senior adviser Jared Kushner, has also been the subject of chatter.

For now, Priebus remains in control as chief of staff. He was heavily involved in adviser Stephen Miller's preparation for appearances on Sunday morning talk shows, which drew praise from the president.

If there is a single issue where the president feels his aides have let him down, it was the controversial executive order on immigration. The president has complained to at least one person about "how his people didn't give him good advice" on rolling out the travel ban and that he should have waited to sign it instead of "rushing it like they wanted me to." Trump has also wondered why he didn't have a legal team in place to defend it from challenges.

The discussions come at a tense time for the Trump White House, which has endured a tumultuous start. The president, who can be hard on his staff, is known for orchestrating shake-ups when things aren't going right. His campaign had several leadership changes, and such decisions, such as his late-summer elevation of Conway and Stephen Bannon, are often made by gut.

The White House did not respond to requests for comment.

While Trump is unlikely to make any immediate staff moves, senior administration officials say, he has ramped up his contact with people he trusts outside the White House and has expressed concerns about how things are going. The president is turning to longtime New York friends like investor Stephen Schwarzman for advice and is relying more on Cohn, who worked at Goldman Sachs before joining the Trump team.

"He only asks you a lot of questions when he's unhappy," one person who recently talked to Trump and knows him well said. "If he thinks things are going well, he just tells you how well it's going."

"There will definitely be a change by the end of the summer, if not sooner," this person added.

This weekend, Trump had at a 30-minute meeting at his Mar-a-Lago resort with Chris Ruddy, a longtime friend who is chief executive of Newsmax, a conservative website.

Ruddy, who discussed an array of topics with Trump as he sipped whiskey and the president drank Diet Coke, said changes could be afoot. "He's always been successful and had strong people around him, and he's in the process of figuring out who those people are," he said.

After the meeting, Ruddy made an appearance on CNN's "Reliable Sources," where he complained about Priebus and called for his ouster. Ruddy said that his remarks were warmly received by others in the administration, but that he hadn't given the president a heads-up beforehand.

"A number of high-ranking Trump administration officials sent me a text praising my performance," Ruddy said. "If they don't get someone of a different skill set, they're going to continue having problems."

Late Sunday, Ruddy said he had spoken with the chief of staff, who had briefed him on his plans for the White House. Ruddy said he came away from the conversation confident that things would improve.

Adding to the intrigue: Sources say the president is planning to have lunch this week with New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, a longtime confidant who is among those mentioned as having a possible future White House role. While Christie, who has a chilly relationship with Kushner, is seen as unlikely to take a White House job, the lunch has raised eyebrows among some Trump aides. Christie had earlier been offered several roles in the administration but turned them down.

Some Trump friends note that he is adjusting to a new reality — and learning that running a business is a lot different than running the White House. The Washington staff he runs is larger and more complex than the one he oversaw in his business.

"There's a reality check of what's happening, that everything President Trump does, there's going to be a protest and a lawsuit filed," said New York Rep. Chris Collins.

Others point out that, at this early stage, things still need time to settle.

"I think they're getting their sea legs more and more and some of the growing pains will go away in time," said New York Rep. Tom Reed, a top Trump ally. "He's a loyal guy, but he's from the private sector, and he'll want to see results. As long as he sees progress, I think he'll keep his current staff around for the foreseeable future."

White House aides say it can be hard to know what will make Trump happy, or what will anger him. Some aides chafed at Conway's decision to plug Ivanka Trump's merchandise line on television, a move that drew widespread criticism, including from ethics experts who said she was walking a dangerous line. But, far from hurting her internally, Trump liked the appearance, and her standing has increased in his eyes, said several people close to the president.

Yet, as the notoriously image-conscious president endures days of negative headlines, some aides have begun to worry. One person who spoke with the president recently said he seemed to be looking for someone to point his finger at.

"You're not going to see Trump come out and say I was wrong," this person said. "If you're waiting on him to take the blame, you're going to be waiting a long time."

Yet at the same time, Trump has told friends and he wants his Cabinet members to stay the course no matter the accusations lobbed against them, and that shaking up his staff could be seen as an admission of failure.

Douglas Brinkley, a presidential historian who recently met with Trump, said the presidency had been "off to the rockiest start that I can remember."

"Everything he rolls out is done so badly," Brinkley said. "It reeks of being short-staffed and not having a true pecking order of production from the White House. They're just releasing comments, tweets and policies willy-nilly. It's been a very convulsive and confusing first few weeks, but nevertheless it's been salad days if you care about Republican policies."

REUTERS: Senate expected to confirm Mnuchin as Treasury secretary

The U.S. Senate is expected to confirm former Goldman Sachs banker and Hollywood financier Steven Mnuchin as Treasury secretary on Monday, returning a Wall Street veteran to the top U.S. economic and financial job for the first time in eight years.

Mnuchin's appointment to Treasury signals the Trump administration's trust in bankers and other senior business executives after Democrat Barack Obama launched his presidency with career regulator Timothy Geithner running Treasury and a mandate to rein in Wall Street for its role in the 2007-2009 financial crisis.

Democrats, who boycotted Mnuchin's approval by the Senate Finance Committee, are expected to vote against Mnuchin. But no Republicans have declared opposition, setting the stage for a party-line 52-48 vote. The vote is set for around 7 p.m. EST.

Mnuchin's focus will shift from defending his foreclosure record in the aftermath of the financial crisis to tackling major issues such as tax reform, financial services deregulation and international economic diplomacy as major trading partners fret over President Donald Trump's "America First" strategy.

Mnuchin, 54, will need to build a team of officials quickly to handle a Group of 20 finance ministers meeting in March and make decisions on how far to roll back the Dodd-Frank Wall Street reform law enacted during the Obama administration with the aim of preventing a repeat of the financial crisis.

Treasury and White House representatives did not respond to requests for comment late on Sunday on a Bloomberg report that Trump would soon nominate David Malpass, a former economist at failed Wall Street bank Bear Stearns, as Treasury undersecretary for international affairs.

Malpass, a Trump campaign adviser who had been leading Treasury transition efforts, was seen as a leading candidate for the job, with experience from international economic posts in the Ronald Reagan and George H.W. Bush administrations.

His role at Bear Stearns could set off a new round of protests from Democrats over his forecasts in 2007 dismissing the hazards building in credit markets that fueled the U.S. housing collapse. Bear Stearns was the first major financial failure of the financial crisis in 2008.

FORECLOSURE RECORD UNDER FIRE

Mnuchin, who left Goldman Sachs in 2002, has come under fire over his investor group's 2009 acquisition of another failed lender, IndyMac Bank, a deal in which the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp agreed to absorb most of the losses on IndyMac foreclosures. The bank, rebranded as OneWest, subsequently foreclosed on more than 36,000 homeowners, drawing charges from housing advocates that it was a "foreclosure machine."

Mnuchin grew OneWest into Southern California's largest lender and sold it for $3.4 billion in 2015. He has also helped finance Hollywood blockbusters such as "Avatar," "American Sniper" and this past weekend's box office champion, "The Lego Batman Movie," which took in $55.6 million.

In a last-ditch effort to derail Mnuchin's nomination, Democratic Senator Elizabeth Warren charged on Friday that Mnuchin "flat-out lied" to senators about OneWest's use of so-called robo-signings, a practice in which signings of court documents are automated without adequate review by bank officials.

But Mnuchin, who joined Trump's campaign as finance chairman in May 2016, has been well-received by Republicans because of his extensive finance experience.

"Objectively speaking, I don't believe anyone can reasonably argue that Mr. Mnuchin is unqualified for the position," Republican Senate Finance Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch said at Mnuchin's confirmation hearing in January.

Here's Matt's analysis from earlier in the day:

1. Resignation of the Governor – Must be made in writing to the General Assembly, if in session, if not, to the Secretary of State. Iowa Code § 69.4(1).

2. Upon resignation, the Office of Governor is considered vacant. § 69.2(1)(d).
3. The vacancy is filled by the Lieutenant Governor. Iowa Const. Art. IV, Sec. 17 (“In the case of the death, impeachment, resignation . . . of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, . . . shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.”)
4. Once the Lt. Governor becomes governor, it creates a vacancy in the Lt. Governor’s office because of the prohibition against simultaneously holding more than one elective office. See Iowa Code § 69.2(1)(h).
5. In general, vacancies in state offices are filled by the governor. § 69.8(2).
6. The Code specifically provides, “an appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of the lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term.” § 69.8(2).

Accordingly, a resignation by Gov. Branstad would create a vacancy that would be filled by Lt. Gov. Reynolds. Once she assumed the office of Governor, a vacancy would be created in the Lt. Governor’s office. The governor has the power and authority to appoint a new Lt. Governor who would serve for the balance of the Branstad/ Reynolds term.

We have reviewed for any relevant case law or Attorney General Opinions, and have not found any that would alter the above analysis.

2. Upon resignation, the Office of Governor is considered vacant. § 69.2(1)(d).
3. The vacancy is filled by the Lieutenant Governor. Iowa Const. Art. IV, Sec. 17 (“In the case of the death, impeachment, resignation . . . of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, . . . shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.”)

4. Once the Lt. Governor becomes governor, it creates a vacancy in the Lt. Governor's office because of the prohibition against simultaneously holding more than one elective office. See Iowa Code § 69.2(1)(h).
5. In general, vacancies in state offices are filled by the governor. § 69.8(2).
6. The Code specifically provides, "an appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of the lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term." § 69.8(2).

Accordingly, a resignation by Gov. Branstad would create a vacancy that would be filled by Lt. Gov. Reynolds. Once she assumed the office of Governor, a vacancy would be created in the Lt. Governor's office. The governor has the power and authority to appoint a new Lt. Governor who would serve for the balance of the Branstad/ Reynolds term.

We have reviewed for any relevant case law or Attorney General Opinions, and have not found any that would alter the above analysis.

Eric:

Here's the pertinent area of Article IV:

Lieutenant governor to act as governor. SEC. 17. In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

Referred to in §7.14 of the Code

Duties of lieutenant governor. SEC. 18. The lieutenant governor shall have the duties provided by law and those duties of the governor assigned to the lieutenant governor by the governor.

Repealed and rewritten 1988, Amendment [42]

Succession to office of governor and lieutenant governor. SEC. 19. If there be a vacancy in the office of the governor and the lieutenant governor shall by reason of death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability become incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor, the president of the senate shall act as governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed; and if the president of the senate, for any of the above causes, shall be incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor the same shall devolve upon the speaker of the house of representatives; and if the speaker of the house of representatives, for any of the above causes, shall be incapable of performing the duties of the office of governor, the justices of the supreme court shall convene the general assembly by proclamation and the general assembly shall organize by the election of a president by the senate and a speaker by the house of representatives. The general assembly shall thereupon immediately proceed to the election of a governor and lieutenant governor in joint convention.

Repealed and rewritten 1988, Amendment [42] Referred to in §7.14 of the Code

Here's Matt's analysis from earlier in the day:

1. Resignation of the Governor – Must be made in writing to the General Assembly, if in session, if not, to the Secretary of State. Iowa Code § 69.4(1).
2. Upon resignation, the Office of Governor is considered vacant. § 69.2(1)(d).
3. The vacancy is filled by the Lieutenant Governor. Iowa Const. Art. IV, Sec. 17 (“In the case of the death, impeachment, resignation . . . of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, . . . shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.”)
4. Once the Lt. Governor becomes governor, it creates a vacancy in the Lt. Governor's office because of the prohibition against simultaneously holding more than one elective office. See Iowa Code § 69.2(1)(h).
5. In general, vacancies in state offices are filled by the governor. § 69.8(2).
6. The Code specifically provides, “an appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of the lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term.” § 69.8(2).

Accordingly, a resignation by Gov. Branstad would create a vacancy that would be filled by Lt. Gov. Reynolds. Once she assumed the office of Governor, a vacancy would be created in the Lt. Governor's office. The governor has the power and authority to appoint a new Lt. Governor who would serve for the balance of the Branstad/ Reynolds term.

And you're acting on the assumption that THAT section of the Constitution is definitely what applies – you're just reviewing what that looks like in practice? Is that accurate?

Because I hung up on our phone conversation under the impression that it's not clear whether the code or the constitution applies.

Geoff – quick follow up question for you. If we look at the Constitutional interpretation of this, since Reynolds stays Lt. Gov. and assumes the duties of governor, there is no vacancy to fill. Is that correct?

Give me a call back if you can, or an emailed response is fine to. On deadline, though, so would like to hear back ASAP.

Geoff – quick follow up question for you. If we look at the Constitutional interpretation of this, since Reynolds stays Lt. Gov. and assumes the duties of governor, there is no vacancy to fill. Is that correct?

Give me a call back if you can, or an emailed response is fine to. On deadline, though, so would like to hear back ASAP.

Hey Brianne:

We looked up the pertinent section of the Iowa Constitution, which we didn't really discuss in the call. Here's kind of a legal flowchart that may help make things clear, including the Iowa Code sections you already looked up:

1. Resignation of the Governor – Must be made in writing to the General Assembly, if in session, if not, to the Secretary of State. Iowa Code § 69.4(1).
2. Upon resignation, the Office of Governor is considered vacant. § 69.2(1)(d).
3. The vacancy is filled by the Lieutenant Governor. Iowa Const. Art. IV, Sec. 17 (“In the case of the death, impeachment, resignation . . . of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, . . . shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.”)
4. Once the Lt. Governor becomes governor, it creates a vacancy in the Lt. Governor's office because of the prohibition against simultaneously holding more than one elective office. See Iowa Code § 69.2(1)(h).
5. In general, vacancies in state offices are filled by the governor. § 69.8(2).
6. The Code specifically provides, “an appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of the lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term.” § 69.8(2).

Accordingly, a resignation by Gov. Branstad would create a vacancy that would be filled by Lt. Gov. Reynolds. Once she assumed the office of Governor, a vacancy would be created in the Lt. Governor's office. The governor has the power and authority to appoint a new Lt. Governor who would serve for the balance of the Branstad/ Reynolds term.

Hopefully this helps.

I revised the document quite a bit today, so ignore the text in the email I sent along. I've attached the entire thing. No need for you to read all of it. A good amount of it relates to specific federal requirements. The key segments for which I'd appreciate any input are in pp. 1 - 8. If I'm wrong about anything in there or if you see an important omission, please let me know. Thanks for taking the time to look it over! If we get the grant (and we think IOVA would be the only Iowa applicant - there are 10 grants of $50,000 each available) I'd likely be the project director. If that happens, we'd get a chance to work together again! Again, thank you!

Hi Sue: I hope all is well with you. I am working with IOVA, the Iowa Organization for Victim Assistance, on a grant application to the USDOJ that would provide IOVA money to put together an ID theft victim coalition to help identify holes in our system in Iowa. Below is a section of my draft that describes the need. I was hoping you could take a moment to give me your thoughts on the degree to which it is accurate and complete. Thanks for any help you can provide. Bill

2) Problem Statement/Statement of Need

Identity theft remains a significant problem in Iowa and throughout the United States. The Federal Trade Commission's ("FTC") annual report for 2016 regarding complaints to its Consumer Sentinel national database showed identity theft remains a top complaint, ranking third with slightly under 400,000 complaints.[1] Prior to 2016, identity theft had been the FTC's top complaint category for 15 straight years.[2] Victimization comes in various forms. In 2016 complaints to the FTC, employment or tax-related fraud (34%) was the most common form of reported identity theft, followed by credit card fraud (33%), phone or utilities fraud (13%), and bank fraud (12%). Other significant categories of identity theft reported by victims were loan or lease fraud (7%) and government documents or benefits fraud (7%).[3] Highlighting the problem, a 2014 Bureau of Justice Statistics Report concluded that 15% of Americans aged 16 and older experienced one or more incidents of identity theft during their lifetimes.[4]

While Iowa does not rank comparatively high in the number of complaints, the state has recognized the significance of identity theft by enacting laws specifically making identity theft a crime.[5] The Iowa Legislature also passed legislation which created an identity theft "passport" program, overseen by the Crime Victims' Assistance Division of the Iowa Attorney General's office, that supplies a certificate Iowa identity

theft victims may use in contacting potential lenders and in interacting with law enforcement to help establish the fact of their victimization.[6] In addition, the Consumer Protection Division of the Iowa Attorney General's Office offers a guidance booklet, both online and on paper, with helpful information to assist victims in self-help efforts by providing tools such as model correspondence victims may use in contacting credit reporting agencies, lenders, credit card issuers, and others about having been victimized.[7] The Division also offers similar materials to help Iowans avoid becoming victims of identity theft.[8]

A number of other Iowa public and private service providers assist identity theft victims by providing self-help information and by steering them to other information sources. They also help victims by directing them to local law enforcement to report the crimes. IOVA believes that while the information provided to victims is helpful, it may differ depending on which service providers victims contact. Indeed, there is no one Iowa source identified as the "place to start" victims on the road to economic and psychological recovery.

It is evident that there is significant work being done in Iowa to help identity theft victims but, to date, no agency or individual has studied the scope of the problem of identity theft in Iowa. No one has studied the degree to which Iowa public and private agencies train staff members in how best to assist identity theft victims.

No one has taken a close look at the degree to which Iowa's 99 counties provide assistance specifically to identity theft victims. Additionally, no one has studied whether public and private resources could be more effectively and efficiently utilized to assist victims.

Finally, no agency or individual has examined whether Iowa law enforcement officials view and charge identity theft crimes uniformly or whether charging decisions vary significantly by county.

Due to these gaps in uniformity and knowledge, it is unclear whether Iowa public and private sources of assistance are efficient or effective in addressing the needs of identity theft victims.

Therefore, there is a significant need in Iowa for the creation of a collaborative coalition to review these gaps in knowledge with the goal of enhancing assistance to identity theft victims. It would be of great benefit to the people of Iowa to:

- Study the impact of identity theft in Iowa;
- Communicate with all possible victim service providers to determine the levels and types of support provided;
- Analyze the scope and quality of assistance provided identity theft victims, including the training given service provider staff; and,
- Create a state-wide coalition comprising public and private service providers to develop “best practices” standards to share with all with the goal of maximizing the quality and degree of support across the state.

3) Project Strategy/Design

IOVA proposes to address the above needs by using the funds made available through this grant to form and lead a state-wide coalition to:

- Identify the incidence of identity theft in Iowa, including the degree to which perpetrators are arrested and charged, and the outcomes of any such prosecutions;
- Identify all Iowa public and private service providers currently offering assistance to identity theft victims, including but not limited to government agencies, financial institutions, victims advocacy programs, legal clinics, state and local bar associations, Iowa Legal Aid, and state-wide professional associations, such as the Iowa Bar Association and the Iowa Insurance Exchange;

- Examine the form of assistance provided by each service provider, including but not limited to referrals and advice and whether the agency provides self-help materials or directly assists victims throughout the process of repairing damaged credit reports and taking other steps to recover;
- Determine the degree to which assistance is provided at no cost to victims;
- Specifically examine the degree to which Iowa county governments offer assistance to identity theft victims;
- Study the forms of training provided service provider staff who interact with identity theft victims;
- Study public outreach efforts of each service provider;
- Conduct a public outreach campaign to educate the public about the services available to victims of identity theft and how to avoid becoming a victim;
- Develop “best practices” tools to utilize in outreach, training and in service provision;
- Determine what other states have done to provide hands-on assistance to victims so that they get the help they need to recover from identity theft, from start through completion of the recovery process;
- Conduct a systems-analysis to determine whether greater standardization of service provision would be more effective and efficient;
- Examine whether Iowa offers standardized training for law enforcement officers on the subject of identity theft at the Iowa Law Enforcement Academy;

- Examine whether Iowa county attorneys receive training through the Iowa County Attorneys Association on best charging practices as to identity theft;
- Make recommendations for any needed changes in state law needed to better deter identity theft or assist victim recovery; and,
- Determine the need and potential for funding of increased direct assistance to individual Iowa residents throughout the period of recovering from identity theft, using volunteer or paid victim advocates.

Hi Gary,

I'm making inquiries. I will be out of office Wed-Friday of this Thanksgiving week so I will be in touch next week.

Just an aside – your email came to my private email, which I don't check as often as my work email.

Have a nice holiday.

I revised the document quite a bit today, so ignore the text in the email I sent along. I've attached the entire thing. No need for you to read all of it. A good amount of it relates to specific federal requirements. The key segments for which I'd appreciate any input are in pp. 1 - 8. If I'm wrong about anything in there or if you see an important omission, please let me know. Thanks for taking the time to look it over! If we get the grant (and we think IOVA would be the only Iowa applicant - there are 10 grants of $50,000 each available) I'd likely be the project director. If that happens, we'd get a chance to work together again! Again, thank you!

Hi Sue: I hope all is well with you. I am working with IOVA, the Iowa Organization for Victim Assistance, on a grant application to the USDOJ that would provide IOVA money to put together an ID theft victim coalition to help identify holes in our system in Iowa. Below is a section of my draft that describes the need. I was hoping you could take a moment to give me your thoughts on the degree to which it is accurate and complete. Thanks for any help you can provide. Bill

2) Problem Statement/Statement of Need

Identity theft remains a significant problem in Iowa and throughout the United States. The Federal Trade Commission's ("FTC") annual report for 2016 regarding complaints to its Consumer Sentinel national database showed identity theft remains a top complaint, ranking third with slightly under 400,000 complaints.[1] Prior to 2016, identity theft had been the FTC's top complaint category for 15 straight years.[2] Victimization comes in various forms. In 2016 complaints to the FTC, employment or tax-related fraud (34%) was the most common form of reported identity theft, followed by credit card fraud (33%), phone or utilities fraud (13%), and bank fraud (12%). Other significant categories of identity theft reported by victims were loan or lease fraud (7%) and government documents or benefits fraud (7%).[3] Highlighting the problem, a 2014 Bureau of Justice Statistics Report concluded that 15% of Americans aged 16 and older experienced one or more incidents of identity theft during their lifetimes.[4]

While Iowa does not rank comparatively high in the number of complaints, the state has recognized the significance of identity theft by enacting laws specifically making identity theft a crime.[5] The Iowa Legislature also passed legislation which created an identity theft "passport" program, overseen by the Crime Victims' Assistance Division of the Iowa Attorney General's office, that supplies a certificate Iowa identity

theft victims may use in contacting potential lenders and in interacting with law enforcement to help establish the fact of their victimization.[6] In addition, the Consumer Protection Division of the Iowa Attorney General's Office offers a guidance booklet, both online and on paper, with helpful information to assist victims in self-help efforts by providing tools such as model correspondence victims may use in contacting credit reporting agencies, lenders, credit card issuers, and others about having been victimized.[7] The Division also offers similar materials to help Iowans avoid becoming victims of identity theft.[8]

A number of other Iowa public and private service providers assist identity theft victims by providing self-help information and by steering them to other information sources. They also help victims by directing them to local law enforcement to report the crimes. IOVA believes that while the information provided to victims is helpful, it may differ depending on which service providers victims contact. Indeed, there is no one Iowa source identified as the "place to start" victims on the road to economic and psychological recovery.

It is evident that there is significant work being done in Iowa to help identity theft victims but, to date, no agency or individual has studied the scope of the problem of identity theft in Iowa. No one has studied the degree to which Iowa public and private agencies train staff members in how best to assist identity theft victims.

No one has taken a close look at the degree to which Iowa's 99 counties provide assistance specifically to identity theft victims. Additionally, no one has studied whether public and private resources could be more effectively and efficiently utilized to assist victims.

Finally, no agency or individual has examined whether Iowa law enforcement officials view and charge identity theft crimes uniformly or whether charging decisions vary significantly by county.

Due to these gaps in uniformity and knowledge, it is unclear whether Iowa public and private sources of assistance are efficient or effective in addressing the needs of identity theft victims.

Therefore, there is a significant need in Iowa for the creation of a collaborative coalition to review these gaps in knowledge with the goal of enhancing assistance to identity theft victims. It would be of great benefit to the people of Iowa to:

- Study the impact of identity theft in Iowa;
- Communicate with all possible victim service providers to determine the levels and types of support provided;
- Analyze the scope and quality of assistance provided identity theft victims, including the training given service provider staff; and,
- Create a state-wide coalition comprising public and private service providers to develop “best practices” standards to share with all with the goal of maximizing the quality and degree of support across the state.

3) Project Strategy/Design

IOVA proposes to address the above needs by using the funds made available through this grant to form and lead a state-wide coalition to:

- Identify the incidence of identity theft in Iowa, including the degree to which perpetrators are arrested and charged, and the outcomes of any such prosecutions;
- Identify all Iowa public and private service providers currently offering assistance to identity theft victims, including but not limited to government agencies, financial institutions, victims advocacy programs, legal clinics, state and local bar associations, Iowa Legal Aid, and state-wide professional associations, such as the Iowa Bar Association and the Iowa Insurance Exchange;

- Examine the form of assistance provided by each service provider, including but not limited to referrals and advice and whether the agency provides self-help materials or directly assists victims throughout the process of repairing damaged credit reports and taking other steps to recover;
- Determine the degree to which assistance is provided at no cost to victims;
- Specifically examine the degree to which Iowa county governments offer assistance to identity theft victims;
- Study the forms of training provided service provider staff who interact with identity theft victims;
- Study public outreach efforts of each service provider;
- Conduct a public outreach campaign to educate the public about the services available to victims of identity theft and how to avoid becoming a victim;
- Develop “best practices” tools to utilize in outreach, training and in service provision;
- Determine what other states have done to provide hands-on assistance to victims so that they get the help they need to recover from identity theft, from start through completion of the recovery process;
- Conduct a systems-analysis to determine whether greater standardization of service provision would be more effective and efficient;
- Examine whether Iowa offers standardized training for law enforcement officers on the subject of identity theft at the Iowa Law Enforcement Academy;

- Examine whether Iowa county attorneys receive training through the Iowa County Attorneys Association on best charging practices as to identity theft;
- Make recommendations for any needed changes in state law needed to better deter identity theft or assist victim recovery; and,
- Determine the need and potential for funding of increased direct assistance to individual Iowa residents throughout the period of recovering from identity theft, using volunteer or paid victim advocates.

TIPS AND ADVICE FROM THE NATION'S CONSUMER PROTECTION AGENCY

Most ID theft victims don't need a police report

by Seena Gressin
Attorney, Division of Consumer & Business Education, FTC

When it comes to reporting and recovering from identity theft, we're simplifying the process by eliminating the need for a police report in most cases.

I am writing in response to your inquiry regarding identity theft with the Iowa Attorney General's Office. Our best defense in helping Iowans with identity theft is to provide as much educational material as possible.

You may want to consider taking the precautionary steps listed below to avoid becoming the victim of identity theft as follows:

1. Contact each of the three major credit reporting agencies and follow these steps:

Equifax, P.O. Box 740256, Atlanta, GA 30374; 888-766-0008; www.equifax.com

Experian, P.O. Box 9530, Allen, TX 75013; 888-397-3742; www.experian.com

Trans Union, P.O. Box 2000, Chester, PA 19022; 800-680-7289;

www.transunion.com

You may place a temporary (90-day) 'fraud victim alert' on each of your credit reports by calling any one of the credit agencies. The credit agency that you call will forward your request to the other two credit agencies. To request a permanent (7-year) fraud victim alert and add a 'fraud victim statement' to your credit file, you must send a request in writing along with a copy of your police report to each of the credit reporting agencies. Your fraud victim statement should give a short summary of your circumstances and ask creditors not to extend any existing lines of credit or open any new lines of credit without contacting you personally. Remember to include your home address and a couple of telephone numbers where you can be reached most of the time. There is no charge for these services.

2. You may want to place a 'security freeze' on your credit reports to stop fraudulent accounts from being opened by the identity thief. A security freeze prevents potential creditors and other third parties from accessing credit reports without your approval. Most businesses will not open credit card or loan accounts without checking your credit history. You must contact each of the credit reporting agencies (Equifax, Experian and TransUnion) individually online or by postal mail. The security freeze is free to identity theft victims who can provide a copy of their identity theft police report. For more information, see the detailed instructions listed below entitled "Placing a Security Freeze on Your Credit Report to Protect Yourself from Identity Theft" or you can go to the credit reporting agencies' websites which are listed above.

3. Order a free copy of your credit report from each credit reporting agency. You are entitled to one free copy from each credit agency every twelve months. Monitoring your credit card statements and your credit reports are the most important steps you can take to safeguard your credit identity because you can catch errors and detect identity theft early. Equifax, Experian and TransUnion are private industry competitors who collect data independently. Thus, all three credit reports must be reviewed to ensure the accuracy and safety of your credit information. Your free credit report does not contain your credit score because it is the work product and property of the credit agencies. The Federal Trade Commission required the three national credit reporting agencies to create a joint clearinghouse for consumer requests, so ordering your credit report is very easy: Just call, write or go online to:

Annual Credit Report
P.O. Box 105281
Atlanta, GA 30348-5281
Phone: 877-322-8228 toll-free
www.AnnualCreditReport.com

4. Review your credit reports carefully. Look for unfamiliar credit card accounts or other suspicious activity, such as incorrect addresses or indications of delinquent payments. Send a 'dispute letter' to each credit reporting agency and creditor with whom fraudulent accounts have been opened. A sample dispute letter can be found on the FTC's website at: <http://www.consumer.ftc.gov/articles/0385-sample-letter-disputing-billing-errors>. Request that all fraudulent account information and inquiries be permanently removed from your credit report. You may also request the credit agencies notify those who have received your credit report in the last six months regarding disputed and erroneous information.

If you don't own a computer or need access to the Internet, there may be several places in your community that offer access at little or no charge such as; your local public library, community center, senior center, community college or university. Family or close friends may also be a resource. If computer or Internet access is not available, please contact our office and we will mail the brochures listed in this letter to you.

The involvement of the Attorney General's Office in matters of identity theft is limited. We generally do not directly investigate identity theft. In order to assist consumers who are concerned about identity theft, our office has prepared two brochures entitled, 'A Guide for Victims of Identity Theft and Identity Theft... Don't Let It Happen To You.'

The Guide for Victims of Identity Theft brochure outlines your rights, remedies and resources if you are the victim of identity theft. The brochure lists addresses and phone numbers for state and federal agencies which may be able to assist you as well. The Identity Theft... Don't Let It Happen To You brochure offers practical advice and additional precautionary steps you can take to reduce your risk of being becoming a victim of identity theft again. These brochures are available on the Attorney General's website at www.IowaAttorneyGeneral.gov.

Please be aware that the Attorney General's Office is continuing to explore the best ways to prevent identity theft and to help consumers who have been victims of identity theft. Thank you for contacting our office.

Placing a Security Freeze on Your Credit Report to Protect Yourself from Identity Theft

Each of the three major credit reporting agencies (Equifax, Experian and TransUnion) now offers consumers the ability to place a "security freeze," or deny access to, their credit reports. A security freeze means that your credit file cannot be shared with potential creditors. A security freeze can help prevent identity theft, because businesses will not open credit accounts without first checking a consumer's credit history. If your credit files are frozen, even someone who has your name and Social Security number probably will not be able to obtain credit in your name. Placing a security freeze does not affect your credit score - nor does it keep you from getting your free annual credit report.

How much does it cost?

A security freeze is free to identity theft victims who have a police report of identity theft. If you are not an identity theft victim, it will cost you $10 to place a freeze with each credit reporting agency. That's a total of $30 to freeze your credit information at each of the three major credit reporting agencies (Equifax, Experian and TransUnion).

How do I place a security freeze?

To place a freeze, you must make a separate request to each of the three credit reporting agencies. You must provide identifying information listed below. If you are an identity theft victim, you may provide a copy of your police report in lieu of the $10 fee.

Log online or write to the addresses listed below and send the documentation listed:

#1 Equifax Security Freeze

P.O. Box 105788
Atlanta, GA 30348

- Log online at https://www.freeze.equifax.com/Freeze/jsp/SFF\_PersonalIDInfo.jsp or send a request by certified mail.
- Include name, current and former addresses for the last two years, Social Security number, and date of birth.
- Copy of a utility bill, insurance or bank statement, etc., showing your name and current mailing address.
- $10.00 fee payable by check, money order, or credit card (or an identity theft report to a law enforcement agency in lieu of payment for identity theft victims). Give name of credit card, account number, expiration date, and Card Identification Number.

To learn more about the Equifax security freeze, go to www.Equifax.com

#2 Experian Security Freeze

P. O. Box 9554
Allen, TX 75013

- Log online at <https://www.experian.com/freeze/center.html> or send a request by certified mail.
- Include name, current and former addresses for the last two years, Social Security number, and date of birth.
- Enclose a copy of a government identification card, such as a driver's license, state ID card or military ID card.
- Copy of a utility bill, insurance or bank statement, etc., showing your name and current mailing address.
- $10.00 fee payable by check, money order, or credit card (or an identity theft report to a law enforcement agency in lieu of payment for identity theft victims). Give name of credit card, account number and expiration date.

To learn more about the Experian security freeze, go to www.Experian.com

#3 TransUnion Security Freeze

P. O. Box 2000
Chester, PA 19022

- Log online at <http://www.transunion.com/personal-credit/credit-disputes/credit-freezes.page> or send a request by certified mail.

- Include name, current and former addresses for the last five years, Social Security number, and date of birth.
- $10.00 fee payable by check, money order, or credit card (or an identity theft report to a law enforcement agency in lieu of payment for identity theft victims). Give name of credit card, account number and expiration date.

To learn more about the TransUnion security freeze, go to www.TransUnion.com

How long will the security freeze remain on my credit report?

A security freeze will remain on your credit report until you request it to be removed.

Can I open new credit accounts if my files are frozen?

Yes, but you have to lift the freeze to obtain a new credit card or loan. You can lift it for a period of time, or you can lift it for a specific creditor, or you can lift it permanently. After you send your letter asking for the freeze, each of the credit reporting agencies will send you a Personal Identification Number (PIN). You will also get instructions on how to lift the freeze. There are a variety of ways to lift the freeze (by mail, phone or Internet) using your PIN. The fee for lifting the freeze is $12.

What will a creditor who requests my file see if it is frozen?

A creditor will see a message or a code indicating that the file is frozen.

Can a creditor get my credit score if my file is frozen?

No. A creditor who requests your file from one of the three credit reporting agencies will only get a message or a code indicating that the file is frozen.

Will a freeze lower my credit score?

No.

Can an employer do a background check on me if I have a freeze on my credit file?

No. You would have to lift the freeze to allow a background check or to apply for insurance, just as you would to apply for credit. The process for lifting the freeze is described above.

Can I order my own credit report if my file is frozen?

Yes. To obtain a free copy of your credit report from each of the three credit reporting agencies (Equifax, Experian and TransUnion) once every 12 months, call toll-free 877-322-8228, or order online at www.AnnualCreditReport.com, or write to P.O. Box 105281, Atlanta, GA 30348-5281.

Can anyone see my credit file if it is frozen?

Your credit report can still be released to your existing creditors or to collection agencies acting on their behalf. They can use it to review or collect on your account. Other creditors may also use your information to make offers of credit-unless you opt out of receiving such offers. See below for how to opt out of pre-approved credit offers.

Government agencies may have access for collecting child support payments, taxes, or in the course of a legal proceeding.

Does freezing my file mean that I won't receive pre-approved credit offers? No. You can stop the pre-approved credit offers by calling 888-567-8688. Or you can do this online at www.optoutprescreen.com. This will stop most of the offers, the ones that go through the credit reporting agencies. It's good for five years or you can make it permanent.

Do I have to freeze my file with all three credit reporting agencies? Yes. Different credit issuers may use different credit reporting agencies. If you want to stop your credit file from being viewed, you need to freeze it with Equifax, Experian and TransUnion.

Do I have to lift the security freeze at all three credit reporting agencies? No. You can ask the potential creditor which credit reporting agency it is going to utilize. Then place a global lift (with a start and end date) or a specific third party lift with that credit reporting agency.

Does my spouse's file have to be frozen, too? Yes. Both spouses have to freeze their separate credit files, via separate letters requesting the freeze, in order to get the benefit. That means the total cost for freezing is  $\$10 \times 3$  credit reporting agencies  $\times 2$  people =  $\$60$ .

Does a security freeze guarantee that I will not be a victim of identity theft? No. While a security freeze can help keep an identity thief from opening most new accounts in your name, it will not prevent all types of identity theft (such as: criminal, driver's license, government benefit, insurance, medical, and Social Security). It will not protect you, for example, from an identity thief who uses your existing credit cards or other accounts. The freeze won't be able to stop fraudulent activity that has already taken place before the security freeze was initiated. While a security freeze may not be able to protect you in these kinds of cases, it can protect you from the vast majority of identity thefts which involve opening a new line of credit!

You can get more information about identity theft by going to the Federal Trade Commission's website at: www.ftc.gov or the Iowa Attorney General's website at: www.IowaAttorneyGeneral.gov.

HI Sue: I hope all is well with you. I am working with IOVA, the Iowa Organization for Victim Assistance, on a grant application to the USDOJ that would provide IOVA money to put together an ID theft victim coalition to help identify holes in our system in Iowa. Below is a section of my draft that describes the need. I was hoping you could take a moment to give me your thoughts on the degree to which it is accurate and complete. Thanks for any help you can provide. Bill

2) Problem Statement/Statement of Need

Identity theft remains a significant problem in Iowa and throughout the United States. The Federal Trade Commission's ("FTC") annual report for 2016 regarding complaints to its Consumer Sentinel national database showed identity theft remains a top complaint, ranking third with slightly under 400,000 complaints.[1] Prior to 2016, identity theft had been the FTC's top complaint category for 15 straight years.[2] Victimization comes in various forms. In 2016 complaints to the FTC, employment or tax-related fraud (34%) was the most common form of reported identity theft, followed by credit card fraud (33%), phone or utilities fraud (13%), and bank fraud (12%). Other significant categories of identity theft reported by victims were loan or lease fraud (7%) and government documents or benefits fraud (7%).[3] Highlighting the problem, a 2014 Bureau of Justice Statistics Report concluded that 15% of Americans aged 16 and older experienced one or more incidents of identity theft during their lifetimes.[4]

While Iowa does not rank comparatively high in the number of complaints, the state has recognized the significance of identity theft by enacting laws specifically making identity theft a crime.[5] The Iowa Legislature also passed legislation which created an identity theft "passport" program, overseen by the Crime Victims' Assistance Division of the Iowa Attorney General's office, that supplies a certificate Iowa identity theft victims may use in contacting potential lenders and in interacting with law enforcement to help establish the fact of their victimization.[6] In addition, the Consumer Protection Division of the Iowa Attorney General's Office offers a guidance booklet, both online and on paper, with helpful information to assist victims in self-help efforts by providing tools such as model correspondence victims may use in contacting credit reporting agencies, lenders, credit card issuers, and others about having been victimized.[7] The Division also offers similar materials to help Iowans avoid becoming victims of identity theft.[8]

A number of other Iowa public and private service providers assist identity theft victims by providing self-help information and by steering them to other information sources. They also help victims by directing them to local law enforcement to report the crimes. IOVA believes that while the information provided to victims is helpful, it may differ depending on which service providers victims contact. Indeed, there is no one Iowa source identified as the “place to start” victims on the road to economic and psychological recovery.

It is evident that there is significant work being done in Iowa to help identity theft victims but, to date, no agency or individual has studied the scope of the problem of identity theft in Iowa. No one has studied the degree to which Iowa public and private agencies train staff members in how best to assist identity theft victims.

No one has taken a close look at the degree to which Iowa’s 99 counties provide assistance specifically to identity theft victims. Additionally, no one has studied whether public and private resources could be more effectively and efficiently utilized to assist victims.

Finally, no agency or individual has examined whether Iowa law enforcement officials view and charge identity theft crimes uniformly or whether charging decisions vary significantly by county.

Due to these gaps in uniformity and knowledge, it is unclear whether Iowa public and private sources of assistance are efficient or effective in addressing the needs of identity theft victims.

Therefore, there is a significant need in Iowa for the creation of a collaborative coalition to review these gaps in knowledge with the goal of enhancing assistance to identity theft victims. It would be of great benefit to the people of Iowa to:

- Study the impact of identity theft in Iowa;
- Communicate with all possible victim service providers to determine the levels and types of support provided;

- Analyze the scope and quality of assistance provided identity theft victims, including the training given service provider staff; and,
- Create a state-wide coalition comprising public and private service providers to develop “best practices” standards to share with all with the goal of maximizing the quality and degree of support across the state.

3) Project Strategy/Design

IOVA proposes to address the above needs by using the funds made available through this grant to form and lead a state-wide coalition to:

- Identify the incidence of identity theft in Iowa, including the degree to which perpetrators are arrested and charged, and the outcomes of any such prosecutions;
- Identify all Iowa public and private service providers currently offering assistance to identity theft victims, including but not limited to government agencies, financial institutions, victims advocacy programs, legal clinics, state and local bar associations, Iowa Legal Aid, and state-wide professional associations, such as the Iowa Bar Association and the Iowa Insurance Exchange;
- Examine the form of assistance provided by each service provider, including but not limited to referrals and advice and whether the agency provides self-help materials or directly assists victims throughout the process of repairing damaged credit reports and taking other steps to recover;
- Determine the degree to which assistance is provided at no cost to victims;

- Specifically examine the degree to which Iowa county governments offer assistance to identity theft victims;
- Study the forms of training provided service provider staff who interact with identity theft victims;
- Study public outreach efforts of each service provider;
- Conduct a public outreach campaign to educate the public about the services available to victims of identity theft and how to avoid becoming a victim;
- Develop “best practices” tools to utilize in outreach, training and in service provision;
- Determine what other states have done to provide hands-on assistance to victims so that they get the help they need to recover from identity theft, from start through completion of the recovery process;
- Conduct a systems-analysis to determine whether greater standardization of service provision would be more effective and efficient;
- Examine whether Iowa offers standardized training for law enforcement officers on the subject of identity theft at the Iowa Law Enforcement Academy;
- Examine whether Iowa county attorneys receive training through the Iowa County Attorneys Association on best charging practices as to identity theft;
- Make recommendations for any needed changes in state law needed to better deter identity theft or assist victim recovery; and,

- Determine the need and potential for funding of increased direct assistance to individual Iowa residents throughout the period of recovering from identity theft, using volunteer or paid victim advocates.

TIPS AND ADVICE FROM THE NATION'S CONSUMER PROTECTION AGENCY

Most ID theft victims don't need a police report

by Seena Gressin
Attorney, Division of Consumer & Business Education, FTC

When it comes to reporting and recovering from identity theft, we're simplifying the process by eliminating the need for a police report in most cases.

The image shows a screenshot of the 'Identity Theft Report' form. The form is titled 'Identity Theft Report' and includes a section for 'Personal Information' with fields for Name, Address, and Phone. Below that is a section for 'Identity Theft Information' with fields for Date of Theft, Type of Theft, and Amount of Loss. The form also includes a section for 'Reporting Information' with fields for Date of Report, Method of Report, and Name of Reporting Agency. The form is a standard document used for reporting identity theft to the FTC.

PLEASE DISTRIBUTE TO THOSE WHO MAY NOT BE ON MY LIST

Dear 3rd House Friends & Family,

As most of you know, our friend and colleague John Pederson suffered a stroke during the early morning hours of March 16th.

John is working very hard every day at physical, occupational, and speech therapy. He continues to make progress, but it is impossible to know how soon and to what extent he will regain mobility on his left side. What we do know is that John and Cyndi will be confronted with many expenses throughout John's therapy and recovery that are not covered by insurance.

Many of you have asked "what can I do?".

In order to help John and Cyndi cover expenses associated with his rehabilitation (think home modifications and equipment, not golf), the John Pederson Charitable Needs Trust has been established. Contributions to the trust are not deductible, but this type of trust allows anyone wishing to contribute money towards John's rehab costs to do so without it being considered personal income or a gift to him for tax purposes. I would like to thank and acknowledge Matt Eide, the Brown Winick Law Firm, and Gary Dickey for their efforts to establish and maintain this trust.

We have scheduled a kickoff event to raise the initial funds for John's trust. See details below:

WHAT: John Pederson Charitable Needs Trust Kickoff Fundraising Event

WHEN: Monday, April 10th, 6:00-8:00PM

WHERE: Wooly's in the East Village, 504 E. Locust St., Des Moines 50309

Food & Beverages provided. Make checks payable to the John Pederson Charitable Needs Trust. No donation is too large or too small. Please forward to others.

Please plan to join us and thank you in advance for supporting John and Cyndi. If you cannot make the event, you may bring checks to the capitol or mail them to the below address.

Are you by any chance available to meet with him at that time to discuss the Fund, your concerns, and what it might be able to withstand? Thank you!

I really like the draft of the language. Other states have added a requirement that for "registration" purposes, the protective order application form, should be modified to include a box where a victim can "check" and notate he/she would like to be registered to receive notification of service and expiration. Is it possible to add that sentence as well to the last part of this language?

Hi Janelle and Robert,
Ed Cook with LSA contacted me to ask about paragraph 8 below. Would it make sense to say, "In the event of a homicide..." rather than "victim's death"? Or is there a reason why it should continue to say "victim's death"? Thank you!

8. In the event of a victim's death, reasonable charges incurred for counseling the victim's spouse, children, parents, siblings, or persons cohabiting with or related by blood or affinity to the victim if the counseling services are provided by a psychologist licensed under chapter 154B, a victim counselor as defined in section 915.20A, subsection 1, or an individual holding at least a master's degree in social work or counseling and guidance, and reasonable charges incurred by such persons for medical care counseling provided by a psychiatrist licensed under chapter 148. The allowable charges under this subsection shall not exceed five thousand dollars per person.

9. In the event of a homicide, reasonable charges incurred for health care for the victim's spouse; child, foster child, stepchild, son-in-law, or daughter-in-law; parent, foster parent, or stepparent; sibling, foster sibling, stepsibling, brother-in-law, or sister-in-law; grandparent; grandchild; aunt, uncle, or first cousin; legal ward; or person cohabiting with the victim, not to exceed three thousand dollars per survivor.

10. In the event of a homicide, loss of income from work that, but for the death of the victim, would have been earned by the victim's spouse; child, foster child, stepchild, son-in-law, or daughter-in-law; parent, foster parent, or stepparent; sibling, foster sibling, stepsibling, brother-in-law, or sister-in-law; grandparent;

Senator Kinney could stay in town and meet at 12:00. He has cattle to feed and needs to be home by 4:00. Shall we plan on that?

Cathy,

We have interviews scheduled that day, some with candidates traveling in from out of state that would be difficult to reschedule. Is there any chance we could meet a little earlier-9am? or we could squeeze it in at noon, or at 3:30.

Let me know if any of these times can work.

Thank you!

Hi Janelle and Robert,
I shared your concerns regarding the Victim Compensation Fund and its ability to absorb additional costs with Senator Kinney. He is coming to Des Moines on December 7th and is available at 10:30. Are you by any chance available to meet with him at that time to discuss the Fund, your concerns, and what it might be able to withstand? Thank you!

Hi Janelle and Rhonda,

I do have some questions about the process you have proposed relating to victim notification and the service of protective orders.

1. Is your intent to expand the current automated victim notification system established in Code section 915.10A to include all information relating to civil protective orders issued under chapters 236 and new proposed chapter 236A? You are not including no-contact orders issued in criminal cases? Such information includes all information relating to when the protective orders are served and when those orders will expire, and includes an additional notification requirement 30 days prior to the expiration date, correct? The idea is to get real-time information when the orders are actually served? All protective orders or just ex parte protective orders?
2. Local law enforcement and other government agencies (can you specify?) who serve these orders must enter this information into what specific electronic systems? The Court's EDMA or some other electronic management system accessible only to law enforcement? The information must be entered within 24 hours of service on the respondent or the agency serving the order must contact the clerk of court when no additional service attempts are planned by the agency (can you explain this?). Some clerks of court do not have access to the statewide victim notification system?
3. How does the information connect with the current automated victim notification system?

Thanks for your help.

Rachele

Proposed language amending 915.10A:

"An automated notification system shall be established within the department of justice to assist plaintiffs and advocates regarding civil and criminal protective orders issued pursuant to Chapter 236 & 236A; to be informed upon service and 30 days prior to expiration of protective order. The system shall disseminate the information to registered users through telephonic, electronic, or other means of access.

The local law enforcement agency or any other government agency responsible for serving ex parte orders of protection shall enter service information into the court system, or secure electronic database intended for law enforcement use, within twenty-four hours of service of the ex parte order on the respondent, or shall notify the county clerk when no additional service attempts are planned by the agency. The provisions of this section shall only apply to those county clerks able to access a statewide victim notification system designed to provide notification of service of orders of protection.

Upon entering service of the order, the data will be electronically transmitted from the Iowa Criminal Justice Information System (CJIS) to the notification database allowing for dissemination of data to registered users."

We modified the language, utilizing existing language from a few other states who have similar systems. Please let us know if you have any questions, or concerns.

I really like the draft of the language. Other states have added a requirement that for "registration" purposes, the protective order application form, should be modified to include a box where a victim can "check" and notate he/she would like to be registered to receive notification of service and expiration. Is it possible to add that sentence as well to the last part of this language?

When we spoke earlier this week regarding Iowa's Civil Investigative Demand, you asked us to provide some guidance as to the (1) government entities and (2) regulatory/oversight agencies and boards referenced in CID Requests 15 and 22, respectively. Below are the Requests at issue and a list of entities, acronyms, domain names, and other information we ask Respondents to use in beginning a search for communications and documents responsive to each Request.

This email does not waive our original Requests. We reserve the right to seek compliance with the full range of the Requests, including adding other entities, agencies, etc. that fall within their scope

Feel free to contact me if you would like to discuss this further. Thank you-

Gretchen,

When we spoke earlier this week regarding Iowa’s Civil Investigative Demand, you asked us to provide some guidance as to the (1) government entities and (2) regulatory/oversight agencies and boards referenced in CID Requests 15 and 22, respectively. Below are the Requests at issue and a list of entities, acronyms, domain names, and other information we ask Respondents to use in beginning a search for communications and documents responsive to each Request.

This email does not waive our original Requests. We reserve the right to seek compliance with the full range of the Requests, including adding other entities, agencies, etc. that fall within their scope

Feel free to contact me if you would like to discuss this further. Thank you-

Amy

Gretchen,

When we spoke earlier this week regarding Iowa's Civil Investigative Demand, you asked us to provide some guidance as to the (1) government entities and (2) regulatory/oversight agencies and boards referenced in CID Requests 15 and 22, respectively. Below are the Requests at issue and a list of entities, acronyms, domain names, and other information we ask Respondents to use in beginning a search for communications and documents responsive to each Request.

This email does not waive our original Requests. We reserve the right to seek compliance with the full range of the Requests, including adding other entities, agencies, etc. that fall within their scope

Feel free to contact me if you would like to discuss this further. Thank you-

Amy

Amy,

Thank you again for this guidance. We have shared this with Purdue to incorporate into the searches. We have also conferred with Purdue about the date range covered by your CID and would like to set up a call with you and others on our team to discuss further. Are the three of you available for a call on Tuesday afternoon, March 21st, after 1:30 Central?

Thanks much,

Gretchen,

When we spoke earlier this week regarding Iowa's Civil Investigative Demand, you asked us to provide some guidance as to the (1) government entities and (2) regulatory/oversight agencies and boards referenced in CID Requests 15 and 22, respectively. Below are the Requests at issue and a list of entities, acronyms, domain names, and other information we ask Respondents to use in beginning a search for communications and documents responsive to each Request.

This email does not waive our original Requests. We reserve the right to seek compliance with the full range of the Requests, including adding other entities, agencies, etc. that fall within their scope

Feel free to contact me if you would like to discuss this further. Thank you-occupational licensing threatens economic liberty. Unnecessary or overbroad restrictions erect significant barriers and impose costs that harm American workers, employers, consumers, and our economy as a whole, with no measurable benefits to consumers or society.

Amy

"This is an important moment for economic liberty. Governors, state legislators, and many other stakeholders want to move forward to remove or narrow occupational licensing regulations and open doors to opportunity, enhancing competition and innovation," said Acting Chairman Ohlhausen. "The FTC's Economic Liberty Task Force has moved quickly to create a website that will gather many existing resources, from the FTC and elsewhere, into a central repository for stakeholders. It will be a dynamic resource and will grow to incorporate additional work by the task force and others in this important area."

Amy,

We will be joined by others from Morgan Lewis, Tim Shea and Nick Gess. Could we plan on 11:00 am Central on Thursday, March 23rd? If so, we will circulate a dial-in.

Thanks much,
Gretchen

Gretchen,

Thanks for your email. Unfortunately, Tuesday afternoon does not work from our end. We are fairly open on Thursday starting at 9:15 (except from 12-1) and Friday 9-12. Is there a time in those windows when you and Sarah are available?

Thank you again for this guidance. We have shared this with Purdue to incorporate into the searches. We have also conferred with Purdue about the date range covered by your CID and would like to set up a call with you and others on our team to discuss further. Are the three of you available for a call on Tuesday afternoon, March 21st, after 1:30 Central?

Thanks much,

Gretchen,

When we spoke earlier this week regarding Iowa's Civil Investigative Demand, you asked us to provide some guidance as to the (1) government entities and (2) regulatory/oversight agencies and boards referenced in CID Requests 15 and 22, respectively. Below are the Requests at issue and a list of entities, acronyms, domain names, and other information we ask Respondents to use in beginning a search for communications and documents responsive to each Request.

This email does not waive our original Requests. We reserve the right to seek compliance with the full range of the Requests, including adding other entities, agencies, etc. that fall within their scope

Feel free to contact me if you would like to discuss this further. Thank you-

Amy

Gretchen,

Thanks for your email. Unfortunately, Tuesday afternoon does not work from our end. We are fairly open on Thursday starting at 9:15 (except from 12-1) and Friday 9-12. Is there a time in those windows when you and Sarah are available?

Amy

Amy,

Thank you again for this guidance. We have shared this with Purdue to incorporate into the searches. We have also conferred with Purdue about the date range covered by your CID and would like to set up a call with you and others on our team to discuss further. Are the three of you available for a call on Tuesday afternoon, March 21st, after 1:30 Central?

Thanks much,

Gretchen,

When we spoke earlier this week regarding Iowa’s Civil Investigative Demand, you asked us to provide some guidance as to the (1) government entities and (2) regulatory/oversight agencies and boards referenced in CID Requests 15 and 22, respectively. Below are the Requests at issue and a list of entities, acronyms, domain names, and other information we ask Respondents to use in beginning a search for communications and documents responsive to each Request.

This email does not waive our original Requests. We reserve the right to seek compliance with the full range of the Requests, including adding other entities, agencies, etc. that fall within their scope

Feel free to contact me if you would like to discuss this further. Thank you-

Amy

The task force addresses regulatory hurdles to job growth, including the proliferation of occupational licensing. Nearly 30 percent of American jobs require a license today, up from less than five percent in the 1950s. For some professions, occupational licensing is necessary to protect the public against legitimate health and safety concerns. But in many situations the expansion of

Beth,

Good to hear from you. Carolyn is indeed a force of nature; she's a good partner to have here in Iowa.

We would be happy to host the folks from the Dream Center during the week of the 24th here in Des Moines. AG Miller is traveling Wednesday-Friday of that week, but has either Monday (basically all day, beginning late morning) or Tuesday afternoon free. Please let me know what time works best for you on those days. Once we get the time nailed down, we can invite the rest of the EC and Tom Perrelli. I doubt any of them will make it to Des Moines, but certainly we'll want people to participate by phone.

Thanks very much for setting this up. We're looking forward to the meeting.

Hi Nathan. Hope you are doing well. I was speaking with Carolyn from the Student Aid Commission at the annual NASASPS conference and she mentioned how well your two offices work together. I cannot believe how much work her office does, though I am learning that is very true about many state offices!

I am writing to follow-up on your request for a meeting with the folks from the Dream Center entity that has entered into the agreement to acquire the EDMC-owned actively enrolling schools. They are booked this week with travel and meetings unrelated to the transaction as well as WASC site visits (plus the holiday). Next week, there is a site visit/meeting with the North Carolina Board of Governors and a meeting with the accreditation committee of the ABA (for Argosy's law school), as well as a Dream Center Foundation board meeting that make them generally unavailable.

How does the week of the 24th look? We actually were hoping to do an in-person meeting, perhaps in Iowa or, as we did for some of the other meetings, Chicago? It is completely up to you, of course, but we are looking forward to talking with you and starting to build the lines of communication that EDMC built during the negotiations. Would Tom Perrelli also participate? Let me know your thoughts. Thanks so much.

Hi Nathan. Hope you are doing well. I was speaking with Carolyn from the Student Aid Commission at the annual NASASPS conference and she mentioned how well your two offices work together. I cannot believe how much work her office does, though I am learning that is very true about many state offices!

I am writing to follow-up on your request for a meeting with the folks from the Dream Center entity that has entered into the agreement to acquire the EDMC-owned actively enrolling schools. They are booked this week with travel and meetings unrelated to the transaction as well as WASC site visits (plus the holiday). Next week, there is a site visit/meeting with the North Carolina Board of Governors and a meeting with the accreditation committee of the ABA (for Argosy's law school), as well as a Dream Center Foundation board meeting that make them generally unavailable.

How does the week of the 24th look? We actually were hoping to do an in-person meeting, perhaps in Iowa or, as we did for some of the other meetings, Chicago? It is completely up to you, of course, but we are looking forward to talking with you and starting to build the lines of communication that EDMC built during the negotiations. Would Tom Perrelli also participate? Let me know your thoughts. Thanks so much.

Best,
Beth

Hi Nathan. Sorry this did not happen as expected in April. I have asked the Dream Center folks for dates the third and fourth weeks in May, so I am confident we can get it on the schedule very soon.

Are you free tomorrow afternoon to talk about the refund policy? I'll make sure we have an appropriate person to discuss the tax implications. Thanks, as always.

Beth,

I am following up on the below email. It appears that AG Miller is in town and relatively available the third and fourth weeks in May, if you could find a time that works then. We're looking forward to setting up the meeting.

Also, I had a question about EDMC's debt forgiveness and tax implications, if you have five minutes to spare sometime next week.

Have a good weekend,

Good to hear from you. Carolyn is indeed a force of nature; she's a good partner to have here in Iowa.

We would be happy to host the folks from the Dream Center during the week of the 24th here in Des Moines. AG Miller is traveling Wednesday-Friday of that week, but has either Monday (basically all day, beginning late morning) or Tuesday afternoon free. Please let me know what time works best for you on those days. Once we get the time nailed down, we can invite the rest of the EC and Tom Perrelli. I doubt any of them will make it to Des Moines, but certainly we'll want people to participate by phone.

Thanks very much for setting this up. We're looking forward to the meeting.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Lieutenant Governor to Serve as Governor, But Lacks Authority to Appoint Lieutenant, Attorney General Opinion Concludes

Formal opinion responds to request by state senator as Governor Branstad prepares to resign for ambassadorship

DES MOINES – Attorney General Tom Miller Monday issued a formal legal opinion stating that if a governor resigns, the lieutenant governor becomes governor for all intents and purposes, but does not have legal authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Sen. David Johnson, I-Ocheyedan, requested the opinion following Governor Terry Branstad’s announcement that, if confirmed by the U.S. Senate, he will serve as U.S. ambassador to China.

The 23-page opinion, following extensive legal and historical research, concludes, “...the powers and duties of the office of Governor fall upon the lieutenant governor.” The conclusion is based on an Iowa Constitution provision addressing a governor’s resignation, which states, “...the powers and duties of the office...shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.” Under that provision, the opinion adds, “The lieutenant governor takes on this authority because she is lieutenant governor.”

Significantly, according to Miller, Article IV, section 1 provides that “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.”

While the “the lieutenant governor becomes governor and has the title of Governor,” the opinion further adds that that person does not have constitutional authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor. “In other words, upon a governor’s resignation, the lieutenant governor will hold both the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. There is no vacancy to be filled,” according to the opinion.

“This opinion conveys that, in a sense, the two offices merge,” Miller said. “This is consistent with numerous cases in other states that addressed this question,” Miller added. “It is also consistent with a close reading of the Iowa governor’s succession provision—Article IV, section 19 of the Iowa Constitution, which establishes a precise order of gubernatorial succession without providing for the appointment of a lieutenant governor.”

Miller's opinion notes that in all four previous instances when an Iowa governor resigned or died while in office, the lieutenant governor was always considered governor, but never appointed or named a new lieutenant governor. The opinion also concludes, "The framers intended that those in the gubernatorial line of succession be elected."

At the federal level, prior to Congress amending the U.S. Constitution in 1967 to establish that the vice president becomes president and grants the president authority to appoint a new vice president with Congressional approval, no vice president who assumed the powers and duties of a president who died while in office appointed a new vice president.

The formal opinion departs from a public statement Miller's office issued in December, following an informal legal review in response to media inquiries, which stated the office concurred with "Governor Branstad's conclusion that...in her capacity as Governor, Governor Reynolds will have the authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor."

The December statement was based, in part, on an Iowa Code section addressing vacancies of office holders. Miller's formal opinion concludes this statute does not apply when a governor resigns and the powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

About Attorney General Opinions

A formal attorney general opinion addresses legal questions relating to a public official's duties by interpreting laws and offering legal guidance.

While not a legal precedent, a formal attorney general opinion is similar to one and stands until a court or later opinion overrules it or new legislation is enacted to change a statute in question. Opinions are not legally binding, but courts generally give them careful consideration and deference.

Subject: Meeting with Dream Center Education Holdings

Hi Nathan. Hope you are doing well. I was speaking with Carolyn from the Student Aid Commission at the annual NASASPS conference and she mentioned how well your two offices work together. I cannot believe how much work her office does, though I am learning that is very true about many state offices!

I am writing to follow-up on your request for a meeting with the folks from the Dream Center entity that has entered into the agreement to acquire the EDMC-owned actively enrolling schools. They are booked this week with travel and meetings unrelated to the transaction as well as WASC site visits (plus the holiday). Next week, there is a site visit/meeting with the North Carolina Board of Governors and a meeting with the accreditation committee of the ABA (for Argosy's law school), as well as a Dream Center Foundation board meeting that make them generally unavailable.

How does the week of the 24th look? We actually were hoping to do an in-person meeting, perhaps in Iowa or, as we did for some of the other meetings, Chicago? It is completely up to you, of course, but we are looking forward to talking with you and starting to build the lines of communication that EDMC built during the negotiations. Would Tom Perrelli also participate? Let me know your thoughts. Thanks so much.

Best,
Beth

"This case is not about Tracey Griesbaum," George Carroll, an assistant Iowa Attorney General representing the university, told the jury during his closing argument Wednesday morning. Instead, Carroll said, the jury should focus on Meyer's "unprofessional" actions. DES MOINES - A Polk County jury started deliberations shortly after noon Wednesday in a high-profile employment discrimination case that's given Iowans an off-the-field, sometimes locker-room look at the University of Iowa Athletics Department.

deciding to maintain protections for state-sanctioned medical marijuana programs in the era of a Department of Justice being led by Attorney General Jeff Sessions means that patients ailing from conditions that range from cancer to PTSD can breathe a temporary sigh of relief. Once approved, states will be able to continue to service and implement these programs without fear of federal incursion until September 30 of this year. Yet, this action is only a stopgap measure at best. Ultimately, Congress

The European Commission has written to EU privacy regulators to express concern over their interpretation of the data portability clause in the General Data Protection Regulation. Specifically, the Commission appears to be worried that the regulators have interpreted too broad a scope for the GDPR's Article 20, David Meyer reports in this exclusive for The Privacy Advisor. The Article 29 Working Party issued guidelines earlier this month in which it said "the right to data portability covers data provided knowingly and actively by the data subject as well as the personal data generated by his or her activity." The guidelines went on to specify that this could include "observed data provided by the data subject by virtue of the use of the service or the device," such as the subject's search history, traffic data and location data – and even "raw data such as the heartbeat tracked by a wearable device."

Allon Bar: How to make privacy usable

Helping to protect user privacy comes in many forms, whether through law, policy, or design, yet the link between design and policy is a strong one. "Coming from a human rights background," writes independent consultant Allon Bar, "I have become fascinated by the link between design and privacy." During the course of his work, Bar has found that "users are generally left in the dark about what tech companies do with their data." They also, he says, "have little control" of what is collected and used. In this post for Privacy Tech, Bar discusses "a few of the many ways in which design choices can enable different kinds of privacy approaches, focusing on informing users and giving them better control."

The Hamburg administrative court refused to suspend an order made by Hamburg Data Protection Commissioner Johannes Caspar regarding the data sharing agreement between Facebook and WhatsApp, ZDNet reports. Facebook sought to have the Hamburg court reverse Caspar's ruling to stop the data sharing agreement within Germany. The court shot down the social media company's request, with Facebook stating it will appeal the specific portion of the decision. "This is good news for the many millions of people who use the WhatsApp messenger service in Germany every day," said Caspar in a statement. "They are not defenceless." The court did rule Facebook does not have to immediately delete the data of German WhatsApp users it has already collected.

A group of 38 technology, civil liberties and consumer rights organizations have written a letter to the Federal Communications Commission asking the agency to eliminate a rule requiring phone companies to hold onto call records for 18 months, Morning Consult reports. The letter, addressed to FCC Chairman Ajit Pai among others, said the rule "violates customers' privacy rights by requiring carriers to retain sensitive information about millions of Americans who are under no suspicion of wrongdoing." The groups said the data retention rule is outdated, as few carriers still use per-call billing. Meanwhile, the Federal Trade Commission is seeking to overturn a federal appellate court

Survey: Consumers believe AI could benefit privacy, cybersecurity

A survey released by PwC finds nearly two-thirds of American consumers are accepting of advances in artificial intelligence and machine learning, CyberScoop reports. Of the respondents, 63 percent believe AI will “help solve complex problems that plague modern societies,” with 68 percent citing cybersecurity and privacy as specific areas where AI could be beneficial. “Despite the doomsday scenarios painted by Hollywood and news media, most consumers are optimistic about AI’s potential for good,” the report states. Concerns do surround the use of AI, as 46 percent said AI will harm individuals by taking away jobs, while 23 percent said the technology will have more serious negative implications.

Report: 1.1 billion identities stolen in 2016

Symantec’s Internet Security Threat Report found 7.1 billion identities have been compromised in data breaches around the world over the past eight years, Livemint reports. In 2016, nearly 1.1 billion identities were stolen across the globe. The 2016 number is a large increase from the 563.8 million stolen in 2015, despite the fact fewer data breaches occurred last year. The U.S. suffered the largest amount of data breaches in 2016 by country, having suffered 1,023 of the 1,209 incidents recorded. Ransomware was found to be a big problem around the world, with an average of 35,000 attacks occurring during the beginning of 2016, with an increase to more than 40,000 by the end of the year.

Are Unroll.me disclosures symptomatic of larger privacy policy problem?

After reports indicating email service Unroll.me had sold information from users' Lyft receipts to Uber, backlash has been swift – and rightfully so, some argue in a report from The Washington Post. While Unroll.me's privacy policy reads that it "may collect, use, transfer, sell, and disclose non-personal information for any purpose," CEO Jojo Hedaya apologized for not being "explicit" enough about the company's policies. Privacy analysts contend the situation exemplifies many issues with privacy policies. "There's a little Silicon Valley groupthink at work here: They think users understand more about how the data industry works than they do," said the University of Minnesota's William McGeveran, CIPP/US. Unroll.me's situation indicates that privacy policies must be on the "floor, not the ceiling" for companies' disclosures, he added. FTC receives complaint from Access Now over sex toy security

Access Now has filed a formal complaint with the Federal Trade Commission alleging sex toy company Svakom's internet-connected device has "grossly inadequate security," Access Now announced in a press report. The toy in question is the "Siime Eye," a vibrator with embedded camera "that can be controlled via an app on a smartphone, tablet, or computer," the report states. "Selling an easily hackable sex toy is the epitome of an unfair and deceptive trade practice," said Access Now U.S. Policy Manager Amie Stepanovich. "The Federal Trade Commission must send a clear message to the adult Internet of Things industry that bad security will not be tolerated." These security issues are particularly egregious considering the nature of the device, spurring "legal claims of rape, harassment, or assault," the report adds.

sense that I am just spinning my wheels trying to keep juggling all the balls in the air. PRESSURE.

I have learned that April, coincidentally, is Stress Awareness Month. Recognized since 1992, each April, health care professionals and health promotion experts across the country join forces to increase public awareness about both the causes and cures for our modern stress epidemic. We also see various tornado and severe weather drills at this time each spring, to try to prepare us for the possibility of a natural disaster. But what prepares us to deal with the PRESSURE of the practice of law?

While I'm sure each occupation has its stressors, we know all too well the mounting pressure we face in our practice, whether private practice, in house, government, or elsewhere. The demand for faster, less costly legal advice, coupled with the blessing and curse of technology that allows us to be connected and accessible 24/7 sends thousands of lawyers each year into a tailspin of stress and pressure. Add in family, health, community stressors and even the uncertainty of our national security and changes in politics and government-it's a recipe for disaster that no April tornado drill or disaster preparedness training can touch.

It is no surprise to scan the Iowa Supreme Court's disciplinary decisions and find that many lawyers who find themselves in front of the Grievance Commission have succumbed to the pressure and sought solace in controlled substances, only deepening the downward spiral. The ABA reports that more than 50% of all disciplinary cases involve impaired lawyers. Lawyers abuse alcohol at a 50-80% higher rate than the general population.

The PCBA and ARAG are proud to sponsor our annual Law Day competition to give Polk County K-12 students an opportunity to showcase their creative talents, learn about the law and have the opportunity to win prizes! This year's competition included coloring, poster, and essay categories for kindergarten through fifth grade students in Polk County; and visual arts, music and performing arts, essay, and poetry categories for sixth through twelfth grade students.

This year's theme, The Fourteenth Amendment: Transforming American Democracy, provided the opportunity to explore the many ways that the Fourteenth Amendment has reshaped American law and society.

Student winners will be honored at the PCBA & ARAG Law Day Awards Luncheon on May 9 at the Downtown Marriott Hotel featuring keynote speaker The Hon. Romonda Belcher, District Associate Judge, Fifth Judicial District. Click here for details and to download the reservation form.

Consider becoming a Law Day sponsor

Please consider supporting our Law Day program and enriching the experience for Polk County area students. For just $100, you or your firm can sponsor a winning student,

Christopher J. Jessen has joined Belin McCormick, P.C. as an associate in the litigation practice group. Christopher will handle a broad range of litigation matters with a particular emphasis on complex commercial litigation. He joins the law firm after serving as the judicial clerk for the Honorable Christopher McDonald of the Iowa Court of Appeals. Christopher is a 2016 graduate of the Drake University Law School where he earned Order of the Coif recognition, graduating with highest honors. He was Research Editor of the Drake Law Review.

Something for everyone at Spring CLE

You won't want to miss our Spring General Practice CLE on Friday, April 28, at the Downtown Marriott Hotel, where a wide variety of important topics will be covered.

Kudos

David Luginbill

Attorney David Luginbill has become a Fellow of the American College of Trial Lawyers, one of the premier legal associations in North America. The induction ceremony took place recently before an audience of approximately 600 persons during the 2017 Spring Meeting of the College in Boca Raton, Florida. David is a partner in the firm of Ahlers & Cooney, P.C. With 40 years of litigation experience, he has lead counsel experience trying complex and difficult high-stakes litigation and routinely handles litigation through trial and/or appeal for clients in a wide range of litigation matters. He has represented national and international clients, as well as clients located in Iowa. David received his law degree from Drake University.

This event is FREE for current members, but there is a $25 charge for printed materials (note that the materials will also be posted in the Members Only area of our website following the event). We have received approval for 7.5 State CLE credit hours with 1 hour Ethics and 1 hour Federal credit.

Click here to download the registration form and the agenda.

You are cordially invited

As reported in the February 15, 2017 issue of the Bond Buyer's Midwest Yearend Review, Ahlers & Cooney, P.C. ranked No. 1 in Iowa for Bond Counsel: Competitive Issues for 2016, with $1,599,700,000 in total issuance. See: http://cdn.bondbuyer.com/media/pdfs/BB021517\_Mid\_West.pdf. With one exception, Ahlers & Cooney, P.C. has led the state of Iowa as bond counsel on competitive issues since 2006.

Don't miss an opportunity to share your news and special announcements with fellow PCBA Members! Click here.

The PCBA Bench & Bar Committee invites you to attend our spring social on Tuesday, May 2, from 4:30 to 7:30 p.m., at the ISBA Conference Center, 625 East Court Avenue in Des Moines. Please join us in recognizing the newly appointed judges. Complimentary Hors d'Oeuvres and beverages will be served.

You won't want to miss June luncheon

Join us on Tuesday, June 13, at noon for our annual law clerk luncheon. Our speakers are Pat McNulty from Greffe & Sidney, PLC and Theresa Weeg, Iowa Attorney General's Office (retired) who will share their experiences working with the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia.

The luncheon will be held at the Wakonda Club, 3915 Fleur Dr., in Des Moines, and the cost is $25 with advance reservation and $27 at the door. Please note that seating is limited and we may not be able to accommodate walk ins, so be sure to make your reservation early. Click here for complete details and a reservation form.

Our box office is now open

One of the many benefits of belonging to the

Polk County Bar Association is access to discounted tickets on top-quality Broadway productions at the Des Moines Civic Center. Each year, we purchase season tickets - and we will also buy group tickets if there are enough people interested for a particular show - and we pass the savings on to you!

Take a look at the shows listed below. If you are interested in attending, just email Sonja Diener and let her know which shows and how many tickets for each show you would like. You don't have to buy tickets for every show - you can pick and choose. This is not an obligation to buy. It just gives us an idea of how many group tickets, in addition to the season's tickets, we will need to buy. If you have questions, just call our office at (515) 697-7880.

Willis Broadway series tickets

All shows are at 7:30 p.m. on a Thursday. $73.50 each:

Oct. 12, 2017 - Something Rotten

Nov. 2, 2017 - The Color Purple

Dec. 7, 2017 - Waitress

Feb. 22, 2018 - On Your Feet! The Emilio & Gloria Estefan Musical

April 5, 2018 - The Humans

Please note that Hamilton is SOLD OUT. All the tickets that we can receive are spoken for. We hope to be able to buy more tickets, but that is not guaranteed. If you would like to be put on our very long list of people interested in tickets, just send an email to sdiener@pcbaonline.org. No more than three tickets per person please. And again, there is no guarantee that we will be able to buy more tickets.

Add On Shows

All shows are at 7:30 p.m. We will buy these only if enough people are interested. We don't know the price or location of seats yet.

Friday, Jan. 26, 2018 - Stomp

Friday, March 9, 2018 - Chicago

Thursday, April 19, 2018 - Les Miserables

Saturday, May 12, 2018 - Leslie Odom Jr. in Concert with the Des Moines Symphony

Golf with us for a good cause

It's time to dust off those golf clubs and join us for the PCBA's annual Bench and Bar Golf Outing to benefit the Volunteer Lawyers Project. This year's event will be held on Friday, June 9, at the Waveland Golf Course in Des Moines. Registration begins at noon with a shotgun start at 1 p.m.

If you register before May 6, you can take advantage of our early bird special and pay only $100 per person, which includes green fees, cart, and dinner following golf. You can also order a box lunch for $10.

Click here for details and to download the registration form.

Why not become a golf sponsor?

This year, the PCBA Volunteer Lawyers Project is offering two sponsorship levels for our Bench & Bar Golf Tournament. The Gold level is an exclusive hole sponsorship which includes one large sign at each hole and one Foursome as part of the package. The cost is $1,000. Only 18 Gold sponsorships are available. The Silver level sponsorship is $500 and includes signage on display at the tournament starting box.

Notice of Magistrate vacancies

There are nine magistrate vacancies in judicial election district 5-C (Polk County) as a result of the July 31, 2017 expiration of the terms of office of the six current magistrates and the allocation of three additional positions to Polk County. The term of office of a magistrate is four years. The terms of office of the magistrates appointed to fill these vacancies will begin on August 1, 2017 and expire on July 31, 2021. Appointments to fill these vacancies will be made on or before June 1, 2017. The deadline for submitting applications is Tuesday, May 2, at 4 p.m. Click here for complete details.

Ryan,

As head of both the Iowa Dept of Ed. and your relatively new, taxpayer funded Sector Partnership Leadership Counsel, we look to your leadership. Your predecessors have left taxpayers and their families out to hang in the past. Hundreds lost time and money dealing with the CIETC scandal. From there many more got ripped off in one of the most outrageous educational scams in Iowa at Vatterott College. Yet your department and the Iowa Attorney office did nothing. (Time for Iowa Term Limits?)

At the time Sen. Tom Harkin's office was inundated with Vatterott complaints. Have you read the results of his two year investigation of Private Colleges? Have you read the Executive summary of this report? Either way, you already know the level of corruption and why the IAG will go after ITT and La James, but won't go against Vatterott and the infamous Apollo Group. The sale of Vatterott to TA is phony (Please IGA...don't respond. The useless letter writing game you play has its reputation with every lawyer in town, especially Vatterott's firm.)

Nathan Blake

Will taxpayers continue to get the short end of the educational stick while the state and the corporate friends prosper? $110 million of tax money to a fertilizer company? Hy vee got $7.5 million of our money to remodel their corporate offices? Can I have their old indoor waterfall? The list of corruption here in this state keeps getting longer. .

Now that Iowa has chosen to mix taxpayer money with corporate welfare, not to mention all the business people on your counsel, all are now in position of public accountability no matter what the excuse.

Everything in the following email is back up with documentation, all the way to being able to produce the letters that back up what I state other have said. No, "He said, she said."

This is only the tip of the iceberg. I'm working on letting everyone know what is happening to low-income workers in Iowas manufacturing sector in what I call the New American Sweat Shops.

Feel free to call or meet with me.

Subject: Corruption In A Caucus Town?

Over a decade ago three state and city people went to prison for what US Attorney Matt Whitaker called "Iowa's most significant public corruption and public fraud cases in Iowa."

CIETC scandal must not be forgotten

wfcourier.com

There will be some appeals winding through the judicial process, but the sentencing of John Bargman III last week is helping bring a conclusion to the stunning Central Iowa Employment

I believe that I can, beyond a reasonable doubt, show you the exact same thing is currently going on again. If you look closely you will see that several city and state officials that were involved then, but somehow (in my opinion, since I was there) escaped prosecution, are involved now.

I'm sure many of you already know that manufacturing outpaces agriculture here in Iowa in terms of the money produced in the people employed. While there are lots of related tax grants and corporate welfare involved in this area, very little of it seems to get the average Iowa taxpayer and small companies as intended.

US Department of Labor released millions of dollars in grant money to community colleges in central Iowa including Des Moines Area Community College. (DMAACC) immediately DMAACC and Iowa Workforce, courtesy of Gov. Branstad, stepped in and took over the money.

The last time the Feds let go of a major amount of money to DMAACC and Iowa Workforce, three people ended up going to prison. Two were connected to Iowa Workforce, Ramona Cunningham and John Bargman, and one

City Councilman, Archie Brooks. For those of us that were there for the Central Iowa Education Training Consortium scandal, I can tell you that the "David A. Vaudt from the Auditor's Office for the State of Iowa," whistleblower story is a cover-up and the truth of what happened is verifiable. The only difference, in my opinion, of what happened then and what is going on with the new Consortium is they become a little more polished and (In MY Opinion) this level of fraud has more acceptable to both elected and appointed officials here in the State of Iowa.

Bottom line is each time, both then and now, state employees, public unions, and the corporations that thrive survive on corporate welfare all benefit at the expense of the taxpayer.

Once DMACC and the Iowa Workforce got a hold the grant money they started what is called the Workforce Training Academy. They leased billboards all over the metro advertising free training in the manufacturing sector. There is no brick and mortar Workforce Trading Academy Its Workforce using DMACC facilities, thereby doubling the bureaucratic overhead and lessening the amount of money that actually makes it to the tax payers and their families and employers desperately in need of the training this grant money was intended for.

The irony seems be lost on this new State Aristocracy. Without the taxes that this middle class provides, how can their lifestyle be maintained? According to the US Dept. of Labor, Iowa's public sector workers enjoy an income that is 50% higher than those comparable in the private sector In fact, the DOL states that Iowa has the largest income gap in America. The California Policy center recently released a study showing that 26% of retired government workers make more than average currently working private sector employees.

Immediately Workforce and DMACC went to work training prisoners and convicted felons state-of-the-art welding and manufacturing techniques that were not being taught to the average Iowa taxpayer who walked in the DMACC door and enrolled in the very same program. While this may be seen as an act of benevolence, there is actually big money in this part of Iowa's prison industry. Iowa cooperation and businesses line up to hire these cons over regular Iowa tax payer because Iowa subsidizes 65% of their pay for a year. This state level "Pimping For Profit," also keeps the state employees and their public unions well paid too.

One manager at Harbor Freight Tool here in Des Moines said that Iowa Workforce is the greatest staffing agency in the world. While normal staffing agencies charge for their services, IWF not only pays the employer, they also help with the accounting. He showed me that when he submitted employees' hours to HF corporate office on the computer, a small window opened up saying that this info had been received by IWF. While this may seem like an old hole -in-the- wall store, in a forgotten strip mall, they are reporting annual sales of 6 million annually. Harbor Freight has over 700 hundred store with just one owner.

DMCC went out and bought state-of-the-art equipment including MIG welders TIG welders and aluminum welders. In the photograph you can see the one welder appears to have a sleeve wrapped around the line. Just that aluminum wire lead, not the welder, costs over $3000 and DMACC ordered several. This equipment sits in DMACCs relatively new satellite South campus and new AWS test site DMACCs own Advanced Manufacturing Center in Ankeny doesn't even come close to having this and other top of line equipment. .

This the exact equipment that potential DMACC students were shown during the pre- sign up tour welding program at DMACC South. Once students were signed up and there, welding instructor Bill Mann told students that they wouldn't be able to use the equipment because they were in the "old curriculum "or part of the Workforce Training Academy program. (<https://www.dmacc.edu/careertraining/Pages/certs-manufacturing-industrialtech.aspx#mig>) The average student who was stuck being taught the outdated stick welding with no recourse and student loans... that need to be reimbursed or forgiven. Imagine if you were that customer.

Scott Oken, Dean of Advanced Manufacturing at DMACC says all this was because they weren't sure if the Iowa Department of Education was going to approve their new curriculum. That's not true. First of all if you didn't know wethre you were going to be approved why you spend hundreds of thousands of dollars on equipment? In fact DMACC News <https://www.dmacc.edu/news/Pages/20130113-2.aspx> stated that, "Nearly $1,000,000 of program-related equipment has been purchased and embedded into grant-impacted programs." Embedded? Second of all it seems that the Iowa Department of Education was on DMACC to get things moving.

Lastly there were teaching the prisoner and the ex-cons the new curriculum and had been for some time.

This new welding curriculum is a program they purchased from Hobart. Hobart has their own two-year school. Hobart manufactures Hobart welders and Miller welders. You can go online and purchase this program yourself and purchase the answers to the test as well. <https://www.welding.org/product/blueprint-reading-welders-fitters-2/>

This is the exact same third-party welding program that Ralph Young has been teaching at the city of Des Moines's Central Campus for years. What many don't know is that DMACC overseas that program too. So Scott Oken has been nothing but deceptive in any his answers? Yet another red flag

Are metro taxpayers getting double dipped on these programs if Ralph Young is teaching at the city level but DMACC overseeing at the state level? I noticed recently there was a news clip about the city and there new trade programs for high schoolers. They've always had these trade programs. Does this mean they got more grant money?

What about all the tax money that DMACC is now receiving from high school such as the ones in Warren County who can't afford shop class. How do property taxes continue to rise, but the schools seem to offer less here in Iowa? DMACC spent at least one entire semester of Advanced Manufacturing creating a schedule specifically high schoolers. It forced working adults and families to show up for classes for two hours in the middle of the day. One hour on Friday in the middle of the day. Only one high schooler ever showed up and he quit because he decided to go do something else.

Laundering Grant money and tax money first, students and taxpayers...oh, somewhere at the bottom of the list.

While the Iowa Department of Education was allegedly upset that DMACC was falling behind schedule, you have to understand that DMACC was very busy. They were cashing in on the Goldmine that they had created and running drug dealers thieves and pedophiles thru Workforce Training Academy. This program got so big they actually came to you legislatures and asked for and got more money. The need more money to hire more state employees to handoff our money to people getting better training than Iowa taxpayers themselves were getting. Did any of you legislatures actually take a look at was going on? DMACC is grateful and acknowledged you guys on their website. <https://www.dmacc.edu/news/Pages/20140213-1.aspx>

DMACC didn't stop there. Is it just me or have you noticed appointed public servants are starting to believe they are bona fide corporate executives running their own company? I call them the New Aristocracy because they don't have to be concerned about company profits and they don't have stockholders they have to answer too. Taxpayers either for that matter. Yes they have budgets but that's just a small detail, evident when legislatures "okay" additional monies for programs that are hurting the people these programs were originally intended for. Is just me with anybody also comfortable with the multiple state agencies now calling themselves the Authority? <http://watchdog.org/71188/ia-authorityboardmembers/>

DMACC spent a lot of money becoming the new testing center for the American Welding Society. The AWS is an independent third-party welding certification the tests are not cheap and you don't get a refund if you don't pass. AWS certificates carry a lot of credibility. Quality Manufacturers Co. are the premier fabricators here in central Iowa. If you go to their website they advertise they have AWS certified welders.

<http://www.qualitymfgcorp.com/>

Quality Manufacturing Corporation

www.qualitymfgcorp.com

Full service, metal fabricator located in Urbandale, Iowa specializing in prototype and production welding, hydraulic reservoirs, and stainless tanks.

If DMACC were going to make their newly purchased franchise profitable they couldn't give those tests away to taxpayers who were enrolled in their welding program. They couldn't roll the cost of the test up in federal loans student loans because AWS is a third-party vendor. So they ran the grant money through Workforce, so the coveted certifications paid for by same Iowa taxpayers who has to pay for them on their own

They made an agreement with Workforce to send them an unlimited supply of prepaid customers that include many from the Iowa Prison system. They bought equipment specifically for their new franchise operation and they spent thousands of dollars of taxpayer's money to train just one guy at DMACC to run the new operation.

They spared no expense of buying equipment that's a $60,000 sheer they bought brand-new. That's $25,000 self-propelled band saw they bought. There are Iowa taxpayers who own shops here in Iowa that can't afford to own equipment like that. More often than not, you don't need equipment like that. I'm sure that if it came out of the personal pockets of the people who make the decisions DMACC wouldn't have that equipment either. However DMACCs mantra is, it's just grant money.

5/8/2017 2:52 PM

When I pointed out all his equipment, I got a letter from the US Department of Labor Chicago, I've included the letter. Apparently they looked into the matter and the case is now closed? I never contacted the US Department of Labor. Who did and why? Do you know the people who accredited the Advanced Manufacturing curriculum are also out of Chicago? If you think that's a coincidence or you don't believe that all those millions of dollars came from Political Corruption Capital of the world camewithout any strings, you need to resign your position on Capitol Hill and go home.

If you take the time to read the letter, you will see Christine Quinn, regional administrator for the US Department of labor writes that she has looked into my concerns and writes, "None of the items you photographed were purchased with US DOL or TAACC CT grant funds" However if you go to DMACC'S News website... <https://www.dmacc.edu/news/Pages/20150415-3.aspx>... In the last sentence they write that the testing facility was funded by grant money from the USDOL. When stories don't match at this level, it should be a red flag to all of us.

DMACC Welding Lab Earns Industry Accreditation

www.dmacc.edu

Welders can earn national certification at DMACC Southridge welding lab. The Des Moines Area Community College (DMACC) Center for Career and Professional Development ...

For those of are you on this list that have been around a while, doesn't start to look like Central Iowa Education Training Consortium part two? That is, the state is benefiting itself at the expense of the taxpayer.

But it doesn't stop there. In my opinion the fraud and mis-spent (Laundered) tax and grant money reaches another level

I read the report saying that Iowa manufacturers are desperate for people who can program CNC machines both laths and mills. This includes any other equipment such as waterjet or laser tables that also need to be programmed.

Let me show you what you get from highly funded tax and grant CNC class that exists in DMACC Advanced Manufacturing Degree program. The picture of the pink book is a photocopied nightmare that two instructors at the Advanced Manufacturing program put together with other disconnected info that they inserted. If you can read what it says, you'll see that the book is an accompaniment to a video course. Both the book and the course are from yet another third party company called CNC Concepts. Mark Rosenberry, the Adv Man. Program Chairman, says the videos were thrown away.

How this program is taught would make your jaw drop. Don't be fooled when DMACC points out the pass rate for this class because I'll be glad to tell you how student are really getting through that class.

Now take a look at the other book that I posted. This book is also a beginners guide for CNC programming and operation. It's free. You can get it online for free. It comes with an entire slideshow presentation to help you with the highlights. Once again, free. It also comes with the premier, industry standard Autodesk CAM software you need to learn how to program these machines. Say it with me, free.

This is not some cut-rate operation sponsoring in this program. Haas Automation is the largest machine tool builder for half the planet. They are also the very same manufacturers that supplied DMACC with their CNC equipment. The software is by Autodesk. Once again the very same top-of-the-line software that D Max using as well as the entire industry. But when you request information about this free software from the teachers who are teaching is program at DMACC, one of them (Co-author of the pink book) went ballistic and wrote a letter to Dean Oken. In the letter he thought DMACC should consider the legalities of handing out the software even when it wasn't DMACC giving it away. What? He also went on to imply that students had a lot of nerve asking for the program for free. It turns out student have been downloading the software for a while in order to get the help they don't seem to get from DMACC Yes, I have that memo.

It gets even better because the free book, the accompanying free slideshow and the free software are all part of a bigger program sponsored by MAV TV / Lucas Oil. Autodesk Software and Hass CNC. There is a massive library of how-to videos and step-by-step projects that you can access for free. They bought the rights to a TV show called Titan of Industry and re-named it Titian of CNC and the CNC Academy is online and FREE. They claim that they we soon be offering CNCcertifaction themselves. Yet DMACC tossed their videos and they fight students who try to find out information about the free stuff that been offered.

This is massive. It shows without a doubt that free enterprise...right here in Iowa.. can do far better and at no expense to the taxpayers. Some take it a step farther and ask why we need politicians to represent us. Can't we just vote for issues online? Lol, come on think about it.

While DMACC has no problem offer shady classes and books, it not have any problems spending $30 million on a recreation and aquatic center that nobody wanted and nobody needed. DMACC has a 50% dropout rate. Out of the remaining students, almost all those have full-time or part-time jobs that they need to go to or they have long commutes and families to get to. Nobody has time to hang out at DMACC when they're done because DMACC is a commuter school. The pool was built for the glory of Ankeny. Just check and see and you will find everyone on the Rec Center committee was either Ankeny Chamber Of Commerce or Ankeny school Board. Should Denny Purcell get back to running Farm Bureau Insurance since there are billboards here in the metro telling people not to buy Farm Bureau Insurance?

How do you explain to the unknowing tax payers the massive expense was taken on when Iowa accepted the old Maytag facility? The Des Moines Register tells people says the facility was gifted to us. The truth is, it was unloaded on us. They have been trying to get rid of it for years

5/8/2017 2:52 PM

Take a look at the screenshot of a text message that Rob Denson sent. He's wanting to approach Alliant Energy for a year and a half, for starters, of free electricity. Notice how they call grant money? Does this mean that Alliant energy customers will now have to absorb this expense as well as pay taxes to support DMAACC? Isn't true that Alliant Energy recently created new billing rules that many feel are intended to curb the use of solar energy? How is it Rob didn't know what electrical bills would be? How is it he doesn't know if they are tax-exempt as he mentions in the text? He told the Des Moines Register exactly what the overhead would be. Another red flag.

-----It doesn't matter because it's not his money. It's not your money either...its grant money (Aka Fairy Dust) . . . damn it. Lol

If the state and DMAACC cant afford this, then lets fill in the pools, send the Ankeny High School Swim Team back to their new state of the art high schools and turn the rec center into a correctional faculty for select state, county and city politicians and other officials. Once there, we can put them in the "Pimp for Profit," programs as a form of restitution.

Middle-class capitalism cannot afford to support his outrageous levels socialism anymore.

All the warning signs are up. Fannie Mae recently announced the price of houses are too high. Uh-oh Every major predictors says the stock markets getting ready for a big adjustment. Every Western government is insolvent. Aren't the central bank start become insolvent too? Every major civilizations been taken down by the cost of war and we will not be different. Even here in the US we can see solvency issues with Social Security and the Federal Reserve. Aren't we having solvency issues right here at home with our own public-sector pension fund?

While the peasants are at the gate with pitchforks and torches, you can either tell them to eat GMO cake or severely cut state spending and corporate welfare as well getting rid of the Aristocracy who administrate and dominate these programs We are going broke.

UPCOMING EVENTS

2017 CWAG Annual Meeting Registration Now Open!

San Francisco, CA

July 30- August 2, 2017

The Conference of Western Attorneys General along with CWAG Chair and Hawaii Attorney General Doug Chin invite you to the 2017 CWAG Annual Meeting in San Francisco, CA, July 30-August 2, 2017. Join your colleagues as CWAG explores the most pertinent legal issues during the days and spend the evenings enjoying the urban charm of the city at our social events.

To register online use the following link: 2017 CWAG Annual Meeting Registration

If you have attended an annual meeting in the past few years your contact information has been saved in the registration system. Please review your contact information during the registration process to make sure it is current.

To register go to "Sign In" and enter the email address and password you or your assistant previously provided. If you can't recall your password, click on the "Forgot Password" link and your password will be sent to the email that is saved in the system.

If you have not previously registered for the annual meeting go to "New Registration", enter your email and create a personal password to be used for future registrations.

Early Bird Registration: The cutoff date for Early Bird registration is Friday, June 2, 2017 at 5:00pm (PT). All registrations received after this time and date will be charged the regular registration fee.

Onsite Registration: Pre-registering for primary attendees and guests who would like to attend any of the substantive or social opportunities is required. CWAG must make commitments to the hotel and activity vendors based on pre-registered guests prior to our arrival. The registration fees cover the cost of activities and meals at the conference which have been pre-arranged. Given the necessity of pre planning, we will not be accepting any onsite registrations.

Hotel room cutoff: The last day to reserve your room within the CWAG room block is Friday, July 7, 2017. If the room block sells out prior to that time, reservations will be accepted on a space available basis. The reservation number for the Westin St. Francis is 1.888.627.8546. Ask for the CWAG room block to receive our discounted rates.

ALLIANCE PARTNERSHIP NEWS

On March 30th, CWAG Attorneys General Balderas, Brnovich, Chin and Coffman traveled to Mexico City to meet with US Ambassador to Mexico Roberta Jacobson as well as recently appointed Attorney General of Mexico, Raul Cervantes Andrade, to discuss the CWAG Alliance Partnership initiative as well as areas where the two countries can continue to collaborate to combat transnational organized crime. Both the US Ambassador as well as Attorney General Cervantes Andrade expressed a strong desire to continue building the relationships between the US and Mexico state AGOs and CWAG looks forward to hosting the AG in Tampa, Florida September 27-29, 2017 for the CWAG Binational Attorney General Exchange hosted by Florida Attorney General Pam Bondi. Mexico Attorney General's Office coverage of the meetings can be found here. Photos and coverage from the US Embassy in Mexico City can be found here.

BORDER LAW ENFORCEMENT

CWAG Attorney General Hector Balderas of New Mexico announced that Juan David Villegas was successfully extradited from Mexico and is on U.S. soil in the custody of the U.S. Marshal Service. Attorney General Balderas used the extradition process for the return of this fugitive back to the United States, and as a result Juan David Villegas was captured and returned to stand trial for the deaths of his wife and four daughters in New Mexico. Attorney General Balderas was recently in Mexico meeting with Mexican justice officials, including the Attorney General of Mexico (Procurador General de la República) Raúl Cervantes Andrade to continue to strengthen New Mexico's strong diplomatic relations with Mexico and personally thanked Attorney General Cervantes Andrade for his cooperation and effort to return Juan David Villegas to New Mexico. Attorney General Balderas also maintains regular communication with Mexican border state attorneys general regarding issues impacting the border and international extraditions. The United States' extradition treaty with Mexico allows extraditions of violent offenders or child predators, and the Office of the Attorney General is the only state agency in New Mexico that provides extradition support to local law enforcement and district attorneys.

CAMPAIGN FINANCE

CWAG Attorney General Bob Ferguson of Washington filed a campaign finance lawsuit against Tim Eyman, alleging improper personal use of $308,000 in contributions made to political committees, concealment of contributions totaling $490,185 and misleading reporting. The lawsuit also accuses for-profit signature gathering firm Citizen Solutions of participating in a scheme to conceal campaign money the company funneled to Eyman. If successful, Eyman and his for-profit company, Tim Eyman Watchdog for Taxpayers, could face $1.8 million in penalties, plus $308,000 in reimbursement. Citizen Solutions and one of its principals, William Agazarm, could face penalties up to $924,555. "Taking kickbacks from contractors, using campaign funds for personal expenses, redirecting donations made for one initiative to a different initiative - it's hard to imagine what more Mr. Eyman could have done to show his contempt for our campaign finance disclosure laws," Attorney General Ferguson said.

FIGHTING DRUG ABUSE

CWAG Associate Attorney General Pam Bondi of Florida is honored to be appointed to President Donald J. Trump's Opioid and Drug Abuse Commission. As a member of the commission, Attorney General Bondi will work alongside national leaders in the opioid fight on drug prevention, interdiction and treatment strategies. New Jersey Governor Chris Christie will chair the commission. "I am honored to work alongside President Trump, Governor Christie and others to combat the national opioid crisis that is claiming thousands of American lives every year," said Attorney General Bondi. "For more than two decades, first as a state prosecutor and now as Florida's attorney general, I have fought drug abuse at the local and state level-with this appointment I will work with national leaders in this vital fight."

CWAG Associate Attorney General Josh Stein of North Carolina applauded the North Carolina House of Representatives Health Committee, which unanimously passed legislation to confront the opioid crisis. The STOP Act, formally the Strengthen Opioid misuse Prevention Act, will ensure smarter prescribing and smarter dispensing of highly-addictive prescription drugs."I sincerely thank the House Health Committee for its support of this bill and, in particular, Chairman Murphy for his leadership on it," said Attorney General Stein. "Opioid addiction is tearing families apart all across our state and requires a swift policy response to prevent addiction and support those who are currently struggling. This bill is an important first step in a comprehensive response to the opioid crisis."

CONSUMER PROTECTION

CWAG Associate Attorney General Maura Healey of Massachusetts announced that a Kansas-based insurance company has agreed to pay more than $2.8 million to settle allegations that it used deceptive and unlawful practices to sell health insurance to Massachusetts consumers. The settlement will provide more than $2.3 million to consumers. According to the complaint, Unified Life Insurance Company (ULIC) sold health insurance to Massachusetts consumers that was not authorized for sale and engaged in a host of deceptive practices, such as claiming its insurance included services that it did not cover. According to the complaint, ULIC also excluded Massachusetts consumers from coverage based upon their health status or preexisting conditions, and failed to cover basic health services - such as behavioral health services, maternity services, preventive services for women and children, and other essential benefits required by Massachusetts law. The coverage at issue was sold across state lines and was issued through a third-party association. "This company sold sub-par health insurance that violated state law," said Attorney General Healey. "Recently revived federal proposals to take away our state's longstanding authority to oversee sales of health insurance will leave consumers and families more vulnerable to exploitation and create a 'race-to-the-bottom' that will raise prices and reduce access to quality health care for those in need."

PUBLIC HEALTH AND SAFETY

In recognition of Sexual Assault Awareness Month, CWAG Attorney General Hector Balderas of New Mexico announced the launch of his office's statewide Conscious Campus initiative. The educational initiative aims to help college communities discuss the realities of sexual assault on campus, explore interventions, and benefit from community resources. "I applaud my alma mater, Highlands University and other participating colleges in New Mexico for taking steps toward making their campuses safer," said Attorney General Balderas. "This initiative brings together college and university communities, government officials, health professionals, and law enforcement to engage in a meaningful dialogue about the realities of sexual assault and connects students with critical resources."

Kicking off April's "Alcohol Responsibility Month," CWAG Attorney General Sean Reyes of Utah teamed up with Olympic Superstar Simone Biles and the Foundation for Advancing Alcohol Responsibility (Responsibility.org) to release a public service announcement to prevent underage drinking. In the video, through Responsibility.org's Ask, Listen, Learn: Kids and Alcohol Don't Mix program, Attorney General Reyes and Biles encourage parents to have conversations with their kids and teens about saying "no" to underage drinking. "Few people have as significant an impact on children as their own parents," said Attorney General Reyes. "Parents can be positive role models and are the best people to teach children to make healthy lifestyle choices. I owe my own mother and father so much for the lessons and examples they gave me."

ATTORNEY GENERAL RACINE LAUNCHES MEDIATION PROGRAM

CWAG Associate Attorney General Karl A. Racine of the District of Columbia has launched a pilot program to resolve lawsuits against the District government through an informal mediation process. Under the program, any individual who has filed a lawsuit against the District of Columbia seeking $10,000 or less for property damage or personal injury may bring the claim before a neutral mediator. Because this process does not involve formal discovery by either side, the mediation is intended to allow individuals with meritorious claims to obtain a quick resolution and save taxpayers the cost of going to trial. "District taxpayers benefit when lawsuits against the city are resolved quickly and the District as well as the other party can avoid the costs of going to trial," said Attorney General Racine. "The Office of the Attorney General's new mediation program is an opportunity for the District government to provide a quick, fair, and informal way of resolving claims with resolutions agreeable to all parties."

TAXATION

CWAG Associate Attorney General Steven T. Marshall of Alabama announced that the federal District Court for the Northern District of Alabama has dismissed CSX Transportation's lawsuit challenging the application of Alabama's four percent sales tax to CSX's purchase of diesel fuel, a ruling that could return more than $10 million in unpaid taxes to Alabama's Education Trust Fund. Attorney General Marshall said, "I hope that Wednesday's opinion signals the end of nine years of litigation that has resulted in millions of dollars being withheld from Alabama's public schools. Everyone in this State benefits from stronger schools, so everyone, including railroad companies, needs to pay their fair share of taxes to support our schools."

UPCOMING EVENTS

2017 CWAG Annual Meeting Registration Now Open!

San Francisco, CA

July 30- August 2, 2017

The Conference of Western Attorneys General along with CWAG Chair and Hawaii Attorney General Doug Chin invite you to the 2017 CWAG Annual Meeting in San Francisco, CA, July 30-August 2, 2017. Join your colleagues as CWAG explores the most pertinent legal issues during the days and spend the evenings enjoying the urban charm of the city at our social events.

To register online use the following link: 2017 CWAG Annual Meeting Registration

If you have attended an annual meeting in the past few years your contact information has been saved in the registration system. Please review your contact information during the registration process to make sure it is current.

To register go to "Sign In" and enter the email address and password you or your assistant previously provided. If you can't recall your password, click on the "Forgot Password" link and your password will be sent to the email that is saved in the system.

If you have not previously registered for the annual meeting go to "New Registration", enter your email and create a personal password to be used for future registrations.

Early Bird Registration: The cutoff date for Early Bird registration is Friday, June 2, 2017 at 5:00pm (PT). All registrations received after this time and date will be charged the regular registration fee.

Onsite Registration: Pre-registering for primary attendees and guests who would like to attend any of the substantive or social opportunities is required. CWAG must make commitments to the hotel and activity vendors based on pre-registered guests prior to our arrival. The registration fees cover the cost of activities and meals at the conference which have been pre-arranged. Given the necessity of pre planning, we will not be accepting any onsite registrations.

Hotel room cutoff: The last day to reserve your room within the CWAG room block is Friday, July 7, 2017. If the room block sells out prior to that time, reservations will be accepted on a space available basis. The reservation number for the Westin St. Francis is 1.888.627.8546. Ask for the CWAG room block to receive our discounted rates.

CIVIL RIGHTS

CWAG Attorney General Bob Ferguson of Washington announced that Mukilteo-based aerospace company Electroimpact will pay $485,000 after an investigation alleging discrimination by the company, retaliation against employees, and unfair or deceptive advertising. The company will also change its hiring practices and conduct outreach to minority applicants. An investigation by the Attorney General's Wing Luke Civil Rights Unit found evidence that Electroimpact and its president, Peter Zieve, refused to hire Muslim applicants, engaged in religious and/or national origin harassment, discriminated against employees based on marital status, and retaliated against employees who opposed such unfair practices. The investigation also found the company engaged in unfair or deceptive practices by describing itself as an equal opportunity employer in advertising. "The conduct outlined in our complaint is outrageous," Attorney General Ferguson said. "Discriminating against workers and retaliating against anyone who questions it is illegal."

OPIATE ABUSE

Children hurt by their parents' addictions to painkillers and heroin will get help under a pilot program announced by Ohio Attorney General Mike DeWine. The $3.6 million effort will provide intensive trauma counseling and other services to children abused or neglected due to parental drug use. Parents of children referred to the program will also receive drug treatment. One of every two children placed in foster care in 2015 were there because of abuse and neglect associated with their parents' drug use, according to the Public Children Services Association of Ohio. The announcement comes as the deadly epidemic shows no signs of letting up and in fact may be worsening. "The bad news is this wave is not letting up. It's still coming," said Attorney General DeWine. "The good news is there are a lot of people in Ohio today who are alive because fellow citizens of theirs have done amazing work."

CWAG Associate Attorney General Brad Schimel of Wisconsin and the Pharmacy Society of Wisconsin (PSW) announced a new training tool designed to deter pharmacy robberies. "Since the launch of Dose of Reality 18 months ago, the Wisconsin Department of Justice and our private and public partners have taken a multifaceted approach to preventing prescription drug abuse," said Attorney General Schimel. "The DOJ's and Pharmacy Society of Wisconsin's Pharmacy Robbery Prevention and Response training is another tool in our arsenal. By discouraging robberies, and effectively responding to those that do occur, we protect the safety of pharmacy employees, customers, and the public, and reduce the amount of narcotics that reach the street." The Pharmacy Robbery Prevention and Response training, provided to pharmacies by law enforcement, will teach pharmacists, pharmacy technicians, clerks, and other pharmacy personnel how to deter a robbery, what to do when a robbery occurs, and what to do after a robbery occurs. The adoption of this training's content by pharmacies is not required but rather a series of recommendations to make pharmacy premises resistant to robberies.

CONSUMER PROTECTION

CWAG Attorney General Mark Brnovich of Arizona announced students are eligible to receive up to $60,000 in refunds after Para Health Professionals, Inc., and Examination Preparation Institute, Inc. issued unaccredited degrees and medical certifications. Students took seminars to become certified as Phlebotomists, Electrocardiogram Technicians, Medical Technicians, Behavioral Health Technicians, Healthcare Technicians, or Pharmacy Technicians. The restitution is part of a consent judgment obtained by the Attorney General's Office against Para Health Professionals and Examination Preparation Institute for violations of the Arizona Consumer Fraud Act. "These so-called schools scammed students who dreamed of becoming medical technicians in Arizona," said Attorney General Brnovich. "Students paid thousands to become certified medical techs only to find out their certifications are effectively worthless. One victim found out her certification was invalid during a job interview at a local hospital."

With a change of administrations in the federal government, there may be plans to roll back regulations limiting access to consumers' online data. States have other ideas. State legislatures may prove to be a counterweight to Washington by enacting new regulations to increase consumers' privacy rights. Illinois legislators are considering a "right to know" bill that would let consumers find out what information about them is collected by companies like Google and Facebook, and what kinds of businesses they share it with. Such a right, which European consumers already have, has been a longtime goal of privacy advocates. In the interim, however, lawyers at Edelson PC, a Chicago-based class-action firm that has become notorious among tech companies for its prolific filing of privacy suits, have gone on offense with a lobbying campaign of their own. Firm lawyers have also helped found a new nonprofit group, the Digital Privacy Alliance, as an advocate for privacy legislation in Illinois and elsewhere. "We were forced to get involved politically because once we started winning a lot of cases in court, they all went on the offensive," said Jay Edelson, founder of Edelson PC. "It's important because the Trump administration is doing so much to roll back privacy rights, so there is going to be a huge shift to state lawmakers and state attorneys general."

HUMAN TRAFFICKING

CWAG Associate Attorney General Maura Healey of Massachusetts announced that a Boston man has been indicted on charges of human trafficking, rape and witness intimidation in connection with supplying multiple women with drugs and trafficking them for commercial sex in communities across the state. Hendricks Mario Berdet was indicted by a Statewide Grand Jury on the charges of Trafficking in Persons for Sexual Servitude (12 counts), Rape (1 count), Deriving Support from Prostitution (10 counts), and Intimidation of a Witness (5 counts). "Ending the sexual exploitation of human beings is one of my office's highest priorities," said Attorney General Healey. "In the midst of a deadly and widespread opioid epidemic, we continue to find individuals preying upon those struggling with addiction."

MARIJUANA

CWAG Attorney General Marty Jackley of South Dakota announced that Attorney General Explanations for two proposed initiated measures have been filed with the Secretary of State. These statements will appear on petitions that will be circulated by the sponsor of the measures. For each petition, if the sponsor obtains a sufficient number of signatures (13,871) by November 2017, as certified by the Secretary of State, the measure will be placed on the ballot for the November 2018 general election. The measures are titled: "An initiated measure to legalize marijuana for medical use" and "An initiated measure to legalize certain amounts of marijuana, drugs made from marijuana, and drug paraphernalia, and to regulate and tax marijuana establishments." Under South Dakota law, the Attorney General is responsible for preparing explanations for proposed initiated measures, referred laws, and South Dakota Constitutional Amendments. Specifically, the explanation includes a title, an objective, clear and simple summary of the purpose and effect of the proposed measure and a description of the legal consequences. The Attorney General Explanation is not a statement either for or against the proposed measure.

GAMBLING

CWAG Attorney General Sean Reyes of Utah announced that AGO investigators, in a joint operation with local, state, and federal law enforcement partners, executed warrants to seize evidence of an alleged statewide enterprise related to illegal gambling machines. The operation identified over an estimated 500 machines or more at over 130 locations across the state. Tips about illegal gambling devices were reported by citizens to legislators, Utah Senator Curt Bramble, Utah Representative Justin Fawson, and Utah Representative Norm Thurston, as well as from other sources. "The Attorney General's Office has focused its operation today on a large number of gambling devices that we allege are illegal under Utah statute," said Utah Attorney General's Office Investigations Chief Leo Lucey. "Because these devices are out in the open and are available to anyone, they present an especially dangerous threat to youth."

TOBACCO

CWAG Associate Attorney General Derek Schmidt of Kansas has negotiated an agreement with the Sac and Fox Nation of Missouri in Kansas and Nebraska to improve accounting for cigarettes and tobacco products sold on tribal lands. The agreement, known as a compact, has been signed by tribal leaders and by Governor Brownback, and was submitted to the Legislature. Two similar compacts negotiated with the Prairie Band Potawatomi Nation and the Iowa Tribe of Kansas and Missouri were approved by the Legislature and signed into law in April 2016. A compact with the Kickapoo Tribe was signed in December 2016 and also awaits approval by the Legislature. Attorney General Schmidt said approval of the compacts this year will help the state demonstrate compliance with its enforcement obligations under the MSA. The compact with the Sac and Fox Nation of Missouri in Kansas and Nebraska is the final compact to be reached with the four resident tribes in Kansas, allowing the state to account for tobacco sales on all reservation lands in the state.

Celebrating 40 Years of Seeking Justice and Improving Lives

PLEASE JOIN US!! Equal Justice After Hours 2017

For the past 40 years, Iowa Legal Aid has helped ensure that everyone is treated fairly in the justice system. The importance of access to the court system is best illustrated through the comments of an Iowa Legal Aid client:

"Thank you! For years, I didn't know how or when to get out of the situation I was in when in all reality, one phone call to Iowa Legal Aid made a huge impact on my life! I now have a nice place to live that is safe for me and my children. We can now learn to live without domestic violence in our home. My children can now grow up to respect others. Iowa Legal Aid saved my life!"

In 2017, Iowa Legal Aid is celebrating 40 YEARS OF SEEKING JUSTICE AND IMPROVING LIVES. Iowa Legal Aid will be kicking off its celebration with its annual event, Equal Justice After Hours. The event will be held Thursday, March 30 from 5:00-7:00 p.m. at American Enterprise Group, located at 601 6th Avenue in downtown Des Moines. Tickets are $50 and can be purchased at the door or online HERE.

Iowa State Bar Association Board of Governors has issued
a challenge for donations made that evening!

For the fourth year the President-Elect of the Iowa State Bar Association (ISBA), Steve Eckley, has initiated a Board of Governors challenge at Equal Justice After Hours. The challenge is a dollar-for-dollar match from Steve and individual members of the Board of Governors of the ISBA for pledges and donations made at the event. Individual Board of Governors members have raised over $7,000 to initiate the challenge!!

Join us on March 30 to celebrate 40 Years of Seeking Justice and Improving Lives. If you are unable to attend, but would like to support Iowa Legal Aid, click HERE to donate.

Litigation Highlights of the Past 40 Years:

Iowa Legal Aid's Assistance to Veterans

Iowa Legal Aid helped a disabled veteran with a garnishment problem. All of the money in his bank account had been seized. As a result, he had no money to pay expenses. The money in his account was from his Army pension and the VA. His money was protected by law from garnishment. However, he did not know it was protected and did not know he could do anything about it. Iowa Legal Aid brought a lawsuit challenging the lack of notice to the veteran and lack of an opportunity to challenge the legality of taking his property. In response to his lawsuit, the Iowa Supreme Court approved an administrative directive, providing all the relief Iowa Legal Aid asked for on his behalf. In fact, the change in procedure was broader in scope than the lawsuit, as it applied to the entire state. Now, someone in this situation will receive a notice explaining exempt property, and how to assert the claim. (Burr v. Des Moines County – Federal District Court)

Iowa Legal Aid's Iowa City Regional Office

 Hawkeye Legal Aid in Iowa City was one of the "original" county legal aid offices that merged to form the Legal Services Corporation of Iowa, now Iowa Legal Aid. Hawkeye Legal Aid was formed in 1967. Iowa Legal Aid celebrates its 40th anniversary this year, but it is also the 50th anniversary of legal aid in Johnson County.

Senate votes to overturn FCC broadband privacy rules

The U.S. Senate voted 50-48 Thursday to overturn the Federal Communications Commission's broadband privacy rules. Sen. Jeff Flake, R-Ariz., said the FCC placed “heavy-handed” rules on ISPs compared to other content providers. Sen. Bill Nelson, D-Fla., called the Republican’s use of the Congressional Review Act to eliminate the FCC rules “a blunt congressional tool” that would not only “wipe out thoughtful rules” but would prevent the agency from reintroducing similar rules, USA Today reports. In an op-ed for Wired, FTC Commissioner Terrell McSweeney and University of California, Berkeley professor Chris Hoofnagle argue why the FCC rules should not be overturned. “The FCC rule offers an opportunity for a meaningful debate about how to better translate our analog privacy norms into the digital world,” the authors write. “ISPs know our identities, and their position gives them the technical capacity to surveil users in ways that others cannot. It makes sense to ensure consumers can choose whether to share data related to their internet usage.”

House intel chair claims US 'incidentally' collected data on Trump associates

House Intelligence Committee Chairman Devin Nunes, R-Calif., unexpectedly said he received information from unnamed sources that the U.S. intelligence community “incidentally” collected information on members of President Donald Trump’s transition team, POLITICO reports. Instead of informing other committee members, Nunes, to the apparent surprise of other lawmakers, went first to inform the White House, drawing harsh criticism from Ranking Member Adam Schiff, D-Calif. From a privacy perspective, the incident, once again, puts U.S. surveillance capabilities into the spotlight.

According to Nunes, the data was collected legally, but he has concerns about how American subjects were “unmasked” and shared among the intelligence community. Rep. Elijah Cummings, D-Md., has said Nunes should be investigated.

PRIVACY-OPERATIONS MANAGEMENT

Why your company needs cyberinsurance, especially if it's not a Fortune 500

Yahoo. Target. Home Depot. LinkedIn. Verizon. Wendy's. Premera. Bethesda Game Studios. Cottage Health System. 21st Century Oncology. Natural Grocers. Drupal. Kirkwood Community College. What do these companies have in common? They've all suffered a data breach or cyber-related security incident in recent years. But there are other companies on this list that are not household names. Small- and medium-sized companies have been affected, too. In this new series for The Privacy Advisor, Brendan Hogan describes why organizations today, especially those that aren't Fortune 500s, should be investing in cyberinsurance.

GDPR – Can software really help?

GDPR prep is in full swing – and privacy pros are turning to technology for solutions. With new operational requirements for documentation, data protection impact assessments, and privacy by design, increasingly organizations are turning to software-based tools to aid in the preparation. With capabilities to simplify and automate data mapping and privacy impact assessments, these tools are rapidly growing in popularity.

Department of Labor's JobLink site hacked

Unidentified hackers have breached the U.S. Department of Labor's America's JobLink site out of Topeka, Kansas, ultimately affecting 10 states, including Maine, Vermont, Idaho and Arizona, Governing reports. Information accessed includes Social Security numbers, names and dates of birth, the report states. While America's JobLink technicians said they have fixed the "security hole" that initially allowed hackers entry, some states' Department of Labor, like Maine's, "recommended that JobLink users put a freeze on their credit report if they had a valid Social Security number in their JobLink account," the report adds.

Data Breach Notification Act awaits New Mexico governor's approval

The New Mexico Senate has passed the Data Breach Notification Act, making it the 48th state to have such a law, GovInfoSecurity reports. The bill awaits the signature of Republican Gov. Susana Martinez, who has 20 days to approve or deny the measure, although the bill's sponsor, Rep. Bill Rehm predicts her support. The nonprescriptive bill requires businesses to notify the state's attorney general should more than 1,000 citizens' data be breached while giving "much latitude" to businesses regarding how they protect personally identifiable information, the report states. Should Martinez approve the act, South Dakota and Alabama will become the only remaining states without a breach notification law, the report adds.

Democratic senators reintroduce transportation cybersecurity bills

Sens. Ed Markey, D-Mass., and Richard Blumenthal, D-Conn., have reintroduced two transportation cybersecurity bills, the Security and Privacy in Your Car Act and the Cybersecurity Standards for Aircraft to Improve Resilience Act, The Hill reports. The bills were initially introduced in the last session of Congress, the report states. The SPY Car Act calls for automotive cybersecurity and privacy standards from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration and Federal Trade Commission, while the Cyber AIR Act requires a host of "reasonable measures" for air carriers and manufacturers, including secure Wi-Fi on flights and mandatory cyberattack notification. "Whether in their cars on the road or in aircraft in the sky,

Three privacy bills proposed in Illinois

The Illinois State Senate is considering three privacy-related bills concerning the right to let citizens know about the data collected about them, unauthorized device microphone recordings protection, and the prohibition of unwanted geolocation services, dubbed the Right to Know Act, the Geolocation Privacy Protection Act and the Microphone-Enabled Device Act, respectively, ConsumerAffairs reports. Illinois Senator Michael Hastings emphasized that citizens should know where their data goes, and the Right to Know Act helps achieve that goal. Privacy advocates have their eye on the proposed Illinois laws, believing that they could "spread to other states, partly compensating for the Federal Communications Commission's plans to scrap Obama-era privacy protections," the report states.

Pai: FCC to vote on proposal blocking

'robocalls'

Writing a piece for The Hill, Federal Communications Commission Chairman Ajit Pai says his agency will be voting on a proposal to empower phone companies to block "robocalls." The spam calls are the number one source of complaints received by the FCC, and the new proposal will allow phone companies to block calls appearing from phone numbers determined to be invalid or no longer in use. The proposal was asked for through the phone industry's Robocall Strike Force, comprising 33 carriers and device makers. "There is no reason why any legitimate caller should be spoofing an unassigned or invalid number," Pai writes, adding, "The FCC's proposed action would go a long way toward making sure that robocallers won't be able to use this strategy to evade the law."

Experiment chronicles effect of constant surveillance in the home

CNN reports on the Helsinki Privacy Experiment, a project designed to explore the long-term psychological effects of constant surveillance in a home environment. The results of the experiment, published five years ago, found while the majority of the participants expressed privacy concerns, such as the possibility of releasing the footage to the public, or the video would be edited in a way to intentionally misrepresent them, the subjects eventually got used to the surveillance. By the end of the 12-month experiment, 10 of the 12 participants said they had become accustomed to a lack of privacy. The experiment's lead author, Antti Oulasvirta, said privacy concerns surrounding technology are nothing new, with the first anxieties starting "with the internet in the late '90s, when there were cookies and people were starting to be tracked, and it got worse with smartphones. And now we have smart TVs, and eventually we will have IoT."

California senators considering biometric surveillance disclosure bill

California senators are looking over a bill that would require law enforcement agencies across the state to disclose the surveillance tools in their possession, including facial recognition technology and eye scanners, The Desert Sun reports. The bill would require law enforcement, starting in 2018, to submit a plan for the surveillance technology they currently use and the data they have collected, while seeking public approval when requests for new technologies are made. The bill has faced criticism from both sides, with civil liberties groups stating the bill does not go far enough to shed the light on law enforcement's use of the tools, while others believe the bill would tip off criminals to the technology, helping them to evade capture. ### CWAG CHAIR INITIATIVE

The Conference of Western Attorneys General 2017 Chair's Initiative and Western Pacific AG Summit in Honolulu held last week was a huge success. The meeting ran from March 14th - 16th at the Royal Hawaiian Hotel with over 150 attendees. Hawaii Attorney General Doug Chin, who currently serves as Chair of CWAG, said, "It was an honor to host this meeting in Honolulu. We are excited to have had panels that focus on issues important to the Pacific Islands, as well as panels focused on renewable energy, sustainability, and open government. With a bipartisan group of 17 Attorneys General attending from jurisdictions across the country and the Pacific Islands, we held vibrant discussions of how states can lead the way on issues that matter so much to all of us."

If you missed the Chair Initiative, you still have the opportunity to watch the recorded program online! A program agenda is also included in the link below:

UPCOMING EVENTS

2017 CWAG Annual Meeting Registration Now Open!

San Francisco, CA

July 30- August 2, 2017

The Conference of Western Attorneys General along with CWAG Chair and Hawaii Attorney General Doug Chin invite you to the 2017 CWAG Annual Meeting in San Francisco, CA, July 30-August 2, 2017. Join your colleagues as CWAG explores the most pertinent legal issues during the days and spend the evenings enjoying the urban charm of the city at our social events.

To register online use the following link: 2017 CWAG Annual Meeting Registration

If you have attended an annual meeting in the past few years your contact information has been saved in the registration system. Please review your contact information during the registration process to make sure it is current.

To register go to "Sign In" and enter the email address and password you or your assistant previously provided. If you can't recall your password, click on the "Forgot Password" link and your password will be sent to the email that is saved in the system.

If you have not previously registered for the annual meeting go to "New Registration", enter your email and create a personal password to be used for future registrations.

Early Bird Registration: The cutoff date for Early Bird registration is Friday, June 2, 2017 at 5:00pm (PT). All registrations received after this time and date will be charged the regular registration fee.

Onsite Registration: Pre-registering for primary attendees and guests who would like to attend any of the substantive or social opportunities is required. CWAG must make commitments to the hotel and activity vendors based on pre-registered guests prior to our arrival. The registration fees cover the cost of activities and meals at the conference which have been pre-arranged. Given the necessity of pre planning, we will not be accepting any onsite registrations.

Hotel room cutoff: The last day to reserve your room within the CWAG room block is Friday, July 7, 2017. If the room block sells out prior to that time, reservations will be accepted on a space available basis. The reservation number for the Westin St. Francis is 1.888.627.8546. Ask for the CWAG room block to receive our discounted rates.

FORMER CALIFORNIA AG JOHN VAN DE KAMP DIES

Former CWAG Attorney General John Van de Kamp of California died after a brief illness. He was 81. Van de Kamp was California's attorney general from 1983 until 1991. Van de Kamp had the distinction of serving as the first Los Angeles-based federal public defender from 1971-1975 and then as Los Angeles County's top prosecutor from 1975-1982 during his long legal and political career. He also was the U.S. attorney in Los Angeles from 1966-67. CWAG Attorney General Xavier Becerra said, "John Van de Kamp lived for the values of justice and opportunity that define the state of California. I will forever be grateful for the confidence he showed in me from my earliest days of public service under his leadership at the California Department of Justice." Van de Kamp, a Stanford Law School graduate, also served as president of the State Bar of California from 2004-2005 and more recently was the independent reform monitor for the city of Vernon as part of reform efforts there.

IMMIGRATION

CWAG Attorney General Doug Chin of Hawaii announced that the State of Hawaii has moved to convert the temporary restraining order issued last week by Hawaii federal judge Derrick K. Watson in the travel ban case into a preliminary injunction. On March 15, 2017, Judge Watson issued a 43-page opinion enjoining the federal government nationwide from enforcing or implementing Sections 2 and 6 of a second Executive Order issued by President Trump. That Executive Order would have restricted immigration from Iran, Syria, Somalia, Sudan, Libya, and Yemen, and also temporarily suspended refugee admissions. Under federal court rules, a temporary restraining order expires 14 days after entry, unless the court extends it. In contrast, a preliminary injunction will last as long as directed by the court. A hearing on the motion is currently scheduled before Judge Watson on March 29, 2017 at 9:30 a.m.

HEALTH CARE

CWAG Attorney General Lawrence Wasden of Idaho announced the release of his opinion regarding the proposed sale of St. Joseph Regional Medical Center, a nonprofit hospital in Lewiston, to a for-profit subsidiary of Tennessee-based RCCH HealthCare Partners. The opinion concludes the Attorney General's review of the proposed sale as required under the Idaho Nonprofit Hospital Sale or Conversion Act. "My review of the proposed sale indicates the hospital and the public will benefit from this transaction," Attorney General Wasden said. "I therefore do not oppose the sale, and I encourage the parties to work cooperatively to quickly transition the hospital to its new management." He also announced that his office has reached agreements with Ascension Health - the sole member of St. Joseph Regional Medical Center, Inc. - and RCCH HealthCare Partners to establish a $25 million healthcare endowment. A new, independent foundation will administer the endowment to benefit the health and well-being of people in nearby counties in Idaho, Washington and Oregon.

CWAG Attorney General Ellen Rosenblum of Oregon announced a $545,000 settlement with the nutritional supplement chain Vitamin Shoppe Inc. that will prohibit the company from selling dietary supplements with illegal or unsafe ingredients. Under the settlement, Vitamin Shoppe is prohibited from selling any dietary supplement after the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) has issued written notice that the product contains an ingredient that is unlawful or unsafe. In addition, Vitamin Shoppe may not sell DMAA, picamillon, and other unlawful ingredients in Oregon. "The nutritional supplements that Vitamin Shoppe was selling have the potential to do a lot of harm. Continuing to sell a purported dietary supplement after the FDA warned it was unsafe or unlawful is unacceptable," said Attorney General Rosenblum. "This is the first agreement of its kind that holds a retailer financially responsible for selling products manufactured by a third party that they knew or should have known were not safe or not lawful."

CVS Health (CVS) announced the company will launch Reduced Rx™, a prescription savings program that will offer discounts on certain medications - through CVS Health's pharmacy benefits manager, CVS Caremark - directly to patients. The program will help patients with high out of pocket costs afford essential medications. Novo Nordisk will participate in the prescription savings program. Through this program, CVS Health and Novo Nordisk will offer Novolin R®, Novolin N® and Novolin 70/30® human insulin at a cost of $25 per 10ml vial, which reflects a potential savings of as much as $100 for cash paying patients.

ENVIRONMENTAL LAW

CWAG Associate Attorney General Ken Paxton of Texas filed a lawsuit against several federal agencies for violating the Nuclear Waste Policy Act (NWPA). Since the NWPA's enactment in 1982, the federal government has failed to complete the licensing process for a permanent nuclear waste storage repository at Yucca Mountain, Nevada. The lawsuit, filed directly in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit, seeks to force an up or down vote by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) on the licensing of Yucca Mountain and to stop the Department of Energy from spending tax dollars on "consent-based" siting.

In response to President Trump's announcement he is seeking $120 million to restart licensing activities for Yucca Mountain, CWAG Attorney General Adam Paul Laxalt of Nevada issued the following statement: "In the coming years, I will continue to battle the poster-child for federal overreach - a battle over an unwanted nuclear waste repository at Yucca Mountain in our beloved Nevada. My Solicitor General's Office, senior staff and outside experts, working in conjunction with the Office of Nuclear Project's staff and technical experts and the Governor's Office, have been preparing for a resumption of attempts to license Yucca Mountain to store high level nuclear waste since a federal court issued its restart order. Today's announcement that the president is requesting $120 million in nuclear waste funding, part of which would be used to restart licensing activities for the Yucca Mountain repository, comes as no surprise to this team. Nevada will continue to litigate this matter aggressively and fully. We have many strong claims against the proposed nuclear repository. If the Trump administration continues along this path, we expect many years of protracted litigation in which we are confident we will ultimately prevail."

CONSUMER PROTECTION

When CWAG Attorney General Bob Ferguson of Washington was elected attorney general, the office had eight attorneys devoted to consumer protection. That's grown to 22, with two more being hired, he said. The increase has come despite a dramatic drop in recent years in funding for consumer protection from the state's general fund. Additional money from settlements or court cases won go into the state general fund, and in some cases are reinvested in the consumer protection program to grow the program and pay the costs of bringing cases, he said. The litigation comes at a risk. Under Washington law, the state pays the cost of the winning side if the state loses its consumer protection lawsuit, Attorney General Ferguson said. But if the state does not sue, it sends a message to businesses that the Attorney General's Office will always settle, which means less money for the state. "If you go to trial and start winning, people get the memo on that," Attorney General Ferguson said. Last month, after a three-week trial, a King County judge awarded the state nearly $4.3 million in penalties, attorneys' fees and costs for multiple violations of the state Consumer Protection Act by the makers of 5-Hour Energy.

CWAG Associate Attorney General Karl A. Racine of the District of Columbia warned immigrant communities in the District of Columbia of a potential scam involving persons posing as federal Immigrations and Customs Enforcement (ICE) agents and placing bogus Search/Removal Warrants on homes. The warrants threaten the occupants with searches and potential removal, and could be part of an effort to con residents of immigrant communities into sharing important personal financial information or to coerce them into making payments to avoid further action. "Scammers will often stop at nothing to take advantage of people, and particularly vulnerable groups," Attorney General Racine said. "We are concerned that these fake warrants are part of an attempt to exploit very real fears of deportation running rampant right now in immigrant communities. Our office will do everything we can to help educate and protect all District residents, including undocumented immigrants."

MARIJUANA

With growing pressure by special interests to push forward with the legalization of recreational marijuana in Rhode Island, CWAG Associate Attorney General Peter Kilmartin, along with Smart Approaches to Marijuana (SAM), the Ocean State Prevention Alliance, and What's the Rush Rhode Island, hosted a press conference to announce a unified opposition to the legalization of marijuana. Speakers at the press conference included representatives from law enforcement, the prevention and recovery communities, the medical community, the business community, municipal leaders, and others who are united in their opposition to the legalization of recreational marijuana in Rhode Island. "Many of the voices we heard today, we heard for the first time, especially from the medical community and municipal leaders. What they have to say should make every parent, every teacher, every business owner, every Rhode Islander pause to think about the many real consequences of legalization of recreational marijuana," said Attorney General Kilmartin. "This is a very complex policy decision that will have long lasting effects and unintended consequences, much of which are still unknown. This is not a decision that should be made lightly. It's important that we continue to have these discussions to better understand the full impact of legalization before we head down that a path - a path I believe is the wrong direction for the State of Rhode Island."

The task force addresses regulatory hurdles to job growth, including the proliferation of occupational licensing. Nearly 30 percent of American jobs require a license today, up from less than five percent in the 1950s. For some professions, occupational licensing is necessary to protect the public against legitimate health and safety concerns. But in many situations, the expansion of occupational licensing threatens economic liberty.

Unnecessary or overbroad restrictions erect significant barriers and impose costs that harm American workers, employers, consumers, and our economy as a whole, with no measurable benefits to consumers or society.

Economic LIBERTY Opens Doors

"This is an important moment for economic liberty. Governors, state legislators, and many other stakeholders want to move forward to remove or narrow occupational licensing regulations and open doors to opportunity, enhancing competition and innovation," said Acting Chairman Ohlhausen. "The FTC's Economic Liberty Task Force has moved quickly to create a website that will gather many existing resources, from the FTC and elsewhere, into a central repository for stakeholders. It will be a dynamic resource and will grow to incorporate additional work by the task force and others in this important area."

The FTC has a long history of advocacy to reduce or eliminate unnecessary occupational licensing requirements imposed by state law or rules, and the website showcases that work. Upon request by a state legislator or in response to an open public comment period, FTC staff regularly shares its expertise on licensure issues affecting health care workers, other professionals such as attorneys and interior designers, and workers in occupations such as online auction trading and real estate closing services.

Dear Nathan,

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

[\[Click Here for Full Articles\]](#)

UPCOMING EVENTS

Chair's Initiative and Western Pacific AG Summit

Honolulu, Hawaii

March 13-16, 2017

This conference will be held at the famous Royal Hawaiian Hotel. We will begin with a welcome reception on Monday, March 13, 2017, at 5:00pm. The Western Pacific Attorney General Summit will take place from 8:00am to 5:00pm on Tuesday, March 14, 2017. The Chair Initiative will take place on Wednesday, March 15th, from 8:00am to 5:00pm, and will conclude on Thursday, March 16th at 12:00pm. This conference is open to all private sector and government attendees. Click here to download registration materials. The preliminary draft agenda for the meeting can be downloaded here. Registration deadline and hotel room block cutoff is Friday, February 24, 2017.

The Pacific Summit will focus on major issues facing the Pacific jurisdictions, such as climate change, immigration, self-government, consumer retail access and economic growth. The Chair Initiative will explore how states have lead the way to solve national issues when the federal government has experienced deadlock and what the future holds for state action. The states are a vital and active source for ideas to solve important issues facing society. States lead the way on consumer and financial protection, healthcare, protecting privacy and so much more. Even when partisan politics keep the federal government from being as effective as it may, the states can put aside politics to address the needs of their citizens.

2017 CWAG Annual Meeting Registration Now Open!

San Francisco, CA

July 30- August 2, 2017

The Conference of Western Attorneys General along with CWAG Chair and Hawaii Attorney General Doug Chin invite you to the 2017 CWAG Annual Meeting in San Francisco, CA, July 30-August 2, 2017. Join your colleagues as CWAG explores the most pertinent legal issues during the days and spend the evenings enjoying the urban charm of the city at our social events.

To register online use the following link: 2017 CWAG Annual Meeting Registration

If you have attended an annual meeting in the past few years your contact information has been saved in the registration system. Please review your contact information during the registration process to make sure it is current.

ATTORNEY GENERAL NEWS

Oklahoma Governor Mary Fallin appointed Secretary of State Mike Hunter as Oklahoma Attorney General after Scott Pruitt was confirmed by the U.S. Senate to be the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency. "Mike understands the law and has a thorough understanding of state government, which will serve him and the state well," Governor Fallin said. "Mike also understands the importance of public service and he will be a tremendous advocate to protect the basic legal rights for Oklahomans." Attorney General Hunter served as first assistant attorney general under Scott Pruitt from June 2015 to October, when Governor Fallin named him secretary of state. Hunter was the chief operating officer of the American Bankers Association from 2010 to 2015 and was secretary of the Commissioners of the Land Office. "I appreciate the confidence placed in me by Governor Fallin," Attorney General Hunter said. "I enjoyed working in her administration, and look forward to continuing to assist whenever possible to improve our state."

CWAG Associate Attorney General Brad Schimel of Wisconsin announced the additions of Daniel Lennington, Lane Ruhland, and Mike Austin to the Wisconsin Department of Justice senior leadership team. Lennington has been named Senior Counsel, a position vacated by Paul Connell, when Connell was named Deputy Attorney General. Ruhland will serve as Director of Government Affairs, replacing Austin, who has been selected by Attorney General Schimel to serve as Policy Advisor. "I am excited to put this team to work for the citizens of our great state," said Attorney General Schimel. "Dan, Lane, and Mike share our vision for public safety and respect for the rule of law, and I know they will advocate tirelessly to make Wisconsin safer and stronger."

Centene Corp. has hired former Missouri Attorney General Chris Koster as the managed care company's senior vice president, corporate services. Mr. Koster "will assist in business-related issues, outside of government relations, for Centene's locally-based health plans across the country." Koster was attorney general for the past eight years before running unsuccessfully for governor in 2016. Prior to his role as attorney general, Koster was in the Missouri Senate for four years, and was prosecuting attorney in Cass County for a decade. "I am honored to join a team of individuals who every day work to provide high-quality healthcare to vulnerable populations across the United States," Mr. Koster said in a statement. "In many ways, this opportunity provides the continuation of the mission I have pursued for the past decade."

IMMIGRATION

CWAG Attorney General Bob Ferguson of Washington declared victory in State v. Trump, in light of the U.S. Department of Justice's filing in the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. Justice, on behalf of President Trump, represented to the court that: "the President intends in the near future to rescind the Order and replace it with a new, substantially revised Executive Order" to eliminate constitutional concerns. "Let's be clear: Today's court filing by the federal government recognizes the obvious, the President's current Executive Order violates the Constitution," Attorney General Ferguson said. In filings with the Ninth Circuit, both the federal government and the states of Washington and Minnesota urged the court to decline an "en banc" review of an earlier, unanimous ruling by a panel of three Ninth Circuit judges. In that decision, the court upheld U.S. District Court Senior Judge James L. Robart's injunction preventing enforcement of the Executive Order nationwide.

INDIAN LAW

The Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals has ruled in favor of CWAG Attorney General Peter Michael and the State of Wyoming in finding that the Wind River Reservation had been diminished when the federal government opened the reservation to settlement in a series of acts over the past 100 years. The Court reversed a U.S. Environmental Protection Agency determination that, even though the land was sold, it remained legally part of the reservation. If the EPA decision had been upheld, large portions of Wyoming previously thought to be under state jurisdiction would be impacted. The EPA addressed the reservation boundary issue in approving an application from the Northern Arapaho and Eastern Shoshone tribes, which share the reservation, to be treated in a manner similar to states under the Clean Air Act.

HUMAN TRAFFICKING

CWAG Attorney General Sean Reyes of Utah announced the guilty plea of Todd Jeremy Rettenberger to charges relating to human trafficking and related crimes. Rettenberger was sentenced to one to fifteen years in prison for second-degree felony human trafficking and zero to five years for third-degree felony exploitation of prostitution. The sentences will run concurrently. "The victims of this trafficker were girls, barely older than teens, forced into prostitution against their will and compelled to stay in "the life" by threats against their well-being and against their families. I am thrilled they will not have to endure a trial and be forced to relive the atrocities perpetrated upon them. It is imperative that we now keep these survivors safe, avoid revictimizing them, empower them with resources and do everything we can to help them heal and reclaim their lives," said Attorney General Reyes. "Importantly, this case demonstrates that human trafficking is real. It exists in Utah as it does across the nation and around the world. It takes many forms and can happen anywhere.

CWAG Attorney General Sean Reyes of Utah is supporting a bill before the Utah legislature that would fight the trafficking of adopted children. The new law would implement safeguards to protect adopted children from "rehoming," the illegal practice of adoptive parents giving away their adopted children away to strangers without the usual home study or background checks performed to protect children. At the invitation of the US Department of State, the Utah Attorney General's Office joined national a committee two years ago tasked with addressing the illegal phenomenon and exploring model legislation for other states around the country. The bill, HB 199, was passed out of the House Judiciary Committee with a favorable recommendation. "Getting the bill out of committee is a positive step in the right direction," said Attorney General Reyes. "This bill isn't designed to be overly punitive towards adoptive parents. We know the vast majority of adoptive parents have only the most noble of intentions when bringing adopted children into their families. But the reality is that many adopted kids coming from overseas environments have been victims of terrible abuse in war-torn countries or experienced severe trauma from the horrors of torture, famine, abuse or other atrocities. Some adoptive parents who become overwhelmed by the cultural, emotional and psychological challenges of highly traumatized children, panic and end up desperate. In too many situations, parents have literally given away their children to strangers like they might with old furniture, beginning with an online communication or transaction."

CONSUMER PROTECTION

CWAG Attorney General Mark Brnovich of Arizona announced a judge dismissed more than 1,000 frivolous lawsuits filed by a serial litigator against Arizona small businesses. Advocates for Individuals with Disabilities flooded state courts with more than 1,700 lawsuits against Valley businesses in 2016. The copy-and-paste lawsuits alleged that businesses' parking lots did not comply with regulations related to persons with disabilities. Many of the issues were minor and easily fixable, but the lawsuits sought thousands of dollars in damages and attorneys' fees. "Arizona is not going to tolerate serial litigators who try to shake down small hardworking businesses by exploiting the disability community," said Attorney General Brnovich. "Today's ruling is a victory for the rule of law."

CWAG Associate Attorney General Pam Bondi of Florida and the Federal Trade Commission announced the entry of the last consent judgment shutting down an illegal robocalling scheme used to sell Florida cruise line vacations. The unlawful telemarketing campaign flooded consumers from across the country with billions of unwanted robocalls, averaging 12 to 15 million illegal calls a day, and generated millions of dollars for the companies. The fifth and final consent judgment announced bars owner Fred Accuardi and his companies from assisting or participating in actions that violate telemarketing laws. In 2015, Attorney General Bondi, in partnership with the FTC and other state attorneys general, filed a lawsuit against Caribbean Cruise Line, Inc., a marketing company, as well as seven other companies, for alleged involvement in a scheme that used political survey robocalls to illegally sell cruise vacations. The joint complaint was filed in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida. The complaint alleged that the defendants' robocalls violated both Florida and federal law by unlawfully using political surveys as a pretext to place sales calls pitching Bahamas cruises and related vacation packages to individuals on do-not-call lists and other individuals they were prohibited from calling.

Statement from Attorney General Tom Miller on AFSCME Lawsuit over Collective Bargaining Law

Miller to ask Executive Council to approve outside legal counsel to defend state

DES MOINES – Attorney General Tom Miller today announced that he will ask the Iowa Executive Council to seek outside legal counsel to defend the state against the lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of House File 291, the collective bargaining bill signed into law on Friday.

The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) Iowa Council 61 filed the lawsuit Monday in Polk County District Court.

The Executive Council, comprised of the governor, secretary of state, state treasurer, secretary of agriculture and state auditor, must approve the appointment of outside counsel to represent the state.

“As the new collective bargaining law has the potential to existentially threaten the viability of public sector unions—many of the very same organizations that have supported me in the past—I am recommending that the Executive Council seek outside legal representation to defend this lawsuit in order to avoid any questions about a potential conflict,” Miller said. “While the extraordinarily professional and skilled attorneys in my office have vigorously defended Governor Branstad and the legislature in past lawsuits involving AFSCME, I think it’s most prudent in this highly charged legal dispute to avoid any appearance of politics clouding our office’s legal representation and judgment.”

defense, internal investigations, and business litigation. She has defended individuals, companies, and boards of directors in governmental investigations and at trial. Prior to joining Davis Brown, Holly practiced at her own boutique white collar and business litigation firm in Des Moines. She earned her J.D. from the University of Iowa College of Law

Appeals Chief Judge David Danilson. As I chatted with them informally and then listened to their prepared remarks, I was reminded of how incredibly proud I am that Iowa has merit selection instead of judicial elections, to minimize politics swaying our scales of justice in one way or the other. As Chief Justice Cady noted, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce ranked Iowa's court system as 4th in the nation. The State of Nevada has adopted a court of appeals system mirrored after Iowa's mode.

As Chief Danilson (sort of) joked, the Iowa Court of Appeals is like the second chair lawyer at trial who does the majority of the work but gets none of the recognition. Read more (and see the tattoo).

Something for everyone at Feb. CLE

The PCBA Bench and Bar Committee invites you to attend its Spring CLE on February 23 from 1:30 p.m. to 4:45 p.m. at the ISBA Conference Center. The topics are: Juvenile Justice, Iowa Access to Justice Commission, Cyber-security Risk Management Basics, and a Legislative Update. We anticipate three hours of State CLE credit to be approved. Following the seminar, there will be a Networking Social with complimentary Hors d'Oeuvres and beverages.

The CLE is free for current PCBA members. If you are not a member, you may join the PCBA on the day of the seminar in order to attend for free. Click here for the registration form. If you are unable to attend the seminar, you are welcome to join us for the Networking Social following the CLE, which will begin at 4:45 p.m.

More CLE opportunities coming up

Mark your calendar for two additional noon hour CLE seminars sponsored by the PCBA Bench and Bar Committee.

The first, on Monday, March 27, from noon to 1 p.m., at the Polk County Justice Center, will feature Christopher Patterson, District Court Administrator, on the Court Complex overview; Anne Sheeley, Polk County Clerk of Court on Case Processing; and where she graduated with Distinction.

Lara Q. Plaisance has joined Hopkins & Huebner, P.C as a shareholder attorney in the Des Moines office. Lara earned her J.D. from University of Missouri-Kansas City School of Law. She will practice primarily in workers' compensation.

Plaisance

Hilligas

Aaron Hilligas has joined Ahlers & Cooney, P.C. as an Associate Attorney. Aaron is a member of the firm's Employment & Labor Law practice area, serving public entities, higher education and K-12 educational institutions. He advises clients on a variety of labor and employment related matters and represents employers in collective bargaining agreement negotiations, in cases before the Public Employment Relations Board, and in grievance arbitrations. Prior to Ahlers & Cooney, Aaron worked in the Office of the General Counsel for the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) for the Division of Advice, as well as in-house as an attorney with labor organizations covering a variety of industries in the public and private sectors, including K-12 and higher education. He received his Juris Doctor in 2002 from the University of Wisconsin.

Kudos

Attorneys Jason Comisky and Kristin Billingsley Cooper were recently elected shareholders at Ahlers & Cooney, P.C.

Hon. Rachael Seymour, District Associate Judge - 5th Judicial District on Juvenile Court.

The second, on Thursday, April 20, from noon to 1 p.m., at the U.S. District Court, will feature Judge Helen Adams who will discuss proposed local federal rules. Click here to download the registration form.

Students wanted for Law Day contest

Each year, the Polk County Bar Association teams up with ARAG to give Polk County students in grades K through 12 a chance to get creative with the law as part of our Law Day celebration. Chief among the activities is the visual arts, music, essay, and poetry competitions.

This year's theme, The 14th Amendment: Transforming American Democracy, enables students to explore the many ways that the 14th Amendment has reshaped American law and society. Ratified during Reconstruction a century and a half ago, the Fourteenth Amendment serves as the cornerstone of landmark civil rights legislation, the foundation for numerous federal court decisions protecting fundamental rights, and a source of inspiration for all those who advocate for equal justice under law.

Click here for complete details. The deadline for entries is April 10, and the winning students will be honored at the PCBA Annual Meeting and Law Day Luncheon on May 9.

We're looking for Law Day sponsors

Please consider supporting our Law Day program and enriching the experience for Polk County area students. For just $100, you or your firm can sponsor a winning student, the student's teacher, and the student's parent or parents. Sponsors may also sit with the winning students at our Law Day

CWAG Roundup February 16, 2017

Dear Nathan,

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

[\[Click Here for Full Articles\]](#)

UPCOMING EVENTS

2017 CWAG Annual Meeting Registration Now Open!

San Francisco, CA

July 30- August 2, 2017

The Conference of Western Attorneys General along with CWAG Chair and Hawaii Attorney General Doug Chin invite you to the 2017 CWAG Annual Meeting in San Francisco, CA, July 30-August 2, 2017. Join your colleagues as CWAG explores the most pertinent legal issues during the days and spend the evenings enjoying the urban charm of the city at our social events.

To register online use the following link: 2017 CWAG Annual Meeting Registration

If you have attended an annual meeting in the past few years your contact information has been saved in the registration system. Please review your contact information during the registration process to make sure it is current.

To register, go to "Sign In" and enter the email address and password you or your assistant previously provided. If you can't recall your password, click on the "Forgot Password" link and your password will be sent to the email that is saved in the system.

If you have not previously registered for the annual meeting go to "New Registration", enter your email and create a personal password to be used for future registrations.

Early Bird Registration: The cutoff date for Early Bird registration is Friday, June 2, 2017 at 5:00pm (PT). All registrations received after this time and date will be charged the regular registration fee.

Onsite Registration: Pre-registering for primary attendees and guests who would like to attend any of the substantive or social opportunities is required. CWAG must make commitments to the hotel and activity vendors based on pre-registered guests prior to our arrival. The registration fees cover the cost of activities and meals at the conference which have been pre-arranged. Given the necessity of pre planning, we will not be accepting any onsite registrations.

Hotel room cutoff: the last day to reserve your room within the CWAG room block is Friday, July 7, 2017. If the room block sells out prior to that time, reservations will be accepted on a space available basis. The reservation number for the Westin St. Francis is 1.888.627.8546. Ask for the CWAG room block to receive our discounted rates.

Chair's Initiative and Western Pacific AG Summit

Honolulu, Hawaii

March 13-16, 2017

This conference will be held at the famous Royal Hawaiian Hotel. We will begin with a welcome reception on Monday, March 13, 2017, at 5:00pm. The Western Pacific Attorney General Summit will take place from 8:00am to 5:00pm on Tuesday, March 14, 2017. The Chair Initiative will take place on Wednesday, March 15th, from 8:00am to 5:00pm, and will conclude on Thursday, March 16th at 12:00pm. This conference is open to all private sector and government attendees. Click here to download registration materials. The preliminary draft agenda for the meeting can be downloaded here. Registration deadline and hotel room block cutoff is Friday, February 24, 2017.

The Pacific Summit will focus on major issues facing the Pacific jurisdictions, such as climate change, immigration, self-government, consumer retail access and economic growth. The Chair Initiative will explore how states have lead the way to solve national issues when the federal government has experienced deadlock and what the future holds for state action. The states are a vital and active source for ideas to solve important issues facing society. States lead the way on consumer and financial protection, healthcare, protecting privacy and so much more. Even when partisan-politics keep the federal government from being as effective as it may, the states can put aside politics to address the needs of their citizens.

Alabama Governor Robert J. Bentley appointed Marshall County District Attorney, Steve Marshall, to serve as the 50th Attorney General of Alabama. Former Attorney General Luther Strange was appointed to the United States Senate following Senator Jeff Sessions' appointment and confirmation as Attorney General of the United States. Following his appointment, Mr. Marshall said, "It is a great honor to be named Attorney General and I am thankful to Governor Bentley for the opportunity to serve the people of Alabama. The time spent working alongside law enforcement for the last 20 years has been a remarkable privilege. As Attorney General, I will continue to support their efforts to keep Alabamians safe and free from violent crime."

IMMIGRATION

It was reported in last week's Roundup that CWAG Attorney General Bob Ferguson of Washington had obtained an injunction against President Trump's executive order on immigration and that the matter was pending before the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. The Court of Appeals subsequently affirmed the lower court's ruling. "No one is above the law, not even the President," Attorney General Ferguson said. "The President should withdraw this flawed, rushed and dangerous Executive Order, which caused chaos across the country. If he refuses, I will continue our work to hold him accountable to the Constitution."

CWAG Attorneys General Xavier Becerra of California, Ellen Rosenblum of Oregon, Bob Ferguson of Washington and CWAG Associate Attorneys General Peter Kilmartin of Rhode Island and TJ Donovan of Vermont along with the state attorneys general from Massachusetts and New York filed a friend-of-the-court brief in the U.S. Supreme Court in Jennings v Rodriguez, a case involving the federal government's authority to detain non-citizens pending completion of their removal proceedings. The plaintiffs in this case are non-citizens who have been detained by federal authorities for longer than six months. They argue that the Constitution requires them to receive the same basic protection enjoyed by other non-criminals who are detained by the federal government: a hearing to determine whether their continued detention is justified. The plaintiffs do not dispute the government's right to detain individuals who are dangerous or pose a flight risk; they are only asking for an opportunity to be released on bond if the government cannot show that they present such a danger.

ENERGY

CWAG Attorney General Cynthia H. Coffman of Colorado announced that she has filed suit against Boulder County for an illegal moratorium on oil and gas development. The Boulder County Board of County Commissioners imposed a moratorium on all new applications for oil or gas development in Boulder County five years ago. The Boulder Commissioners since have re-imposed or extended the moratorium eight separate times. Two of those extensions were passed after the Colorado Supreme Court ruled in May 2016 that local bans on oil or gas development are preempted if they conflict with the Colorado Oil and Gas Conservation Act, which regulates all aspects of oil and gas development and operations within the State.

CWAG Attorney General Tim Fox of Montana filed for intervention on behalf of the State of Montana in the electricity rate proceeding of Washington utility Puget Sound Energy, before the Washington Utilities and Transportation Commission. PSE is a part-owner of the Colstrip generating facility, and entered into a legal settlement last year establishing a shut-down date of July 2022 for Colstrip Units 1 and 2. "It's important that the state of Montana has a seat at the table throughout this rate proceeding so our interests can be adequately represented," said Attorney General Fox. "The state of Montana wants to make sure that the company makes good on its legal obligations to Montana's communities, workers and environment affected by the operation and potential retirement of coal-fired generating units in our state."

CONSUMER PROTECTION

CWAG Attorney General Bob Ferguson of Washington announced that a King County judge ordered the makers of 5-hour ENERGY® to pay nearly $4.3 million in penalties, attorneys' fees and costs for multiple violations of the state Consumer Protection Act. Attorney General Ferguson filed a lawsuit against the companies in 2014, alleging violations of the state Consumer Protection Act. After a three-week trial last September, Judge Beth Andrus ruled in the state's favor, finding that claims in the companies' advertising were deceptive, and therefore violated the Consumer Protection Act. The deceptive claims - that the popular flavored energy shots is superior to coffee, that doctors recommend 5-hour ENERGY®, and that its decaffeinated formula provides energy, alertness and focus that lasts for hours - appeared in press releases, on the internet and in thousands of print and broadcast ads. "The makers of 5-hour ENERGY® broke the law in pursuit of profit, and now they are paying for it," Attorney General Ferguson said.

CWAG Associate Attorney General Pam Bondi of Florida announced the multimillion dollar resolution of a lawsuit against several related unsecured loan services companies and operators. The three consent judgments and one settlement agreement obtained by Attorney General Bondi's Office resolve allegations that the defendant companies and their principals unlawfully charged cash-strapped consumers fees ranging from $500 to more than $1,000 for online lending services that consumers could perform on their own for free. The defendants allegedly convinced consumers to pay illegal up-front fees by falsely guaranteeing that a lender in the defendants' lender network had pre-approved the consumers for loans. "This result will provide full restitution to consumers victimized by this fraudulent loan scheme and ensure no more consumers are harmed by these unscrupulous practices," said Attorney General Bondi.

FIGHTING DRUG ABUSE

CWAG Associate Attorney General Brad Schimel of Wisconsin, the Drug Enforcement Administration, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Marshfield Clinic, and the Wisconsin Department of Justice Division of Criminal Investigation, testified at a legislative informational hearing on the growing challenge of methamphetamine abuse in Wisconsin. "Meth is notorious for not only destroying the user, but the entire family and community around each user," said Attorney General Schimel. "Wisconsin's top law enforcement agency has been working with federal law enforcement to assess the threat of meth and every level of government has made a commitment to stop this horrible drug from continuing to destroy our communities. Today's hearing gave legislators the information they will need to protect their communities and help law enforcement battle back meth."

FIGHTING PUBLIC CORRUPTION

CWAG Associate Attorney General Jim Hood of Mississippi announced that he has filed 11 civil RICO lawsuits against all corporate and individual conspirators in the prison bribery scandal, including a former Mississippi Department of Corrections Commissioner. "The state of Mississippi has been defrauded through a pattern of bribery, kickbacks, misrepresentations, fraud, concealment, money laundering and other wrongful conduct," Attorney General Hood said. "These individuals and corporations that benefited by stealing from taxpayers must not only pay the state's losses, but state law requires that they must also forfeit and return the entire amount of the contracts paid by the state. We are also seeking punitive damages to punish these conspirators and to deter those who might consider giving or receiving kickbacks in the future."

Week One

We kicked off the 87th General Assembly on Monday. The week is marked by several speeches by our new Senate Democratic Leader Rob Hogg did a good job of providing our perspective on the new session link to his remarks. The week also witnessed Governor Branstad give his final Condition of the State address and Iowa Chief Justice Mark Cady deliver his State of the Judiciary remarks.

The Chief Justice always gets a warm welcome. He has done a great job putting in place cost-effective solutions for courts that reduce recidivism and strengthen families.

It was a different beginning this year. It was good to see my colleagues, staff and people that work in the minority is going to take some getting used to. Lot of bad ideas being cued up by the new Republican

In my new committee assignment as the ranking member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, I attended a budget briefing on Tuesday morning to learn about the Governor's budget proposal for next year and his request for $110 million from the current year's budget. He has proposed $25 million in cuts to our public schools and almost $9 million in cuts to community colleges. The legislative Republicans are working on their own $110 million. That should develop soon. Big business tax cuts and tax giveaways are the fastest growing spending, and have undermined the state budget. They need to be on the table as the Republicans deal to cut services and spending.

I also spent several hours this week preparing for the political and punitive assault on the Iowa women that get health care services from one of 12 Planned Parenthood clinics in Iowa. The Republicans have filed a bill in the Senate. The bill prohibits family planning funding from going to any provider that may also provide abortion services. This bill will significantly reduce state or federal funding currently goes to fund abortions. This bill will significantly reduce low-income women and men to health screenings and services, contraception and family planning services.

University of Iowa student leaders Andrew Namanny, Lauren Freeman and Rachel Zuckerman talked with me Tuesday morning when they visited the Statehouse with members of the Iowa Board of Regents.

On the first day, one of the jobs of the new Senate is the task of selecting seats. This is done by seniority. The Senate secretary reads off the names of senators starting with the most senior member. When your name is called, you say the seat number you want. Longer-serving members tend to select seats in the back row of the chamber where you have easy access to your desk. New members get the seats that are down front or inside the chamber.

Democrats sit on the left side of the chamber and the Republicans occupy the right. The center row seats mix, as the Republicans picked up seats and moved into territory that was recently held by Democrats.

I stayed in the same seat I have had for ten years. I continue to sit in a row between Senators Amanda R. Liz Mathis. We all stayed put for the next two years. At the end of the selection process, it was clear to all is an immense honor to occupy ANY seat in the beautiful Iowa Senate Chamber!

Please share your thoughts with me throughout the legislative session. You can call me at the Statehouse 281-3371. At home, I can be reached at 319-337-6280. ## Iowa courts make our state safer and enhance quality of life

In his annual State of the Judiciary address, Chief Justice Mark Cady laid out the importance of investing courts and why it matters for families, public safety and all Iowa taxpayers.

Our courts have done a lot of good on a tight budget over the years, but the Branstad-Reynolds proposal even more will deprive many Iowans of justice, and could stop the progress and innovation Iowa's world-class are known for.

In recent years, the Judicial Branch has improved juvenile court services. By increasing the number of juvenile court officers, they are able to have more face-to-face interactions with young offenders, resulting in fewer future offenses. In fact, the number of juvenile offenders entering Iowa's prison system has been cut in half.

In addition, diversion programs for low-risk youth help to keep them out of the court system. These programs are so successful that more communities and schools want to implement them.

Iowa's specialty courts—including drug, mental health, domestic abuse and veterans' courts—have done a great job of tackling the problems that lead to crime. These courts focus on helping offenders change their behavior so they don't commit new crimes.

The success of our courts is good for all Iowans. Courts improve our quality of life by making us safer, keeping families together, helping offenders become productive members of their communities, saving taxpayer dollars and setting young people on a positive track to adulthood.

Republican budget mess hurts hard-working Iowans

Iowa's non-partisan budget experts say that policies pushed by Republicans have slowed the state's economy and led to a big downturn in revenue growth.

Republicans have exponentially increased new tax breaks for corporations, which now top $500-million-a-year. They're promising even more tax breaks to their special interest friends, despite the state budget deficit. Tax giveaways have not produced the good jobs, skilled workers, better incomes or stronger economy that Republicans promised. Turning Medicaid over to out-of-state, for-profit companies has made the financial mess even worse.

The blame rests squarely on the shoulders of Governor Branstad, Lt. Governor Reynolds and Republican Party leaders. As a result of their actions, the state is in a $113 million budget hole. Now they're making cuts to programs that Iowans depend on, including public safety and education.

They have failed to support efforts over the past six years to grow the economy for all Iowa families. They promised to create 200,000 jobs. They broke their promise to help create the best schools in the nation. They broke their promise to increase family incomes by 25 percent. They broke their promise to save taxpayer money by privatizing Medicaid.

Profits have gone up, but wages have not kept up. We must put the focus back on working families. We need:

- Raise Iowa's minimum wage. It is lower than the states around us. It is so low that full-time Iowa workers actually qualify for public assistance.
- End wage theft so that workers get paid what they're owed.
- Make sure women earn equal pay for equal work.

Iowans face real problems

We certainly have our work cut out for us this year. Here are a few of the battles ahead:

- School funding - After shortchanging schools to make way for corporate tax breaks, Republicans continue their assault on education by shifting hundreds of millions in taxpayer dollars from public schools to homeschools and private schools. Education is the foundation of our state, our economy and our future. Adequate school funding is a must. Without high-quality schools, we can't possibly attract new great businesses and good jobs.
- Women's health - Republicans want to limit medical decisions for women and reduce access to cancer screenings, birth control and other health care services. In particular, targeting organizations like Planned Parenthood that provide affordable preventive care to low-income Iowans could harm the health and lives of thousands of women and other patients.

- Fair wages and benefits - One of the top priorities of Republican legislative leaders is to end Iowa's bipartisan 40-year-old law that allows law enforcement officers, firefighters, teachers and public employees to bargain with their employers for fair wages, health care insurance and other benefits. The current law is working well in Iowa, and has since it was adopted by a Republican Legislature and Republican Governor Robert D. Ray in the early 1970s. We all benefit when labor and management can work together on wages and benefits.

2017 CWAG Annual Meeting

San Francisco, CA

July 30- August 2, 2017

ATTORNEY GENERAL OFFICE NEWS

CWAG Attorney General Kamala D. Harris of California stepped down as California Attorney General and was sworn in to the United States Senate in Washington, D.C. Before resigning, Attorney General Harris named Kathleen "Kate" Alice Kenealy Chief Deputy Attorney General. Ms. Kenealy will lead the California Department of Justice as Acting Attorney General until such time as Governor Brown's selected candidate, Congressman Xavier Becerra (D-LA), is confirmed by the state legislature as California's next Attorney General. Acting Attorney General Kenealy joined the Office of the Attorney General in August 2003 as a Deputy Attorney General in the Natural Resources Law Section. She became the section's Senior Assistant Attorney General in September 2010. For more than five years, Acting Attorney General Kenealy has served as the Chief Assistant Attorney General for the Civil Law Division. In that capacity, she has led the office's representation of state officials, state employees, and more than 200 state agencies. The Civil Division provides advice to its client agencies, defends cases brought against them, and prosecutes cases to vindicate state interests.

HUMAN TRAFFICKING

In observance of National Human Trafficking Awareness Month, CWAG Attorney General Tim Fox of Montana invites Montanans to view the "Faces of Freedom: Voices Calling for the End of Modern Day Slavery" traveling portrait exhibit when it comes to the state on January 11. Faces of Freedom raises awareness about the realities and effects of human trafficking and other forms of violent oppression in the world today. The exhibit celebrates human trafficking survivors and presents opportunities to engage people in learning more about this form of modern day slavery. "Human trafficking is a multi-billion dollar criminal industry that occurs all over the world, including here in Montana," said Attorney General Tim Fox. "No matter where this crime happens, the common denominator is that its victims have lost their freedom. My office is pleased to partner with Soroptimists International - Whitefish and the Freedom 58 Project to bring these powerful portraits of human trafficking survivors to Montana. We invite the public to see these beautiful paintings and reflect on the real-life journeys of their subjects as they move from oppression to rescue, and ultimately, to justice and freedom."

CWAG Associate Attorney General Pam Bondi of Florida announced the arrest of an Ocala man on charges related to human trafficking. Ryan Gemelle Poole faces one count of human trafficking, one count of deriving support from proceeds of prostitution and one count of using a two-way communication device to facilitate a felony. The five-month long investigation revealed that Poole allegedly exploited a female victim to include taking control of all of her money, selling her and forcing her to participate in numerous acts of prostitution. Attorney General Bondi's Office of Statewide Prosecution is the prosecuting authority for the charges in this case. "Human trafficking is an abhorrent crime and the allegations in this case are sickening-further proving that we must do everything in our power to eliminate human trafficking in Florida," said Attorney General Bondi. "Working with our great law enforcement partners like Marion County Sheriff Emery Gainey and the Marion County Sheriff's Office, the subject of this investigation was arrested and justice will be served."

PROTECTING THE ENVIRONMENT

CWAG Attorney General Bob Ferguson of Washington filed five felony charges in Chelan County Superior Court against a Cashmere man and his asbestos abatement business. Timothy Powell and his business, A1 Asbestos LLC, are accused of providing false asbestos waste shipment records to an Okanogan County landfill, including forging signatures on one of the documents. Powell and A1 Asbestos are also accused of offering false statements to the state Department of Labor & Industries about the start dates of asbestos abatement work in an attempt to avoid worksite safety inspections. "Strict rules governing the disposal of asbestos waste exist to protect workers and the public, and they must be followed," Attorney General Ferguson said. Attorney General Ferguson has made prosecuting environmental crimes a priority of his administration. Since 2013, he has brought environmental prosecutions leading to 19 criminal convictions, and restitution orders in excess of $900,000.

ENDANGERED SPECIES

The federal government offered five possible plans recently for limiting mining on federal land in the West to protect the vulnerable greater sage grouse, but it isn't saying which it prefers. In Wyoming, the rules would affect sage grouse habitat on federal lands north of Rock Springs, as well as a patch of land on the borders with Idaho and Utah, south of the Bridger-Teton National Forest. The options range from banning new mining activity on about 15,000 square miles for up to 20 years to imposing no additional restrictions on mine locations. Under all the options, mining and exploration projects already approved or underway could proceed. Energy companies could still extract oil and gas from any restricted lands, but they would have to use directional drilling from some distance away to avoid disturbing the surface. After years spent creating plans to mitigate drilling and mining of energy resources in sage grouse habitats, some are unsure of the need to further remove swaths of land from potential future development. Wyoming has been the vanguard in a collaboration of government and private interests; from ranchers and oil firms to environmentalists and outdoorsmen, to negotiate a balance between industry and sage grouse conservation.

PUBLIC LANDS

In perhaps the final major act of conservation of his administration, President Barack Obama designated 1.35 million acres in southeast Utah and 300,000 acres in Nevada as two new national monuments. The Bears Ears National Monument in Utah, named for twin buttes that poke above the horizon, will protect a diverse southwestern landscape that the novelist Wallace Stegner wrote could "fill up the eye and overflow the soul." It includes soaring red-rock formations, piñon-juniper mesas, 12,000-foot-high mountain peaks, and secluded sandstone canyons that harbor well-preserved prehistoric dwellings and rock-art panels, more than 100,000 Native American cultural and archaeological sites in all. It's among the most significant archaeological areas in the United States. The 300,000-acre Gold Butte National Monument, which lies between Lake Mead and the Grand Canyon, is also home to significant cultural resources, such as Native American petroglyphs, historic mining sites, and pioneer-era artifacts.

CYBER SECURITY

A code associated with a broad Russian hacking campaign dubbed Grizzly Steppe by the federal government has been detected on a laptop associated with a Vermont electric utility but not connected to the grid, the utility said. "We took immediate action to isolate the laptop and alerted federal officials of this finding," the Burlington Electric Department said in a statement. "Our team is working with federal officials to trace this malware and prevent any other attempts to infiltrate utility systems. We have briefed state officials and will support the investigation fully." The Department of Homeland Security alerted utilities about a malware code used in Grizzly Steppe, the Burlington Electric Department said. "We acted quickly to scan all computers in our system for the malware signature. We detected the malware in a single Burlington Electric Department laptop not connected to our organization's grid systems," it said.

As lawyers, we dutifully attend CLEs and amass our ethics credits. We hear speeches about civility. We know we are duty-bound to act with "professional courtesy and professional integrity in the fullest sense of those terms." Iowa Standards for Professional Conduct, Rule 33.1(1). Are we collectively fulfilling this obligation? Are you personally living it? Or, has the negativity and turmoil in the last few months led us astray? Read more....

All about the Des Moines Social Club

Mark your calendar and plan to join us on Tuesday, Jan. 10, for the first PCBA luncheon of the new year featuring Pete De Kock, executive director of the Des Moines Social Club. Pete joined the Social Club as Executive Director in 2015. He leads the DMSC team with specific responsibilities around org strategy, team building, fundraising, community partnerships, and finances. He is a graduate of Grinnell College and Harvard University, where he studied political and social ethics.

Pete De Kock

The luncheon will be held at the ISBA Building, 625 E. Court, from noon to 1 p.m. Tickets are $17 in advance and $19 at the door, but keep in mind that space is limited and we may not be able to accommodate walk ins. Click here for details and a reservation form or call 243-3904.

Stephanie joined the firm as an associate attorney in the firm's litigation division. She earned her J.D. from The University of Iowa College of Law in May 2015. Prior to joining the Bradshaw Law Firm, Stephanie clerked for Justice Thomas D. Waterman of the Iowa Supreme Court.

Get up close with the Court

We invite you to be our valentine and attend the PCBA Bench & Bar Luncheon on Tuesday, Feb. 14, at noon. This year's featured guests will be Iowa Supreme Court Chief Justice Mark Cady and Court of Appeals Chief Judge David Danilson. Watch the PCBA website for details as they become available.

Abigail joined the firm as an associate attorney in the firm's transactional division, representing clients in the area of Wills, Trusts, Estate Planning, Probate Law, and Real Estate Law. She earned her J.D. from Valparaiso University Law School in 2009. Prior to joining the Bradshaw Law Firm, Abigail worked as a wealth management and trust officer, and general counsel, for a local bank.

Attention Family Law attorneys

The Polk County Bar Association Family Law Committee invites you to attend the annual transition meeting with the Family Law Judges, which is scheduled for Tuesday, Dec. 20, from noon until 1:30 p.m. at the Polk County Courthouse, 500 Mulberry Street, in Courtroom 302. Chief Judge Arthur Gamble, Judges Eliza Ovrrom, Douglas Staskal and the newly appointed Judge will be in attendance to discuss the transition and answer any questions that you may have.

Robert has joined the litigation division of the firm as an associate attorney. He earned his J.D. from Drake University Law School in May 2012. While attending law school, Robert clerked for both the Bradshaw Law Firm and the Honorable Robert B. Hanson of the 5th Judicial District in Polk County, Iowa. Prior to joining the Bradshaw Law Firm, Robert was engaged in private practice in Des Moines.

Member Spotlight: Nathan Mundy

This is the latest in a series of features on our own PCBA members. The PCBA Membership Committee is accepting nominations for future "Member Spotlight" segments. Please email your nominations to Jessica Cleerman at cleerj1@nationwide.com.

Tell us about yourself:

I am Nathan Mundy and I am an attorney in private practice in Des Moines. I am married to another attorney, Anna Murdy, who is in-house at Principal Financial Group. We met at Drake Law School in 2004 and were married in 2007. We have two wonderful boys, Jack (5) and Ben (1). We live in Des Moines on the Northwest side with our Wheaten Terrier, Tessie.

I was born on an Air Force base in Mountain Home, Idaho. We lived there for two years until we moved to Cannon Air Force Base in New Mexico. We moved to Des Moines when I was in first grade and I have lived here ever since. I went to Lincoln High School where I was All-Conference in football, ran track including a role on the team for the 1600m medley relay at the State Track Meet, participated in show choir, some small theater roles, and the State-Champion All-Male Dance Team. I was moderately successful in the academic classroom.

I received a football scholarship to play at St. Ambrose University in Davenport, IA. While I only played football for two years, it did introduce me to the next phase in my life, the law. There I majored in Political Science and Philosophy and founded the SAU Chapter of the Phi Alpha Delta Law Fraternity and re-started the Mock Trial Program as its captain. I also served on the Student Government Association and was on the committee that drafted the SGA Mission Statement. I was also an alumni ambassador to our vast regional alumni network.

Students wanted for Law Day contest

Each year, the Polk County Bar Association teams up with ARAG to give Polk County students a chance to get creative with the law as part of our Law Day celebration. Chief among the activities is the visual arts, music, essay and poetry competition for students in grades 6 through 12.

This year's theme, The Fourteenth Amendment: Transforming American Democracy, provides the opportunity for students to explore the many ways that the Fourteenth Amendment has reshaped American law and society. Through its Citizenship, Due Process and Equal Protection clauses, this transformative amendment advanced the rights of all Americans. It also played a pivotal role in extending the reach of the Bill of Rights to the states. Ratified during Reconstruction a century and a half ago, the Fourteenth Amendment serves as the cornerstone of landmark civil rights legislation, the foundation for numerous federal court decisions protecting fundamental rights, and a source of inspiration for all those who advocate for equal justice under law.

The deadline for entries is April 10. Click here for complete details. The winning students will be honored at the PCBA Annual Meeting and Law Day Luncheon on Tuesday, May 9.

Support the Volunteer Lawyers Project and get a tax deduction

As 2016 draws to a close, our attention turns to year-end finances and tax returns. Don't forget that you can make a contribution to the Polk County Bar Association Volunteer Lawyers Project before the end of the year and get a tax deduction.

The PCBA VLP is a charitable organization established with the mission of providing legal services to low income residents of Polk County. With your help, PCBA VLP is one of the most successful volunteer lawyer programs in the country, with Polk County lawyers donating approximately 5,000 hours of their time annually.

Unfortunately, demand for PCBA VLP services has never been higher while our funding continues to decline. To help make it easier to support our efforts, The PCBA VLP now offers you the ability to make donations on a monthly, quarterly, or annual basis - all you need to do is check the appropriate option on your PCBA membership renewal form. And don't forget that the PCBA VLP is a tax-exempt, charitable organization. That means any donation you make is tax deductible. You can also designate the PCBA VLP as the recipient on your United Way donation.

Public input sought on statewide social studies standards

The Iowa Department of Education is seeking input from Iowans on a draft of proposed statewide social studies standards for students in kindergarten through 12th grade. The draft represents the first statewide effort to update Iowa's social studies standards, which were adopted in 2008. A review team will take into consideration public feedback and is expected to make final recommendations to the State Board of Education in the spring. Iowa's academic standards are the subject of ongoing review as part of the Governor's Executive Order 83. The online survey is available through Jan. 9. A public forum will also be held Jan. 9 from 4:30 to 6 p.m. at the Heartland Area Education Agency, 6500 Corporate Drive in Johnston.

Subject: Fw: Corruption In A Caucus Town?

Ryan,

As head of both the Iowa Dept of Ed. and your relatively new, taxpayer funded Sector Partnership Leadership Counsel, we look to your leadership. Your predecessors have left taxpayers and their families out to hang in the past. Hundreds lost time and money dealing with the CIETC scandal. From there many more got ripped off in one of the most outrageous educational scams in Iowa at Vatterott College. Yet your department and the Iowa Attorney office did nothing. (Time for Iowa Term Limits?)

At the time Sen. Tom Harkin's office was inundated with Vatterott complaints. Have you read the results of his two year investigation of Private Colleges? Have you read the Executive summary of this report? Either way, you already know the level of corruption and why the IAG will go after ITT and La James, but won't go against Vatterott and the infamous Apollo Group. The sale of Vatterott to TA is phony (Please IGA...don't respond. The useless letter writing game you play has its reputation with every lawyer in town, especially Vatterott's firm.)

Will taxpayers continue to get the short end of the educational stick while the state and the corporate friends prosper? $110 million of tax money to a fertilizer company? Hy-vee got $7.5 million of our money to remodel their corporate offices? Can I have their old indoor waterfall? The list of corruption here in this state keeps getting longer. .

Now that Iowa has chosen to mix taxpayer money with corporate welfare, not to mention all the business people on your counsel, all are now in position of public accountability no matter what the excuse.

Everything in the following email is backed up with documentation, all the way to being able to produce the letters that back up what I state others have said. No, "He said, she said."

This is only the tip of the iceberg. I'm working on letting everyone know what is happening to low-income workers in Iowas manufacturing sector in what I call the New American Sweat Shops.

Feel free to call or meet with me.

CIETC scandal must not be forgotten

wfcourier.com

There will be some appeals winding through the judicial process, but the sentencing of John Bargman III last week is helping bring a conclusion to the stunning Central Iowa Employment

I believe that I can, beyond a reasonable doubt, show you the exact same thing is currently going on again. If you look closely you will see that several city and state officials that were involved then, but somehow (in my opinion, since I was there) escaped prosecution, are involved now.

I'm sure many of you already know that manufacturing outpaces agriculture here in Iowa in terms of the money produced in the people employed. While there are lots of related tax grants and corporate welfare involved in this area, very little of it seems to get the average Iowa taxpayer and small companies as intended.

US Department of Labor released millions of dollars in grant money to community colleges in central Iowa including Des Moines Area Community College. (DMACC) immediately DMACC and Iowa Workforce, courtesy of Gov. Branstad, stepped in and took over the money.

The last time the Feds let go of a major amount of money to DMACC and Iowa Workforce, three people ended up going to prison. Two were connected to Iowa Workforce, Ramona Cunningham and John Bargman, and one City Councilman, Archie Brooks. For those of us that were there for the Central Iowa Education Training Consortium scandal, I can tell you that the "David A. Vaudt from the Auditor's Office for the State of Iowa," whistleblower story is a cover-up and the truth of what happened is verifiable. The only difference, in my opinion, of what happened then and what is going on with the new Consortium is they become a little more polished and (In MY Opinion) this level of fraud has more acceptable to both elected and appointed officials here in the State of Iowa.

Bottom line is each time, both then and now, state employees, public unions, and the corporations that thrive survive on corporate welfare all benefit at the expense of the taxpayer.

Once DMACC and the Iowa Workforce got a hold the grant money they started what is called the Workforce Training Academy. They leased billboards all over the metro advertising free training in the manufacturing sector. There is no brick and mortar Workforce Trading Academy Its Workforce using DMACC facilities, thereby doubling the bureaucratic overhead and lessening the amount of money that actually makes it to the tax payers and their families and employers desperately in need of the training this grant money was intended for.

The irony seems be lost on this new State Aristocracy. Without the taxes that this middle class provides, how can their lifestyle be maintained? According to the US Dept. of Labor, Iowa's public sector workers enjoy an income that is 50% higher than those comparable in the private sector In fact, the DOL states that Iowa has the largest income gap in America. The California Policy center recently released a study showing that 26% of retired government workers make more than average currently working private sector employees.

Immediately Workforce and DMACC went to work training prisoners and convicted felons state-of-the-art welding and manufacturing techniques that were not being taught to the average Iowa taxpayer who walked in the DMACC door and enrolled in the very same program. While this may be seen as an act of benevolence, there is actually big money in this part of Iowa's prison industry. Iowa cooperation and businesses line up to hire these cons over regular Iowa tax payer because Iowa subsidizes 65% of their pay for a year. This state level "Pimping For Profit," also keeps the state employees and their public unions well paid too.

One manager at Harbor Freight Tool here in Des Moines said that Iowa Workforce is the greatest staffing agency in the world. While normal staffing agencies charge for their services, IWF not only pays the employer, they also help with the accounting. He showed me that when he submitted employees' hours to HF corporate office on the computer, a small window opened up saying that this info had been received by IWF. While this may seem like an old hole -in-the- wall store, in a forgotten strip mall, they are reporting annual sales of 6 million annually. Harbor Freight has over 700 hundred store with just one owner.

DMCC went out and bought state-of-the-art equipment including MIG welders TIG welders and aluminum welders. In the photograph you can see the one welder appears to have a sleeve wrapped around the line. Just that aluminum wire lead, not the welder, costs over $3000 and DMACC ordered several. This equipment sits in DMACCs relatively new satellite South campus and new AWS test site DMACCs own Advanced Manufacturing Center in Ankeny doesn't even come close to having this and other top of line equipment. .

This the exact equipment that potential DMACC students were shown during the pre- sign up tour welding program at DMACC South. Once students were signed up and there, welding instructor Bill Mann told students that they wouldn't be able to use the equipment because they were in the "old curriculum "or part of the Workforce Training Academy program. (<https://www.dmacc.edu/careertraining/Pages/certs-manufacturing-industrialtech.aspx#mig>) The average student who was stuck being taught the outdated stick welding with no recourse and student loans... that need to be reimbursed or forgiven. Imagine if you were that customer.

Scott Oken, Dean of Advanced Manufacturing at DMACC says all this was because they weren't sure if the Iowa Department of Education was going to approve their new curriculum. That's not true. First of all if you didn't know whether you were going to be approved why you spend hundreds of thousands of dollars on equipment? In fact DMACC News <https://www.dmacc.edu/news/Pages/20130113-2.aspx> stated that, "Nearly $1,000,000 of program-related equipment has been purchased and embedded into grant-impacted programs." Embedded? Second of all it seems that the Iowa Department of Education was on DMACC to get things moving.

Lastly there were teaching the prisoner and the ex-cons the new curriculum and had been for some time.

This new welding curriculum is a program they purchased from Hobart. Hobart has their own two-year school. Hobart manufactures Hobart welders and Miller welders. You can go online and purchase this program yourself and purchase the answers to the test as well. <https://www.welding.org/product/blueprint-reading-welders-fitters-2/>

This is the exact same third-party welding program that Ralph Young has been teaching at the city of Des Moines's Central Campus for years. What many don't know is that DMACC oversees that program too. So Scott Oken has been nothing but deceptive in any his answers? Yet another red flag

Are metro taxpayers getting double dipped on these programs if Ralph Young is teaching at the city level but DMACC overseeing at the state level? I noticed recently there was a news clip about the city and their new trade programs for high schoolers. They've always had these trade programs. Does this mean they got more grant money?

What about all the tax money that DMACC is now receiving from high school such as the ones in Warren County who can't afford shop class. How do property taxes continue to rise, but the schools seem to offer less here in Iowa? DMACC spent at least one entire semester of Advanced Manufacturing creating a schedule specifically high schoolers. It forced working adults and families to show up for classes for two hours in the middle of the day. One hour on Friday in the middle of the day. Only one high schooler ever showed up and he quit because he decided to go do something else.

Laundering Grant money and tax money first, students and taxpayers...oh, somewhere at the bottom of the list.

While the Iowa Department of Education was allegedly upset that DMACC was falling behind schedule, you have to understand that DMACC was very busy. They were cashing in on the Goldmine that they had created and running drug dealers thieves and pedophiles thru Workforce Training Academy. This program got so big they actually came to you legislatures and asked for and got more money. The need more money to hire more state employees to handoff our money to people getting better training than Iowa taxpayers themselves were getting. Did any of you legislatures actually take a look at was going on? DMACC is grateful and acknowledged you guys on their website. <https://www.dmacc.edu/news/Pages/20140213-1.aspx>

Yes they have budgets but that's just a small detail, evident when legislatures "okay" additional monies for programs that are hurting the people these programs were originally intended for. DMACC spent a lot of money becoming the new testing center for the American Welding Society. The AWS is an independent third-party welding certification the tests are not cheap and you don't get a refund if you don't pass. AWS certificates carry a lot of credibility. Quality Manufacturers Co. are the premier fabricators here in central Iowa. If you go to their website they advertise they have AWS certified welders.

If DMACC were going to make their newly purchased franchise profitable they couldn't give those tests away to taxpayers who were enrolled in their welding program. They couldn't roll the cost of the test up in federal loans student loans because AWS is a third-party vendor. So they ran the grant money through Workforce, so the coveted certifications paid for by same Iowa taxpayers who has to pay for them on their own

They made an agreement with Workforce to send them an unlimited supply of prepaid customers that include many from the Iowa Prison system. They bought equipment specifically for their new franchise operation and they spent thousands of dollars of taxpayer's money to train just one guy at DMACC to run the new operation.

They spared no expense of buying equipment that's a $60,000 sheer they bought brand-new. That's $25,000 self-propelled band saw they bought. There are Iowa taxpayers who own shops here in Iowa that can't afford to own equipment like that. More often than not, you don't need equipment like that. I'm sure that if it came out of the personal pockets of the people who make the decisions DMACC wouldn't have that equipment either. However DMACCs mantra is, it's just grant money.

When I pointed out all his equipment, I got a letter from the US Department of Labor Chicago, I've included the letter. Apparently they looked into the matter and the case is now closed? I never contacted the US Department of Labor. Who did and why? Do you know the people who accredited the Advanced Manufacturing curriculum are also out of Chicago? If you think that's a coincidence or you don't believe that all those millions of dollars came from Political Corruption Capital of the world camewithout any strings, you need to resign your position on Capitol Hill and go home.

Nathan Blake

If you take the time to read the letter, you will see Christine Quinn, regional administrator for the US Department of labor writes that she has looked into my concerns and writes, "None of the items you photographed were purchased with US DOL or TAACC CT grant funds" However if you go to DMACCS News website... <https://www.dmacc.edu/news/Pages/20150415-3.aspx>... In the last sentence they write that the testing facility was funded by grant money from the USDOL. When stories don't match at this level, it should be a red flag to all of us.

DMACC Welding Lab Earns Industry Accreditation

www.dmacc.edu

Welders can earn national certification at DMACC Southridge welding lab. The Des Moines Area Community College (DMACC) Center for Career and Professional Development ...

For those of are you on this list that have been around a while, doesn't start to look like Central Iowa Education Training Consortium part two? That is, the state is benefiting itself at the expense of the taxpayer.

But it doesn't stop there. In my opinion the fraud and mis-spent (Laundered) tax and grant money reaches another level

I read the report saying that Iowa manufacturers are desperate for people who can program CNC machines both laths and mills. This includes any other equipment such as waterjet or laser tables that also need to be programmed.

Let me show you what you get from highly funded tax and grant CNC class that exists in DMACC Advanced Manufacturing Degree program. The picture of the pink book is a photocopied nightmare that two instructors at the Advanced Manufacturing program put together with other disconnected info that they inserted. If you can read what it says, you'll see that the book is an accompaniment to a video course. Both the book and the course are from yet another third party company called CNC Concepts. Mark Rosenberry, the Adv Man. Program Chairman, says the videos were thrown away.

How this program is taught would make your jaw drop. Don't be fooled when DMACC points out the pass rate for this class because I'll be glad to tell you how student are really getting through that class.

Now take a look at the other book that I posted. This book is also a beginners guide for CNC programming and operation. It's free. You can get it online for free. It comes with an entire slideshow presentation to help you with the highlights. Once again, free. It also comes with the premier, industry standard Autodesk CAM software you need to learn how to program these machines. Say it with me, free.

This is not some cut-rate operation sponsoring in this program. Haas Automation is the largest machine tool builder for half the planet. They are also the very same manufacturers that supplied DMACC with their CNC equipment. The software is by Autodesk. Once again the very same top-of-the-line software that D Max using as well as the entire industry. But when you request information about this free software from the teachers who are teaching is program at DMACC, one of them (Co-author of the pink book) went ballistic and wrote a letter to Dean Oken. In the letter he thought DMACC should consider the legalities of handing out the software even when it wasn't DMACC giving it away. What? He also went on to imply that students had a lot of nerve asking for the program for free. It turns out student have been downloading the software for a while in order to get the help they don't seem to get from DMACC Yes, I have that memo.

It gets even better because the free book, the accompanying free slideshow and the free software are all part of a bigger program sponsored by MAV TV / Lucas Oil. Autodesk Software and Hass CNC. There is a massive library of how-to videos and step-by-step projects that you can access for free. They bought the rights to a TV show called Titan of Industry and re-named it Titian of CNC and the CNC Academy is online and FREE. They claim that they we soon be offering CNCcertifaction themselves. Yet DMACC tossed their videos and they fight students who try to find out information about the free stuff that been offered.

This is massive. It shows without a doubt that free enterprise...right here in Iowa.. can do far better and at no expense to the taxpayers. Some take it a step farther and ask why we need politicians to represent us. Can't we just vote for issues online? Lol, come on think about it.

While DMACC has no problem offer shady classes and books, it not have any problems spending $30 million on a recreation and aquatic center that nobody wanted and nobody needed. DMACC has a 50% dropout rate. Out of the remaining students, almost all those have full-time or part-time jobs that they need to go to or they have long commutes and families to get to. Nobody has time to hang out at DMACC when they're done because DMACC is a commuter school. The pool was built for the glory of Ankeny. Just check and see and you will find everyone on the Rec Center committee was either Ankeny Chamber Of Commerce or Ankeny school Board. Should Denny Purcell get back to running Farm Bureau Insurance since there are billboards here in the metro telling people not to buy Farm Bureau Insurance?

How do you explain to the unknowing tax payers the massive expense was taken on when Iowa accepted the old Maytag facility? The Des Moines Register tells people says the facility was gifted to us. The truth is, it was unloaded on us. They have been trying to get rid of it for years

Take a look at the screenshot of a text message that Rob Denson sent. He's wanting to approach Alliant Energy for a year and a half, for starters, of free electricity. Notice how they call grant money? Does this mean that Alliant energy customers will now have to absorb this expense as well as pay taxes to support DMACC? Isn't true that Aliant Energy recently created new billing rules that many feel are intended to curb the use of solar energy? How it is Rob didn't know what electrical bills would be? How is it he doesn't know if they are tax-exempt as he mentions in the text? He told the Des Moines Register exactly what the overhead would be. Another red flag.

It doesn't matter because it's not his money. It's not your money either...its grant money (Aka Fairy Dust) damn it. Lol

Nathan Blake

5/8/2017 3:01 PM

If the state and DMACC cant afford this, then lets fill in the pools, send the Ankeny High School Swim Team back to their new state of the art high schools and turn the rec center into a correctional faculty for select state, county and city politicians and other officials. Once there, we can put them in the "Pimp for Profit, "programs as a form of restitution.

Middle-class capitalism cannot afford to support his outrageous levels socialism anymore.

All the warning signs are up. Fannie Mae recently announced the price of houses are two high. Uh-oh Every major predictors says the stock markets getting ready for a big adjustment. Every Western government is insolvent. Aren't the central bank start become insolvent too? Every major civilizations been taken down by the cost of war and we will not be different. Even here in the US we can see solvency issues with Social Security and the Federal Reserve. Aren't we having solvency issues right here at home with our own public-sector pension fund?

While the peasants are at the gate with pitchforks and torches, you can either tell them to eat GMO cake or severely cut state spending and corporate welfare as well getting rid of the Aristocracy who administrate and dominate these programs We are going broke.

The original list of arrestees associated with untested SA kits was 124, however, after significant follow up with the respective law enforcement agencies and the Iowa Courts Online system, many cases dropped off the list for the following reasons: case was unfounded, case was suspended, prosecution was declined, or the victim refused to cooperate.

There were also many cases where no information could be found in the courts system. This bill did not compel the courts to cooperate with us in any fashion, so our ability to search for court records was extremely limited. Because we could not determine with certainty the offenders listed were in fact convicted, we left those names on the list and indicated "nothing found" in the case number column after exhausting all available options to find the information.

This list is all-encompassing in that every SA kit where the initial inventory indicated a conviction had been obtained has been followed up on. This should satisfy the final requirement under HF2420 for SPD.

Thanks for your quick response Mr. Gregg,

It sounds like SPD does now have interest in the general info provided for in paragraph six. We will do our best to filter down the info to the elements listed in the bill and have it to you before the March 15, deadline if not sooner.

As for the piece you reference in paragraph 3, that's going to be more difficult. The reason the offender information wasn't collected is two fold. One, the survey tool had already been disseminated to law enforcement prior to the passage of the legislation, which is something we made SPD aware of in our conversations last year and two, the survey tool also had to be approved by our federal grantor and they wouldn't have allowed for us to collect something outside the scope of the grant focus and the offender piece wouldn't have qualified. That being said, we can try to go back to the respective agencies and obtain that information, but it's likely to take some time. I can't have staff who are funded under the grant complete this work as it's outside the scope of our award/grant activities and ineligible for reimbursement which means general staff would have to take on this work while also completing their regular workload. Given what I now know about how quickly LE agencies respond to requests around this initiative, the best option will likely be to adhere to the 60 day measure you referred to in the bill and turn over the offender information as we receive it from these agencies regarding the 122 kits where convictions have already been obtained. This best adheres to the letter of the bill language and will allow time for agencies to respond, as well as for us to collect and reproduce the data for your agency.

I believe this will meet both your needs as well as the bill language, but if I've missed something please let me know.

Ms. Melohn-

Thanks for your recollections and perspective on the conversations which took place at about this time last year. However, it seems to me the best evidence of our agreement is the amendment language which was negotiated between our organizations, and which was subsequently adopted by both houses of the legislature and signed by the Governor. That language, of course, is now law.

I would respectfully propose the following path forward:

-The Office of the SPD again requests the information which is required to be provided under paragraph 3 of H.F. 2420. I may be misunderstanding your statement that this information was not collected. That would be very concerning, because that information was required to be collected under paragraph (2)(c)(5) of H.F. 2420. Since we based our submission to you all on what was discussed, it's important to have the context.

60 days-We explained to Kurt when we met, the entire survey was being conducted with federal grant dollars. Our grant required approval through the Federal Bureau of Justice Assistance (BJA) prior to releasing any of the data collected under the grant and we were up front we would not be able to provide any data until the end of the audit. We received this approval from BJA about a week and a half ago and provided this information to your agency as quickly as we were able, well within the 60 day timeframe and before the report had been made public.

The scope of this grant was to collect data to benefit victims who may not have received justice due to their SA kit not having been tested. Mr. Hamill-

Thank you sending this report. However, it does not appear to comply with the requirements of House File 2420.

For cases which resulted in a conviction, paragraph 3 of the bill very clearly requires the attorney general to provide my office with the defendant's name, case number, and county where the conviction occurred. This report does not appear to provide the information required by the law. I would also note that this information was to be provided to my office on a rolling basis, within 60 days of the AG's office receiving such information. It does not appear any ongoing disclosures occurred.

Instead, this report appears to be providing some of the information required by paragraph 6. The paragraph 6 disclosures were not limited to cases which resulted in a conviction. Therefore, the information to be provided under paragraph 6 is to be provided for all survey responses.

I respectfully request that the Office of the Attorney General provide the information required by law, namely:

- adhere to the directive of paragraph 3 of H.F. 2420, which requires the disclosure of the defendant's name, case number, and county of conviction for any cases in which a conviction was obtained for any crime associated with an untested kit;
- adhere to the directive of paragraph 6 of H.F. 2420, which requires the disclosure of the date the kit was collected, the location where the kit was collected, and the case number associated with the kit.

Attached is the information required by HF2420, which states, "If information was obtained under subsection 2, paragraph "c", subparagraph (5), that a conviction was obtained for any crime associated with an untested sexual abuse evidence collection kit, the attorney general shall provide the office of the state public defender with the defendant's name, case number, and the county where the conviction occurred, within sixty days of receiving such information."

The original list of arrestees associated with untested SA kits was 124, however, after significant follow up with the respective law enforcement agencies and the Iowa Courts Online system, many cases dropped off the list for the following reasons: case was unfounded, case was suspended, prosecution was declined, or the victim refused to cooperate.

There were also many cases where no information could be found in the courts system. This bill did not compel the courts to cooperate with us in any fashion, so our ability to search for court records was extremely limited. Because we could not determine with certainty the offenders listed were in fact convicted, we left those names on the list and indicated "nothing found" in the case number column after exhausting all available options to find the information.

This list is all-encompassing in that every SA kit where the initial inventory indicated a conviction had been obtained has been followed up on. This should satisfy the final requirement under HF2420 for SPD.

Thanks for your quick response Mr. Gregg,

It sounds like SPD does now have interest in the general info provided for in paragraph six. We will do our best to filter down the info to the elements listed in the bill and have it to you before the March 15, deadline if not sooner.

As for the piece you reference in paragraph 3, that's going to be more difficult. The reason the offender information wasn't collected is two fold. One, the survey tool had already been disseminated to law enforcement prior to the passage of the legislation, which is something we made SPD aware of in our conversations last year and two, the survey tool also had to be approved by our federal grantor and they wouldn't have allowed for us to collect something outside the scope of the grant focus and the offender piece wouldn't have qualified. That being said, we can try to go back to the respective agencies and obtain that information, but it's likely to take some time. I can't have staff who are funded under the grant complete this work as it's outside the scope of our award/grant activities and ineligible for reimbursement which means general staff would have to take on this work while also completing their regular workload. Given what I now know about how quickly LE agencies respond to requests around this initiative, the best option will likely be to adhere to the 60 day measure you referred to in the bill and turn over the offender information as we receive it from these agencies regarding the 122 kits where convictions have already been obtained. This best adheres to the letter of the bill language and will allow time for agencies to respond, as well as for us to collect and reproduce the data for your agency.

I believe this will meet both your needs as well as the bill language, but if I've missed something please let me know.

Ms. Melohn-

Thanks for your recollections and perspective on the conversations which took place at about this time last year. However, it seems to me the best evidence of our agreement is the amendment language which was negotiated between our organizations, and which was subsequently adopted by both houses of the legislature and signed by the Governor. That language, of course, is now law.

I would respectfully propose the following path forward:

-The Office of the SPD again requests the information which is required to be provided under paragraph 3 of H.F. 2420. I may be misunderstanding your statement that this information was not collected. That would be very concerning, because that information was required to be collected under paragraph (2)(c)(5) of H.F. 2420. Thanks again for the heads up about the call-in opportunity.

I don't have their individual e-mail addresses, but please pass along my appreciation to the solicitor general and the other staff members who worked closely on today's formal opinion. It was very well-researched.

The reaction from the governor's office is disappointing but demonstrates how much political pressure was on the Attorney General's Office to reach a different conclusion. Thank you for standing up for the rule of law.

Gov. Branstad, Lt. Gov. Reynolds issue statements on Pottawattamie County Sherriff's Deputies shootings

(DES MOINES) – Today, Gov. Terry Branstad and Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds released statements upon learning of shootings involving Pottawattamie County Sheriff's Deputies.

"Earlier today, I learned of the senseless act of violence that took the life of Mark Burbridge and injured Pat Morgan, both who served as Pottawattamie County Sheriff's Deputies. I am deeply saddened to hear these troubling details. I have asked state officials to assist local officials with the investigation if needed. The thoughts and prayers of Chris and I go out to the families of these officers and to those who serve beside them." –Gov. Terry Branstad

"Men and women across Iowa put their lives on the line every day to make our communities a safe place to live and raise a family. Today, we're reminded of the selfless and ultimate sacrifice they sometimes face. The State of Iowa stands ready to assist local officials in western Iowa as they grieve and mourn this loss of life. Kevin and I are praying for the Burbridge and Morgan families, and the entire law enforcement community in Pottawattamie County." –Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds

Gov. Terry Branstad

"Tom Miller was crystal clear last December when he said Lt. Governor Reynolds could act upon existing law and appoint a Lt. Governor when she becomes Governor upon my resignation.

'Our office has researched the law and consulted with the Governor's office. We concur with the Governor's conclusion that, upon resignation of Governor Branstad, Lt. Governor Reynolds will become Governor and will have the authority to appoint a new Lt. Governor.' – Tom Miller's Office, December 13, 2016.

No new facts or laws have changed since December 13, 2016. Tom Miller has allowed politics to cloud his judgment and is ignoring Iowa law. This politically motivated opinion defies common sense. Iowans expect a Governor and Lt. Governor working on their behalf. This is disappointing."

Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds

"In December, Attorney General Tom Miller researched the law and concurred with the Secretary of State and our office that, upon Gov. Branstad's resignation, I become Governor and have the authority to appoint a new Lt. Governor. Since then, I've been moving forward with that understanding. Now, five months later, just one day before Governor Branstad testifies before the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the Attorney General has reversed himself, but the law hasn't changed. The law still states that as Governor, I vacate my role as Lt. Governor and am able to appoint a new Lt. Governor. With the law on our side we will move forward with his first conclusion as we examine our options in light of Tom Miller's reversal."

Ben Hammes, Communications Director

"The power of a Governor to appoint a new Lt. Governor was put into the law in 2009 by the democrats. That law says: 'An appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term.' This bill passed unanimously by both parties and signed into law by a democrat Governor. Now, just because the democrats do not control the Governor's office, Attorney General Miller wants to pretend like this law does not exist, and issue a non-binding opinion. Quite frankly, this is what Iowans are sick and tired of. The Attorney General should be upholding the law, not ignoring it."

*****

Background Information:

Attorney General Miller now says that Lt. Gov. Reynolds will be both Governor and Lt. Governor at the same time and that Lt. Gov. Reynolds will not be able to appoint a new Lt. Governor. That defies common sense and the law.

- (1) When Gov. Branstad resigns, the Iowa Constitution states that his powers will devolve upon Lt. Gov. Reynolds. Lt. Gov. Reynolds will become Governor. Attorney General Miller agrees with this conclusion.
- (2) Iowa law prevents someone from holding two offices at the same time. Because Kim Reynolds will become Governor, she will automatically vacate the Office of the Lt. Governor.
- (3) In 2009, the Iowa Legislature (led by democrats) passed a statute to clarify that if there is a vacancy in the Office of Lt. Governor, the Governor appoints someone to fill that vacancy. That law is clear: "An appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term."
- (4) When Terry Branstad resigns, Kim Reynolds becomes Governor; the Office of Lt. Governor is then vacant, and under the Iowa Code (passed unanimously by the Legislature) Gov. Reynolds appoints someone to fill that vacancy.

Similar situations have occurred before in other states. For example:

- (1) In 2003, President Bush picked Utah Gov. Michael Leavitt to head the EPA. The state's Attorney General, in a thorough legal opinion, concluded that Leavitt's Lt. Governor became Governor and vacated the Lt. Governor's Office. The new Governor, then, was free to appoint a new Lt. Governor (and he did).

- (2) Similarly, when then-Gov. Bill Clinton became president in 1993, the Arkansas Supreme Court ruled — based upon constitutional provisions that are nearly identical to Iowa's — that his Lt. Governor became Governor. The Office of the Lt. Governor was then vacant, and Mike Huckabee filled that vacancy mid-term.
- (3) Finally, and most recently, the New York's highest court ruled that when Gov. Elliot Spitzer resigned, Lt. Governor David Patterson became Governor, vacated the Office of Lt. Governor, and was free to appoint a new Lt. Governor.

In December 2016, Attorney General Miller agreed with this view of the law. Since then, the Constitution hasn't changed. Neither has the Iowa Code. While Attorney General Miller's opinion is not binding on anybody, Iowans should ask why Attorney General Miller suddenly reversed course.

Good morning Eric. My name is John Bursch, and you may remember me from the NAAG amici contacts list when I served as Michigan Solicitor General from 2011-13. I am now back in private practice, though still actively litigating on behalf of states. (I represent Indiana in defending its law prohibiting the possession or transfer of aborted fetal body parts or tissue; Arizona, Michigan, and New Jersey in federal-court, consent-decree matters; and Michigan in the presidential-election recount litigation.)

I read this morning about the Iowa Legislature's approval of a new pro-life law and wanted to pro-actively reach out to see if I might be able to assist you and General Miller in defending the litigation that is bound to come once the Governor signs the bill. A summary of my experience is available at <http://www.burschlaw.com/>, and my contact information is below; is there a good time to talk in the next week or two?

Best regards,

John

Re: HF 524 (medical use of cannabis)

Dear Senator Schneider,

HF 524 appears to set up a continuing criminal enterprise here in Iowa, in violation of federal law, 21 U.S.C. § 848 (2017). Anyone participating in the program would be in violation of federal law, 21 U.S.C. § 844 (2017). Anyone manufacturing or distributing cannabis products would be committing federal crimes carrying penalties of 10 years to life in federal prison and a fine of $10 to $50 million, 21 U.S.C. § 841 (2017). Penalties can double for conspiracy to commit any of these acts, 21 U.S.C. § 846 (2017). Because HF 524 authorizes the cultivation, manufacture, and distribution, and possession of cannabis products in the state of Iowa without explaining how any of it would be in compliance with federal law, HF 524 creates a positive conflict between federal and state law so that the two cannot consistently stand together, 21 U.S.C. § 903 (2017).

Please request an opinion from the Attorney General of Iowa, Tom Miller, on the legality of HF 524 before Governor Branstad signs HF 524 into law.

Current federal law can be found at 21 U.S.C. §§ 801 et seq., Pub. L. 91-513, Oct. 27, 1970, 84 Stat. 1236 (“Controlled Substances Act”).

In my opinion, federal schedules of controlled substances are ordinary administrative regulations and cannot be used to interfere with state medical marijuana programs, but HF 524 does not address this matter.

Alliance for Cannabis Therapeutics v. DEA, 930 F.2d 936, 939 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (“neither the statute nor its legislative history precisely defines the term ‘currently accepted medical use’; therefore, we are obliged to defer to the Administrator’s interpretation of that phrase if reasonable.”)

Gonzales v. Oregon, 546 U.S. 243, 258 (2006) (“The Attorney General has rulemaking power to fulfill his duties under the CSA. The specific respects in which he is authorized to make rules, however, instruct us that he is not authorized to make a rule declaring illegitimate a medical standard for care and treatment of patients that is specifically authorized under state law.”)

Grinspoon v. DEA, 828 F.2d 881, 886 (1st Cir. 1987) (“Congress did not intend ‘accepted medical use in treatment in the United States’ to require a finding of recognized medical use in every state or, as the Administrator contends, approval for interstate marketing of the substance.”)

I look forward to hearing from you at your earliest convenience.

Thank you very much!

Sincerely,

Carl Olsen

Commandant Jodi Tymeson to return as Executive Director of the Iowa Department of Veterans Affairs

Tymeson will return as Executive Director of the Iowa Department of Veterans Affairs on May 1

(DES MOINES) – Today, Gov. Terry Branstad and Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds announced that Iowa Veterans Home Commandant Jodi Tymeson will take over as the new Executive Director of Veterans Affairs on May 1. Previously, Tymeson was named Chief Operating Officer of the Iowa Veterans Home in May 2013, and then promoted to Commandant in October 2013.

"I want to thank Gen. Tymeson for her great work as Commandant of the Iowa Veterans Home," said Gov. Branstad. "She provided incredible leadership in caring for our veterans in Marshalltown. I am pleased that Gen. Tymeson is once again answering the call to service for her fellow Iowans as she returns as Executive Director of the Iowa Department of Veterans Affairs."

Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds added, "Gen. Tymeson is the right person to lead the Iowa Department of Veterans Affairs and be the chief voice and advocate for Iowa veterans and their families. I'm thankful she has taken the responsibility once again to ensure that every veteran has the opportunity to receive the benefits they are entitled to."

"It's been an incredible honor to serve as Commandant of the Iowa Veterans Home. I will leave IVH knowing the staff will continue to provide exceptional care and services to our residents. I want to express my personal appreciation to the staff, volunteers, veteran service organizations, civic organizations and businesses, and many generous citizens who have contributed so much to support the mission of the Iowa Veterans Home. I look forward to continuing to serve Iowa's veterans."

Tymeson served in the Iowa Army National Guard from 1974-2007. While there, she graduated from officer candidate school and was commissioned a second lieutenant in 1982. She served as platoon leader, company commander, battalion commander and troop command commander – responsible for 3,450 soldiers. Tymeson was selected to attend the Army War College as a national security fellow at Harvard University's JFK School of Government, graduating in 1999. She is the first female promoted to brigadier general in the Iowa Army National Guard. She retired in 2007 with 33 years of service.

Tymeson also served as a full-time 6th grade teacher at Cedar Heights Elementary in Cedar Falls from 1988-1992, and taught as a substitute teacher from 1993-1998. From 2001-2010, Tymeson served nearly 30,000 constituents as a state representative for Madison, Warren and Dallas Counties. She served as House Education Committee chair for four years, in addition to a number of other committee assignments.

Branstad, Reynolds celebrate historic Iowa Fertilizer Company opening world-class fertilizer plant in Wever, Iowa

Company invests over $3 billion in the facility

(DES MOINES) – Today, Iowa Fertilizer Company (IFCo) and its parent company, OCI N.V. (Euronext: OCI), announced the official start of production at its plant in Wever in southeast Iowa. Gov. Terry Branstad, Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds, the Lee County Board of Supervisors and others joined OCI in an event to inaugurate one of the largest private sector construction projects in Iowa's history and the first world-scale, greenfield nitrogen fertilizer facility built in the United States in more than 25 years.

"In Iowa, we have created a roadmap that attracts new businesses and supports key industries that drive long-term economic growth," said Gov. Terry Branstad. "At the outset of the Iowa Fertilizer project, the unemployment rate in Lee County was the highest in the state at 8.0%. That is why we fought so hard to encourage the company to locate its new fertilizer plant in this great community. Today, the county's unemployment rate is down nearly three points to 5.3%, providing a positive and meaningful impact on working families in the area."

"Working alongside Gov. Branstad, I am incredibly proud of the close, on-going partnership we have forged with Lee County, Iowa Fertilizer Company, and farmers to begin this $3 billion operation," said Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds. "In the years to come, this plant will continue to spur job growth for Iowa families and support our farmers by providing a more accessible source of fertilizer for their crops."

IFCo has commenced production of sellable ammonia and is in the final stage of start-up for downstream products - urea ammonium nitrate (UAN), granular urea and diesel exhaust fluid (DEF). The plant will produce approximately 1.5 to 2 million metric tons of nitrogen fertilizer products annually and can alternate between products at short notice, depending on market demand.

"The start of production at Iowa Fertilizer Company plant in Wever is a transformative moment for the agricultural industry," said Nassef Sawiris, Chief Executive Officer of OCI N.V. "As one of the most innovative and efficient manufacturing plants in the nation, Iowa Fertilizer is leading the way in providing American farmers a stable, high-quality and domestic source of nitrogen fertilizer products. Given its location among the highest nitrogen-consuming acres globally, on the border between Iowa and Illinois, the number one and two corn-producing states in the nation, the site houses not only a premier production facility, but also an industry-leading distribution centre."

At the peak of construction, IFCo employed more than 3,500 workers and currently employs more than 200 full-time positions to operate the plant. Additionally, many more indirect positions will be created.

The event in Wever marks the culmination of a five-year collaboration between state and local economic development leaders, Republican and Democrat officials in southeast Iowa, the agricultural community, Iowa Fertilizer Company, and state leaders in the Branstad-Reynolds Administration.

About Iowa Fertilizer Company

Iowa Fertilizer Company is a leader in the fertilizer industry. The plant in Wever, Iowa is the first greenfield nitrogen fertilizer facility constructed in the United States in more than 25 years. Utilizing its state-of-the-art production, industry-leading technology, and environmentally sustainable processes, Iowa Fertilizer Company will help provide farmers in Iowa and around the country with a stable, domestic supply of fertilizer. Hello Eric,

Our first quarter finance report is in and thanks to your support, we raised nearly $300,000 in the past three months with more than 65% of that amount coming from small-dollar donations of $100 or less! Even more great news, with your help, our campaign outraised the other two Democratic candidates for Lt. Governor combined -- and, more importantly, from thousands more donors! This is truly an amazing grassroots campaign!

There are no big corporations funding our campaign; we are a grassroots movement driven by the people from the ground up. You and our other strong supporters have made it possible for Justin to reach thousands of voters by traveling more than 30,000 miles around the Commonwealth sharing his message of economic security and opportunity for all Virginians.

We need all of our supporters to help sustain us through the next 56 days until the June 13th Primary so that we can continue to fight for a brighter future for all Virginians.

You have given us the resources to assemble and mobilize an amazing campaign team and operation, including hundreds of energized volunteers all across the state. And, it's paying off big! We have won all seven contested Democratic straw polls for Lt. Governor as well as the endorsement of more than 100 elected officials and other prominent leaders throughout the Commonwealth. We have already reached hundreds of thousands of voters in the past 11 months, and, with your continued support, we will have the resources to communicate with many more in the remaining eight weeks of this campaign.

Your help will enable Justin to win this election and to continue to fight to provide greater access to higher-paying "middle-skill" jobs and a livable wage, affordable, high-quality healthcare and education, to reduce the crushing burden of student loan debt, reform our broken criminal and juvenile justice system, and resist the erosion of our Constitutional and civil rights under the Trump Administration.

Will you contribute now to make a difference in June?

Thank you so much for your hard work, support, and belief in Justin and this campaign. We will win together!

Dear Eric,

Running for Lt. Governor in a state as diverse and vast as Virginia requires energy, intellect, and an innate ability to connect with people by meeting them where they are.

As a former candidate for Lt. Governor and Congressman from a district that now stretches from Northern Virginia to the North Carolina border, I know what it means to represent people from across Virginia. I proudly endorse Justin Fairfax for Lt. Governor of Virginia because I believe he has what it takes to represent all Virginians. He is the kind of highly intelligent, dynamic, and forward-thinking leader Virginia needs to continue building on our progress to chart an even brighter future.

Please join me in voting for Justin Fairfax for Lt. Governor of Virginia on June 13th and again in November.

Sincerely,
L.F. Payne

Former Virginia Congressman and Lieutenant Governor Candidate L.F. Payne Endorses Justin Fairfax for Lt. Governor of Virginia

ARLINGTON, Virginia -- Today, the Justin Fairfax for Lieutenant Governor campaign is proud to announce the endorsement of former Virginia Congressman and Lt. Governor Candidate L.F. Payne. Congressman Payne represented Virginia's 5th District which now stretches from Northern to Southside Virginia for 9 years prior to running a spirited campaign for Lt. Governor of Virginia. The 5th Congressional District includes all or part of the independent cities of Bedford, Charlottesville, Danville, Farmville and Martinsville as well as Albemarle, Appomattox, Bedford, Buckingham, Campbell, Carroll, Charlotte, Cumberland, Franklin, Fluvanna, Halifax, Henry, Lunenburg, Mecklenburg, Nelson, Patrick, Pittsylvania, and Prince Edward counties.

"Running for Lt. Governor in a state as diverse and vast as Virginia requires energy, intellect, and an innate ability to connect with people by meeting them where they are." said Payne.

"As a former candidate for Lt. Governor and Congressman from a district that now stretches from Northern Virginia to the North Carolina border, I know what it means to represent people from across Virginia. I proudly endorse Justin Fairfax for Lt. Governor of Virginia because I believe he has what it takes to represent all Virginians. He is the kind of highly intelligent, dynamic, and forward-thinking leader Virginia needs to continue building on our progress and to chart an even brighter future.

"Please join me in voting for Justin Fairfax for Lt. Governor of Virginia on June 13th and again in November."

After receiving Congressman Payne's endorsement, former federal prosecutor Justin Fairfax made the following statement:

"I am humbled and honored to receive the endorsement of Congressman Payne. His distinguished service and leadership in Virginia in both the public and private sectors are known far and wide. I look forward to working with Congressman Payne to reach voters in the 5th Congressional District and throughout Virginia in the June 13th primary and the general election in November."

Congressman Payne joins Northern Virginia Congressman Gerry Connolly (VA-11), former Virginia Lt. Governor candidates Viola Baskerville and Senator Chap Petersen, and more than 100 elected officials, party leaders, and grassroots activists from across the Commonwealth in supporting Justin Fairfax for Lieutenant Governor of Virginia in 2017.

Eric,

In the Governor's FY 18 revised budget recommendations, the Governor has recommended a decrease of $68,333 for the AG General Office, a decrease of $18,520 for Victim Assistance Grants, and a decrease of $6,601 for Legal Services Poverty Grants from the FY 17 adjusted Budget. This is also in addition to the decrease from the appropriated FY 17 budget.

Generally, do you know what effect these reductions would have on the Department? And how it would be implemented?

Thank you for your assistance,

Dear Attorney General Miller,

Former Lieutenant Governor Jo Ann Zimmerman gave me your name as someone who might be able to help me. I'm with Columbia University and the political science department here is collecting all state-level Democratic and Republican party platforms from 1960 until present.

Thankfully we have found almost all Iowa Democratic platforms since 1960. We are only missing five. We are looking for the state platform for 1972, 1976, 1986, 1988, and 1990. Do you happen to have copies of any of these old platforms or know anyone who might? We are at the point where we'll follow any lead -- it would be great to have a complete of Iowa Democratic platforms. Thank you.

Sincerely,
Matt Carr

Geoff,

Can you tell me whether the Attorney General's Office is working on an expedited basis to provide the written opinion requested by Senator David Johnson?

If the answer is yes, when do you expect the opinion to be ready? Can Attorney General Miller commit to answering Senator Johnson's questions this month, or at least before Governor Branstad resigns, which seems likely to happen in April or May?

If the answer is no, can you explain why Attorney General Miller is unwilling to respond in a timely way to these questions?

The coming transfer of power is an extraordinary situation of obvious statewide importance. If Lieutenant Governor Reynolds appoints a new lieutenant governor, that person will be next in line to perform the governor's duties, in apparent contradiction to language in the Iowa Constitution placing the Iowa Senate president next in line.

I understand that legal research can take time, but you indicated in our earlier correspondence that the Attorney General's staff had thoroughly researched these matters before your December 12 announcement that Attorney General Miller concurred with the governor's reading of the Iowa Constitution.

Thanks in advance for any information you can provide about a timetable. If Attorney General Miller will not commit to issuing his written opinion before Governor Branstad resigns, I want to let my readers know. (Several have asked me what is happening on this.)

Yours,

Attached is the excel file of all kits inventoried and the information provided to us, required by paragraph 6 in the legislation.

Paragraph 6 states: The department of justice shall compile and submit a report to the office of the state public defender, not later than March 15, 2017, that provides the date an untested sexual abuse evidence collection kit was collected, where the collection occurred, and the case number, if any, associated with the untested sexual abuse evidence collection kit.

If there is a blank, or "unknown" in one of the three data components, it is because the agency did not, or could not provide this information.

We continue to work on the convictions piece outlined in paragraph 3 and our hope is to be able to provide you with updated data as soon as we are able.

Thanks for your quick response Mr. Gregg,

It sounds like SPD does now have interest in the general info provided for in paragraph six. We will do our best to filter down the info to the elements listed in the bill and have it to you before the March 15, deadline if not sooner.

As for the piece you reference in paragraph 3, that's going to be more difficult. The reason the offender information wasn't collected is two fold. One, the survey tool had already been disseminated to law enforcement prior to the passage of the legislation, which is something we made SPD aware of in our conversations last year and two, the survey tool also had to be approved by our federal grantor and they wouldn't have allowed for us to collect something outside the scope of the grant focus and the offender piece wouldn't have qualified. That being said, we can try to go back to the respective agencies and obtain that information, but it's likely to take some time. I can't have staff who are funded under the grant complete this work as it's outside the scope of our award/grant activities and ineligible for reimbursement which means general staff would have to take on this work while also completing their regular workload. Given what I now know about how quickly LE agencies respond to requests around this initiative, the best option will likely be to adhere to the 60 day measure you referred to in the bill and turn over the offender information as we receive it from these agencies regarding the 122 kits where convictions have already been obtained. This best adheres to the letter of the bill language and will allow time for agencies to respond, as well as for us to collect and reproduce the data for your agency.

I believe this will meet both your needs as well as the bill language, but if I've missed something please let me know.

Ms. Melohn-

Thanks for your recollections and perspective on the conversations which took place at about this time last year. However, it seems to me the best evidence of our agreement is the amendment language which was negotiated between our organizations, and which was subsequently adopted by both houses of the legislature and signed by the Governor. That language, of course, is now law.

I would respectfully propose the following path forward:

-The Office of the SPD again requests the information which is required to be provided under paragraph 3 of H.F. 2420. I may be misunderstanding your statement that this information was not collected. That would be very concerning, because that information was required to be collected under paragraph (2)(c)(5) of H.F. 2420. If I am understanding your email correctly and that information was not collected, I would propose that your office circle back to the respective agencies to gather the legally required information in cases which resulted in a conviction.

-The Office of the SPD again requests the information which is required to be provided under paragraph 6 of H.F. 2420. Under the bill, this information is not limited to cases which resulted in a conviction.

Thank you for your consideration.

Mr. Gregg,

Since you weren't present for any of the meetings leading up to this legislation being passed and since Kurt seemed to be happy with the information we provided, it appears there's a bit of a disconnect as to what the intent of the language was and what Kurt and his colleague (Amy?) said they were hoping to achieve. Since we based our submission to you all on what was discussed, it's important to have the context.

60 days-We explained to Kurt when we met, the entire survey was being conducted with federal grant dollars. Our grant required approval through the Federal Bureau of Justice Assistance (BJA) prior to releasing any of the data collected under the grant and we were up front we would not be able to provide any data until the end of the audit. We received this approval from BJA about a week and a half ago and provided this information to your agency as quickly as we were able, well within the 60 day timeframe and before the report had been made public.

The scope of this grant was to collect data to benefit victims who may not have received justice due to their SA kit not having been tested. SPD was hoping to piggyback on this data piece to explore whether or not offenders also received justice in their convictions, especially in the event someone had been wrongfully convicted. We didn't argue the language of the bill, because of our conversations with Kurt and Amy and our disclosures of what we could and couldn't provide and why. Kurt made very clear, you all were hoping to get information around kits that had not been tested, but where convictions were obtained. We explained we could not provide raw data from the survey, wherein information had been disclosed to us which would not have otherwise been made public record, except in the case of a conviction. There were also elements SPD wanted that we did not obtain, since the focus of the grant was not on offenders and our survey tool also required approval through BJA.

I say all of this to say, we have provided you with exactly what was agreed upon in our conversations with Kurt and Amy. The elements in paragraph 3 that were not provided, were because we did not collect them. We did, however, provide more information than was required in this same paragraph to try to uphold what we had discussed with Amy and Kurt. Paragraph 3 only required us to provide the defendant's name, case number and county of conviction. We didn't capture anything but the case number out of these elements, but tried to provide context for each so SPD could further investigate. We have met the terms of our requirements under this paragraph.

Paragraph 6 was a moot point given what we'd discussed with Kurt, as he'd indicated SPD wasn't interested in general information about kits, but rather just kits that hadn't been tested, where convictions were obtained.

It is time consuming to filter down 4,200+ rows of information, to give you only the date a kit was collected, the facility where it was collected and the case number as is required under paragraph 6, especially if it's not going to be helpful to SPD (which is what we were told). We are happy to provide you with this list, however, if you've since determined it is now somehow helpful to your work.

Please let me know how SPD would like to proceed given this context.

Subject: Re: Sexual Assault Kit Initiative

Mr. Hamill-

Thank you sending this report. However, it does not appear to comply with the requirements of House File 2420.

For cases which resulted in a conviction, paragraph 3 of the bill very clearly requires the attorney general to provide my office with the defendant's name, case number, and county where the conviction occurred. This report does not appear to provide the information required by the law. I would also note that this information was to be provided to my office on a rolling basis, within 60 days of the AG's office receiving such information. It does not appear any ongoing disclosures occurred.

Instead, this report appears to be providing some of the information required by paragraph 6. The paragraph 6 disclosures were not limited to cases which resulted in a conviction. Therefore, the information to be provided under paragraph 6 is to be provided for all survey responses.

I respectfully request that the Office of the Attorney General provide the information required by law, namely:
-adhere to the directive of paragraph 3 of H.F. 2420, which requires the disclosure of the defendant's name, case number, and county of conviction for any cases in which a conviction was obtained for any crime associated with an untested kit;
-adhere to the directive of paragraph 6 of H.F. 2420, which requires the disclosure of the date the kit was collected, the location where the kit was collected, and the case number associated with the kit.

We also wanted to extend a courtesy invitation to the State Public Defender's office to a press conference tomorrow morning at 10 AM in Hoover on level A in conference room 7. Kiley – The $300,000 appropriation from our Consumer Education and Litigation Fund is in the Governor’s budget recommendations. I think Rep. Worthan and Senator Chelgren are ok with this. I will talk to the Republican caucus staff, but it would be good for someone from IMS to make contact with the co-chairs. Thanks. Eric

Hi Eric,

I hope this message finds you well!

I wanted to give you an update that I had tried to reach out to people I know in the Republican world to see if we could get things pushed through by March 3rd, but essentially was told that the political landscape this year was so intense and complex with other issues that IMS' request for revisions was likely not going to happen. Therefore, my focus right now is the appropriation. Do you have a sense where that stands right now?

Best regards, -Kiley Mars

Meyer,

I am writing as a follow-up to yesterday's meeting with Michael Bousselet. I spoke with Iowa Finance Authority bond counsel, Dave Grossklaus, and confirmed the following with him:

1. The Iowa Senate water quality bill (SSB1034) does not provide for any bonding authority to IFA; and
2. The $2 billion IFA State Revolving Fund can definitely make low interest loans to individuals and cities for water quality projects including wetlands, bioreactors and saturated buffer strips. He said that IFA has focused its education efforts in this area on Lt. Governor Reynolds and she should be aware of its availability for such projects.

Furthermore, AG Miller requested we provide a chart of funding sources we know are immediately available for water quality projects if HSB135 becomes law. The chart below is also attached to this email:

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: Monday, March 13, 2017
Contact: Governor's Office, 515-281-5211

Branstad, Reynolds, Northey Announce 12 Urban Water Quality Demonstration Projects Selected to Receive Funding

Projects join 45 demonstrations, including 22 urban projects, already in place

(DES MOINES) – Today, Governor Terry Branstad, Lt. Governor Kim Reynolds and Iowa Sec. of Agriculture Bill Northey announced 12 urban conservation water quality initiative demonstration projects have been selected to receive $820,840 in funding. The 12 projects will provide nearly $1.18 million in matching funds to support water quality improvement efforts as well as other in-kind contributions.

Area communities participating in newly announced projects are: Ankeny, Burlington, Cedar Falls, Cedar Rapids, Clive, Denison, Des Moines, Emmetsburg, Readlyn, Slater, Spencer, Urbandale, Windsor Heights and Waterloo.

“Water quality is a very important issue and today’s announcement is the next step for the Iowa Water Quality Initiative, which is continuing the effort to implement the Iowa Nutrient Reduction Strategy,” said Branstad. “Lt. Gov. Reynolds and I have already visited a couple of the demonstration projects in place and have seen first-hand the work being done by Iowans on their farms and in their communities.”

Reynolds added, “We’re excited to get these 12 new projects underway. I want to commend and congratulate these communities for taking the necessary steps to support water quality in the state. We also look forward to continuing our conversation with the Legislature in the weeks ahead to finalize a plan that will continue to grow water quality efforts in the state.”

“The water quality demonstration projects, both those in urban and rural areas, have been incredibly valuable in helping us learn how to best implement these practices and have created a strong foundation as we look to further expand our efforts,” Northey said.

Projects will focus on conservation measures that capture and allow stormwater to be absorbed into the ground and reduce a property's contribution to water quality degradation, stream flows and flooding. They also include strong partnerships and outreach/education components to disseminate information to promote increased awareness and adoption of available practices and technologies for achieving reductions in nutrient loads to surface waters.

Practices which will be installed as part of these projects include bioretention cells, bioswales, native landscaping, permeable pavement, rain gardens, sedimentation basins, soil quality restoration, wetlands and other practices. More information about these and other urban water quality practices can be found at www.cleanwateriowa.org/residential-practices.aspx.

The Iowa Department of Agriculture and Land Stewardship received 34 pre-applications for this funding after it was announced last fall and 14 projects were invited to submit full proposals. Twelve projects were selected to receive funding through the Water Quality Initiative.

Iowa has four urban conservationists that work with communities, businesses, developers and homeowners on practices that can be used in urban areas to reduce runoff.

This is the third time that urban conservation projects have been funded through the Water Quality Initiative and there are currently 22 active or completed urban demonstration projects across the state. The state awarded these initial 22 projects over $1.63 million in funding and partners and landowners participating in the projects are providing over $5 million to support these urban conservation efforts.

A short summary of each of the new projects follows here.

Parkway Watershed in Prairie Trail – City of Ankeny

Grant award: $70,030

Total project: $140,062

Description: This project brings together local partners to build on stormwater management efforts within in the Prairie Trail area in Ankeny and will serve as a model for future installations of similar practices in community. Practices that will be installed as part of this project include a stormwater wetland, sediment forebay and native seeding in the Saylor Creek Watershed, which will be coupled with and education and outreach component to showcase the benefits of installation.

Implementing and Educating: Stormwater Management for Education Institutions in Black Hawk County (Cities of Waterloo and Cedar Falls) – Black Hawk Soil and Water Conservation District

Grant award: $105,500

Total project: $493,500

Description: This project will partner with three local educational institutions including Cedar Falls Community School District, Hawkeye Community College and the University of Northern Iowa to install stormwater management practices at respective campus locations and in alignment with the goals of providing educational opportunities focused on demonstrating project water quality benefits. Practices that will be installed as part of the project efforts will include multiple bioretention cells, native planting, and permeable pavement.

Tama Building Permeable Alley – City of Burlington

Grant award: $75,000

Total project: $191,650

Description: The City of Burlington will be installing a permeable alley for this project as part of downtown historic redevelopment project in a highly visible area. This project will serve as a catalyst for stormwater management and water quality project in the community and will provide a model for future efforts.

Infiltration Practices along 6th Street SW Corridor – City of Cedar Rapids

Grant award: $100,000

Total project: $206,600

Description: The City of Cedar Rapids has brought together a team of local partners to build on current stormwater management efforts underway in the community with the goal of promoting benefits of water volume control along with improved water quality. The practices that will be installed as part of this project consists of two bioretention cell systems which will treat and reduce stormwater volumes along the 6th street corridor area.

Clay County Fair Centennial Plaza (City of Spencer) – Clay County Fair Association

Grant award: $50,000

Total project: $100,000

Description: This project will support a strong local partnership group brought together to lead efforts in the development of the new Clay County Fairgrounds Centennial Plaza project by incorporation of urban conservation and educational components. This project will include installation a permeable pavers and bioretention cells along with education signage, outreach and demonstration components in a highly visible area to support local urban water quality improvement efforts.

Downtown Denison Urban Conservation Project – City of Denison

Grant award: $73,560

Total project: $147,120

Description: The City of Denison will be installing four bioretention cells and one permeable paver system in the downtown area as part of this project. This retrofit demonstration project will offer multiple water quality benefits, along with strong local support and community involvement, in a highly visible area with the goal of using this project as an example for future community infrastructure projects.

Five Island Lake Campground Urban Watershed Project – City of Emmetsburg

Grant award: $49,250

Total project: $98,500

Description: Five Island Lake has recently undergone extensive lake restoration activities and is transitioning to protection of their investment by also protecting the surrounding land. Project grant funds will be utilized to install multiple bioretention cells and native seeding as part of a former dredge silt site which has been repurposed into a new campground. These practices will blend into the new campground and showcase benefits of these practices to campers and park guests.

Fourmile Creek Watershed Project Sediment Basin Forebay and Stormwater Wetland – City of Des Moines and Fourmile Watershed Management Authority (WMA)

Grant award: $75,000

Total project: $150,000

Description: This project will coincide with the implementation goals of the Fourmile Creek Watershed Management Plan to improve water quality and includes two major components, a sediment basin forebay and a stormwater wetland. These practices will work together to reduce sediment and stormwater pollutants from entering Fourmile Creek Watershed and provide education and outreach opportunities to promote future projects in Fourmile Creek.

Walnut Creek WMA Project Implementation: Urbandale and Clive Nutrient Treatment/Flood Storage Wetlands (Cities of Urbandale and Clive) – The Nature Conservancy

Grant award: $45,000

Total project: $90,000

Description: This project will implement several stormwater wetlands which have been identified in the Clive Greenbelt and Walnut Creek WMA Master Plans. The wetlands targeted for construction will be accomplished through restoration of stream oxbows and will provide multiple benefits including nutrient reduction, flood storage and riparian habitat. Educational opportunities will be incorporated into the project with the goal of providing expanded opportunities for future similar installations.

City of Readlyn Urban WQI: Initial Steps toward a Large Scale Effort– City of Readlyn

Grant award: $70,000

Total project: $167,500

Description: This catalyst project will support a strong local partnership brought together with the common goal of building a stormwater quality management program within the City of Readlyn. This project will partner with the SRF Sponsored Projects Program to install a series of bioretention cells in an area of town which has been historically subject to large stormwater runoff volumes.

City of Slater Permeable Paver Project – City of Slater

Grant award: $100,000

Total project: $200,805

Description: This project will incorporate a permeable paver system and enhanced raingarden into the existing municipal city pool parking lot within Earl Grimm Park. This highly visible project will manage runoff and improve water quality in the headwaters of Fourmile Creek, which is directly adjacent to the planned project site.

Colby Water Quality Demonstration Park – City of Windsor Heights

Grant award: $7,500

Total project: $17,000

Description: The goal of this project is to create a water quality themed demonstration park within the city owned Colby Park. The City of Windsor Heights will be installing three stormwater management practices as part of this project including a rain garden, soil quality restoration, and native landscaping, which will serve to provide education and demonstration for a variety of public events.

Background on Iowa Water Quality Initiative

The Iowa Water Quality Initiative was established in 2013 to help implement the Nutrient Reduction Strategy, which is a science and technology based approach to achieving a 45 percent reduction in nitrogen and phosphorus losses to our waters. The strategy brings together both point sources, such as municipal wastewater treatment plants and industrial facilities, and nonpoint sources, including farm fields and urban stormwater runoff, to address these issues.

The initiative seeks to harness the collective ability of both private and public resources and organizations to deliver a clear and consistent message to stakeholders to reduce nutrient loss and improve water quality.

In addition to these 12 new projects, 45 demonstration projects are currently located across the state to help implement and demonstrate water quality practices. This includes 16 targeted watershed projects, 7 projects focused on expanding the use and innovative delivery of water quality practices and 22 urban water quality demonstration projects. More than 150 organizations are participating in these projects. These partners will provide $25.28 million dollars to go with the $16.09 million in state funding going to these projects.

More than $340 million in state and federal funds have been directed to programs with water quality benefits in Iowa last year. This total does not include the cost-share amount that farmers pay to match state and federal programs and funds farmers spent to build practices built without government assistance.

More information about the initiative can be found at www.CleanWaterIowa.org.

Subject: Gov meeting today

Here are the key elements I think the governor's water quality bill needs:

- 1) chapter 28F fix so that entities (including drainage districts) can jointly finance infrastructure upgrades--drainage districts can't put in a wetland and assess the cost, so there needs to be a way to finance the installation by downstream entities;
- 2) ensure better coordination--the flow chart I created shows 4 funds from HSB135, and the oversight and evaluation of each fund is done a little differently, and given the need to make targeted and efficient use of what little funding there is, it will be important that each fund know what the others are doing;
- 3) try and get bonding for these projects--this is an infrastructure problem that will take decades to fix, and w/out a long term, dedicated funding source, entities need to be able to bond for these kinds of projects; and
- 4) think about creating a procurement coordinator like Univ. of Iowa to identify and seek out federal/private funds.

There are issues with the length of time for evaluating and monitoring for progress, but my hope would be that those decisions get made by whoever coordinates this thing rather than spelled out by legislation.

Also, the cost share basis for funding infield and edge of field infrastructure, while a familiar funding mechanism to farmers, will incentivize very little activity by farmers because none of the projects will increase yields. The cost share either needs to be like 90/10 or some kind of grant program.

I did this on my iPhone, so I apologize if anything was confusing or for any errors. Please let me know if you have any questions. Thanks.

Jake

Thanks for your quick response Mr. Gregg,

It sounds like SPD does now have interest in the general info provided for in paragraph six. We will do our best to filter down the info to the elements listed in the bill and have it to you before the March 15, deadline if not sooner.

As for the piece you reference in paragraph 3, that's going to be more difficult. The reason the offender information wasn't collected is two fold. One, the survey tool had already been disseminated to law enforcement prior to the passage of the legislation, which is something we made SPD aware of in our conversations last year and two, the survey tool also had to be approved by our federal grantor and they wouldn't have allowed for us to collect something outside the scope of the grant focus and the offender piece wouldn't have qualified. That being said, we can try to go back to the respective agencies and obtain that information, but it's likely to take some time. I can't have staff who are funded under the grant complete this work as it's outside the scope of our award/grant activities and ineligible for reimbursement which means general staff would have to take on this work while also completing their regular workload. Given what I now know about how quickly LE agencies respond to requests around this initiative, the best option will likely be to adhere to the 60 day measure you referred to in the bill and turn over the offender information as we receive it from these agencies regarding the 122 kits where convictions have already been obtained. This best adheres to the letter of the bill language and will allow time for agencies to respond, as well as for us to collect and reproduce the data for your agency.

I believe this will meet both your needs as well as the bill language, but if I've missed something please let me know.

Ms. Melohn-

Thanks for your recollections and perspective on the conversations which took place at about this time last year. However, it seems to me the best evidence of our agreement is the amendment language which was negotiated between our organizations, and which was subsequently adopted by both houses of the legislature and signed by the Governor. That language, of course, is now law.

I would respectfully propose the following path forward:

-The Office of the SPD again requests the information which is required to be provided under paragraph 3 of H.F. 2420. I may be misunderstanding your statement that this information was not collected. That would be very concerning, because that information was required to be collected under paragraph (2)(c)(5) of H.F. 2420. If I am understanding your email correctly and that information was not collected, I would propose that your office circle back to the respective agencies to gather the legally required information in cases which resulted in a conviction.

-The Office of the SPD again requests the information which is required to be provided under paragraph 6 of H.F. 2420. Under the bill, this information is not limited to cases which resulted in a conviction.

Thank you for your consideration.

Mr. Gregg,

Since you weren't present for any of the meetings leading up to this legislation being passed and since Kurt seemed to be happy with the information we provided, it appears there's a bit of a disconnect as to what the intent of the language was and what Kurt and his colleague (Amy?) said they were hoping to achieve. Since we based our submission to you all on what was discussed, it's important to have the context.

60 days-We explained to Kurt when we met, the entire survey was being conducted with federal grant dollars. Our grant required approval through the Federal Bureau of Justice Assistance (BJA) prior to releasing any of the data collected under the grant and we were up front we would not be able to provide any data until the end of the audit. We received this approval from BJA about a week and a half ago and provided this information to your agency as quickly as we were able, well within the 60 day timeframe and before the report had been made public.

The scope of this grant was to collect data to benefit victims who may not have received justice due to their SA kit not having been tested. SPD was hoping to piggyback on this data piece to explore whether or not offenders also received justice in their convictions, especially in the event someone had been wrongfully convicted. We didn't argue the language of the bill, because of our conversations with Kurt and Amy and our disclosures of what we could and couldn't provide and why. Kurt made very clear, you all were hoping to get information around kits that had not been tested, but where convictions were obtained. We explained we could not provide raw data from the survey, wherein information had been disclosed to us which would not have otherwise been made public record, except in the case of a conviction. There were also elements SPD wanted that we did not obtain, since the focus of the grant was not on offenders and our survey tool also required approval through BJA.

I say all of this to say, we have provided you with exactly what was agreed upon in our conversations with Kurt and Amy. The elements in paragraph 3 that were not provided, were because we did not collect them. We did, however, provide more information than was required in this same paragraph to try to uphold what we had discussed with Amy and Kurt. Paragraph 3 only required us to provide the defendant's name, case number and county of conviction. We didn't capture anything but the case number out of these elements, but tried to provide context for each so SPD could further investigate. We have met the terms of our requirements under this paragraph.

Paragraph 6 was a moot point given what we'd discussed with Kurt, as he'd indicated SPD wasn't interested in general information about kits, but rather just kits that hadn't been tested, where convictions were obtained.

It is time consuming to filter down 4,200+ rows of information, to give you only the date a kit was collected, the facility where it was collected and the case number as is required under paragraph 6, especially if it's not going to be helpful to SPD (which is what we were told). We are happy to provide you with this list, however, if you've since determined it is now somehow helpful to your work.

Please let me know how SPD would like to proceed given this context.

Mr. Hamill-

Thank you sending this report. However, it does not appear to comply with the requirements of House File 2420.

For cases which resulted in a conviction, paragraph 3 of the bill very clearly requires the attorney general to provide my office with the defendant's name, case number, and county where the conviction occurred. This report does not appear to provide the information required by the law. I would also note that this information was to be provided to my office on a rolling basis, within 60 days of the AG's office receiving such information. It does not appear any ongoing disclosures occurred.

Instead, this report appears to be providing some of the information required by paragraph 6. The paragraph 6 disclosures were not limited to cases which resulted in a conviction. Therefore, the information to be provided under paragraph 6 is to be provided for all survey responses.

I respectfully request that the Office of the Attorney General provide the information required by law, namely:

- adhere to the directive of paragraph 3 of H.F. 2420, which requires the disclosure of the defendant's name, case number, and county of conviction for any cases in which a conviction was obtained for any crime associated with an untested kit;
- adhere to the directive of paragraph 6 of H.F. 2420, which requires the disclosure of the date the kit was collected, the location where the kit was collected, and the case number associated with the kit.

Ms. Melohn-

Thanks for your recollections and perspective on the conversations which took place at about this time last year. However, it seems to me the best evidence of our agreement is the amendment language which was negotiated between our organizations, and which was subsequently adopted by both houses of the legislature and signed by the Governor. That language, of course, is now law.

I would respectfully propose the following path forward:

-The Office of the SPD again requests the information which is required to be provided under paragraph 3 of H.F. 2420. I may be misunderstanding your statement that this information was not collected. That would be very concerning, because that information was required to be collected under paragraph (2)(c)(5) of H.F. 2420. If I am understanding your email correctly and that information was not collected, I would propose that your office circle back to the respective agencies to gather the legally required information in cases which resulted in a conviction.

-The Office of the SPD again requests the information which is required to be provided under paragraph 6 of H.F. 2420. Under the bill, this information is not limited to cases which resulted in a conviction.

Thank you for your consideration.

Since we based our submission to you all on what was discussed, it's important to have the context.

60 days-We explained to Kurt when we met, the entire survey was being conducted with federal grant dollars. Hello Adam, Kurt,

I hope this email finds you well. As you probably recall my office received a grant from the Bureau of Justice Assistance and compiled an inventory of untested sexual assault kits statewide. Per HF2420 signed last March, we are providing your office with a list of kits identified by law enforcement agencies as not submitted due to suspect admission/conviction.

We also wanted to extend a courtesy invitation to the State Public Defender's office to a press conference tomorrow morning at 10 AM in Hoover on level A in conference room 7. AG Miller will be discussing the results of the survey and next steps on this grant project. Upon release tomorrow, the full report will be publicly available on our website.

Please don't hesitate to let me know if have questions. My direct line is 515-242-6110.

Thank you,

Robert

Here's a timeline on the initial contact regarding the Victim Justice Conference that was held back September 12-13, 2016.

- (1) 10/7/15 - Rhonda Dean contacted me regarding a checklist that she needed for their 2016 Victim Justice fall conference
- (2) 10/9/15 - I responded to Rhonda and Janelle after I contacted the Governor's Traffic Safety Bureau to see if they could provide me with a conference timeline> I forwarded the timeline along with the checklist to conference speakers.
- (3) 7/13/16 - Received an email from Crystal Irey from Dept. of Public Safety inquiring about the breakout of meals to the conference. I forwarded the email to Rhonda Dean and she responded to Crystal on the same day which indicated there would be an AM and PM snack and lunch on both days. She also indicated that she will be sending the Exception form as soon as the menu was determined.
- (4) 11/30/16 - Received the invoice for the Holiday Inn. I sent an email back to Rhonda asking 4 questions which pertained to meal/break/hotel expenses and registration deposits so I could prepare the Exception to State Wide policies. She sent back a listing of the attendees.
- (5) 12/1/16 - I put together a spreadsheet showing a break out of all attendees but Rhonda needed to contact the Holiday Inn to get a breakout of meals and breaks for both days and returned it to Rhonda for her to add the meal/breaks for each day.
- (6) 1/11/17 - Sent an email inquiring about the status of the meal break outs.
- (7) 1/17/17 - Rhonda responded that she was working on the break outs.
- (8) 1/18/17 - Rhonda returned the spreadsheet listing the dollar amounts for AM and PM breaks and lunches on both days.
- (9) 1/23/17 - I questioned the taxes on room since the tax indicated a state tax. Therefore, we can't pay from a state tax but the Holiday Inn said it was "dwelling Tax" so I asked her to check out what the definition of dwelling tax was and they sent it back indicating it was "state excise tax".
- (10) 1/23/17 - Hand carried the Request For Exception to State-Wide Policy to Trina Brietkse along with supportive documentation.
- (11) 2/16/17 - Emailed Trina to find out the status.
- (12) 2/9/17 - Visited with Trina in person regarding the status of the exception form.
- (13) 2/22/17 - Emailed Trina to find out the status and she responded but it was to another exception form I had sent up.
- (14) 2/28/17 - Left message on Trina's phone
- (15) 3/3/17 - Received an email from Trina regarding needing the approved DOM Conference Sponsorship Justification form. I responded by apologizing about not having the form complete in advance. Since I've never filled out this form before, I asked to see whether or not if she could send me a copy of the that was submitted for Fall of 2014 conference and Trina couldn't find one. She asked how much the registration was and I responded back on the same day.

(16)3/6/17 – I completed the DOM Conference Sponsorship Justification form and hand-carried it to DOM for approval.

I've attached a copy of the agenda, Exception to State-wide Policies, break out of expenses and conference attendees. I'm really sorry for the tardiness on this form but I honestly just found out about the form last Friday. Please let me know if you have any other questions.

Branstad, Reynolds seeking public input related to $21 million Volkswagen settlement

(DES MOINES) – Today, Iowa Department of Transportation Director Mark Lowe joined Gov. Branstad and Lt. Gov. Reynolds at their regular Monday morning press conference. As a result of two related Volkswagen (VW) settlements, the state of Iowa is expected to receive approximately $21 million in environmental mitigation trust funds over the next ten years set aside specifically for projects that reduce emission of nitrogen oxides (NOx). Branstad and Reynolds are asking for public input on how the funds should be spent. Iowa has developed a new website (<http://www.iowadot.gov/vwsettlement>) to provide information about the settlement and collect input on how the state should plan for using the mitigation funds.

According to the Environmental Protection Agency's website, "These settlements resolve allegations that Volkswagen violated the Clean Air Act by the sale of approximately 590,000 model year 2009 to 2016 diesel motor vehicles equipped with "defeat devices." The allegations were set forth in a complaint originally filed by the United States on behalf of the EPA on January 4, 2016, and amended on October 7, 2016, alleging that these vehicles are equipped with defeat devices in the form of computer software designed to cheat on federal emissions tests."

"The settlement provides for an array of eligible projects that could benefit Iowa. We are asking Iowans for their input on the types of projects they believe will achieve the greatest long-term impact," said Gov. Branstad.

Eligible mitigation actions include reducing NO<sub>x</sub> from heavy duty diesel sources such as freight trucks, school and transit buses, freight switcher locomotives, ferries and tugs, marine shorepower, air ground support equipment, and forklifts through projects that repower or replace older engines and vehicles. Eligible mitigation actions may also include limited funding for charging infrastructure for light duty zero emission passenger vehicles.

Lt. Gov. Reynolds said, "This funding has the potential to significantly and positively impact air quality in Iowa. We look forward to hearing Iowans' creative ideas to improve our air quality."

The public comment period will be open until April 14. Once all public comments have been collected, a working group comprised of officials from several state agencies and coordinated by the Iowa Department of Transportation will develop a mitigation plan that will be submitted to the VW settlement trustee.

The Iowa website also provides a subscription service for those who would like to receive updates on the progress of the mitigation plan and the overall settlement.

DMR: AILING-DEER HUNT A LONG SHOT?

Debate centers on how state should battle fatal chronic wasting disease

DONNELLE ELLER DELLER@DMREG.COM

VOLGA, Ia. — Brian Power likes few things more than hunting deer with his son, Jon, on about 1,000 acres of steep, wooded hills that Power pieced together over nearly two decades. On a recent Sunday morning, Power, 54, listens to Jon, 21, describe seeing three coyotes cross a far ridge, a rare sight. Jon says he also spotted a couple of deer, but the wind and ice-covered corn stalks alerted the animals he was near.

Hunting for Power is “a challenge — you against Mother Nature.” Jon loves the adrenaline rush, “hearing your heartbeat in your throat after shooting a big buck.” But he became fascinated with the animals, sitting in a corn field with his father as a boy: “I could hear the deer grinding their teeth.”

This year, the men and about 450 other sportsmen in northeast Iowa have another shot at bagging a doe or buck because of a special harvest designed to assess a fast-spreading disease that’s fatal to deer.

For the first time in Clayton County, a wild deer tested positive last fall for chronic wasting disease. Sunday ends a two-week special hunt, set up to test about 300 deer within 5 miles of where the diseased animal was discovered.

The hunt has sparked debate about how Iowa should battle the disease, discovered in 18 wild deer since 2013.

Minnesota, for example, hired sharpshooters to cut the deer populations in infected areas. So, too, did Wisconsin in 2002, a highly unpopular approach that failed to stop the disease’s spread. Lawmakers later ratcheted efforts back.

Iowa’s plan is also getting mixed reviews, with some questioning its effectiveness.

“I don’t see the reason to kill 250 to 300 deer,” said Matt Stark, who lives in Coralville but hunts regularly in northeast Iowa. “In southwestern Wisconsin, they killed any whitetail deer that walked. ... And the disease is still there.”

Taking bucks that have shed their antlers this winter could rob hunters of trophies next fall, say Stark and other hunters.

Power thinks those concerns could be shortsighted.

“Containing chronic wasting disease is bigger than next year’s buck,” he said.

A fatal disease

Controlling wild deer populations is key to containing the disease, caused by an abnormal protein, called a prion.

Iowa’s special hunts, two of which have been held this year, will help scientists gauge how far the disease has spread, and potentially remove diseased animals.

“Taking additional deer lowers the density and lowers the chances of CWD (chronic wasting disease) transmission,” said Bryan Richards, the emerging disease coordinator at the U.S. Geological Survey’s National Wildlife Health Center.

The neurological disease attacks the brain of deer, elk and moose, making holes that resemble those in sponges. Animals lose weight, display abnormal behavior and lose bodily functions. It’s always fatal.

The disease spreads when animals are in close contact, but also when animals contact soil that contains prions from urine, feces or an infected animal carcass, officials say.

It’s similar to mad cow disease in cattle and Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in humans. But chronic wasting disease hasn’t affected humans or other wildlife. U.S. health officials, though, advise hunters not to eat the meat from an animal testing positive.

Near Elkader, Ia., Terry Haindfield, an Iowa Department of Natural Resources wildlife biologist, helps a hunter shift the deer so its lymph nodes can be removed and tested. The organs will go to Iowa State University’s veterinary medicine laboratory. By Sunday, hunters had harvested 105 deer, that yielded 90 samples.

Fifteen deer were too young for samples. Iowa has tested about 61,000 samples from wild deer and 4,000 from hunting preserves since Wisconsin’s outbreak in 2002. The state tests deer from all Iowa counties, but it has focused efforts near neighboring state hotspots.

The state issued 740 tags in the hope of netting up to 300 specimens, preferably mature deer that are more likely to have the disease. In January, hunters killed 263 deer in Allamakee County. About 200 tests from adult deer showed one positive. Deer don’t exhibit symptoms until late in the disease. “There’s no realistic way to know which are positive,” Richards said. “So, you’ll take a lot of healthy deer out of the system, too.”

‘No answer to the problem’

The special harvest frustrates Maury Glesne, a hunter and third-generation hardware store owner in Elkader.

Few places in Iowa offer as rich deer hunting as northeast Iowa’s Clayton and Allamakee counties, said Glesne, whose True Value sells everything from guns and ammunition to hammers.

The land — sharp hills mixed with pastures and crops — provides excellent food and habitat.

“I don’t really think it’s necessary,” Glesne said of the special hunts, adding the state could get more samples through its regular seasons.

“There’s no answer to the problem,” he said. “If they find another one or two (positives), will they want to shoot another 200 or 300 deer?”

Haindfield, the DNR biologist, said the state will weigh the test results, and consult with hunters, before deciding its next move.

Glesne said deer hunting is an important economic driver for northeast Iowa.

The state says hunting, fishing and wildlife viewing generates $197 million annually in direct sales at restaurants, sporting goods stores and hotels. It has a $1.5 billion economic impact as the spending rolls into the economy, Iowa DNR estimates.

Clayton County led the state in deer hunting last year, with about 4,300 animals bagged; Allamakee was second at 3,500.

“The hunting season is bigger for me than Christmas,” Glesne said.

But some hunters likely will not return to Clayton County, given the chronic wasting disease case.

“I’ve heard some people say they’re going to throw their deer meat out because of concerns about the disease,” Glesne said.

“I think we’ll end up with fewer hunters,” he said. And “that’s less money for the state.”

Weighing the risk

Iowa officials have asked hunters and local lockers, which can process hundreds of thousands of pounds of venison each year, to segregate deer taken in the special harvest until tests are returned. Power, the hunter and landowner near Volga, processes his meat in his family’s large metal hunting shed. He feels confident the meat is safe, but he’ll keep it separated until tests results clear.

Some hunters, seeing no human effects for decades, eat deer meat that tests positive for chronic wasting disease, he said.

“It all depends on your comfort with risk,” Richards said. “The risk is small, but it’s not zero.”

‘That doesn’t mean kill all the deer’

Richards said Minnesota and New York are working to quash the disease.

Minnesota, which discovered it in November, used special hunts to reduce and test deer populations in infected areas, then hired sharpshooters last month. “The goal is to do what we can to eliminate the disease. That doesn’t mean kill all the deer. It doesn’t mean drop a nuclear device and level the earth,” said Lou Cornicelli, a wildlife research manager at the Minnesota Department of Natural Resources. Minnesota and New York have restricted transporting deer carcasses into the state and banned feeding deer grain or using mineral licks, popular practices to attract animals. Similar proposals in Iowa have failed to gain traction, officials say. “Once the disease is established, you’re out of luck, much like you’ve seen in Wisconsin,” Cornicelli said.

Wisconsin's early efforts were hampered by some landowners unwilling to participate in aggressive efforts to control the disease, Richards said. "They became reservoirs for deer, and reservoirs for the disease," he said. Now, the disease's prevalence is as high as 21 percent in some areas.

So far, the effort has worked in New York, with no outbreaks since 2005, Richards said. Iowa has a small window to try to stamp out the disease since it's only been found in a few places, he said. But Richards doesn't see public support for more aggressive herd reduction where the disease is present. "Even if you're successful, will the disease keep coming back?" Richards said. "The chances are it will," especially when "you look at the Mississippi River and see a population riddled with CWD."

DMR: Iowa Senate scraps death penalty bill

WILLIAM PETROSKI

BPETROSK@DMREG.COM

State lawmakers scrapped plans for a debate on capital punishment this year when they ran out of time prior to a key deadline this week in the Iowa Legislature.

Senate File 335 would have reinstated the death penalty, but only for multiple offenses in which a minor was kidnapped, raped and murdered. The bill was sponsored by six Republican legislators who pointed to the 2005 death of 10-year-old Jetseta Gage of Cedar Rapids, who was abducted from her grandmother's residence and was found slain the next day in a mobile home southwest of Iowa City. The girl had previously been a victim of sexual abuse.

A Senate subcommittee hearing on the bill was canceled Thursday amid a crush of action on other legislation as lawmakers rushed to comply with the Legislature's "funnel" deadline. Most bills are required to clear at least one committee in the House or Senate this week to remain eligible for consideration in the 2017 session.

"It is not going to be debated this session," said Sen. Brad Zaun, R-Urbandale, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee. He said there simply wasn't enough time to consider the proposal this week. Two Senate bills advocating for a return of the death penalty have been filed this session, but both were introduced last week.

A host of groups had lined up to oppose the Senate bill. The opponents included the Iowa Attorney General's Office, the Iowa Academy of Trial Lawyers, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People-Iowa and Nebraska; Iowans Against the Death Penalty, American Civil Liberties Union of Iowa, the Iowa Catholic Conference, Iowa Annual Conference of the United Methodist Church, Episcopal Diocese of Iowa, and Interfaith Alliance of Iowa.

Sen. Jerry Behn, R-Boone, a lead sponsor of Senate File 335, said the bill was aimed at circumstances where an assailant had an incentive to kill a child who had been raped and murdered by eliminating the possibility that the victim could provide testimony.

Iowa abolished the death penalty in 1965. The state's last execution was on March 15, 1963, at the Iowa State Penitentiary in Fort Madison when Victor Harry Feguer, a federal inmate, was hanged for murder. Thirty-one states authorize the death penalty.

The last major debate in the Iowa Legislature over capital punishment occurred in the 1990s. Since then, lawmakers have generally accepted the idea that Iowa will not execute murderers, and people convicted of first-degree murder and given life sentences in recent years have rarely been granted clemency by the state's governors.

DMR: UI's next move could be tuition hike

Harreld believes lawmakers, regents should help institution bolster its standing to peers

JEFF CHARIS- CARLSON

JCHARISC@PRESS-CITIZEN.COM

With the University of Iowa reinstating $4.3 million in legacy scholarships for the 2017-18 academic year, current and prospective students — along with their families — should prepare for significant tuition hikes in 2018-19 and beyond.

“We can't do this alone,” UI President Bruce Harreld said last month. “So the state either needs to fund our universities or get out of the way and let us start to soar.”

For Harreld, that means state lawmakers and members of the Iowa Board of Regents should give UI their blessing to increase its base tuition and fees until it ranks in the middle, rather than at the bottom, of its peer institutions.

Bringing UI's resident tuition rate to the average of its peer group, Harreld said, would provide an additional $91 million for the university. Yet it would do so by raising UI's base tuition and fees by a third from nearly $9,000 to nearly $12,000.

Stretching that increase over the next five years, as Harreld suggested to lawmakers last month, would require 6.6 percent increases each year. Given that the regents say tuition already is locked in for the 2017-18 school year, that would mean four years of 8.25 percent increases starting in 2018.

Bruce Rastetter, the outgoing president of the Board of Regents, seemed to give his blessing to Harreld's proposal Wednesday when he issued following statement: “Moving forward, if the state chooses not to adequately fund the UI's fiveyear strategic plan, the board is committed to work with the UI to bring its tuition in line with its national peer group.”

Rastetter also said last week that, despite past history otherwise, he would be open to UI and ISU, as public research universities, charging significantly higher tuition than UNI, as a comprehensive university.

Yet after Rastetter's term expires on April 30, it's unclear who will lead the ninemember board that oversees Iowa's three public universities.

Rastetter announced last month that he was not seeking reappointment to a second six-year term. Under board policy, the president's responsibilities should fall on President Pro Tem Katie Mulholland in the event of a vacancy. But Mulholland's term as a regent also expires April 30, and Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad has decided not to reappoint her.

Regent officials declined Thursday to discuss any specifics about what those possible tuition changes might mean long-term.

“The specifics would be discussed at the appropriate time in the future,” Josh Lehman, a spokesman for the regents, said via email.

The possibility of UI raising tuition by as much as 33 percent by 2022 is a far cry from the “tuition freeze” strategy Rastetter began advocating when he became board president in 2013. The regents were able to freeze in-state tuition rates for nearly three years because the Legislature provided additional funding to make up the costs.

That strategy broke down in 2015 and 2016, leading to mid-year tuition hikes last year at Iowa State University and the University of Northern Iowa and a nearly 5 percent tuition and fee increase for all three universities in 2016-17.

And the supposed financial benefits from the strategy have been erased at UI and ISU, undone this year by the Iowa Legislature and governor cutting UI’s budget by $9.24 million, ISU’s budget by nearly $9 million and UNI’s budget by more than $2.5 million.

Those cuts have reduced the state funding for UI and ISU down to the level they were at during the 2013-14 academic year — the first year of the tuition freeze. UNI’s funding level has been reduced to the 2015-16 level.

Given the unlikelihood of the Iowa Legislature fully restoring those cuts for the next fiscal year, university officials have been addressing them as permanent cuts. ISU and UNI have said they will address the cuts through postponing some strategic initiatives, leaving some vacant positions open and postponing nonessential deferred maintenance.

UI announced last week that it would address some of the long-term consequences by abruptly canceling a legacy scholarship program that awarded $1,500 a year to more than 3,000 students. Harreld reversed that decision this week and restored the award for returning and incoming students.

“Moving forward, we must continue to place a priority on need-based and merit-based awards, which is why the scholarships ... will still be discontinued for new students starting in 2018,” UI officials said in a news release Wednesday.

ISU officials said Tuesday that they had no plans to reduce financial aid packages in response to the budget cuts.

Those scholarships — which were first offered to children of UI alumni in 2014 — are the result of the regents, under Rastetter’s leadership, creating a new formula for dividing up state funding among the three schools. The formula more directly tied state funding to each school’s in-state enrollment, which led UI to increase its recruitment efforts among Iowa graduates.

Although approved by the regents in 2014, the funding formula has been ignored by the Iowa Legislature when appropriating state money to the three public universities.

Concerns have been raised over the past three years that legacy scholarships undermine the state’s private and community colleges and eventually will prove too expensive for UI to maintain.

“Generally speaking, it’s not the best way to proceed to have a program like this in the first place,” said Barnak Nassirian, director of federal relations and policy analysis for the American Association of State Colleges and Universities. “But that doesn’t mean you should cancel it midstream or in an arbitrary way.”

DMR: In Iowa, views differ on Sessions tempest

Grassley stands by AG in Russia fuss; Loeb sack: Resign

JASON NOBLE

JNOBLE2@DMREG.COM

One Iowa lawmaker on Thursday called on U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions to resign amid questions about his contact with the Russian government during last year’s presidential election. Another called that suggestion “nonsense.”

Sessions, a Republican who took office as attorney general less than a month ago, is at the center of the latest development in the ongoing story of interactions between President Donald Trump’s campaign and the Russian government.

The Washington Post reported Wednesday night that Sessions twice met with the Russian ambassador in 2016, contradicting a statement he made during his confirmation hearings.

Thursday afternoon, in response to the story, Sessions said he would recuse himself from Justice Department investigations into apparent Russian meddling in the election.

U.S. Rep. Dave Loebsack, the lone Democrat in Iowa’s congressional delegation, issued a statement Thursday morning accusing Sessions of lying under oath and calling on him to resign.

“These new revelations about the attorney general’s dealing with the Russians reinforce the need for a truly independent, outside, bipartisan investigation into the president and his staff’s dealings with Russians,” Loebsack said in the statement. “A simple recusal is no longer enough, Attorney General Sessions must resign so that we can focus on creating jobs and growing our nation’s economy.”

But U.S. Sen. Chuck Grassley, a Republican who heads the Senate Judiciary Committee that oversaw Sessions’ confirmation called such talk “nonsense,” praising the attorney general as “an honest and forthright public servant.”

Grassley said he advised Sessions in a conversation Thursday afternoon to remove himself from the Russia investigation.

“There’s little doubt that alleged conflicts, no matter how flimsy and regardless of whether or not they are based in fact, will be used against him to discredit him and any potential investigation into alleged conversations between the campaign and the Russian government,” Grassley said in a statement.

“So, his actions today were the right thing to do.” Grassley added that Sessions will clarify his remarks to the Judiciary Committee. “I appreciate that he will be sending a letter to the committee, as I asked him to do, to clear up any confusion regarding his testimony so we can put this issue to bed once and for all,” Grassley said.

U.S. Sen. Joni Ernst, a Republican issued a statement supporting Sessions’ decision to recuse himself.

“I can’t speak for Attorney General Sessions,” Ernst said. “I don’t yet know all the facts of this situation. However, I support his decision to recuse himself.”

U.S. Rep. David Young likewise expressed support for Session’s decision.

“I agree with Attorney General Session’s decision that should the agency ever find cause to investigate alleged conversations between the Trump campaign and Russia - he would recuse himself from those matters,” Young said in a statement. The other members of Iowa’s federal delegation, U.S Reps. Steve King and Rod Blum, did not respond to requests for comment on the matter.

DMR: Branstad reappoints one regent, not two

JEFF CHARIS- CARLSON

JCHARISC@PRESS-CITIZEN.COM

The Iowa governor’s recent appointments to the Iowa Board of Regents leave the presidency of the nine-member board up in the air. Bruce Rastetter, who has served as the president of the regents since 2013, announced last month he would not be seeking another six-year term on the board that oversees Iowa’s three public universities.

The list of appointments released by the governor’s office Wednesday show that Gov. Terry Branstad has not reappointed Regent Katie Mulholland, who has served as president pro tem for the same amount of time. “Gov. Branstad and Lt. Gov. Reynolds appreciate Katie Mulholland’s service to the Board of Regents and both believe she did a great job,” Ben Hammes, a gubernatorial spokesman, said Wednesday via email. “But rarely does a regent get reappointed to a second full term because they are sixyear terms. This gives Iowans more of an opportunity to serve on the Board of Regents.” Branstad did reappoint Regent Sherry Bates of Scranton, who has served on the board since filling a vacancy in 2015. “Sherry Bates has also been a great member of the Board of Regents, Hammes said. “Furthermore, she has only served a partial term and therefore both Gov. Branstad and Lt. Gov. Reynolds decided to reappoint and give her an opportunity to serve a full term.”

Rastetter and Mulholland were elected to their leadership posts in April 2016, with their two-year terms as president and president pro tem not set to expire until April 2018. Both their terms as regents now are scheduled to end April 30.

Branstad also named two former state lawmakers to serve in the remaining open seats on the board: former Rep. Nancy Dunkel, D-Dyersville, and former Sen. Nancy Boettger, R-Harlan.

The appointments require support by a 34-vote supermajority of the Iowa Senate. The Senate also will consider the confirmation of Regent Mike Richards, who was appointed to fill a vacancy shortly after the Iowa Legislature adjourned last year.

DMR: Chelgren denies he distorted his educational background

AARON YOUNG AND WILLIAM PETROSKI

AYOUNG2@DMREG.COM

An Iowa state senator denied Wednesday that he misrepresented his biographical information after questions were raised about his educational background. According to NBC News, biographical information for Sen. Mark Chelgren, R-Ottumwa, on the Iowa Senate Republicans website stated he had a business degree from California-based Forbco Management school. But Forbco isn't listed as an accredited school by the National Center for Education Statistics, and records show the only Forbco in California is a company that once operated a Sizzler steakhouse in Torrance, Calif., according to the report.

Asked by The Des Moines Register if he misrepresented his biography, Chelgren said, "No, I did not."

"This was Forbco Management School, which ran Sizzler restaurants and a few other different restaurants, and I spent six months in order to be promoted from associate manager to assistant manager" when I was 19, he said. "I had to take their school and their classes and they gave me their degree — as they termed it — and I have used that terminology.

"I was told, 'Well, it is probably better terminology to say "certificate," so regardless of however they want to do it, that is the semantics (NBC News is) arguing.' " Ed Failor, a spokesman for the Iowa Senate Republicans, told NBC News that Chelgren received "a certificate" from a management course he took while working at Sizzler, but it's "not accurate" to say Chelgren has a business degree.

"(It's) kind of like Hamburger University at McDonald's," he said.

Chelgren told NBC News he wasn't aware of the error on the website, which was reportedly removed from his bio page.

Chelgren is pushing a bill in the Iowa Senate to achieve greater political diversity among professors at the state's Board of Regents universities, which would institute a hiring freeze until the number of registered Republicans and Democrats on university faculty fall within 10 percent of one another.

DMR: Medical marijuana gains some ground

Bill to continue limited program advances, but with a few caveats

TONY LEYS

TLEYS@DMREG.COM

Medical marijuana advocates gained a bit of ground in the Legislature Thursday, but they continue to face major hurdles to an expansion of the state's limited program.

The state's program, which allows possession of a marijuana extract by people with severe epilepsy, is set to expire in July. An Iowa Senate subcommittee approved a bill Thursday morning that would allow the program to continue indefinitely. The bill also says the state would immediately recognize the legality of a pharmaceutical version of the oil if the federal Food and Drug Administration does so. The bill, Senate File 282, would not expand the list of ailments for which Iowans could use marijuana products. It also would not legalize any production or distribution of the medication, unless federal authorities approve a version of the oil being tested by pharmaceutical companies. Medical marijuana advocates favor a broader program than the state now has. They note that only 132 ill Iowans have obtained cards since the current program was enacted in 2014. The idea of allowing medical use marijuana has become dramatically more popular in recent years. A Des Moines Register/ Mediacom Iowa Poll published last month found that 80 percent of Iowans now favor making marijuana legal for medical uses, up from 58 percent who favored the idea in a 2013 Iowa Poll. Sen. Joe Bolkcom, an Iowa City Democrat who favors legalizing medical marijuana, voted reluctantly Thursday morning to move the bill forward to a full committee. He called the bill “an extremely limited half step. ... This bill extends a program that isn’t working.” He said Iowans with ailments such as multiple sclerosis, cancer and Crohn’s disease deserve the chance to try treating their symptoms with marijuana. The limited Senate bill is similar to one moving in the House. Sen. Thomas Greene, a Burlington Republican who was chairman of Thursday’s subcommittee on the Senate bill, said he hoped legislators would amend the proposal to expand it later in the process. “This is a common-sense advancement that I believe will help a lot of Iowans,” Greene, who is a retired pharmacist, told reporters after the hearing. The bill went on to be passed by the full Senate Human Resources Committee Thursday evening.

Sen. Brad Zaun, an Urbandale Republican, introduced a broader bill Tuesday. Senate Study Bill 1176 calls on the state to authorize up to four manufacturing facilities by December 2017 and authorize up to 12 dispensaries by April 2018. Iowans with debilitating illnesses could work with their physicians to obtain state-issued cards authorizing them to purchase medical cannabis.

Zaun acknowledged in an interview Thursday that his bill was going to effectively die this week because of a legislative deadline known as a funnel. He expressed optimism that its language would be revived in an appropriations bill, which would be exempt from the funnel. Zaun referred to the Register’s Iowa Poll on medical marijuana. “If 80 percent of Iowans support it, I don’t understand where there’s a holdup,” he said.

The main holdup is in the Iowa House. House Speaker Linda Upmeyer has expressed skepticism about Iowa moving to allow more medical uses of marijuana while the federal government continues to consider such uses illegal.

Upmeyer told reporters Thursday that bills to extend the current, limited program would continue to move in the Legislature, but she was unsure about expansion proposals. She said she was open to the idea of allowing people with other illnesses besides epilepsy to use marijuana products, especially a version of the oil called Epidiolex, which contains little of the chemical that makes recreational marijuana users high.

DMR: Libertarian Party earns official status in Iowa

Iowa Secretary of State Paul Pate says the Libertarian Party has obtained official political party status in Iowa.

Pate said the status began effective Wednesday after state election officials determined that the party’s presidential nominee, Gary Johnson, received 59,186 votes — or 3.8 percent of the vote in the November 2016 general election. That surpassed the 2 percent threshold required by Iowa law to obtain official political party status.

The new status gives the Libertarian Party the ability to participate in primary elections in 2018. “Libertarian” will be included as an option for Iowans on voter registration forms.

The last time a third party gained political party status in Iowa was in 2000, when Green Party nominee Ralph Nader received 2.2 percent of the votes cast for president.

DMR: Commissioner picks new Iowa State Patrol chief

Public Safety Commissioner Roxann Ryan is appointing her top aide to be the new chief of the Iowa State Patrol.

Ryan announced Thursday that her executive officer, Jeff Ritzman, will be the patrol's next colonel effective immediately. He replaces Michael Van Berkum, whose retirement takes effect Friday.

Ryan said in a note to troopers that Ritzman "is the right person for the job at this point in time." She said Ritzman's experience makes him "uniquely qualified" to address challenges in law enforcement and lead the force during a time of tight budgets.

Ritzman joined the Department of Public Safety as a trooper in 1982 and has served in several roles, including homeland security coordinator in the intelligence-gathering Fusion Center.

Ryan also announced that she was appointing Lt. Randy Olmstead to replace Ritzman as executive officer.

DMR: Abortion ban bill advances in Senate

Legislation would prohibit most abortions after 20 weeks

WILLIAM PETROSKI AND BRIANNE PFANNENSTIEL

BPETROSK@DMREG.COM

A bill that would most prohibit most abortions after 20 weeks advanced Thursday in the Iowa Senate, while three other antiabortion bills failed because of a lack of support. The Iowa Senate Human Resources Committee voted 9-3 to approve Senate File 53, which would generally prohibit abortions 20 weeks after fertilization. At least 18 states have enacted similar legislation. However, it's not clear whether the measure can muster enough support to win approval in both the House and Senate. Earlier Thursday, Senate File 253, which was aimed at halting abortions in Iowa, was withdrawn from the agenda of the Senate Judiciary Committee. Sen. Brad Zaun, R-Urbandale, an opponent of abortion, said the proposal to declare that life begins at conception simply didn't have enough votes to pass the committee. "I am disappointed, but I certainly understand how the process works," Zaun said. He noted that this week marks a key legislative deadline for most policy bills to be approved by either a House or Senate committee. In the Iowa House, two anti-abortion bills — one declaring that life begins at conception and another halting most abortions after 20 weeks — both failed Thursday to advance out of committees. "We will continue to look at life as we move on through the session, see what the Senate sends to us and continue to take up the issue," said House Human Resources Committee Chairman Joel Fry, R-Osceola. House Speaker Linda Upmeyer, R-Clear Lake, said both House bills have merit and her caucus plans to continue to discuss the issue.

"They're working very hard to reach consensus on those topics," Upmeyer said. "Some people want to go down the path of life at conception and having something get to court that can have a bigger decision. Others are real focused on 'We want something that matters today or next week or next month.'" Officials with Planned Parenthood of the Heartland were disappointed by the Senate committee's decision to approve the 20-week ban on abortion, which makes a narrow exception for cases between 20 and 24 weeks that involve fetal abnormalities.

But Planned Parenthood officials were pleased with the failure of the life-at-conception legislation, which they described as a "thinly veiled, unconstitutional attempt to ban abortion" in Iowa.

“Even fellow Senate Republicans recognized it would have far-reaching unintended consequences and refused to vote in its favor,” said Planned Parenthood spokeswoman Rachel Lopez.

Jenifer Bowen, a spokeswoman for Iowa Right to Life, said the life-at-conception bill was a top priority of Iowa organizations opposed to abortion, and it was disappointing to see the measure fail to even pass the Legislature’s first deadline. She noted the bill’s critics had raised questions whether the legislation would have blocked women’s access to contraceptives and whether women attempting to become pregnant would have been denied an opportunity for in-vitro fertilization..

“The message is that we have so many answers that still need to be given to concerned legislators,” Bowen said. But she added that she was pleased the 20-week ban has advanced in the Senate and she believes it could withstand a court challenge if it is enacted into law. Two Democrats — Sens. Liz Mathis of Cedar Rapids and Amanda Ragan of Mason City — joined seven Republicans in voting for the 20-week abortion ban in the Senate Human Resources Committee.

Sen. Joe Bolkcom, D-Iowa City, spoke against the 20-week prohibition, saying the Legislature should not be enacting laws that unnecessarily restrict a family’s options.

Sometimes pregnancies go wrong, creating difficult decisions for a family, Bolkcom said. “The last person that needs to stick their nose into this heartbreaking situation is a politician,” he added.

Sen. Mark Costello, R-Iowa City, who supported the 20-week ban, said all lawmakers want to work toward preventing unplanned pregnancies. But he added, “I think this does have the potential to save lives. I always like to say there are two lives involved here.”

DMR: Property construction measure sparks debate

LEE ROOD

LROOD@DMREG.COM

A controversial measure at the Statehouse would shift more of the burden of fixing unsafe and hidden errors in construction to property owners.

House File 3 and Senate Study Bill 1010 would change from 15 years to eight years the time property owners have to file a “statute of repose” action when they find defects in improvements made on residential, commercial or public property. Both bills have cleared their committees.

The controversial legislation is sponsored by Sen. Brad Zaun, R-Urbandale, chair of the Senate’s judiciary committee. Insurance groups, some builders organizations and land surveyors have registered in favor of the law change, but it is opposed by labor groups, other builders and lawyers. Attorneys within the Iowa Attorney General’s Consumer Protection Division oppose the legislation because they believe it would likely lead to fewer Iowans winning claims under the state’s existing “statute of repose.”

Ben Bellus, an attorney in the division, says homeowners would have less time to sue when defects are hidden. In one 2005 lawsuit he pointed out, a defectively constructed roof and rain gutters led a home’s second owners to find extensive water damage and mold. The homeowners won their court action but would not have if they were only allowed to sue within eight years, rather than 15. In another 1994 case, buyers of a house discovered hidden problems in the wood and other construction products used, as well as a lack of moisture barriers, that required costly repairs.

A statute-of-repose period differs from a statute of limitation. It establishes a time period after which a lawsuit based on negligence in an improvement can be filed, regardless of whether there was an injury to a person or property.

Some states have shorter time periods in their statutes, but they also have wider exemptions for things such as latent defects and fraud.

The consumer protective division also is opposing House Study Bill 62, which, among other things, would allow consumers to settle disputes over mechanic's liens in arbitration and court.

Currently, those liens can be addressed in civil courts by judges for a filing fee and allow people to seek damages Bellus says proposed code changes would prohibit people from winning damages from someone harmed by the defects. But Iowa Rep. Chip Baltimore, chairman of the House judiciary committee, contends arbitration also can make the process quicker and less expensive.

DMR: Public water utilities face big changes

Legislation would dismantle D.M. Water Works, give power to cities

MACKENZIE ELMER

MELMER@DMREG.COM

Legislation that would dismantle Des Moines Water Works and other public water utilities is headed to a vote in both the Iowa House and Senate.

The Senate Agriculture Committee approved the bill Thursday morning after making several amendments that mirror changes made by the House Ag Committee two days earlier. The Iowa House will hold a public hearing on the contentious issue at 10 a.m. Monday at the Capitol. The legislation has undergone several changes, here's what you need to know:

Q: What would the bill

do?

A: It would strip public water utilities in Des Moines, Urbandale and West Des Moines of their independence, making them city departments subject to the control of the local city council. The city's existing water boards, which are appointed by each city's mayor and approved by the city council, hire administrators to operate the utilities and make decisions about water rates and infrastructure projects. They also can take bond referendums directly to the public for a vote.

The bill would change that. Water boards would become advisory boards, similar to a planning and zoning commission. City managers would be responsible for hiring managers to run the departments. And decisions on spending and policy would be subject to city council approval.

Existing state law requires a public vote to dissolve a public utility. The bill would instead give that power to the Legislature.

Q: What does this means for the Des Moines Water Works lawsuit?

A: The decision on whether to continue Des Moines Water Works' lawsuit against three rural northwest Iowa counties would rest with the Des Moines City Council. The water works filed a lawsuit in 2015 claiming underground drainage tiles are funneling high levels of nitrates into the Raccoon River, a source of drinking water for 500,000 central Iowans. The utility says it spent about $1.3 million last year to remove nitrates and make the water safe for consumption. A trial is scheduled to begin in June.

Q: Does it create a regional water system?

A: Not directly. The legislation originally included language and deadlines that would have forced Des Moines and its suburban neighbors to create a regional water authority with a regional board appointed by city council. But that language has since been removed.

Decisions on whether to create a regional system would be left to central Iowa cities to decide. Des Moines City Manager Scott Sanders told lawmakers Tuesday that he believes the legislation would be "the first step in getting that accomplished."

Q: What about existing water projects?

A: Some would be allowed to continue. Others would not. The legislation initially called for cities to halt any water infrastructure projects costing more than $100,000 while a regional water authority was created. Suburban leaders were concerned that could hurt economic development projects, including a $2.5 billion Microsoft data center project in West Des Moines. The city has made commitments to install water lines to the site.

The amended bill allows contracts made before the legislation is enacted to continue.

But it would prohibit planning, design or construction of any new water production and treatment plants. That could end Urbandale's preliminary plans to build an independent water treatment facility to serve its residents.

Q: Who is behind the legislation?

A: Bill Stowe, the CEO of Des Moines Water Works, has claimed the Iowa Farm Bureau is pushing the legislation in an effort to kill the federal lawsuit. Iowa Farm Bureau rebutted the accusations, saying it did not author the bill and has not registered in support of it.

Des Moines City Councilwoman Christine Hensley has been most vocal on the council against the lawsuit, especially in her capacity as a leader of the Clean Water Partnership, which is backed by the Farm Bureau. But Hensley said she had no contact with either group about the bill until after it was introduced.

"There's absolutely no collusion," she said.

Q: Where does the legislation stand?

A: Identical bills are making their way through the Iowa House and Senate. The bills (House File 484 and Senate Study Bill 1146) were passed by each chamber's Agriculture Committee on party-line votes, with Republicans in favor and Democrats opposing.

The Iowa House will hold a public hearing Monday before the bill goes to the floor for debate. The hearing is scheduled for 10 a.m. at the Iowa Capitol in Room 103. Individuals and organizations can go online to submit a request to speak on the bill.

DMR: ‘Sanctuary city’ ban measure moves to Iowa Senate floor

WILLIAM PETROSKI

BPETROSK@DMREG.COM

Legislation that would prevent cities, counties and college campus police from enacting “sanctuary” policies to provide safe havens for undocumented immigrants cleared the Iowa Senate Local Government Committee on Thursday despite strong opposition from immigrants and a host of pro-immigrant groups. Senate Study Bill 1172, which was sent to the Senate floor, would bar a local government or campus police agency from receiving state funds if the legislation was violated. It would require Iowa law enforcement agencies to comply with federal immigration detainer requests for persons in their custody.

In addition, the legislation would prohibit local governments or campus police from discouraging local law enforcement officers or others from activities related to enforcing immigration laws. A similar, but not identical bill — House File 265 — is pending in the Iowa House.

“I believe law enforcement should enforce the law,” said Sen. Dennis Guth, R-Klemme. He supported the proposal during a Senate subcommittee debate that preceded the full committee discussion. Sen. Matt McCoy, D-Des Moines, criticized the legislation, saying it was “full of flaws” and unconstitutional. “This is meanspirited and I will not be part of it,” McCoy added.

McCoy said he was particularly concerned about provisions in the bill that could hold cities and counties liable for damages if a person subject to a detainer is released from custody and commits a felony within 10 years. Such damages could total millions of dollars and could force some local governments into bankruptcy, he added. However, the bill does not apply to school districts or nonpublic schools. Sen. Julian Garrett, R-Indianola, who chairs the committee, defended the proposal, saying, “This bill is primarily aimed at people who are already in jail for something.” He also said he is open to considering amendments to the bill, including the threat of liability and damages for cities and counties.

Cities such as San Francisco have gained national attention for their sanctuary policies, especially as President Donald Trump campaigned on tougher immigration laws ahead of his election. Since taking office, Trump has issued an executive order rescinding federal money to those cities.

In Iowa, some of the debate on the issue has focused on Iowa City, where local officials recently adopted a resolution that would prevent city resources from being used to enforce federal immigration law absent a public safety threat. In addition, the Des Moines Public Schools are supporting undocumented students, barring staff from asking about their immigration status and funneling federal inquiries through the superintendent’s office and district attorney. But the measure appears to stop short of blocking the district from working with immigration officials.

A host of organizations registered against the Senate bill, including the Iowa League of Cities, Iowa Police Chiefs Association, Interfaith Alliance of Iowa, American Civil Liberties Union of Iowa, Iowa Catholic Conference, Iowa Annual Conference of the United Methodist Church, and others. The only organization registered in support is the Iowa Minuteman Civil Defense Corps. Daniel Zeno, a lobbyist for the American Civil Liberties Union of Iowa, said the bill would undermine constitutional rights and would invite police to treat people differently because of their ethnicity. “It attacks the trust between communities and police,” he said. Tom Chapman, a lobbyist for the Iowa Catholic Conference, said the legislation represents a shift in the wrong direction for the immigration debate. “We are very much opposed. We look for merciful policies that will help people and their families,” he said.

Fabiola Schirrmeister, a Spanish language radio broadcaster in the Des Moines area, spoke passionately against the bill, warning it will lead to racial profiling. Schirrmeister, who was born in Mexico, said the legislation is already creating panic in Iowa’s Latino community, and she cautioned it could hurt the state’s economy. “Immigrants work hard,” she said.

AP: Senators question six-week delay on ag secretary pick

Grassley: ‘They don’t seem to have a reason’ for paperwork not being offered

MARY CLARE JALONICK

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump picked former Georgia Gov. Sonny Perdue to be his agriculture secretary six weeks ago, but the administration still hasn’t formally provided the Senate with the paperwork for the nomination.

The delay is frustrating farm-state senators, who represent many of the core voters responsible for helping elect Trump.

The Senate Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry Committee needs the paperwork before the chairman, Sen. Pat Roberts, can schedule a confirmation hearing.

“I don’t know yet,” Roberts, R-Kan., said Wednesday when asked about Perdue’s information. “I wish to hell I did. We need a champion for agriculture, we need him on board.”

Roberts also complained about the delay at a committee hearing in Kansas last week. He predicted that Perdue would be confirmed quickly once the Senate can get started on the nomination.

The White House said the paperwork, including ethics forms and an FBI background check, is coming soon. The only other nomination that hasn’t been sent to Capitol Hill is that of Alexander Acosta, who was nominated to be labor secretary on Feb. 16 after the withdrawal of the original nominee, Andrew Puzder.

Senators say they haven’t been given an explanation for the delay involving Perdue.

“They don’t seem to have a reason as to why his name hasn’t come up,” Sen. Chuck Grassley, R-Ia., told reporters after asking around about the Perdue nomination.

The delay comes as some farm-state lawmakers question whether Trump is paying enough attention to rural areas, which overwhelmingly voted for him.

After Trump’s address to Congress on Tuesday night, Democratic Sens. Heidi Heitkamp of North Dakota and Jon Tester of Montana both said the president didn’t specifically mention rural America in his hourlong speech. Both senators are up for re-election in 2018.

“There wasn’t a mention of rural America, a farm bill, or agriculture workers, and these should be focuses for any leader of our country,” Heitkamp said, noting that President Barack Obama often omitted farm country in his speeches to Congress as well.

“You wonder why people in rural America feel left out and feel disenfranchised? Because they never hear anything about them,” she said.

Tester said lawmakers need to keep rural issues “front and center” for the new president, who is from New York City.

“The tendency is to go where you know, and I’m not sure he knows rural America very well, so it’s just an opportunity to remind him that you’ve got to pay attention,” Tester said.

Some farm-state Republicans pushed back on the idea that Trump is not engaged.

“He talked about rolling back regulations, and he talked about things that really matter in rural America,” South Dakota Sen. Mike Rounds said of Trump’s speech.

While Trump began picking department heads in November, he waited until Jan. 18, two days before his inauguration, to choose an agriculture secretary. At the time, farm-state lawmakers and farm groups said they worried that the new pick would be at a disadvantage getting started.

In the weeks since he was chosen, Perdue has held several meetings with senators on Capitol Hill.

Farm-state senators have mostly praised his nomination, including Heitkamp, who said she would support him.

Perdue, 70, is a farmer’s son who would be the first Southerner in the post in more than two decades. He built businesses in grain trading and trucking before becoming the first Republican governor of Georgia since Reconstruction. After his governorship, he co-founded a company called Perdue Partners that helped American companies export their goods.

It’s unclear whether any of his business interests are causing the holdup. The forms in question are financial disclosures certified by the Office of Government Ethics and also written ethics agreements between the nominee and the office that identify potential conflicts of interest and the ways in which the nominee will resolve those conflicts. They are required by the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, passed after the Watergate scandal.

Before Trump’s inauguration, the head of the ethics office complained that the new administration was not filing forms quickly enough as the Senate started to hold hearings.

Director Walter Shaub said in January that part of the problem was that Trump announced nominees before consulting the office for evaluation of ethics issues. Traditionally, a president’s or president-elect’s picks have not been announced until the office has cleared the nominees, Shaub said at the time.

While Perdue’s nomination is pending, acting Agriculture Deputy Secretary Mike Young is in charge.

DMR Editorial: Casino finances shouldn’t be secret

Iowa is dependent on gambling money, and that requires openness

What happens to all the money gamblers drop in slot machines and toss on blackjack tables in Iowa's 19 state-regulated casinos?

We know because Iowa law requires casinos to hire auditors to complete detailed reports and file them with the state. These audits have been available to the public for more than 30 years.

The casino industry now wants to change that. Bills in the House and Senate would make the audits confidential. Lobbyists argue the audits contain trade secrets that could help competitors.

The industry, when pressed, admits what everyone should understand: Casinos are unlike other businesses and require strict regulation and public scrutiny.

Gambling has the potential to wreak havoc on lives and communities, which is why we require them to operate in the light.

The regulated casinos have traditionally welcomed such transparency to show they are far removed from the criminal, dark side of the industry.

Secondly, casinos play a unique role throughout the state.

Iowans rely on them for economic development, entertainment, charitable donations and state revenues. In 2016, those 19 casinos paid $317 million in overall taxes and contributed $41 million to nonprofits, on top of other charitable donations.

Like it or not, Iowans have grown dependent, if not addicted, to casino revenues. Prairie Meadows dollars help pay for the Iowa Events Center, for example, and underwrite grants for the United Way and other nonprofits.

The only way to control such dependence is through openness from top to bottom. No matter how tightly casinos are regulated, the public must be assured the regulators are doing their jobs, too.

In 1983, Gov. Terry Branstad signed a law requiring the audits of gambling licensee's "total gambling operations, including an itemization of all expenses and subsidies." The law also specifies that "books and records kept by a licensee are a public record."

These audits have allowed the public to understand casinos' financial stability over the years, and the picture hasn't always been rosy. In the 1990s, the audits showed riverboat casinos floating in red ink, and several eventually left eastern Iowa for other states. Race tracks in Altoona and Waterloo fell into bankruptcy.

The audits have also told the story of improving fortunes, and those media reports helped shape the public debate over expanding gambling in the state. That debate continues over proposed casinos in Linn County.

The public information is also important to hundreds of charities that every year benefit from tens of millions of dollars linked to an Iowa law that requires a cut of casino revenues go to philanthropy.

As it is, the audits are available only on a limited basis. The media and the public are able to request audit reports through the Iowa Racing and Gaming Commission.

The commission then contacts the casino, which has 20 days to respond by either providing the audit or seeking a court injunction.

Last year, the Grand Traverse Band Economic Development, which is part of three Native American casinos in Michigan, requested the audits. Several Iowa casinos sued in December to keep the documents from being released, but three casinos owned by Wild Rose saw no need for secrecy.

A decision is pending, but the casino industry hedged by lobbying to change the law and close the audits.

The bills would still allow the release of basic information such as admissions per day, money wagered and adjusted gross receipts, but that is far less than what the current law requires.

Iowa's attorney general, Democrat Tom Miller, took no position on whether the information should be confidential after the lawsuit was filed last year. Sadly, this follows a pattern of weakness in his office when it comes to openness.

Republicans in the Legislature can take a stand, however. They can show Iowans that their casinos won't rake in their cash in the dark.

DMR Iowa View: Teachers deserve a choice other than IPERS

CHAD ALDEMAN, a graduate of West Des Moines Valley and the University of Iowa, is a principal at Bellwether Education Partners and the editor of TeacherPensions.org.

Iowa plan delivers decent retirement benefits only to teachers who stay for 20 or 30 years

Imagine you're a new teacher in Iowa being offered a choice between two retirement plans: Under Option A, your employer will contribute 10 percent of your salary. That money will immediately go into your own portable account, and you can invest it in a range of low-cost mutual funds.

Under Option B, your employer will contribute only 9 percent of your salary, and only half that amount will go toward your own retirement (the rest has to go back to the state to pay off its debts). You don't get to make any investment choices, and you won't qualify for any retirement benefit at all until you work for at least seven years.

Because your benefits are based on a formula, you might not qualify for retirement benefits worth even as much as what you personally contributed until you work for 20 or 30 years.

Which option would you choose?

It's actually a trick question, but it shouldn't be. Unlike employees of Iowa's state colleges and universities, who are given this choice, Iowa's teachers are not. Instead, they're all placed in Option B, the IPERS defined benefit pension plan. They have no choice, even if life circumstances might make Option A the better one.

Advocates of IPERS point out that it takes on a number of risks so that workers don't have to. Iowa teachers don't have to decide whether or not to save for retirement, how much to contribute, or how to invest their savings.

The state takes care of those decisions. Monthly IPERS checks also mean that individual members don't have to figure out how to draw down their assets upon retirement. Rather than having access to one lump sum, the state pension plan issues qualifying retirees regular checks throughout their retirement years.

But Iowa teachers face other risks.

First, in Iowa as in other states, IPERS has taken on more and more debt (known as “unfunded liabilities” in the pension world) as the state’s promises have exceeded its savings. Teachers may not know it, but those costs trickle down to them in the form of smaller education budgets, higher class sizes, and lower salaries.

Worse, IPERS, like other pension plans, is heavily back-loaded. It delivers decent retirement benefits only to teachers who stay for 20 or 30 years.

For a variety of personal and professional reasons, most teachers don’t stay that long. In Iowa, about half of teachers leave within five years, and two-thirds leave within 10 years. Many of these teachers aren’t leaving teaching entirely, life just takes them to other places to teach. Either way, the bottom line is that most Iowa teachers are not benefitting from the current IPERS structure.

Recently, Iowa Treasurer Michael Fitzgerald warned that any changes to IPERS would harm current workers (Treasurer: My concern grows for IPERS members, Feb. 24) and potentially hinder the state’s ability to recruit new employees. But that doesn’t have to be true, and if Fitzgerald were willing to look, he could easily find examples of employers offering more workerfriendly retirement benefits.

The federal government began offering all newly hired civilian workers a hybrid retirement plan combining some aspects of traditional pension plans along with a more portable benefit structure beginning in the 1980s, and the military adopted a similar model last year. Nebraska has been enrolling state government workers in a portable “cash balance” plan for years, and Kansas and Kentucky switched more recently.

Even within Iowa’s borders, the state’s colleges and universities have been offering their workers the choice of a portable, well-run retirement plan for decades.

There are trade-offs with each of these plans, and none of them may be exactly right for all of Iowa’s teachers.

But regardless of the exact model chosen, it’s false to claim that Iowa can either protect current workers and retirees or create a better system for its next generation of workers. Iowa legislators made a set of promises to existing workers, and it should keep those promises.

Yet meeting those obligations should not stop Iowa from creating a path to a secure retirement for all of its teachers, no matter how long they choose to stay. Iowa’s current pension system isn’t accomplishing that goal, but there are readily available alternative plans that could.

DMR Iowa View: DOES IOWA WANT TO BECOME THE NEXT MISSOURI?

GUN BILL COULD LEAD TO MORE VIOLENCE

DANIEL WEBSTER is director of the Johns Hopkins Center for Gun Policy and Research in Baltimore, Md.

IOWA VIEW

An omnibus gun bill moving through the Iowa Legislature should alarm Iowans concerned about gun violence and suicides. The bill would remove a number of gun safety measures by repealing handgun purchaser permits and background checks on all handgun sales, doing away with permits for open and concealed carry of firearms, and adds a “shoot first” provision that greatly expands legal justifications for killing someone. Each component of the bill is dangerous; in combination, it sets the stage for significant increases in gun violence.

In 2007, Missouri repealed its law that had required handgun purchasers to obtain a permit from local law enforcement to demonstrate that the individual passed a background check. It was virtually identical to the law that some Iowa lawmakers want to repeal. Research my colleagues and I conducted found that this repeal was associated with sharp increases in guns being diverted for criminal use, firearm homicides, shootings of law enforcement officers, and suicides, translating to more than 100 deaths in Missouri every year. The exact opposite occurred when Connecticut adopted a law similar to what Missouri repealed. Does Iowa want to become the next Missouri?

The proposed law would also, for practical purposes, do away with local law enforcement agencies' ability to vet an application for a permit to carry a concealed firearm. Currently they can decline to issue the permit when the applicant has a history indicative of dangerousness — prior criminal convictions or restraining orders. The bill under consideration offers a politically clever way to advance a reckless policy known as “permitless carry.” It would allow anyone with a current concealed carry permit to retain their permit for the rest of their life. There would be no incentive for those without concealed carry permits to obtain one under the proposed legislation, because anyone charged with illegal gun carrying could get off the hook by simply completing a firearm safety training course (a quick online course will do) after the offense but before their court date.

There is no credible research that indicates deregulation of public carrying of concealed firearms reduces violent crime or curtails mass shootings. The most recent and most rigorous research shows that such policies, if anything, lead to more assaults committed with firearms.

In addition to making it easier for prohibited persons to obtain firearms, expanding the number of legally armed and dangerous people in nearly all public places, the proposed bill would also expand justifications for killing others. This “shoot first” policy is a bad “solution” that research also indicates likely increases homicides.

Iowa currently has reasonable policies to vet potential gun purchasers and carriers while protecting the rights of law-abiding adults. The proposed omnibus gun bill is meant to appease special interest groups with reckless policies that will predictably lead to more deaths and a reduced sense of safety for many. Elected officials must make hard life-or-death decisions.

When lives are on the line, lawmakers should not listen to the loudest voices, but do what the best science indicates will protect Iowans and prevent deaths.

DMR Iowa View: Transgender rights are protected in Iowa, thank goodness

Alicia Claypool, Interfaith Alliance of Iowa

The Trump administration recently rescinded protections for transgender students that allowed them to use bathrooms corresponding with their gender identity. Thank goodness, this does not mean any change for Iowa's transgender students.

We have a civil rights law,

IOWA VIEW

passed in 2007, that protects these students. Iowa schools must allow students to use bathrooms or locker rooms and address students by the names and pronouns of the gender with which they identify. As the Iowa

Department of Education spokeswoman said last week, “Truly, nothing changes for [Iowa] schools.” (ACLU demands apology for student, Feb. 25) The new federal directive rolls back critical protections for transgender youth, relying on states’ rights, a rationale historically used to limit the rights of individuals. But this is not just any policy, because it deals with the fundamental value of respect for the dignity of each student and should not be allowed to be defined by the prejudices and politics of state legislatures or local school boards.

Transgender rights is a civil rights issue, not states’ rights.

Civil and human rights define who we are as a nation and should reflect our highest aspirations, where the most vulnerable are respected and valued simply for who they are — a child of God.

LEE: Iowa GOP says its ‘bold agenda’ mostly on track

Rod Boshart and James Q. Lynch

Emotions ran high and in some cases raw Thursday as legislators frantically worked to save issues dear to them from falling victim to a self-imposed deadline that renders bills ineligible in the remaining weeks of the 2017 session.

The first “funnel” deadline, which required non-money bills to clear at least one standing committee of the House or Senate to stay active this year, claimed issues dealing with reinstating the death penalty, restricting abortion and raising the statewide minimum wage or interstate speed limits.

State troopers were stationed at several committee meetings where high-profile issues drew crowds of spectators and TV cameras.

Republicans who control both legislative chambers managed to push ahead with bills that would revamp Iowa’s workers’ compensation system, force local governments to enforce federal immigration laws and create new election verification requirements for voters that minority Democrats called punitive and nonsense.

“From what I can tell right now, we’re still on track with a lot of our priorities to continue moving them forward,” said Senate President Jack Whitver, R-Ankeny.

“We came into this session with a big, bold agenda to do major reforms and that’s tough. It takes a long time, but we’re looking at doing reforms that will impact this state in a positive way for decades to come,” he said. “We know this is a two-year process. We’re going to take our time and do it right.”

Democrats, already in the minority in the House but now in the Senate this year, too, have had little sway over that GOP agenda.

“There’s been so much nonsense coming at us this week,” said Senate Democratic Leader Rob Hogg of Cedar Rapids. “This is just nonsense after nonsense after nonsense and we’re trying to sit here and say, hey, you said you were going to work on the economy and schools. Where is it? It’s not happening. In fact, they’re taking us in the wrong direction.”

House Democratic Leader Mark Smith of Marshalltown said Republicans who hold majorities of 59-41 in the House and 29-20-1 in the Senate were making “very egregious” changes to Iowa’s long-standing system of protecting injured workers, election law changes to suppress voting and bills that are “an all-out assault” on ordinary Iowans.

“Republicans have always run on the idea of local control. Their legislation this year is very much anti-local control,” he said.

A workers’ compensation bill, HSB 169 — which calls for reducing benefits for many common workplace injuries, considering an injured employees’ age in determining an employee’s loss of earning power and limiting benefits to older injured employees and cutting off payments for disabling workplace injuries when a person turns 67 — provoked sharp and emotional debate in the House Commerce Committee.

“What you’re doing today, if you pass this out of committee, is doing the wrong thing by those workers,” said Rep. Abby Finkenauer, D-Dubuque. “This is mean. This isn’t who we are as Iowans. I beg you, vote ‘no’ and let’s stop this right now.”

Her plea and another from Rep. Scott Ourth, D-Ackworth, that the bill would be “inhumane ... un-American ... flat-out wrong ... a death sentence” did not stop the committee from approving the plan on 14-9 party-line vote.

“This is a slap in the face to me and my family and my colleagues,” said Ourth, a heavy equipment operator. “What you’re telling me, those of you who I have called friends all along the way, is that one day our friendship will end if I fall into this category of disability. You’re going to walk away. You’re going to turn your back.”

Rep. Gary Carlson, R-Muscatine, conceded the bill was not perfect.

“I do sincerely think we need to reset where we are,” he said.

A similar bill, SSB1170, won 9-6 support in the Senate Commerce Committee. There, bill manager Sen. Michael Breitbach, R-Strawberry Point, saying most Iowa businesses treat their employees “like family” in refuting Democratic critics. “They aren’t disposable, they are not throw away, we want them to get the best care they can.”

Senate Majority Leader Bill Dix, R-Shell Rock, said the workers’ compensation rewrite was designed to rebalance Iowa’s law to evaluate employee injuries in a fair and practical manner that “holds the promise of one of the biggest impacts” for addressing the “cost side” challenges for job creators.

But Sen. Nate Boulton, D-Des Moines, called the changes disappointing and being rushed through with an immediate effective date like an earlier collective bargaining change.

“So if you’re going to get injured, you’d better get injured this week instead of next week,” he told committee members.

In the Senate Local Government Committee, Republicans approved an immigration bill 7-4 that would sanction state funding to cities and counties that didn’t enforce federal laws in detaining people in this country illegally.

The committee did accept changes offered by Sen. Matt McCoy, D-Des Moines, who told GOP the amendments were needed so “you don’t pass something out of here that’s embarrassingly unconstitutional.”

The third time wasn’t the charm for an idea championed by Gov. Terry Branstad to eliminate licensing requirements for a wide number of professions, from social workers to mental health counselors.

Rep. Bobby Kaufmann, R-Wilton, dramatically tore up the bill, declaring it dead earlier in the week.

However, on Thursday morning, a House State Government subcommittee amended it to a bill related to licensing master electricians. The reincarnation was short-lived. The attempt to keep it alive through the deadline died in caucus.

That's unfortunate, but not surprising, Branstad said.

"We knew this was going to be tough," he said. "You're going up against all the organized special interest groups that want to protect their turf.

"This place is overrun with lobbyists to protect their special interests and that's who the legislators have heard from," Branstad said. "I'm just going to ask that they take another look and consider the people who don't have the paid, professional lobbyist here representing them."

For his part, Branstad said he generally was pleased that his priorities were advancing in the legislative process.

"I'm particularly encouraged about the public safety issues, the distracted and impaired driving, and those issues that really involve the safety of the citizens. We knew those were not going to be easy. We feel good about that," the Republican governor said. "Generally, things are coming along."

He also was encouraged that a water quality bill advanced Thursday in the Senate Natural Resources and Environment Committee, saying it's important that lawmakers approve funding and policy provisions on that front this session.

LEE: Death penalty bill killed at Iowa Statehouse

ROD BOSHART

A slow-moving crush of Senate committees working Thursday to beat an eligibility deadline claimed a GOP measure that sought to reinstate capital punishment in Iowa on a limited basis.

Competition for meeting space and schedules waylaid by time-consuming private caucuses by legislators forced the cancellation of a lunch-hour subcommittee that was to consider Senate File 335 — a bill that would have reinstated the death penalty in cases where an adult kidnapped, raped and murdered a minor.

"It's fair to say that it was executed today," said Sen. Jerry Behn, R-Boone, the bill's lead sponsor who has been pushing the issue since first elected in 1996. "I'm hoping that we can get it taken back up next year. That's the plan."

Behn said he had a "heart-wrenching" telephone conversation with the mother of Jetseta Gage, a 10-year-old girl who was the victim of a 2005 kidnapping and murder. The girl's mother had planned to testify at the Statehouse in support of the bill but testimony was called off when the bill was pulled from Thursday's calendar, he said.

"I had a nice talk with her on the phone," Behn said. "It's a heart-wrenching story. I was truly moved."

Behn said he reintroduced the death penalty bill because Iowa currently has a punishment for capital crimes of life imprisonment but there is no deterrent — in fact, there is an incentive — for a perpetrator who kidnaps and rapes a minor not to kill the witness in hopes of not getting caught.

“If you kidnap and rape someone, it creates a perverted incentive to murder your victim,” he said. “My point is let’s not add an incentive to do that kind of action. Let’s make it a disincentive to further that action. This is a specific attempt to stop a specific type of a crime.

“I think it’s appropriation restitution or appropriate punishment for a crime,” he said of the three-stage limited death penalty proposal. “This is an effort to appease some of those who thought, basically, that the death penalty was inappropriate at any time. After some of the horrific murders that have occurred, I said maybe we can get a consensus to get something back on the books again.”

Connie Ryan of the Interfaith Alliance of Iowa — one of a number of opponents who planned to testify at Thursday’s subcommittee — said she was disappointed that the bill was filed in the first place and surprised when it got scrapped on Thursday.

“We had a lineup of people of faith and civil rights advocates and other folks who were prepared to speak and say that Iowa should not ever be a death penalty state,” Ryan told reporters.

With officials in death-penalty states struggling to find the right drugs to administer lethal injections and with DNA evidence exonerating some death-row inmates, Ryan said it was a surprise to see Iowa senators looking to reinstate a practice last used in Iowa in 1965.

“The Interfaith Alliance of Iowa is quite pleased that we are not going to have the conversation about making Iowa a death-penalty state again,” she said. “Iowa should not ever be a death penalty state and so we’re just pleased that we’re not going to have that conversation this session.”

LEE: Abortion bill makes it out of Senate committee meeting

CHELSEA KEENAN

A bill that would bar a woman from receiving an abortion after 20 weeks made it through an Iowa Senate committee on Thursday evening. But two other pieces of legislation seeking to limit Iowa women’s access to abortion did not survive the session’s first funnel deadline.

Senate File 53 passed on a 9-to-3 vote in the Human Resources Committee, securing two Democrats after the legislation was amended to include exceptions in cases where the mother’s life is in danger or fetal anomalies in which the fetus is diagnosed with a medical condition that is incompatible with life.

The amendment was added after Sen. Mark Chelgren, R-Ottumwa, said he heard compelling testimony during the Tuesday subcommittee meeting. During the meeting, Amanda Acton of Waukeez testified about her own experiences with abortion, when she was told by her doctor in her 21st week that her daughter had a rare genetic condition and did not have lungs.

She said the decision to have an abortion was difficult, but the humane thing to do.

“We did listen,” Chelgren said.

But that was not enough for all the Democrats on the Senate committee.

“Not every pregnancy ends the way a family hopes it will,” said Sen. Joe Bolkcom, D-Iowa City. “Sometimes it ends in miscarriage, sometimes the mother finds out there is something seriously wrong with her baby. Abortions later in pregnancy may make us uncomfortable. But one thing we can all agree on is that a woman’s health and safety is crucial.”

If the Legislature wants to continue to decrease the number of unwanted pregnancies and therefore abortions, Bolkcom said it should be committed to funding family-planning services and support the use of contraception.

“Extreme bans do nothing to reduce abortions and hinder medical care,” he said.

The bill next will go before the full Senate for a vote.

A similar piece of legislation, House File 293, which passed through a House subcommittee on Wednesday, however, did not make it out of committee. That legislation, along with SF 253, the so-called personhood bill — which could have effectively banned abortions — died Thursday afternoon, after they were both taken off committee agendas.

The legislation — which women’s health organizations called “extreme and reckless” — would have made it so that life is “protected from the moment of conception ... and accorded the same rights and protections guaranteed to all persons.”

Opponents, including Planned Parenthood of the Heartland, said the bill severely would have limited women’s access to the most effective forms of birth control as well negatively impacted families seeking to use in vitro fertilization services. Similar Personhood movements have failed in recent years in Colorado, North Dakota and Mississippi.

“SF 253 was a thinly veiled, unconstitutional attempt to ban abortion in the state of Iowa,” said Planned Parenthood of the Heartland in a statement. “Even fellow Senate Republicans recognized it would have far-reaching unintended consequences, and refused to vote in its favor.”

Sen. Brad Zaun, R-Urbandale, who chaired the committee and was a co-sponsor of Senate File 253, expressed disappointment that the bill did not survive. But he added, “This is how the process works.”

Zaun was hesitant to comment on why the bill was unable to attain enough support to make it out of committee, but did say he received thousands of emails from Iowans both in support of and opposition to the bill.

“Obviously I believe in it,” he said. “I’m interested in saving one unborn child at a time.”

AP: Survey: Ethanol, food processing boost Iowa’s economy in January

Results from a monthly survey of business supply managers suggest that manufacturing is boosting economic conditions in nine Midwest and Plains states, according to a report issued Wednesday.

The Mid-America Business Conditions Index report said the overall economic index for the region rose to 60.5 in February from 54.7 in January. It’s the highest figure since April 2014.

"This is the fourth consecutive month the index has increased and points to an improving regional manufacturing economy," said Creighton University economist Ernie Goss, who oversees the survey. "I expect this to generate even healthier growth for both manufacturing and nonmanufacturing through the third quarter of this year."

The survey results are compiled into a collection of indexes ranging from zero to 100. Survey organizers say any score above 50 suggests growth in that factor. A score below that suggests decline. The survey covers Iowa, Minnesota, Arkansas, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, Oklahoma and South Dakota.

The index for Iowa climbed to 62.6 from 51.8 in January. Components of the overall index from the monthly survey of supply managers were new orders at 67.4, production or sales at 69.7, delivery lead time at 52.0, employment at 57.7, and inventories at 66.4. Recent surveys point to solid growth for the next six months with job additions of approximately 4,500. Ethanol production and food processing were the leading industries, while the report listed metal manufacturers and agriculture equipment producers as lagging.

For Minnesota, the index dipped to 54.3 from 54.7 in January. Recent surveys point to positive but slow growth for the next six months with job additions of approximately 11,000. Ethanol and medical equipment manufacturers led the way, while vehicle parts manufacturers and agriculture equipment producers were lagging.

The February employment index remained above growth neutral but slipped to 55.6 last month from January's 57.0.

"The growth gap between regional manufacturing and nonmanufacturing is closing," Goss said. "However, rural job growth in the nine-state region continues to significantly lag that of urban areas in the region."

Economic optimism, as reflected by the February business confidence index, rose to 71.3 from 69.5 in January.

"This is the highest confidence reading that we have recorded in six years," Goss said.

In other measures, the regional new export orders index rose to 63.6 from 48.7 in January, and the import index climbed to 54.1 from January's 46.7.

LEE: Iowa lawmakers advance workers' comp overhaul

JAMES Q. LYNCH

Labor squared off with business and industry Wednesday over the future of Iowa's workers' compensation system, which would be overhauled under legislation backed by GOP majority lawmakers.

Under the workers' compensation law, most employers are required to provide medical or disability payments — or both — to workers who are injured on the job.

But it's absurd the GOP is pushing for an overhaul, according to Kellie Paschke, a former House GOP staffer who's now a trial lawyer.

“A few short years ago we had workers’ compensation legislation before this committee,” recalled Paschke, speaking on behalf of the Association for Justice. “At that time, House Republicans indicated the system was not broken and nothing that needed to be fixed.”

And the Iowa Association of Business and Industry ran commercials saying Iowa’s workers’ compensation system was a model for the nation, she said.

“And yet here we are today, basically turning our workers’ compensation system on its head,” she said at a House Commerce subcommittee hearing on House Study Bill 169.

Mike Ralston of the Association of Business and Industry agreed the Iowa system was the premier worker’s comp system — then.

“The goal of this bill is to get it back to that premier status,” he said in a committee meeting packed with union members, trial lawyers and lobbyists.

“In just a few years, Iowa has gone from having some of the lowest workers’ comp premiums for employers, the richest benefits in the country for employees,” said Ralston, whose association has 1,500 member companies with 330,000 employees in Iowa. “Now we’re in the middle of the pack with increasing premiums and still some of the richest benefits for employees.”

Although the rate employers pay dropped 4.7 percent last year, Ralston said, the rates over several years actually have increased more than 7 percent.

HSB 169 is needed to “ensure the protection of the system and the protection of Iowa’s workers who need benefits from the system,” he said.

The bill is “fair for employers and employees, in fact, generous compared to benefits of our neighbors,” he said.

A Senate Commerce subcommittee hearing on similar legislation, Senate Study Bill 1170, drew a full room later in the day. Of the subcommittee members, Republican Sens. Michael Breitbach of Strawberry Point and Bill Anderson of Pierson signed off on the bill. Sen. Nate Boulton, D-Des Moines, did not.

Both the House and Senate Commerce committees plan to run their respective bills in full committee Thursday.

According to the Iowa Federation of Labor AFL-CIO, the bill would reduce benefits for common workplace injuries; eliminate benefits based on an employee’s loss of earning power in some cases; discriminate against older workers by requiring an employee’s age to be used to calculate available benefits; and limit benefits available to employees 67 and older when injured. For workers permanently and totally disabled by a job injury, their benefits would cease at age 67, the group said.

The issue is personal to Rep. Scott Ourth, D-Ackworth, a heavy equipment operator.

“We work tired, we work hot, we work sore and we work stiff, and we’re proud of it,” he said. But “people get hurt and they get hurt badly through no fault of their own.”

This legislation could affect him and his family “and I’m having a hard time with it.”

Rep. Peter Cownie, R-West Des Moines, said the first goal is to avoid injuries to workers. But there will be injuries, and workers injured on the job deserve benefits.

However, there has been abuse and it is the responsibility of the Legislature, which created the workers' comp system more than 100 years ago, to review it.

He and subcommittee Chairman Gary Carlson, R-Muscatine, signed off on the bill.

Clinton Herald: Bills tackle driving

By Nick Moffitt

Bills aimed at curtailing distracted driving are making their way through legislative committees at the Iowa Statehouse.

Bills in both the Iowa House and Senate have started to gain traction recently, and have received support from Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad.

Senate File 234 would get rid of a stipulation that texting while driving is a secondary offense — an offense that drivers can only be charged with after they are pulled over for another violation — and make it a primary offense that allows officers to pull people over for it. House File 60 is the house companion bill.

House File 85 would require all cell phone use to be hands-free and would impose a $30 fine for a violation. Senate File 100 is the companion bill. Both have exemptions for the use of a fixed device GPS.

According to statistics from the Iowa Department of Transportation, there were 1,100 total distracted-driving related crashes in Iowa, with 14 fatalities in 2015, equal to the combined total of the four previous years.

Sen. Tod Bowman, D-Maquoketa and ranking member on the Senate Transportation Committee, said he's worked on passing similar bills out of the Senate for four years now but feels more optimistic the House will take it up.

"One more year we'll continue to see if they'll do something to improve public safety," he said.

One reason he's feeling a bit more optimistic is Branstad's support of legislation focusing on distracted driving.

"The Governor has come on board and he's been pretty vocal in support. I think he'll lean on the speaker of the House and get some members to support it," he said.

Bowman said changing texting while driving to a primary offense, and proper enforcement, would go a long way into getting people to stop driving while distracted.

One potential concern with changing it to a primary offense is the potential for law enforcement to use it as an easy way to pull people over. In the past, this concern has led Rep. Mary Wolfe, D-Clinton, to be against changing it to a primary offense. Now, however, she's for the bill.

"The reason I have changed my position is input from constituents and people in Clinton County that deal with enforcing traffic laws and have seen the aftermath of serious accidents," Wolfe said.

She said as far as the difference between the two types of bills she'd like to see it go all the way to hands-free if possible, which eliminates some of the confusion.

Support for the varying proposals is mixed, according to a recent Des Moines Register Iowa Poll, which shows that 85 percent approve allowing an officer to pull over a driver if they see them texting. Only 48 percent approve of the same action if they see drivers speaking on the phone.

Rep. Norlin Mommsen, R-DeWitt, said as far as he is concerned the Legislature should go for the hands-free bill because it makes enforcement easier.

He said after speaking with some Iowa State Patrol members his takeaway was that if it is just made illegal to send messages while driving people will say they were changing a song, checking their calendar or some other action, which would make the law largely unenforceable.

"I just think that is part of the reason our accidents and death are going up so high. There are too many people being distracted by their phone," Mommsen said.

According to the Iowa Legislative Services Agency, changing texting while driving to a primary offense would generate revenue of $96,875 in the first year and $193,834 in the second year if it is passed. Revenue from that would go to the general fund.

KJAN: Boettger and 1 other former lawmaker among Branstad's picks for Board of Regents

March 2nd, 2017 by Ric Hanson

Governor Branstad is appointing a couple of EX-state legislators to serve on the panel that governs the three state-supported universities. One spot on the Board of Regents opened up when Bruce Rastetter, the board president, announced in early February he would not seek another term. The governor on Tuesday selected three people to the nine-member board. They include Nancy Boettger, a former Republican state senator from Harlan, and Nancy Dunkel, a Democrat from Dyersville who served one term in the Iowa House.

Branstad is reappointing Sherry Bates of Scranton to the Board of Regents. Current Regent Katie Mulholland had also sought reappointment to the board, but she was left OFF the governor's list. Branstad's regent appointments must be confirmed by the Iowa Senate.

The Gazette Editorial: Judicial selection is no place for politics

That Gov. Terry Branstad has chosen only Republicans to serve on the state's judicial nominating commissions is troubling. Far worse is a bill that would limit the commissions to only those political appointees.

Senate File 327 is buried in subcommittee, where we hope it stays.

The proposal would have political appointees select finalists for bench vacancies, replacing the current balanced system.

The state commission now consists of 17 people. Eight are appointed by the Governor's Office. Eight more are selected by the Iowa State Bar Association. The longest-serving Iowa Supreme Court justice leads the group and also is a voting member. Under the bill, all 16 members of the commission would be appointed by the Governor's Office, and the justice leading the commission would vote only to break ties. The state's 14 district commissions would be likewise changed.

Iowa Sen. Julian Garrett, R-Indianola, who is a bill sponsor, said the Bar Association is responsible only to its members, with no accountability to Iowa voters. Garrett appears to have forgotten that voters weigh in when judges stand for retention.

Lawyers, regardless of their political affiliation, work with judges each day, and offer valuable insights during the interviews of those who hope to sit on the bench. Gubernatorial political appointees, on the other hand, often focus on issues unrelated to judicial duties.

This was evidenced in 2013, when proceedings of the state nominating commission were televised. Appointees posed questions that often had little to do with judicial qualifications.

"Did you make (marriage) covenant vows with your husband that you feel you've kept or that you're breaking?" asked one.

Another requested an applicant "comment on your methodology in choosing a place of worship."

If lawmakers feel some compelling need to tinker with the courts, we'd suggest finding ways to encourage more applications for judicial vacancies, or increasing judges' salaries, which have not kept pace with inflation. Iowa's system of selecting and voting to retain judges has been working well since 1962. It is a model for the country, and supported by lawyers and legal scholars of all political persuasions.

The last thing Iowans should want to do is introduce more politics and partisanship into the selection of our judges.

The Gazette: Dealing with Iowa's deficient bridges could hurt budgets: Moody's

Cost of repairing its bridges leaped 20 percent

Iowa's laundry list of dilapidated bridges could put added strain on the pocketbooks of local county governments who maintain the lionshare of the state's bridge inventory.

A report released Thursday from global rating agency Moody's Investor Services, which cites new data from the Federal Highway Administration, states Iowa — rated by Moody's as Aaa stable — had nearly 5,000 non-federal, structurally deficient bridges last year. That's 21 percent of the bridges in the state and more than double the national average, according to the report.

"What makes Iowa unique is that it led the nation in the number of structurally deficient bridges at the non-federal level," David Jacobson, a Moody's spokesman, told The Gazette. "The other thing about Iowa is the counties in Iowa have a higher share of non-federal bridges than any other state in the country. So they're more exposed to the growing cost of repairs."

Iowa counties own and maintain 78 percent of the state's non-federal bridges, compared to the national average of 37 percent.

In addition, the report indicates the estimated cost of fixing all those bridges has increased by 20 percent in the past four years — from $447 million to $540 million.

According to the report, the problem is that Iowa's state and federal sources of bridge funds has not kept up with the growing backlog of deficient bridges, which means local revenues will become increasingly important for infrastructure needs.

“This poses a particular credit hazard for counties as they growing cost of bridge repairs will likely pressure operating budgets or increase debt burdens,” the report states. “Iowa counties generally have leeway to raise taxes to help with bridge maintenance, but without additional federal and state funding, an increased reliance on local taxes will impair counties’ financial flexibility.”

Jacobson said that doesn't necessarily mean credit scores will begin to drop for Iowa counties, but it poses a risk.

The report states that 55 of Iowa's 99 counties have at least 20 percent of their bridge stock classified as structurally deficient.

Johnson and Linn counties, however, are in relatively good shape, with only 12 percent and 9 percent of the bridges in those counties deemed structurally deficient, respectively.

Meanwhile to the west, 39 percent of the bridges in Tama County are considered structurally deficient.

A structurally deficient bridge is not necessarily a safety hazard, but has one or more of its key elements — such as the deck, superstructure or substructure — considered to be in poor condition or worse.

Iowa ranks first in the nation in terms of the total number of deficient bridges — more than 24,000 — and third for the percentage of deficient bridges in a state's overall inventory, according to a 2015 National Bridge Inventory report by the American Road and Transportation Builders Association, which uses Federal Highway Administration data.

More than 2,600 of Iowa's bridges have been put under posted weight limits due to their deficiencies, according to Iowa Department of Transportation data.

The recent increase of Iowa's gas tax is estimated to add about $213 million annually to the state road fund, which means an additional $101 million to state projects, $70 million to county projects and $42 million to city projects.

Those projects are intended to reduce Iowa's stock of deficient bridges.

The Gazette Guest View: Project labor agreements play favorites

Jeremy Price is the owner of Price Industrial Electric and a member of the Associated Builders and Contractors of Iowa.

In the Corridor, across the state of Iowa, and indeed all over the country, we have an unmistakable need to put taxpayer dollars to work in the most efficient way possible to get all forms of our public infrastructure up to the world-class standard that America deserves.

Public projects come in all shapes and sizes. Flood walls and levees may be of obvious interest to our community, but so are highway improvements and school renovations. Whatever we fund through taxpayer dollars should be executed by people who offer the best skills at the most competitive price. To accept anything but the highest-quality work at the best price the market can offer is to waste money that comes straight out of the pockets of hardworking people here in our own community.

That's why it is so important for Iowa to hold the line against any government mandates that would choke off competition for public projects. One of the ways government can overreach is to impose project labor agreements (PLAs) on public project bids.

Despite their neutral-sounding name, project labor agreements are a tool used to tip the scales in favor of big unions with lots of political influence. PLAs effectively force every contractor and subcontractor to bend their work rules and prices to fit a national union model.

In my opinion, the worst component of a PLA is the requirement for a contractor to hire its workforce through a labor union. If I were to bid on such a project, the fact that I would not be able to put my own employees to work is wrong. My employees live here, pay taxes here, and are active in our community. They should not be kept from working on public projects simply because they have voluntarily made the choice not to belong to a union.

We in the Cedar Rapids area are all too familiar with the discriminatory nature of PLAs. Unfortunately, under the leadership of Mayor Ron Corbett, the City of Cedar Rapids has pursued the use of PLAs on local projects. I employ over 125 employees in the area, many of them residents of Cedar Rapids. The city's discussion over the use of PLAs on local projects never included an analysis about how my employees would be affected.

Cedar Rapids has a wide range of capable contractors, subcontractors, and individuals working across the skilled trades — some are unionized, many are not. The discipline of market competition should decide who wins the jobs and provides the work. I have never once thought of asking any level of government to give my company an advantage when bidding — however, I do expect an open and fair process. PLAs are neither.

The Iowa Legislature is considering legislation that would prohibit the use of PLAs on any public project. I am extremely grateful that legislators going to stand up and protect the 82 percent of Iowa workers who choose not to belong to a labor union.

This does nothing to keep union contractors from bidding on taxpayer funded projects. It simply makes sure all qualified vendors are legitimately able to compete for the work.

Keeping project labor agreements out of the way of Corridor-area public projects should be a common goal among all of us who expect government to treat our tax dollars like their own.

QC Times: Grassley says Sessions recusal is right thing to do

Ed Tibbetts etibbetts@qctimes.com

U.S. Sen. Chuck Grassley dismissed as "nonsense" the idea that Attorney General Jeff Sessions should resign in the wake of revelations that he had met last year with the Russian ambassador to the U.S., a report that had Democrats saying he should step down because he testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee that there had been no meetings.

Grassley, the Iowa Republican who chairs the committee, didn't weigh in on the truthfulness of Sessions' testimony. But he said he had asked the attorney general to send a letter to the committee "to clear up any confusion regarding his testimony so we can put this issue to bed once and for all." Sessions said he would do so.

Controversy swirled around the attorney general all day Thursday after a Washington Post story broke saying that he had met with the Russian ambassador last year at a time when there were allegations of contacts between the Trump campaign and the Russian government. Sessions, a senator on the Armed Services Committee at the time, was a Trump surrogate.

The Post story not only reported the contacts but noted that Sessions had told Sen. Al Franken, D-Minn., during confirmation hearings that "I did not have any communications with the Russians."

At a news conference Thursday afternoon, Sessions bowed to calls that he recuse himself from any investigation into Trump ties to the Russians. And he acknowledged he should have "slowed down" during his testimony but said he was taken by surprise by part of Franken's question and his answers were honest.

Grassey praised Sessions for recusing himself. He called it the right thing to do, saying alleged conflicts, "no matter how flimsy," would be used against him.

Democrats spent much of the day criticizing Sessions. Sen. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., called his committee testimony false and noted National Security Adviser Michael Flynn resigned after making misleading comments.

Locally, Reps. Dave Loebsack, D-Iowa, and Cheri Bustos, D-Ill., both called on Session to resign.

"It is now clear that Attorney General Sessions lied under oath during his confirmation hearings in front of the Senate Judiciary Committee," Loebsack said early Thursday.

Bustos also said that Sessions had lied. "This is disqualifying," she said.

Sen. Tammy Duckworth, D-Ill., said Sessions faces "serious questions" of whether he "misled or even lied."

Sen. Joni Ernst, R-Iowa, in her own statement, said she didn't have all the facts of the situation, but "I support his decision to recuse himself."

AP: Iowa lawmaker says business degree was Sizzler certificate

The Associated Press

An Iowa state lawmaker said Thursday that he didn't mean to mislead anyone by claiming he had a business degree from a company that actually had awarded him a certificate for participating in a training program when he worked at Sizzler.

Sen. Mark Chelgren's biography on a website run by Iowa Senate Republicans had listed that he had a degree in business management from Forbco Management school. The information was removed Wednesday after NBC News reported that Forbco Management is a California company that operated a Sizzler franchise.

Chelgren told The Associated Press that his clerk first provided the credentials to Senate Republicans, which then circled back with him.

"It was given to me to approve and I thought it was adequate," he said.

Ed Failor, a spokesman for Iowa Senate Republicans, confirmed Thursday that Chelgren's bio was updated after the NBC report and that Chelgren doesn't have a college degree. Failor declined to comment further.

Chelgren, who is from Ottumwa in southeastern Iowa, said he did earn an associate's degree from Riverside Community College. Calls on Thursday seeking to verify that claim with Riverside City College — the school apparently changed its name — went to an automated system and The Associated Press wasn't able to get a live person on the line. The school also didn't immediately reply to an email.

On Wednesday, Failor had told NBC, "This was a management course he took when he worked for Sizzler, kind of like Hamburger University at McDonald's."

Chelgren said Thursday he had not thought there was much difference between a degree and a certificate. He said he worked at a Southern California Sizzler in the 1980s, when he was about 19.

"I didn't see a difference when I did the review, didn't worry about," he said.

Chelgren said he doesn't mind that the information about him now has been changed.

"I know they've changed that, because apparently a degree and a certificate are different. And I'm OK with their change, but there was never any intent at all to mislead anyone," he said.

Chelgren, who was first elected to the state Senate in 2010, gained attention recently for sponsoring a bill that would freeze faculty hiring at the state's public universities until the number of professors registered as Republicans was within 10 percent of those registered as Democrats.

Failor said Chelgren wouldn't face discipline over the biography, noting that no Senate rules were broken.

QC Times Guest Opinion: Guest view: Minimum wage boost would damage economy

Michael Saltsman is the research director for The Employment Policies Institute, a conservative think tank based in Washington.

Gov. Terry Branstad is half-right on the minimum wage.

Last month, the governor threw his support behind "a modest increase" in the Iowa's minimum wage as well as a measure that would restrict municipalities from increasing their minimum wage above the state level. He's wrong on the first point but right on the second.

A review of the best minimum wage research, published by the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco, confirmed that past "modest" minimum wage increases have had a major impact on job opportunities for young and less-skilled jobseekers. Researchers at Trinity and Miami University replicated the methodology of the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office and found that Iowa would lose over 5,000 jobs if a $10.10 minimum wage was implemented statewide. According to the most recent Census Bureau data, the Davenport Metro Area has a youth unemployment rate averaging over 17 percent.

Iowans don't have to look far to see consequences from minimum wage increases. Johnson County, which increased its minimum wage by 39 percent between November 1, 2015 and January 1, 2017, is suffering consequences, with employees feeling the impact.

Jon Sewell, the owner of Iowa City restaurant D.P. Dough, said he has had to cut back staff hours because he couldn't absorb the payroll increase of the minimum wage hike. Sewell stated, "We are using less hours so there are less people getting paid than we used to have because we weren't able to absorb all that increase in payroll." Business operators who are making razor thin profit margins have little flexibility when government dictated labor costs come in double digit increases.

The Orange Leaf, a frozen yogurt shop in North Liberty, closed its doors entirely, telling one local news station that it "couldn't keep up with Johnson County's minimum wage," and warned that they wouldn't be the only ones to close. That includes another North Liberty business, the Popcorn Shoppe, whose owner worries he'll have to close his doors because of rising labor costs combined with a tough business environment.

Childcare centers, which run on very low profit margins, have also been affected by the wage hike. The director of the Mary Jo Small Child Care Center said the wage hike had a "huge impact" on her center, which was forced to raise prices for care by $100 a month per child to avoid going out of business.

Similar consequences are playing out across the country in other locales experimenting with starter wage increases. In California, where the wage increased to $10.50 on New Year's Day and many localities have gone higher, dozens of businesses have closed their doors or plan to leave the state. Washington State, which also fashions itself a "leader" on the minimum wage, has seen the closure of numerous cafes and other businesses. And in New York, numerous restaurants have gone out of business, laid off employees, or reduced hours to compensate for increased labor costs associated with recent starter wage increases.

To prevent similar consequences in Iowa – like those seen in Johnson County and around the country – the Iowa Legislature should take a pass on the governor's not-so-modest wage increase proposal. Instead, it should follow in the footsteps of the Ohio legislature, which (with bipartisan backing from prominent Cleveland Democrats) passed a law establishing one minimum wage at the state level.

Iowa citizens are just beginning to understand the consequences of lacking such a law. In California, labor groups and activist city councils have created a mind-boggling patchwork of local wage laws; in the Bay Area alone, there are more than a dozen municipalities with their own mandated wage laws, and the sky's the limit on how high they can go.

In order to keep Iowa's entry-level career pathways open, Gov. Branstad should keep the starting wage at a reasonable level, and ensure that municipalities across the state can follow one wage standard.

RI: Bill to penalize cities, counties that fail to detain undocumented immigrants

MARCH 3, 2017 BY O. KAY HENDERSON

A bill now eligible for debate in the Iowa Senate would bar Iowa cities and counties as well as public schools and colleges from having “any policy that discourages enforcement of federal immigration law.”

The Des Moines School Board recently adopted a policy that requires immigration officials to first contact the superintendent if they want to speak to someone on school grounds. Immigrants and their advocates crowded into a statehouse hearing on the bill yesterday, watching as Republican Senator Julian Garrett of Indianola questioned Des Moines School Board member Rob Barron.

“Do you recognize that the federal government has jurisdiction in this area over immigration law?” Garrett asked.

Barron responded: “There’s not a single person in this room that believes that the federal immigration policy is right. What law enforcement asks for is not always appropriate or right or legal.”

The bill also would make officials in Iowa cities and counties liable if they fail to detain someone federal officials suspect is in the country illegally — and that person commits a felony within the next decade.

A bill that cleared a committee in the Iowa House about a month ago would deny state funds to any city, county, community college or public university with policies that seek to “restrict or limit” enforcement of federal immigration laws.

RI: Branstad: GOP bill returns workers comp to ‘original concept’

MARCH 3, 2017 BY O. KAY HENDERSON

Governor Terry Branstad on Thursday said he is “pleased” to see an overhaul of the state’s workers compensation system advancing through the legislature. Branstad says the system is out of whack due to new regulations and recent court rulings.

“What they’ve done is taken the original concept of workers comp with is instead of fight over who’s at fault, compensate the worker and try to help them so they can get back to work as quickly as possible to making it kind of, some cases, almost kind of a long-term disability thing,” Branstad said during an interview with two statehouse reporters.

Republicans on committees in both the Iowa House and Senate approved the overhaul Thursday afternoon. Democrats on the committees voted against it.

“To my fellow senators around this table, pause and think about what message we are sending to our workforce today,” said Democratic Senator Nate Boulton, a lawyer from Des Moines who has represented injured workers.

Boulton called the bill an “unforgiveable” attack on Iowa workers in both private sector and government jobs.

“If we pass this in its current form, we are going to be truly dismantling a system that is designed to protect Iowa workers who suffer disabling injuries at their workplace,” Boulton said.

The bill would take steps to reduce potential compensation for repetitive motion injuries as well as injuries tied to pre-existing conditions. It also would cut off workers comp checks when an employee reaches the age of 67.

Iowa business groups say the system has gotten out of balance and the bill will help address “significant” premium hikes. Representative Peter Cownie, a Republican from West Des Moines, said those concerns need to be addressed.

“If someone gets injured at work, they deserve to be compensated and this bill allows that to happen absolutely,” Cownie said. “But the fact of the matter is there has been abuse in the system. It cannot be denied.”

A hearing will be held at 6 p.m. Monday in the statehouse to give the public a chance to comment on the legislation.

RI: Iowa Senate panel advances new abortion restriction

A bill to ban most abortions in Iowa after the 20th week of a pregnancy cleared a Senate Committee Thursday afternoon. Mark Costello, a Republican from Imogene, is the senator who was assigned to guide the bill through the legislative process.

“I do think that we can save lives with this,” Costello said, “and I think we’ve tried to make some accommodations to make it a little easier for everyone.”

Senator Mark Chelgren, a Republican from Ottumwa, led the effort that adjusted the bill, so abortions after the 20th week could be performed if a catastrophic abnormality is discovered in the fetus.

“We did listen,” Chelgren said. “We tried to understand what the concerns were.”

Six Republicans and three Democrats on the Senate Human Resources Committee voted to make the bill eligible for debate in the full senate. Three Democrats voted against the bill. Senator Joe Bolckom of Iowa City said politicians are the last people who should “stick their nose” into these kind of “heartbreaking” health care decisions.

“It’s better that each family make their own decision rather than letting politicians interfere,” Bolckom said during the committee meeting.

A separate “personhood” proposal that abortion opponents were vigorously lobbying for did not survive the legislature’s deadline for action today. Critics say that bill eventually could have outlawed most abortions in Iowa and might have led to a federal court case challenging the Roe v Wade decision that legalized abortion.

RI: Audit details popcorn problems at Iowa Veterans Home

A state audit shows a former employee of the Iowa Veterans Home (IVH) in Marshalltown is blamed for the disappearance of hundreds of dollars in popcorn sales. Angie Snyder resigned from IVH in July of last year, shortly after being placed on administrative leave when it was discovered money from popcorn sales had not been deposited for nearly two-and-a-half years.

State Auditor Mary Mosiman says Snyder failed to keep any records of the deposits she claimed she made. “Our report identified an estimated $1,800 of popcorn sales which were not properly deposited during this former administrative assistant’s employment,” Mosiman says. The $1,800 estimate is based on previous sales prior to Snyder’s appointment to the job in October 2014.

Mosiman says it’s possible even more money and gifts went missing during Snyder’s time at IVH. “A number of the other collections and donations — such as gift cards, phone cards, and stamps — were not properly safeguarded and were therefore susceptible to loss. Because sufficient records were not available, it was not possible to determine if these types of items were handled improperly for personal purposes,” Mosiman says.

The auditor’s report has been shared with Marshalltown Police, the Iowa DCI, the Marshall County Attorney’s Office, and the Iowa Attorney General’s Office. The Iowa Veterans Home in Marshalltown has around 565 residents and 965 employees, according the IVH website.

RI: Death penalty bill stalls; key backer aims for 2018

The lead sponsor of legislation that would have reinstated the death penalty in Iowa says scheduling conflicts have doomed the bill and it will not be considered again this year. Republican Jerry Behn of Boone has been trying to reinstate capital punishment in Iowa since he was first elected to the senate in 1996.

“I’m hoping we can get it taken back up next year,” Behn said.

Behn’s bill only would have allowed a death sentence when someone was convicted of kidnapping, rape and then the murder of the victim.

“This is an effort to appease some of those who thought, basically, that the death penalty was inappropriate at any time,” Behn said this afternoon during an interview with three statehouse reporters. “After some of the horrific murders that have occurred, I said maybe we can get a consensus to get something back on the books again.”

Behn said he’s especially troubled by the life sentence given to the man convicted of the brutal 2005 death of a 10-year-old Cedar Rapids girl who was kidnapped, raped and murdered. Jetseta Gage’s mother had planned to travel to Des Moines this afternoon to testify for Behn’s bill. However, the senate schedule is chaotic today as senators rush to find meeting rooms and take committee votes on dozens of bills. The room in which debate on the death penalty bill was to occur was double-booked.

Connie Ryan of the Interfaith Alliance of Iowa was in the hallway outside that room.

“We had a line-up of people of faith and civil rights advocates and other folks who were prepared to speak and say that Iowa should not ever be a death penalty state,” Ryan said during an interview.

With DNA evidence exonerating some death row inmates and officials in other states struggling to find the right drugs to administer lethal injections, Ryan said it would have been “surprising” to see Iowa reinstate capital punishment.

“States were not getting it right... We know as a nation we’re having these conversation and really questioning whether states across the nation should be doing this,” Ryan said. “...It was disappointing to see the bill, but we’re very grateful that the conversation has stopped for the moment, at least.”

Four other Republicans serving in the senate co-sponsored the bill with Behn. He believes that's the most support he's seen for reinstating the death penalty in the past two decades.

"I would truly like to believe we'd never have to use it. To say that I am a proponent...that's not really accurate. I would just as soon nobody ever had to use it," Behn said. "I just think it needs to be a toolbox that's available."

Iowa outlawed capital punishment in 1965. Three decades later, in 1995, the Iowa Senate overwhelmingly rejected a bill that would have reinstated the death penalty. Only 11 of the 50 senators voted for it.

RI: Survey: Economy in Iowa, Midwest is strong and growing

The latest monthly survey of supply managers and business leaders in Iowa and eight other Midwestern states finds the numbers climbing for the fourth straight month.

Creighton University economist Ernie Goss says the February report of leading economic indicators is very encouraging.

"The overall index moves to its highest level since June of 2014," Goss says. "Obviously, that's good. The index ranges between zero and 100 and 50 is growth neutral. This was well above that. It expanded to 60.5. Now, that's not like your high school chemistry score, that's good!"

The overall index specifically for Iowa leapt by a huge margin, from nearly 52 in January to almost 63 in February. For the region, Goss says the business confidence index in this new survey soared to its highest level in six years.

"What that tells us is, the nine-state regional economy is likely to expand in the next three-to-six months," Goss says, "and expand at a pretty good pace."

The survey finds the region is adding manufacturing jobs at a solid pace, though the wholesale inflation gauge is also rising to its highest level since April of 2014.

"We've got some inflationary pressures, they're building," Goss says. "This is at the wholesale level so supply managers are telling us they're paying more and more for these raw materials and supplies."

Goss says the recent surveys point to solid growth in Iowa for the next six months with up to 4,500 job additions.

It shows Iowa's leading industries are food processing and ethanol production, while the lagging industries include metal manufacturers and agriculture equipment producers.

RI: Medical marijuana among issues legislators rushing to address

Legislators who support medical marijuana are rushing to advance a bill that would at least extend the soon-to-expire state law that has decriminalized possession of cannabis oil for treatment of chronic epilepsy. Senator Joe Bolkcom, a Democrat from Iowa City, supports the bill, but says it's only a "half step."

"This bill is inadequate," Bolkcom said this morning. "It leaves thousands of other Iowans who have petitioned us for the last four years out in the cold."

Iowans with chronic and incurable diseases have been coming to the capitol, lobbying legislators to extend the law so they can use cannabis oil as treatment for nausea, pain and sleeplessness. But none of those advocates attended today's early morning meeting on this scaled back bill. Senator Thomas Greene, a Republican from Burlington, said he understands their frustration and disappointment.

"But as I've discovered here in my first seven weeks, things don't move as quickly as we would like, but I think things will happen," Green said. "There's a need. There's an urgency."

Greene is a retired pharmacist and he has two relatives who would benefit if doctors could prescribe cannabis oil as treatment.

"People with these medical issues are very real. It's not something that's one percent or two percent. It's a growing number," Greene said. "...We have to realize that medical treatment modes change over time and I've seen it in my 40 years in pharmacy. Advances...in therapy change every year — every day, so we have to be receptive to that, understanding and compassionate to those who need our help."

Greene said a growing number of Iowans support allowing doctors to prescribe the oil extract from a marijuana plant as treatment for a variety of illnesses. Green said he believes a "combined voice from medical professionals" eventually will help convince his fellow legislators to take that step.

This issue is part of the frantic activity at the statehouse this week as lawmakers rush to meet Friday's deadline for action on policy bills. Bills that fail to win approval in a committee are dead for the year.

NY Times: Xi Jinping, Seeking to Extend Power, May Bend Retirement Rules

For years, China's Communist Party has maintained a check on the power of its leaders by calling on them to retire if they have reached age 68 when a new term begins.

Now President Xi Jinping, already the strongest Chinese leader in decades, may be maneuvering to bend those rules to retain a formidable ally — and create a precedent he could use to extend his own time in power.

Mr. Xi, 63, who has shaken up many political norms, does not want to be shackled by an informal rule created by his predecessors, people close to senior officials have said.

Whether Mr. Xi can get away with changing the age ceiling for staying in the party's top rank, the Politburo Standing Committee, has become a bellwether of how far he can consolidate his grip on a new party leadership that will be chosen in the fall.

Mr. Xi's immediate goal appears to be opening the way to retaining Wang Qishan, who has led his signature anticorruption drive and become one of the most powerful and feared officials in China, those people and other observers said. Mr. Wang, who is 68, could be forced to step down this year if the informal age ceiling holds.

But keeping Mr. Wang in place would also create an example that Mr. Xi could follow to stay in power after his two terms as president end in 2023. Already, news that Mr. Xi may delay choosing his successor has fanned speculation that he wants to prolong his hold on power.

Mr. Wang's fate has become one of the most intensely followed parts of the secretive maneuvering ahead of a Communist Party leadership shake-up late this year and is likely to be a topic of back-room speculation when the national legislature convenes here on Sunday.

Mr. Wang's staying on is a strong possibility, though not a certainty, said a retired Chinese official who knows several leaders, speaking on the condition of anonymity to discuss elite political deliberations. He said that Mr. Xi said that the age rule was not absolute, which was understood by officials to mean that he wanted Mr. Wang to be considered for the next term.

The blunt and combative Mr. Wang is an old friend of Mr. Xi's. Since 2012, Mr. Wang has led the Communist Party's discipline commission, overseeing the anticorruption campaign that has been a crowning feat of Mr. Xi's tenure. Mr. Wang also expanded the commission's role in policing loyalty to the party leader, making him a top political enforcer for Mr. Xi.

Along with his allegiance to Mr. Xi, Mr. Wang's diverse achievements — including as deputy prime minister, mayor of Beijing and one of the government's top financial firefighters — have fueled talk that Mr. Xi may want to install him as prime minister, shunting aside Li Keqiang, who was not Mr. Xi's pick for the job.

A party congress this fall will almost certainly reappoint Mr. Xi as party general secretary for five more years and appoint a new team to serve under him. Five of seven members of the Politburo Standing Committee must retire then under the current age limits, including Mr. Wang.

But the rule, known as "seven up, eight down," is not codified in any public documents. It says members of the Politburo Standing Committee who are 68 or older when the party congress meets every five years will retire, while officials 67 or younger remain in contention for the next term.

The retirement age has been changed for political ends before. In 1997, President Jiang Zemin imposed a ceiling of 70 to dispense with one rival, and five years later reduced it to 68 to push out another. (He made an exception for himself, staying-on as party leader until he was 76.)

"The rules for succession are all unwritten and largely up for negotiation," said Kerry Brown, a professor of Chinese studies at King's College, London. "All Xi has to do is play the 'exceptional times need exceptional remedies' card."

But while Mr. Xi is formidable, he may have to make trade-offs. Mr. Wang's chances of staying on may not survive the bartering among the party elite who choose the new lineup.

In particular, Mr. Xi may face suspicions that he wants to use Mr. Wang as a stalking horse for keeping power beyond the usual two terms as top leader. That, too, is an informal rule that has developed since the 1990s, when Deng Xiaoping sought to prevent another dictator-for-life like Mao.

By law, Mr. Xi can serve only two terms as president, but no law prevents him from retaining the more powerful post of party leader or some other position. Mr. Xi will turn 69 in 2022 when his second term as party general secretary ends.

Neither Mr. Xi nor Mr. Wang has said anything publicly about his plans. That would be nearly unthinkable hubris in the shadow play of Chinese politics, where ambition and power plays come cloaked in high-minded rhetoric and rules.

But the talk about Mr. Wang took off last October, when a party official, Deng Maosheng, told foreign reporters in Beijing that the age rule was not set in stone.

"The strict boundaries of 'seven up, eight down' don't exist," he said, according to Bloomberg. "This is something from folklore."

At the time, it was unclear whether Mr. Deng was echoing the views at the top of the party. His comments were not reported in Chinese media.

But before Mr. Deng's public remarks, Mr. Xi had said behind closed doors that the age rule was "not absolute," said the former official who knows several members of the party leadership.

His account was corroborated by a former American official with extensive high-level contacts in China. He spoke on condition of anonymity to protect those contacts. He said two people who meet with senior leaders had told him that Mr. Xi had played down the "seven up, eight down" rule.

Both unnamed sources said that, as far as they knew, Mr. Xi had not yet expressly demanded that Mr. Wang be kept on. Instead, by raising the age issue, Mr. Xi has signaled that Mr. Wang should be considered in discussions over coming months.

The bond between Mr. Xi and Mr. Wang goes back about five decades to Mao's turbulent Cultural Revolution, when they were both sent from Beijing to work in the dusty, poor hill country of northwestern China. Mr. Wang worked on a commune 50 miles from Mr. Xi, who has recalled visiting Mr. Wang for a night and giving him a book on economics.

After Deng Xiaoping began to free up the economy in the late 1970s, Mr. Wang abandoned a nascent career as a historian and became an expert on economic reforms. In the 1990s and early 2000s he took a series of government jobs cleaning up financial messes.

As deputy prime minister from 2008 to 2013, he was a crucial player in economic talks with the United States. After the global financial crisis erupted, he led a group of officials assigned to design China's response.

"You were my teacher," Mr. Wang told Henry M. Paulson Jr., a Treasury secretary under President George W. Bush, Mr. Paulson wrote in a book on dealing with China. "We aren't sure we should be learning from you anymore."

Mr. Wang also displays a deep red streak of faith in authoritarian one-party rule not so far from Mr. Xi's convictions.

"Wang is pragmatic and cleareyed," said Trey McArver, the director of China research for TS Lombard, an investment research company. "But it's a mistake to see him as a liberal free-marketeer. Rather, he is a reformer in the Chinese sense of the word. He will seek to increase the efficiency of the state-controlled system."

Some in Beijing say they believe that with China's economy slowing and straining under debt, and President Trump threatening to curb Chinese exports, Mr. Xi could make a case for making Mr. Wang prime minister.

"It seems clear to me that Xi would trust Wang more than Li and, as we know, Li was not Xi's choice," said Tony Saich, a professor at Harvard who specializes in Chinese politics. "The replacement of Li by Wang might provide a chance to kick-start stalled reforms after the next congress."

Most insiders consider the move unlikely, however. Mr. Wang would be reluctant to take the job unless Mr. Xi gave him a bigger say over the economy, said Deng Yuwen, a commentator in Beijing who formerly edited a party newspaper. Mr. Xi might be unwilling to share that power.

"The reason Li can't get much done is that everyone knows where the real power is," Mr. Deng said. "Wang Qishan would certainly want to be more like a traditional premier, with more power over the major economic decisions."

The retired official said that Mr. Wang had told friends that he was ready to retire at the end of the year. But Mr. Wang has also said he never expected to become the head of the party's anticorruption agency, and has warned officials always to be prepared for unexpected tasks.

"Look it up, before the 18th Party Congress, nobody expected it, inside and outside the party, here and abroad, when Wang Qishan became the central discipline inspection commission secretary," Mr. Wang told officials in a video that leaked online last year. "What's the Communist Party about? You do whatever the party tells you."

REUTERS: Senate approves Ben Carson as housing secretary

The Senate voted on Thursday to confirm retired neurosurgeon Ben Carson as secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) in President Donald Trump's Cabinet.

Carson, who ran for the 2016 Republican presidential nomination and later endorsed Trump, becomes the only African-American in the Trump Cabinet. The Senate confirmed his appointment by a vote of 58 to 41.

During his confirmation hearing in January, Carson, 65, told the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs that he would monitor any potential conflicts of interest between his agency and properties controlled by Trump.

He also told lawmakers he was fit to lead HUD, an agency whose mission includes helping the poor get housing, even though he has sometimes criticized its work.

REUTERS: Senate confirms Perry as energy secretary

Former Texas governor has vowed to renew nuclear weapons arsenal

The U.S. Senate on Thursday voted to confirm President Donald Trump's pick to head the Department of Energy, former Texas Governor Rick Perry, who has promised to renew America's nuclear weapons arsenal.

Perry's rise to America's top energy official came against opposition from Democrats worried about his ties to oil companies, his doubts about the science of climate change, and the fact that he once called for the department's total elimination — a comment he has since said he regrets.

The Senate voted 62 to 37 in support of Perry.

Perry, 66, was governor of Texas from 2000 to 2015, making him the longest-serving governor of the oil-producing state in its history.

As energy secretary, Perry would lead a vast scientific research operation credited with helping trigger a U.S. drilling boom and advancements in energy efficiency and renewables technology, and would oversee America's nuclear arsenal.

His predecessor, Obama Energy Secretary Ernest Moniz, was a nuclear physicist who led technical negotiations in the 2015 Iran nuclear deal, while the previous head, Steven Chu, was a Nobel Prize-winning physicist.

The former Texas governor said during his confirmation hearing earlier this year that he regretted having previously called for the department's elimination during his failed bid for the Republican presidential nomination in 2012.

REUTERS: Trump's attorney general Sessions recuses himself from investigations of Trump campaign

U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions said on Thursday he would recuse himself from any investigations into alleged Russian meddling in the 2016 U.S. presidential election because he was involved with President Donald Trump's campaign.

But Sessions, who was a long-time U.S. senator before becoming the country's top law enforcement official, said he did nothing wrong when he did not disclose during Senate testimony that he had met last year with Russia's ambassador. He said the meetings were in his capacity as senator, not as a campaign aide.

"I have recused myself in the matters that deal with the Trump campaign," Sessions told reporters at a hastily arranged news conference after several of his fellow Republicans in Congress called for him to recuse himself and Democrats urged him to resign.

Sessions said he had been weighing recusal - ruling himself out from any role in the investigations - even before the latest twist of the controversy over ties between Trump associates and Russia that has dogged the early days of his presidency.

U.S. intelligence agencies concluded last year that Russia hacked and leaked Democratic emails during the election campaign as part of an effort to tilt the vote in Trump's favor. The Kremlin has denied the allegations.

During his Senate confirmation hearing in January, Sessions responded to a question from Democratic Senator Al Franken that he did not "have communications with the Russians" during the presidential campaign.

But on Wednesday night, the Washington Post revealed that Sessions, who was a senior campaign aide of Trump's, received Russian Ambassador Sergei Kislyak in his Senate office in September.

The other encounter was in July at a Heritage Foundation event that was attended by about 50 ambassadors, during the Republican National Convention, the Post said.

Sessions said he was "honest and correct" in his answer to Franken, drawing a distinction between his role as a senator and his role as a campaign aide.

Before the news conference, Trump said he had "total" confidence in Sessions. Asked whether Sessions should step aside from the investigations, Trump told reporters, "I don't think so."

Trump called frequently during his campaign for improved relations with Russia, drawing criticism from Democrats and some Republicans. Ties with Russia have been deeply strained in recent years over Moscow's military interference in Ukraine, military support for President Bashar al-Assad in Syria and President Vladimir Putin's intolerance of political dissent.

Bloomberg: Caterpillar office raided by tax agents

Caterpillar shares headed for the steepest decline in eight months as the biggest maker of machinery for mining and construction had its Illinois offices raided by federal tax and financial officials.

Searches were conducted Thursday in Peoria, East Peoria and Morton by the IRS, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. and the Commerce Department, said Sharon Paul, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Central District of Illinois.

Declining to give details on the nature of the raid, she said that in other cases the U.S. Attorney's Office has dealt with the IRS's Criminal Investigations unit and the Commerce Department's Office of Export Enforcement. Caterpillar has a financial unit that lends to customers.

Caterpillar confirmed by email the presence of agents in some of its Peoria-area facilities, without elaborating. "Caterpillar is cooperating," it said.

The stock fell 5.1 percent to $93.60 at 1:05 p.m. Eastern Time in New York, heading for the biggest decline since June.

Although it isn't clear what the focus of the raids are, the company disclosed in an annual filing last month that it received a grand jury subpoena from the U.S. District Court for the Central District of Illinois on Jan. 8, 2015.

The subpoena requested documents relating to, among other things, financial information on U.S. and non-U.S. Caterpillar subsidiaries. That included undistributed profits of non-U. S. subsidiaries and the movement of cash among U.S. and non-U. S. subsidiaries, the company said.

The manufacturer said it got additional subpoenas relating to this investigation requesting more information on the purchase and resale of replacement parts by Caterpillar and non-U. S. Caterpillar subsidiaries and dividend distributions of certain non-U. S. Caterpillar subsidiaries. The company said in the filing that it believes this matter "will not have a material adverse effect on the company's consolidated results of operations, financial position or liquidity."

"I can confirm that our agents are on-site conducting official business," said Justin Cole, spokesman for the IRS Criminal Investigation division. "I'm unable to give any more details."

A spokesman for the FDIC declined to comment.

REUTERS: Trump's EPA budget proposal targets climate, clean water programs

The White House is proposing to slash a quarter of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's budget, targeting climate-change programs and those designed to prevent air and water pollution like lead contamination, a source with direct knowledge of the proposal said on Thursday.

President Donald Trump has long signaled his intention to reverse former Democratic President Barack Obama's climate-change initiatives. But the Republican president has vowed his planned overhaul of green regulation would not jeopardize America's water and air quality.

The 23-page 2018 budget proposal, which aims to slice the environmental regulator's overall budget by 25 percent to $6.1 billion and staffing by 20 percent to 12,400 as part of a broader effort to fund increased military spending, would cut deeply into programs like climate protection, environmental justice and enforcement.

The Washington Post was first to report the staff and overall budget cuts, but the source disclosed new details on the impact the cuts would have on programs.

The EPA had until Wednesday to report back to the White House. The agency did not immediately respond to a request for comment on the budget proposal or its counter proposal.

The proposal, sent to the EPA this week, would cut into grants that support American Indian tribes and energy efficiency initiatives, according to the source, who read the document to Reuters.

State grants for lead cleanup, for example, would be cut 30 percent to $9.8 million. Grants to help native tribes combat pollution would be cut 30 percent to $45.8 million. An EPA climate protection program on cutting emissions of greenhouse gases like methane that contribute to global warming would be cut 70 percent to $29 million.

The proposal would cut funding for the brownfields industrial site cleanup program by 42 percent to $14.7 million. It would also reduce funding for enforcing pollution laws by 11 percent to $153 million.

The budget did not cut state revolving funds for programs, that Congress tapped last year to provide aid to Flint, Michigan, for its lead pollution crisis.

All staff at a research program, called Global Change Research, as well as 37 other programs would be cut under the plan.

CONGRESSIONAL HURDLES

The Republican-led Congress would have to approve any EPA cuts. Some of the cuts are unlikely to pass as they are popular with both Democrats and Republicans. Congress would be unlikely to approve a proposal to cut all staff in a diesel emissions program, for example.

Scott Pruitt, the new head of the EPA, told U.S. mayors on Thursday he would make a priority of cleanups of industrial and hazardous waste sites and improving water infrastructure, even as the White House proposed severe proposed cuts to those programs.

“In this budget discussion that is ongoing with Congress that is just starting, there are some concerns about some of these grant programs that EPA has been a part of historically,” Pruitt said.

“I want you to know that with the White House and also with Congress, I am communicating a message that the brownfields program, the Superfund program and the water infrastructure grants and state revolving funds are essential to protect,” he said.

A state air pollution expert said the program cuts, if enacted, would harm some of the people most at risk from particulate and lead contamination.

“Any of these programs where they’ve cut air pollution or water pollution is going to have a direct effect on inner cities,” said Bill Becker, director of the National Association of Clean Air Agencies.

Bloomberg: GOP governors forming plan to keep Obama's Medicaid expansion

A group of Republican governors is preparing a compromise plan for their peers in Congress who want to roll back Obamacare’s Medicaid benefits, asking them to preserve the law’s expansion of coverage to millions of poor people.

The compromise proposal has been initiated by a group including Ohio Gov. John Kasich and Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker, and would hold on to parts of the Affordable Care Act's expansion of the program. It's meant to satisfy Republican goals of repealing Obamacare and giving more control of Medicaid to the states, while also maintaining coverage of people such as childless adults and those just above the poverty level. It would also open the door for states such as Wisconsin to broaden Medicaid eligibility.

The compromise plan and the effort to promote it was described by senior state officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity because it isn't yet public. The group also includes Utah, Arizona, and Tennessee, according to the officials. The proposal was presented to larger groups of governors in the past week during their winter meeting in Washington, according to the officials.

Other state officials spoke on the record about what they're seeking from Republicans who are crafting changes.

"What we're trying to do is have everybody be on the same page with something that'll actually pass and work in the states," Tennessee Gov. Bill Haslam said Tuesday at a press conference. Haslam said the group has been holding conference calls about every other day.

Jon Thompson, a spokesman for the Republican Governors Association, declined to comment.

Another element of the proposal deals with how the Medicaid expansion is funded. Republicans in Congress have talked about moving to a "block grant," giving a fixed amount of money to each state. The governors want the option to use a more flexible per-person allotment that would protect their budgets if Medicaid rolls grew quickly, for example in a recession.

The proposal comes as Republicans in Congress are trying to coalesce around how to repeal the Affordable Care Act and replace it with a policy of their own devising. Some have called for a total repeal immediately, while others say no effort should go ahead without a program to maintain coverage.

Thirty-one states expanded Medicaid under Obamacare, while some Republican-led states opted not to. Those program expansions brought coverage to about 12 million Americans, and governors have been saying for months that Congress should move carefully. Keeping the coverage expansion intact would benefit companies including Centene and Molina Healthcare, which have built big businesses around covering low-income people.

Nate Checketts, director of Utah's Medicaid program, emphasized that there isn't yet consensus among GOP-led states. But Utah and others like it want flexibility to join the program if it continues, he said.

"If there is a program that's out there we, as a non-expansion state, and we assume other states like us, want to have access to those funds," Checketts said.

Rep. Joe Barton, a Texas Republican who sits on one of the committees writing the bills, said he wasn't surprised by that type of request.

"Governors want more money, longer, with no strings attached," Barton said Thursday in an interview. "They've wanted that for 30 years. They'll want it 30 years from now."

The governors' proposal was presented to larger groups of governors last week at their winter meeting in Washington, according to the state aides.

"The governor has been pretty clear that he doesn't want to see the rug pulled out from anyone," said Christina Corieri, a senior policy adviser to Republican Gov. Doug Ducey of Arizona. "We are willing and at the table to talk about financing reforms to Medicaid, as long as those are workable financing reforms, as long as those are equitable, and as long as we get the flexibility to manage” the program.

States also appear to be coming together around the idea that Congress needs to shore up the individual health insurance market before tackling Medicaid, lest people get shifted into a system where they can't get affordable coverage. Some Republican proposals in Congress would move some people off Medicaid.

“You can't move anyone out of the program without some affordable, viable option to move them into,” Arizona's Corieri said. She said her state is open to the idea of addressing both Medicaid and the individual market at the same time, or separately.

“States do have concerns about what happens to individuals if they're not covered by Medicaid,” Utah's Checketts said. “What other options do they have?”

There are signs that President Donald Trump is at least sympathetic. In a Tuesday night address to Congress, Trump said a replacement plan should give governors “the resources and flexibility they need with Medicaid to make sure no one is left out.”

Sen. Rob Portman, an Ohio Republican, interpreted those remarks to mean Trump supports keeping the Medicaid expansion.

“We have to address that population, and that's what he said,” Portman said in an interview after Trump's speech. “You can't leave these people behind.”

POLITICO: House leaders: Obamacare repeal will pass this month

With Donald Trump reportedly on board, the House is poised to steamroll conservative opposition, senior lawmakers say.

By RACHAEL BADE, KYLE CHENEY and JOHN BRESNAHAN

Take it to the bank, GOP leaders are all but declaring: The House will vote to repeal and replace by the end of this month.

Their confidence, coming after months of dead ends and false starts, is fueled by the belief that President Donald Trump has their back — even if some conservatives currently don't.

At a closed-door meeting with Republicans on Thursday, Speaker Paul Ryan said he plans for the House to hold a vote on the leadership's Obamacare alternative in three weeks, sources in the room told POLITICO. The White House and the Senate support the House GOP leadership's effort, Ryan added — comments many in the room took as a warning for the far right to get in line.

On Friday, Vice President Mike Pence and newly installed Health and Human Services Secretary Tom Price will join Ryan in his hometown of Janesville, Wisconsin, to pitch their health care agenda. It's the clearest display of unity yet between the White House and GOP leadership on an Obamacare replacement strategy.

Price, meanwhile, has been summoning to his office conservative agitators who oppose Ryan's draft proposal. While Price didn't try to strong-arm them into standing down, the meetings themselves send a signal that the White House is in Ryan's corner.

“We’re all working off the same piece of paper, the same plan,” Ryan said at a Thursday news conference when asked about conservative opposition. “We are in sync — the House, the Senate and the Trump administration, because this law is collapsing.”

Privately, senior Republican lawmakers and staff are more blunt. They say they have no problem steamrolling conservatives by daring them to vote against an Obamacare repeal that their constituents have demanded for years.

“Conservatives are going to be in a box,” said one senior Republican lawmaker. Trump, the source predicted, eventually will “go out front and ... tell the conservatives ... they’re either for this or for keeping Obamacare.”

That moment hasn’t arrived yet, though, and conservatives haven’t been shy about voicing their objections to Ryan’s plan — including to administration officials. Several House Freedom Caucus and Republican Study Committee members have joined Senate firebrands Rand Paul, Ted Cruz and Mike Lee in blasting a draft Ryan plan as “Obamacare-lite.”

The White House has responded by dispatching Price, a former House member with sterling conservative credentials, to quell the uprising and try to sell conservatives on the repeal plan. Price once ran the conservative Republican Study Committee himself. And he wrote an Obamacare replacement plan that closely mirrors Ryan’s — and that had broad support among members on the far right, including Freedom Caucus Chairman Mark Meadows of North Carolina.

Price in the coming weeks is expected to meet with Republicans opposed to the leadership plan. He summoned study committee Chairman Mark Walker on Wednesday after the North Carolina Republican said he would vote against a draft of the House bill. The statement had surprised leadership and irked some of his fellow study committee members: California Rep. Tom McClintock. in a private RSC meeting, called it “Freedom Caucus crap,” referring to the in-your-face tactics employed by the smaller, more aggressive group. McClintock resigned from the Freedom Caucus in 2015.

Price also met Wednesday with Meadows, Jim Jordan of Ohio and Morgan Griffith of Virginia. POLITICO reported the night before that Meadows’ wife had sent a mass email to Republicans in North Carolina, urging them to call the White House and Congress to oppose what she derisively dubbed “Ryancare.”

Price’s outreach seems to have engendered goodwill. Freedom Caucus leaders declined an invitation from Paul to engage in a high-profile act of political theater on Thursday to protest what conservatives see as a secretive process used to craft the GOP health care legislation. Paul wanted the group to join him in trying to barge through security into a Capitol meeting room where GOP leaders were rumored to have stashed the latest draft of the health care plan.

Some Freedom Caucus members insist that, as far as they know, the White House hasn’t endorsed Ryan’s bill. They say they’ve never been told by administration officials that Trump backs the proposal.

“There have been stories in the media that somehow the White House and Ryan’s office are in agreement on health care,” said Rep. Raul Labrador (R-Idaho), a Freedom Caucus member. “We have not heard that [Trump] backed it or he doesn’t.”

Other conservatives, however, believe the White House is moving in Ryan’s direction. In a brief interview outside the House chamber Wednesday evening, Walker said it’s clear from his meetings with senior administration officials that Ryan’s plan is “the way that they’re headed.”

Numerous sources told POLITICO that Price and other White House staff have defended the use of refundable tax credits — a big sore point for far-right members that are part of Ryan's plan — during several meetings with conservatives.

Paul, one of the most vocal opponents of the House GOP plan, said he sparred with Price over the tax credits during a recent conversation.

“The only thing we have a disagreement on is refundable tax credits,” Paul said of his conversations with Price, though he also knocked Ryan’s proposal to pay for part of the replacement by curbing an employer deduction for health care. “We’re not real excited about a new tax on health insurance.”

With the Energy and Commerce Committee expected to take up the first portion of the GOP leadership bill next week, a path to the end of the first phase of the Obamacare fight — passing the bill in the House — is starting to emerge. The Senate, however, is another story.

The upper chamber is tensely divided over how to handle the Medicaid expansion under Obamacare; any rollback is bound to create winners and losers among states. Majority Leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky told Ryan he needs the House bill within three weeks to move a measure through his own chamber before senators get bogged down in other issues.

The White House wasn’t always behind Ryan's plan; the speaker had to sell it. Price's involvement — which was delayed by his confirmation fight — has certainly helped.

Since early February, conservatives have been making their case to the White House that they should simply move a repeal bill and get to the details of replacement later. For weeks, White House officials did nothing to counter the conservative backlash: Two senior administration aides attended a February conservative retreat where Freedom Caucus leaders and Walker devised their plan to push for an immediate repeal vote.

Last week, conservatives decided to make a push against Ryan's bill via a media blitz, an effort devised partly to try to get Trump’s attention.

Some conservatives are still hoping they can win a few changes. During his meeting with Price, Walker said he asked the secretary to consider tying tax credits to a person's income level as well as a quicker end to Obamacare's expansion of Medicaid. He also expressed concerns about the cost of the replacement package, as he worries it will cost the government just as much as Obamacare did.

Walker added that he hopes to get to yes.

“We want to get behind the House plan, but we just want to make sure, to quote Secretary Price, that these dials are turned in the right direction,” he said. “We want to make sure we’re not putting the middle class in a situation where they’re carrying the weight of this.”

POLITICO: Pence team downplays private email account usage

By MATTHEW NUSSBAUM

Vice President Mike Pence used a private AOL email account to conduct state business and was hacked while governor of Indiana, the Indianapolis Star reported on Thursday.

But Pence's team downplayed the story and dismissed any comparisons to the email controversy that plagued Hillary Clinton.

The report said Pence discussed sensitive matters and homeland security issues on the account, based on emails the Star obtained via a public records request, and an administration official confirmed that the account was hacked over the summer. The revelation comes after Pence regularly lambasted Clinton on the campaign trail for her use of a private email server as Secretary of State.

Pence's press secretary Marc Lotter dismissed any comparisons to the Clinton email controversy as "absurd," noting that Pence had been using the AOL account since the 1990s and did not set up a private server like Clinton did. He added that the use of a private email account by an Indiana governor was routine.

"Similar to previous governors, during his time as Governor of Indiana, Mike Pence maintained a state email account and a personal email account," he said in a statement. Lotter also said that Pence retained outside counsel to "review all of his communications to ensure that state-related emails are being transferred and properly archived by the state," as is required by Indiana law. That review is still being conducted.

And Lotter added that it would have been impossible for Pence to have emailed classified information, as Clinton did, because the Indiana governor did not have security clearance.

Pence's use of the private account had previously been reported by the Star.

President Donald Trump regularly assailed Clinton for her use of a private email server and said she should have been jailed for her actions. FBI director James Comey opted not to recommend prosecution against Clinton but said she and her staff had been "extremely careless" with classified information.

Re: Recommendation Against Proposed Iowa "Religious Freedom Restoration Act"

Dear Attorney General Miller,

We are writing on behalf of Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund ("Lambda Legal") to express strong opposition to the possibility of the Iowa legislature taking up a bill to enact a broad Religious Freedom Restoration Act ("RFRA") because there has been no showing of need for expanded religious rights in Iowa and experience in numerous other states has shown that the rights sought to be created by such a law inevitably are invoked by those seeking to justify discrimination against lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender ("LGBT") individuals, same-sex couples, and people living with HIV. Harmful discrimination, related litigation, and business aversion to the state are the unfortunate, contentious and damaging results for the state's residents, court system, and economy.

Lambda Legal is the nation's oldest and largest legal organization working for full recognition of the civil rights of LGBT people and everyone living with HIV, through policy advocacy, impact litigation, and public education. Among many other landmark cases during its 44 year history, Lambda Legal was counsel for plaintiffs in Obergefell v. Hodges, 576 U.S. ___, 135 S.Ct. 2584 (2015); Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003); and Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620 (1996), three of the most important cases addressing sexual orientation and the law decided to date by the U.S. Supreme Court. Lambda Legal also was counsel for plaintiffs in a number of cases in Iowa resulting in significant victories for the rights of LGBT people, including Rhoades v. State, 848 N.W.2d 22 (Iowa 2014); Gartner v. Iowa Dep't of Pub. Health, 830 N.W.2d 335 (Iowa 2013); Varnum v. Brien, 763 N.W.2d 862 (Iowa 2009) and Alons v. District Court for Woodbury County, 698 N.W.2d 858 (Iowa 2005).

Iowa is home to a significant LGBT population that would be put at risk if discrimination against them were allowed to proliferate in the name of religion. According to an analysis of 2010 U.S. Census data by the Williams Institute at the UCLA School of Law, 4,093 same-sex couples make their home in Iowa, with many of those couples raising children.<sup>[1]</sup> In addition, there are many other LGBT members of same-sex couples not captured in these figures because they are not sharing one household.<sup>[2]</sup>

Lambda Legal's membership includes over 2,000 Iowans and we are committed to protecting those individuals, their families, and Iowa's entire LGBT community against discrimination. We understand and believe that the State shares our commitment to protecting this substantial but vulnerable part of Iowa's population and also to ensuring that the State itself plays no part in inviting or facilitating discrimination. Our shared interests in preventing discrimination would be threatened were a RFRA bill to advance in this state.

Constitutional protections for religious freedom are strong in Iowa and there has been no showing of legitimate need to create expansive new religious rights with an Iowa RFRA. At the same time, we all saw during the contentious debates over proposed RFRA in other states (such as in Indiana<sup>[3]</sup> and Arizona<sup>[4]</sup>), that the asserted need for state RFRA rights was expressed and perceived as a desire by businesses to be able to turn away certain types of people—namely, same-sex couples. However, facilitating exclusion of targeted classes of people from public accommodations and other aspects of civic participation is not and has never been a legitimate basis for enacting a statute (whether in the name of religion or not). Indeed, the desire to exclude same-sex couples or LGBT individuals from one's business is no more a legitimate purpose in 2017 than the desire to exclude interracial couples and people of color generally from public places in 1967.

Consequently, given the troubling reality of persistent, religiously motivated discrimination in public contexts, and elevated public concern about the harms of such discrimination, the enactment of anti-LGBT state laws is not economically advisable because they prompt strong national business opposition.<sup>[5]</sup> This is due in significant part to the fact that 91% of Fortune 500 companies now have and place great value on their own nondiscrimination protections for their LGBT employees.<sup>[6]</sup> Indeed, the Williams Institute reports that “[o]ver ninety percent of the country's largest companies . . . state that diversity policies are good for their corporate bottom line.”<sup>[7]</sup> Moreover, according to a 2015 national poll, two-thirds of small businesses surveyed reported that businesses should not be allowed to refuse service to LGBT people because of religious beliefs.<sup>[8]</sup>

In addition to major corporate opposition, consumers similarly have expressed outrage, including through boycotts with substantial economic effects, in response to legislation facilitating discrimination against LGBT people.<sup>[9]</sup> In the context of employment discrimination, the vast majority of Americans believe that every worker is important and should be given equal job opportunities.<sup>[10]</sup> As a result, a state's economy is the strongest when discrimination is not permitted to interfere with qualified workers who are contributing to the economy and when customers know they will be welcomed and treated fairly—and where everyone can participate without rejection or marginalization based on anyone else's discriminatory religious views.

Finally, laws that seem to invite religion-based discrimination can be costly for states. For example, such laws can encourage demands that public employers accommodate employees' religious harassment and refusal to interact with targeted coworkers and members of the public, which in turn can lead to discrimination lawsuits against the government. Taxpayers will be forced to foot the bill to defend the government either against lawsuits by those rejected based on others' religious beliefs, or by those who wished to discriminate and were informed that such conduct is not permissible within a government setting. Proceeding down this path promises only negative consequences.

In Burwell v. Hobby Lobby, 573 U.S. ____, 134 S. Ct. 2751 (2014), Lambda Legal submitted an amicus brief to the Supreme Court that agreed with the conclusion in the amicus brief submitted by the State of Iowa and ten other states warning of the dangers of expanded religious rights that “render[] both state and federal regulation of business activity vulnerable to claims for religious exemption, including in the areas of public safety, civil rights, social welfare, land use, housing, employment, and public health.”<sup>[11]</sup> These dangers, aptly recognized by Iowa and others in Hobby Lobby, are acute when a broad state RFRA effectively encourages individuals, companies and other organizations to demand exemptions from state civil rights protections.

The experiences of other states confirms that enactment of a state RFRA statute would create real risks for Iowans. The Iowa Civil Rights Act of 1965 has long accorded critical protections against discrimination on the basis of age, race, creed, color, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, national origin, religion, or disability, in contexts including housing, employment, and public accommodations. Today, a state RFRA would put those crucial civil rights protections at grave risk of being effectively undermined because such a law inevitably would be taken by some as an invitation to discriminate against LGBT people. Even if the courts were to hold after-the-fact that Iowa has compelling interests in enforcing the state’s civil rights law, and that the ICRA is the least restrictive means for serving those interests, the harms of discrimination already would have been inflicted upon Iowans who deserve better.

As for the range of potential threats to individual Iowans, events in other states indicate that the following troubling scenarios should be anticipated:

- For-profit businesses could refuse to sell goods or services to same-sex couples, LGBT individuals, unmarried couples, single mothers, and people of minority religious faiths;
- Health care providers could refuse to treat LGBT or HIV-positive patients;
- Hospitals, nonprofit agencies and businesses could deny family health insurance benefits or family medical leave to workers with a same-sex spouse if the employer claims a religious reason for doing so;
- Nursing homes could turn away elderly same-sex couples, LGBT individuals, or anyone living with HIV;
- Commercial businesses might hire, fire, and treat employees unequally based on religious beliefs if the owners are religiously motivated—meaning women could be denied jobs, LGBT people could be fired, and African Americans could be paid less than whites, if the owners say their religious beliefs so dictate;
- Homeless shelters could refuse to house LGBT families;
- LGBTQ young people in foster care could be denied housing, medical care or other services;
- Charitable meal delivery services for the elderly could proselytize against LGBT people when they deliver meals; and
- Assisted living facilities, nursing homes and hospitals could ban transgender residents and patients from dressing, grooming and using restrooms and other facilities consistently with their gender identity.

In addition to economic and other tangible injuries caused by such refusals of services and other discriminatory treatment, such treatment often also has devastating psychological effects. Research consistently finds that social exclusion and stigmatization of LGBT people can lead to serious mental health problems, including depression, anxiety, substance use disorders, and suicide attempts.<sup>[12]</sup> The religious reinforcement of anti-LGBT bias and discrimination often increases the negative impact on mental health.<sup>[13]</sup>

Legislation enacted for the purpose of allowing businesses, social welfare agencies and organizations, health care facilities, and others to turn away people in need of services, based on the excluded persons' sexual orientation, gender identity, or other classification, is a dramatic change from how we have always understood civil rights and constitutional protections. Especially at this moment in history when strong divisions about socially contentious issues too often culminate in increased acts of discrimination against minority groups, it is more dangerous than ever for the government to facilitate such discrimination. The enactment of a RFRA law written to give cover to such prejudice-driven exclusions of persons from equal participation in society impermissibly would involve the government in the facilitation of discriminatory treatment of Iowans. Instead, it should be the State's priority to protect all Iowans from the substantial harms of discrimination by preserving and fully enforcing the Iowa Civil Rights Act, regardless of anyone's religious motivations for otherwise unlawful discrimination.

For all of these reasons, Lambda Legal urges you not to support a RFRA bill in the Iowa legislature or in any other context.

Re: Recommendation Against Proposed Iowa "Religious Freedom Restoration Act"

Dear Attorney General Miller,

We are writing on behalf of Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund ("Lambda Legal") to express strong opposition to the possibility of the Iowa legislature taking up a bill to enact a broad Religious Freedom Restoration Act ("RFRA") because there has been no showing of need for expanded religious rights in Iowa and experience in numerous other states has shown that the rights sought to be created by such a law inevitably are invoked by those seeking to justify discrimination against lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender ("LGBT") individuals, same-sex couples, and people living with HIV. Harmful discrimination, related litigation, and business aversion to the state are the unfortunate, contentious and damaging results for the state's residents, court system, and economy.

Lambda Legal is the nation's oldest and largest legal organization working for full recognition of the civil rights of LGBT people and everyone living with HIV, through policy advocacy, impact litigation, and public education. Among many other landmark cases during its 44 year history, Lambda Legal was counsel for plaintiffs in Obergefell v. Hodges, 576 U.S. ___, 135 S.Ct. 2584 (2015); Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003); and Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620 (1996), three of the most important cases addressing sexual orientation and the law decided to date by the U.S. Supreme Court. Lambda Legal also was counsel for plaintiffs in a number of cases in Iowa resulting in significant victories for the rights of LGBT people, including Rhoades v. State, 848 N.W.2d 22 (Iowa 2014); Gartner v. Iowa Dep't of Pub. Health, 830 N.W.2d 335 (Iowa 2013); Varnum v. Brien, 763 N.W.2d 862 (Iowa 2009) and Alons v. District Court for Woodbury County, 698 N.W.2d 858 (Iowa 2005).

Iowa is home to a significant LGBT population that would be put at risk if discrimination against them were allowed to proliferate in the name of religion. According to an analysis of 2010 U.S. Census data by the Williams Institute at the UCLA School of Law, 4,093 same-sex couples make their home in Iowa, with many of those couples raising children.<sup>[1]</sup> In addition, there are many other LGBT members of same-sex couples not captured in these figures because they are not sharing one household.<sup>[2]</sup>

Lambda Legal’s membership includes over 2,000 Iowans and we are committed to protecting those individuals, their families, and Iowa’s entire LGBT community against discrimination. We understand and believe that the State shares our commitment to protecting this substantial but vulnerable part of Iowa’s population and also to ensuring that the State itself plays no part in inviting or facilitating discrimination. Our shared interests in preventing discrimination would be threatened were a RFRA bill to advance in this state.

Constitutional protections for religious freedom are strong in Iowa and there has been no showing of legitimate need to create expansive new religious rights with an Iowa RFRA. At the same time, we all saw during the contentious debates over proposed RFRAs in other states (such as in Indiana<sup>[3]</sup> and Arizona<sup>[4]</sup>), that the asserted need for state RFRA rights was expressed and perceived as a desire by businesses to be able to turn away certain types of people—namely, same-sex couples. However, facilitating exclusion of targeted classes of people from public accommodations and other aspects of civic participation is not and has never been a legitimate basis for enacting a statute (whether in the name of religion or not). Indeed, the desire to exclude same-sex couples or LGBT individuals from one’s business is no more a legitimate purpose in 2017 than the desire to exclude interracial couples and people of color generally from public places in 1967.

Consequently, given the troubling reality of persistent, religiously motivated discrimination in public contexts, and elevated public concern about the harms of such discrimination, the enactment of anti-LGBT state laws is not economically advisable because they prompt strong national business opposition.<sup>[5]</sup> This is due in significant part to the fact that 91% of Fortune 500 companies now have and place great value on their own nondiscrimination protections for their LGBT employees.<sup>[6]</sup> Indeed, the Williams Institute reports that “[o]ver ninety percent of the country’s largest companies . . . state that diversity policies are good for their corporate bottom line.”<sup>[7]</sup> Moreover, according to a 2015 national poll, two-thirds of small businesses surveyed reported that businesses should not be allowed to refuse service to LGBT people because of religious beliefs.<sup>[8]</sup>

In addition to major corporate opposition, consumers similarly have expressed outrage, including through boycotts with substantial economic effects, in response to legislation facilitating discrimination against LGBT people.<sup>[9]</sup> In the context of employment discrimination, the vast majority of Americans believe that every worker is important and should be given equal job opportunities.<sup>[10]</sup> As a result, a state’s economy is the strongest when discrimination is not permitted to interfere with qualified workers who are contributing to the economy and when customers know they will be welcomed and treated fairly—and where everyone can participate without rejection or marginalization based on anyone else’s discriminatory religious views.

Finally, laws that seem to invite religion-based discrimination can be costly for states. For example, such laws can encourage demands that public employers accommodate employees’ religious harassment and refusal to interact with targeted coworkers and members of the public, which in turn can lead to discrimination lawsuits against the government. Taxpayers will be forced to foot the bill to defend the government either against lawsuits by those rejected based on others’ religious beliefs, or by those who wished to discriminate and were informed that such conduct is not permissible within a government setting. Proceeding down this path promises only negative consequences.

In Burwell v. Hobby Lobby, 573 U.S. ___, 134 S. Ct. 2751 (2014), Lambda Legal submitted an amicus brief to the Supreme Court that agreed with the conclusion in the amicus brief submitted by the State of Iowa and ten other states warning of the dangers of expanded religious rights that “render[] both state and federal regulation of business activity vulnerable to claims for religions exemption, including in the areas of public safety, civil rights, social welfare, land use, housing, employment, and public health.”<sup>[11]</sup> These dangers, aptly recognized by Iowa and others in Hobby Lobby, are acute when a broad state RFRA effectively encourages individuals, companies and other organizations to demand exemptions from state civil rights protections.

The experiences of other states confirms that enactment of a state RFRA statute would create real risks for Iowans. The Iowa Civil Rights Act of 1965 has long accorded critical protections against discrimination on the basis of age, race, creed, color, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, national origin, religion, or disability, in contexts including housing, employment, and public accommodations. Today, a state RFRA would put those crucial civil rights protections at grave risk of being effectively undermined because such a law inevitably would be taken by some as an invitation to discriminate against LGBT people. Even if the courts were to hold after-the-fact that Iowa has compelling interests in enforcing the state's civil rights law, and that the ICRA is the least restrictive means for serving those interests, the harms of discrimination already would have been inflicted upon Iowans who deserve better.

As for the range of potential threats to individual Iowans, events in other states indicate that the following troubling scenarios should be anticipated:

- For-profit businesses could refuse to sell goods or services to same-sex couples, LGBT individuals, unmarried couples, single mothers, and people of minority religious faiths;
- Health care providers could refuse to treat LGBT or HIV-positive patients;
- Hospitals, nonprofit agencies and businesses could deny family health insurance benefits or family medical leave to workers with a same-sex spouse if the employer claims a religious reason for doing so;
- Nursing homes could turn away elderly same-sex couples, LGBT individuals, or anyone living with HIV;
- Commercial businesses might hire, fire, and treat employees unequally based on religious beliefs if the owners are religiously motivated—meaning women could be denied jobs, LGBT people could be fired, and African Americans could be paid less than whites, if the owners say their religious beliefs so dictate;
- Homeless shelters could refuse to house LGBT families;
- LGBTQ young people in foster care could be denied housing, medical care or other services;
- Charitable meal delivery services for the elderly could proselytize against LGBT people when they deliver meals; and
- Assisted living facilities, nursing homes and hospitals could ban transgender residents and patients from dressing, grooming and using restrooms and other facilities consistently with their gender identity.

In addition to economic and other tangible injuries caused by such refusals of services and other discriminatory treatment, such treatment often also has devastating psychological effects. Research consistently finds that social exclusion and stigmatization of LGBT people can lead to serious mental health problems, including depression, anxiety, substance use disorders, and suicide attempts.<sup>[12]</sup> The religious reinforcement of anti-LGBT bias and discrimination often increases the negative impact on mental health.<sup>[13]</sup>

Legislation enacted for the purpose of allowing businesses, social welfare agencies and organizations, health care facilities, and others to turn away people in need of services, based on the excluded persons' sexual orientation, gender identity, or other classification, is a dramatic change from how we have always understood civil rights and constitutional protections. Especially at this moment in history when strong divisions about socially contentious issues too often culminate in increased acts of discrimination against minority groups, it is more dangerous than ever for the government to facilitate such discrimination. The enactment of a RFRA law written to give cover to such prejudice-driven exclusions of persons from equal participation in society impermissibly would involve the government in the facilitation of discriminatory treatment of Iowans. Instead, it should be the State's priority to protect all Iowans from the substantial harms of discrimination by preserving and fully enforcing the Iowa Civil Rights Act, regardless of anyone's religious motivations for otherwise unlawful discrimination.

For all of these reasons, Lambda Legal urges you not to support a RFRA bill in the Iowa legislature or in any other context.

Legislator rips up bill to end licensing for social workers, barbers, other professionals

Tony Leys, tleys@dmreg.com 5:03 p.m. CT Feb. 27, 2017

A Republican state representative drew applause from dozens of citizens Monday for literally tearing up a bill from Gov. Terry Branstad that would have cancelled licensure requirements for social workers, mental health therapists, barbers and several other professions.

"I wanted to publicly declare that when it comes to licensure reform and the taking away of all the things that you all have done and that you have dedicated your lives for, as far I'm concerned, my opinion is this," Rep. Bobby Kaufmann said as he ripped in half a cover sheet for House Study Bill 138.

Kaufmann was chairman of a subcommittee that considered the bill proposed by Branstad, who is a fellow Republican. The panel listened to an hour of mostly negative comments before declaring the bill dead. Kaufmann's dramatic action drew whoops and applause from a hearing room packed with members of the professions in question.

The 82-page bill also had several other provisions, including a loosening of restrictions on new health-care facilities. But it was the proposal to withdraw professional licensing that drew heat.

Kaufmann said he received more than 3,600 emails about the bill, almost all of them in opposition. "I heard about it at McDonald's, at the grocery store, at Casey's, while I was getting my hair cut, and at Wal-Mart," Kaufmann said. "...There is zero appetite in this state for removing licensure. There is zero appetite for that to reappear in an amendment or to reappear in any sort of other bill the rest of the session."

Rep. Mary Mascher, an Iowa City Democrat who served on the subcommittee, noted that the only person who voiced any support Monday for ending the licensure requirements was a lobbyist for the conservative group Americans for Prosperity. "You need to be watching very carefully, because they're controlling a whole lot of what goes in our state right now," she said of the group, which is funded in part by billionaire brothers Charles and David Koch. "It should put the fear of God into all of us, because they've got the governor's ear."

Mascher said she was sorry so many professionals had to take time off from work Monday to testify against the bill. "We should have killed it before it ever got to this point," she said.

The bill would have substituted undefined "registration" for formal licensure for dietitians, athletic trainers, funeral directors, mental health counselors, marital therapists, social workers, speech pathologists and audiologists. It would have ended all licensure requirements for respiratory therapists, massage therapists, hearing-aid specialists, barbers and interior designers.

Professionals told legislators Monday that the licensure requirements ensure proper training and oversight. The licenses also are required by many public and private insurance plans that pay for health-care services, they said.

"It's a safeguard for the public," said Kenneth Cameron, a mental health counselor for Aspire Counseling Center in Des Moines. Without licenses, he said, counselors would be laughed at if they tried to submit bills to insurance companies. "Are you kidding me? It would never happen," he said, drawing chuckles from the crowd.

After the meeting, Branstad's spokesman suggested the governor's not giving up on the idea. The spokesman, Ben Hammes, noted Branstad had spoken in his Condition of the State address about Iowa requiring a third of its work force to have licenses, which he said is the highest level in the nation. "We felt it was time to have an initial conversation about licensing reform, while keeping the health and safety of Iowans the first priority," Hammes said in an email to the Register. "Gov. Branstad and Lt. Gov. Reynolds look forward to having those conversations about legislator's ideas on licensing reform in the weeks ahead."

Kaufmann said afterward that the Legislature would consider other parts of the bill. Among them is a proposal to ease requirements on proposed health-care facilities. Such proposals now need a "certificate of need" to show they wouldn't duplicate current facilities. Supporters say the system helps prevent wasteful health-care projects. Critics, including the governor, say the process has become a way for existing facilities to protect themselves from competition. The bill would specifically have exempted mental-health facilities from requiring permits. That was in response to the repeated blocking of a proposed psychiatric hospital in Bettendorf, which current hospitals say is unnecessary. Kaufmann said a bill on that subject could still pass this session.

As noted in the minutes from meeting 4/16/15 when this drug was released:

XII. Newly Released Generic Drugs and New Dosage Forms/Strengths (Dr. Biczak): All following recommendations were made to maximize cost savings to the program unless otherwise noted. Ivermectin tablets and HyQvia will both be preferred, while colchicine will be preferred with conditions. These drugs will all be non-preferred: ceftibuten, donepezil 23mg tablets,olapatadine, uceris, valganciclovir, Afrezza, and Arnuity Ellipta. Obizur will be nonrecommended. The following will all be non-preferred with conditions: amlodipine/valsartan, amlodipine/valsartan/hctz, celecoxib, lamotrigine odt, oxycodone er, pramipexole er, tacrolimus ointment, xigduo xr, Bunavail, Rasuvo, and Rytary. Holly Randleman motioned to accept the above recommendations. Linda Gehrke seconded the motion, and all members were in favor.

Every year in November there is an annual review and based on financial information, including federal and state supplemental rebates (which is confidential pursuant to 42 USC § 1396r-8(b)(3)(D)) status of drugs may change.

FYI: Brad is very familiar with our P&T/PDL process and may be able to assist with additional explanation if needed.

The Governor appointed Pharmaceutical & Therapeutics (P&T Committee) takes into account all clinical and financial aspects of each drug/category in making recommendations for status on the preferred drug list (PDL).

Per FAQs at <http://www.iowamedicaidpdl.com/sites/default/files/ghs-files/frequently-asked-questions/2016-10-05/frequently-asked-questions-pdl-sept-16-4-4.pdf>, the process is defined in #2 below:

2. What was the general method for constructing the PDL?

Each drug was reviewed on its clinical contributions relative to other medications in the same therapeutic category. Published, peer-reviewed clinical trials are the primary source of information used for this review. Placebo controlled, randomized clinical trials were awarded the greatest weight in the consideration process. Data regarding efficacy, effectiveness, adverse effects, and tolerability were analyzed and compared to other drugs within the therapeutic class. From this analysis, the clinical staff determined an agent's therapeutic value relative to the comparator drugs. An economic analysis was performed concurrent with the clinical review. This analysis incorporated Iowa utilization data, the CMS (federally negotiated drug manufacturer) rebates, and any supplemental rebates offered to the state by the drug manufacturers. The fiscal impact of PDL inclusion or exclusion of each medication was then determined. Another level of analysis weighed the relative cost to benefit ratios of accepting supplemental rebates compared to prior authorizing drugs. The comparable experiences of other states were collected and considered before suggestions were conveyed to the State. After reviewing and discussing these suggestions, the State's drug committee made recommendations to DHS for final determination.

Below is a response and the original email from the Attorneys General Office regarding a line item in the Governor's FY2018-2019 Budget Book. The amount the AG's office is reporting for money paid out doesn't match any of the expenditure line items in the budget book and I'd like to know where payouts to victims are reflected in the budget book.

Thanks for your assistance in providing clarification on this.

Respectfully,

Scott Foens

-----Original Email Thread-----

Mr. Foens,

I have looked at the page you referenced in the Governor's Budget and to be brutally honest, I am not sure how they've broken out expenses into their line items because it's not a report I produce from my division. My guess is they are using state codes from the department of revenue, which gets incredibly confusing for someone who doesn't see the behind the scenes day to day as far as how different expenses get assigned. If you want to know more about how the compensation fund is spent, I encourage you to look at the Crime Victim Assistance Division's Annual Report, which is produced per IA code, for the state legislature every year. I have attached our annual report for your viewing pleasure.

To answer the question I believe you were asking, in SFY16, we paid out $ $6,559,803 in claims to victims of crime here in Iowa. That is the actual dollar amount spent solely to reimburse victims for their out of pocket expenses.

I hope this helps, but if I've missed something, please feel free to reach out to me again.

Subject: Victim Compensation Fund Detail Budget Book Question

I am looking through the Governor's FY2018-2019 budget book. On page 104, there is detailed information on the Victim Compensation Fund. I have a question. Under the Expenditures section, does the Claims line item represent monies actually paid out to the victims of crime while the other line items all represent expenses supporting that Claims line item or is the amount paid out in claims on a different line item and if so, where?

Thanks,

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: Tuesday, Jan. 10, 2017
CONTACT: Governor's Office 515-281-5211

Gov. Branstad delivers the 2017 Condition of the State address to the Iowa General Assembly

(DES MOINES) – Gov. Terry E. Branstad today delivered the 2017 Condition of the State address, entitled “Smaller and Smarter Government,” to the Iowa General Assembly and the people of Iowa.

In his address, Gov. Branstad struck an enthusiastic tone that this new General Assembly brings new dynamics, new expectations and new opportunities to deliver positive results for Iowans. The governor spoke about the need for a responsible budget including submitting adjustments to the current fiscal year and the need for a biennial budget for fiscal year 2018 and 2019 that sets supplemental state aid for K-12 education in the first 30 days of the legislative session.

Gov. Branstad and Lt. Gov. Reynolds’ program initiatives for this upcoming session include a commitment to a smaller and smarter government, a focus on the jobs of today and tomorrow, obtaining a 21st century education for all students and making our Iowa roads safer.

VIEW THE BUDGET IN BRIEF HERE INCLUDING THE FISCAL YEAR 2017 BUDGET ADJUSTMENTS \(PAGE 73 & 74\)

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE BUDGET ADJUSTMENTS:

- Adjustments are required by law.
- Does not include across-the-board cuts.
- Does not reduce funding for supplemental state aid for K through 12 education.
- Does not reduce property tax credits.
- Modernized Medicaid resulting in over $110 million in savings for Iowa taxpayers.

VIEW THE FULL FISCAL YEAR 2018 AND 2019 BUDGET HERE

HIGHLIGHTS:

- The governor and Lt. governor's 2-year budget is again balanced and stable.
- The budget fits within five-year budget projections.
- Based on the principles laid out by the Iowa Taxpayers Association.
- Prioritizes education, health care, economic development and public safety.
- Gives schools the predictability and stability they need with an increase of over $78.8 million in supplemental state aid in fiscal year 2018 and includes an additional $63.5 million for fiscal year 2019.
- Modernized Medicaid resulting in $232 million in savings for Iowa taxpayers.
- Redirects family planning money to organizations that focus on providing health care for women and eliminates taxpayer funding for organizations that perform abortions.

SMALLER AND SMARTER GOVERNMENT:

HIGHLIGHTS:

- Gov. Branstad & Lt. Gov. Reynolds are calling for replacing the current antiquated collective bargaining system for public employees.
  - Move to one comprehensive statewide health care contract for public employees.
  - This will provide quality health care to public employees at a significantly lower cost and give local governments more flexibility to provide better wages and meet other needs.
  - Rewards public employees for taking ownership of their own health by conducting health risk assessments and taking other actions that improve their own health.
- Work with the General Assembly to address unnecessary barriers that prevent competition and raise costs through a series of regulatory and licensing reforms.

FOCUSING ON THE JOBS OF TODAY AND TOMORROW:

HIGHLIGHTS:

- Modernizing water quality infrastructure that will create jobs in rural Iowa and promote cleaner water.
  - Calling on discussions to begin with the House-passed water quality bill from last session which provided for a long-term, dedicated source of revenue for implementation of projects outlined in the Nutrient Reduction Strategy.
- Prioritizes initiatives that will grow the state's talent pipeline including STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering & Math), Future Ready Iowa, registered apprenticeships and work-based learning for Iowa students.

21st CENTURY EDUCATION:

HIGHLIGHTS:

- Legislation encouraging all elementary, middle and high school students to have access to high-quality computer science programs by 2019. We want them to:
  - Offer at least one high-quality computer science course in every high school;
  - Provide exploratory computer science curriculum in every middle school and;
  - Include an introduction to computer science basics in every elementary school.
- Establish high-quality computer science standards.
- Create a computer science professional development incentive fund to train teachers.
- Convene an advisory group to recommend how to count computer science as a math credit toward high school graduation.

SAFER IOWA ROADS:

HIGHLIGHTS:

- Traffic fatalities spiked from 315 in 2015, to 402 in 2016.
- Gov. Branstad & Lt. Gov. Reynolds believe this is unacceptable.
- They are calling for legislation that drastically reduces the amount of distracted and impaired drivers on Iowa roads.
  - Restrict the use of mobile devices while driving.
- Gov. Branstad & Lt. Gov. Reynolds are also calling on the legislature to examine and implement strategies from the Department of Public Safety's task force that will make Iowa's roads safer.

Gov. Branstad's 2017 Condition of the State Address, as prepared for delivery, is as follows:

Madam Lieutenant Governor

Mr. President

Madam Speaker

Legislative leaders, legislators, justices and judges, elected officials, distinguished guests, family, friends and fellow Iowans.

I'm honored and humbled to once again address a joint session of the General Assembly delivering the Condition of the State for the final time as your governor.

For 22 years, I have addressed this body as governor and today I want to especially welcome the 22 new legislators with us—from both sides of the aisle—who were elected in November.

Your constituents sent you to work hard, to work for them, and help make Iowa a better place.

I hope you are filled with the same sense of excitement and eagerness that I had when I first served in the Legislature in 1973.

Lt. Gov. Reynolds and I look forward to working with each of you and listening to your ideas on how to make our state an even better place for families to live, work and grow.

In that spirit, I am today extending an invitation to each legislator to meet with me personally during this legislative session.

We also gather again with shared sadness, returning to do our work without our friend, Sen. Joe Seng of Davenport.

Joe was a devout Catholic and a true statesman.

We enjoyed his contagious and positive personality and working with him.

As I look back on my years of public service, I am thankful for those Iowans who have stepped forward to serve their fellow citizens.

In particular, please join me in applauding those Iowans who have helped make our state and nation safer by serving in the military, law enforcement or as first responders.

Since taking office in 2011, we have made the necessary changes to strengthen our economy and improve the quality of life across our state.

We've made tough decisions to give Iowans a smaller and smarter government.

We have stayed the course with an unwavering commitment to create jobs, increase family incomes, reduce the size of government, and give Iowa students a globally competitive education.

We have provided significant tax relief for Iowans the past five years, especially for commercial property taxpayers.

And last month, Lt. Gov. Reynolds and leaders from the Economic Development Authority and Department of Transportation unveiled Iowa's most comprehensive Energy Plan.

The plan was developed after collaboration with the private sector, public sector, educators, non-profits and utilities.

Iowa is already a leader in low-cost and renewable energy.

The comprehensive new energy plan will help build on our past energy successes and reaffirms our commitment to maintaining Iowa's energy leadership in the future.

I'm proud that we have made government smaller and smarter.

We've seen unemployment in our state drop from 6.2 percent to 3.8 percent.

The state has helped attract more than 13 and a half billion in private-sector capital investment, which has translated into great-paying jobs across Iowa.

And more Iowans have been employed these past few years than at any other period in our state's history.

We have also made the tough decisions to ensure government lives within its means like Iowa families must do.

We have accomplished this with a relentless focus on fiscal discipline, demanding budget predictability, fully restoring Iowa's reserve accounts and reducing the state's debt liability.

Together we have made progress toward our goal of restoring Iowa's schools to best in the nation through a series of landmark reforms and innovative policies.

To improve Iowa's education standing, we needed to make sure our hardworking teachers had all the tools necessary to succeed given higher expectations for all students.

So, we created a new Teacher Leadership System that better utilizes the expertise of top teachers to improve education, instruction and foster greater collaboration.

I'm proud to say that every public school in Iowa today is participating in our Teacher Leadership System.

To ensure that our children are prepared for a 21st century economy we advanced a nationally recognized STEM initiative that gives students the confidence and skills for rewarding careers.

The STEM initiative is led by Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds and Kemin Industries President & CEO Dr. Chris Nelson and has seen outstanding growth and success.

Sustaining these measures over time is critical to get the right results for our students and our state.

The ability of Iowans to overcome challenges bolsters my optimism for our state's future.

When faced with challenges, Iowans consistently seek opportunities.

Some of the challenges we have overcome--like the Farm Crisis of the 1980s--tore at the very fabric of our communities.

In the 1980s, Bloomfield, Ia.--a community in Davis County in southeast Iowa--struggled like many communities across the state.

An uninsured bank in Bloomfield closed in 1983 and caused great losses for area families and businesses.

And area farmers were straddled with debt and limited market opportunities for their crops.

However, through a persistent focus on economic diversification and an entrepreneurial spirit to rebuild its community, Bloomfield now has new manufacturers that are growing alongside innovative startups.

And, to continue their effort to stay on the cutting edge community leaders are instituting aggressive strategies to become Iowa's first energy independent community by 2030.

I visited Bloomfield last year and was impressed with the Main Street revitalization, a new hardware store and the M3 Fabrication manufacturing plant.

And Woodbine, Ia., is another example of a community that took its future into its own hands.

The community showed how an integrated approach to community revitalization that focuses on historic preservation and community sustainability can redefine a struggling, small rural community.

Woodbine also had a bank closure in the 1980s, but the community turned its challenges into future growth and diversification.

Lt. Gov. Reynolds and I visited Woodbine and were impressed with the success of their Main Street program.

And Waterloo, Ia., after experiencing economic challenges throughout the previous three decades embraced the challenge of reshaping its industrial heritage to succeed in modern times.

Cedar Valley Tech Works has made Waterloo a nationally recognized leader for manufacturing innovation.

And John Deere continues to be a leading manufacturer and innovator in Waterloo.

In the balcony, we have leaders from Bloomfield, Woodbine and Waterloo.

Please join me in congratulating their accomplishments and supporting their future success.

Iowa's industries are increasingly high tech, including advanced manufacturing.

In total, Iowa has over 6,100 manufacturers that contribute more than $31 billion to Iowa's economy and employ over 200,000 Iowans.

Over the next year, the Iowa Economic Development Authority will work with Iowa's manufacturers to advance a "Year of Manufacturing" in Iowa to help grow this important part of the Iowa economy.

We should also be proud that Iowa remains an agricultural powerhouse that feeds and fuels the world thanks to the hard work and innovation of Iowa's farmers and agricultural producers.

We just set an all-time record for ethanol production, set a new record for biodiesel production by an additional 55 million gallons and lead the nation in percentage of electricity generated by wind.

We now generate over 35 percent of our electricity from wind and expect this number to exceed 40 percent by 2020.

Over the past 30 years, we've significantly added value to our agricultural commodities.

We've also diversified the Iowa economy by expanding exports and supporting growth in biofuels, wind energy, data centers, fertilizer plants, bio-renewable chemicals, advanced manufacturing, insurance and financial services.

These newer industries employ hundreds of thousands of Iowans in rewarding careers.

And while I am pleased with this progress and optimistic about Iowa's future, I believe there is more work to be done.

We must seize the opportunities before us.

This new General Assembly brings new dynamics, new expectations and new opportunities to deliver positive results for Iowans.

Our state is in an admirable position.

Many states are strapped with crushing debt, poor credit ratings and a bleak economic outlook.

But Iowa is a shining example of what hard work and smart, tough choices can do for growing businesses and nurturing families.

While the December Revenue Estimate is lower than previous projections the estimate still shows a modest increase in state revenues.

Although we have faced a headwind out of Washington, D.C., that is stifling our agricultural economy, we still have positive state revenue growth.

But we must proceed with caution and not repeat the mistakes of the past.

With that prudence in mind, I present my proposed adjustments to the current fiscal year budget to you today.

These adjustments are required by law.

My proposal does not include across-the-board cuts, does not reduce funding for K through 12 education, does not reduce property tax credits and does not include furloughs for state employees.

The budget reductions I am recommending for this fiscal year are difficult.

But they maintain funding for our mutual priorities.

I am committed to working with legislative leaders to implement these adjustments.

For the coming biennium, I am presenting a complete two-year budget that is balanced each year and meets our five-year projections for a sustainable future.

This budget is based on the principles laid out by the Iowa Taxpayers Association.

It prioritizes education, health care, economic development and public safety.

And it redirects family planning money to organizations that focus on providing health care for women and eliminates taxpayer funding for organizations that perform abortions.

On my first trip to China in 1984, I learned that the Chinese word for danger and opportunity is one in the same.

Today, America and Iowa exist in a challenging world.

But we must seize the opportunity to make it a better place.

In 2010, Lt. Gov. Reynolds and I promised to reduce the size and scope of government.

I'm proud to report that we have a smaller, smarter government with a steady focus on improving services for our citizens in a more timely and efficient manner.

Yet, while the size of government is smaller, benefits for public employees at the state and local level have increased.

Unfortunately, the cost of these benefits has grown dramatically because of our antiquated collective bargaining system that has led to over 500 health-care plans, many of which are inefficient and way too costly for public employees and Iowa taxpayers.

Under our present system, a few adverse health outcomes will destroy the budget of a city, county or school district.

By replacing this system with one comprehensive statewide health-care contract we can spread the risk and dramatically reduce costs.

Using a uniform health-care benefit system similar to the IPERS program for retirement we can provide quality health care at a significantly lower cost and give local governments more flexibility to provide better wages and meet other needs.

The statewide health-care contract also needs to reward employees who take ownership of their own health by conducting health risk assessments and taking actions to improve their own health.

We have made a commitment to examine every dollar of revenue and expenditure in order to maximize efficiency and respect hardworking taxpayers.

We are committed to a smaller, smarter government that seeks innovative ways to provide services rather than blind adherence to the way things have always been done.

I'm asking the General Assembly to take a comprehensive review of all of our state's boards and commissions to address unnecessary barriers that prevent competition and raise costs.

I encourage you to ask the tough questions that challenge the status quo.

In Iowa, 90 percent of our general fund budget is spent on three items; K through 12 education, Medicaid and employee wages and benefits.

The state has significantly increased funding for education since 2011, amounting to over 654 million additional dollars.

Education and job training are the foundation for our future economic growth.

Growing our state's talent pipeline needs to be a top priority.

Even with our modest revenue growth my recommendation includes an increase of $73 million for K-12 education for fiscal year 2018 and an additional $61 million for fiscal year 2019 which equates to roughly 2 percent growth each year.

So this year, let's show Iowans we can make these decisions early and meet the legal requirements of setting supplemental state aid for fiscal year 2018 and fiscal year 2019 in the first 30 days.

The second largest driver of our state budget is health and human services spending.

Together, we have transformed our mental health system to a community-based model, we obtained a federal waiver for our Iowa Health and Wellness Plan which has reduced charity care for hospitals and, like 39 other states, we have modernized our Medicaid program.

As a result, we have created a new system where more Iowans have access to mental health services closer to home than ever before; more Iowans are covered with health insurance than ever before; and more than 80 new value-added services are now being offered under our modernized Medicaid program.

We've also replaced the old Medicaid system with a coordinated team of health-care professionals to ensure patients see the right provider at the right time.

As a result of these reforms and innovation, we have improved the focus on health outcomes and saved the taxpayers $110 million.

Our increase in education funding last year was made possible because of our modernized Medicaid efforts.

Without these vital reforms, the budget choices before us today would be twice as hard.

In order to grow Iowa, we must also look at policies and reforms that will continue growing family incomes.

One way to do this is to close the skills gap which in many ways is the biggest challenge our state faces over the next decade.

That is why Lt. Governor Reynolds and I set the Future Ready Iowa goal that 70 percent of Iowans in the workforce should have education or training beyond high school by 2025.

Today, less than half of our workforce does.

Accomplishing this ambitious goal will create unprecedented opportunities for Iowans and better position our state to compete in an increasingly knowledge-based, digital economy.

That is why we established the Future Ready Iowa Alliance, co-chaired by Lt. Governor Reynolds and Dan Houston of Principal, which will make recommendations by Oct. 31, 2017, to assure more Iowans have the careers they deserve and employers can hire the skilled workers they need to grow and innovate.

Even with a tight budget, we should continue to prioritize initiatives that will grow the state's talent pipeline like the STEM initiative, registered apprenticeships and work-based learning for Iowa's students.

Please help me recognize the students here with us today from Jackson Elementary School in Des Moines, Bondurant-Farrar Middle School and Waukee High School, which has one of the premier work-based learning programs in our state.

The students in the gallery represent children across Iowa who are counting on all of us to modernize schools for the 21st century.

That's why Lt. Governor Reynolds and I are launching a comprehensive computer science initiative.

We are encouraging every high school to offer at least one high-quality computer science course, every middle school to provide exploratory computer science, and every elementary school to include an introduction to computer science.

All students need to learn how computers operate because it is fundamental to life and work today.

Computer science will provide students a chance to join one of the fastest-growing and best-paying fields.

No student should miss out on this opportunity because of where they live.

This is another step to better align education and training with essential workforce needs.

We all care deeply for the safety of our families, our friends, and our neighbors.

However, a troubling trend has begun to emerge that threatens Iowans' safety on our roads.

Traffic deaths went from 315 in 2015 to 400 in 2016.

This is unacceptable.

Earlier this year, I called on the Department of Public Safety and the Governor's Traffic Safety Bureau to lead a working group to study this disturbing trend.

The group, with the support of key stakeholders, including law enforcement, made recommendations worth your consideration.

I am asking you to take a hard look at these recommendations and evaluate which can be put into law to make our roads safer.

Unfortunately, too many innocent bicyclists, motorcyclists, pedestrians and passengers have lost their lives on our roads.

Last year, I received a handwritten note from Christine and Darrel Harken, parents of Grace Harken, who live near Riceville.

They wrote "our daughter Gracie's life was so sadly ended July 29, 2015, by someone who was driving and texting."

Grace was biking safely and lawfully during a morning bike ride, when a driver who was texting struck and killed her.

They went on to write, "Grace would have forgiven the driver and moved forward.

"That is what we have chosen to do. But we miss her so."

Grace Harken's life was tragically ended way too early.

Modern technologies should come with new responsibilities.

I ask that all Iowans join the Iowa law-enforcement community, first responders, the League of Cities, all the major cell-phone carriers, the insurance industry, and the medical community in demanding real change in the laws for distracted and impaired drivers.

Last year, I called on the Legislature to send me a water-quality improvement bill.

I was pleased to see bipartisan progress made on this front with the House passing House File 2541 last session.

This bill was approved by the Agriculture, Ways and Means and Appropriations Committees and passed the House with 65 votes.

This bill provided for a long-term, dedicated and growing source of revenue to help implement projects to improve habitat and water quality directed by the Iowa Nutrient Reduction Strategy.

The bill also provided funding for community conservation practices and improvements to wastewater and drinking water facilities.

By leading on this issue, together we have the opportunity to modernize Iowa's agricultural infrastructure, create jobs in rural Iowa and promote collaboration between urban and rural communities.

I believe our discussions should begin with the House-passed bill from last session.

I hope we can work together to perfect and improve the legislation that will provide a long-term, dedicated and growing source of revenue for water-quality improvements.

I've been so blessed to serve as your governor, leading the state I love, for 22 years.

I am confident Iowa will continue to move forward because Iowans care deeply about their neighbors, their communities and creating an even better future.

And I'm extremely thankful for perhaps the most patient person in the state -- my wife, Chris -- as she has also served Iowa as first lady with grace.

She has welcomed Iowans and visitors from around the world to Terrace Hill and she has volunteered to help in many ways, including reading with Jackson Elementary students.

To Chris and my entire family, thank you for your sacrifice during my time in public service.

I am also thankful for the friendships we have made in all 99 counties -- friendships that we will always cherish.

And I am grateful for the prayers from Iowans who have encouraged me along the way.

There is no better job in the world than being the governor of the state that you love.

But sometimes we are called to serve in ways we had never imagined.

As I approach the U.S. Senate confirmation process my main priority is to continue serving the people of Iowa with the same energy and passion that I have brought to this office each and every day.

Thank you.

God Bless you and all the people of Iowa.

Subject: Press Conf/HT proclamation

Just wanted you to know it went well. Gov. Branstad made a short mention about the collaborative efforts of our office and DPS on this initiative. Dr. George Belitsos did speak to the influx of federal funding granted out to HT service providers around the state. No one from our office spoke formally, but Rhonda, Celine and I all attended the press conference and proclamation signing. On invitation, Celine also attended the Board Meeting of the Network Against Human Trafficking IA Chapter directly following the proclamation signing over at the Capitol.

After the proclamation, I was able to speak to Commissioner Ryan (her schedule freed up and she was able to attend after all) and we confirmed our meeting on the 13th. She told me she's concerned about the lack of funding for their analyst position. I told her we'd be happy to discuss it in our meeting with her.

Overall, everything went well this morning. Please let me know if you have any questions.

Dr. Helmers is speaking on a program in NW Iowa on January 10, but he is available by phone after 1:45. I suggest that I start the meeting with at 1:00 or 1:15 and we can call Helmers with the questions that I can't answer.

Will that work?

Dr. Lawrence – I received your voice message. Thanks for your willingness to meet with AG Miller on water quality issues. He needs to attend the Governor’s State of the State speech from 9:45 a.m. - about 11:30 a.m. on January 10th. So, the afternoon would be better. Thanks for checking with Dr. Hellmers and others. I am copying Jane Ambrozic, AG Miller’s Executive Assistant, who can work out a convenient time.

Thanks again and have a great holiday. Eric

Dear Alex Murphy,

I write the Iowa politics website Bleeding Heartland under the screen name "desmoinesdem."

I am seeking the following documents under Iowa's open records law:

1. All records related to Iowa Workforce Development asking the Department of Criminal Investigation to look into possible fraudulent acts by Susan Ackerman (including internal memos and e-mail correspondence within DCI as well as correspondence between IWD and DCI staff)
2. Any correspondence between DCI personnel and staff with the Polk County Attorney's office related to the criminal investigation of Susan Ackerman.
3. Any correspondence between DCI personnel and other state officials (either from a different agency or from the governor's office) who may have encouraged DCI to refer Ackerman's case to the Polk County Attorney's office.

Thanks in advance.

Yours,

Ryan,

Iowa Department of Workforce Development made the Department of Public Safety aware they had found potential evidence of a fraud perpetrated by one of its employees. Based on that preliminary information and a request for investigative assistance from Iowa Workforce Development, the DCI initiated an investigation, which ultimately resulted in charges being filed on Mrs. Ackerman by the Polk County Attorney's office.

Contrary to the assertions being made, politics does not play a role in this or any other criminal investigation. DCI Agents conduct impartial, thorough, and complete investigations and the evidence and other investigative findings they have collected as part of their investigation are provided to the county attorney with jurisdiction, for their review. The county attorney has responsibility to determine if criminal charges are justified, based on the evidence. This case was no different from any other investigation.

It should be noted that a criminal charge is merely an accusation and a defendant is presumed innocent until proven guilty.

Got it. Supporters of Susan Ackerman are already alleging that this case has a political motive - to retaliate against her for testifying critically of the Branstad administration to lawmakers in 2014.

Who asked DCI to investigate this alleged fraud? What steps were taken to keep any politics out of it?

Re: Volkswagen Settlement State Agency Working Group

Overview:

The Governor's Office has asked the Iowa Department of Transportation to coordinate the state of Iowa's response to the Volkswagen settlement. We are asking you to provide an agency representative to participate in this state agency working group. The purpose is to coordinate with other partner state agencies to identify/recommend potential projects and recommend a process for allocating these funds. The recommendations from this group will be prepared for the Governor's Office consideration.

Volkswagen (VW) has agreed to pay $14.7 billion to resolve litigation regarding failure to comply with emissions standards captioned the United States v. Volkswagen Group of America. Of that:

- Zero Emission Vehicle Investments (ZEV): $2 billion will be allocated to national ZEV investments ($800 million for California and $1.2 billion nationally), and
- Environmental Mitigation Trust (Trust) $2.7 billion will be allocated to Trust, which states and territories may use to invest in transportation projects that will reduce Nitrogen Oxides emissions (NOx), which contribute to ozone and raise health concerns.
- Vehicle Purchase & Upgrades: The remaining $10 billion dollars will be spent by VW purchase or upgrade faulty VW vehicles.

To access or download the partial and amended consent decree, go to the following link on the Environmental Protection Agency's website: <https://www.epa.gov/enforcement/201-partial-and-amended-consent-decree>.

National Zero Emission Vehicle (ZEV) Investments:

The $2 billion allocated to ZEV Investment will be distributed as described in the ZEV Investment Plan developed by Volkswagen and approved by EPA. The plan will focus on three primary activities:

1. Investing in electric vehicle charging infrastructure.

2. Increasing awareness and fostering education about electronic vehicles, their benefits, and charging availability.
3. Launching a Green City initiative in the state of California.

Volkswagen is required to obtain input on this plan and they are accepting project proposals through January 16, 2017. The Iowa Economic Development Authority (IEDA), in coordination with the Iowa DOT, will prepare a proposal for fast charging corridors shaped by the local interest from property owners and stakeholders primarily along high volume corridors including I-35 and I-80.

Environmental Mitigation Trust:

The state of Iowa is eligible to receive an allocation of $20,179,540.80 from the Trust, which can be spent over approximately ten years.

Timeframe for the Trust:

States (referred to as beneficiaries) must wait until a Trustee has been selected to act as a third-party to administer the funding. Selection of the trustee and determination of Trust Effective Date (TED) is expected to occur in early CY 2017. Within two months of the TED, each beneficiary will submit certification for its lead agency. Within 90 days of becoming and beneficiary, a Beneficiary Mitigation Plan is due to the Trustee broadly describing intended uses for the funding and associated emissions benefits. Each beneficiary is allowed up to 15 percent of its allocation for administration costs, which can include state staff and typical administration expenses as well as training costs.

Eligible Project Uses of Environmental Mitigation Trust:

The eligible projects described in the settlement focus on replacing or repowering older diesel vehicles with new diesel or alternative fuel vehicles. Alternative fuel vehicles listed are compressed natural gas, propane, hybrid or all-electric. We continue to advocate for biofuels-related projects, but eligibility remains uncertain. Vehicles can be government owned or non-government owned. Types of vehicles include large freight trucks, school buses, shuttle buses, transit buses, freight switchers, ferries and /or tugs, medium duty trucks, airport ground support equipment, fork lifts and port cargo handling equipment. Electric vehicle charging stations are eligible, however, it is worth noting that VW will be spending $2 billion nationally on ZEV investments. States may also use what is called the Diesel Emission Reduction Act (DERA) option, which is an existing EPA program that funds a variety of similar diesel emission reduction projects. This opens up another list of potentially eligible projects, such as idle reduction equipment, off-road equipment, and diesel generators. The Iowa Department of Natural Resources currently administers some of EPA's DERA funds in Iowa.

Timeline/Potential Next Steps (actual dates are subject to determination of Trust Effective Date):

- Set up a working group meeting late early January 2017.
- Identify project priorities by the working group (By February 2017)
  - o At present, several parties have already expressed an interest in VW settlement funding. These potential projects, as well as forthcoming broad public solicitation for potential projects will be discussed at the first working group meeting;
  - o Identify state priorities;
  - o Review submitted projects;
  - o Recommendations submitted to Governor's Office.
- Develop & Submit Beneficiary Mitigation Plan (March 2017 through May 2017 – but not later than three months after being deemed a beneficiary).
- Begin Implementation.

If your agency would like to be part of the working group, please respond with the name of a representative to Angie Poole at the Iowa Department of Transportation by December 30, 2016. Angie can be reached at 515-239-1351 or at angela.poole@iowadot.us

Re: Volkswagen Settlement State Agency Working Group

Overview:

The Governor's Office has asked the Iowa Department of Transportation to coordinate the state of Iowa's response to the Volkswagen settlement. We are asking you to provide an agency representative to participate in this state agency working group. The purpose is to coordinate with other partner state agencies to identify/recommend potential projects and recommend a process for allocating these funds. The recommendations from this group will be prepared for the Governor's Office consideration.

Volkswagen (VW) has agreed to pay $14.7 billion to resolve litigation regarding failure to comply with emissions standards captioned the United States v. Volkswagen Group of America. Of that:

- Zero Emission Vehicle Investments (ZEV): $2 billion will be allocated to national ZEV investments ($800 million for California and $1.2 billion nationally), and
- Environmental Mitigation Trust (Trust) $2.7 billion will be allocated to Trust, which states and territories may use to invest in transportation projects that will reduce Nitrogen Oxides emissions (NOx), which contribute to ozone and raise health concerns.
- Vehicle Purchase & Upgrades: The remaining $10 billion dollars will be spent by VW purchase or upgrade faulty VW vehicles.

To access or download the partial and amended consent decree, go to the following link on the Environmental Protection Agency's website: <https://www.epa.gov/enforcement/201-partial-and-amended-consent-decree>.

National Zero Emission Vehicle (ZEV) Investments:

The $2 billion allocated to ZEV Investment will be distributed as described in the ZEV Investment Plan developed by Volkswagen and approved by EPA. The plan will focus on three primary activities:

1. Investing in electric vehicle charging infrastructure.
2. Increasing awareness and fostering education about electronic vehicles, their benefits, and charging availability.
3. Launching a Green City initiative in the state of California.

Volkswagen is required to obtain input on this plan and they are accepting project proposals through January 16, 2017. The Iowa Economic Development Authority (IEDA), in coordination with the Iowa DOT, will prepare a proposal for fast charging corridors shaped by the local interest from property owners and stakeholders primarily along high volume corridors including I-35 and I-80.

Environmental Mitigation Trust:

The state of Iowa is eligible to receive an allocation of $20,179,540.80 from the Trust, which can be spent over approximately ten years.

Timeframe for the Trust:

States (referred to as beneficiaries) must wait until a Trustee has been selected to act as a third-party to administer the funding. Selection of the trustee and determination of Trust Effective Date (TED) is expected to occur in early CY 2017. Within two months of the TED, each beneficiary will submit certification for its lead agency. Within 90 days of becoming and beneficiary, a Beneficiary Mitigation Plan is due to the Trustee broadly describing intended uses for the funding and associated emissions benefits. Each beneficiary is allowed up to 15 percent of its allocation for administration costs, which can include state staff and typical administration expenses as well as training costs.

Eligible Project Uses of Environmental Mitigation Trust:

The eligible projects described in the settlement focus on replacing or repowering older diesel vehicles with new diesel or alternative fuel vehicles. Alternative fuel vehicles listed are compressed natural gas, propane, hybrid or all-electric. We continue to advocate for biofuels-related projects, but eligibility remains uncertain. Vehicles can be government owned or non-government owned. Types of vehicles include large freight trucks, school buses, shuttle buses, transit buses, freight switchers, ferries and /or tugs, medium duty trucks, airport ground support equipment, fork lifts and port cargo handling equipment. Electric vehicle charging stations are eligible, however, it is worth noting that VW will be spending $2 billion nationally on ZEV investments. States may also use what is called the Diesel Emission Reduction Act (DERA) option, which is an existing EPA program that funds a variety of similar diesel emission reduction projects. This opens up another list of potentially eligible projects, such as idle reduction equipment, off-road equipment, and diesel generators. The Iowa Department of Natural Resources currently administers some of EPA's DERA funds in Iowa.

Timeline/Potential Next Steps (actual dates are subject to determination of Trust Effective Date):

- Set up a working group meeting late early January 2017.
- Identify project priorities by the working group (By February 2017)
  - o At present, several parties have already expressed an interest in VW settlement funding. These potential projects, as well as forthcoming broad public solicitation for potential projects will be discussed at the first working group meeting;
  - o Identify state priorities;
  - o Review submitted projects;
  - o Recommendations submitted to Governor's Office.

· Develop & Submit Beneficiary Mitigation Plan (March 2017 through May 2017 – but not later than three months after being deemed a beneficiary).

· Begin Implementation.

If your agency would like to be part of the working group, please respond with the name of a representative to Angie Poole at the Iowa Department of Transportation by December 30, 2016. Angie can be reached at 515-239-1351 or at angela.poole@iowadot.us

The most recent "ask" from George Belitsos re: the HT on the Hill day. I'm okay with having Celine participate, but wanted to check in to be sure. I'm also happy to accompany if she's concerned at all. Celine is stellar though and I'm not concerned at all with her ability to represent the AGO well.

Holiday greetings. Today I had a conversation with the governor's press secretary and he proposed that the only speakers at the press conference on January 9th at 9 a.m. be the governor, lieutenant governor, and myself. After the press conference at 9:30, it is planned that Roxanne Ryan and someone representing the Attorney General's office be identified and present to answer questions from the media. Please let me know if you should be identified or if it is someone else. I am copying this email to Roxanne to also inform her of all of this.

FYI at 9:45 p.m. we will reconvene in the governor's formal office for the proclamation signing. It would be great if you and Roxanne could be present for the Proclamation signing.

You were going to look at any national theme for this year's observance of January as anti Human Trafficking month. Were you able to locate any national theme or information?

Finally, the Network board will meet at approximately 10:15 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. following the proclamation signing. We would really appreciate it if you and Roxanne could be in attendance for this face to face board meeting. Since we will be right there at the state capitol building it would be very helpful to get a progress report from both the Attorney General's office and DPS. Please let me know.

Greetings. Thanks for the phone call and clarification regarding the governors January 9th 9 a.m. anti human trafficking press conference. I will be writing up proposed comments for the governor, lieutenant governor, and myself. We will be the only speakers during the press conference. I will send you the proposed comments the week before the press conference in order for you to review and place and final form.

At the end of the press conference, other allies in the fight against human trafficking will be available to answer questions from the press, for example Commissioner Roxanne Ryan, Celine Villongco from the Attorney General's office, and providers of services for trafficking victims.

At 9:45 a.m. we will reconvene in the governor's formal office for the signing of the proclamation. At that time we will also be recognizing several Iowans for their work to combat human trafficking.

To Whom It May Concern:

Pursuant to the Iowa Open Records Law (Code Chapter 22), I hereby request the following records:

Please provide me with the contact information of all registered FOIA departments/groups/agencies/branches and their respective officers or agents.

If this information is already available in a central and public location, please provide me with such information.

If this information is not stored nor maintained, please let me know so that this request can be narrowed so that fungible information will be provided instead.

If there are any questions or concerns, I can be reached through phone or email.

The requested documents will be made available to the general public, and this request is not being made for commercial purposes.

In the event that there are fees, I would be grateful if you would inform me of the total charges in advance of fulfilling my request. I would prefer the request filled electronically, by e-mail attachment if available or CD-ROM if not.

Thank you in advance for your anticipated cooperation in this matter. I look forward to receiving your response to this request within 10 business days, as the statute requires.

Sincerely,

Matt Chapman

Senator Danielson – I am sorry I am tardy in getting back to you – I have been traveling. I have pasted below the news release describing the VW settlement. The $3.5 million will be used by our office for consumer protection education and litigation. The $20 million for environmental mitigation efforts is administered by the Governor. He has delegated IDEA and DOT to draft the State Mitigation Fund. I believe the contact at IDEA is Stephanie Weisenbach and the contact at DOT is Stu Anderson. I understand they will call a stakeholders meeting sometime in January.

Attachments: 1923 Op Atty Gen 263.pdf

Erin:

Here's a little more explanation.

Notably, Iowa courts have never addressed this issue.

In all four historical cases of vacancies by Iowa governors, the lieutenant governor who succeeded the governor was viewed and regarded in all respects as the governor.

Our office carefully reviewed the Iowa Constitution.

A significant formal attorney general opinion from 1923 states that (in case of death, resignation or removal from office of the governor) the lieutenant governor becomes governor (I attached the opinion and highlighted the pertinent section on page 2).

Case law, statutory, and constitutional analyses from other states are consistent with this provision.

Finally, the Iowa Code supports this position. State law establishes that, the lieutenant governor, after taking office as governor, appoints a new lieutenant governor.

This research leads us to concur with Governor Branstad's conclusion that, upon his resignation, Lt. Governor Reynolds will become Governor. In her capacity as Governor, Governor Reynolds will have the authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Hopefully that helps clear things up.

Again, sorry about the delay.

Sounds good, and thanks for the heads-up.

I think I'm clear except on one piece ... Iowa Code clearly states the governor fills a vacancy for lieutenant governor. But the constitution says only that the powers of the governor's office fall on the lieutenant governor ... it does not necessarily say the lieutenant governor becomes governor. And, as the code states, only a governor can name a lieutenant governor.

So that's the bridge I'm trying to cross here.

Geoff and Eric,
Just one more thing (I promise!). I note the Iowa Constitution says upon a vacancy in the position of Governor, the Governor's power shall "devolve" to the Lt. Governor. (It does not say the Lt. Gov. assumes the office of Governor). I think this wording is important.

Note this dictionary definition of "devolve":

de·volve
[də'vɔlv]

VERB

1. transfer or delegate (power) to a lower level, especially from central government to local or regional administration:

"measures to devolve power to the provinces" ·

[more]

"devolved and decentralized government"

synonyms: delegate · depute · pass (down/on) · download ·

[more]

hand down/over/on · transfer · transmit · assign · consign · convey · entrust · turn over · give · cede · surrender · relinquish · deliver · bestow · grant

- (devolve on/upon/to)

(of duties or responsibility) pass to (a body or person at a lower level):

"his duties devolved on a comrade"

- o formal

(devolve into)

degenerate or be split into:

"the Empire devolved into separate warring states"

The general assembly shall thereupon immediately proceed to the election of a governor and lieutenant governor in joint convention.

Repealed and rewritten, 1988,
Amendment [42] Referred to in §7.14 of the Code

Here's Matt's analysis from earlier in the day:

1. Resignation of the Governor – Must be made in writing to the General Assembly, if in session, if not, to the Secretary of State. Iowa Code § 69.4(1).
2. Upon resignation, the Office of Governor is considered vacant. § 69.2(1)(d).
3. The vacancy is filled by the Lieutenant Governor. Iowa Const. Art. IV, Sec. 17 (“In the case of the death, impeachment, resignation . . . of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, . . . shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.”)
4. Once the Lt. Governor becomes governor, it creates a vacancy in the Lt. Governor’s office because of the prohibition against simultaneously holding more than one elective office. See Iowa Code § 69.2(1)(h).
5. In general, vacancies in state offices are filled by the governor. § 69.8(2).
6. The Code specifically provides, “an appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of the lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term.” § 69.8(2).

Accordingly, a resignation by Gov. Branstad would create a vacancy that would be filled by Lt. Gov. Reynolds. Once she assumed the office of Governor, a vacancy would be created in the Lt. Governor’s office. The governor has the power and authority to appoint a new Lt. Governor who would serve for the balance of the Branstad/ Reynolds term.

We have reviewed for any relevant case law or Attorney General Opinions, and have not found any that would alter the above analysis.

Here's the pertinent area of Article IV:

Lieutenant governor to act as governor. SEC. 17. In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

Referred to in §7.14 of the Code

Duties of lieutenant governor. SEC. 18. The lieutenant governor shall have the duties provided by law and those duties of the governor assigned to the lieutenant governor by the governor.

Repealed and rewritten 1988, Amendment [42]

Succession to office of governor and lieutenant governor. SEC. 19. If there be a vacancy in the office of the governor and the lieutenant governor shall by reason of death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability become incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor, the president of the senate shall act as governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed; and if the president of the senate, for any of the above causes, shall be incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor the same shall devolve upon the speaker of the house of representatives; and if the speaker of the house of representatives, for any of the above causes, shall be incapable of performing the duties of the office of governor, the justices of the supreme court shall convene the general assembly by proclamation and the general assembly shall organize by the election of a president by the senate and a speaker by the house of representatives. The general assembly shall thereupon immediately proceed to the election of a governor and lieutenant governor in joint convention.

Repealed and rewritten 1988, Amendment [42]
Referred to in §7.14 of the Code

Here's Matt's analysis from earlier in the day:

1. Resignation of the Governor – Must be made in writing to the General Assembly, if in session, if not, to the Secretary of State. Iowa Code § 69.4(1).

2. Upon resignation, the Office of Governor is considered vacant. § 69.2(1)(d).
3. The vacancy is filled by the Lieutenant Governor. Iowa Const. Art. IV, Sec. 17 (“In the case of the death, impeachment, resignation . . . of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, . . . shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.”)
4. Once the Lt. Governor becomes governor, it creates a vacancy in the Lt. Governor’s office because of the prohibition against simultaneously holding more than one elective office. See Iowa Code § 69.2(1)(h).
5. In general, vacancies in state offices are filled by the governor. § 69.8(2).
6. The Code specifically provides, “an appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of the lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term.” § 69.8(2).

The Governor's office accused Attorney General Tom Miller of "playing politics" when he announced this week that Kim Reynolds won't be able to choose her own Lieutenant Governor. Well now an Iowa Democrat who wants to challenge Reynolds in 2018 is agreeing with her. Political Director Dave Price explains. Lieutenant Governor to Serve as Governor, But Lacks Authority to
Appoint Lieutenant, Attorney General Opinion Concludes

*Formal opinion responds to request by state senator as Governor Branstad prepares to resign
for ambassadorship*

DES MOINES – Attorney General Tom Miller Monday issued a formal legal opinion stating that if a governor resigns, the lieutenant governor becomes governor for all intents and purposes, but does not have legal authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Sen. David Johnson, I-Ocheyedan, requested the opinion following Governor Terry Branstad’s announcement that, if confirmed by the U.S. Senate, he will serve as U.S. ambassador to China.

The 23-page opinion, following extensive legal and historical research, concludes, “...the powers and duties of the office of Governor fall upon the lieutenant governor.” The conclusion is based on an Iowa Constitution provision addressing a governor’s resignation, which states, “...the powers and duties of the office...shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.” Under that provision, the opinion adds, “The lieutenant governor takes on this authority because she is lieutenant governor.”

Significantly, according to Miller, Article IV, section 1 provides that “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.”

While the “the lieutenant governor becomes governor and has the title of Governor,” the opinion further adds that that person does not have constitutional authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor. “In other words, upon a governor’s resignation, the lieutenant governor will hold both the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. There is no vacancy to be filled,” according to the opinion.

“This opinion conveys that, in a sense, the two offices merge,” Miller said. “This is consistent with numerous cases in other states that addressed this question,” Miller added. “It is also consistent with a close reading of the Iowa governor’s succession provision—Article IV, section 19 of the Iowa Constitution, which establishes a precise order of gubernatorial succession without providing for the appointment of a lieutenant governor.”

Miller's opinion notes that in all four previous instances when an Iowa governor resigned or died while in office, the lieutenant governor was always considered governor, but never appointed or named a new lieutenant governor. The opinion also concludes, "The framers intended that those in the gubernatorial line of succession be elected."

At the federal level, prior to Congress amending the U.S. Constitution in 1967 to establish that the vice president becomes president and grants the president authority to appoint a new vice president with Congressional approval, no vice president who assumed the powers and duties of a president who died while in office appointed a new vice president.

The formal opinion departs from a public statement Miller's office issued in December, following an informal legal review in response to media inquiries, which stated the office concurred with "Governor Branstad's conclusion that...in her capacity as Governor, Governor Reynolds will have the authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor."

The December statement was based, in part, on an Iowa Code section addressing vacancies of office holders. Miller's formal opinion concludes this statute does not apply when a governor resigns and the powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

About Attorney General Opinions

A formal attorney general opinion addresses legal questions relating to a public official's duties by interpreting laws and offering legal guidance.

While not a legal precedent, a formal attorney general opinion is similar to one and stands until a court or later opinion overrules it or new legislation is enacted to change a statute in question. Opinions are not legally binding, but courts generally give them careful consideration and deference.

Governors to Sessions: Butt out!

dmckee.lvablog.com | 04/11/17 12:36

If Attorney General Jeff Sessions was thinking about re-reinterpreting the Federal Wire Act, he might want to think again. The National Governors Association composed a letter to Sessions in which it said, "States are best equipped to enforce and regulate online gaming." They didn't bury the lead, either. The first sentence of the letter says, "The nation's governors are concerned with legislative or administrative actions that would ban online Internet gaming and Internet lottery sales

The Iowa Judicial Branch, representing the state's courts, is officially opposed to the legislation. As is Iowa Attorney General Tom Miller, the Iowa County Attorneys Association and the Iowa Judges Association. Polk County Attorney John Sarcone, a veteran prosecutor, wants Gov. Terry Branstad to veto the gun bill

One big wildcard hanging over the race is ex-state Attorney General Richard Cordray, who serves as head of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau. However, even if Cordray wants to go back home and run for governor, he may not be able to. The GOP would love to gut or kill the CFPB and if Cordray resigns, he'll make their job far easier. Cordray can't run for office as long as he holds his job in D.C. but if he

Thanks for your recollections and perspective on the conversations which took place at about this time last year. However, it seems to me the best evidence of our agreement is the amendment language which was negotiated between our organizations, and which was subsequently adopted by both houses of the legislature and signed by the Governor. That language, of course, is now law.

I would respectfully propose the following path forward:

-The Office of the SPD again requests the information which is required to be provided under paragraph 3 of H.F. 2420. I may be misunderstanding your statement that this information was not collected. That would be very concerning, because that information was required to be collected under paragraph (2)(c)(5) of H.F. 2420. If I am understanding your email correctly and that information was not collected, I would propose that your office circle back to the respective agencies to gather the legally required information in cases which resulted in a conviction.

-The Office of the SPD again requests the information which is required to be provided under paragraph 6 of H.F. 2420. Under the bill, this information is not limited to cases which resulted in a conviction.

Thank you for your consideration.

Mr. Gregg,

Since you weren't present for any of the meetings leading up to this legislation being passed and since Kurt seemed to be happy with the information we provided, it appears there's a bit of a disconnect as to what the intent of the language was and what Kurt and his colleague (Amy?) said they were hoping to achieve. Since we based our submission to you all on what was discussed, it's important to have the context.

60 days-We explained to Kurt when we met, the entire survey was being conducted with federal grant dollars. Our grant required approval through the Federal Bureau of Justice Assistance (BJA) prior to releasing any of the data collected under the grant and we were up front we would not be able to provide any data until the end of the audit. We received this approval from BJA about a week and a half ago and provided this information to your agency as quickly as we were able, well within the 60 day timeframe and before the report had been made public.

The scope of this grant was to collect data to benefit victims who may not have received justice due to their SA kit not having been tested. SPD was hoping to piggyback on this data piece to explore whether or not offenders also received justice in their convictions, especially in the event someone had been wrongfully convicted. We didn't argue the language of the bill, because of our conversations with Kurt and Amy and our disclosures of what we could and couldn't provide and why. Kurt made very clear, you all were hoping to get information around kits that had not been tested, but where convictions were obtained. We explained we could not provide raw data from the survey, wherein information had been disclosed to us which would not have otherwise been made public record, except in the case of a conviction. There were also elements SPD wanted that we did not obtain, since the focus of the grant was not on offenders and our survey tool also required approval through BJA.

I say all of this to say, we have provided you with exactly what was agreed upon in our conversations with Kurt and Amy. The elements in paragraph 3 that were not provided, were because we did not collect them. We did, however, provide more information than was required in this same paragraph to try to uphold what we had discussed with Amy and Kurt. Paragraph 3 only required us to provide the defendant's name, case number and county of conviction. We didn't capture anything but the case number out of these elements, but tried to provide context for each so SPD could further investigate. We have met the terms of our requirements under this paragraph.

Paragraph 6 was a moot point given what we'd discussed with Kurt, as he'd indicated SPD wasn't interested in general information about kits, but rather just kits that hadn't been tested, where convictions were obtained.

It is time consuming to filter down 4,200+ rows of information, to give you only the date a kit was collected, the facility where it was collected and the case number as is required under paragraph 6, especially if it's not going to be helpful to SPD (which is what we were told). We are happy to provide you with this list, however, if you've since determined it is now somehow helpful to your work.

Please let me know how SPD would like to proceed given this context.

Mr. Hamill-

Thank you sending this report. However, it does not appear to comply with the requirements of House File 2420.

For cases which resulted in a conviction, paragraph 3 of the bill very clearly requires the attorney general to provide my office with the defendant's name, case number, and county where the conviction occurred. This report does not appear to provide the information required by the law. I would also note that this information was to be provided to my office on a rolling basis, within 60 days of the AG's office receiving such information. It does not appear any ongoing disclosures occurred.

Instead, this report appears to be providing some of the information required by paragraph 6. The paragraph 6 disclosures were not limited to cases which resulted in a conviction. Therefore, the information to be provided under paragraph 6 is to be provided for all survey responses.

I respectfully request that the Office of the Attorney General provide the information required by law, namely:

-adhere to the directive of paragraph 3 of H.F. 2420, which requires the disclosure of the defendant's name, case number, and county of conviction for any cases in which a conviction was obtained for any crime associated with an untested kit;

-adhere to the directive of paragraph 6 of H.F. 2420, which requires the disclosure of the date the kit was collected, the location where the kit was collected, and the case number associated with the kit.

Hello Adam, Kurt,

I hope this email finds you well. As you probably recall my office received a grant from the Bureau of Justice Assistance and compiled an inventory of untested sexual assault kits statewide. Per HF2420 signed last March, we are providing your office with a list of kits identified by law enforcement agencies as not submitted due to suspect admission/conviction.

We also wanted to extend a courtesy invitation to the State Public Defender's office to a press conference tomorrow morning at 10 AM in Hoover on level A in conference room 7. Ms. Melohn-

Thanks for your recollections and perspective on the conversations which took place at about this time last year. However, it seems to me the best evidence of our agreement is the amendment language which was negotiated between our organizations, and which was subsequently adopted by both houses of the legislature and signed by the Governor. That language, of course, is now law.

I would respectfully propose the following path forward:

-The Office of the SPD again requests the information which is required to be provided under paragraph 3 of H.F. 2420. I may be misunderstanding your statement that this information was not collected. That would be very concerning, because that information was required to be collected under paragraph (2)(c)(5) of H.F. 2420. If I am understanding your email correctly and that information was not collected, I would propose that your office circle back to the respective agencies to gather the legally required information in cases which resulted in a conviction.

Kevin McCarthy

5/8/2017 3:10 PM

-The Office of the SPD again requests the information which is required to be provided under paragraph 6 of H.F. 2420. Under the bill, this information is not limited to cases which resulted in a conviction.

Thank you for your consideration.

Mr. Gregg,

Since you weren't present for any of the meetings leading up to this legislation being passed and since Kurt seemed to be happy with the information we provided, it appears there's a bit of a disconnect as to what the intent of the language was and what Kurt and his colleague (Amy?) said they were hoping to achieve. Since we based our submission to you all on what was discussed, it's important to have the context.

60 days-We explained to Kurt when we met, the entire survey was being conducted with federal grant dollars. Our grant required approval through the Federal Bureau of Justice Assistance (BJA) prior to releasing any of the data collected under the grant and we were up front we would not be able to provide any data until the end of the audit. We received this approval from BJA about a week and a half ago and provided this information to your agency as quickly as we were able, well within the 60 day timeframe and before the report had been made public.

The scope of this grant was to collect data to benefit victims who may not have received justice due to their SA kit not having been tested. SPD was hoping to piggyback on this data piece to explore whether or not offenders also received justice in their convictions, especially in the event someone had been wrongfully convicted. We didn't argue the language of the bill, because of our conversations with Kurt and Amy and our disclosures of what we could and couldn't provide and why. Kurt made very clear, you all were hoping to get information around kits that had not been tested, but where convictions were obtained. We explained we could not provide raw data from the survey, wherein information had been disclosed to us which would not have otherwise been made public record, except in the case of a conviction. There were also elements SPD wanted that we did not obtain, since the focus of the grant was not on offenders and our survey tool also required approval through BJA.

I say all of this to say, we have provided you with exactly what was agreed upon in our conversations with Kurt and Amy. The elements in paragraph 3 that were not provided, were because we did not collect them. We did, however, provide more information than was required in this same paragraph to try to uphold what we had discussed with Amy and Kurt. Paragraph 3 only required us to provide the defendant's name, case number and county of conviction. We didn't capture anything but the case number out of these elements, but tried to provide context for each so SPD could further investigate. We have met the terms of our requirements under this paragraph.

5/8/2017 3:10 PM

Paragraph 6 was a moot point given what we'd discussed with Kurt, as he'd indicated SPD wasn't interested in general information about kits, but rather just kits that hadn't been tested, where convictions were obtained.

It is time consuming to filter down 4,200+ rows of information, to give you only the date a kit was collected, the facility where it was collected and the case number as is required under paragraph 6, especially if it's not going to be helpful to SPD (which is what we were told). We are happy to provide you with this list, however, if you've since determined it is now somehow helpful to your work.

Please let me know how SPD would like to proceed given this context.

Don't confuse her with Martha Coakley, the previous attorney general, who botched both the 2014 race against Baker and the special election to fill Ted Kennedy's seat. Coakley is a much more natural politician and has a fascinating biography that includes captaining the Harvard women's basketball team. She's technically declined to enter the race, but

Plus, both the new attorney general, Jeff Sessions, and the new secretary of Health and Human Services, Tom Price, have long records of opposing legalization or decriminalization of marijuana. Without stretching one's imagination too far and with the growing use of cannabis by elders to control age-related conditions and diseases, any attempt by the federal government to remove or limit its use could be seen as withholding medication from sick and dying elders.

They set it for an administrative hearing in front of an Administrative Judge at a date to be determined. However, they moved the case to the Iowa Attorney General's office. Their representative at the Attorney General's office took the case over from that point. Cases are confidential until the minutes of the meeting are approved at the next BOEE meeting. In and Congress in Washington. Although President Donald Trump said during the campaign that he did not object to medical marijuana, so far he has reversed himself on almost every campaign promise. Plus, both the new attorney general,

Jeff Sessions, and the new secretary of Health and Human Services, Tom Price, have long records of opposing legalization or decriminalization of marijuana. Without stretching one's imagination too far and with the growing use of cannabis by elders to control age-related conditions and diseases, any attempt by the federal government to remove or limit its use could be seen as withholding medication from sick and dying elders.

Rep. Nunn,

My name is Kevin McCarthy and I used to serve in the legislature. My last year was the year before you were elected. Thank you for taking the lead this year on sentencing reform legislation. Last year, I worked with Cord Overton from the Governor's Office, Chairman Baltimore, Rep. Rizer and others from the Senate on part of last years successful reform package. This year I am registered to lobby as a limited scope lobbyist under House Rule 20 for the sole issue of sentencing reform. In that regard I have been working with FAMM (Maggie) and others. I know you are very busy. Do you have any time for a ten minute visit tomorrow at a place of your choosing in the Capitol?

Statement from Attorney General Tom Miller on AFSCME Lawsuit over Collective Bargaining Law

Miller to ask Executive Council to approve outside legal counsel to defend state

DES MOINES – Attorney General Tom Miller today announced that he will ask the Iowa Executive Council to seek outside legal counsel to defend the state against the lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of House File 291, the collective bargaining bill signed into law on Friday.

The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) Iowa Council 61 filed the lawsuit Monday in Polk County District Court.

The Executive Council, comprised of the governor, secretary of state, state treasurer, secretary of agriculture and state auditor, must approve the appointment of outside counsel to represent the state.

“As the new collective bargaining law has the potential to existentially threaten the viability of public sector unions—many of the very same organizations that have supported me in the past—I am recommending that the Executive Council seek outside legal representation to defend this lawsuit in order to avoid any questions about a potential conflict,” Miller said. “While the extraordinarily professional and skilled attorneys in my office have vigorously defended Governor Branstad and the legislature in past lawsuits involving AFSCME, I think it’s most prudent in this highly charged legal dispute to avoid any appearance of politics clouding our office’s legal representation and judgment.”

Trump Chose Gay Rights Over State Sanctioned Bigotry

jiveinthe415.com | 02/20/17 09:45

When Senator Jeff Sessions (R-AL) testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee during his confirmation hearing, he promised to protect the civil rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender (LGBT) Americans. I was watching the hearing and heard him say that with my own ears and I laughed. While I was surprised, I knew better than to give him credit for evolving and changing his mind on LGBT issues. Just a few hours after he was sworn in as Donald Trump's new Attorney General, he directed people in other states. To do this we used Google Trends to measure search traffic for hundreds of terms, names, and questions that relate to both current events and the new Donald Trump administration. To be clear, the list below does not represent things each state Googled the most since the election, it simply shows the searches each state Googled more frequently than the other 49 states. alt-right media or he was knowingly lying. In other words, Trump was Trump. As the plane headed to Charlotte, I sat with Roy Cooper, the attorney general of North Carolina and its Democratic candidate for governor, and David Simas, Obama's political director. Cooper, who had worked in the tobacco fields as a kid, now seemed as disconnected from the Trump voter in rural North Carolina as any pointy-headed quote machine in the CNN greenroom. "I'm as perplexed as the next person," he said. Simas

: “Sen. Jeff Sessions (R-Ala.), soon to be confirmed as President Donald Trump’s attorney general, may have helped invent this grief response to mass shootings. Eight days after 12 students and one teacher were killed at Colorado’s Columbine High School in 1999, Sessions joined a chorus of conservative cultural warriors who argued that the horrifying shooting didn’t require new gun laws, but a deeper examination of Hollywood. The senator didn’t stop there. In a speech on the Senate floor President-elect Donald Trump's pick to run the Environmental Protection Agency explained how he would make cooperating with the states a priority of the department during a Wednesday hearing on Capitol Hill. Scott Pruitt, the Oklahoma attorney general, stressed "cooperative federalism" would be his guiding philosophy in running EPA, meaning he wants the often-controversial agency to work with states. "Cooperative federalism is at the heart of many of the environmental statutes that have been

Governor Terry E. Branstad ★ Lt. Governor Kim Reynolds

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: Tuesday, Jan. 10, 2017
CONTACT: Governor's Office 515-281-5211

Gov. Branstad delivers the 2017 Condition of the State address to the Iowa General Assembly

(DES MOINES) – Gov. Terry E. Branstad today delivered the 2017 Condition of the State address, entitled “Smaller and Smarter Government,” to the Iowa General Assembly and the people of Iowa.

In his address, Gov. Branstad struck an enthusiastic tone that this new General Assembly brings new dynamics, new expectations and new opportunities to deliver positive results for Iowans. The governor spoke about the need for a responsible budget including submitting adjustments to the current fiscal year and the need for a biennial budget for fiscal year 2018 and 2019 that sets supplemental state aid for K-12 education in the first 30 days of the legislative session.

Gov. Branstad and Lt. Gov. Reynolds’ program initiatives for this upcoming session include a commitment to a smaller and smarter government, a focus on the jobs of today and tomorrow, obtaining a 21st century education for all students and making our Iowa roads safer.

VIEW THE BUDGET IN BRIEF HERE INCLUDING THE FISCAL YEAR 2017 BUDGET ADJUSTMENTS \(PAGE 73 & 74\)

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE BUDGET ADJUSTMENTS:

- Adjustments are required by law.
- Does not include across-the-board cuts.

- Does not reduce funding for supplemental state aid for K through 12 education.
- Does not reduce property tax credits.
- Modernized Medicaid resulting in over $110 million in savings for Iowa taxpayers.

VIEW THE FULL FISCAL YEAR 2018 AND 2019 BUDGET HERE

HIGHLIGHTS:

- The governor and Lt. governor's 2-year budget is again balanced and stable.
- The budget fits within five-year budget projections.
- Based on the principles laid out by the Iowa Taxpayers Association.
- Prioritizes education, health care, economic development and public safety.
- Gives schools the predictability and stability they need with an increase of over $78.8 million in supplemental state aid in fiscal year 2018 and includes an additional $63.5 million for fiscal year 2019.
- Modernized Medicaid resulting in $232 million in savings for Iowa taxpayers.
- Redirects family planning money to organizations that focus on providing health care for women and eliminates taxpayer funding for organizations that perform abortions.

SMALLER AND SMARTER GOVERNMENT:

HIGHLIGHTS:

- Gov. Branstad & Lt. Gov. Reynolds are calling for replacing the current antiquated collective bargaining system for public employees.
  - Move to one comprehensive statewide health care contract for public employees.
  - This will provide quality health care to public employees at a significantly lower cost and give local governments more flexibility to provide better wages and meet other needs.
  - Rewards public employees for taking ownership of their own health by conducting health risk assessments and taking other actions that improve their own health.
- Work with the General Assembly to address unnecessary barriers that prevent competition and raise costs through a series of regulatory and licensing reforms.

FOCUSING ON THE JOBS OF TODAY AND TOMORROW:

HIGHLIGHTS:

- Modernizing water quality infrastructure that will create jobs in rural Iowa and promote cleaner water.
  - Calling on discussions to begin with the House-passed water quality bill from last session which provided for a long-term, dedicated source of revenue for implementation of projects outlined in the Nutrient Reduction Strategy.
- Prioritizes initiatives that will grow the state's talent pipeline including STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering & Math), Future Ready Iowa, registered apprenticeships and work-based learning for Iowa students.

21st CENTURY EDUCATION:

HIGHLIGHTS:

- Legislation encouraging all elementary, middle and high school students to have access to high-quality computer science programs by 2019. We want them to:
  - Offer at least one high-quality computer science course in every high school;
  - Provide exploratory computer science curriculum in every middle school and;
  - Include an introduction to computer science basics in every elementary school.
- Establish high-quality computer science standards.
- Create a computer science professional development incentive fund to train teachers.
- Convene an advisory group to recommend how to count computer science as a math credit toward high school graduation.

SAFER IOWA ROADS:

HIGHLIGHTS:

- Traffic fatalities spiked from 315 in 2015, to 402 in 2016.
- Gov. Branstad & Lt. Gov. Reynolds believe this is unacceptable.
- They are calling for legislation that drastically reduces the amount of distracted and impaired drivers on Iowa roads.
  - Restrict the use of mobile devices while driving.
- Gov. Branstad & Lt. Gov. Reynolds are also calling on the legislature to examine and implement strategies from the Department of Public Safety's task force that will make Iowa's roads safer.

Gov. Branstad's 2017 Condition of the State Address, as prepared for delivery, is as follows:

Madam Lieutenant Governor

Mr. President

Madam Speaker

Legislative leaders, legislators, justices and judges, elected officials, distinguished guests, family, friends and fellow Iowans.

I'm honored and humbled to once again address a joint session of the General Assembly delivering the Condition of the State for the final time as your governor.

For 22 years, I have addressed this body as governor and today I want to especially welcome the 22 new legislators with us—from both sides of the aisle—who were elected in November.

Your constituents sent you to work hard, to work for them, and help make Iowa a better place.

I hope you are filled with the same sense of excitement and eagerness that I had when I first served in the Legislature in 1973.

Lt. Gov. Reynolds and I look forward to working with each of you and listening to your ideas on how to make our state an even better place for families to live, work and grow.

In that spirit, I am today extending an invitation to each legislator to meet with me personally during this legislative session.

We also gather again with shared sadness, returning to do our work without our friend, Sen. Joe Seng of Davenport.

Joe was a devout Catholic and a true statesman.

We enjoyed his contagious and positive personality and working with him.

As I look back on my years of public service, I am thankful for those Iowans who have stepped forward to serve their fellow citizens.

In particular, please join me in applauding those Iowans who have helped make our state and nation safer by serving in the military, law enforcement or as first responders.

Since taking office in 2011, we have made the necessary changes to strengthen our economy and improve the quality of life across our state.

We've made tough decisions to give Iowans a smaller and smarter government.

We have stayed the course with an unwavering commitment to create jobs, increase family incomes, reduce the size of government, and give Iowa students a globally competitive education.

We have provided significant tax relief for Iowans the past five years, especially for commercial property taxpayers.

And last month, Lt. Gov. Reynolds and leaders from the Economic Development Authority and Department of Transportation unveiled Iowa's most comprehensive Energy Plan.

The plan was developed after collaboration with the private sector, public sector, educators, non-profits and utilities.

Iowa is already a leader in low-cost and renewable energy.

The comprehensive new energy plan will help build on our past energy successes and reaffirms our commitment to maintaining Iowa's energy leadership in the future.

I'm proud that we have made government smaller and smarter.

We've seen unemployment in our state drop from 6.2 percent to 3.8 percent.

The state has helped attract more than 13 and a half billion in private-sector capital investment, which has translated into great-paying jobs across Iowa.

And more Iowans have been employed these past few years than at any other period in our state's history.

We have also made the tough decisions to ensure government lives within its means like Iowa families must do.

We have accomplished this with a relentless focus on fiscal discipline, demanding budget predictability, fully restoring Iowa's reserve accounts and reducing the state's debt liability.

Together we have made progress toward our goal of restoring Iowa's schools to best in the nation through a series of landmark reforms and innovative policies.

To improve Iowa's education standing, we needed to make sure our hardworking teachers had all the tools necessary to succeed given higher expectations for all students.

So, we created a new Teacher Leadership System that better utilizes the expertise of top teachers to improve education, instruction and foster greater collaboration.

I'm proud to say that every public school in Iowa today is participating in our Teacher Leadership System.

To ensure that our children are prepared for a 21st century economy we advanced a nationally recognized STEM initiative that gives students the confidence and skills for rewarding careers.

The STEM initiative is led by Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds and Kemin Industries President & CEO Dr. Chris Nelson and has seen outstanding growth and success.

Sustaining these measures over time is critical to get the right results for our students and our state.

The ability of Iowans to overcome challenges bolsters my optimism for our state's future.

When faced with challenges, Iowans consistently seek opportunities.

Some of the challenges we have overcome--like the Farm Crisis of the 1980s--tore at the very fabric of our communities.

In the 1980s, Bloomfield, Ia.--a community in Davis County in southeast Iowa--struggled like many communities across the state.

An uninsured bank in Bloomfield closed in 1983 and caused great losses for area families and businesses.

And area farmers were straddled with debt and limited market opportunities for their crops.

However, through a persistent focus on economic diversification and an entrepreneurial spirit to rebuild its community, Bloomfield now has new manufacturers that are growing alongside innovative startups.

And, to continue their effort to stay on the cutting edge community leaders are instituting aggressive strategies to become Iowa's first energy independent community by 2030.

I visited Bloomfield last year and was impressed with the Main Street revitalization, a new hardware store and the M3 Fabrication manufacturing plant.

And Woodbine, Ia., is another example of a community that took its future into its own hands.

The community showed how an integrated approach to community revitalization that focuses on historic preservation and community sustainability can redefine a struggling, small rural community.

Woodbine also had a bank closure in the 1980s, but the community turned its challenges into future growth and diversification.

Lt. Gov. Reynolds and I visited Woodbine and were impressed with the success of their Main Street program.

And Waterloo, Ia., after experiencing economic challenges throughout the previous three decades embraced the challenge of reshaping its industrial heritage to succeed in modern times.

Cedar Valley Tech Works has made Waterloo a nationally recognized leader for manufacturing innovation.

And John Deere continues to be a leading manufacturer and innovator in Waterloo.

In the balcony, we have leaders from Bloomfield, Woodbine and Waterloo.

Please join me in congratulating their accomplishments and supporting their future success.

Iowa's industries are increasingly high tech, including advanced manufacturing.

In total, Iowa has over 6,100 manufacturers that contribute more than $31 billion to Iowa's economy and employ over 200,000 Iowans.

Over the next year, the Iowa Economic Development Authority will work with Iowa's manufacturers to advance a "Year of Manufacturing" in Iowa to help grow this important part of the Iowa economy.

We should also be proud that Iowa remains an agricultural powerhouse that feeds and fuels the world thanks to the hard work and innovation of Iowa's farmers and agricultural producers.

We just set an all-time record for ethanol production, set a new record for biodiesel production by an additional 55 million gallons and lead the nation in percentage of electricity generated by wind.

We now generate over 35 percent of our electricity from wind and expect this number to exceed 40 percent

Over the past 30 years, we've significantly added value to our agricultural commodities.

We've also diversified the Iowa economy by expanding exports and supporting growth in biofuels, wind energy, data centers, fertilizer plants, bio-renewable chemicals, advanced manufacturing, insurance and financial services.

These newer industries employ hundreds of thousands of Iowans in rewarding careers.

And while I am pleased with this progress and optimistic about Iowa's future, I believe there is more work to be done.

We must seize the opportunities before us.

This new General Assembly brings new dynamics, new expectations and new opportunities to deliver positive results for Iowans.

Our state is in an admirable position.

Many states are strapped with crushing debt, poor credit ratings and a bleak economic outlook.

But Iowa is a shining example of what hard work and smart, tough choices can do for growing businesses and nurturing families.

While the December Revenue Estimate is lower than previous projections the estimate still shows a modest increase in state revenues.

Although we have faced a headwind out of Washington, D.C., that is stifling our agricultural economy, we still have positive state revenue growth.

But we must proceed with caution and not repeat the mistakes of the past.

With that prudence in mind, I present my proposed adjustments to the current fiscal year budget to you today.

These adjustments are required by law.

My proposal does not include across-the-board cuts, does not reduce funding for K through 12 education, does not reduce property tax credits and does not include furloughs for state employees.

The budget reductions I am recommending for this fiscal year are difficult.

But they maintain funding for our mutual priorities.

I am committed to working with legislative leaders to implement these adjustments.

For the coming biennium, I am presenting a complete two-year budget that is balanced each year and meets our five-year projections for a sustainable future.

This budget is based on the principles laid out by the Iowa Taxpayers Association.

It prioritizes education, health care, economic development and public safety.

And it redirects family planning money to organizations that focus on providing health care for women and eliminates taxpayer funding for organizations that perform abortions.

On my first trip to China in 1984, I learned that the Chinese word for danger and opportunity is one in the same.

Today, America and Iowa exist in a challenging world.

But we must seize the opportunity to make it a better place.

In 2010, Lt. Gov. Reynolds and I promised to reduce the size and scope of government.

I'm proud to report that we have a smaller, smarter government with a steady focus on improving services for our citizens in a more timely and efficient manner.

Yet, while the size of government is smaller, benefits for public employees at the state and local level have increased.

Unfortunately, the cost of these benefits has grown dramatically because of our antiquated collective bargaining system that has led to over 500 health-care plans, many of which are inefficient and way too costly for public employees and Iowa taxpayers.

Under our present system, a few adverse health outcomes will destroy the budget of a city, county or school district.

By replacing this system with one comprehensive statewide health-care contract we can spread the risk and dramatically reduce costs.

Using a uniform health-care benefit system similar to the IPERS program for retirement we can provide quality health care at a significantly lower cost and give local governments more flexibility to provide better wages and meet other needs.

The statewide health-care contract also needs to reward employees who take ownership of their own health by conducting health risk assessments and taking actions to improve their own health.

We have made a commitment to examine every dollar of revenue and expenditure in order to maximize efficiency and respect hardworking taxpayers.

We are committed to a smaller, smarter government that seeks innovative ways to provide services rather than blind adherence to the way things have always been done.

I'm asking the General Assembly to take a comprehensive review of all of our state's boards and commissions to address unnecessary barriers that prevent competition and raise costs.

I encourage you to ask the tough questions that challenge the status quo.

In Iowa, 90 percent of our general fund budget is spent on three items; K through 12 education, Medicaid and employee wages and benefits.

The state has significantly increased funding for education since 2011, amounting to over 654 million additional dollars.

Education and job training are the foundation for our future economic growth.

Growing our state's talent pipeline needs to be a top priority.

Even with our modest revenue growth my recommendation includes an increase of $73 million for K-12 education for fiscal year 2018 and an additional $61 million for fiscal year 2019 which equates to roughly 2 percent growth each year.

So this year, let's show Iowans we can make these decisions early and meet the legal requirements of setting supplemental state aid for fiscal year 2018 and fiscal year 2019 in the first 30 days.

The second largest driver of our state budget is health and human services spending.

Together, we have transformed our mental health system to a community-based model, we obtained a federal waiver for our Iowa Health and Wellness Plan which has reduced charity care for hospitals and, like 39 other states, we have modernized our Medicaid program.

As a result, we have created a new system where more Iowans have access to mental health services closer to home than ever before; more Iowans are covered with health insurance than ever before; and more than 80 new value-added services are now being offered under our modernized Medicaid program.

We've also replaced the old Medicaid system with a coordinated team of health-care professionals to ensure patients see the right provider at the right time.

As a result of these reforms and innovation, we have improved the focus on health outcomes and saved the taxpayers $110 million.

Our increase in education funding last year was made possible because of our modernized Medicaid efforts.

Without these vital reforms, the budget choices before us today would be twice as hard.

In order to grow Iowa, we must also look at policies and reforms that will continue growing family incomes.

One way to do this is to close the skills gap which in many ways is the biggest challenge our state faces over the next decade.

That is why Lt. Governor Reynolds and I set the Future Ready Iowa goal that 70 percent of Iowans in the workforce should have education or training beyond high school by 2025.

Today, less than half of our workforce does.

Accomplishing this ambitious goal will create unprecedented opportunities for Iowans and better position our state to compete in an increasingly knowledge-based, digital economy.

That is why we established the Future Ready Iowa Alliance, co-chaired by Lt. Governor Reynolds and Dan Houston of Principal, which will make recommendations by Oct. 31, 2017, to assure more Iowans have the careers they deserve and employers can hire the skilled workers they need to grow and innovate.

Even with a tight budget, we should continue to prioritize initiatives that will grow the state's talent pipeline like the STEM initiative, registered apprenticeships and work-based learning for Iowa's students.

Please help me recognize the students here with us today from Jackson Elementary School in Des Moines, Bondurant-Farrar Middle School and Waukee High School, which has one of the premier work-based learning programs in our state.

The students in the gallery represent children across Iowa who are counting on all of us to modernize schools for the 21st century.

That's why Lt. Governor Reynolds and I are launching a comprehensive computer science initiative.

We are encouraging every high school to offer at least one high-quality computer science course, every middle school to provide exploratory computer science, and every elementary school to include an introduction to computer science.

All students need to learn how computers operate because it is fundamental to life and work today.

Computer science will provide students a chance to join one of the fastest-growing and best-paying fields.

No student should miss out on this opportunity because of where they live.

This is another step to better align education and training with essential workforce needs.

We all care deeply for the safety of our families, our friends, and our neighbors.

However, a troubling trend has begun to emerge that threatens Iowans' safety on our roads.

Traffic deaths went from 315 in 2015 to 400 in 2016.

This is unacceptable.

Earlier this year, I called on the Department of Public Safety and the Governor's Traffic Safety Bureau to lead a working group to study this disturbing trend.

The group, with the support of key stakeholders, including law enforcement, made recommendations worth your consideration.

I am asking you to take a hard look at these recommendations and evaluate which can be put into law to make our roads safer.

Unfortunately, too many innocent bicyclists, motorcyclists, pedestrians and passengers have lost their lives on our roads.

Last year, I received a handwritten note from Christine and Darrel Harken, parents of Grace Harken, who live near Riceville.

They wrote "our daughter Gracie's life was so sadly ended July 29, 2015, by someone who was driving and texting."

Grace was biking safely and lawfully during a morning bike ride, when a driver who was texting struck and killed her.

They went on to write, "Grace would have forgiven the driver and moved forward.

"That is what we have chosen to do. But we miss her so."

Grace Harken's life was tragically ended way too early.

Modern technologies should come with new responsibilities.

I ask that all Iowans join the Iowa law-enforcement community, first responders, the League of Cities, all the major cell-phone carriers, the insurance industry, and the medical community in demanding real change in the laws for distracted and impaired drivers.

Last year, I called on the Legislature to send me a water-quality improvement bill.

I was pleased to see bipartisan progress made on this front with the House passing House File 2541 last session.

This bill was approved by the Agriculture, Ways and Means and Appropriations Committees and passed the House with 65 votes.

This bill provided for a long-term, dedicated and growing source of revenue to help implement projects to improve habitat and water quality directed by the Iowa Nutrient Reduction Strategy.

The bill also provided funding for community conservation practices and improvements to wastewater and drinking water facilities.

By leading on this issue, together we have the opportunity to modernize Iowa's agricultural infrastructure, create jobs in rural Iowa and promote collaboration between urban and rural communities.

I believe our discussions should begin with the House-passed bill from last session.

I hope we can work together to perfect and improve the legislation that will provide a long-term, dedicated and growing source of revenue for water-quality improvements.

I've been so blessed to serve as your governor, leading the state I love, for 22 years.

I am confident Iowa will continue to move forward because Iowans care deeply about their neighbors, their communities and creating an even better future.

And I'm extremely thankful for perhaps the most patient person in the state -- my wife, Chris -- as she has also served Iowa as first lady with grace.

She has welcomed Iowans and visitors from around the world to Terrace Hill and she has volunteered to help in many ways, including reading with Jackson Elementary students.

To Chris and my entire family, thank you for your sacrifice during my time in public service.

I am also thankful for the friendships we have made in all 99 counties -- friendships that we will always cherish.

And I am grateful for the prayers from Iowans who have encouraged me along the way.

There is no better job in the world than being the governor of the state that you love.

But sometimes we are called to serve in ways we had never imagined.

As I approach the U.S. Senate confirmation process my main priority is to continue serving the people of Iowa with the same energy and passion that I have brought to this office each and every day.

Thank you.

God Bless you and all the people of Iowa.

WASHINGTON — Throughout his four years in the Senate, Cory Booker has remained relatively uncontroversial. On Wednesday, that will change when the New Jersey Democrat testifies against the nomination of Sen. Jeff Sessions to be attorney general. It's an unprecedented move — marking the first time in Senate history that a sitting senator will testify in a confirmation hearing against another senator for a Cabinet position. Subject: Press Conf/HT proclamation

Just wanted you to know it went well. Gov. Branstad made a short mention about the collaborative efforts of our office and DPS on this initiative. Dr. George Belitsos did speak to the influx of federal funding granted out to HT service providers around the state. No one from our office spoke formally, but Rhonda, Celine and I all attended the press conference and proclamation signing. On invitation, Celine also attended the Board Meeting of the Network Against Human Trafficking IA Chapter directly following the proclamation signing over at the Capitol.

After the proclamation, I was able to speak to Commissioner Ryan (her schedule freed up and she was able to attend after all) and we confirmed our meeting on the 13th. She told me she's concerned about the lack of funding for their analyst position. I told her we'd be happy to discuss it in our meeting with her.

Overall, everything went well this morning. Please let me know if you have any questions.

Five Chilling Ways Senator Jeff Sessions Could Attack Immigr...
 huffingtonpost.com | 01/06/17 16:04
 The nomination of Senator Jeff Sessions (R-AL) to be U.S. Attorney General is a clear and ominous sign that President-elect Donald Trump fully intends to make good on his call for mass deportation, registration of Muslims and radical restrictions on legal immigration. Since he entered the U.S. Senate twenty years ago, Jeff Sessions has made his mark as one of the most vehemently nativist, anti-immigrant legislators in American history. Rather than join colleagues who've

Holiday greetings. Today I had a conversation with the governor's press secretary and he proposed that the only speakers at the press conference on January 9th at 9 a.m. be the governor, lieutenant governor, and myself. After the press conference at 9:30, it is planned that Roxanne Ryan and someone representing the Attorney General's office be identified and present to answer questions from the media. Please let me know if you should be identified or if it is someone else. I am copying this email to Roxanne to also inform her of all of this.

FYI at 9:45 p.m. we will reconvene in the governor's formal office for the proclamation signing. It would be great if you and Roxanne could be present for the Proclamation signing.

You were going to look at any national theme for this year's observance of January as anti Human Trafficking month. Were you able to locate any national theme or information?

Finally, the Network board will meet at approximately 10:15 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. following the proclamation signing. We would really appreciate it if you and Roxanne could be in attendance for this face to face board meeting. Since we will be right there at the state capitol building it would be very helpful to get a progress report from both the Attorney General's office and DPS. Please let me know.

Greetings. Thanks for the phone call and clarification regarding the governors January 9th 9 a.m. anti human trafficking press conference. I will be writing up proposed comments for the governor, lieutenant governor, and myself. We will be the only speakers during the press conference. I will send you the proposed comments the week before the press conference in order for you to review and place and final form.

At the end of the press conference, other allies in the fight against human trafficking will be available to answer questions from the press, for example Commissioner Roxanne Ryan, Celine Villongco from the Attorney General's office, and providers of services for trafficking victims.

At 9:45 a.m. we will reconvene in the governor's formal office for the signing of the proclamation. At that time we will also be recognizing several Iowans for their work to combat human trafficking.

Greetings. Thanks for the phone call and clarification regarding the governors January 9th 9 a.m. anti human trafficking press conference. I will be writing up proposed comments for the governor, lieutenant governor, and myself. We will be the only speakers during the press conference. I will send you the proposed comments the week before the press conference in order for you to review and place and final form.

At the end of the press conference, other allies in the fight against human trafficking will be available to answer questions from the press, for example Commissioner Roxanne Ryan, Celine Villongco from the Attorney General's office, and providers of services for trafficking victims.

At 9:45 a.m. we will reconvene in the governor's formal office for the signing of the proclamation. At that time we will also be recognizing several Iowans for their work to combate human trafficking.

Janelle,

Handle this the way you feel best. Either you...or Celene on our behalf. Given that we are not a formal part of the program it is whatever you think is best.

Thanks,

Today I had a conversation with the governor's press secretary and he proposed that the only speakers at the press conference on January 9th at 9 a.m. be the governor, lieutenant governor, and myself. questions from the media. Please let me know if you should be identified or if it is someone else. I am copying this email to Roxanne to also inform her of all of this.

FYI at 9:45 p.m. we will reconvene in the governor's formal office for the proclamation signing. It would be great if you and Roxanne could be present for the Proclamation signing.

You were going to look at any national theme for this year's observance of January as anti Human Trafficking month. Were you able to locate any national theme or information?

Finally, the Network board will meet at approximately 10:15 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. following the proclamation signing. We would really appreciate it if you and Roxanne could be in attendance for this face to face board meeting. Since we will be right there at the state capitol building it would be very helpful to get a progress report from both the Attorney General's office and DPS. Please let me know.

I've been asked to schedule a time for the Attorney General and the director of Corrections to meet with the Governor to discuss additional justice reform for the upcoming legislative session.

That being said, the AG is out a bunch. He has some availability December 2nd, 5th and 6th (leaving on the 6th mid afternoon for a flight); December 15th and the week of December 19th.

Are you able to make anything work with the Governor's schedule?

Subject: David Dawson -- Application for District Court Judge, Judicial District 3B

I am writing to let you know that I applied this week for a District Court Judge vacancy in Judicial District 3B. I believe that I had a good working relationship with each of you over my 4 years in the Iowa House and that you would have the ability to comment on my qualifications to serve as a trial judge.

I am asking if you may be willing to contact members of the Judicial Nominating Commission that you may know or contact the Governor to indicate your support for my nomination and eventual appointment to serve as a trial judge.

If you are unable to do so, I understand. If you would like to discuss this matter with me, please call me. My cell phone is: (712) 898-5804.

Thank you for considering this matter.

The following is the information about the 8 persons who have applied and the 11 members of the Judicial Nominating Commission for Judicial District 3B in Northwest Iowa:

PRESS RELEASE

Kevin McCarthy

5/8/2017 3:11 PM

The 3B Judicial Nominating Commission has received eight applications for the district judge position that exists as a result of the retirement of District Judge Mary Jane Sokolovske. The attorneys applying to fill the judicial vacancy include:

Tod Deck: Judicial Magistrate and Deck Law, LLP, Sioux City, Iowa
David Dawson: Assistant County Attorney-Woodbury County, Sioux City, Iowa
Zachary Hindman: Mayne, Arneson, Hindman, Hisey & Daane, Sioux City, Iowa
Michael Jacobsma: Jacobsma & Clabaugh PLC, Orange City, Iowa
Roseanne Lienhard: Second Opinion Legal Center and Mediation Services, Hinton, Iowa
Billy Oyadare: Attorney – State Public Defender’s Office, Sioux City, Iowa
Darin Raymond: Plymouth County Attorney, LeMars, Iowa
Julie Schumacher: District Associate Judge, Schleswig, Iowa

Each applicant will be interviewed on December 9th, 2016 at the Woodbury County Courthouse in Sioux City, Iowa.

Applicants must be members of the bar of Iowa, residents of the Judicial District 3B, and of such age that they will be able to serve an initial and one regular term of office before reaching the age of seventy-two years.

Judicial District 3B consists of Crawford, Ida, Monona, Plymouth, Sioux and Woodbury counties.

The Commission will submit the names of two nominees to Governor Branstad. Governor Branstad will then appoint one of the nominees to be a district judge. The judge selected will ultimately stand for retention election.

The members of the 3B Nominating Commission include:

Given that President-elect Donald J. Trump has nominated Senator Jeff Sessions to be Attorney General and will likely be confirmed once Trump takes office after January 20, 2017; Sessions will have to resign as Senator as soon as he becomes Attorney General. This means as Governor you will have the duty of nominating an interim replacement until a special election can take place(in this case 2018 midterm elections), I recommend Congressman Mo Brooks. Why you might ask? For one, since Mo Brooks

Miller Statement on Branstad Nomination as Ambassador to China

Miller: "I know he'll serve the U.S. well and will carry his deep passion for our state and our nation to China."

DES MOINES – Attorney General Tom Miller today released the following statement regarding the announcement by President-Elect Donald Trump's transition team that Governor Terry Branstad will be nominated to serve as U.S. ambassador to China:

"I congratulate Governor Branstad for the tremendous honor of being asked to represent our nation's interests in China. I know he'll serve the U.S. well and will carry his deep passion for our state and our nation to China. I am confident the Governor will work very hard on trade partnerships, and that's good for Iowa farmers and our state's economy."

Subject: David Dawson -- Application for District Court Judge, Judicial District 3B

I am writing to let you know that I applied this week for a District Court Judge vacancy in Judicial District 3B. I believe that I had a good working relationship with each of you over my 4 years in the Iowa House and that you would have the ability to comment on my qualifications to serve as a trial judge.

I am asking if you may be willing to contact members of the Judicial Nominating Commission that you may know or contact the Governor to indicate your support for my nomination and eventual appointment to serve as a trial judge.

If you are unable to do so, I understand. If you would like to discuss this matter with me, please call me. My cell phone is: (712) 898-5804.

Thank you for considering this matter.

Applicants must be members of the bar of Iowa, residents of the Judicial District 3B, and of such age that they will be able to serve an initial and one regular term of office before reaching the age of seventy-two years.

Judicial District 3B consists of Crawford, Ida, Monona, Plymouth, Sioux and Woodbury counties.

The Commission will submit the names of two nominees to Governor Branstad. Governor Branstad will then appoint one of the nominees to be a district judge. The judge selected will ultimately stand for retention election.

The members of the 3B Nominating Commission include:

Iowa Department of Corrections Director Jerry Bartruff announces budget adjustment plans

(DES MOINES) – Iowa Department of Corrections (DOC) Director Jerry Bartruff today announced his plan for adjusting the agency’s FY2017 budget by $5.5 million as required by law.

Director Bartruff commented on these adjustments by stating: “The Department of Corrections understands the fiscally challenging position that the state is in, and thanks the Governor, Lt. Governor, and legislature for enacting budget adjustments that allow the Department to strategically streamline services. The department has been studying the best way to implement these adjustments for weeks. We’ve worked collaboratively with all institutions and community based corrections districts to identify the most strategic way to implement these changes. The actions that we are taking meet the high expectation of safety in our facilities, while also ensuring that the Department does not have to close any of our institutions. While change is rarely easy, the Department of Corrections will make the necessary reallocation of resources to ensure the highest level of safety for the public, the staff, and the offenders under our supervision.”

Highlights from the Budget Adjustments:

To strategically implement the required adjustments within the Department, the DOC will suspend services in the following units:

- Luster Heights Camp (Harper’s Ferry)
- Lodge Unit (Clarinda)
- John Bennett Unit (Fort Madison)
- Residential Treatment Services (Sheldon; community based corrections)

In total, these adjustments in services comply with Senate File 130, result in an estimated reduction in staff positions of three percent, and ensure public safety remains the highest priority.

The Department has begun to notify staff across the state that may be impacted by the consolidations, and many will have the opportunity to work in other units or institutions within the Department.

Lieutenant Governor to Serve as Governor, But Lacks Authority to Appoint Lieutenant, Attorney General Opinion Concludes

Formal opinion responds to request by state senator as Governor Branstad prepares to resign for ambassadorship

DES MOINES – Attorney General Tom Miller Monday issued a formal legal opinion stating that if a governor resigns, the lieutenant governor becomes governor for all intents and purposes, but does not have legal authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Sen. David Johnson, I-Ocheyedan, requested the opinion following Governor Terry Branstad’s announcement that, if confirmed by the U.S. Senate, he will serve as U.S. ambassador to China.

The 23-page opinion, following extensive legal and historical research, concludes, “...the powers and duties of the office of Governor fall upon the lieutenant governor.” The conclusion is based on an Iowa Constitution provision addressing a governor’s resignation, which states, “...the powers and duties of the office...shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.” Under that provision, the opinion adds, “The lieutenant governor takes on this authority because she is lieutenant governor.”

Significantly, according to Miller, Article IV, section 1 provides that “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.”

While the “the lieutenant governor becomes governor and has the title of Governor,” the opinion further adds that that person does not have constitutional authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor. “In other words, upon a governor’s resignation, the lieutenant governor will hold both the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. There is no vacancy to be filled,” according to the opinion.

“This opinion conveys that, in a sense, the two offices merge,” Miller said. “This is consistent with numerous cases in other states that addressed this question,” Miller added. “It is also consistent with a close reading of the Iowa governor’s succession provision—Article IV, section 19 of the Iowa Constitution, which establishes a precise order of gubernatorial succession without providing for the appointment of a lieutenant governor.”

Miller's opinion notes that in all four previous instances when an Iowa governor resigned or died while in office, the lieutenant governor was always considered governor, but never appointed or named a new lieutenant governor. The opinion also concludes, "The framers intended that those in the gubernatorial line of succession be elected."

At the federal level, prior to Congress amending the U.S. Constitution in 1967 to establish that the vice president becomes president and grants the president authority to appoint a new vice president with Congressional approval, no vice president who assumed the powers and duties of a president who died while in office appointed a new vice president.

The formal opinion departs from a public statement Miller's office issued in December, following an informal legal review in response to media inquiries, which stated the office concurred with "Governor Branstad's conclusion that...in her capacity as Governor, Governor Reynolds will have the authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor."

The December statement was based, in part, on an Iowa Code section addressing vacancies of office holders. Miller's formal opinion concludes this statute does not apply when a governor resigns and the powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

About Attorney General Opinions

A formal attorney general opinion addresses legal questions relating to a public official's duties by interpreting laws and offering legal guidance.

While not a legal precedent, a formal attorney general opinion is similar to one and stands until a court or later opinion overrules it or new legislation is enacted to change a statute in question. Opinions are not legally binding, but courts generally give them careful consideration and deference.

Statement from Attorney General Tom Miller on AFSCME Lawsuit over Collective Bargaining Law

Miller to ask Executive Council to approve outside legal counsel to defend state

DES MOINES – Attorney General Tom Miller today announced that he will ask the Iowa Executive Council to seek outside legal counsel to defend the state against the lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of House File 291, the collective bargaining bill signed into law on Friday.

The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) Iowa Council 61 filed the lawsuit Monday in Polk County District Court.

The Executive Council, comprised of the governor, secretary of state, state treasurer, secretary of agriculture and state auditor, must approve the appointment of outside counsel to represent the state.

“As the new collective bargaining law has the potential to existentially threaten the viability of public sector unions—many of the very same organizations that have supported me in the past—I am recommending that the Executive Council seek outside legal representation to defend this lawsuit in order to avoid any questions about a potential conflict,” Miller said. “While the extraordinarily professional and skilled attorneys in my office have vigorously defended Governor Branstad and the legislature in past lawsuits involving AFSCME, I think it’s most prudent in this highly charged legal dispute to avoid any appearance of politics clouding our office’s legal representation and judgment.”

Miller Statement on Branstad Nomination as Ambassador to China

Miller: "I know he'll serve the U.S. well and will carry his deep passion for our state and our nation to China."

DES MOINES – Attorney General Tom Miller today released the following statement regarding the announcement by President-Elect Donald Trump's transition team that Governor Terry Branstad will be nominated to serve as U.S. ambassador to China:

"I congratulate Governor Branstad for the tremendous honor of being asked to represent our nation's interests in China. I know he'll serve the U.S. well and will carry his deep passion for our state and our nation to China. I am confident the Governor will work very hard on trade partnerships, and that's good for Iowa farmers and our state's economy."

sense that I am just spinning my wheels trying to keep juggling all the balls in the air. PRESSURE.

I have learned that April, coincidentally, is Stress Awareness Month. Recognized since 1992, each April, health care professionals and health promotion experts across the country join forces to increase public awareness about both the causes and cures for our modern stress epidemic. We also see various tornado and severe weather drills at this time each spring, to try to prepare us for the possibility of a natural disaster. But what prepares us to deal with the PRESSURE of the practice of law?

While I'm sure each occupation has its stressors, we know all too well the mounting pressure we face in our practice, whether private practice, in house, government, or elsewhere. The demand for faster, less costly legal advice, coupled with the blessing and curse of technology that allows us to be connected and accessible 24/7 sends thousands of lawyers each year into a tailspin of stress and pressure. Add in family, health, community stressors and even the uncertainty of our national security and changes in politics and government-it's a recipe for disaster that no April tornado drill or disaster preparedness training can touch.

It is no surprise to scan the Iowa Supreme Court's disciplinary decisions and find that many lawyers who find themselves in front of the Grievance Commission have succumbed to the pressure and sought solace in controlled substances, only deepening the downward spiral. The ABA reports that more than 50% of all disciplinary cases involve impaired lawyers. Lawyers abuse alcohol at a 50-80% higher rate than the general population.

One of the many benefits of belonging to the

Polk County Bar Association is access to discounted tickets on top-quality Broadway productions at the Des Moines Civic Center. Each year, we purchase season tickets - and we will also buy group tickets if there are enough people interested for a particular show - and we pass the savings on to you!

Take a look at the shows listed below. If you are interested in attending, just email Sonja Diener and let her know which shows and how many tickets for each show you would like. You don't have to buy tickets for every show - you can pick and choose. This is not an obligation to buy. It just gives us an idea of how many group tickets, in addition to the season's tickets, we will need to buy. If you have questions, just call our office at (515) 697-7880.

Willis Broadway series tickets

All shows are at 7:30 p.m. on a Thursday. $73.50 each:

Golf with us for a good cause

It's time to dust off those golf clubs and join us for the PCBA's annual Bench and Bar Golf Outing to benefit the Volunteer Lawyers Project. This year's event will be held on Friday, June 9, at the Waveland Golf Course in Des Moines. Registration begins at noon with a shotgun start at 1 p.m.

If you register before May 6, you can take advantage of our early bird special and pay only $100 per person, which includes green fees, cart, and dinner following golf. You can also order a box lunch for $10.

Click here for details and to download the registration form.

Why not become a golf sponsor?

This year, the PCBA Volunteer Lawyers Project is offering two sponsorship levels for our Bench & Bar Golf Tournament. The Gold level is an exclusive hole sponsorship which includes one large sign at each hole and one Foursome as part of the package. The cost is $1,000. Only 18 Gold sponsorships are available. The Silver level sponsorship is $500 and includes signage on display at the tournament starting box.

Notice of Magistrate vacancies

There are nine magistrate vacancies in judicial election district 5-C (Polk County) as a result of the July 31, 2017 expiration of the terms of office of the six current magistrates and the allocation of three additional positions to Polk County. The term of office of a magistrate is four years. The terms of office of the magistrates appointed to fill these vacancies will begin on August 1, 2017 and expire on July 31, 2021. Appointments to fill these vacancies will be made on or before June 1, 2017. The deadline for submitting applications is Tuesday, May 2, at 4 p.m. Click here for complete details.

See what you've missed

The PCBA monthly luncheons are a great way to network, keep on top of current events, and get up close and personal with Iowa movers and shakers. Recent speakers have included The Honorable Mark Cady and Court of Appeals Chief Judge The Honorable David Danilson who explored current Judicial Branch issues; State Representative Zach Nunn, Matthew Eslick (Nyemaster Goode), and Jesse Johnston (Dickinson Law) who shared their Mock Trial experiences; and Iowa State University Men's Head Basketball coach Steve Prohm who gave a behind-the-scenes look at the Cyclone's winning season.

On the Move

Holly Logan

recently joined the Davis Brown Law Firm as Special Counsel in the Litigation Division. For more than 15 years, Holly has practiced in the areas of white collar criminal defense, internal investigations, and business litigation. She has defended individuals, companies, and boards of directors in governmental investigations and at trial. Prior to joining Davis Brown, Holly practiced at her own boutique white collar and business litigation firm in Des Moines. She earned her J.D. from the University of Iowa College of Law

Appeals Chief Judge David Danilson. As I chatted with them informally and then listened to their prepared remarks, I was reminded of how incredibly proud I am that Iowa has merit selection instead of judicial elections, to minimize politics swaying our scales of justice in one way or the other. As Chief Justice Cady noted, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce ranked Iowa's court system as 4th in the nation. The State of Nevada has adopted a court of appeals system mirrored after Iowa's mode.

As Chief Danilson (sort of) joked, the Iowa Court of Appeals is like the second chair lawyer at trial who does the majority of the work but gets none of the recognition. Read more (and see the tattoo).

Something for everyone at Feb. CLE

The PCBA Bench and Bar Committee invites you to attend its Spring CLE on February 23 from 1:30 p.m. to 4:45 p.m. at the ISBA Conference Center. The topics are: Juvenile Justice, Iowa Access to Justice Commission, Cyber-security Risk Management Basics, and a Legislative Update. We anticipate three hours of State CLE credit to be approved. Following the seminar, there will be a Networking Social with complimentary Hors d'Oeuvres and beverages.

The CLE is free for current PCBA members. If you are not a member, you may join the PCBA on the day of the seminar in order to attend for free. Click here for the registration form. If you are unable to attend the seminar, you are welcome to join us for the Networking Social following the CLE, which will begin at 4:45 p.m.

More CLE opportunities coming up

Mark your calendar for two additional noon hour CLE seminars sponsored by the PCBA Bench and Bar Committee.

The first, on Monday, March 27, from noon to 1 p.m., at the Polk County Justice Center, will feature Christopher Patterson, District Court Administrator, on the Court Complex overview; Anne Sheeley, Polk County Clerk of Court on Case Processing; and where she graduated with Distinction.

Lara Q. Plaisance has joined Hopkins & Huebner, P.C as a shareholder attorney in the Des Moines office. Lara earned her J.D. from University of Missouri-Kansas City School of Law. She will practice primarily in workers' compensation.

Plaisance

Hilligas

Aaron Hilligas has joined Ahlers & Cooney, P.C. as an Associate Attorney. Aaron is a member of the firm's Employment & Labor Law practice area, serving public entities, higher education and K-12 educational institutions. He advises clients on a variety of labor and employment related matters and represents employers in collective bargaining agreement negotiations, in cases before the Public Employment Relations Board, and in grievance arbitrations. Prior to Ahlers & Cooney, Aaron worked in the Office of the General Counsel for the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) for the Division of Advice, as well as in-house as an attorney with labor organizations covering a variety of industries in the public and private sectors, including K-12 and higher education. He received his Juris Doctor in 2002 from the University of Wisconsin.

Kudos

Attorneys Jason Comisky and Kristin Billingsley Cooper were recently elected shareholders at Ahlers & Cooney, P.C.

Hon. Rachael Seymour, District Associate Judge - 5th Judicial District on Juvenile Court.

The second, on Thursday, April 20, from noon to 1 p.m., at the U.S. District Court, will feature Judge Helen Adams who will discuss proposed local federal rules. Click here to download the registration form.

Students wanted for Law Day contest

Each year, the Polk County Bar Association teams up with ARAG to give Polk County students in grades K through 12 a chance to get creative with the law as part of our Law Day celebration. Chief among the activities is the visual arts, music, essay, and poetry competitions.

This year's theme, The 14th Amendment: Transforming American Democracy, enables students to explore the many ways that the 14th Amendment has reshaped American law and society. Ratified during Reconstruction a century and a half ago, the Fourteenth Amendment serves as the cornerstone of landmark civil rights legislation, the foundation for numerous federal court decisions protecting fundamental rights, and a source of inspiration for all those who advocate for equal justice under law.

Click here for complete details. The deadline for entries is April 10, and the winning students will be honored at the PCBA Annual Meeting and Law Day Luncheon on May 9.

We're looking for Law Day sponsors

Please consider supporting our Law Day program and enriching the experience for Polk County area students. For just $100, you or your firm can sponsor a winning student, the student's teacher, and the student's parent or parents. Sponsors may also sit with the winning students at our Law Day

Stephanie A. Koltookian, Abigail M. Hillers and Robert J. Thole have joined Bradshaw, Fowler, Proctor & Fairgrave, P.C., in Des Moines, Iowa.

The luncheon will be held at the ISBA Building, 625 E. Court, from noon to 1 p.m. Tickets are $17 in advance and $19 at the door, but keep in mind that space is limited and we may not be able to accommodate walk ins. Click here for details and a reservation form or call 243-3904.

Stephanie joined the firm as an associate attorney in the firm's litigation division. She earned her J.D. from The University of Iowa College of Law in May 2015. Prior to joining the Bradshaw Law Firm, Stephanie clerked for Justice Thomas D. Waterman of the Iowa Supreme Court.

Get up close with the Court

We invite you to be our valentine and attend the PCBA Bench & Bar Luncheon on Tuesday, Feb. 14, at noon. This year's featured guests will be Iowa Supreme Court Chief Justice Mark Cady and Court of Appeals Chief-Judge David Danilson. Watch the PCBA website for details as they become available.

Abigail joined the firm as an associate attorney in the firm's transactional division, representing clients in the area of Wills, Trusts, Estate Planning, Probate Law, and Real Estate Law. She earned her J.D. from Valparaiso University Law School in 2009. Prior to joining the Bradshaw Law Firm, Abigail worked as a wealth management and trust officer, and general counsel, for a local bank.

Attention Family Law attorneys

The Polk County Bar Association Family Law Committee invites you to attend the annual transition meeting with the Family Law Judges, which is scheduled for Tuesday, Dec. 20, from noon until 1:30 p.m. at the Polk County Courthouse, 500 Mulberry Street, in Courtroom 302. Chief Judge Arthur Gamble, Judges Eliza Ovrom, Douglas Staskal and the newly appointed Judge will be in attendance to discuss the transition and answer any questions that you may have.

Robert has joined the litigation division of the firm as an associate attorney. He earned his J.D. from Drake University Law School in May 2012. While attending law school, Robert clerked for both the Bradshaw Law Firm and the Honorable Robert B. Hanson of the 5th Judicial District in Polk County, Iowa. Prior to joining the Bradshaw Law Firm, Robert was engaged in private practice in Des Moines.

We moved to Des Moines when I was in first grade and I have lived here ever since. I went to Lincoln High School where I was All-Conference in football, ran track including a role on the team for the 1600m medley relay at the State Track Meet, participated in show choir, some small theater roles, and the State-Champion All-Male Dance Team. I was moderately successful in the academic classroom.

I received a football scholarship to play at St. Ambrose University in Davenport, IA. While I only played football for two years, it did introduce me to the next phase in my life, the law. There I majored in Political Science and Philosophy and founded the SAU Chapter of the Phi Alpha Delta Law Fraternity and re-started the Mock Trial Program as its captain. The 2017 Tier One designated specialty areas where Belin McCormick, P.C. are recognized: Appellate Practice, Banking and Finance Law, Commercial Litigation, Communications Law, Corporate Law, Employment Law - Management, Environmental Law, Financial Services Regulation Law, Labor Law - Management, Litigation - Banking & Finance, Litigation - Environmental, Litigation - Municipal, Litigation - Labor & Employment, Litigation - Real Estate, Litigation - Tax, Litigation - Trusts & Estates Mergers & Acquisitions Law, Personal Injury - Defendants Real Estate Law, Tax Law, and Trusts & Estates Law.

Davis Brown associate attorney Margaret (Maggie) Hanson recently received news that her request for clemency for a pro bono client was approved by President Obama. The Office for the Pardon Attorney, U.S. Department of Justice, personally called Maggie to share that her client's sentence would be commuted. Senior Shareholder Nikki Mordini accepted the request and advised Maggie as well as Sarah Crane, Sarah Franklin, Emily Stork, and Elizabeth Van Arkel in the preparation of the petitions. Paralegal Natalie Rivera assisted greatly in the effort.

Davis Brown attorneys Emily Stork and Elizabeth Van Arkel have also received word from the U.S. Department of Justice Pardon Attorney that petitions they submitted for clemency were approved by President Obama.

International law firm Dorsey & Whitney LLP announced that U.S. News - Best Lawyers® recognized the Commercial Litigation, Health Care Law, and Public Finance Law practices in Dorsey's Des Moines office for inclusion in its "Best Law Firms" rankings for 2017. The practices received a tier 1 ranking,

Students wanted for Law Day contest

Each year, the Polk County Bar Association teams up with ARAG to give Polk County students a chance to get creative with the law as part of our Law Day celebration. Chief among the activities is the visual arts, music, essay and poetry competition for students in grades 6 through 12.

This year's theme, The Fourteenth Amendment: Transforming American Democracy, provides the opportunity for students to explore the many ways that the Fourteenth Amendment has reshaped American law and society. Through its Citizenship, Due Process and Equal Protection clauses, this transformative amendment advanced the rights of all Americans. It also played a pivotal role in extending the reach of the Bill of Rights to the states. Ratified during Reconstruction a century and a half ago, the Fourteenth Amendment serves as the cornerstone of landmark civil rights legislation, the foundation for numerous federal court decisions protecting fundamental rights, and a source of inspiration for all those who advocate for equal justice under law.

The deadline for entries is April 10. Click here for complete details. The winning students will be honored at the PCBA Annual Meeting and Law Day Luncheon on Tuesday, May 9.

Support the Volunteer Lawyers Project and get a tax deduction

As 2016 draws to a close, our attention turns to year-end finances and tax returns. Don't forget that you can make a contribution to the Polk County Bar Association Volunteer Lawyers Project before the end of the year and get a tax deduction.

The PCBA VLP is a charitable organization established with the mission of providing legal services to low income residents of Polk County. With your help, PCBA VLP is one of the most successful volunteer lawyer programs in the country, with Polk County lawyers donating approximately 5,000 hours of their time annually.

Unfortunately, demand for PCBA VLP services has never been higher while our funding continues to decline. To help make it easier to support our efforts, The PCBA VLP now offers you the ability to make donations on a monthly, quarterly, or annual basis - all you need to do is check the appropriate option on your PCBA membership renewal form. And don't forget that the PCBA VLP is a tax-exempt, charitable organization. That means any donation you make is tax deductible. You can also designate the PCBA VLP as the recipient on your United Way donation.

2017 Session Talking Points

November 17, 2016

I. Judicial Branch Budget

FY 17: The legislature appropriated the same amount of funding as the judicial branch received in FY 16, over $5 million short of the amount needed to maintain the current level of service to lowans. Unfortunately, this means some very difficult decisions have been made.

For FY 17 the court decided to

- Establish a hiring freeze for all vacancies in the judicial branch with very, very few exceptions
- Hold open judicial vacancies for an average of six months
- Reduce travel by 10%
- Reduce furniture and non-IT equipment by 50%
- Shift some funding for IT operations to the Court Technology Fund
- Institute a moratorium on the expansion of specialty courts
- District must obtain approval of the supreme court before eliminating any specialty courts

In making these decisions, the court tried to minimize disruption of services to lowans by making evidence based decisions. As part of the effort to develop long term planning options, the court has asked the state court administrator to complete a workload study of all aspects of judicial branch operations. The results of the workload study will guide future budget decisions by the judicial branch. More information regarding the judicial branch budget can be found on the judicial branch website.

FY 18: Potential consequences if the judicial branch receives the same amount of funding for FY 18 as FY 16 and 17:

- Juvenile Court Officers reducing face to face visits with at-risk children
- Elimination of specialty courts (family treatment courts, drug courts, mental health courts, etc)
- lowans, especially business owners, will experience delays in civil litigation as priority will be criminal cases.
- Delayed maintenance of electronic filing system (EDMS)
- No development of additional technological services
- Closing or reduction of hours of courthouses
- Layoffs

Anticipated minimum FY 18 budget request: $10 million (5.5%)

- Mitigation of FY 17 reductions in services
- Juvenile court officers to visit at-risk children
- Court service days in rural counties
- Continuation/expansion of specialty courts (family treatment courts, drug courts, mental health courts, etc.)
- Maintenance and upgrade of electronic filing system (EDMS)

Additional services in need of funding:

- Maintenance and upgrade of technology services for lowans:
  - Update of jury software and development of a juror app
  - Judicial Branch website upgrade and enhancements
  - Disaster recovery
  - Criminal Justice Information Systems (CJIS) exchanges for more automated exchange of data between criminal justices agencies and the Judicial Branch.
  - Development of apps for self-represented litigants to use to access the court system
  - Development of an online conservator reporting system
  - Protecting lowans' personal information on court documents

II. Judicial salaries

- There is a decline in the number of applicants for judicial vacancies
- There are fewer private practicing attorneys submitting their names for judicial vacancies thereby reducing the practice setting diversity of the pools
- Stagnant judicial salaries is a factor in the decline of interest in judicial vacancies
- Reluctance to increase salaries affects morale of sitting judges
- Prior to January 3, 2014, Iowa judges and magistrates had not received a salary increase since July 1, 2008. Between 2008 and 2014, most other state employees received increases in their base pay of at least 13%.

III. Here is what we want you to drive home to legislators

- Providing critical and unduplicated services to lowans in all 99 counties
- Good stewards of taxpayer dollars
- As efficient as possible-trying to maximize the efficiencies of technology
- Only 2.5% of general fund budget
- The services provided by the judicial branch to lowans needs to be a priority for state resources

Please tell Sydney about your meetings with legislators, especially any issues that they expressed an interest in.

Lieutenant Governor to Serve as Governor, But Lacks Authority to Appoint Lieutenant, Attorney General Opinion Concludes

Formal opinion responds to request by state senator as Governor Branstad prepares to resign for ambassadorship

DES MOINES – Attorney General Tom Miller Monday issued a formal legal opinion stating that if a governor resigns, the lieutenant governor becomes governor for all intents and purposes, but does not have legal authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Sen. David Johnson, I-Ocheyedan, requested the opinion following Governor Terry Branstad’s announcement that, if confirmed by the U.S. Senate, he will serve as U.S. ambassador to China.

The 23-page opinion, following extensive legal and historical research, concludes, “...the powers and duties of the office of Governor fall upon the lieutenant governor.” The conclusion is based on an Iowa Constitution provision addressing a governor’s resignation, which states, “...the powers and duties of the office...shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.” Under that provision, the opinion adds, “The lieutenant governor takes on this authority because she is lieutenant governor.”

Significantly, according to Miller, Article IV, section 1 provides that “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.”

While the “the lieutenant governor becomes governor and has the title of Governor,” the opinion further adds that that person does not have constitutional authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor. “In other words, upon a governor’s resignation, the lieutenant governor will hold both the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. There is no vacancy to be filled,” according to the opinion.

“This opinion conveys that, in a sense, the two offices merge,” Miller said. “This is consistent with numerous cases in other states that addressed this question,” Miller added. “It is also consistent with a close reading of the Iowa governor’s succession provision—Article IV, section 19 of the Iowa Constitution, which establishes a precise order of gubernatorial succession without providing for the appointment of a lieutenant governor.”

Miller's opinion notes that in all four previous instances when an Iowa governor resigned or died while in office, the lieutenant governor was always considered governor, but never appointed or named a new lieutenant governor. The opinion also concludes, "The framers intended that those in the gubernatorial line of succession be elected."

At the federal level, prior to Congress amending the U.S. Constitution in 1967 to establish that the vice president becomes president and grants the president authority to appoint a new vice president with Congressional approval, no vice president who assumed the powers and duties of a president who died while in office appointed a new vice president.

The formal opinion departs from a public statement Miller's office issued in December, following an informal legal review in response to media inquiries, which stated the office concurred with "Governor Branstad's conclusion that...in her capacity as Governor, Governor Reynolds will have the authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor."

The December statement was based, in part, on an Iowa Code section addressing vacancies of office holders. Miller's formal opinion concludes this statute does not apply when a governor resigns and the powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

About Attorney General Opinions

A formal attorney general opinion addresses legal questions relating to a public official's duties by interpreting laws and offering legal guidance.

While not a legal precedent, a formal attorney general opinion is similar to one and stands until a court or later opinion overrules it or new legislation is enacted to change a statute in question. Opinions are not legally binding, but courts generally give them careful consideration and deference.

Good Morning,

My clients are a mother and daughter, mother is trustee, daughter is successor trustee of deceased father's testamentary trust, Mother is beginning to experience symptoms of dementia and would like to transfer the trustee role to daughter. My assumption is that I would need to file an application to appoint successor trustee under the probate file, and ideally have both the current and successor trustee sign as petitioners. Is this correct or should I take a different route?

Thanks!

Collateral Consequences of Marijuana Laws: Defending Clients against Marijuana Charges with the Least Impact on Immigration, Licensing, Housing & Education >>

CLE Video Re-Broadcast | March 30, 2017

3 HR CLE (2:00 pm – 5:15 pm Eastern)

As of January 2017, recreational marijuana use is legal in eight states: California, Oregon, Washington, Alaska, Colorado, Washington D.C., Nevada and Massachusetts.

(Legalization in Maine does not take effect until "30 days after the Governor certifies the election results.")

Twenty-eight (28) states, plus Washington, D.C. and Guam, have legalized medical marijuana, although in the most recent three states – Arkansas, North Dakota and Florida – the laws have not yet taken effect.

Unfortunately, under Federal Law, marijuana is still considered a Schedule I Substance under the Controlled Substances Act, with no accepted medical use and a strong potential for dependency, thus making its sale and possession punishable as harshly as narcotics such as cocaine and heroin.

In this program, attorneys Rochelle S. Berliner, Shelley Albert and Ami Kim discuss the conflict between state and federal law and the collateral consequences of a marijuana conviction in terms of immigration, licensing, housing and education.

Learn more / Register online...

Key topics to be discussed:

- Federal Marijuana laws
- State medical marijuana and legalization statutes
- Collateral consequences of a marijuana conviction in connection with, among other things, immigration, professional licensing, education and housing
- How state laws are affected by federal law
- How to defend your client from a marijuana charge

Presented by Rochelle S. Berliner

Rochelle S. Berliner Upon graduating New York Law School in June 1991, Ms. Berliner began her legal career as an Assistant District Attorney in the office of Robert M. Morgenthau, the New York County District Attorney. She spent two years working in the Appeals Bureau, writing briefs and arguing them in the Appellate Division, First Department. She then spent another twelve years in the Office of the Special Narcotics Prosecutor. While there, Ms. Berliner worked on long-term and short-term drug investigations, a lengthy wiretap case and hundreds of street-level drug sale and possession cases. During that time, Mr. Berliner tried approximately 50-60 cases to verdict and acquired extensive litigation skills and experience.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Statement from Attorney General Tom Miller on AFSCME Lawsuit over Collective Bargaining Law

Miller to ask Executive Council to approve outside legal counsel to defend state

DES MOINES – Attorney General Tom Miller today announced that he will ask the Iowa Executive Council to seek outside legal counsel to defend the state against the lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of House File 291, the collective bargaining bill signed into law on Friday.

The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) Iowa Council 61 filed the lawsuit Monday in Polk County District Court.

The Executive Council, comprised of the governor, secretary of state, state treasurer, secretary of agriculture and state auditor, must approve the appointment of outside counsel to represent the state.

“As the new collective bargaining law has the potential to existentially threaten the viability of public sector unions—many of the very same organizations that have supported me in the past—I am recommending that the Executive Council seek outside legal representation to defend this lawsuit in order to avoid any questions about a potential conflict,” Miller said. “While the extraordinarily professional and skilled attorneys in my office have vigorously defended Governor Branstad and the legislature in past lawsuits involving AFSCME, I think it’s most prudent in this highly charged legal dispute to avoid any appearance of politics clouding our office’s legal representation and judgment.”

Rob,

I have been nominated, along with Andrew Chappell from the Johnson County Attorneys Office, civil division, for the position of District Judge here in the 6th Judicial District. I interview with the Governor this Friday Feb. 3rd.

I have been meeting with various individuals the past few weeks who are making recommendations to the Governor about my appointment. I have a couple more interviews this Wed. one with Adam Gregg, State Public Defender, and another with Jeff Goodman, the Governor's former Chief of Staff.

I just wanted to let you know in case you get an opportunity to put in a good word on my behalf to the "powers that be" in your office. I also just wanted to let you know!

Mike

THE COURSE FOR OUR STATE

Dear Leadership Iowa Alumni,

Happy New Year! We hope yours is off to the Best or Greatest start ever!

The Leadership Iowa Board of Governors is interested in your opinions. We are focused on ensuring that the Leadership Iowa experience is stimulating, educational and relevant to its participants.

The Curriculum Committee has developed a quick survey regarding curriculum planning. We would like your feedback in order to help us customize the best experience possible for future LI participants. Responses are requested by Friday, January 13, please.

- Here is the link for the survey: www.surveymonkey.com/r/9VMPGB5

In addition, you are welcome to nominate a community (can be yours or another) for consideration to host a future Leadership Iowa session. Nominations are ongoing. The calendar for the coming LI year is typically determined in February.

- Here is the link for that survey: www.surveymonkey.com/r/TYJ5D8Y

We appreciate your thoughtful consideration of our request, and we hope you will attend an Alumni dinner on January 11!

Please also consider joining or renewing your Alumni Society membership if you haven't already. In addition to alumni news and events, funds help to provide scholarships to future Leadership Iowa attendees.

RSVP for the alumni dine-arounds, make a contribution to Leadership Iowa and, of course, nominate future participants all online at Leadershiplowa.com.

Thank you,

Subject: [ISBA District5c] ISBA District 5C December Update - Judicial Budget
Attachments: Judicial Branch Budget Talking Points.pdf

Good afternoon – The ISBA Board of Governors recently held their meeting on Wednesday, December 14th and you will be receiving your update about that meeting soon. One of the items that was discussed is the Judicial Branch Budget which cannot wait until the update and needs to be brought to your attention immediately. Specifically the judicial branch is requesting a 6.9% budget increase and needs our help to ensure our courts are fully funded. This email is to ask you to contact you state legislators and tell them to support this increase.

By way of explanation, last year our courts did not receive any new funding. This means the judicial branch had to accomplish the same duties with increasing demands and costs with the same amount of funding as the year before. If the judicial branch continues to be underfunded, it will result in additional hiring freezes, furloughs, travel restrictions for judges, or closures and reduction in hours across our state. This year is especially a concern as the revenue estimating conference for this fiscal year budget recently met and revised their estimates for the overall budget downward. All state departments have submitted status quo budgets which is a de-facto decrease. The judicial branch cannot submit a status quo budget as the aforementioned consequences will become a reality and therefore, they must request the 6.9% increase.

WHY? Unlike state departments, the judicial branch is a branch of government. It needs to be funded to do its job, which is to provide justice for lowans. The legislature needs to be reminded that the judicial branch is an equal branch of government to ensure all lowans have access to justice. Attached you will find talking points you can use when you talk to your state legislators about supporting the budget increase. Below you will also find links to your state legislators:

Senators <https://www.legis.iowa.gov/legislators/senate>
 Representatives <https://www.legis.iowa.gov/legislators/house>

Iowa has a reputation for having one of the best judicial systems in the country. Failing to provide full funding for our courts damages this reputation and the quality of services received by lowans.

Please contact your legislators as an advocate for your clients and for all lowans to ensure their access to justice.

If you have any questions, please contact your district 5C representatives individually and do not reply to this list serve.

Thank you for your help.

Nicolle Schippers, District 5c Representative.

2017 Session Talking Points
November 17, 2016

I. Judicial Branch Budget

FY 17: The legislature appropriated the same amount of funding as the judicial branch received in FY 16, over $5 million short of the amount needed to maintain the current level of service to lowans. Unfortunately, this means some very difficult decisions have been made.

For FY 17 the court decided to

- Establish a hiring freeze for all vacancies in the judicial branch with very, very few exceptions
- Hold open judicial vacancies for an average of six months
- Reduce travel by 10%
- Reduce furniture and non-IT equipment by 50%
- Shift some funding for IT operations to the Court Technology Fund
- Institute a moratorium on the expansion of specialty courts
- District must obtain approval of the supreme court before eliminating any specialty courts

In making these decisions, the court tried to minimize disruption of services to lowans by making evidence based decisions. As part of the effort to develop long term planning options, the court has asked the state court administrator to complete a workload study of all aspects of judicial branch operations. The results of the workload study will guide future budget decisions by the judicial branch. More information regarding the judicial branch budget can be found on the judicial branch website.

FY 18: Potential consequences if the judicial branch receives the same amount of funding for FY 18 as FY 16 and 17:

- Juvenile Court Officers reducing face to face visits with at-risk children
- Elimination of specialty courts (family treatment courts, drug courts, mental health courts, etc)
- lowans, especially business owners, will experience delays in civil litigation as priority will be criminal cases.
- Delayed maintenance of electronic filing system (EDMS)
- No development of additional technological services
- Closing or reduction of hours of courthouses
- Layoffs

Anticipated minimum FY 18 budget request: $10 million (5.5%)

- Mitigation of FY 17 reductions in services
- Juvenile court officers to visit at-risk children
- Court service days in rural counties
- Continuation/expansion of specialty courts (family treatment courts, drug courts, mental health courts, etc.)
- Maintenance and upgrade of electronic filing system (EDMS)

Additional services in need of funding:

- Maintenance and upgrade of technology services for lowans:
  - Update of jury software and development of a juror app
  - Judicial Branch website upgrade and enhancements
  - Disaster recovery
  - Criminal Justice Information Systems (CJIS) exchanges for more automated exchange of data between criminal justices agencies and the Judicial Branch.
  - Development of apps for self-represented litigants to use to access the court system
  - Development of an online conservator reporting system
  - Protecting lowans' personal information on court documents

II. Judicial salaries

- There is a decline in the number of applicants for judicial vacancies
- There are fewer private practicing attorneys submitting their names for judicial vacancies thereby reducing the practice setting diversity of the pools
- Stagnant judicial salaries is a factor in the decline of interest in judicial vacancies
- Reluctance to increase salaries affects morale of sitting judges
- Prior to January 3, 2014, Iowa judges and magistrates had not received a salary increase since July 1, 2008. Between 2008 and 2014, most other state employees received increases in their base pay of at least 13%.

III. Here is what we want you to drive home to legislators

- Providing critical and unduplicated services to lowans in all 99 counties
- Good stewards of taxpayer dollars
- As efficient as possible-trying to maximize the efficiencies of technology
- Only 2.5% of general fund budget
- The services provided by the judicial branch to lowans needs to be a priority for state resources

Please tell Sydney about your meetings with legislators, especially any issues that they expressed an interest in.

P.S. I see that a Drake Professor doesn't like the AG opinion on whether Kim Reynolds will have constitutional authority to appoint a new Lt. Governor. He has an guest opinion column in today's Cedar Rapids Gazette.

I read the AG Op. and saw your name as a contributor. I thought the Op. was convincing. I don't know the Professor, but his column was too snarky and dismissive to be convincing. My 2 cents, for what it's worth. Here's the link:

Hi there,

My name is Beau Bowman and I have a question about the recent release by the attorney general concerning the Lt. Governor's new title and power to appoint a new Lt. Governor.

I agree with the Attorney General that Lt. Governor Kim Reynolds should not be able to appoint a new Lt. Governor.

What I do not agree with is her title "Governor Reynolds."

The Iowa Constitution (Article IV sec. 17) states: "In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor."

The legal definition of the word devolve is: "when property is automatically transferred from one party to another"

No where in the constitution does it say that Reynolds would become the Governor, but only take on the responsibility of Governor for the remainder of the term.

Therefore, Reynolds' title should stay as Lt. Governor. She should not be able to appoint a new Lt. Governor because there is no vacancy in that office.

My email and phone number are listed at the bottom of this email. Thank you for hearing me out.

IOWA ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINION
#17-04-1

May 1, 2017

The Honorable David Johnson
State Senator
PO Box 279
Ocheyedan, Iowa 51354

Dear Senator Johnson:

Thank you for your letter of February 1, 2017. Your letter references Governor Terry Branstad's recent nomination to serve as United States Ambassador to China and poses nine specific questions about the effect of his potential resignation as Governor of Iowa. We agree that your letter raises important legal questions about Iowa's constitutional framework for the succession of executive power. This office has not previously addressed these questions directly, nor has the Iowa Supreme Court. Thus, we believe they are appropriately addressed in an official opinion of the Attorney General under Iowa Code section 13.2(e).

We share your belief that these important issues require a thoughtful and detailed analysis. Taken as a whole, the nine questions you pose implicate two central constitutional questions. Those two important questions of law are:

First question: If the governor resigns, does the lieutenant governor become governor?

Second question: If the lieutenant governor becomes governor, may she then appoint a new lieutenant governor?

The answers to these questions must flow from a careful consideration of the succession framework set forth in the words and structure of the Iowa constitution. See Rudd v. Ray, 248 N.W.2d 125, 129 (Iowa 1976) ("The framers of our constitution necessarily gave us their ideas in the words they agreed upon."). The debates of the 1857 constitutional convention also shed important light on the meaning and intent of the constitutional provisions establishing that framework. See N. W. Halsey & Co v. City of Belle Plaine, 104 N.W. 494, 496 (Iowa 1905) (noting that reading the constitutional debates may aid in a fuller understanding of constitutional provisions). Finally, our answers can and should be informed by interpretations of the same or similar provisions in other states' constitutions. See Van Horn v. City of Des Moines, 191 N.W. 144, 148 (Iowa 1922) (considering "similar provisions in the Constitution[s] of other states" to decide an issue of first impression).

I. Background

We first provide context for the legal questions by identifying the relevant constitutional provisions, examining portions of the 1857 constitutional convention, and noting historical practice both in Iowa and on the federal level.

A. Constitutional Provisions. Article IV of the Iowa Constitution establishes the executive branch and sets forth a framework for the succession of executive power. Some provisions of article IV have been amended since 1857, but we initially focus on the original provisions because those established the original framework. In doing so, we consider all the original executive branch provisions without placing undue significance on one section. See Rolfe State Bank v. Gunderson, 794 N.W.2d 561, 565 (Iowa 2011) ("[W]e avoid placing undue importance on isolated portions of an enactment by construing all parts of the enactment together."). We also remain mindful not to render any provision meaningless or redundant. See Iowa Code § 4.4(2) (2017) (presuming every piece of language is intended to be effective); Mall Real Estate, L.L.C. v. City of Hamburg, 818 N.W.2d 190, 198 (Iowa 2012) ("We . . . interpret statutes in such a way that portions of it do not become redundant or irrelevant."); see also Junkins v. Branstad, 448 N.W.2d 480, 483 (Iowa 1989) ("Constitutional provisions are generally subject to the same rules of construction as statutes.").

Considering article IV as a whole promotes a holistic understanding of the constitutional framework, because each provision can inform the others. See Iowa Code § 4.1(38) ("Words and phrases shall be construed according to the context . . ."); see also Allen v. Clayton, 18 N.W. 663, 667 (Iowa 1884) (noting that to determine the meaning of a constitutional provision, "the sections preceding and following it, which have reference to the same subject-matter, must be read and considered"); State ex rel. Martin v. Heil, 7 N.W.2d 375, 381 (Wis. 1942) ("[T]he provision should be examined in its setting in order to find out . . . the real meaning and substantial purpose of those who adopted it."). The following constitutional provisions are relevant to our analysis.

Article IV, section 1 provides that "The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa." Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1. In other words, the person who has the power is governor. This section has remained unchanged since 1857.

Article IV, sections 2 and 3 originally established that the governor and lieutenant governor would be elected by the people—but not on the same ticket. Article IV, section 6 required candidates for both offices to have the same qualifications.

Article IV, section 10 provided, “When any office shall, from any cause, become vacant, and no mode is provided by the Constitution and laws for filling such vacancy, the Governor shall have power to fill such vacancy, by granting a commission, which shall expire at the end of the next session of the General Assembly, or at the next election by the people.”

Article IV, section 14 provided, “No person shall, while holding any office under the authority of the United States, or this State, execute the office of Governor, or Lieutenant Governor, except as hereinafter expressly provided.”

Article IV, section 15 established that the lieutenant governor would serve until a successor was elected and qualified, and that “while acting as Governor,” the lieutenant governor would receive the same pay as provided for the governor.

Article IV, section 17 provides,

In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

This section has remained unchanged since 1857.

Article IV, section 18 made the lieutenant governor President of the Senate with a tiebreaking vote, but provided that “when [the lieutenant governor] shall exercise the office of Governor, the Senate shall choose a President pro tempore.”

Article IV, section 19 continued the line of succession beyond the lieutenant governor:

If the Lieutenant Governor, while acting as Governor, shall be impeached, displaced, resign, or die, or otherwise become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the President pro tempore of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled, or the disability removed; and if the President of the Senate, for any of the above causes, shall be rendered incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, the same shall devolve upon the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Although each provision is important, article IV, section 17 plays the biggest part in answering both questions. “[T]he purpose of art. IV, § 17 is to ensure that the citizens of Iowa are not without a person capable of performing the constitutional and statutory duties imposed upon a governor.” 1980 Op. Att’y Gen. 550, 1980 WL 25903, at *3 (Iowa Att’y Gen. Jan. 2, 1980).

Two notable aspects of article IV, section 17 inform our analysis. First, while death and resignation are permanent exits from office, the phrase “other disability” includes temporary conditions such as physical or mental incapacity or time spent undergoing a medical procedure. See 1923 Op. Att’y Gen. 263, 263 (Iowa Att’y Gen. Aug. 23, 1923) (answering a question posed by the governor about the operation of article IV, section 17 during a several-month hiatus recommended by his physician). Therefore, article IV, section 17 must operate within a framework applicable to several possible factual scenarios without creating “friction in the machinery of government.” Fitzpatrick v. McAlister, 248 P. 569, 576 (Okla. 1926). Because the provision applies equally to permanent and temporary disabilities, so too must the answers to the legal questions we address.

The second important aspect of article IV, section 17 is the word “devolve.” That word “is defined by lexicographers and in law dictionaries as meaning to roll or tumble down or descend.” Id. at 573 (citing authorities indicating that meaning as of 1926); see also “Devolve,” Black’s Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014) (defining “devolve” to include transferring rights, duties, or powers and passing by transmission); “Devolve,” Webster’s Third New Int’l Dictionary (1993) (defining “devolve” as “to flow or roll from a situation viewed as higher to one that is lower” and “to fall or be passed . . . as an obligation or responsibility”); 12 Words & Phrases 546 (1954). The overall concept is that the word connotes downward movement. This downward movement means the powers and duties of the office of Governor fall upon the lieutenant governor; the lieutenant governor does not rise to the office of Governor. See Okla. Op. Att’y Gen. No. 65-235, at 1-2 (Okla. Att’y Gen. May 19, 1965) (“The office of Governor devolves upon the Lieutenant Governor, he does not ascend to it.”). This distinction is both important and purposeful.

Viewing article IV as a whole, section 1 and original section 18 complement each other and dovetail with sections 17 and 19. The words in section 18 indicate that when the powers and duties devolved (as section 17 instructed), the lieutenant governor would “exercise the office of Governor.” That aligns with the foundational principle that the person who has the power is governor. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1. The foundational principle is paramount.

Sections 17 and 19 operate to ensure that there is always a successor designated to exercise those “powers and duties”—even in the absence of the elected lieutenant governor.

Additionally, article IV, section 14 is instructive because it expressly permits one person to hold more than one office if the constitution provides for it. The 1857 constitution provided for two possibilities immediately following section 14, both of which referred specifically to the lieutenant governor: the lieutenant governor as governor and the lieutenant governor as senate president. See Iowa Const. art. IV, §§ 17–19 (original 1857 version). Section 19 further contemplated other officials holding more than one office by providing for the senate president as governor and the speaker of the house as governor.

B. Constitutional Debates. The Iowa Constitution of 1846 made no provision for a lieutenant governor. However, as the 1857 constitutional convention began, one delegate proposed that a committee dedicated to formulating the executive branch of government consider “providing for the election of a Lieutenant Governor who, by virtue of his office, shall . . . exercise all the powers and have the title of Governor in case of the death, removal, or other disability of the Governor.” 1 The Debates of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Iowa 39 (W. Blair Lord rep., 1857) [hereinafter The Debates]. The convention agreed to the resolution. Id. Accordingly, the drafters of article IV, section 17 envisioned that the lieutenant governor would “have the title of Governor” if the governor left office, id.—and utilized the word “devolve” to accomplish that result. See Heil, 7 N.W.2d at 381–82 (recounting similar debate from the Wisconsin constitutional convention in 1847).

The framers of our 1857 constitution also spent significant time debating the constitutional line of succession. Several of the delegates questioned the need for a lieutenant governor at all—possibly because Iowa had no lieutenant governor before 1857—and offered amendments to article IV, section 17. For instance, delegate Warren proposed an amendment substituting the words “Secretary of State” for “Lieutenant Governor.” 1 The Debates at 587. Delegate Clarke of Johnson County<sup>1</sup> proposed instead “that the duties of the office of Governor, in case of a vacancy, shall devolve upon the president of the Senate.” Id. The convention actually passed Clarke’s amendment, eliminating the position of lieutenant governor from the 1857 constitution and altering the constitutional line of succession.

<sup>1</sup> “There were two men named Mr. Clarke and one named Mr. Clark at the Iowa convention.” State v. Senn, 882 N.W.2d 1, 13 n.7 (Iowa 2016); see 1 The Debates, at 6.

The next morning, however, delegate Gray asked his colleagues "to consider well the importance of the matter before striking" the provisions regarding the lieutenant governor. Id. at 591. An advantage of retaining the office was the fact that the lieutenant governor "will be elected directly by the people, instead of by the Legislature." Id. Gray found that important because "We all seem to agree in placing elections, as far as possible, directly in the power of the people." Id. Delegate Clarke of Henry County agreed:

Gentlemen [of the convention] do not reflect that they may be taking from the people the power of selecting their own chief magistrate. When a man is a candidate for the office of Lieutenant Governor, the people always vote for him with the understanding that circumstances may arise which will make him their Governor. But if you give to the Senate the power of selecting the man who may be the Governor of the people, you take from the people this power and put it into the hands of the Senate.

Id. at 591-92.

Delegate Gray's remarks sparked renewed debate on the subject, and some delegates changed their minds. For example, delegate Wilson offered that although he had originally voted to eliminate the position of lieutenant governor, "upon reflection . . . the advantages in favor of [having a lieutenant governor] are far superior to the disadvantages." Id. at 593. Most significant, however, were Mr. Clark's remarks:

I voted yesterday to strike out the office of Lieutenant-Governor. I had not reflected upon it well, and I am inclined to the opinion that I did not vote right. Upon hearing the argument thus far upon the question, and upon reflection, I am disposed to favor the office of Lieut[enant] Governor, for one reason, if there were no other: I believe that an executive officer, whoever he may be that shall perform the duties of that office, whether Governor or Lieutenant-Governor, ought to be elected directly by the people, in all cases, at least so far as it is possible to provide for it. We elect the Governor by the direct votes of the people—by the popular will—by the popular voice. In case of his removal or disability, I see no reason why the person filling his place should not be elected directly by the whole people as much as the Governor himself.

Id. at 594.

After some further debate, the convention voted 19-14 against the amendment that would have struck the office of lieutenant governor. Id. at 595. Accordingly, the convention also restored other provisions relating to the office of lieutenant governor. See id. at 596.

It is evident, both from this historical record and because “[a]ll political power is inherent in the people,” Iowa Const. art. I, § 2, that this “elective principle” lies at the core of our constitutional framework. The framers intended that those in the gubernatorial line of succession be elected. Section 3 further reinforced the framers’ commitment to the elective principle by requiring that the lieutenant governor “be elected.”

C. Iowa Historical Practice. Four Iowa governors have either resigned or died while in office. In 1877, Governor Samuel Kirkwood resigned to become a candidate for the United States Senate. Lieutenant Governor Joshua Newbold assumed the powers and duties of Governor upon the resignation. Governor Albert Cummins resigned in 1908 after his election to the United States Senate. Lieutenant Governor Warren Garst assumed the powers and duties of the Governor upon the resignation. In 1954, Governor William Beardsley was killed in an automobile accident. Upon his death, Lieutenant Governor Leo Elthon assumed the powers and duties of Governor. Finally, in 1969 Governor Harold Hughes resigned to take his seat in the United States Senate. Lieutenant Governor Robert Fulton assumed the powers and duties of the Governor upon the resignation.

In each of these four instances, the lieutenant governor (upon whom the powers and duties of the office devolved) was treated as Governor in every respect, but did not appoint a new lieutenant governor. In each of these four instances, a new lieutenant governor was eventually elected by popular vote at the same time the next governor was elected.

This historical practice reveals several significant trends. First, upon the death or resignation of a sitting governor, the lieutenant governor has always been considered governor. Second, the new governor has never appointed or named a new lieutenant governor.

D. Federal Language and History. In 1857, when the Iowa Constitution was ratified, article II, section 1, clause 6 of the United States Constitution read: “In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President . . .” Thus, article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution closely tracked language in the United States Constitution at the time.

Under that federal language, multiple presidents died in office. Following each death, the Vice President was considered President in full. Two of these instances occurred before 1857: John Tyler in 1841 and Millard Fillmore in 1850. Because of this history, the delegates to the 1857 Iowa constitutional convention likely understood the word "devolve" to mean that upon the governor's exit from office, the lieutenant governor would be governor following a downward movement of powers. See State v. Baldon, 829 N.W.2d 785, 810 (Iowa 2013) (Appel, J., specially concurring) (noting "the drafters of the Iowa Constitution were well aware" of existing federal law when writing in 1857); Gallarno v. Long, 243 N.W. 719, 723 (Iowa 1932) ("[H]istorical . . . matters may be taken into consideration when interpreting the Constitution.").

A federal court decision from 1867 confirms this understanding:

Three times, since the adoption of the constitution, the president has died, and, under [article II, section 1, clause 6], the powers and duties of the office of president have devolved upon the vice president. All branches of the government have, under such circumstances, recognized the vice president as holding the office of president, as authorized to assume its title . . . . It has never been supposed that, under the provision of the constitution, the vice president . . . acted as the servant, or agent, or locum tenens of the deceased president, or in any other capacity than as holding the office of president fully, for the time being, by virtue of express authority emanating from the United States.

Merriam v. Clinch, 17 F. Cas. 68, 70 (C.C.S.D.N.Y. 1867). The three instances to which the court referred were President Tyler, President Fillmore, and President Andrew Johnson in 1865.

Likewise, the Oklahoma Supreme Court relied upon federal history several decades later in analyzing the word "devolve:"

[U]pon the death of President Wm. H. Harrison, Vice President Tyler became President of the United States. For almost a century this construction of the federal Constitution has stood without question. It has been recognized as correct, and acquiesced in, not only by the departments of state and all the states of the Union, but officially recognized by every civilized government in the world.

Defendant suggests that no court has ever pronounced that to be the law. To our mind, it is so clearly correct that no one has ever presumed to test its correctness in the courts. Therefore it should have greater weight than an ordinary departmental construction, not only because it has stood for almost a century, but because it has been recognized as the correct conception of our system of government, and because, for eighty-five years under this construction, there has been no friction in the machinery of government by reason of such construction.

Fitzpatrick, 248 P. at 576; see also Olcott v. Hoff (Olcott I), 181 P. 466, 467 (Or. 1919) (“[U]pon the death of the president no one has ever claimed that the vice president . . . would not succeed to the office of president itself . . . .”); 1939 Mich. Att’y Gen. Rep. 69, 73 (Mich. Att’y Gen. Mar. 28, 1939) (“No one would contend that upon death or resignation of the President, the Vice President does not thereby become President of the United States . . . .”). Between Merriam in 1867 and Fitzpatrick in 1926, three more presidents died in office—and once again, after each death, the vice President was considered President.<sup>2</sup> The consistent federal understanding of the word “devolve” over several decades further informs our determination of what “devolve” means in article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution.

Moreover, President Tyler did not appoint a new vice president in 1841. A new vice president did not take office until 1845, following the election of George Dallas to the office almost four years later. In 1850, when Millard Fillmore assumed the powers and duties of the presidency upon Zachary Taylor’s death, he too did not appoint a new vice president. Once again, the country waited for a new vice president for almost three years until the election of William King.

This historical practice continued upon the death of every President. The most recent instance occurred upon the death of President John F. Kennedy. President Lyndon Johnson did not appoint a new vice president in 1963. Our nation’s next vice president, Hubert Humphrey, was elected in 1964.

Having established this historical perspective, we now proceed to analyze the legal questions.

II. If the Governor Resigns, Does the Lieutenant Governor Become Governor?

Beyond dictionary definitions, another important guidepost in determining the meaning of “devolve” is what it was understood to mean at the time it was enacted:

---

In the interpretation of the Constitution . . . we are to ascertain the meaning by getting at the intention of those making the instrument. What thought was in the mind of those making the Constitution—what was their intention, is the great leading rule of construction.

Ex parte Pritz, 9 Iowa 30, 32 (1858); accord Griffin v. Pate, 884 N.W.2d 182, 186 (Iowa 2016) (beginning analysis of a constitutional provision “by looking back to review the history” of it “to gain a better understanding of the concept” as applied in a current case); Redmond v. Ray, 268 N.W.2d 849, 853 (Iowa 1978) (“In construing a constitution, our purpose is to ascertain the intent of the framers.”). The framers of our 1857 constitution were undoubtedly aware of the federal precedent under the “devolve” framework. This federal practice, and the framers’ resolution that the lieutenant governor could “have the title of Governor” if the governor left office, 1 The Debates at 39, are strong indications that the verb “devolve” was thought to convey the entire office of Governor upon the lieutenant governor.

A. Other States’ Experiences. Iowa is not the first state to face significant legal questions regarding a governor’s permanent departure from office. While other states’ constitutions and experiences do not alone determine what the Iowa Constitution means, see Handeland v. Brown, 216 N.W.2d 574, 577 (Iowa 1974), we find valuable to our analysis the language used in those states’ constitutions and court decisions or attorney general opinions involving that language.

Our review of available authority reveals a relatively even divide. When the relevant constitutional provision utilized the word “devolve,” some authorities in other states have concluded that the lieutenant governor becomes governor. In view of the question as we have phrased it, we call these the “yes” decisions. See, e.g., Bryant v. English, 843 S.W.2d 308, 311 (Ark. 1992) (“[W]e hold that . . . the Lieutenant Governor serves as Governor for the residue of the term . . . .”); State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d 369, 370 (Mont. 1934) (“[W]hen the Governor resigns or is permanently removed from office, there is no vacancy in the office of Governor in the sense that there is no one left with power to discharge the duties imposed upon the Governor.”); Fitzpatrick, 248 P. at 577 (“Mr. Trapp is just as much a Governor, in every literal and practical sense and effect, as though he had been elected to the office.”); Chadwick v. Earhart, 4 P. 1180, 1181 (Or. 1884) (“[I]t is not shown how . . . . a person can fill the office of governor without being governor.”); State ex rel. Murphy v. McBride, 70 P. 25, 26 (Wash. 1902) (“The constitution having provided that in case of the death of the governor the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of governor.”); 1939 Mich. Att’y Gen. Rep. at 73 (concluding when the governor dies, the lieutenant governor is “governor of the state [for] all intents and purposes”).

Others have concluded that the lieutenant governor or next person “in line” is not truly governor. We call these the “no” decisions. See, e.g., State ex rel. De Concini v. Garvey, 195 P.2d 153, 154 (Ariz. 1948) (concluding the person upon whom the powers and duties of governor devolve after the governor’s death or resignation “is not governor de jure or de facto but merely ex officio”); Futrell v. Oldham, 155 S.W. 502, 504 (Ark. 1913) (concluding under a previous version of the Arkansas Constitution that the person upon whom the powers and duties of governor devolve “acts as Governor . . . merely by virtue of his office as president of the senate, and does not actually become Governor”); People ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 45 P. 1060, 1060 (Cal. 1896) (“[I]t would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor the latter thereby becomes governor . . . .”); State ex rel. Hardin v. Sadler, 47 P. 450, 450 (Nev. 1897) (“If a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor . . . . The officer remains lieutenant governor, but invested with the powers and duties of governor.”); State v. Heller, 42 A. 155, 157 (N.J. 1899) (“The language used is not ambiguous. It declares that the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve on the president of the senate; it does not confer upon him the title of the office.”); State ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, 280 N.W. 393, 399 (Wis. 1938) (“[T]he lieutenant governor does not become governor. He remains lieutenant governor, upon whom devolves the powers and duties of governor.”).

B. Analysis. The substantial number of “no” decisions is significant. The “no” decisions are based on a careful parsing of the word “devolve” and the other relevant constitutional language. When resolving legal questions, precision and nuance matter. See Rivera v. Woodward Res. Ctr., 865 N.W.2d 887, 897 (Iowa 2015). Thus, placing Iowa among the “no” decisions would be legally defensible. Indeed, in 1977, the Idaho Attorney General acknowledged that, although he believed them to be somewhat counterintuitive, the “no” decisions suggested “the lieutenant governor never truly succeeds to the office of governor” under the Idaho Constitution (which at the time used the word “devolve”). Idaho Op. Att’y Gen. No. 77-1, 1977 WL 25063, at *1 (Idaho Att’y Gen. Jan. 4, 1977). The Idaho Attorney General went on to recommend that only the Idaho Supreme Court could answer the question definitively as a matter of Idaho law. See id.

Nonetheless, we find the “yes” decisions more persuasive than the “no” decisions for several reasons. First, we believe the “no” decisions elevate form over substance, which the Iowa Supreme Court has repeatedly cautioned against. See, e.g., Lewis v. Jaeger, 818 N.W.2d 165, 179 (Iowa 2012); State ex rel. Miller v. Smokers Warehouse Corp., 737 N.W.2d 107, 110 (Iowa 2007); Van Baale v. City of Des Moines, 550 N.W.2d 153, 156 (Iowa 1996). The “no” decisions are somewhat technical, drawing a linguistic distinction that, while noteworthy, makes no substantive difference under the circumstances presented here. See Harriman v. State, 2 Greene 270, 285 (Iowa 1849) (considering it the court’s “imperative duty” to “disregard . . . unmeaning technicalities, and to look more to the substance and merits of each case”); see also Heil, 7 N.W.2d at 381 (“It is extremely important in the interpretation of constitutional provisions that we avoid determinations based purely on technical . . . argument and that we seek to discover the true spirit and intent of the provisions examined.”). Under Iowa’s framework, there could be little dispute that if the governor resigns, the lieutenant governor would possess authority to sign legislation, issue pardons, and even receive the governor’s salary. Instead, any dispute centers on the exact description of his or her new role.

On that score, article IV, section 1 of the Iowa Constitution carries significant weight. That section provides, “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1. In other words, the person who has the power is governor. As the Arkansas Supreme Court concluded under a similar provision in the Arkansas Constitution, this means when the powers and duties of governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor, that person is thereafter styled the governor. See Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 313; accord Fitzpatrick, 248 P. at 572 (“The person who . . . fills the office of chief magistrate is styled ‘the Governor of Oklahoma.’ He is the ‘Governor’ for the simple reason that he governs.”). Thus, there is no substantive difference between governor and acting governor. See State ex rel. Chatterton v. Grant, 73 P. 470, 474 (Wyo. 1903) (concluding that, after the governor died, the question whether a person “[wa]s in fact the governor of the state” was immaterial because, whether governor or acting governor, the person had the powers and duties of the office). A person acting as governor after the powers have devolved is governor, because of article IV, section 1.<sup>3</sup>

Second, the “yes” decisions comport with the Iowa framers’ understanding of the lieutenant governor’s role and with our state’s historical practice. In creating the office of lieutenant governor, the framers expected that person to “have the title of Governor” if the governor left office. 1 The Debates at 39. Furthermore, each time the governor of Iowa has resigned or

<sup>3</sup> This office’s 1923 opinion acknowledges, as it must, that in some instances the powers and duties will devolve only on a temporary basis. To the extent the 1923 opinion describes acting as governor to be substantively different from being governor, we now clarify that issue.

died in office, the lieutenant governor was thereafter treated as governor. See William H. Fleming, The Second Officer in the Government, reprinted in Annals of Iowa: A Historical Quarterly, Vol. XIII, No. 1, at 533–34 (1921) [hereinafter Annals of Iowa] (recalling Governor Kirkwood’s resignation in 1877 and Governor Cummins’s resignation in 1908); Legis. Servs. Agency, Pieces of Iowa’s Past: Lieutenant Governors Who Have Become Governor 2–3 (Mar. 8, 2017), available at <https://www.legis.iowa.gov/docs/publications/TB/855445.pdf> (noting Governor Beardsley’s death in 1954 and Governor Hughes’s resignation in 1969). Indeed, one history of Iowa referred to Kirkwood’s successor as the “ninth governor of Iowa” following Kirkwood’s resignation. 4 Benjamin F. Gue, History of Iowa: From the Earliest Times to the Beginning of the Twentieth Century 199–200 (1903). Although historical practice standing alone does not mandate a similar result now, the historical practice is consistent with the framework of executive power we have described. Gallarno, 243 N.W.2d at 723 (noting history is important in interpreting constitutional provisions); see Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 312 (finding it “of some persuasion” that, when the governor of Arkansas died in office or resigned, the lieutenant governor was historically treated as governor).

Finally, many of the “no” decisions are driven by legal problems that Iowa’s framework avoids. For example, in Arizona, the court concluded one reason the secretary of state did not become governor was the absence of a provision bestowing upon that person “the emoluments of the office of governor . . . when acting [as] governor.” Garvey, 195 P.2d at 157–58. By contrast, article IV, section 15 of the Iowa Constitution expressly provides that “while acting as governor,” the lieutenant governor is “paid the compensation . . . prescribed for the governor.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 15.

Likewise, the Arkansas Supreme Court expressed concerns in Futrell about the president of the senate—a legislative officer—performing executive branch duties. See Futrell, 155 S.W. at 504; see also Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 312 (explaining that creating the position of lieutenant governor alleviated any separation-of-powers concerns). Iowa’s framework has always avoided that problem. Article III, section 1 permitted the lieutenant governor to preside over the senate by allowing one person to perform both legislative and executive duties where expressly provided. Further, under the 1857 constitution, when the lieutenant governor was also president of the senate, article IV, section 18 directed the senate to elect a president pro tempore when the lieutenant governor was exercising the office of governor. And today, the lieutenant governor no longer has any legislative duties, so there is no separation-of-powers problem. Without potential issues like those faced in Arizona and Arkansas, we find the “yes” decisions to be a better analytical guide.

Iowa's amendments to article IV do not change or alter our analysis of the effect of article IV, section 17. A 1952 amendment to article IV, section 19 removed a reference to the lieutenant governor "acting as" governor, replacing it with "if there be a vacancy in the office of Governor"—and that language remains today. There is a natural tendency to ascribe significance to the change, but that amendment doesn't really say much about the title of the person upon whom the powers and duties devolve—because article IV, section 1 controls that question. And in any event, as we have explained, "acting as" governor is simply what the lieutenant governor does when the powers and duties devolve, not a substantive limit on his or her power or title.

The more significant piece of the 1952 amendments, in our view, was a section providing that if the governor-elect died, resigned, or failed to qualify, the lieutenant governor-elect would "assume the powers and duties of governor" upon inauguration. As we have noted, article IV, section 1 would therefore make the person with the powers the governor. In other words, the 1952 amendment solidified—not altered—the existing framework for the transfer of executive power in the event of a constitutional contingency.<sup>4</sup>

In 1972, several provisions of article IV were changed, but they did not affect sections 1 or 17. Originally, article IV, sections 2 and 3 provided the governor and lieutenant governor served two-year terms. The 1972 amendment merely increased both terms to four years. Thus, it does not indicate any significant change in the constitutional framework for transferring executive power. Indeed, the 1972 amendments retained the requirement that the governor and lieutenant governor be elected, and that they serve until successors were elected and qualified.

Iowa enacted more significant amendments in 1988. The 1988 amendments provided for the first time that the governor and lieutenant governor are elected together, on one ticket, "as if these two offices were one and the same." Iowa Const. art. IV, § 3. Before 1988, it was possible for the governor and lieutenant governor to represent different political parties. The amendment brought to fruition a constitutional delegate's statement at the 1857 convention: "The governor and lieutenant-governor will always, I presume, be the same in politics, and why not have the successor of the governor of the same politics, instead of bringing in one of the antagonistic party?" 1 The Debates at 593.

<sup>4</sup> Additionally, Governor Beardsley's death occurred in 1954, after the 1952 amendments—but our state's practice of treating the lieutenant governor as governor remained the same.

The 1988 amendments also recast the lieutenant governor's duties. Under original article IV, section 18, the lieutenant governor was president of the senate and possessed a tiebreaking vote. If the lieutenant governor was absent, impeached, or exercising the office of Governor, the Senate was instructed to choose a president pro tempore to preside and break ties. However, the 1988 amendments revised article IV, section 18 to provide that the lieutenant governor "shall have the duties provided by law and those duties of the governor assigned to the lieutenant governor by the governor." In other words, the 1988 amendments removed the lieutenant governor's status as president of the Senate.

The only remaining duty "provided by law" is to receive the powers and duties of governor under article IV, section 17 if the governor leaves office; there are no additional statutory duties imposed upon the lieutenant governor. In other words, the lieutenant governor becomes governor because he or she is already lieutenant governor. As the Montana Supreme Court put it:

When the framers of the Constitution provided for the election of a Governor and a Lieutenant Governor as members of the executive department of the state, but conferred upon the latter no executive power or authority other than in the contingencies mentioned . . . , they manifested the intention that the people elect two qualified heads of that department—the one active, the other his lieutenant, ready at a moment's notice to assume the duties of the office, should his superior officer, for any reason, either temporarily or permanently, become unable to perform them.

Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 371-72; see also State ex rel. Sathre v. Moodie, 258 N.W. 558, 567 (N.D. 1935) ("The Lieutenant Governor, elected at the same election, . . . has been chosen by the people to act as Governor in [the] event the Governor fails to qualify, or is unable to act because of disability."); Olcott I, 181 P. at 483 ("[W]hen the people elected Mr. Olcott . . . , by the very terms of the constitution they elected him to become governor upon the death of Governor Withycombe."); Heil, 7 N.W.2d at 383 (noting the lieutenant governor "was deliberately chosen by the people for no other important purpose than to substitute for the governor"). Therefore, the 1988 amendments do not alter our analysis on this question.

C. Answer. After considering the Iowa Constitution's language and structure, placing it in historical perspective, and comparing other legal analyses on similar constitutional provisions, it is our opinion that under article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution, if the governor resigns and the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor, the lieutenant governor becomes governor and has the title of Governor.<sup>5</sup>

III. If the Lieutenant Governor Becomes Governor, May She Then Appoint a New Lieutenant Governor?

The framers of our 1857 constitution knew the federal precedent of not appointing a new vice president when the office of president “devolved” to the elected vice president. See Iowa Ins. Inst. v. Core Grp. of Iowa Ass’n for Justice, 867 N.W.2d 58, 76 (Iowa 2015) (considering the “circumstances under which the statute was enacted” in order to derive legislative intent); Rudd, 248 N.W.2d at 129 (“When words are enshrined in a governmental charter, so as to speak across centuries, their history, purpose, and intended meaning must be closely examined.”). Yet, despite this precedent, our framers chose not to depart from the federal model and made no express provision for the appointment of a new lieutenant governor when the elected lieutenant governor was performing the duties of the office of Governor. On the contrary, they provided—in article IV, section 19—a clear, tight and complete line of succession for the powers of the executive even in the absence of the elected lieutenant governor. The federal practice, the framers’ decision not to provide for a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor, and the specific constitutional line of succession are strong indications that they did not see the need for a new lieutenant governor.

The governor has always had authority to fill vacancies in state offices when the constitution and laws did not otherwise provide for doing so. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 10. Yet, despite this provision, in the four prior instances when a governor has resigned or died in office, the new governor has not relied upon the authority in section 10 to fill any “vacancy” in the office of lieutenant governor—suggesting that the constitutional framework avoided one. See Annals of Iowa at 533 (noting Governor Newbold did not appoint a new lieutenant governor after Governor Kirkwood’s resignation “because the lieutenant-governorship was not vacant”).

<sup>5</sup> Two of your nine original questions ask whether the lieutenant governor would be required to take a new oath of office and who would be empowered to administer that oath. In light of our opinion as detailed above, the answer to those questions is that no new oath is required. When the lieutenant governor is elected and qualifies by taking an oath before the general assembly to discharge the duties of the office of Lieutenant Governor, those duties already include receiving the powers and duties of Governor should a constitutional contingency arise. Nevertheless, we understand each of the four Iowa lieutenant governors who became governor after the resignation or death of a sitting governor chose to take a ceremonial oath of office (in one form or another) when they assumed their new duties. This is because while no new oath is required, the constitution does not prohibit one.

A. Other States' Experiences. In answering question one, we noted considerable debate among states which use constitutional language similar to our own ("devolve") as to whether the lieutenant governor "becomes" governor or is something less. Interestingly, however, we found virtually no debate on whether the new governor can appoint a new lieutenant governor. The widely-accepted answer to that question is no.

Oregon's experience and constitution mirrors Iowa's in every major respect save one: upon the governor's death the duties of the office devolve upon the Secretary of State, not the lieutenant governor. The Oregon Supreme Court closely examined whether the governor's permanent departure created a vacancy in the office of the Secretary of State. State ex rel. Roberts v. Olcott (Olcott II), 187 P. 286 (Or. 1920). Oregon, like Iowa, had a constitutional provision generally allowing for the governor to fill vacancies in state offices. The Oregon Supreme Court determined, however, that there was no vacancy in the office of Secretary of State when the governor died and the duties (and office) of governor devolved on the Secretary. Id. at 289. The court reasoned that the constitution set forth an unbroken and automatic line of succession. Id.

The same result was reached in a 1939 Michigan Attorney General opinion. That opinion noted that under the "devolve" framework it is well-settled that when the powers and duties of the superior office devolve upon the inferior officer, there is no vacancy in the inferior office. 1939 Mich. Att'y Gen. Rep. at 72 (noting "plain rules of common sense" make clear "that the people never intended to intrust the responsibilities of the governorship to one who has not been elected"); 22 R.C.L. Public Officers § 97, at 442-43 (1918). In other words, when the powers and duties of governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor.<sup>6</sup>

Other states have agreed. See, e.g., Garvey, 195 P.2d at 154 (adhering to the "prevailing view" that "the inferior officer does not vacate his office"); Budd, 45 P. at 1060 ("It is clear that the Lieutenant Governor does not vacate his office when he assumes the powers and duties of the Governorship."); Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 372 (holding the assumption of the duties of the office of governor does not create a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor because "he is discharging the functions of Governor by the mandate of the Constitution, and that by reason of being the Lieutenant Governor"); Sadler, 47 P. at 450 (holding when the powers and duties devolve, "there is no vacancy created thereby in

<sup>6</sup> That legal principle remains true in Michigan even though the Michigan Constitution was thoroughly redrafted in 1961. See 1968 Mich. Att'y Gen. Rep. 234, 235 (Mich. Att'y Gen. Apr. 22, 1968) (recounting debate from the 1961 Michigan constitutional convention that stated if the lieutenant governor became governor after the governor's death or resignation, "there is no replacement for him").

the office of lieutenant governor”); Heller, 42 A. at 156 (finding no vacancy); McBride, 70 P. at 26 (“[T]he office of lieutenant governor did not . . . become vacant, but the officer “remained lieutenant governor, intrusted with the powers and duties of governor.”); Ekern, 280 N.W. at 399 (“He remains lieutenant governor, upon whom devolved the powers and duties of governor. In such a contingency no vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor.”); Okla. Op. Att’y Gen. No. 65-235, at 1 (concluding that when the office of governor “devolves upon, descends to, the Lieutenant Governor, . . . [i]n no sense does the Lieutenant Governor vacate his office”); see also Idaho Op. Att’y Gen. No. 77-1, 1977 WL 25063, at *3 (“[M]ost courts hold that resignation of a governor does not create a ‘vacancy’ in the office of lieutenant governor when that person assumes the devolved duties as governor.”).

There are two court decisions in other states which have reached the opposite conclusion, but neither is persuasive. By statute, Arkansas provides for the special election of a new lieutenant governor. Ark. Code § 7-7-105; Stratton v. Priest, 932 S.W.2d 321 (Ark. 1996) (affirming the constitutionality of the statute). Iowa lacks a comparable statute calling for a special election. Moreover, a special election upholds the elective principle, whereas simply appointing a new lieutenant governor does not.

Under very trying circumstances a divided New York Court of Appeals held that a catchall statute allowing the governor to fill vacancies could be used to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. Skelos v. Paterson, 915 N.E.2d 1141, 1142 (N.Y. 2009). We do not find the Skelos majority’s reasoning persuasive, because it assumes a vacancy exists and decides only who is empowered to fill it. In Iowa, given our framers’ focus on the elective principle and the near-unanimous authority predating Skelos, we hesitate to make a similar assumption. See Okla. Op. Att’y Gen. No. 65-235, at 1 (declining to acquiesce in the “erroneous assumption” that “the office of Lieutenant Governor becomes vacant when the Lieutenant Governor acquires the powers and duties of the Governorship”).

Interestingly, in 1943 the New York Attorney General had opined that a statute allowing the governor to make appointments could not be applied to a lieutenant governor vacancy because it “would lead to the anomalous result that a Governor by appointing a Lieutenant Governor and then resigning could impose upon the people his own choice as their Governor.” 1943 N.Y. Op. Att’y Gen. No. 378, 1943 WL 54210, at *4 (N.Y. Att’y Gen. Aug. 2, 1943).

B. Analysis. Having taken this wealth of information into consideration, we find the answer to your question in the intersection between article IV, sections 14, 15, 17, 18, and 19 of the Iowa Constitution. Section 14 prohibits an individual from holding two offices “except as herein expressly provided.” The subsequent sections then go on to provide for the line of succession in the event of the governor’s death, resignation, removal, or disability. This juxtaposition is not coincidental. In fact, the entire scheme suggests that our framers intended for situations when a single individual would hold two offices—including the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor.<sup>7</sup> Indeed, it means that when the executive powers and duties devolve from the governor to the lieutenant governor, those two offices essentially merge. As we previously stated—the lieutenant governor becomes governor because she is lieutenant governor.

We are persuaded that “[i]f the framers of the Constitution had intended that there should be a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor upon the resignation, death, or permanent removal of the Governor, they could have easily said so.” Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 372; accord Heller, 42 A. at 156 (concluding if the framers intended a vacancy in the lower office, “it is reasonable to believe they would have said so in no uncertain language”). Our framers did not do so. This omission is telling, especially because our constitution was drafted shortly after two Presidents died in office—and especially when other states have amended their constitutions to do so. See, e.g., Del. Const. art. III, § 20 (“Whenever the powers and duties of the office of Governor shall devolve upon the Lieutenant-Governor, . . . his or her office shall become vacant . . . .”); Tex. Const. art. IV, § 16(d) (“On becoming Governor, the person vacates the office of Lieutenant Governor . . . .”); Utah Const. art. VII, § 10(3)(a)(i) (defining vacancies in the office of Lieutenant Governor to include when “the Lieutenant Governor . . . becomes Governor”).

In addition to the framers’ distinct decision not to provide for a vacancy, other provisions referring to the lieutenant governor “acting as” governor or “exercising the office” of governor are further compelling evidence that there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. These provisions referring to the lieutenant governor performing particular functions—as opposed to saying merely “the lieutenant governor”—would be unnecessary and even meaningless if the new governor could simply appoint a “replacement” lieutenant governor. See Iowa Const. art. IV, §§ 15, 18–19 (1857 original version).

The express language of original section 19 (“If the Lieutenant Governor, while acting as Governor . . . .”) contemplates a series of events—something happens to the elected Governor and then something happens to the elected <sup>7</sup> For example, Article III, section 1 prohibits any person from exercising the powers of two branches of government “except in cases hereinafter expressly directed or permitted.” The primary exception to this separation of powers provision originally lay in article IV, sections 15 and 18, which called for the Lieutenant Governor to serve as President of the Senate, and article IV, section 19, which named the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives to the line of succession.

Lieutenant Governor. As the Oregon Supreme Court noted, the purpose of creating a line of succession is to ensure the automatic transfer of power—to ensure that someone is always endowed with the powers of Chief Magistrate. See Olcott II, 187 P. at 289. We believe that was also the purpose of article IV, section 19—to extend the line of gubernatorial succession beyond the lieutenant governor. Inserting a newly-appointed “replacement” lieutenant governor in that order would interrupt the line the framers deliberately chose and make it impossible for section 19’s provisions ever to be fully carried out.

Moreover, allowing for the appointment of a new lieutenant governor would subvert the elective principle that the Iowa framers clearly endorsed. Like his or her predecessor, under our Constitution an appointed lieutenant governor would assume the powers and duties of governor upon the governor’s death, resignation, removal, or disability. In other words, if a lieutenant governor who becomes governor can appoint a new lieutenant, Iowa could have a governor who was not elected by the people. This would be a particularly unpalatable result because a primary reason for creating the office of lieutenant governor, as expressed at the 1857 constitutional convention, was to ensure that the person first in the line of succession was a statewide elected official. See Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 372 (concluding an unelected governor “was never contemplated and never intended by the framers of the Constitution, or the people who adopted it”); 1939 Mich. Att’y Gen. Rep. at 69 (“[I]t was never intended . . . that any person, who has not received the sanction of the electors by direct vote, should be appointed to a position which would entitle him, in certain eventualities, to the high office of governor.”).

Finally, as we have noted, section 17’s devolution provision applies equally to both permanent and temporary disabilities. So must the answer to this question. While Governor Branstad’s prospective resignation would be permanent, it is easy to imagine situations which would remove a governor from office only temporarily. For example, on June 29, 2002 and July 21, 2007, Vice President Dick Cheney assumed the powers and duties of the presidency while President George W. Bush underwent medical procedures. If the lieutenant governor assumed the power and duties of the governorship under similar (temporary) circumstances and appointed a new lieutenant governor, what would happen to those two officials upon the temporarily-disabled governor’s return to the office of Governor? Allowing for the appointment of a new lieutenant governor during a temporary disability would be an absurd result. See Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 372 (“[I]f the Governor were . . . unable temporarily to perform the duties of his office, it could hardly be argued that while the Lieutenant Governor was discharging the duties of the office of Governor, he could appoint a Lieutenant Governor.”); Heller, 42 A. at 158 (concluding a vacancy in the lower office made little sense for temporary disabilities and “could not have been within the contemplation” of those drafting the constitutional provision).

The subsequent amendments to article IV in 1952 and 1988 reinforce our conclusion. In 1952, article IV, section 19 was amended to provide,

If there be a vacancy in the office of Governor and the Lieutenant Governor shall by reason of death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability become incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, the President pro tempore of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed. . . .

Like its predecessor, this version of section 19 contemplates a series of events where the governor is first incapacitated and then the lieutenant governor—while exercising the powers and duties of governor—becomes incapacitated. Just like the original 1857 constitution, nothing in the 1952 amendments contemplates that there is a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor when the sitting governor resigns or dies. See Ekern, 280 N.W. at 398–99 (concluding under language materially identical to revised article IV, section 19 that there is no lieutenant governor vacancy when the powers and duties of governor devolve). Tellingly, the historical practice of not appointing a new lieutenant governor continued following the death of Governor Beardsley in 1954 and the resignation of Governor Hughes in 1969—after the 1952 amendments.

As noted previously, in 1988 article IV was amended to provide for the election of governor and lieutenant governor on the same ticket and to alter the lieutenant governor’s duties by removing her role as president of the senate. The 1988 amendments also amended article IV, section 2 to provide, that “[t]he governor and the lieutenant governor shall be elected by the qualified electors.” This latter amendment reinforces the framers’ commitment to the elective principle.

Nothing in the 1988 amendments specifically altered the line of succession outlined in sections 17 and 19. Contemporary editorials do not indicate that the voters contemplated anything other than the single-ticket issue and the lieutenant governor’s duties.<sup>8</sup> See, e.g., Editorial, Preventive Maintenance, Des Moines Reg., Oct. 16, 1988, at 2C; Thomas A. Fogarty, <sup>8</sup> This is in stark contrast to Utah, where its 1980 constitutional amendments addressing gubernatorial succession were presented to the voters as mirroring the succession of the federal government—which by this time had adopted the 25th Amendment. Utah Op. Att’y Gen. No. 03-001, 2003 WL 21996258 (Utah Att’y Gen. Aug. 18, 2003).

Lawmakers Seek to Have Governor, Lt. Gov. Run as Team, Des Moines Reg. (Feb. 3, 1988); Thomas A. Fogarty, Voters to Decide if Governor, Lt. Gov. Should Run as a Team, Des Moines Reg. (Apr. 13, 1988); Linda Lantor, Lieutenant Governor Amendments Big Winners, Des Moines Reg. (Nov. 9, 1988).

The 1988 amendments' failure to alter the line of succession or address the question of a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor is striking considering the intervening history between 1952 and 1988. Originally the U.S. Constitution contained language mirroring Iowa's devolution framework. The U.S. Constitution, however, was amended in 1967 following the assassination of President Kennedy. The 25th Amendment to the United States Constitution expressly provided that the vice president becomes president and granted the President the authority to appoint a new vice president with Congressional approval. U.S. Const. amend. 25, §§ 1, 2.

Iowa's legislators and voters in 1988 were obviously aware of the change in the federal system; President Ford became the first unelected U.S. President just the decade before. Yet, Iowa did not attempt to follow the new federal model. While it is often dangerous to reach a conclusion based upon legislative inaction, by declining to adopt the federal model, we believe the amendments ratified our historical precedent—namely, that the lieutenant governor assumes the title, powers, and duties of governor, but does not appoint a new lieutenant governor. See Chiodo v. Section 43.24 Panel, 846 N.W.2d 845, 862 (Iowa 2014) (Mansfield, J., specially concurring).

Because it is our opinion that upon a governor's resignation, the lieutenant governor will hold both the Office of Governor and the Office of Lieutenant Governor, as expressly permitted by Article IV, section 14, there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor to be filled. Cf. Olcott I, 181 P. at 481 (relying on "except as permitted" language to conclude an individual could "hold the offices of governor and secretary of state at the same time"). As a result, under these facts, Iowa Code section 69.8 does not apply. See Iowa Code § 69.8(2) (referring to the governor filling "a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor" (emphasis added)). Consequently, we need not opine on the statute's constitutionality.<sup>9</sup>

C. Answer. It is our opinion that if the governor resigns and the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor, that person does not have constitutional authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor. Upon the governor's resignation, the powers and duties of the office will devolve or fall upon the lieutenant governor—who does not ascend or rise to the office of Governor. However, under our constitutional framework, by possessing the powers and duties of the chief magistrate, the lieutenant governor becomes governor for all intents and purposes, is entitled to use the title of Governor, and is entitled to the compensation of governor for the remainder of the term. The lieutenant governor takes on this authority because she is lieutenant governor. In other words, upon a governor's resignation, the lieutenant governor will hold both the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. There is no vacancy to be filled. Furthermore, on these facts, permitting the appointment of a new lieutenant governor would disregard Iowa's historical practice, violate the elective principle, and interrupt the clear, tight and complete line of succession set out in our constitution.

<sup>9</sup> Because it is not the factual context in which you have asked your questions, we do not address whether section 69.8 would be applicable if the lieutenant governor resigned or died in office while the governor remained. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has suggested that a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor exists in that factual scenario, but not when the powers and duties of governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor. See Ekern, 280 N.W. at 399.
