ERIC TABOR
CHIEF DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL

IOWA DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

June 9, 2017

William Gustoff
State Central Committee Member
Republican Party of Iowa
621 East Ninth Street
Des Moines, IA 50309

Dear Mr. Gustoff:

Please find enclosed a disk with records which are responsive to your public records request dated May 3, 2017 (enclosed). The response was made in accordance with our discussions which narrowed the scope of the request. (Email string enclosed.)

The following materials have been withheld:

- 18 email strings have been withheld because they constitute attorney work product which is confidential under Iowa Code section 22.7(4) and case law.
- 5 email strings are being withheld because they constitute attorney work product which is confidential under Iowa Code section 22.7(4), case law, and a common interest agreement.
- 27 email strings are being withheld because they are attorney/client communications which are confidential under Iowa Code section 622.10, case law, and the Rules of Professional Conduct.
- 1 email string has been redacted because it is a confidential settlement communication under Iowa Code section 22.7(18).

None of the documents withheld, nor redactions made, relate to gubernatorial succession.

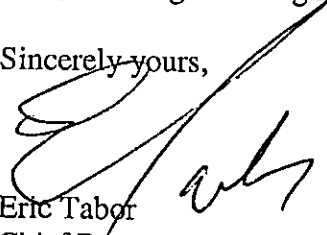

Draft documents, including all drafts of attorney general opinions concerning gubernatorial succession, have been produced. However, this Office is not establishing a precedent with respect to draft attorney general opinions and does not waive its right to consider withholding draft attorney general opinions in the future. Iowa Code section 22.7(65) is certainly less than clear and has not been interpreted by the courts.

William Gustoff

Although the review and production of these records consumed a considerable amount of time, no charge is being imposed.

Sincerely yours,

Eric Tabor
Chief Deputy

To: Attorney General Tom Miller, Jeffrey Thompson, Meghan Gavin, David Ranscht, and any assistant, deputy, paralegal, or secretary working with any of these individuals who participated in the research, preparation, drafting, or editing of the opinions released by the Attorney General's Office between December 7, 2016, and May 2, 2017, including any lawful custodian of these records.

Please consider this a formal request, pursuant to the Iowa Open Records Law, for access to, but not copies of, all documents, including but not limited to memos, letters, text messages and e-mails from November 1, 2016, through May 2, 2017, regarding:

- All documents regarding Laurie Belin, Bleeding Heartland, or desmoinesdem@yahoo.com.
- All documents sent to or from current or former employees of the Iowa Democratic Party.

All correspondence sent between the Office of the Attorney General and Senator David Johnson between December 7, 2016, and May 2, 2017.

All correspondence sent between the Office of the Attorney General and Senator Rob Hogg between December 7, 2016, and May 2, 2017.

All correspondence sent between the Office of the Attorney General and Gary Dickey between December 7, 2016, and May 2, 2017.

All correspondence sent between the Office of the Attorney General and Bill Brauch between December 7, 2016, and May 2, 2017.

All correspondence sent between the Office of the Attorney General and Marty Ryan between December 7, 2016, and May 2, 2017.

All correspondence sent between the Office of the Attorney General and Mark Lambert between December 7, 2016, and May 2, 2017.

All correspondence sent between the Office of the Attorney General and members of the Democrat House and Democrat Senate Caucus staff from December 7, 2016, through May 2, 2017 regarding Gubernatorial Succession, Kim Reynolds, Lt. Governor, Terry Branstad, powers and duties of the Governor devolving upon the Lt. Governor, legislator request of formal opinion regarding succession.

All correspondence sent among Jeff Thompson, Eric Tabor, Geoff Greenwood, Kevin McCarthy, Nathan Blake, Rob Sand, John McCormally, Meghan Gavin, and David Ranscht from December 7, 2016, and May 2, 2016, related to Gubernatorial succession, Kim Reynolds, Lt. Governor, Terry Branstad, powers and duties of the Governor devolving upon the Lt. Governor, legislator request of formal opinion regarding succession.

All emails sent to or received by Jeff Thompson, Eric Tabor, Geoff Greenwood, Kevin McCarthy, Nathan Blake, Rob Sand, John McCormally, Meghan Gavin and David Ranscht from December 7, 2016 through May 2, 2017.

This request pertains to the Attorney General's Office, including the Office of Consumer Protection.

Note that this request is NOT specific to emails sent via state-managed email accounts. If some relevant communications were handled through the private e-mail accounts of the listed individuals, we fully expect those to be released as well.

For each redaction or withheld record, please cite the specific statutory basis on which the information is being kept confidential.

Note, this request includes all drafts. Iowa Code section 22.7(65) states, "tentative, preliminary, draft, speculative, or research material, prior to its completion for the purpose for which it is intended and in form prior to the form in which it is submitted for use or used in the actual formulation, recommendation, adoption, or execution of any official policy or action by a public official authorized to make such decisions for the governmental body or the government body. This subsection shall not apply to public records that are actually submitted for use or are used in the formulation, recommendation, adoption, or execution of any official policy or action of a governmental body or a government body by a public official authorized to adopt or execute official policy for the governmental body or the government body. Because Attorney General Miller completed his Formal Opinion on May 1, 2017, Iowa Code Section 22.7(65) is not applicable and all drafts are to be released.

Also, if there is a charge or fee for access to these documents, please provide us with advance notice of any proposed fee, along with a detailed cost estimate that serves as the basis for that fee.

Please let me know where and when I can review the requested documents. Thank you for your assistance.

Respectfully,

William Gustoff
State Central Committee Member

Subject: Re: RPI FOIA Questions

Mr. Tabor,

Thank you for your email of May 15, 2017 (included below) seeking further clarification of our FOIA request regarding the gubernatorial succession opinion issued by Attorney General Tom Miller. In response to your questions (using the numbers indicated in your email):

1. I assume by use of the term "attorney work product" you are referring to Iowa Code Section 22.7(4), which provides confidentiality for "[r]ecords which represent and constitute the work product of an attorney, which are related to litigation or claim made by or against a public body." Unless you are referring to another code section or some other exception to the examination of public records under Iowa Code Chapter 22, I fail to see how Iowa Code Section 22.7(4) applies to any of the records we have requested.

It is not enough that the records are merely "the work product of an attorney," since that could apply to virtually any record of the Office of the Attorney General and render the entirety of Chapter 22 a nullity with regard to your office. To qualify for the attorney work product exception, a record must also be "related to litigation or claim...by or against a public body." That does not appear to be the case here. For any record you do claim to be exempt under Section 22.7(4), please specify the "litigation or claim" to which the record is related to qualify for the exemption.

Thus, with the forgoing analysis and conclusion, I do not think we can narrow our request further than the response we gave to your first request to narrow it, to which we responded in an email from Chad Olsen on May 15, 2017, at about 2:08 pm (also included below).

2. As stated in our reply from Chad Olsen on May 15, 2017, at about 2:08 pm, to your previous request for clarification and narrowing of our request, we have no way of knowing who in your office may have been communicating with the Iowa Democratic Party, the Democrat caucus staffs, Senator David Johnson, Senator Robb Hogg, Gary Dickey, Bill Brauch, Marty Ryan, or Mark Lambert. So, to be clear, we do want the search for those documents to be office-wide and to include all of those parties.

Thank you for your prompt attention to our request. Please contact Chad Olsen or me if you have any further questions.

Sincerely,

Bill Gustoff

Subject: RE: RPI FOIA Questions

Chad - Thank you for the email and your willingness to narrow the search for the materials you want. Some questions:

- (1) With respect to the second paragraph on page 2, I indicated that narrowing the search to the search terms "governor", "Lt. Governor", "Branstad", "Kim Reynolds", or "succession" reduced the number of emails from about 28,000 to about 1,000. In reviewing these 1,000 emails, many matters unrelated to the gubernatorial succession pop up. A good number of these matters are attorney work product and would be withheld. We did a search only using the search word "succession" and that search yielded about 250 emails. If you would prefer the narrower search using "succession", please let me know.
- (2) I am unclear whether you want the search for documents relating to the Iowa Democratic Party, the Democrat caucus staffs, and Laurie Belin to include the entire Office or just the individuals named in your request. Your point # 3 implies the office-wide search only applies to Johnson, Hogg, Dickey, Brauch, Ryan and Lambert.

Thank-you for the clarifications. Eric

Eric,

Thank you for your call seeking clarification on our FOIA request regarding the gubernatorial succession opinion. After speaking with Mr. Gustoff, we have the following clarifications that we hope will facilitate the request and help your office better focus its search for the requested materials:

1. In the second paragraph on Page 2, we ask for all emails sent to/received by the listed individuals. You asked if we wanted all emails, or just those pertaining to the listed search terms. Please provide only the emails pertaining to the listed search terms for those individuals.
2. You expressed concern about complying with supplying all documents related to all past or current employees of the Iowa Democratic Party. Please provide any emails to or from (i) persons with the email extension "@iowademocrats.org"; and (ii) any persons employed or retained on contract by the Iowa Democratic Party in 2016 or 2017, including, but not limited to the following named individuals: Ben Foecke, Andy McQuire, Kevin Geiken, Derek Eadon, Danny Homan, Monica Biddix, Julianne Klampe, Andrew Nelson, Sean Hering, Adam Beaves, Zach Engstrom, Mike Frosolone, Jacob Becklund, Seth Cohen.
3. Regarding communication between the Office of Attorney General and Senator David Johnson, Senator Robb Hogg, Gary Dickey, Bill Brauch, Marty Ryan, and Mark Lambert, we have no way of knowing the individuals within your office with whom they may have been communicating. Therefore, although we would like to be able to narrow our request on this item, we must stick with our position that all individuals in the Office of Attorney General be included in the request.

If you have any further questions, please do not hesitate to call or email.

Thank you,

Chad

The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1.

Do other states have similar provisions?

Yes, materially identical ("a chief magistrate")	No provision	No—power vested in the governor	No—power vested in a governor
Alabama	Arizona	Alaska	Delaware
Arkansas	Minnesota	California	Florida
Kentucky	Vermont (enumerates governor's powers and expressly says Lt. Gov. is empowered to perform them "in the governor's absence")	Colorado	Hawaii
Massachusetts: "There shall be a supreme executive magistrate, who shall be styled, the governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts . . . ."		Connecticut	Indiana
Nevada		Georgia	Kansas
Oklahoma		Idaho	Maine
South Carolina		Illinois	Maryland
		Louisiana: "The governor shall be the chief executive officer of the state."	Mississippi
		Michigan	Missouri
		Montana	New Jersey

		Nebraska	Oregon
		New Mexico	Rhode Island
		New York	Tennessee
		North Carolina	Virginia
		North Dakota	Washington
		Ohio	Wisconsin
		Pennsylvania	Wyoming
		South Dakota
		Texas (just provides that governor shall be chief executive officer of the state)
		Utah
		West Virginia

New Hampshire is not included in the table above because it has a hybrid provision: "There shall be a supreme executive magistrate, who shall be styled the Governor of the State of New Hampshire, and whose title shall be His Excellency. The executive power of the state is vested in the governor." N.H. Const. pt. 2, art. 41. Perhaps it fits in the "vested in the governor" category. Massachusetts might fall along the same lines.

“Devolve” only (or equivalent) (not including Iowa)	“become” or “succeed” only (re: resignation)	Distinction	Language has changed
Arkansas—but in that state, “devolve” has been held to mean that the lieutenant governor nonetheless becomes governor. See Bryant v. English , 843 S.W.2d 308, 309 (Ark. 1992).	North Dakota— “shall succeed to the office”	Alabama	U.S. Const.
Idaho	Oregon—“shall become governor”	Alaska	Arizona—formerly used only “devolve” but now distinguishes between permanent and temporary vacancies.
Kentucky—“shall exercise all the power and authority appertaining to the office”	Rhode Island—“shall fill the office”	Colorado	California—formerly used only “devolve” but now distinguishes between permanent and temporary vacancies.
Massachusetts— “perform all the duties”		Connecticut	Florida—formerly used only “devolve” but now distinguishes between permanent and temporary vacancies.
Nevada—a vacancy means the lieutenant governor “remains lieutenant governor, but invested with the powers and duties of governor.” State v. Sadler , 47 P. 450, 450 (Nev. 1897).		Delaware—powers and duties that devolve means the Lt. gov.’s office “shall become vacant,” but no vacancy occurs if the Lt. gov. “is acting as Governor during a temporary disability of the Governor.”	Michigan—a 1940 AG opinion discusses “devolve” but the Michigan Constitution now distinguishes between permanent and temporary vacancies.
New Hampshire— confers the title of “acting Governor.”		Georgia	Montana—formerly used only “devolve” but now distinguishes between permanent and temporary vacancies.

Oklahoma—but in that state, “the office” devolves, not just the powers and duties. A court decision has concluded that the successor actually becomes governor. Fitzpatrick v. McAlister , 248 P. 569, 572–73 (Okla. 1926).		Hawaii	New Jersey—formerly used just “devolve” but now distinguishes between permanent vacancy and temporary disability
Tennessee		Illinois	Utah—formerly used “devolve” and a 2003 AG opinion concluded “devolve” means the lieutenant governor actually becomes governor. Nonetheless, the Utah Constitution was amended after 2003 and now distinguishes between permanent vacancies and temporary disabilities
Vermont—uses “act as Governor” and “exercising the office”		Indiana
Washington  A court decision concluded when the governor dies, “there is no vacancy in the office of governor.” State v. McBride , 70 P. 25, 26 (Wash. 1902).		Kansas
West Virginia—“act as governor”		Louisiana
		Maine
		Maryland
		Minnesota

		Mississippi—when vacancy is permanent, “the Lieutenant Governor shall possess the powers and discharge the duties of the office.” When vacancy is temporary, lieutenant governor only discharges duties.
		Missouri
		Nebraska
		New Mexico
		New York
		North Carolina
		Ohio
		Pennsylvania
		South Carolina
		South Dakota
		Texas
		Virginia
		Wisconsin

TOTALS

“Devolve” or equivalent 12 (13 including Iowa)

- 2 of those states (AR/OK) have court decisions concluding “devolve” still confers the office
- Oklahoma is potentially distinguishable because there, “the office” devolves, not just the powers and duties
- 3 of those states (NV/WA/WY) have court decisions concluding it doesn’t

Distinction between permanent vacancy and temporary disability: 27

Changes from “devolve” to distinguish between permanent vacancy and temporary disability: 7 (AZ/CA/FL/MI/MT/NJ/UT)

- 1 of those states (UT) features an AG opinion concluding “devolve” still confers the office, but the state constitution was nonetheless amended to be clearer
- 6 of those states (AZ/CA/FL/MI/MT/NJ) have court decisions concluding “devolve” doesn’t confer the office and the constitution has since been amended.

OVERALL: 13 “devolve” (including IA); 3 “shall become;” 34 distinctions.

The Honorable David Johnson
State Senator
PO Box 279
Ocheyedan, Iowa 51354

Dear Senator Johnson:

Thank you for your letter of February 1, 2017. Your letter references Governor Terry Branstad's recent nomination to serve as United States Ambassador to China and poses nine specific questions about the effect of his potential resignation as Governor of Iowa. We agree that your letter raises important legal questions about Iowa's constitutional framework for the succession of executive power. This office has not previously addressed these questions directly, nor has the Iowa Supreme Court. Thus, we believe they are appropriately addressed in an official opinion of the Attorney General under Iowa Code section 13.2(e).

We share your belief that these important issues require a thoughtful and detailed analysis. Taken as a whole, the nine questions you pose implicate two central constitutional questions. Those two important questions of law are:

First question: If the governor resigns, does the lieutenant governor become governor?

Second question: If the lieutenant governor becomes governor, may she then appoint a new lieutenant governor?

The answers to these questions must flow from a careful consideration of the succession framework set forth in the words and structure of the Iowa constitution. See Rudd v. Ray, 248 N.W.2d 125, 129 (Iowa 1976) ("The framers of our constitution necessarily gave us their ideas in the words they agreed upon."). The debates of the 1857 constitutional convention also shed important light on the meaning and intent of the constitutional provisions establishing that framework. See N. W. Halsey & Co v. City of Belle Plaine, 104 N.W. 494, 496 (Iowa 1905) (noting that reading the constitutional debates may aid in a fuller understanding of constitutional provisions). Finally, our answers can and should be informed by interpretations of the same or similar provisions in other states' constitutions. See Van Horn v. City of Des Moines, 191 N.W. 144, 148 (Iowa 1922) (considering "similar provisions in the Constitution[s] of other states" to decide an issue of first impression).

I. Background

We first provide context for the legal questions by identifying the relevant constitutional provisions, examining portions of the 1857 constitutional convention, and noting historical practice both in Iowa and on the federal level.

A. Constitutional Provisions. Article IV of the Iowa Constitution establishes the executive branch and sets forth a framework for the succession of executive power. Some provisions of article IV have been amended since 1857, but we initially focus on the original provisions because those established the original framework. In doing so, we consider all the original executive branch provisions without placing undue significance on one section. See Rolfe State Bank v. Gunderson, 794 N.W.2d 561, 565 (Iowa 2011) (“[W]e avoid placing undue importance on isolated portions of an enactment by construing all parts of the enactment together.”). We also remain mindful not to render any provision meaningless or redundant. See Iowa Code § 4.4(2) (2017) (presuming every piece of language is intended to be effective); Mall Real Estate, L.L.C. v. City of Hamburg, 818 N.W.2d 190, 198 (Iowa 2012) (“We . . . interpret statutes in such a way that portions of it do not become redundant or irrelevant.”); see also Junkins v. Branstad, 448 N.W.2d 480, 483 (Iowa 1989) (“Constitutional provisions are generally subject to the same rules of construction as statutes.”).

Considering article IV as a whole promotes a holistic understanding of the constitutional framework, because each provision can inform the others. See Iowa Code § 4.1(38) (“Words and phrases shall be construed according to the context . . . .”); see also Allen v. Clayton, 18 N.W. 663, 667 (Iowa 1884) (noting that to determine the meaning of a constitutional provision, “the sections preceding and following it, which have reference to the same subject-matter, must be read and considered”); State ex rel. Martin v. Heil, 7 N.W.2d 375, 381 (Wis. 1942) (“[T]he provision should be examined in its setting in order to find out . . . the real meaning and substantial purpose of those who adopted it.”). The following constitutional provisions are relevant to our analysis.

Article IV, section 1 provides that “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1. In other words, the person who has the powers is governor. This section has remained unchanged since 1857.

Article IV, sections 2 and 3 originally established that the governor and lieutenant governor would be elected by the people—but not on the same ticket. Article IV, section 6 required candidates for both offices to have the same qualifications.

Article IV, section 10 provided, "When any office shall, from any cause, become vacant, and no mode is provided by the Constitution and laws for filling such vacancy, the Governor shall have power to fill such vacancy, by granting a commission, which shall expire at the end of the next session of the General Assembly, or at the next election by the people."

Article IV, section 14 provided, "No persons shall, while holding any office under the authority of the United States, or this State, execute the office of Governor, or Lieutenant Governor, except as hereinafter expressly provided."

Article IV, section 15 established that the lieutenant governor would serve until a successor was elected and qualified, and that "while acting as Governor," the lieutenant governor would receive the same pay as provided for the governor.

Article IV, section 17 provides,

In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

This section has remained unchanged since 1857.

Article IV, section 18 made the lieutenant governor President of the Senate with a tiebreaking vote, but provided that "when [the lieutenant governor] shall exercise the office of Governor, the Senate shall choose a President pro tempore."

Article IV, section 19 continued the line of succession beyond the lieutenant governor:

If the Lieutenant Governor, while acting as Governor, shall be impeached, displaced, resign, or die, or otherwise become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the President pro tempore of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled, or the disability removed; and if the President of the Senate, for any of the above causes, shall be rendered incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, the same shall devolve upon the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Although each provision is important, article IV, section 17 plays the biggest part in answering both questions. "[T]he purpose of art. IV, § 17 is to ensure that the citizens of Iowa are not without a person capable of performing the constitutional and statutory duties imposed upon a governor.” 1980 Op. Att’y Gen. 550, 1980 WL 25903, at *3 (Iowa Att’y Gen. Jan. 2, 1980).

Two notable aspects of article IV, section 17 inform our analysis. First, while death and resignation are permanent exits from office, the phrase “other disability” includes temporary conditions such as physical or mental incapacity or time spent undergoing a medical procedure. See 1923 Op. Att’y Gen. 263, 263 (Iowa Att’y Gen. Aug. 23, 1923) (answering a question posed by the governor about the operation of article IV, section 17 during a several-month hiatus recommended by his physician). Therefore, article IV, section 17 must operate within a framework applicable to several possible factual scenarios without creating “friction in the machinery of government.” Fitzpatrick v. McAlister, 248 P. 569, 576 (Okla. 1926). Because the provision applies equally to permanent and temporary disabilities, so too must the answers to the legal questions we address.

The second important aspect of article IV, section 17 is the word “devolve.” That word “is defined by lexicographers and in law dictionaries as meaning to roll or tumble down or descend.” Id. at 573 (citing authorities indicating that meaning as of 1926); see also “Devolve,” Black’s Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014) (defining “devolve” to include transferring rights, duties, or powers and passing by transmission); “Devolve,” Webster’s Third New Int’l Dictionary (1993) (defining “devolve” as “to flow or roll from a situation viewed as higher to one that is lower” and “to fall or be passed . . . as an obligation or responsibility”); 12 Words & Phrases 546 (1954). The overall concept is that the word connotes downward movement. This downward movement means the powers and duties of the office of Governor fall upon the lieutenant governor; the lieutenant governor does not rise to the office of Governor. See Okla. Op. Att’y Gen. No. 65-235, at 1-2 (Okla. Att’y Gen. May 19, 1965) (“The office of Governor devolves upon the Lieutenant Governor, he does not ascend to it.”). This distinction is both important and purposeful.

Viewing article IV as a whole, section 1 and original section 18 complement each other and dovetail with sections 17 and 19. The words in section 18 indicate that when the powers and duties devolved (as section 17 instructed), the lieutenant governor would “exercise the office of Governor.” That aligns with the foundational principle that the person who has the powers is governor. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1. The foundational principle is paramount. Sections 17 and 19 operate to ensure that there is always a successor designated to exercise those powers and duties—even in the absence of the elected lieutenant governor.

Additionally, article IV, section 14 is instructive because it expressly permits one person to hold more than one office if the constitution provides for it. The 1857 constitution provided for two possibilities immediately following section 14, both of which referred specifically to the lieutenant governor: the lieutenant governor as governor and the lieutenant governor as senate president. See Iowa Const. art. IV, §§ 17–19 (original 1857 version). Section 19 further contemplated other officials holding more than one office by providing for the senate president as governor and the speaker of the house as governor.

B. Constitutional Debates. The Iowa Constitution of 1846 made no provision for a lieutenant governor. However, as the 1857 constitutional convention began, one delegate proposed that a committee dedicated to formulating the executive branch of government consider “providing for the election of a Lieutenant Governor who, by virtue of his office, shall . . . exercise all the powers and have the title of Governor in case of the death, removal, or other disability of the Governor.” 1 The Debates of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Iowa 39 (W. Blair Lord rep., 1857) [hereinafter The Debates]. The convention agreed to the resolution. Id. Accordingly, the drafters of article IV, section 17 envisioned that the lieutenant governor would “have the title of Governor” if the governor left office, id.—and utilized the word “devolve” to accomplish that result. See Heil, 7 N.W.2d at 381–82 (recounting similar debate from the Wisconsin constitutional convention in 1847).

The framers of our 1857 constitution also spent significant time debating the constitutional line of succession. Several of the delegates questioned the need for a lieutenant governor at all—possibly because Iowa had no lieutenant governor before 1857—and offered amendments to article IV, section 17. For instance, delegate Warren proposed an amendment substituting the words “Secretary of State” for “Lieutenant Governor.” 1 The Debates at 587. Delegate Clarke of Johnson County<sup>1</sup> proposed instead “that the duties of the office of Governor, in case of a vacancy, shall devolve upon the president of the Senate.” Id. The convention actually passed Clarke’s amendment, eliminating the position of lieutenant governor from the 1857 constitution and altering the constitutional line of succession.

The next morning, however, delegate Gray asked his colleagues “to consider well the importance of the matter before striking” the provisions regarding the lieutenant governor. Id. at 591. An advantage of retaining the office was the fact that the lieutenant governor “will be elected directly by the people, instead of by the Legislature.” Id. Gray found that important because “We all seem to agree in placing elections, as far as possible, directly in the power of the people.” Id. Delegate Clarke of Henry County agreed:

Gentlemen [of the convention] do not reflect that they may be taking from the people the power of selecting their own chief magistrate. When a man is a candidate for the office of Lieutenant Governor, the people always vote for him with the understanding that circumstances may arise which will make him their Governor. But if you give to the Senate the power of selecting the man who may be the Governor of the people, you take from the people this power and put it into the hands of the Senate.

Delegate Gray's remarks sparked renewed debate on the subject, and some delegates changed their minds. For example, delegate Wilson offered that although he had originally voted to eliminate the position of lieutenant governor, "upon reflection . . . the advantages in favor of [having a lieutenant governor] are far superior to the disadvantages." Id. at 593. Most significant, however, were Mr. Clark's remarks:

I voted yesterday to strike out the office of Lieutenant-Governor. I had not reflected upon it well, and I am inclined to the opinion that I did not vote right. Upon hearing the argument thus far upon the question, and upon reflection, I am disposed to favor the office of Lieut[enant] Governor, for one reason, if there were no other: I believe that an executive officer, whoever he may be that shall perform the duties of that office, whether Governor or Lieutenant-Governor, ought to be elected directly by the people, in all cases, at least so far as it is possible to provide for it. We elect the Governor by the direct votes of the people—by the popular will—by the popular voice. In case of his removal or disability, I see no reason why the person filling his place should not be elected directly by the whole people as much as the Governor himself.

After some further debate, the convention voted 19–14 against the amendment that would have struck the office of lieutenant governor. Id. at 595. Accordingly, the convention also restored other provisions relating to the office of lieutenant governor. See id. at 596.

It is evident, both from this historical record and because "[a]ll policital power is inherent in the people," Iowa Const. art. I, § 2, that this "elective principle" lies at the core of our constitutional framework. The framers intended that those in the gubernatorial line of succession be elected. Section 3 further reinforced the framers' commitment to the elective principle by requiring that the lieutenant governor "be elected."

C. Iowa Historical Practice. Four Iowa governors have either resigned or died while in office. In 1877, Governor Samuel Kirkwood resigned to become a candidate for the United States Senate. Lieutenant Governor Joshua Newbold assumed the powers and duties of Governor upon the resignation. Governor Albert Cummins resigned in 1908 after his election to the United States Senate. Lieutenant Governor Warren Garst assumed the powers and duties of the Governor upon the resignation. In 1954, Governor William Beardsley was killed in an automobile accident. Upon his death, Lieutenant Governor Leo Elthon assumed the powers and duties of Governor. Finally, in 1969 Governor Harold Hughes resigned to take his seat in the United States Senate. Lieutenant Governor Robert Fulton assumed the powers and duties of the Governor upon the resignation.

In each of these four instances, the lieutenant governor (upon whom the powers and duties of the office devolved) was treated as Governor in every respect, but did not appoint a new lieutenant governor. In each of these four instances, a new lieutenant governor was eventually elected by popular vote at the same time the next governor was elected.

This historical practice reveals several significant trends. First, upon the death or resignation of a sitting governor, the lieutenant governor has always been considered governor. Second, the new governor has never appointed or named a new lieutenant governor.

D. Federal Language and History. In 1857, when the Iowa Constitution was ratified, article II, section 1, clause 6 of the United States Constitution read: "In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President . . ." Thus, article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution closely tracked language in the United States Constitution at the time.

Under that federal language, multiple presidents died in office. Following each death, the Vice President was considered President in full. Two of these instances occurred before 1857: John Tyler in 1841 and Millard Fillmore in 1850. Because of this history, the delegates to the 1857 Iowa constitutional convention likely understood the word "devolve" to mean that upon the governor's exit from office, the lieutenant governor would be governor following a downward movement of powers. See State v. Baldon, 829 N.W.2d 785, 810 (Iowa 2013) (Appel, J., specially concurring) (noting "the drafters of the Iowa Constitution were well aware" of existing federal law when writing in 1857); Gallarno v. Long, 243 N.W. 719, 723 (Iowa 1932) ("[H]istorical . . . matters may be taken into consideration when interpreting the Constitution.").

A federal court decision from 1867 confirms this understanding:

Three times, since the adoption of the constitution, the president has died, and, under [article II, section 1, clause 6], the powers and duties of the office of president have devolved upon the vice president. All branches of the government have, under such circumstances, recognized the vice president as holding the office of president, as authorized to assume its title . . . . It has never been supposed that, under the provision of the constitution, the vice president . . . acted as the servant, or agent, or locum tenens of the deceased president, or in any other capacity than as holding the office of president fully, for the time being, by virtue of express authority emanating from the United States.

Merriam v. Clinch, 17 F. Cas. 68, 70 (C.C.S.D.N.Y. 1867). The three instances to which the court referred were President Tyler, President Fillmore, and President Andrew Johnson in 1865.

Likewise, the Oklahoma Supreme Court relied upon federal history several decades later in analyzing the word “devolve:”

[U]pon the death of President Wm. H. Harrison, Vice President Tyler became President of the United States. For almost a century this construction of the federal Constitution has stood without question. It has been recognized as correct, and acquiesced in, not only by the departments of state and all the states of the Union, but officially recognized by every civilized government in the world.

Defendant suggests that no court has ever pronounced that to be the law. To our mind, it is so clearly correct that no one has ever presumed to test its correctness in the courts. Therefore it should have greater weight than an ordinary departmental construction, not only because it has stood for almost a century, but because it has been recognized as the correct conception of our system of government, and because, for eighty-five years under this construction, there has been no friction in the machinery of government by reason of such construction.

Fitzpatrick, 248 P. at 576; see also Olcott v. Hoff (Olcott I), 181 P. 466, 467 (Or. 1919) (“[U]pon the death of the president no one has ever claimed that the vice president . . . would not succeed to the office of president itself . . . .”); 1939 Mich. Att’y Gen. Rep. 69, 73 (Mich. Att’y Gen. Mar. 28, 1939) (“No one would contend that upon death or resignation of the President, the Vice President does not thereby become President of the United States . . . .”). Between Merriam in 1867 and Fitzpatrick in 1926, three more presidents died in office—and once again, after each death, the vice President was considered President.<sup>2</sup> The consistent federal understanding of the word “devolve” over several decades further informs our determination of what “devolve” means in article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution.

Moreover, President Tyler did not appoint a new vice president in 1841. A new vice president did not take office until 1845, following the election of George Dallas to the office almost four years later. In 1850, when Millard Fillmore assumed the powers and duties of the presidency upon Zachary Taylor’s death, he too did not appoint a new vice president. Once again, the country waited for a new vice president for almost three years until the election of William King.

This historical practice continued upon the death of every President. The most recent instance occurred upon the death of President John F. Kennedy. President Lyndon Johnson did not appoint a new vice president in 1963. Our nation’s next vice president, Hubert Humphrey, was elected in 1964.

Having established this historical perspective, we now proceed to analyze the legal questions.

II. If the Governor Resigns, Does the Lieutenant Governor Become Governor?

Beyond dictionary definitions, another important guidepost in determining the meaning of “devolve” is what it was understood to mean at the time it was enacted:

In the interpretation of the Constitution . . . we are to ascertain the meaning by getting at the intention of those making the instrument. What thought was in the mind of those making the Constitution—what was their intention, is the great leading rule of construction.

Ex parte Pritz, 9 Iowa 30, 32 (1858); accord Griffin v. Pate, 884 N.W.2d 182, 186 (Iowa 2016) (beginning analysis of a constitutional provision “by looking back to review the history” of it “to gain a better understanding of the concept” as applied in a current case); Redmond v. Ray, 268 N.W.2d 849, 853 (Iowa 1978) (“In construing a constitution, our purpose is to ascertain the intent of the framers.”). The framers of our 1857 constitution were undoubtedly aware of the federal precedent under the “devolve” framework. This federal practice, and the framers’ resolution that the lieutenant governor could “have the title of Governor” if the governor left office, 1 The Debates at 39, are strong indications that the verb "devolve" was thought to convey the entire office of Governor upon the lieutenant governor.

A. Other States' Experiences. Iowa is not the first state to face significant legal questions regarding a governor's permanent departure from office. While other states' constitutions and experiences do not alone determine what the Iowa Constitution means, see Handeland v. Brown, 216 N.W.2d 574, 577 (Iowa 1974), we find valuable to our analysis the language used in those states' constitutions and court decisions or attorney general opinions involving that language.

Our review of available authority reveals a relatively even divide. When the relevant constitutional provision utilized the word "devolve," some authorities in other states have concluded that the lieutenant governor becomes governor. In view of the question as we have phrased it, we call these the "yes" decisions. See, e.g., Bryant v. English, 843 S.W.2d 308, 311 (Ark. 1992) ("[W]e hold that . . . the Lieutenant Governor serves as Governor for the residue of the term . . ."); State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d 369, 370 (Mont. 1934) ("[W]hen the Governor resigns or is permanently removed from office, there is no vacancy in the office of Governor in the sense that there is no one left with power to discharge the duties imposed upon the Governor."); Fitzpatrick, 248 P. at 577 ("Mr. Trapp is just as much a Governor, in every literal and practical sense and effect, as though he had been elected to the office."); Chadwick v. Earhart, 4 P. 1180, 1181 (Or. 1884) ("[I]t is not shown how . . . a person can fill the office of governor without being governor."); State ex rel. Murphy v. McBride, 70 P. 25, 26 (Wash. 1902) ("The constitution having provided that in case of the death of the governor the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of governor."); 1939 Mich. Att'y Gen. Rep. at 73 (concluding when the governor dies, the lieutenant governor is "governor of the state [for] all intents and purposes").

Others have concluded that the lieutenant governor or next person "in line" is not truly governor. We call these the "no" decisions. See, e.g., State ex rel. De Concini v. Garvey, 195 P.2d 153, 154 (Ariz. 1948) (concluding the person upon whom the powers and duties of governor devolve after the governor's death or resignation "is not governor de jure or de facto but merely ex officio"); Futrell v. Oldham, 155 S.W. 502, 504 (Ark. 1913) (concluding under a previous version of the Arkansas Constitution that the person upon whom the powers and duties of governor devolve "acts as Governor . . . merely by virtue of his office as president of the senate, and does not actually become Governor"); People ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 45 P. 1060, 1060 (Cal. 1896) ("[I]t would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor the latter thereby becomes governor . . ."); State ex rel. Hardin v. Sadler, 47 P. 450, 450 (Nev. 1897) ("If a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor . . . . The officer remains lieutenant governor, but invested with the powers and duties of governor.”); State v. Heller, 42 A. 155, 157 (N.J. 1899) (“The language used is not ambiguous. It declares that the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve on the president of the senate; it does not confer upon him the title of the office.”); State ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, 280 N.W. 393, 399 (Wis. 1938) (“[T]he lieutenant governor does not become governor. He remains lieutenant governor, upon whom devolves the powers and duties of governor.”).

B. Analysis. The substantial number of “no” decisions is significant. The “no” decisions are based on a careful parsing of the word “devolve” and the other relevant constitutional language. When resolving legal questions, precision and nuance matter. See Rivera v. Woodward Res. Ctr., 865 N.W.2d 887, 897 (Iowa 2015). Thus, placing Iowa among the “no” decisions would be legally defensible. Indeed, in 1977, the Idaho Attorney General acknowledged that, although he believed them to be somewhat counterintuitive, the “no” decisions suggested “the lieutenant governor never truly succeeds to the office of governor” under the Idaho Constitution (which at the time used the word “devolve”). Idaho Op. Att’y Gen. No. 77-1, 1977 WL 25063, at *1 (Idaho Att’y Gen. Jan. 4, 1977). The Idaho Attorney General went on to recommend that only the Idaho Supreme Court could answer the question definitively as a matter of Idaho law. See id.

Nonetheless, we find the “yes” decisions more persuasive than the “no” decisions for several reasons. First, we believe the “no” decisions elevate form over substance, which the Iowa Supreme Court has repeatedly cautioned against. See, e.g., Lewis v. Jaeger, 818 N.W.2d 165, 179 (Iowa 2012); State ex rel. Miller v. Smokers Warehouse Corp., 737 N.W.2d 107, 110 (Iowa 2007); Van Baale v. City of Des Moines, 550 N.W.2d 153, 156 (Iowa 1996). The “no” decisions are somewhat technical, drawing a linguistic distinction that, while noteworthy, makes no substantive difference under the circumstances presented here. See Harriman v. State, 2 Greene 270, 285 (Iowa 1849) (considering it the court’s “imperative duty” to “disregard . . . unmeaning technicalities, and to look more to the substance and merits of each case”); see also Heil, 7 N.W.2d at 381 (“It is extremely important in the interpretation of constitutional provisions that we avoid determinations based purely on technical . . . argument and that we seek to discover the true spirit and intent of the provisions examined.”). Under Iowa’s framework, there could be little dispute that if the governor resigns, the lieutenant governor would possess authority to sign legislation, issue pardons, and even receive the governor’s salary. Instead, any dispute centers on the exact description of his or her new role.

On that score, article IV, section 1 of the Iowa Constitution carries significant weight. That section provides, “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1. In other words, the person who has the powers is governor. The powers make the governor, carrying with them the title. As the Arkansas Supreme Court concluded under a similar provision in the Arkansas Constitution, this means when the powers and duties of governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor, that person is thereafter styled the governor. See Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 313; accord Fitzpatrick, 248 P. at 572 (“The person who . . . fills the office of chief magistrate is styled ‘the Governor of Oklahoma.’ He is the ‘Governor’ for the simple reason that he governs.”). Thus, there is no substantive difference between governor and acting governor. See State ex rel. Chatterton v. Grant, 73 P. 470, 474 (Wyo. 1903) (concluding that, after the governor died, the question whether a person “[wa]s in fact the governor of the state” was immaterial because, whether governor or acting governor, the person had the powers and duties of the office). A person acting as governor after the powers have devolved is governor, because of article IV, section 1.<sup>3</sup>

Second, the “yes” decisions comport with the Iowa framers’ understanding of the lieutenant governor’s role and with our state’s historical practice. In creating the office of lieutenant governor, the framers expected that person to “have the title of Governor” if the governor left office. 1 The Debates at 39. Furthermore, each time the governor of Iowa has resigned or died in office, the lieutenant governor was thereafter treated as governor. See William H. Fleming, The Second Officer in the Government, reprinted in Annals of Iowa: A Historical Quarterly, Vol. XIII, No. 1, at 533–34 (1921) [hereinafter Annals of Iowa] (recalling Governor Kirkwood’s resignation in 1877 and Governor Cummins’s resignation in 1908); Legis. Servs. Agency, Pieces of Iowa’s Past: Lieutenant Governors Who Have Become Governor 2–3 (Mar. 8, 2017), available at <https://www.legis.iowa.gov/docs/publications/TB/855445.pdf> (noting Governor Beardsley’s death in 1954 and Governor Hughes’s resignation in 1969). Indeed, one history of Iowa referred to Kirkwood’s successor as the “ninth governor of Iowa” following Kirkwood’s resignation. 4 Benjamin F. Gue, History of Iowa: From the Earliest Times to the Beginning of the Twentieth Century 199–200 (1903). Although historical practice standing alone does not mandate a similar result now, the historical practice is consistent with the framework of executive power we have described. Gallarno, 243 N.W.2d at 723 (noting history is important in interpreting constitutional provisions); see Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 312 (finding it “of some persuasion” that, when the governor of Arkansas died in office or resigned, the lieutenant governor was historically treated as governor).

<sup>3</sup> This office’s 1923 opinion acknowledges, as it must, that in some instances the powers and duties will devolve only on a temporary basis. To the extent the 1923 opinion describes acting as governor to be substantively different from being governor, we now clarify that issue.

Finally, many of the “no” decisions are driven by legal problems that Iowa’s framework avoids. For example, in Arizona, the court concluded one reason the secretary of state did not become governor was the absence of a provision bestowing upon that person “the emoluments of the office of governor . . . when acting [as] governor.” Garvey, 195 P.2d at 157–58. By contrast, article IV, section 15 of the Iowa Constitution expressly provides that “while acting as governor,” the lieutenant governor is “paid the compensation . . . prescribed for the governor.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 15.

Likewise, the Arkansas Supreme Court expressed concerns in Futrell about the president of the senate—a legislative officer—performing executive branch duties. See Futrell, 155 S.W. at 504; see also Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 312 (explaining that creating the position of lieutenant governor alleviated any separation-of-powers concerns). Iowa’s framework has always avoided that problem. Article III, section 1 permitted the lieutenant governor to preside over the senate by allowing one person to perform both legislative and executive duties where expressly provided. Further, under the 1857 constitution, when the lieutenant governor was also president of the senate, article IV, section 18 directed the senate to elect a president pro tempore when the lieutenant governor was exercising the office of governor. And today, the lieutenant governor no longer has any legislative duties, so there is no separation-of-powers problem. Without potential issues like those faced in Arizona and Arkansas, we find the “yes” decisions to be a better analytical guide.

Iowa’s amendments to article IV do not change or alter our analysis of the effect of article IV, section 17. A 1952 amendment to article IV, section 19 removed a reference to the lieutenant governor “acting as” governor, replacing it with “if there be a vacancy in the office of Governor”—and that language remains today. There is a natural tendency to ascribe significance to the change, but that amendment doesn’t really say much about the title of the person upon whom the powers and duties devolve—because article IV, section 1 controls that question. And in any event, as we have explained, “acting as” governor is simply what the lieutenant governor does when the powers and duties devolve, not a substantive limit on his or her power or title.

The more significant piece of the 1952 amendments, in our view, was a section providing that if the governor-elect died, resigned, or failed to qualify, the lieutenant governor-elect would “assume the powers and duties of governor” upon inauguration. As we have noted, article IV, section 1 would therefore make the person with the powers the governor. In other words, the

1952 amendment solidified—not altered—the existing framework for the transfer of executive power in the event of a constitutional contingency.<sup>4</sup>

In 1972, several provisions of article IV were changed, but they did not affect sections 1 or 17. Originally, article IV, sections 2 and 3 provided the governor and lieutenant governor served two-year terms. The 1972 amendment merely increased both terms to four years. Thus, it does not indicate any significant change in the constitutional framework for transferring executive power. Indeed, the 1972 amendments retained the requirement that the governor and lieutenant governor be elected, and that they serve until successors were elected and qualified.

Iowa enacted more significant amendments in 1988. The 1988 amendments provided for the first time that the governor and lieutenant governor are elected together, on one ticket, “as if these two offices were one and the same.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 3. Before 1988, it was possible for the governor and lieutenant governor to represent different political parties. The amendment brought to fruition a constitutional delegate’s statement at the 1857 convention: “The governor and lieutenant-governor will always, I presume, be the same in politics, and why not have the successor of the governor of the same politics, instead of bringing in one of the antagonistic party?” 1 The Debates at 593.

The 1988 amendments also recast the lieutenant governor’s duties. Under original article IV, section 18, the lieutenant governor was president of the senate and possessed a tiebreaking vote. If the lieutenant governor was absent, impeached, or exercising the office of Governor, the Senate was instructed to choose a president pro tempore to preside and break ties. However, the 1988 amendments revised article IV, section 18 to provide that the lieutenant governor “shall have the duties provided by law and those duties of the governor assigned to the lieutenant governor by the governor.” In other words, the 1988 amendments removed the lieutenant governor’s status as president of the Senate.

The only remaining duty “provided by law” is to receive the powers and duties of governor under article IV, section 17 if the governor leaves office; there are no additional statutory duties imposed upon the lieutenant governor. In other words, the lieutenant governor becomes governor because he or she is already lieutenant governor. As the Montana Supreme Court put it:

When the framers of the Constitution provided for the election of a Governor and a Lieutenant Governor as members of the executive department of the state, but conferred upon the latter no executive power or authority other than in the contingencies mentioned . . . , they manifested the intention that the people elect two qualified heads of that department—the one active, the other his lieutenant, ready at a moment's notice to assume the duties of the office, should his superior officer, for any reason, either temporarily or permanently, become unable to perform them.

Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 371–72; see also State ex rel. Sathre v. Moodie, 258 N.W. 558, 567 (N.D. 1935) (“The Lieutenant Governor, elected at the same election, . . . has been chosen by the people to act as Governor in [the] event the Governor fails to qualify, or is unable to act because of disability.”); Olcott I, 181 P. at 483 (“[W]hen the people elected Mr. Olcott . . . , by the very terms of the constitution they elected him to become governor upon the death of Governor Withycombe.”); Heil, 7 N.W.2d at 383 (noting the lieutenant governor “was deliberately chosen by the people for no other important purpose than to substitute for the governor”). Therefore, the 1988 amendments do not alter our analysis on this question.

C. Answer. After considering the Iowa Constitution’s language and structure, placing it in historical perspective, and comparing other legal analyses on similar constitutional provisions, it is our opinion that under article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution, if the governor resigns and the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor, the lieutenant governor becomes governor and has the title of Governor.<sup>5</sup>

III. If the Lieutenant Governor Becomes Governor, May She Then Appoint a New Lieutenant Governor?

The framers of our 1857 constitution knew the federal precedent of not appointing a new vice president. See Iowa Ins. Inst. v. Core Grp. of Iowa Ass’n for Justice, 867 N.W.2d 58, 76 (Iowa 2015) (considering the “circumstances under which the statute was enacted” in order to derive legislative intent); Rudd, 248 N.W.2d at 129 (“When words are enshrined in a governmental charter, so as to speak across centuries, their history, purpose, and intended meaning must be closely examined.”). Yet, despite this precedent, our framers chose not to depart from the federal model and made no express provision for the appointment of a new lieutenant governor when the elected lieutenant governor was performing the duties of the office of Governor. The federal practice and the framers’ decision not to provide for a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor are strong indications that they did not intend one.

The governor has always had authority to fill vacancies in state offices when the constitution and laws did not otherwise provide for doing so. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 10. Yet, despite this provision, in the four prior instances when a governor has resigned or died in office, the new governor has not relied upon the authority in section 10 to fill any “vacancy” in the office of lieutenant governor—suggesting that there isn’t one. See Annals of Iowa at 533 (noting Governor Newbold did not appoint a new lieutenant governor after Governor Kirkwood’s resignation “because the lieutenant-governorship was not vacant”). Other states’ experiences predominantly, even overwhelmingly, align with this view.

A. Other States’ Experiences. In answering question one, we noted considerable debate among states which use constitutional language similar to our own (“devolve”) as to whether the lieutenant governor “becomes” governor or is something less. Interestingly, however, we found virtually no debate on whether the new governor (or acting governor) can appoint a new lieutenant governor. The widely-accepted answer to that question is no.

Oregon’s experience and constitution mirrors Iowa’s in every major respect save one: upon the governor’s death the duties of the office devolve upon the Secretary of State, not the lieutenant governor. The Oregon Supreme Court closely examined whether the governor’s permanent departure created a vacancy in the office of the Secretary of State. State ex rel. Roberts v. Olcott (Olcott II), 187 P. 286 (Or. 1920). Oregon, like Iowa, had a constitutional provision generally allowing for the governor to fill vacancies in state offices. The Oregon Supreme Court determined, however, that there was no vacancy in the office of Secretary of State when the governor died and the duties (and office) of governor devolved on the Secretary. Id. at 289. The court reasoned that the constitution set forth an unbroken and automatic line of succession. Id.

The same result was reached in a 1939 Michigan Attorney General opinion. That opinion noted that under the “devolve” framework it is well-settled that when the powers and duties of the superior office devolve upon the inferior officer, there is no vacancy in the inferior office. 1939 Mich. Att’y Gen. Rep. at 72 (noting “plain rules of common sense” make clear “that the people never intended to intrust the responsibilities of the governorship to one who has not been elected”); 22 R.C.L. Public Officers § 97, at 442–43 (1918). In other words, when the powers and duties of governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor.<sup>6</sup>

Other states have agreed. See, e.g., Garvey, 195 P.2d at 154 (adhering to the “prevailing view” that “the inferior officer does not vacate his office”); Budd, 45 P. at 1060 (“It is clear that the Lieutenant Governor does not vacate his office when he assumes the powers and duties of the Governorship.”); Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 372 (holding the assumption of the duties of the office of governor does not create a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor because “he is discharging the functions of Governor by the mandate of the Constitution, and that by reason of being the Lieutenant Governor”); Sadler, 47 P. at 450 (holding when the powers and duties devolve, “there is no vacancy created thereby in the office of lieutenant governor”); Heller, 42 A. at 156 (finding no vacancy); McBride, 70 P. at 26 (“[T]he office of lieutenant governor did not . . . become vacant, but the officer “remained lieutenant governor, intrusted with the powers and duties of governor.”); Ekern, 280 N.W. at 399 (“He remains lieutenant governor, upon whom devolved the powers and duties of governor. In such a contingency no vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor.”); Okla. Op. Att’y Gen. No. 65-235, at 1 (concluding that when the office of governor “devolves upon, descends to, the Lieutenant Governor, . . . [i]n no sense does the Lieutenant Governor vacate his office”); see also Idaho Op. Att’y Gen. No. 77-1, 1977 WL 25063, at *3 (“[M]ost courts hold that resignation of a governor does not create a ‘vacancy’ in the office of lieutenant governor when that person assumes the devolved duties as governor.”).

There are two court decisions in other states which have reached the opposite conclusion, but neither is persuasive. By statute, Arkansas provides for the special election of a new lieutenant governor. Ark. Code § 7-7-105; Stratton v. Priest, 932 S.W.2d 321 (Ark. 1996) (affirming the constitutionality of the statute). Iowa lacks a comparable statute calling for a special election. Moreover, a special election upholds the elective principle, whereas simply appointing a new lieutenant governor does not.

Under very trying circumstances a divided New York Court of Appeals held that a catchall statute allowing the governor to fill vacancies could be used to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. Skelos v. Paterson, 915 N.E.2d 1141, 1142 (N.Y. 2009). We do not find the Skelos majority’s reasoning persuasive, because it assumes a vacancy exists and decides only who is empowered to fill it. In Iowa, given our framers’ focus on the elective principle and the near-unanimous authority predating Skelos, we hesitate to make a similar assumption. See Okla. Op. Att’y Gen. No. 65-235, at 1 (declining to acquiesce in the “erroneous assumption” that “the office of Lieutenant Governor becomes vacant when the Lieutenant Governor acquires the powers and duties of the Governorship”).

<sup>6</sup> That legal principle remains true in Michigan even though the Michigan Constitution was thoroughly redrafted in 1961. See 1968 Mich. Att’y Gen Rep. 234, 235 (Mich. Att’y Gen. Apr. 22, 1968) (recounting debate from the 1961 Michigan constitutional convention that stated if the lieutenant governor became governor after the governor’s death or resignation, “there is no replacement for him”).

Interestingly, in 1943 the New York Attorney General opined that a statute allowing the governor to make appointments could not be applied to a lieutenant governor vacancy because it “would lead to the anomalous result that a Governor by appointing a Lieutenant Governor and then resigning could impose upon the people his own choice as their Governor.” 1943 N.Y. Op. Att’y Gen. No. 378, 1943 WL 54210, at *4 (N.Y. Att’y Gen. Aug. 2, 1943).

B. Analysis. Having taken this wealth of information into consideration, we find the answer to your question in the intersection between article IV, sections 14, 15, 17, 18, and 19 of the Iowa Constitution. Section 14 prohibits an individual from holding two offices “except as herein expressly provided.” The subsequent sections then go on to provide for the line of succession in the event of the governor’s death, resignation, removal, or disability. This juxtaposition is not coincidental. In fact, the entire scheme suggests that our framers intended for situations when a single individual would hold two offices—including the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor.<sup>7</sup> Indeed, it means that when the executive powers and duties devolve from the governor to the lieutenant governor, those two offices essentially merge. As we previously stated—the lieutenant governor becomes governor because she is lieutenant governor.

We are persuaded that “[i]f the framers of the Constitution had intended that there should be a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor upon the resignation, death, or permanent removal of the Governor, they could have easily said so.” Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 372; accord Heller, 42 A. at 156 (concluding if the framers intended a vacancy in the lower office, “it is reasonable to believe they would have said so in no uncertain language”). Our framers did not do so. This omission is telling, especially because our constitution was drafted shortly after two Presidents died in office—and especially when other states have amended their constitutions to do so. See, e.g., Del. Const. art. III, § 20 (“Whenever the powers and duties of the office of Governor shall devolve upon the Lieutenant-Governor, . . . his or her office shall become vacant . . . .”); Tex. Const. art. IV, § 16(d) (“On becoming Governor, the person vacates the office of

<sup>7</sup> For example, Article III, section 1 prohibits any person from exercising the powers of two branches of government “except in cases hereinafter expressly directed or permitted.” The primary exception to this separation of powers provision originally lay in article IV, sections 15 and 18, which called for the Lieutenant Governor to serve as President of the Senate, and article IV, section 19, which named the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives to the line of succession.

In addition to the framers’ distinct decision not to provide for a vacancy, other provisions referring to the lieutenant governor “acting as” governor or “exercising the office” of governor are further compelling evidence that there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. These provisions referring to the lieutenant governor performing particular functions—as opposed to saying merely “the lieutenant governor”—would be unnecessary and even meaningless if the new governor could simply appoint a “replacement” lieutenant governor. See Iowa Const. art. IV, §§ 15, 18–19 (1857 original version).

The express language of original section 19 (“If the Lieutenant Governor, while acting as Governor . . . .”) contemplates a series of events—something happens to the elected Governor and then something happens to the elected Lieutenant Governor. As the Oregon Supreme Court noted, the purpose of creating a line of succession is to ensure the automatic transfer of power—to ensure that someone is always endowed with the powers of Chief Magistrate. See Olcott II, 187 P. at 289. We believe that was also the purpose of article IV, section 19—to extend the line of gubernatorial succession beyond the lieutenant governor. Inserting a newly-appointed “replacement” lieutenant governor in that order would interrupt the line the framers deliberately chose and make it impossible for section 19’s provisions ever to be fully carried out.

Moreover, allowing for the appointment of a new lieutenant governor would subvert the elective principle that the Iowa framers clearly endorsed. Like his or her predecessor, under our Constitution an appointed lieutenant governor would assume the powers and duties of governor upon the governor’s death, resignation, removal, or disability. In other words, if a lieutenant governor who becomes governor can appoint a new lieutenant, Iowa could have a governor who was not elected by the people. This would be a particularly unpalatable result because a primary reason for creating the office of lieutenant governor, as expressed at the 1857 constitutional convention, was to ensure that the person first in the line of succession was a statewide elected official. See Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 372 (concluding an unelected governor “was never contemplated and never intended by the framers of the Constitution, or the people who adopted it”); 1939 Mich. Att’y Gen. Rep. at 69 (“[I]t was never intended . . . that any person, who has not received the sanction of the electors by direct vote, should be appointed to a position which would entitle him, in certain eventualities, to the high office of governor.”).

Finally, as we have noted, section 17’s devolution provision applies equally to both permanent and temporary disabilities. So must the answer to this question. While Governor Branstad’s prospective resignation would be permanent, it is easy to imagine situations which would remove a governor from office only temporarily. For example, on June 29, 2002 and July 21, 2007, Vice President Dick Cheney assumed the powers and duties of the presidency while President George W. Bush underwent medical procedures. If the lieutenant governor assumed the power and duties of the governorship under similar (temporary) circumstances and appointed a new lieutenant governor, what would happen to those two officials upon the temporarily-disabled governor's return to the office of Governor? Allowing for the appointment of a new lieutenant governor during a temporary disability would be an absurd result. See Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 372 (“[I]f the Governor were . . . unable temporarily to perform the duties of his office, it could hardly be argued that while the Lieutenant Governor was discharging the duties of the office of Governor, he could appoint a Lieutenant Governor.”); Heller, 42 A. at 158 (concluding a vacancy in the lower office made little sense for temporary disabilities and “could not have been within the contemplation” of those drafting the constitutional provision).

The subsequent amendments to article IV in 1952 and 1988 reinforce our conclusion. In 1952, article IV, section 19 was amended to provide,

If there be a vacancy in the office of Governor and the Lieutenant Governor shall by reason of death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability become incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, the President pro tempore of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed. . . .

Like its predecessor, this version of section 19 contemplates a series of events where the governor is first incapacitated and then the lieutenant governor—while exercising the powers and duties of governor—becomes incapacitated. Just like the original 1857 constitution, nothing in the 1952 amendments contemplates that there is a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor when the sitting governor resigns or dies. See Ekern, 280 N.W. at 398–99 (concluding under language materially identical to revised article IV, section 19 that there is no lieutenant governor vacancy when the powers and duties of governor devolve). Tellingly, the historical practice of not appointing a new lieutenant governor continued following the death of Governor Beardsley in 1954 and the resignation of Governor Hughes in 1969—after the 1952 amendments.

As noted previously, in 1988 article IV was amended to provide for the election of governor and lieutenant governor on the same ticket and to alter the lieutenant governor's duties by removing her role as president of the senate. The 1988 amendments also amended article IV, section 2 to provide, that “[t]he governor and the lieutenant governor shall be elected by the qualified electors.” This latter amendment reinforces the framers' commitment to the elective principle.

Nothing in the 1988 amendments specifically altered the line of succession outlined in sections 17 and 19. Contemporary editorials do not indicate that the voters contemplated anything other than the single-ticket issue and the lieutenant governor's duties.<sup>8</sup> See, e.g., Editorial, Preventive Maintenance, Des Moines Reg., Oct. 16, 1988, at 2C; Thomas A. Fogarty, Lawmakers Seek to Have Governor, Lt. Gov. Run as Team, Des Moines Reg. (Feb. 3, 1988); Thomas A. Fogarty, Voters to Decide if Governor, Lt. Gov. Should Run as a Team, Des Moines Reg. (Apr. 13, 1988); Linda Lantor, Lieutenant Governor Amendments Big Winners, Des Moines Reg. (Nov. 9, 1988).

The 1988 amendments' failure to alter the line of succession or address the question of a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor is striking considering the intervening history between 1952 and 1988. Originally the U.S. Constitution contained language mirroring Iowa's devolution framework. The U.S. Constitution, however, was amended in 1967 following the assassination of President Kennedy. The 25th Amendment to the United States Constitution expressly provided that the vice president becomes president and granted the President the authority to appoint a new vice president with Congressional approval. U.S. Const. amend. 25, §§ 1, 2.

Iowa's legislators and voters in 1988 were obviously aware of the change in the federal system; President Ford became the first unelected U.S. President just the decade before. Yet, Iowa did not attempt to follow the new federal model. While it is often dangerous to reach a conclusion based upon legislative inaction, by declining to adopt the federal model, we believe the amendments ratified our historical precedent—namely, that the lieutenant governor assumes the title, powers, and duties of governor, but does not appoint a new lieutenant governor. See Chiodo v. Section 43.24 Panel, 846 N.W.2d 845, 862 (Iowa 2014) (Mansfield, J., specially concurring).

Because it is our opinion that upon a governor's resignation, the lieutenant governor will hold both the Office of Governor and the Office of Lieutenant Governor, as expressly permitted by Article IV, section 14, there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor to be filled. Cf. Olcott I, 181 P. at 481 (relying on "except as permitted" language to conclude an individual could "hold the offices of governor and secretary of state at the same time"). As a result, under these facts, Iowa Code section 69.8 does not apply. See Iowa Code § 69.8(2) (referring to the governor filling "a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor” (emphasis added)). Consequently, we need not opine on the statute’s constitutionality.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>8</sup> This is in stark contrast to Utah, where its 1980 constitutional amendments addressing gubernatorial succession were presented to the voters as mirroring the succession of the federal government—which by this time had adopted the 25th Amendment. Utah Op. Att'y Gen. No. 03-001, 2003 WL 21996258 (Utah Att'y Gen. Aug. 18, 2003).

C. Answer. It is our opinion that if the governor resigns and the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor, that person does not have authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor. Upon the governor’s resignation, the powers and duties of the office will devolve or fall upon the lieutenant governor—who does not ascend or rise to the office of Governor. However, under our constitutional framework, by possessing the powers and duties of the chief magistrate, the lieutenant governor becomes governor for all intents and purposes, is entitled to use the title of Governor, and is entitled to the compensation of governor for the remainder of the term. The lieutenant governor takes on this authority because she is lieutenant governor. In other words, upon a governor’s resignation, the lieutenant governor will hold both the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. There is no vacancy to be filled. Our answer honors Iowa’s historical practice, upholds the elective principle, and preserves our constitutional line of succession.

<sup>9</sup> Because it is not the factual context in which you have asked your questions, we do not address whether section 69.8 would be applicable if the lieutenant governor resigned or died in office while the governor remained. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has suggested that a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor exists in that factual scenario, but not when the powers and duties of governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor. See Ekern, 280 N.W. at 399.

[DRAFT]

The Honorable David Johnson
State Senator
PO Box 279
Ocheyedan, Iowa 51354

Dear Senator Johnson:

Thank you for your letter of February 1, 2017. Your letter references Governor Terry Branstad's recent nomination to serve as United States Ambassador to China and poses nine specific questions about the effect of his potential resignation as Governor of Iowa. We agree that your letter raises important legal questions about Iowa's constitutional framework for the succession of executive power. This office has not previously addressed these questions directly, nor has the Iowa Supreme Court. Thus, we believe they are appropriately addressed in an official opinion of the Attorney General under Iowa Code section 13.2(e).

We share your belief that these important issues require a thoughtful and detailed analysis. Taken as a whole, the nine questions you pose implicate two central constitutional questions. Those two important questions of law are:

First question: If the governor resigns, does the lieutenant governor become governor?

Second question: If the lieutenant governor becomes governor, may she then appoint a new lieutenant governor?

The answers to these questions must flow from a careful consideration of the succession framework set forth in the words and structure of the Iowa constitution. See Rudd v. Ray, 248 N.W.2d 125, 129 (Iowa 1976) ("The framers of our constitution necessarily gave us their ideas in the words they agreed upon."). The debates of the 1857 constitutional convention also shed important light on the meaning and intent of the constitutional provisions establishing that framework. See N. W. Halsey & Co v. City of Belle Plaine, 104 N.W. 494, 496 (Iowa 1905) (noting that reading the constitutional debates may aid in a fuller understanding of constitutional provisions). Finally, our answers can and should be informed by interpretations of the same or similar provisions in other states' constitutions. See Van Horn v. City of Des Moines, 191 N.W. 144, 148 (Iowa 1922) (considering "similar provisions in the Constitution[s] of other states" to decide an issue of first impression).

I. Background

We first provide context for the legal questions by identifying the relevant constitutional provisions, examining portions of the 1857 constitutional convention, and noting historical practice both in Iowa and on the federal level.

A. Constitutional Provisions. Article IV of the Iowa Constitution discusses the executive branch and establishes a framework for the succession of executive power. Although some provisions of article IV have been amended since 1857, but we initially focus on the original provisions, because those — together with section 17 — established the original framework. In doing so, we consider all of the original executive branch provisions without placing undue significance on one section. See Rolfe State Bank v. Gunderson, 794 N.W.2d 561, 565 (Iowa 2011) (“[W]e avoid placing undue importance on isolated portions of an enactment by construing all parts of the enactment together.”). We also remain mindful not to render any provision meaningless or redundant. See Iowa Code § 4.4(2) (2017) (presuming every piece of language is intended to be effective); Mall Real Estate, L.L.C. v. City of Hamburg, 818 N.W.2d 190, 198 (Iowa 2012) (“We . . . interpret statutes in such a way that portions of it do not become redundant or irrelevant.”); see also Jenkins v. Branstad, 448 N.W.2d 480, 483 (Iowa 1989) (“Constitutional provisions are generally subject to the same rules of construction as statutes.”).

Considering article IV as a whole promotes a holistic understanding of the constitutional framework, because each provision can inform the others. See Iowa Code § 4.1(38) (2017) (“Words and phrases shall be construed according to the context . . . .”); see also Allen v. Clayton, 18 N.W. 663, 667 (Iowa 1884) (noting that to determine the meaning of a constitutional provision, “the sections preceding and following it, which have reference to the same subject-matter, must be read and considered”); State ex rel. Martin v. Heil, 7 N.W.2d 375, 381 (Wis. 1942) (“[T]he provision should be examined in its setting in order to find out . . . the real meaning and substantial purpose of those who adopted it.”). The following constitutional provisions are relevant to our analysis.

Article IV, section 1 provides that “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1. In other words, the person who has the powers is governor. Like article IV, section 17, article IV, section 1 has remained unchanged since 1857.

Article IV, sections 2 and 3 originally established that the governor and lieutenant governor would be elected by the people—but not on the same ticket. Article IV, section 6 required candidates for both offices to have the same qualifications.

Article IV, section 10 provided, "When any office shall, from any cause, become vacant, and no mode is provided by the Constitution and laws for filling such vacancy, the Governor shall have power to fill such vacancy, by granting a commission, which shall expire at the end of the next session of the General Assembly, or at the next election by the people."

Article IV, section 14 provided, "No persons shall, while holding any office under the authority of the United States, or this State, execute the office of Governor, or Lieutenant Governor, except as hereinafter expressly provided."

Article IV, section 15 established that the lieutenant governor would serve until a successor was elected and qualified, and that "while acting as Governor," the lieutenant governor would receive the same pay as provided for the governor.

Article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution is the key to plays the biggest part in answering both questions. "[T]he purpose of art. IV, § 17 is to ensure that the citizens of Iowa are not without a person capable of performing the constitutional and statutory duties imposed upon a governor." 1980 Op. Att'y Gen. 550, 1980 WL 25903, at *3 (Iowa Att'y Gen. Jan. 2, 1980). That section provides,

In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17. This section has remained unchanged since 1857.

Article IV, section 18 made the lieutenant governor President of the Senate with a tiebreaking vote, but provided that "when [the lieutenant governor] shall exercise the office of Governor, the Senate shall choose a President pro tempore."

Article IV, section 19 continued the line of succession beyond the lieutenant governor:

If the Lieutenant Governor, while acting as Governor, shall be impeached, displaced, resign, or die, or otherwise become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the President pro tempore of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled, or the disability removed; and if the President of the Senate, for any of the above causes, shall be rendered incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, the same shall devolve upon the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Although each provision is important, two notable aspects of article IV, section 17 particularly inform our analysis. First, while death and resignation are permanent exits from office, the phrase “other disability” includes temporary conditions such as physical or mental incapacity or time spent undergoing a medical procedure. See 1923 Op. Att’y Gen. 263, 263 (Iowa Att’y Gen. Aug. 23, 1923) (answering a question posed by the governor about the operation of article IV, section 17 during a several-month hiatus recommended by his physician). Therefore, article IV, section 17 must operate within a framework applicable to several possible factual scenarios without creating “friction in the machinery of government.” Fitzpatrick v. McAlister, 248 P. 569, 576 (Okla. 1926). Because the provision applies equally to permanent and temporary disabilities, so too must the answers to the legal questions we address.

The second important aspect of article IV, section 17 is the word “devolve.” That word “is defined by lexicographers and in law dictionaries as meaning to roll or tumble down or descend.” Id. at 573 (citing authorities indicating that meaning as of 1926); see also “Devolve,” Black’s Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014) (defining “devolve” to include transferring rights, duties, or powers and passing by transmission); “Devolve,” Webster’s Third New Int’l Dictionary (1993) (defining “devolve” as “to flow or roll from a situation viewed as higher to one that is lower” and “to fall or be passed . . . as an obligation or responsibility”); 12 Words & Phrases 546 (1954). The overall concept is that the word connotes downward movement. This downward movement means the powers and duties of the office of Governor fall upon the lieutenant governor; the lieutenant governor does not rise to the office of Governor. See Okla. Op. Att’y Gen. No. 65-235, at 1-2 (Okla. Att’y Gen. May 19, 1965) (“The office of Governor devolves upon the Lieutenant Governor, he does not ascend to it.”). This distinction is both important and purposeful.

~~Related provisions enacted alongside article IV, section 17 can aid in determining the meaning of the word “devolve.” See Iowa Code § 4.1(38) (2017) (“Words and phrases shall be construed according to the context . . . .”); see also Allen v. Clayton, 18 N.W. 663, 667 (Iowa 1884) (noting that to determine the meaning of a constitutional provision, “the sections preceding and following it, which have reference to the same subject matter, must be read and considered”); State ex rel. Martin v. Heil, 7 N.W.2d 375, 381 (Wis. 1942) (“[T]he provision should be examined in its setting in order to find out . . . the real meaning and substantial purpose of those who adopted it.”).~~

~~Several other original provisions in article IV of the Iowa Constitution bear upon the question of transferring executive power. Although some provisions of article IV have been amended since 1857, we initially focus on the original provisions, because those together with section 17 established the~~

~~original framework. In doing so, we consider all of the original executive branch provisions without placing undue significance on one section. See Rolfe State Bank v. Gunderson, 794 N.W.2d 561, 565 (Iowa 2011) (“[W]e avoid placing undue importance on isolated portions of an enactment by construing all parts of the enactment together.”). We also remain mindful not to render any provision meaningless or redundant. See Iowa Code § 4.4(2) (presuming every piece of language is intended to be effective); Mall Real Estate, L.L.C. v. City of Hamburg, 818 N.W.2d 190, 198 (Iowa 2012) (“We . . . interpret statutes in such a way that portions of it do not become redundant or irrelevant.”); see also Junkins v. Branstad, 448 N.W.2d 480, 483 (Iowa 1989) (“Constitutional provisions are generally subject to the same rules of construction as statutes.”).~~

~~Article IV, section 1 provides that “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1. In other words, the person who has the powers is governor. Like article IV, section 17, article IV, section 1 has remained unchanged since 1857.~~

~~Article IV, sections 2 and 3 originally established that the governor and lieutenant governor would be elected by the people but not on the same ticket. Article IV, section 18 made the lieutenant governor President of the Senate with a tiebreaking vote, but provided that “when [the lieutenant governor] shall exercise the office of Governor, the Senate shall choose a President pro tempore.” Article IV, section 15 established that the lieutenant governor would serve until a successor was elected and qualified, and that “while acting as Governor,” the lieutenant governor would receive the same pay as provided for the governor.~~

~~Article IV, section 19 established how executive power would transfer when multiple state officers were incapable of performing gubernatorial duties:~~

~~If the Lieutenant Governor, while acting as Governor, shall be impeached, displaced, resign, or die, or otherwise become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the President pro tempore of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled, or the disability removed; and if the President of the Senate, for any of the above causes, shall be rendered incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, the same shall devolve upon the Speaker of the House of Representatives.~~

~~Article IV, section 14 provided, "No persons shall, while holding any office under the authority of the United States, or this State, execute the office of Governor, or Lieutenant Governor, except as hereinafter expressly provided."<sup>2</sup>~~

~~In light of these provisions, it is our opinion that~~ Viewing article IV as a whole, section 1 and original section 18 complement each other and dovetail with section 17. The words in section 18 indicate that when the powers and duties devolved (as section 17 instructed), the lieutenant governor would "exercise the office of Governor." That aligns with the foundational principle that the person who has the powers is governor. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1. The foundational principle is paramount.

Furthermore~~Additionally~~, article IV, section 14 is instructive because it expressly permits one person to hold more than one office if the constitution provides for it. The 1857 constitution provided for two possibilities immediately following section 14, both of which referred specifically to the lieutenant governor: the lieutenant governor as governor and the lieutenant governor as senate president. See Iowa Const. art. IV, §§ 17-19 (original 1857 version). Section 19 further contemplated other officials holding more than one office by providing for the senate president as governor and the speaker of the house as governor.

B. Constitutional Debates. The Iowa Constitution of 1846 made no provision for a lieutenant governor. However, as the 1857 constitutional convention began, one delegate proposed that a committee dedicated to formulating the executive branch of government consider "providing for the election of a Lieutenant Governor who, by virtue of his office, shall . . . exercise all the powers and have the title of Governor in case of the death, removal, or other disability of the Governor." 1 The Debates of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Iowa 39 (W. Blair Lord rep., 1857) [hereinafter The Debates]. The convention agreed to the resolution. Id. Accordingly, the drafters of article IV, section 17 envisioned that the lieutenant governor would "have the title of Governor" if the governor left office, id.—and utilized the word "devolve" to accomplish that result. See Heil, 7 N.W.2d at 381-82 (recounting similar debate from the Wisconsin constitutional convention in 1847).

The framers of our 1857 constitution also spent significant time debating the constitutional line of succession. Several of the delegates questioned the need for a lieutenant governor at all—possibly because Iowa had no lieutenant governor before 1857—and offered amendments to article IV, section 17. For instance, delegate Warren proposed an amendment substituting the words

Formatted: List Paragraph

“Secretary of State” for “Lieutenant Governor.” 1 The Debates, at 587. Delegate Clarke of Johnson County<sup>1</sup> proposed instead “that the duties of the office of Governor, in case of a vacancy, shall devolve upon the president of the Senate.” Id. The convention actually passed Clarke’s amendment, eliminating the position of lieutenant governor from the 1857 constitution and altering the constitutional line of succession.

The next morning, however, delegate Gray asked his colleagues “to consider well the importance of the matter before striking” the provisions regarding the lieutenant governor. Id. at 591. An advantage of retaining the office was the fact that the lieutenant governor “will be elected directly by the people, instead of by the Legislature.” Id. Gray found that important because “We all seem to agree in placing elections, as far as possible, directly in the power of the people.” Id. Delegate Clarke of Henry County agreed:

Gentlemen [of the convention] do not reflect that they may be taking from the people the power of selecting their own chief magistrate. When a man is a candidate for the office of Lieutenant Governor, the people always vote for him with the understanding that circumstances may arise which will make him their Governor. But if you give to the Senate the power of selecting the man who may be the Governor of the people, you take from the people this power and put it into the hands of the Senate.

Id. at 591–92. This “elective principle” lies at the core of our constitutional framework because “[a]ll political power is inherent in the people.” Iowa Const. art. I, § 2.

Delegate Gray’s remarks sparked renewed debate on the subject, and some delegates changed their minds. For example, delegate Wilson offered that although he had originally voted to eliminate the position of lieutenant governor, “upon reflection . . . the advantages in favor of [having a lieutenant governor] are far superior to the disadvantages.” 1 The Debates at 593. Most significant, however, were Mr. Clark’s remarks:

I voted yesterday to strike out the office of Lieutenant-Governor. I had not reflected upon it well, and I am inclined to the opinion that I did not vote right. Upon hearing the argument thus far upon the question, and upon reflection, I am disposed to favor the office of Lieut[enant] Governor, for one reason, if there were no other: I believe that an executive officer, whoever he may be that shall perform the duties of that office, whether Governor or Lieutenant-Governor, ought to be elected directly by the people, in all cases, at least so far as it is possible to provide for it. We elect the Governor by the direct votes of the people—by the popular will—by the popular voice. In case of his removal or disability, I see no reason why the person filling his place should not be elected directly by the whole people as much as the Governor himself.

Id. at 594. Mr. Clark's clear concern was upholding the elective principle.

After some further debate, the convention voted 19-14 against the amendment that would have struck the office of lieutenant governor. Id. at 595. Accordingly, the convention also restored other provisions relating to the office of lieutenant governor. See id. at 596.

From this historical record it is evident that the framers intended that those in the gubernatorial line of succession be elected. Section 3 further reinforced the framers' commitment to the elective principle by requiring that the lieutenant governor "be elected."

C. Iowa Historical Practice. Four Iowa governors have either resigned or died while in office. In 1877, Governor Samuel Kirkwood resigned to become a candidate for the United States Senate. Lieutenant Governor Joshua Newbold assumed the powers and duties of Governor upon the resignation. Governor Albert Cummins resigned in 1908 after his election to the United States Senate. Lieutenant Governor Warren Garst assumed the powers and duties of the Governor upon the resignation. In 1954, Governor William Beardsley was killed in an automobile accident. Upon his death, Lieutenant Governor Leo Elthon assumed the powers and duties of Governor. Finally, in 1969 Governor Harold Hughes resigned to take his seat in the United States Senate. Lieutenant Governor Robert Fulton assumed the powers and duties of the Governor upon the resignation.

In each of these four instances, the lieutenant governor (upon whom the powers and duties of the office devolved) was treated as Governor in every respect, but did not appoint a new "replacement" lieutenant governor. In each of these four instances, a new lieutenant governor was eventually elected by popular vote at the same the next governor was elected.

This historical practice reveals several significant trends. First, upon the death or resignation of a sitting governor, the lieutenant governor has always been considered governor. Second, the new governor has never appointed or named a new lieutenant governor. Finally, this historical precedent is consistent with the framers' intent that those in the line of gubernatorial succession be elected.

D. Federal Language and History. In 1857, when the Iowa Constitution was ratified, article II, section 1, clause 6 of the United States Constitution read: "In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President . . . ." Thus, article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution closely tracked language in the United States Constitution at the time.

Under that federal language, multiple presidents died in office. Following each death, the Vice President was considered President in full. Two of these instances occurred before 1857: John Tyler in 1841 and Millard Fillmore in 1850. Because of this history, the delegates to the 1857 Iowa constitutional convention likely understood the word "devolve" to mean that upon the governor's exit from office, the lieutenant governor would be governor following a downward movement of powers. See State v. Baldon, 829 N.W.2d 785, 810 (Iowa 2013) (Appel, J., specially concurring) (noting "the drafters of the Iowa Constitution were well aware" of existing federal law when writing in 1857); Gallarno v. Long, 243 N.W. 719, 723 (Iowa 1932) ("[H]istorical . . . matters may be taken into consideration when interpreting the Constitution.").

A federal court decision from 1867 confirms this understanding:

Three times, since the adoption of the constitution, the president has died, and, under [article II, section 1, clause 6], the powers and duties of the office of president have devolved upon the vice president. All branches of the government have, under such circumstances, recognized the vice president as holding the office of president, as authorized to assume its title . . . . It has never been supposed that, under the provision of the constitution, the vice president . . . acted as the servant, or agent, or locum tenens of the deceased president, or in any other capacity than as holding the office of president fully, for the time being, by virtue of express authority emanating from the United States.

Merriam v. Clinch, 17 F. Cas. 68, 70 (C.C.S.D.N.Y. 1867). The three instances to which the court referred were President Tyler, President Fillmore, and President Andrew Johnson in 1865.

Likewise, the Oklahoma Supreme Court relied upon federal history several decades later in analyzing the word "devolve:"

[U]pon the death of President Wm. H. Harrison, Vice President Tyler became President of the United States. For almost a century this construction of the federal Constitution has stood without question. It has been recognized as correct, and acquiesced in, not only by the departments of state and all the states of the Union, but officially recognized by every civilized government in the world.

Defendant suggests that no court has ever pronounced that to be the law. To our mind, it is so clearly correct that no one has ever presumed to test its correctness in the courts. Therefore it should have greater weight than an ordinary departmental construction, not only because it has stood for almost a century, but because it has been recognized as the correct conception of our system of government, and because, for eighty-five years under this construction, there has been no friction in the machinery of government by reason of such construction.

Fitzpatrick, 248 P. at 576; see also Olcott v. Hoff (Olcott I), 181 P. 466, 467 (Or. 1919) (“[U]pon the death of the president no one has ever claimed that the vice president . . . would not succeed to the office of president itself . . . .”); 1939 Mich. Att’y Gen. Rep. 69, 73 (Mich. Att’y Gen. Mar. 28, 1939) (“No one would contend that upon death or resignation of the President, the Vice President does not thereby become President of the United States . . . .”). Between Merriam in 1867 and Fitzpatrick in 1926, three more presidents died in office—and once again, after each death, the vice President was considered President.<sup>2</sup> The consistent federal understanding of the word “devolve” over several decades further informs our determination of what “devolve” means in article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution.

With regard to question two, President Tyler did not appoint a new vice president. A new vice president did not take office until 1845 following the election of George Dallas to the office. Therefore, for almost four years, the country had no separate “replacement” vice president. In 1850, when Millard Fillmore assumed the powers and duties of the presidency upon Zachary Taylor’s death, he too did not appoint a new vice president. Once again, the country had no separate “replacement” vice president for almost three years until the election of William King.

The framers of our 1857 constitution were undoubtedly aware of this historical practice. In the decade and a half preceding our constitutional convention, our nation was without a separate “replacement” vice president for seven years. See Iowa Ins. Inst. v. Core Grp. of Iowa Ass’n for Justice, 867 N.W.2d 58, 76 (Iowa 2015) (considering the “circumstances under which the statute was enacted” in order to derive legislative intent); Rudd, 248 N.W.2d at 129 (“When words are enshrined in a governmental charter, so as to speak across centuries, their history, purpose, and intended meaning must be closely examined.”); Allen, 18 N.W. at 664 (noting that experience with corporations in Iowa before 1857 informed the eventual constitutional provisions on that topic). Yet, despite this precedent, our framers chose not to depart from the federal model and made no express provision for the appointment of a new lieutenant governor. ~~We must assume that omission was intentional.~~

Furthermore, this historical practice continued upon the death of every President. The most recent instance occurred upon the death of President John F. Kennedy. President Lyndon Johnson did not appoint a new vice president in 1963. Our nation’s next vice president, Hubert Humphrey, was elected in 1964.

Having established this historical perspective, we now proceed to analyze the legal questions.

II. If the Governor Resigns, Does the Lieutenant Governor Become Governor?

Beyond dictionary definitions, another important guidepost in determining the meaning of “devolve” is what it was understood to mean at the time it was enacted:

In the interpretation of the Constitution . . . we are to ascertain the meaning by getting at the intention of those making the instrument. What thought was in the mind of those making the Constitution—what was their intention, is the great leading rule of construction.

Ex parte Pritz, 9 Iowa 30, 32 (1858); accord Griffin v. Pate, 884 N.W.2d 182, 186 (Iowa 2016) (beginning analysis of a constitutional provision “by looking back to review the history” of it “to gain a better understanding of the concept” as applied in a current case); Redmond v. Ray, 268 N.W.2d 849, 853 (Iowa 1978) (“In construing a constitution, our purpose is to ascertain the intent of the framers.”). The federal practice under similar language prior to 1857, and the framers’ resolution that the lieutenant governor could “have the title of Governor,” if the governor left office, 1 The Debates at 39, are strong indications that the verb “devolve” was thought to convey the entire office of Governor upon the lieutenant governor.

A. Other States’ Experiences. Iowa is not the first state to face significant legal questions regarding a governor’s permanent departure from office. While other states’ constitutions and experiences do not alone determine what the Iowa Constitution means, we find valuable to our analysis the language used in those states’ constitutions and court decisions or attorney general opinions involving that language.

Our review of available authority reveals a relatively even divide. When the issue has surfaced and the relevant constitutional provision utilized the word "devolve," some authorities in other states have concluded that the lieutenant governor becomes governor. In view of the question as we have phrased it, we call these the "yes" decisions. See, e.g., Bryant v. English, 843 S.W.2d 308, 311 (Ark. 1992) ("[W]e hold that . . . the Lieutenant Governor serves as Governor for the residue of the term . . ."); State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d 369, 370 (Mont. 1934) ("[W]hen the Governor resigns or is permanently removed from office, there is no vacancy in the office of Governor in the sense that there is no one left with power to discharge the duties imposed upon the Governor."); Fitzpatrick, 248 P. at 577 ("Mr. Trapp is just as much a Governor, in every literal and practical sense and effect, as though he had been elected to the office."); Chadwick v. Earhart, 4 P. 1180, 1181 (Or. 1884) ("[I]t is not shown how . . . a person can fill the office of governor without being governor."); State ex rel. Murphy v. McBride, 70 P. 25, 26 (Wash. 1902) ("The constitution having provided that in case of the death of the governor the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of governor."); 1939 Mich. Att'y Gen. Rep. at 73 (concluding when the governor dies, the lieutenant governor is "governor of the state [for] all intents and purposes").

Others have concluded that the lieutenant governor or next person "in line" is not truly governor. We call these the "no" decisions. See, e.g., State ex rel. De Concini v. Garvey, 195 P.2d 153, 154 (Ariz. 1948) (concluding the person upon whom the powers and duties of governor devolve after the governor's death or resignation "is not governor de jure or de facto but merely ex officio"); Futrell v. Oldham, 155 S.W. 502, 504 (Ark. 1913) (concluding under a previous version of the Arkansas Constitution that the person upon whom the powers and duties of governor devolve "acts as Governor . . . merely by virtue of his office as president of the senate, and does not actually become Governor"); People ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 45 P. 1060, 1060 (Cal. 1896) ("[I]t would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor the latter thereby becomes governor . . ."); State ex rel. Hardin v. Sadler, 47 P. 450, 450 (Nev. 1897) ("If a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor . . . . The officer remains lieutenant governor, but invested with the powers and duties of governor."); State v. Heller, 42 A. 155, 157 (N.J. 1899) ("The language used is not ambiguous. It declares that the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve on the president of the senate; it does not confer upon him the title of the office."); State ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, 280 N.W. 393, 399 (Wis. 1938) ("[T]he lieutenant governor does not become governor. He remains lieutenant governor, upon whom devolves the powers and duties of governor.").

B. Analysis. The substantial number of “no” decisions is significant. Although Iowa has “no obligation to adopt a rule just because it has generally been adopted elsewhere,” Handeland v. Brown, 216 N.W.2d 574, 577 (Iowa 1974), all of the “no” decisions are based on a careful parsing of the word “devolve” and the other relevant constitutional language. When resolving legal quandaries, precision and nuance matter. See Rivera v. Woodward Res. Ctr., 865 N.W.2d 887, 897 (Iowa 2015). Thus, placing Iowa among the “no” decisions would be legally defensible. Indeed, in 1977, the Idaho Attorney General acknowledged that, although he believed them to be somewhat counterintuitive, the “no” decisions suggested “the lieutenant governor never truly succeeds to the office of governor” under the Idaho Constitution (which at the time used the word “devolve”). Idaho Op. Att’y Gen. No. 77-1, 1977 WL 25063, at *1 (Idaho Att’y Gen. Jan. 4, 1977). The Idaho Attorney General went on to recommend that only the Idaho Supreme Court could answer the question definitively as a matter of Idaho law. See id.

Nonetheless, we find the “yes” decisions more persuasive than the “no” decisions. With specific regard to New Jersey, the Heller court noted several phrases in the state’s constitution that referred to the governor “or person administering the government.” Heller, 42 A. at 157. If the person exercising executive power after the governor’s resignation was governor, the court concluded, the phrase “person administering the government” would be superfluous. See id. Thus, the Heller decision is distinguishable because it was based in part on unique constitutional language. The Iowa Constitution does not similarly refer to the governor “or person administering the government.”

We also believe the “no” decisions elevate form over substance, which the Iowa Supreme Court has repeatedly cautioned against. See, e.g., Lewis v. Jaeger, 818 N.W.2d 165, 179 (Iowa 2012); State ex rel. Miller v. Smokers Warehouse Corp., 737 N.W.2d 107, 110 (Iowa 2007); Van Baale v. City of Des Moines, 550 N.W.2d 153, 156 (Iowa 1996). The “no” decisions are somewhat technical, drawing a linguistic distinction that, while noteworthy, makes no substantive difference under the circumstances presented here. See Harriman v. State, 2 Greene 270, 285 (Iowa 1849) (considering it the court’s “imperative duty” to “disregard . . . unmeaning technicalities, and to look more to the substance and merits of each case”); see also Heil, 7 N.W.2d at 381 (“It is extremely important in the interpretation of constitutional provisions that we avoid determinations based purely on technical or verbal . . . argument and that we seek to discover the true spirit and intent of the provisions examined.”). Under Iowa’s framework, there could be little dispute that if the governor resigns, the lieutenant governor would possess authority to sign legislation, issue pardons, and even receive the governor’s salary. Instead, any dispute centers on the exact description of his or her new role.

On that score, article IV, section 1 of the Iowa Constitution carries significant weight. That section provides, "The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa." Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1. In other words, the person who has the powers is governor. The powers make the governor, carrying with them the title. As the Arkansas Supreme Court concluded under a similar provision in the Arkansas Constitution, this means when the powers and duties of governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor, that person is thereafter styled the governor. See Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 313; accord Fitzpatrick, 248 P. at 572 ("The person who . . . fills the office of chief magistrate is styled 'the Governor of Oklahoma.' He is the 'Governor' for the simple reason that he governs."). Thus, there is no substantive difference between governor and acting governor. See State ex rel. Chatterton v. Grant, 73 P. 470, 474 (Wyo. 1903) (concluding that, after the governor died, the question whether a person "[wa]s in fact the governor of the state" was immaterial because, whether governor or acting governor, the person had the powers and duties of the office). A person acting as governor after the powers have devolved is governor, because of article IV, section 1.<sup>3</sup>

The "yes" decisions also comport with the Iowa framers' understanding of the lieutenant governor's role and with our state's historical practice. In creating the office of lieutenant governor, the framers expected that person to "have the title of Governor" if the governor left office. 1 The Debates, at 39. Furthermore, each time the governor of Iowa has resigned or died in office, the lieutenant governor was thereafter treated as governor. See William H. Fleming, The Second Officer in the Government, reprinted in Annals of Iowa: A Historical Quarterly, Vol. XIII, No. 1, at 533-34 (1921) [hereinafter Annals of Iowa] (recalling Governor Kirkwood's resignation in 1877 and Governor Cummins's resignation in 1908); Legis. Servs. Agency, Pieces of Iowa's Past: Lieutenant Governors Who Have Become Governor 2-3 (Mar. 8, 2017), available at <https://www.legis.iowa.gov/docs/publications/TB/855445.pdf> (noting Governor Beardsley's death in 1954 and Governor Hughes's resignation in 1969). Indeed, one history of Iowa referred to Kirkwood's successor as the "ninth governor of Iowa" following Kirkwood's resignation. 4 Benjamin F. Gue, History of Iowa: From the Earliest Times to the Beginning of the Twentieth Century 199-200 (1903). Although historical practice standing alone does not mandate a similar result now, the historical practice is consistent with the framework of executive power we have described. Gallarno, 243 N.W.2d at 723 (noting history is important in interpreting constitutional provisions); see Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 312 (finding it "of some persuasion" that, when the governor of Arkansas died in office or resigned, the lieutenant governor was historically treated as governor).

Finally, many of the "no" decisions are driven by legal quagmires that Iowa's framework avoids. For example, in Arizona, the court concluded one reason the secretary of state did not become governor was the absence of a provision bestowing upon that person "the emoluments of the office of governor . . . when acting [as] governor." Garvey, 195 P.2d at 157-58. By contrast, article IV, section 15 of the Iowa Constitution expressly provides that "while acting as governor," the lieutenant governor is "paid the compensation . . . prescribed for the governor." Iowa Const. art. IV, § 15.

Likewise, the Arkansas Supreme Court expressed concerns in Futrell about the president of the senate—a legislative officer—performing executive branch duties. See Futrell, 155 S.W. at 504; see also Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 312 (explaining that creating the position of lieutenant governor alleviated any separation-of-powers concerns). Iowa's framework has always avoided that problem. Article III, section 1 permitted the lieutenant governor to preside over the senate by allowing one person to perform both legislative and executive duties where expressly provided. Further, under the 1857 constitution, when the lieutenant governor was also president of the senate, article IV, section 18 directed the senate to elect a president pro tempore when the lieutenant governor was exercising the office of governor. And today, the lieutenant governor no longer has any legislative duties, so there is no separation-of-powers problem. Without potential issues like those faced in Arizona and Arkansas, we find the "yes" decisions to be a better analytical guide.

Iowa's amendments to article IV do not change or alter our analysis of the effect of article IV, section 17. A 1952 amendment to article IV, section 19 removed a reference to the lieutenant governor "acting as" governor, replacing it with "if there be a vacancy in the office of Governor"—and that language remains today. There is a natural tendency to ascribe significance to the change, but that amendment doesn't really say much about the title of the person upon whom the powers and duties devolve—because article IV, section 1 controls that question. And in any event, as we have explained, "acting as" governor is simply what the lieutenant governor does when the powers and duties devolve, not a substantive limit on his or her power or title.

The more significant piece of the 1952 amendments, in our view, was a section providing that if the governor-elect died, resigned, or failed to qualify, the lieutenant governor-elect would "assume the powers and duties of governor" upon inauguration. As we have noted, article IV, section 1 would therefore make the person with the powers the governor. In other words, the

1952 amendment solidified—not altered—the existing framework for the transfer of executive power in the event of a constitutional contingency.<sup>4</sup>

In 1972, several provisions of article IV were changed, but they did not affect sections 1 or 17. Originally, article IV, sections 2 and 3 provided the governor and lieutenant governor served two-year terms. The 1972 amendment merely increased both terms to four years. Thus, it does not indicate any significant change in the constitutional framework for transferring executive power. Indeed, the 1972 amendments retained the requirement that the governor and lieutenant governor be elected, and that they serve until successors were elected and qualified.

Iowa enacted more significant amendments in 1988. The 1988 amendments provided for the first time that the governor and lieutenant governor are elected together, on one ticket, “as if these two offices were one and the same.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 3. Before 1988, it was possible for the governor and lieutenant governor to represent different political parties. The amendment brought to fruition a constitutional delegate’s statement at the 1857 convention: “The governor and lieutenant-governor will always, I presume, be the same in politics, and why not have the successor of the governor of the same politics, instead of bringing in one of the antagonistic party?” 1 The Debates, at 593.

The 1988 amendments also recast the lieutenant governor’s duties. Under original article IV, section 18, the lieutenant governor was president of the senate and possessed a tiebreaking vote. If the lieutenant governor was absent, impeached, or exercising the office of Governor, the Senate was instructed to choose a president pro tempore to preside and break ties. However, the 1988 amendments revised article IV, section 18 to provide that the lieutenant governor “shall have the duties provided by law and those duties of the governor assigned to the lieutenant governor by the governor.” In other words, the 1988 amendments removed the lieutenant governor’s status as president of the Senate.

The only remaining duty “provided by law” is to receive the powers and duties of governor under article IV, section 17 if the governor leaves office; there are no additional statutory duties imposed upon the lieutenant governor. In other words, the lieutenant governor becomes governor because he or she is already lieutenant governor. As the Montana Supreme Court put it:

When the framers of the Constitution provided for the election of a Governor and a Lieutenant Governor as members of the executive department of the state, but conferred upon the latter no executive power or authority other than in the contingencies mentioned . . . , they manifested the intention that the people elect two qualified heads of that department—the one active, the other his lieutenant, ready at a moment's notice to assume the duties of the office, should his superior officer, for any reason, either temporarily or permanently, become unable to perform them.

Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 371-72; see also State ex rel. Sathre v. Moodie, 258 N.W. 558, 567 (N.D. 1935) ("The Lieutenant Governor, elected at the same election, . . . has been chosen by the people to act as Governor in [the] event the Governor fails to qualify, or is unable to act because of disability."); Olcott I, 181 P. at 483 ("[W]hen the people elected Mr. Olcott . . . , by the very terms of the constitution they elected him to become governor upon the death of Governor Withycombe."); Heil, 7 N.W.2d at 383 (noting the lieutenant governor "was deliberately chosen by the people for no other important purpose than to substitute for the governor"). Therefore, the 1988 amendments do not alter our analysis on this question.

C. Answer. After considering the Iowa Constitution's language, placing it in historical perspective, and comparing other legal analyses on similar constitutional provisions, it is our opinion that under article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution, if the governor resigns and the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor, the lieutenant governor becomes governor and has the title of Governor.<sup>5</sup>

III. If the Lieutenant Governor Becomes Governor, May She Then Appoint a New Lieutenant Governor?

The governor has always had authority to fill vacancies in state offices when the constitution and laws did not otherwise provide for doing so. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 10. Yet, despite this provision, in the four prior instances when a governor has resigned or died in office, the new governor has not relied upon the authority in section 10 to fill any "vacancy" in the office of lieutenant governor—suggesting that there isn't one. See Annals of Iowa, at 533 (noting Governor Newbold did not appoint a new lieutenant governor after Governor Kirkwood's resignation "because the lieutenant-governorship was not vacant"). Other states' experiences predominantly, even overwhelmingly, align with this view.

<sup>5</sup> Two of your nine original questions ask whether the lieutenant governor would be required to take a new oath of office and who would be empowered to administer that oath. In light of our opinion as detailed above, the answer to those questions is that no new oath is required. When the lieutenant governor is elected and qualifies by taking an oath before the general assembly to discharge the duties of the office of Lieutenant Governor, those duties already include receiving the powers and duties of Governor should a constitutional contingency arise. Nevertheless, we understand each of the four Iowa lieutenant governors who became governor after the resignation or death of a sitting governor chose to take a ceremonial oath of office (in one form or another) when they assumed their new duties. This is because while no new oath is required, the constitution does not prohibit one.

A. Other States' Experiences. In answering question one, we noted considerable debate among states which use constitutional language similar to our own ("devolve") as to whether the lieutenant governor "becomes" governor or is something less. Interestingly, however, we found virtually no debate on whether the new governor (or acting governor) can appoint a new lieutenant governor. The widely-accepted answer to that question is no.

Oregon's experience and constitution mirrors Iowa's in every major respect save one: upon the governor's death the duties of the office devolve upon the Secretary of State, not the lieutenant governor. The Oregon Supreme Court closely examined whether the governor's permanent departure created a vacancy in the office of the Secretary of State. State ex rel. Roberts v. Olcott (Olcott II), 187 P. 286 (Or. 1920). Oregon, like Iowa, had a constitutional provision generally allowing for the governor to fill vacancies in state offices. The Oregon Supreme Court determined, however, that there was no vacancy in the office of Secretary of State when the governor died and the duties (and office) of governor devolved on the Secretary. Id. at 289. The court reasoned that the constitution set forth an unbroken and automatic line of succession. Id.

The same result was reached in a 1939 Michigan Attorney General opinion. That opinion noted that under the "devolve" framework it is well-settled that when the powers and duties of the superior office devolve upon the inferior officer, there is no vacancy in the inferior office. 1939 Mich. Att'y Gen. Rep. at 72 (noting "plain rules of common sense" make clear "that the people never intended to intrust the responsibilities of the governorship to one who has not been elected"); 22 R.C.L. Public Officers § 97, at 442-43 (1918). In other words, when the powers and duties of governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor.<sup>6</sup>

Other states have agreed. See, e.g., Garvey, 195 P.2d at 154 (adhering to the "prevailing view" that "the inferior officer does not vacate his office"); Budd, 45 P. at 1060 ("It is clear that the Lieutenant Governor does not vacate his office when he assumes the powers and duties of the Governorship."); Mitchell,

<sup>6</sup> That legal principle remains true in Michigan even though the Michigan Constitution was thoroughly redrafted in 1961. See 1968 Mich. Att'y Gen. Rep. 234, 235 (Mich. Att'y Gen. Apr. 22, 1968) (recounting debate from the 1961 Michigan constitutional convention that stated if the lieutenant governor became governor after the governor's death or resignation, "there is no replacement for him").

34 P.2d at 372 (holding the assumption of the duties of the office of governor does not create a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor because “he is discharging the functions of Governor by the mandate of the Constitution, and that by reason of being the Lieutenant Governor”); Sadler, 47 P. at 450 (holding when the powers and duties devolve, “there is no vacancy created thereby in the office of lieutenant governor”); Heller, 42 A. at 156 (finding no vacancy); McBride, 70 P. at 26 (“[T]he office of lieutenant governor did not . . . become vacant, but the officer “remained lieutenant governor, intrusted with the powers and duties of governor.”); Ekern, 280 N.W. at 399 (“He remains lieutenant governor, upon whom devolved the powers and duties of governor. In such a contingency no vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor.”); Okla. Op. Att’y Gen. No. 65-235, at 1 (concluding that when the office of governor “devolves upon, descends to, the Lieutenant Governor, . . . [i]n no sense does the Lieutenant Governor vacate his office”); see also Idaho Op. Att’y Gen. No. 77-1, 1977 WL 25063, at *3 (“[M]ost courts hold that resignation of a governor does not create a ‘vacancy’ in the office of lieutenant governor when that person assumes the devolved duties as governor.”).

There are two court decisions in other states which have reached the opposite conclusion, but neither is persuasive. By statute, Arkansas provides for the special election of a new lieutenant governor. Ark. Code § 7-7-105; Stratton v. Priest, 932 S.W.2d 321 (Ark. 1996) (affirming the constitutionality of the statute). Iowa lacks a comparable statute calling for a special election. Moreover, a special election upholds the elective principle, whereas simply appointing a new lieutenant governor does not.

Under very trying circumstances a divided New York Court of Appeals held that a catchall statute allowing the governor to fill vacancies could be used to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. Skelos v. Paterson, 915 N.E.2d 1141, 1142 (N.Y. 2009). We do not find the Skelos majority’s reasoning persuasive, because it assumes a vacancy exists and decides only who is empowered to fill it. In Iowa, given our framers’ focus on the elective principle and the near-unanimous authority predating Skelos, we hesitate to make a similar assumption. See Okla. Op. Att’y Gen. No. 65-235, at 1 (declining to acquiesce in the “erroneous assumption” that “the office of Lieutenant Governor becomes vacant when the Lieutenant Governor acquires the powers and duties of the Governorship”).

Interestingly, in 1943 the New York Attorney General opined that a statute allowing the governor to make appointments could not be applied to a lieutenant governor vacancy because it “would lead to the anomalous result that a Governor by appointing a Lieutenant Governor and then resigning could impose upon the people his own choice as their Governor.” 1943 N.Y. Op. Att’y Gen. No. 378, 1943 WL 54210, at *4 (N.Y. Att’y Gen. Aug. 2, 1943).

B. Analysis. Having taken this wealth of information into consideration, we find the answer to your question in the intersection between article IV, sections 14, 15, 17, 18, and 19 of the Iowa Constitution. Section 14 prohibits an individual from holding two offices “except as herein expressly provided.” The subsequent sections then go on to provide for the line of succession in the event of the governor’s death, resignation, removal, or disability. This juxtaposition is not coincidental. In fact, the entire scheme suggests that our framers intended for situations when a single individual would hold two offices—including the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor.<sup>7</sup> Indeed, it means that when the executive powers and duties devolve from the governor to the lieutenant governor, those two offices essentially merge. As we previously stated—the lieutenant governor becomes governor because she is lieutenant governor.

Formatted: Font: Italic

We are persuaded that “[i]f the framers of the Constitution had intended that there should be a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor upon the resignation, death, or permanent removal of the Governor, they could have easily said so.” Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 372; accord Heller, 42 A. at 156 (concluding if the framers intended a vacancy in the lower office, “it is reasonable to believe they would have said so in no uncertain language”). Our framers did not do so. This omission is telling, especially because our constitution was drafted shortly after two Presidents died in office—and especially when other states have amended their constitutions to do so. See, e.g., Del. Const. art. III, § 20 (“Whenever the powers and duties of the office of Governor shall devolve upon the Lieutenant-Governor . . . his or her office shall become vacant . . .”); Tex. Const. art. IV, § 16(d) (“On becoming Governor, the person vacates the office of Lieutenant Governor . . .”); Utah Const. art. VII, § 10(3)(a)(i) (defining vacancies in the office of Lieutenant Governor to include when “the Lieutenant Governor . . . becomes Governor”).

In addition to the framers’ distinct decision not to provide for a vacancy, other provisions referring to the lieutenant governor “acting as” governor or “exercising the office” of governor are further compelling evidence that there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. These provisions referring to the lieutenant governor performing particular functions—as opposed to saying merely “the lieutenant governor”—would be unnecessary and even meaningless if the new governor could simply appoint a “replacement” lieutenant governor. See Iowa Const. art. IV, §§ 15, 18–19 (1857 original version).

<sup>7</sup> For example, Article III, section 1 prohibits any person from exercising the powers of two branches of government “except in cases hereinafter expressly directed or permitted.” The primary exception to this separation of powers provision originally lay in article IV, sections 15 and 18, which called for the Lieutenant Governor to serve as President of the Senate, and article IV, section 19, which named the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives to the line of succession.

The express language of original section 19 ("If the Lieutenant Governor, while acting as Governor . . .") contemplates a series of events—something happens to the elected Governor and then something happens to the elected Lieutenant Governor. As the Oregon Supreme Court noted, the purpose of creating a line of succession is to ensure the automatic transfer of power—to ensure that someone is always endowed with the powers of Chief Magistrate. See Olcott II, 187 P. at 289. We believe that was also the purpose of article IV, section 19: to extend the line of succession beyond the lieutenant governor. Inserting a newly-appointed "replacement" lieutenant governor in that order would interrupt the line the framers deliberately chose and make it impossible for section 19's provisions ever to be fully carried out.

Moreover, allowing for the appointment of a new lieutenant governor would subvert the elective principle that the Iowa framers clearly endorsed. Like his or her predecessor, under our Constitution an appointed lieutenant governor would assume the powers and duties of governor upon the governor's death, resignation, removal, or disability. In other words, if a lieutenant governor who becomes governor can appoint a new lieutenant, Iowa could have a governor who was not elected by the people. This would be a particularly absurd/unpalatable result because the sole purpa primary reason ~~ese~~ esse for creating the office of lieutenant governor, as expressed at the 1857 constitutional convention, was to ensure that the person first in the line of succession was a statewide elected official. See Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 372 (concluding an unelected governor "was never contemplated and never intended by the framers of the Constitution, or the people who adopted it"); 1939 Mich. Att'y Gen. Rep. at 69 ("[I]t was never intended . . . that any person, who has not received the sanction of the electors by direct vote, should be appointed to a position which would entitle him, in certain eventualities, to the high office of governor.").

~~Furthermore~~ Finally, as we have noted, section 17's devolution provision applies equally to both permanent and temporary disabilities. So must the answer to this question. While Governor Branstad's prospective resignation would be permanent, it is easy to imagine situations which would remove a governor from office only temporarily. For example, on June 29, 2002 and July 21, 2007, Vice President Dick Cheney assumed the powers and duties of the presidency while President George W. Bush underwent ~~minor~~—medical procedures. If the lieutenant governor assumed the power and duties of the governorship under similar (temporary) circumstances and appointed a new lieutenant governor, what would happen to those two officials upon the temporarily-disabled governor's return to the office of Governor? Allowing for the appointment of a new lieutenant governor during a temporary disability would be an absurd result. See Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 372 ("[I]f the Governor were . . . unable temporarily to perform the duties of his office, it could hardly be argued that while the Lieutenant Governor was discharging the duties of the office of Governor, he could appoint a Lieutenant Governor.”); Heller, 42 A. at 158 (concluding a vacancy in the lower office made little sense for temporary disabilities and “could not have been within the contemplation” of those drafting the constitutional provision).

~~We do not think the line of succession detailed in section 19 was intended to apply only in situations where the governor and lieutenant governor die or resign simultaneously. The express language of original section 19 (“If the Lieutenant Governor, while acting as Governor . . .”) contemplates a series of events—something happens to the elected Governor and then something happens to the elected Lieutenant Governor. As the Oregon Supreme Court noted, the purpose of creating a line of succession is to ensure the automatic transfer of power to ensure that someone is always endowed with the powers of Chief Magistrate. See Olcott II, 187 P. at 289.~~

Formatted: Indent: First line: 0"

~~Additionally, the original 1857 version of section 18 expressly contemplates situations when the Lieutenant Governor is exercising the powers and duties of the governor and there is no separate Lieutenant Governor. Under that version of section 18, the Senate can then elect a new President pro tempore. Other provisions referring to the lieutenant governor “acting as” governor or “exercising the office” of governor are further compelling evidence that there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor because these provisions would be unnecessary and even meaningless if the new governor could simply appoint a new lieutenant governor. See Iowa Const. art. IV, §§ 15, 18–19 (1857 original version).~~

Our framers did not do so. This omission is telling, especially because our constitution was drafted shortly after two Presidents died in office and especially when other states have amended their constitutions to do so. See, e.g., Del. Const. art. III, § 20 (“Whenever the powers and duties of the office of Governor shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, . . . his or her office shall become vacant . . .”); Tex. The subsequent amendments to Article IV in 1952 and 1988 reinforce our conclusion. In 1952, Article IV, section 19 was amended to provide,

If there be a vacancy in the office of Governor and the Lieutenant Governor shall by reason of death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability become incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, the President pro tempore of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed. . . .

Like its predecessor, this version of section 19 contemplates a series of events where the governor is first incapacitated and then the lieutenant governor—while exercising the powers and duties of governor—is incapacitated. Just like the original 1857 constitution, nothing in the 1952 amendments contemplates that there is a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor when the sitting governor resigns or dies. See Ekern, 280 N.W. at 398-99 (concluding under language materially identical to revised article IV, section 19 that there is no lieutenant governor vacancy when the powers and duties of governor devolve). Most tellingly, the historical practice of not appointing a new lieutenant governor was continued following the death of Governor Beardsley in 1954 and the resignation of Governor Hughes in 1969—after the 1952 amendments.

As noted previously, in 1988 article IV was amended to provide for the election of governor and lieutenant governor on the same ticket and to alter the lieutenant governor's duties by removing her role as president of the senate. The 1988 amendments also amended article IV, section 2 to provide, that "[t]he governor and the lieutenant governor shall be elected by the qualified electors." This latter amendment reinforces the framers' original commitment to the elective principle.

Nothing in the 1988 amendments specifically altered the line of succession outlined in sections 17 and 19. Contemporary editorials do not indicate that the voters contemplated anything other than the single-ticket issue and the lieutenant governor's duties.<sup>8</sup> See, e.g., Editorial, Preventive Maintenance, Des Moines Reg., Oct. 16, 1988, at 2C; Thomas A. Fogarty, Lawmakers Seek to Have Governor, Lt. Gov. Run as Team, Des Moines Reg. (Feb. 3, 1988); Thomas A. Fogarty, Voters to Decide if Governor, Lt. Gov. Should Run as a Team, Des Moines Reg. (Apr. 13, 1988); Linda Lantor, Lieutenant Governor Amendments Big Winners, Des Moines Reg. (Nov. 9, 1988).

The 1988 amendments' failure to alter the line of succession or address the question of a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor is striking considering the intervening history between 1952 and 1988. Originally the U.S. Constitution contained language mirroring Iowa's devolution framework. The U.S. Constitution, however, was amended in 1967 following the assassination of President Kennedy. The 25th Amendment to the United States Constitution expressly provided that the vice president becomes president and granted the President the authority to appoint a new vice president with Congressional approval. U.S. Const. amend. 25, §§ 1, 2.

Iowa's legislators and voters in 1988 were obviously aware of the change in the federal system; President Ford became the first unelected U.S. President just the decade before. Yet, Iowa did not attempt to follow the new federal model. While it is often dangerous to reach a conclusion based upon legislative inaction, by declining to adopt the federal model, we believe the amendments ratified our historical precedent—namely, that the lieutenant governor assumes the title, powers, and duties of governor, but does not appoint a new lieutenant governor. See Chiodo v. Section 43.24 Panel, 846 N.W.2d 845, 862 (Iowa 2014) (Mansfield, J., specially concurring).

Because it is our opinion that upon a governor's resignation, the lieutenant governor will hold both the Office of Governor and the Office of Lieutenant Governor, as expressly permitted by Article IV, section 14, there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor to be filled. Cf. Olcott I, 181 P. at 481 (relying on "except as permitted" language to conclude an individual could "hold the offices of governor and secretary of state at the same time").

As a result, under these facts, Iowa Code section 69.8 does not apply. See Iowa Code § 69.8(2) (referring to the governor filling "a vacancy in the office

<sup>8</sup> This is in stark contrast to Utah, where its 1980 constitutional amendments addressing gubernatorial succession were presented to the voters as mirroring the succession of the federal government—which by this time had adopted the 25th Amendment. of lieutenant governor” (emphasis added)). Consequently, we need not opine on the statute’s constitutionality.<sup>9</sup>

C. Answer. It is our opinion that if the governor resigns and the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor, that person does not have authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor. Upon the governor’s resignation, the powers and duties of the office will devolve or descend upon the lieutenant governor—who does not ascend or rise to the Office of Governor. However, under our constitutional framework, by possessing the powers and duties of the chief magistrate, the lieutenant governor becomes governor for all intents and purposes, is entitled to use the title of Governor, and is entitled to the compensation of governor for the remainder of the term. The lieutenant governor takes on this authority because she is lieutenant governor. In other words, upon a governor’s resignation, the lieutenant governor will hold both the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. There is no vacancy to be filled.

<sup>9</sup> Because it is not the factual context in which you have asked your questions, we do not address whether section 69.8 would be applicable if the lieutenant governor resigned or died in office while the governor remained. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has suggested that a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor exists in that factual scenario, but not when the powers and duties of governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor. See Ekern, 280 N.W. at 399.

I. If Governor Branstad Resigns, Is Lieutenant Governor Reynolds Governor?

Article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution is the key to answering this question. “[T]he purpose of art. IV, § 17 is to ensure that the citizens of Iowa are not without a person capable of performing the constitutional and statutory duties imposed upon a governor.” 1980 Op. Att’y Gen. 550, 1980 WL 25903, at *3 (Iowa Att’y Gen. Jan. 2, 1980). That section provides,

In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17.<sup>1</sup> Article IV, section 17 has remained unchanged since 1857.

I focus here on two notable aspects of article IV, section 17. First, while death and resignation are permanent exits from office, the phrase “other disability” includes temporary conditions such as physical or mental incapacity. See 1923 Op. Att’y Gen. 263, 263 (Iowa Att’y Gen. Aug. 23, 1923) (answering a question posed by the governor about the exercise of gubernatorial power under article IV, section 17 during a several-month hiatus recommended by his physician). Therefore, article IV, section 17 must carry an interpretation commensurate with its flexibility; its provisions must establish a framework applicable to several possible factual scenarios without creating “friction in the machinery of government by reason of such construction.” Fitzpatrick v. McAlister, 248 P. 569, 576 (Okla. 1926).

<sup>1</sup> Article IV, section 17 bears a section heading stating “Lieutenant governor to act as governor.” I give that heading no weight in my analysis. During the 1857 Iowa convention, the constitutional provisions did not include section descriptions or titles when read into the record. See 1 The Debates of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Iowa, at 76–78 (W. Blair Lord rep., 1857). The original handwritten version of the Iowa Constitution does not include section descriptions or titles either. See generally Iowa Const., at https://www.legis.iowa.gov/docs/publications/icnst/attachments/Iowa\_Constitution\_Scanned.pdf. Furthermore, a section heading “cannot limit the plain meaning of the text.” Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Bair, 338 N.W.2d 338, 344 (Iowa 1983). That important limitation, which prevents a code editor’s choice of language from frustrating the intent of a statute, is even more significant when considering a constitutional provision.

The second important piece of article IV, section 17 is the word “devolve.” ~~a downward transfer~~ That word “is defined by lexicographers and in law dictionaries as meaning to roll or tumble down or descend.” Id. at 573 (citing authorities indicating that meaning as of 1926); see also “Devolve,” Black’s Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014) (defining “devolve” to include transferring rights, duties, or powers and passing by transmission); “Devolve,” Webster’s Third New Int’l Dictionary (1993) (defining “devolve” as “to flow or roll from a situation viewed as higher to one that is lower” and “to fall or be passed . . . as an obligation or responsibility”); 12 Words & Phrases 546 (1954). The overall concept is that the word connotes downward movement. This downward movement creates an interpretation question: ~~Does it~~ article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution, mean if the governor resigns, is ~~the lieutenant governor is truly governor, or that the lieutenant governor is something less—such as acting governor or governor ex officio~~ not?

~~One~~ Beyond dictionary definitions, another important guidepost in determining the meaning of “devolve” is what it was understood to mean at the time it was enacted:

In the interpretation of the Constitution . . . we are to ascertain the meaning by getting at the intention of those making the instrument. What thought was in the mind of those making the Constitution—what was their intention, is the great leading rule of construction.

Ex parte Pritz, 9 Iowa 30, 32 (1858); accord Griffin v. Pate, 884 N.W.2d 182, 186 (Iowa 2016) (beginning analysis of a constitutional provision “by looking back to review the history” of it “to gain a better understanding of the concept” as applied in a current case); Redmond v. Ray, 268 N.W.2d 849, 853 (Iowa 1978) (“In construing a constitution, our purpose is to ascertain the intent of the framers.”). There are several important pieces to the historical puzzle that, once assembled, illuminate the framework the Iowa Constitution’s framers established.

A. Constitutional Debates. The Iowa Constitution of 1846 made no provision for a lieutenant governor. However, as the 1857 constitutional convention began, one delegate proposed that a committee dedicated to formulating the executive branch of government consider “providing for the election of a Lieutenant Governor who, by virtue of his office, shall . . . exercise all the powers and have the title of Governor in case of the death, removal, or other disability of the Governor.” 1 The Debates of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Iowa, at 39 (W. Blair Lord rep., 1857) [hereinafter The Debates]. The convention agreed to the resolution. Id. Accordingly, the drafters of article IV, section 17 envisioned that the lieutenant governor would “have the title of Governor” if the governor left office, id.—and utilized the word “devolve” to accomplish that result. See State ex rel. Martin v. Heil, 7 N.W.2d 375, 381–82 (Wis. 1942) (recounting similar debate from the Wisconsin constitutional convention in 1847).

B. *Federal Language and History. In 1857, when the Iowa Constitution was ratified, article II, section 1, clause 6 of the United States Constitution read: “In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President . . . .” Thus, article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution matched language in the United States Constitution at the time.

Under that federal language, ~~several~~multiple presidents died in office. Following each death, the Vice President was considered President, not “acting President.” Two instances occurred before 1857: John Tyler in 1841 and Millard Fillmore in 1850. Because of this history, the delegates to the 1857 Iowa constitutional convention likely understood the word “devolve” to mean that upon the governor’s exit from office, the lieutenant governor would be governor following a downward movement of powers. See State v. Baldon, 829 N.W.2d 785, 810 (Iowa 2013) (Appel, J., specially concurring) (noting “the drafters of the Iowa Constitution were well aware” of existing federal law when writing in 1857).

A federal court decision from 1867 confirms this understanding:

Three times, since the adoption of the constitution, the president has died, and, under [article II, section 1, clause 6], the powers and duties of the office of president have devolved upon the vice president. All branches of the government have, under such circumstances, recognized the vice president as holding the office of president, as authorized to assume its title . . . . It has never been supposed that, under the provision of the constitution, the vice president . . . acted as the servant, or agent, or locum tenens of the deceased president, or in any other capacity than as holding the office of president fully, for the time being, by virtue of express authority emanating from the United States.

Merriam v. Clinch, 17 F. Cas. 68, 70 (C.C.S.D.N.Y. 1867). The three instances to which the court referred were Tyler, Fillmore, and Andrew Johnson in 1865.

Likewise, the Oklahoma Supreme Court relied upon federal history several decades later in analyzing the word “devolve:”

[U]pon the death of President Wm. H. Harrison, Vice President Tyler became President of the United States. For almost a century this construction of the federal Constitution has stood without question. It has been recognized as correct, and acquiesced in, not only by the departments of state and all the states of the Union, but officially recognized by every civilized government in the world.

Defendant suggests that no court has ever pronounced that to be the law. To our mind, it is so clearly correct that no one has ever presumed to test its correctness in the courts. Therefore it should have greater weight than an ordinary departmental construction, not only because it has stood for almost a century, but because it has been recognized as the correct conception of our system of government, and because, for eighty-five years under this construction, there has been no friction in the machinery of government by reason of such construction.

Fitzpatrick, 248 P. at 576. Between Merriam in 1867 and Fitzpatrick in 1926, three more presidents died in office—and once again, after each death, the Vice President was considered President.<sup>2</sup> The consistent federal understanding of the word “devolve” over several decades further informs my determination of what “devolve” means in article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution.

C. Other Original Executive Branch Provisions. Related provisions enacted alongside article IV, section 17 can also aid in determining the meaning of the word “devolve.” See Iowa Code § 4.1(38) (2017) (“Words and phrases shall be construed according to the context . . . .”); see also State ex rel. Martin v. Heil, 7 N.W.2d at 381 (“[T]he provision should be examined in its setting in order to find out . . . the real meaning and substantial purpose of those who adopted it.”). Several other original provisions in article IV of the Iowa Constitution bear upon the question of transferring ~~or shifting~~ executive power. Although some provisions of article IV have been amended since 1857, I initially focus on the original provisions, because those—~~together with section 17—~~established the original framework ~~as the drafters intended it.~~

Article IV, section 1 provides that “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1. In other words, the person who has the powers is governor. Like article IV, section 17, article IV, section 1 has remained unchanged since 1857.

Article IV, sections 2 and 3 originally established that the governor and lieutenant governor would be elected by the people—but not on the same ticket.

Article IV, section 18 made the lieutenant governor President of the Senate with a tiebreaking vote, but provided that “when [the lieutenant governor] shall exercise the office of Governor, the Senate shall choose a President pro tempore.”

Article IV, section 15 established that the lieutenant governor would serve until a successor was elected and qualified, and that “while acting as Governor,” the lieutenant governor would receive the same pay as provided for the governor.

Article IV, section 19 established how executive power would transfer when multiple state officers were incapable of performing gubernatorial duties:

If the Lieutenant Governor, while acting as Governor, shall be impeached, displaced, resign, or die, or otherwise become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the President pro tempore of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled, or the disability removed; and if the President of the Senate, for any of the above causes, shall be rendered incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, the same shall devolve upon the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

In light of these provisions, it is my opinion that section 1 and original section 18 complement each other and dovetail with section 17. Because the framers understood that the lieutenant governor would “have the title of Governor,” 1 The Debates at 39, they also provided in section 18 that when the powers and duties devolved (as section 17 instructed), the lieutenant governor would “exercise the office of Governor.” That aligns with the foundational principle that the person who has the powers is governor. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1. The foundational principle is paramount.

D. Other States’ Experiences. Iowa is not the first state to face significant legal questions regarding a governor’s permanent departure from office. While other states’ constitutions and experiences do not alone determine ~~conclusively~~ what the Iowa Constitution means, I find valuable to my analysis the language used in those states’ constitutions, court decisions or attorney general opinions involving that language, and any subsequent linguistic changes.

My review of available authority reveals a relatively even divide. When the issue has surfaced and the relevant constitutional provision utilized the word “devolve,” some authorities in other states have concluded that the lieutenant governor is governor. In view of the question as I have phrased it, I call these the “yes” decisions. See, e.g., Bryant v. English, 843 S.W.2d 308, 311 (Ark. 1992) (“[W]e hold that . . . the Lieutenant Governor serves as Governor for the residue of the term . . . .”); State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d 369, 370 (Mont. 1934) (“[W]hen the Governor resigns or is permanently removed from office, there is no vacancy in the office of Governor in the sense that there is no one left with power to discharge the duties imposed upon the Governor.”); Fitzpatrick, 248 P. at 577 (“Mr. Trapp is just as much a Governor, in every literal and practical sense and effect, as though he had been elected to the office.”); Chadwick v. Earhart, 4 P. 1180, 1181 (Or. 1884) (“[I]t is not shown how . . . . a person can fill the office of governor without being governor.”); State ex rel. Murphy v. McBride, 70 P. 25, 26 (Wash. 1902) (“The constitution having provided that in case of the death of the governor the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of governor.”); 1939 Op. Att’y Gen. 69, 73 (Mich. Att’y Gen. Mar. 28, 1939) (concluding when the governor dies, the lieutenant governor is “governor of the state [for] all intents and purposes”).

Others have concluded that the lieutenant governor or next person “in line” is not truly governor, ~~but is instead only acting governor~~. I call these the “no” decisions. See, e.g., State ex rel. De Concini v. Garvey, 195 P.2d 153, 154 (Ariz. 1948) (concluding the person upon whom the powers and duties of governor devolve after the governor’s death or resignation “is not governor de jure or de facto but merely ex officio ~~or acting governor~~”); People ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 45 P. 1060, 1060 (Cal. 1896) (“[I]t would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor the latter thereby becomes governor . . . .”); State ex rel. Hardin v. Sadler, 47 P. 450, 450 (Nev. 1897) (“If a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor . . . . The officer remains lieutenant governor, but invested with the powers and duties of governor.”); State v. Heller, 42 A. 155, 157 (N.J. 1899) (“The language used is not ambiguous. It declares that the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve on the president of the senate; it does not confer upon him the title of the office.”); State ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, 280 N.W. 393, 399 (Wis. 1938) (“[T]he lieutenant governor does not become governor. He remains lieutenant governor, upon whom devolves the powers and duties of governor.”).

E. Analysis. The substantial amount of “no” decisions are significant. Although Iowa has “no obligation to adopt a rule just because it has generally been adopted elsewhere,” Handeland v. Brown, 216 N.W.2d 574, 577 (Iowa 1974), all of the “no” decisions are based on a careful parsing of the word “devolve” and the other relevant constitutional language. When resolving legal quandaries, precision and nuance matter. See Rivera v. Woodward Res. Ctr., 865 N.W.2d 887, 897 (Iowa 2015). Thus, placing Iowa among the “no” decisions would be legally defensible. Indeed, in 1977, the Idaho Attorney General acknowledged that, although he believed them to be somewhat counterintuitive, the “no” decisions suggested “the lieutenant governor never truly succeeds to the office of governor” under the Idaho Constitution (which at the time used the word “devolve”). Idaho Op. Att’y Gen. No. 77-1, 1977 WL 25063, at *1 (Idaho Att’y Gen. Jan. 4, 1977). The Idaho Attorney General went on to recommend that only the Idaho Supreme Court could answer the question definitively as a matter of Idaho law. See id.

Nonetheless, I find the “yes” decisions more persuasive than the “no” decisions. Several of the “no” decisions have been superseded by subsequent constitutional amendments in their respective states. Those amendments often changed the framework for transferring executive power to provide that the lieutenant governor “becomes governor” or “shall be governor” when the governor dies, resigns, or otherwise leaves office permanently. See, e.g., Ariz. Const. art. V, § 6; Cal. Const. art. V, § 10; N.J. Const. art. V, § 1 ¶ 6; Wis. Const. art. V, § 7(1). In other words, the people of the respective states amended the constitution to clarify the framework of executive power, suggesting they believed the court’s previous interpretation was incorrect.

Additionally, with specific regard to New Jersey, the Heller court noted several phrases in the state’s constitution that referred to the governor “or person administering the government.” Heller, 42 A. at 157. If the person exercising executive power after the governor's resignation was governor, the court concluded, the phrase "person administering the government" would be superfluous. See id. Thus, the Heller decision is distinguishable because it was based in part on unique constitutional language. The Iowa Constitution does not similarly refer to the governor "or person administering the government."

I also conclude the "no" decisions elevate form over substance, which the Iowa Supreme Court has repeatedly cautioned against. See, e.g., Lewis v. Jaeger, 818 N.W.2d 165, 179 (Iowa 2012); State ex rel. Miller v. Smokers Warehouse Corp., 737 N.W.2d 107, 110 (Iowa 2007); Van Baale v. City of Des Moines, 550 N.W.2d 153, 156 (Iowa 1996). The "no" decisions are somewhat technical, drawing a linguistic distinction that, while noteworthy, makes no substantive difference under the circumstances presented here. See Harriman v. State, 2 Greene 270, 285 (Iowa 1849) (considering it the court's "imperative duty" to "disregard . . . unmeaning technicalities, and to look more to the substance and merits of each case"); see also State ex rel. Martin v. Heil, 7 N.W.2d at 381 ("It is extremely important in the interpretation of constitutional provisions that we avoid determinations based purely on technical or verbal argument and that we seek to discover the true spirit and intent of the provisions examined."). Whether her title would be governor or acting governor, there could be little dispute that if Governor Branstad resigns, now-Lieutenant Governor Reynolds would possess authority to sign legislation, ~~appoint new members of state boards and commissions,~~ issue pardons, and even receive the governor's salary. Instead, the dispute centers on the exact wording of her new title.

On that score, article IV, section 1 of the Iowa Constitution carries significant weight. That section provides, "The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa." Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1. In other words, the person who has the powers is governor. The powers make the governor, carrying with them the title. As the Arkansas Supreme Court concluded under a similar provision in the Arkansas Constitution, this means when the powers and duties of governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor, that person is thereafter styled the governor. See Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 313; accord Fitzpatrick, 248 P. at 572 ("He is the 'Governor' for the simple reason that he governs."). Thus, there is no substantive difference between governor and acting governor—when the governor's exit is permanent. See State ex rel. Chatterton v. Grant, 73 P. 470, 474 (Wyo. 1903) (concluding that, after the governor died, the question whether a person "[wa]s in fact the governor of the state" was immaterial because, whether governor or acting governor, the person had the powers and duties of the office). A person acting as governor after the powers have devolved is governor, because of article IV, section 1.

The "yes" decisions also comport with the Iowa framers' understanding of the lieutenant governor's role and with our state's historical practice. In creating the office of lieutenant governor, the framers expected that person to "have the title of Governor" if the governor left office. 1 The Debates, at 39.

Furthermore, on four previous occasions the governor of Iowa has resigned or died in office—and each time, the lieutenant governor was thereafter treated as governor. See William H. Fleming, The Second Officer in the Government, reprinted in Annals of Iowa: A Historical Quarterly, Vol. XIII, No. 1, at 533–34 (1921) (recalling Governor Kirkwood’s resignation in 1877 and Governor Cummins’s resignation in 1908); Legis. Servs. Agency, Pieces of Iowa’s Past: Lieutenant Governors Who Have Become Governor 2–3 (Mar. 8, 2017), available at <https://www.legis.iowa.gov/docs/publications/TB/855445.pdf> (noting Governor Beardsley’s death in 1954 and Governor Hughes’s resignation in 1969). Indeed, one history of Iowa referred to Kirkwood’s successor as the “ninth governor of Iowa” following Kirkwood’s resignation. 4 Benjamin F. Gue, History of Iowa: From the Earliest Times to the Beginning of the Twentieth Century 199–200 (1903). Although historical practice standing alone does not mandate a similar result now, the historical practice is consistent with the framework of executive power I have described. See Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 312 (finding it “of some persuasion” that, when the governor of Arkansas died or resigned, the lieutenant governor was historically treated as governor).

Unlike the constitutional amendments in the “no” states, Iowa’s amendments to article IV do not change or alter my analysis of the effect of article IV, section 17. A 1952 amendment to article IV, section 19 removed a reference to the lieutenant governor “acting as” governor, replacing it with “if there be a vacancy in the office of Governor”—and that language remains today. ~~However, the 1952 amendment did not remove language in article IV,~~

~~section 15 which establishes the lieutenant governor's compensation that referred to the lieutenant governor acting as governor.~~

There is a natural tendency to ascribe significance to the change, but ~~these amendments~~ that amendment doesn't really say much about the title of the person upon whom the powers and duties devolve—because article IV, section 1 controls that question.<sup>3</sup> And in any event, as I have explained, "acting as" governor is simply what the lieutenant governor does when the powers and duties devolve, not a substantive limit on his or her power or title.

The more significant piece of the 1952 amendments, in my view, was a section providing that if the governor-elect died, resigned, or failed to qualify, the lieutenant governor-elect would "assume the powers and duties of governor" upon inauguration. As I have noted, article IV, section 1 would therefore make the person with the powers the governor. In other words, the 1952 amendment solidified—not altered—the existing framework for the transfer of executive power in the event of a constitutional contingency.<sup>4</sup>

In 1972, several provisions of article IV were changed, but they did not affect sections 1 or 17. Originally, article IV, sections 2 and 3 provided the governor and lieutenant governor served two-year terms. The 1972 amendment merely increased both terms to four years. Thus, they do not indicate any significant change in the constitutional framework for transferring executive power.

<sup>3</sup> If anything, the 1952 amendment reinforces the downward direction of the "devolve" framework by suggesting if there is a vacancy in the executive branch, it occurs in the governor's office.

Iowa enacted more significant amendments in 1988. The 1988 amendments provided for the first time that the governor and lieutenant governor are elected together, on one ticket, "as if these two offices were one and the same." Iowa Const. art. IV, § 3. Before 1988, it was possible for the governor and lieutenant governor to represent different political parties. The amendment brought to fruition a constitutional delegate's statement at the 1857 convention: "The governor and lieutenant-governor will always, I presume, be the same in politics, and why not have the successor of the governor of the same politics, instead of bringing in one of the antagonistic party?" 1 The Debates, at 593.

The 1988 amendments also recast the lieutenant governor's duties. Under original article IV, section 18, the lieutenant governor was president of the senate and possessed a tiebreaking vote. If the lieutenant governor was absent, impeached, or exercising the office of Governor, the Senate was instructed to choose a president pro tempore to preside and break ties. However, the 1988 amendments revised article IV, section 18 to provide that the lieutenant governor "shall have the duties provided by law and those duties of the governor assigned to the lieutenant governor by the governor." In other words, the 1988 amendments removed the lieutenant governor's status as president of the Senate.

The only remaining duty “provided by law” is to receive the powers and duties of governor under article IV, section 17 if the governor leaves office; there are no additional statutory duties imposed upon the lieutenant governor.

As the Montana Supreme Court put it:

When the framers of the Constitution provided for the election of a Governor and a Lieutenant Governor as members of the executive department of the state, but conferred upon the latter no executive power or authority other than in the contingencies mentioned . . . , they manifested the intention that the people elect two qualified heads of that department—the one active, the other his lieutenant, ready at a moment’s notice to assume the duties of the office, should his superior officer, for any reason, either temporarily or permanently, become unable to perform them.

State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 371–72; see also State ex rel. Martin v. Heil, 7 N.W.2d at 383 (noting the lieutenant governor “was deliberately chosen by the people for no other important purpose than to substitute for the governor”). Therefore, the 1988 amendments do not alter my analysis on this question.

F. Answer. After considering the Iowa Constitution’s language, placing it in historical perspective, and comparing other legal analyses on similar topics, it is my opinion that under article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution, if the governor resigns and the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor, the lieutenant governor has the title of governor.

MEMORANDUM

To: Jeff Thompson, Meghan Gavin
From: David Ranscht
Date: February 6, 2017
Re: Draft Answers to Gubernatorial Succession Questions

On February 1, 2017, the Attorney General's Office received a request from state Senator David Johnson for a formal legal opinion regarding several provisions of the Iowa Constitution. Senator Johnson requested the opinion because President Donald Trump announced he intends to nominate Iowa Governor Terry Branstad as a United States Ambassador. To serve as an ambassador, Governor Branstad would have to resign his position as Governor of Iowa. Senator Johnson requests an expedited attorney general opinion exploring the succession provisions of the Iowa Constitution. Essentially, Senator Johnson asks the Attorney General's Office to opine on what happens if and when Governor Branstad submits his resignation. Although some past Iowa governors have resigned, these specific questions have not arisen in Iowa before.

I. OPERATIVE CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS

The relevant provision of the Iowa Constitution is article IV, section 17, which is entitled "Lieutenant governor to act as governor." It provides:

In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17. This provision has never been amended.

Several other state constitutions contain similar language that centers around the verb "devolve." See, e.g., Ark. Const. art. 6, § 4; Idaho Const. art. IV, § 12; Nev. Const. art. 5, § 18; Okla. Const. art. 6, § 16; Tenn. Const. art. 3, § 12; Wash. Const. art. 3, § 10. Additionally, although they do not contain the verb "devolve," some state constitutions provide—like article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution—that if a governor resigns, the lieutenant governor shall have the powers, authorities, and duties of governor. See, e.g., Ky. Const. § 84; Mass. Const. pt. 2, ch. II, § II, art. III; Miss. Const. art. 5, § 131.

In contrast, many state constitutions distinguish between permanent disabilities and temporary disabilities. Permanent disabilities occur when a governor dies or resigns, whereas temporary disabilities could include physical or mental incapacity, or absence from the state. In those states, generally the lieutenant governor becomes governor when a permanent disability occurs but gubernatorial powers devolve (or the lieutenant governor acts as governor) during any period of temporary disability. See, e.g., Ala. Const. art. V, § 127; Alaska Const. art. 3, §§ 9, 11; Ariz. Const. art. 5, § 6; Cal. Const. art. 5, § 10; Colo. Const. art. 4, § 13 (1), (5); Conn. Const. art. 4, § 18(a)–(b); Fla. Const. art. 4, § 3(a)–(b); Ga. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶ V(a)–(b); Haw. Const. art. 5, § 4; Ind. Const. art. 5, § 10(a); Kan. Const. art. 1, § 11; Me. Const. art. 5, pt. 1, §§ 14–15; Md. Const. art. 2, § 6(b), (d); Mich. Const. art. 5, § 26; Minn. Const. art. 5, § 5; Mo. Const. art. 4, § 11(a); Neb. Const. art. IV, § 16; N.J. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶¶ 6–7; N.M. Const. art. 5, § 7; N.Y. Const. art. 4, § 5; N.C. Const. art. III, § 3(1), (3); Ohio Const. art. III, § 15(A)–(B); Pa. Const. art. 4, § 13; S.D. Const. art. 4, § 6; Tex. Const. art. 4, § 16(c)–(d); Utah Const. art. 7, § 11(2), (5); Va. Const. art. 5, § 16; Wis. Const. art. 5, § 7(1)–(2). Article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution does not make a similar distinction; its provisions apply to all disabilities, whether temporary or permanent. See Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17.

Several other provisions of article IV of the Iowa Constitution bear upon the question of gubernatorial succession. Article IV, section 1 provides that “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.” Article IV, section 10 grants the governor authority to fill any office that becomes vacant if the constitution and laws do not provide a mode for filling such vacancy. Article IV, section 18 provides that the lieutenant governor “shall have the duties provided by law and those duties of the governor assigned to the lieutenant governor by the governor.” Finally, the Iowa Constitution contemplates a contingency that becomes active when multiple state officers are incapable of performing gubernatorial duties:

If there be a vacancy in the office of the governor and the lieutenant governor shall by reason of death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability become incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor, the president of the senate shall act as governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability is removed; and if the president of the senate, for any of the above causes, shall be incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor the same shall devolve upon the speaker of the house of representatives; and if the speaker of the house of representatives, for any of the above causes, shall be incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor, the justices of the supreme court shall convene the general assembly by proclamation and the general assembly shall organize by the election of a president by the senate and a speaker by the house of representatives. The general assembly shall thereupon immediately proceed to the election of a governor and lieutenant governor in joint convention.

Iowa Const. art. IV, § 19.

In 1844, when Iowa first offered a state constitution for ratification by the people, a newspaper editorial expressed disappointment that much of it was written “in very confused and bungling language” that rendered the drafters’ intent “almost or quite doubtful.” Its Style, The Iowa Standard, Vol. IV, No. 46 (Nov. 14, 1844), reprinted in Press Comments and Other Materials on the Constitutions of 1844 and 1846, at 214 (Benjamin F. Shambaugh ed., 1900). Though modern readers might feel similarly about the current Iowa Constitution, constitutional history illuminates the framework the drafters established—and why they established it.

II. CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY

A. Iowa History

1. The 1857 Convention

Iowa enacted its current constitution in 1857. As the constitutional convention began, one delegate proposed that an Executive Committee dedicated to formulating the executive branch of government consider “providing for the election of a Lieutenant Governor who, by virtue of his office, shall . . . exercise all the powers and have the title of Governor in case of the death, removal, or other disability of the Governor.” 1 The Debates of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Iowa, at 39 (W. Blair Lord rep., 1857) [hereinafter The Debates]. The previous Iowa Constitution of 1846 made no provision for a lieutenant governor. The 1857 convention agreed to the resolution. Id.

When it came time to debate provisions of article IV, a representative from the Committee read the proposed provisions to the convention. Id. at 76–78. The provisions did not include section descriptions or titles. See id. In other words, the convention did not understand article IV, section 17 to provide that the lieutenant governor “acts as” governor. That descriptive heading came later! Instead, by the words of the resolution at the outset of the convention, the drafters understood that the lieutenant governor would “have the title of Governor” if the Governor left office. Id. at 39.

When considering statutes, the Iowa Supreme Court has stated that a section heading “cannot limit the plain meaning of the text.” Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Bair, 338 N.W.2d 338, 344 (Iowa 1983). That important limitation, which prevents a code editor’s choice of language from frustrating the intent of a statute, is even more significant when considering a constitutional provision. But even if the heading of article IV, section 17—which does not use operative language from article IV, section 17 itself—sheds some light on the framers’ intent in drafting the provision, see T & K Roofing Co. v. Iowa Dep’t of Educ., 593 N.W.2d 159, 163 (Iowa 1999), other available materials better establish what the Iowa Constitution’s framers really understood “devolve” to mean and what they intended the gubernatorial succession framework to look like.

Notably, despite the resolution at the outset of the 1857 convention, Iowa considered having no lieutenant governor at all. During debate on article IV, delegate Warren proposed an amendment to article IV, section 17 that replaced the words “Lieutenant Governor” with “Secretary of State.” 1 The Debates, at 587. Delegate Clarke of Johnson County<sup>1</sup> proposed instead “that the duties of the office of Governor, in case of a vacancy, shall devolve upon the president of the Senate.” Id. The convention passed the amendment as Clarke proposed it, inserting the words “president of the Senate” in place of “Lieutenant Governor.” Id. Accordingly, the convention also deleted other provisions referring to the lieutenant governor’s duties and place in the line of succession. See id. at 587–88.

But not every delegate was convinced the convention had made the right decision. The next morning, delegate Gray asked his colleagues “to consider well the importance of the matter before striking” the provisions for a lieutenant governor. Id. at 591. He noted many other states’ constitution provided for the office of lieutenant governor and indicated “there are some advantages connected with the office.” Id.

Among those advantages was the fact that the lieutenant governor “will be elected directly by the people, instead of by the Legislature.” Id. Gray found that important because “We all seem to agree in placing elections, as far as possible, directly in the power of the people.” Id. Delegate Clarke of Henry County agreed:

Gentlemen [of the convention] do not reflect that they may be taking from the people the power of selecting their own chief magistrate. When a man is a candidate for the office of Lieutenant Governor, the people always vote for him with the understanding that circumstances may arise which will make him their Governor. But if you give to the Senate the power of selecting the man who may be the Governor of the people, you take from the people this power and put it into the hands of the Senate.

Delegate Gray's remarks sparked renewed debate on the subject, and some delegates changed their minds. For example, delegate Wilson offered that although he had originally voted to eliminate the position of lieutenant governor, "upon reflection . . . the advantages in favor of [having a lieutenant governor] are far superior to the disadvantages." Id. at 593. Most significant, however, were Mr. Clark's remarks:

I voted yesterday to strike out the office of Lieutenant-Governor. I had not reflected upon it well, and I am inclined to the opinion that I did not vote right. Upon hearing the argument thus far upon the question, and upon reflection, I am disposed to favor the office of Lieut.-Governor, for one reason, if there were no other: I believe that an executive officer, whoever he may be that shall perform the duties of that office, whether Governor or Lieutenant-Governor, ought to be elected directly by the people, in all cases, at least so far as it is possible to provide for it. We elect the Governor by the direct votes of the people—by the popular will—by the popular voice. In case of his removal or disability, I see no reason why the person filling his place should not be elected directly by the whole people as much as the Governor himself.

Id. at 594. Mr. Clark's clear concern was ensuring that the person exercising the state's executive power, "whether Governor or Lieutenant-Governor," has a majority of the citizenry's blessing to do so. See id.

After some further debate, the convention voted 19–14 against the amendment that would have struck the office of lieutenant governor. Id. at 595. Accordingly, the convention also restored other provisions relating to the office of lieutenant governor. See id. at 596.

2. Iowa Governors Who Resigned

Governor Kirkwood resigned in 1877 to become a United States Senator. Then-Lieutenant Governor Newbold "entered on the discharge of the duties of the executive" for the remainder of the term (just under a year) but did not appoint a new lieutenant governor "because the lieutenant-governorship was not vacant." William H. Fleming, The Second Officer in the Government, reprinted in Annals of Iowa: A Historical Quarterly, Vol. XIII, No. 1, at 533 (1921) [hereinafter Annals of Iowa]. A later history of Iowa referred to Newbold as the "ninth Governor of Iowa" and stated he "became Governor" when Kirkwood resigned. 4 Benjamin F. Gue, History of Iowa: From the Earliest Times to the Beginning of the Twentieth Century 199–200 (1903).

Governor Cummins resigned in 1908 to become a United States Senator. Then-Lieutenant Governor Garst "entered on the performance of executive duties" for the remainder of the term (just under two months) but did not appoint a new lieutenant governor. Annals of Iowa, at 534.

Governor Hughes resigned in 1969 to become a United States Senator. Then-Lieutenant Governor Fulton assumed the duties of governor for the remainder of the term (just over two weeks) but did not appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Additionally, in 1954, Governor Beardsley died in office. Although Governor Beardsley did not resign, his death—like a resignation—was a permanent “disability” under the Iowa Constitution. Then-Lieutenant Governor Elthon assumed the duties of governor for the remainder of the term (just under two months). However, Elthon did not appoint a new lieutenant governor.

3. Interpretation and Subsequent Amendments

In 1923, Governor Kendall requested an opinion from the Attorney General’s Office because he received medical advice recommending he take an extended vacation and abstain from performing his official duties. 1923 Att’y Gen. Ann. Rep. 349, 349 (Iowa Att’y Gen. Aug. 23, 1923). The length of his expected absence was indefinite but would likely be two to three months. Id. He asked the Attorney General’s Office to opine on “whether or not the Lieutenant Governor can, during [the] temporary absence, perform the duties of Governor.” Id.

The Attorney General concluded “that during the temporary disability of the governor, that the lieutenant governor may act as governor.” Id. at 348. The opinion differentiates between the governor permanently leaving office and the governor stepping aside temporarily:

From a consideration of [article IV of the Iowa Constitution] it will be observed that in case of death, resignation, or removal from office of the governor, that the lieutenant-governor succeeds him as governor of the state for the residue of the term. It will further appear that when there is a temporary disability of the governor, the lieutenant-governor acts in his stead during the period of time such disability continues. In the first instance, the lieutenant-governor becomes governor. In the second instance he simply acts as governor during the temporary disability of his chief.

Id. The opinion makes that distinction in part because “terms of a constitution, like those of a statute, are always to be given their natural and obvious meaning. That is, the meaning in which they are commonly and ordinarily understood.” Id. at 347–46.<sup>2</sup> The Attorney General further advised Governor Kendall that, when stepping aside, he should make clear “there is no resignation or permanent abandonment of the office of governor.” Id. at 343–42.

The 1923 opinion has not been rescinded or disavowed. Neither the legislature nor the people of Iowa sought to amend the Iowa Constitution to establish that the Attorney General’s interpretation was incorrect.

However, the people later amended article IV of the Iowa Constitution. Originally, article IV, section 19 established a succession order if, while acting as governor, the lieutenant governor died, resigned, was impeached or displaced, or otherwise became incapable of performing the duties of the office. The 1952 amendment to article IV, section 19 established the current language, with one exception: it referred not just to the president of the Senate, but the president pro tempore. Accordingly, the 1952 amendment removed the reference to the lieutenant governor “acting as” governor—and that language remains today. However, the 1952 amendment did not remove language in article IV, section 15—which establishes the lieutenant governor’s compensation—that referred to the lieutenant governor acting as governor.

In 1972, several provisions of article IV were changed, but they did not affect gubernatorial succession. Originally, article IV, sections 2 and 3 provided the governor and lieutenant governor served two-year terms. The 1972 amendment increased both terms to four years. It also amended article IV, section 15 to reflect the four-year terms.

The most significant constitutional amendments occurred in 1988. Those amendments, which remain in force today, provided for the first time that the governor and lieutenant governor are elected together, on one ticket, “as if these two offices were one and the same.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 3. Before 1988, it was possible for the governor and lieutenant governor to represent different political parties. The amendment brought to fruition a constitutional delegate’s statement at the 1857 convention: “The governor and lieutenant-governor will always, I presume, be the same in politics, and why not have the successor of the governor of the same politics, instead of bringing in one of the antagonistic party?” 1 The Debates, at 593.

The 1988 amendments also recast the lieutenant governor’s duties. Under original article IV, section 18, the lieutenant governor was president of the senate and possessed a tiebreaking vote. If the lieutenant governor was absent, impeached, or exercising the office of Governor, the Senate was instructed to choose a president pro tempore to preside and break ties.

However, the 1988 amendments revised article IV, section 18 to provide that the lieutenant governor “shall have the duties provided by law and those duties of the governor assigned to the lieutenant governor by the governor.” In other words, the 1988 amendments removed the lieutenant governor’s status as president of the Senate. Accordingly, the 1988 amendments also altered article IV, section 19 to establish that if there is a gubernatorial vacancy and the lieutenant governor is incapable of performing the duties of the office, those duties devolve on the president of the Senate—not the president pro tempore.

Finally, although it is not a constitutional amendment, the Iowa legislature amended section 69.8 of the Iowa Code in 2009. 2009 Iowa Acts ch. 57, § 73. The amendment added a sentence to section 69.8 providing that “[a]n appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term.” The provision was the only substantive amendment to chapter 69 in a bill that predominantly altered the logistics and administration of ballots and elections.

B. Federal History

The original language of article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution matched language existing in the United States Constitution at the time. In 1857, when the Iowa Constitution was ratified, article II, section 1, clause 6 of the United States Constitution read: “In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President . . . .”

Under that language, numerous presidential vacancies occurred. Each time, the Vice President became President despite the word “devolve.” Two of these instances occurred before 1857: John Tyler in 1841 and Millard Fillmore in 1850. Thus, because of this history, the delegates to the 1857 Iowa constitutional convention likely understood the word “devolve” to mean that the successor became president—or on the state level, became governor.

A federal court decision from 1867 confirms this understanding:

Three times, since the adoption of the constitution, the president has died, and, under [article II, section 1, clause 6], the powers and duties of the office of president have devolved upon the vice president. All branches of the government have, under such circumstances, recognized the vice president as holding the office of president, as authorized to assume its title . . . . It has never been supposed that, under the provision of the constitution, the vice president, in acting as president, acted as the servant, or agent, or locum tenens of the deceased president, or in any other capacity than as holding the office of president fully, for the time being, by virtue of express authority emanating from the United States.

Merriam v. Clinch, 17 F. Cas. 68, 70 (C.C.S.D.N.Y. 1867).

However, neither Tyler nor Fillmore appointed a new vice president. Nor did any of the other vice presidents who succeeded to the presidency before 1972: Andrew Johnson in 1865, Chester Arthur in 1881, Theodore Roosevelt in 1901, Calvin Coolidge in 1923, Harry Truman in 1945, and Lyndon Johnson in 1963.

In 1972, the 25th Amendment superseded the original language from article II, section 1. Now, if the President dies, resigns, or is removed, “the Vice President shall become President.” U.S. Const. art. 2, § 1. Furthermore, when the vice president becomes president, a vacancy occurs in the office of vice president, and the new “President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority of both Houses of Congress.” Id. § 2. The 25th Amendment also established that the vice president acts as president when the president is temporarily unable to discharge the duties of the office. Id. § 3. Although the Iowa Constitution originally mirrored the United States Constitution and has been amended since 1972, the succession provisions have not changed to match the 25th Amendment.

C. Other States’ Histories

While other states’ constitutions and experiences do not alone determine conclusively what the Iowa Constitution means, the language used and any decisions involving that language can be valuable to a linguistic analysis. Indeed, some members of the 1857 constitutional convention expressly advocated that the convention should consider other states’ provisions and experiences. For example, delegate Gray noted in support of keeping the position of lieutenant governor that many other states had such an office. 1 The Debates, at 591. Likewise, delegate Clarke of Henry County indicated other states’ experiences lent to the convention a wisdom the individual members would not otherwise have:

We may certainly look to the experience of other States. This matter has been somewhat scoffed at here. Gentlemen pretend to have within them a light superior to any they can borrow. I am willing to look to the experience and wisdom of other States; and, as [Mr. Gray] has observed, I find that, in a majority of the free States, this system prevails; and if this office [of lieutenant governor] is found beneficial elsewhere, . . . why should we not introduce this provision into our Constitution?

Id. at 592. Although the existence of a lieutenant governor is now well established, these delegates’ comments support the general notion that other states’ constitutional provisions and history can illuminate, influence, or suggest what Iowa’s language means.

As detailed above, several other state constitutions contain the word “devolve”—but that number used to be higher. See Olcott v. Hoff, 181 P. 466, 468 (Or. 1919) (collecting states that, as of 1919, provided “the powers and duties of [governor] devolve upon the lieutenant governor”). In several instances, the state constitution was amended after a judicial decision interpreting the previous language. And in one instance, the state constitution was amended to crystallize an attorney general’s opinion—even though the amendment accomplished only what the attorney general opined the previous language already did.

1. Arizona

Arizona distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. If the governor dies, resigns, or is removed from office, “the secretary of state . . . shall succeed to the office of governor.” Ariz. Const. art. 5, § 6. If the governor is temporarily disabled, the powers and duties “devolve upon the same person as in case of vacancy, but only until the disability ceases.” Id.

Before the current language, Arizona used language materially similar to the Iowa Constitution, which utilized the word “devolve” for both permanent and temporary disabilities. See State ex rel. De Concini v. Garvey, 195 P.2d 153, 154 (Ariz. 1948) (quoting the relevant provision of the Arizona Constitution as it existed at the time). While that language was in force, the governor of Arizona died. Id. at 153. The attorney general filed a lawsuit asserting that the successor (the secretary of state) “did not in law or in fact become governor of Arizona . . . , but by virtue of the section the powers and duties of the office of governor merely devolved upon” him. Id. The secretary of state asserted he was “governor de jure and de facto.” Id.

The Arizona Supreme Court acknowledged that “public business and tranquility demand a prompt judicial inquiry.” Id. It noted the “prevailing view” at the time that “the inferior officer does not vacate his office and become governor de jure and de facto, but that the duties and powers of governor merely devolve on him and he retains his former office.” Id. at 154. It ultimately followed that path, concluding that the secretary state was “acting governor.” Id. at 158.

The court’s decision contains two other important conclusions. First, even though the successor was acting governor, he was “entitled to physical possession of the office space and facilities provided” for the governor. Id. at 157–58. Second, the court concluded the successor’s duties in his current position “embrace the responsibility to act as governor in case any of the contingencies provided for in the constitutional provision arise.” Id. at 157.

After 1948, the Arizona Constitution was amended to its current language. The fact that the people amended the constitution suggests they believed the court’s interpretation of the word “devolve” was incorrect.

2. Arkansas

The Arkansas Constitution's succession provision is materially identical to article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution. That provision became significant when then-Governor Bill Clinton was elected President of the United States and indicated his intention to resign as Governor of Arkansas. See Bryant v. English, 843 S.W.2d 308, 309 (Ark. 1992). In Bryant, the Arkansas Supreme Court concluded that when Clinton resigned, the office of governor would devolve upon the lieutenant governor such that the lieutenant governor became governor. See id. at 311. The court found support for its conclusion from several circumstances.

First, a previous Arkansas decision (under a previous constitutional provision when the position of lieutenant governor did not exist) expressed concern that the person tasked with exercising the powers and duties of governors might not be elected by a statewide vote. Id. at 312. That concern was alleviated with a constitutional amendment that created the position of lieutenant governor, so there was no issue with allowing the lieutenant governor to become governor, not just acting governor. See id.

Second, the court pointed out that if the lieutenant governor was only acting governor, he could continue presiding over the Senate, and that raised separation-of-powers concerns. See id. However, if the lieutenant governor became governor, those concerns would be avoided. See id. In Iowa, the lieutenant governor has no legislative powers; the 1988 amendment removed "presiding over the Senate" from the lieutenant governor's duties.

Third, the court noted the chain of succession provided the powers would "devolve" upon the lieutenant governor, but if they were unable to exercise the powers and duties of the office, the president of the senate would "act as" governor. Id. The difference in language suggested "devolve" did not mean the lieutenant governor would merely act as governor. See id.

Finally, in Arkansas, historical practice had treated the lieutenant governor as governor (not acting governor) after the governor resigned. Id. at 312–13. That practice comported with the Arkansas Constitution's command that the supreme executive power vests in a chief magistrate styled the Governor of the State of Arkansas. Id. at 313. In other words, the person who has the powers is Governor. See id. Iowa has a similar provision and a similar historical practice. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1.

3. California

California distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. Cal. Const. art. 5, § 10. When a permanent disability occurs, "The Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor." Id. However, like Iowa, California formerly used the word "devolve." Under that language, the California Supreme Court concluded that the lieutenant governor (1) did not actually become governor and (2) could not appoint a new lieutenant governor:

[I]t is provided that in case of the death, resignation, impeachment, absence from the state, or inability to act of the governor, “the powers and duties of his office shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease.” It will be seen that in case of a vacancy in the office of governor the vacancy is not to be filled, but the powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor, who does not cease to be lieutenant governor. Under such circumstances it would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor the latter thereby becomes governor, and can appoint a lieutenant governor.

People ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 45 P. 1060, 1060 (Cal. 1896). The people have since amended the constitution to include its current language.

4. Colorado

Colorado distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. Colo. Const. art. 4, § 13. The Colorado Constitution also provides that a lieutenant governor who “accedes to the office of governor” may select a new lieutenant governor subject to “confirmation by a majority vote of both houses of the general assembly.” Id. § 13(4).

However, the Colorado Constitution formerly contained provisions matching the Iowa Constitution. See People ex rel. Parks v. Cornforth, 81 P. 871, 872 (Colo. 1905) (quoting the relevant provisions of the state constitution as they existed at the time). While that language was in force, a succession controversy arose. See id.

The governor resigned in 1905, and the lieutenant governor “qualified as governor.” Id. The president pro tempore of the senate then “qualified as lieutenant governor.” Id. However, at the end of the legislative session, the senate elected a new president pro tempore. Id. The question that reached the Colorado Supreme Court asked whether the previous president pro tempore remained lieutenant governor, or whether he only held that office because of his position as president pro tempore. See id.

The court concluded “the president pro tem. does not become the lieutenant governor” and that “[i]f the framers of [the] Constitution had intended that the president pro tem. of the Senate should become lieutenant governor de jure in the contingency under consideration, they could easily have said so.” Id. at 872–73. Accordingly, the court concluded only the new president pro tempore was empowered to perform the lieutenant governor’s duties. Id. at 875.

In 1974—after the federal 25th Amendment—Colorado repealed and reenacted its succession provisions, changing them to the current language.

5. Michigan

If the governor resigns, the lieutenant governor shall be governor for the remainder of the term. However, for temporary disabilities, “the powers and duties of the office of the governor shall devolve . . .” Mich. Const. art. V, § 26. That language differs from the Iowa Constitution, but in 1939, the relevant provision of the Michigan Constitution (then article VI, section 16) was materially similar to current article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution. See 1939 Att’y Gen. Ann. Rep. 69, 71 (Mich. Att’y Gen. Mar. 28, 1939) (quoting the provision in force at the time).

That year, after the governor of Michigan died, the attorney general’s office issued an attorney general opinion regarding succession “[b]ecause of serious consequences which might follow a prolonged silence on the subject.” Id. at 69. The opinion sought to clarify whether there was “now a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor.” Id.

The attorney general answered that question “no,” adhering to the “most approved view” that when a governor dies or resigns, “no vacancy is created in the minor office by operation of law.” Id. No vacancy occurs because it was never intended that the line of succession should be broken, or that any person, who has not received the sanction of the electors by direct vote, should be appointed to a position which would entitle him, in certain eventualities, to the high office of governor.

Id. In other words, “plain rules of common sense” made it clear “that the people never intended to intrust the responsibilities of the governorship to one who has not been elected to state office.” Id. at 72.

The attorney general also noted the Michigan Constitution’s similarity to the United States Constitution and recognized that “when the Vice President has succeeded to the office of President, it has never been claimed that he thereby vacated the office of Vice President.” Id. at 73. Based on the core of democracy—election by the people—and historical practice, the opinion ultimately concluded that, upon death of the governor of the State of Michigan, his powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor; that the office of lieutenant governor is not thereby vacated; that the Constitution, by plain and unambiguous language, provides for a line of succession, from the governor, to the lieutenant governor, and to the secretary of state, a line of succession which cannot be broken by the appointment of a lieutenant governor to fill a supposed vacancy. No vacancy exists.

6. Montana

“If the office of governor becomes vacant by reason of death, resignation, or disqualification, the lieutenant governor shall become governor for the remainder of the term, except as provided in this constitution.” Mont. Const. art. VI, § 14(6).

“When there is a vacancy in the office of governor, the successor shall be the governor. The acting governor shall have the powers and duties of the office of governor only for the period during which he serves.” Id. § 14(8). An “acting governor” only happens when the governor requests it of the lieutenant governor or when the governor is disabled. See id. § 14(2)–(4).

However, before the current language, Montana (like Iowa) used the word “devolve.” See State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d 369, 370 (Mont. 1934) (quoting the provision in force at the time). After an election in 1932, the governor resigned in 1933. Id. The Montana Supreme Court concluded “when the Governor resigns or is permanently removed from office, there is no vacancy in the office of Governor in the sense that there is no one left with power to discharge the duties.” Id. The court further explained the state’s constitutional structure:

When the framers of the Constitution provided for the election of a Governor and a Lieutenant Governor as members of the executive department of the state ([Mont. Const.] section 1, art. 7), but conferred upon the latter no executive power or authority other than in the contingencies mentioned in [the succession provision], they manifested the intention that the people elect two qualified heads of that department—the one active, the other his lieutenant, ready at a moment’s notice to assume the duties of the office, should his superior officer, for any reason, either temporarily or permanently, become unable to perform them.

Id. at 371–72.

The court also concluded that when a governor resigns, dies, or is permanently removed from office, there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. Id. at 372. The court explained,

When the duties, powers, and emoluments of the office of Governor devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, it cannot be said that he vacates his office of Lieutenant Governor, and, unless he does so, there is no vacancy in his office. His assumption of the duties of Governor does not create, and neither can he make, a vacancy, as he is discharging the functions of Governor by the mandate of the Constitution, and that by reason of being Lieutenant Governor. If the framers of the Constitution had intended that there should be a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor upon the resignation, death, or permanent removal of the Governor, they could have easily said so.

Id.

Two aspects of the succession structure cemented the court's conclusion. First, if there were a lieutenant governor vacancy, the lieutenant governor / new governor could appoint a lieutenant governor, which would interrupt the line of successors chosen by the voters. This "was never contemplated and never intended by the framers of the Constitution, or the people who adopted it." Id. Second, because the provision covered both permanent and temporary disabilities, if the lieutenant governor's office always became vacant, another conundrum would arise. Specifically, if the governor suffered a temporary disability and the lieutenant governor took over, any person subsequently appointed to the post of lieutenant governor would essentially be squeezed out once the temporary disability ended. See id.

7. Nevada

Nevada's succession provision is materially identical to Iowa's. Compare Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17, with Nev. Const. art. 5, § 18. The Nevada Supreme Court considered the provision after the governor died in 1896. State ex rel. Hardin v. Sadler, 47 P. 450, 450 (Nev. 1897). The court concluded there was no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor:

If a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor, but there is no vacancy created thereby in the office of lieutenant governor. The officer remains lieutenant governor, but invested with the powers and duties of governor.

Id. The Nevada Constitution has not changed since 1897.

8. New Jersey

New Jersey distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities; for permanent disabilities, "the Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor," while for temporary ones, the powers of the office devolve. N.J. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶¶ 6–7. However, the New Jersey Constitution previously contained a provision much like Iowa’s—although there was no such thing as a lieutenant governor at the time. See State v. Heller, 42 A. 155, 156 (N.J. 1899) (quoting the provision in force at the time, which established that the governor’s powers and duties devolved upon the president of the senate). Under that language, a succession dispute arose.

In 1898, the governor of New Jersey resigned. Id. The president of the senate took an oath assuming gubernatorial powers and duties but later resigned “as a member of the senate.” Id. The speaker of the house, who was next in the succession order, then asserted he was now entitled to exercise the powers and duties of governor. See id. However, the president of the senate asserted he remained governor and his resignation only affected his senate seat. See id. The New Jersey Supreme Court concluded the president of the senate was only governor through his position as senate president:

In construing [the succession] clause of the constitution it must be borne in mind that it was carefully drawn by learned jurists, who knew how to express with exactness and precision the purpose they had in view. The provision is that, in case of the resignation of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate, and not that the president of the senate shall thereby become governor . . . . If the framers of the fundamental law had intended to transfer the president of the senate to the executive chair, and thereby to vacate his office of senator, it is reasonable to believe that they would have said so in no uncertain language. The language used is not ambiguous. It declares that the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve on the president of the senate; it does not confer upon him the title of the office. The president of the senate exercises the powers of the governor; the president of the senate performs the duties of the governor; the president of the senate receives the emoluments of that office. He is still president of the senate, with the added duties required of the chief executive of the state imposed upon him. There is no language in the constitution from which it can reasonably be inferred that his office of president of the senate was to be vacated. He retains his office of senator; and as president of the senate, and not as governor, he exercises the added powers and performs the superimposed duties.

Id. at 156–57. Accordingly, when he resigned his senate position, he also resigned his ability to exercise the powers and duties of the governor and the speaker of the house became entitled to exercise those powers and duties. Id. at 158.

There are two other important aspects of the New Jersey court's decision. First, it concluded the successor did not actually become governor because other provisions in the state constitution referred to the governor "or person administering the government." Id. at 157. Therefore, if the successor actually became governor, those words would be superfluous. Id. The Iowa Constitution does not contain similar language that would become superfluous if the lieutenant governor is governor following the governor's resignation.

Second, the court highlighted the constitutional provision's flexible nature, applying to both permanent and temporary disabilities. If the successor's previous position automatically became vacant, even during a temporary disability, they would lose it when the temporary disability ended. Id. at 158. The court concluded that meaning of the language "could not have been within the contemplation of the able men who incorporated it in this clause relating to a matter of supreme importance." Id.

10. Oklahoma

Oklahoma's succession provision is similar to Iowa's, using the word "devolve"—although one difference is that in Oklahoma, "the office" devolves, while in Iowa, the powers and duties do. Compare Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17, with Okla. Const. art. 6, § 16. In a 1926 case, the Oklahoma Supreme Court concluded the office of Governor automatically devolves upon another, who by virtue of filling that office becomes the chief magistrate styled the governor of Oklahoma. Fitzpatrick v. McAlister, 248 P. 569, 572 (Okla. 1926). In other words, the person who has the powers is governor. In particular, the court noted the difference between the word "devolve," which applied only to the lieutenant governor, and "act as Governor," which applied only to those further down the line of succession. See id. Because of that difference in language, the court concluded the word "devolve" actually conferred the title and office.

The court found support for its conclusion in federal history:

[U]pon the death of President Wm. H. Harrison, Vice President Tyler became President of the United States. For almost a century this construction of the federal Constitution has stood without question. It has been recognized as correct, and acquiesced in, not only by the departments of state and all the states of the Union, but officially recognized by every civilized government in the world.

On each occasion where the President of the United States has died, the Vice President has immediately succeeded to the office of President as President of the United States, and thereupon the government of the United States has at once, through its consular offices, notified all governments of the world of the change in Presidents.

Defendant suggests that no court has ever pronounced that to be the law. To our mind, it is so clearly correct that no one has ever presumed to test its correctness in the courts. Therefore it should have greater weight than an ordinary departmental construction, not only because it has stood for almost a century, but because it has been recognized as the correct conception of our system of government, and because, for eighty-five years under this construction, there has been no friction in the machinery of government by reason of such construction.

Id. at 576.

The decision was not unanimous. A dissenting opinion suggested the lieutenant governor would perform gubernatorial duties “merely as the occupant of the office of Lieutenant Governor, to which he was elected.” Id. at 580 (Branson, V.C.J., dissenting). The dissent also highlighted the possibility that if the lieutenant governor became governor and thereby vacated the office of lieutenant governor, he could appoint a replacement. See id. at 581. That was problematic, the dissent asserted, because doing so would “make it impossible that the President pro tempore of the Senate would ever succeed to the performance of the duties of Governor, as was clearly contemplated in the succession line to such duties as set out in . . . the Constitution.” Id.

11. Oregon

In Oregon, the successor “shall become Governor.” Or. Const. art. V, § 8a. However, the Oregon Constitution formerly provided that the duties of governor would “devolve on the secretary of state” and if the secretary of state was disabled, “the president of the senate shall act as governor.” See Chadwick v. Earhart, 4 P. 1180, 1180 (Or. 1884) (quoting the provision as it existed at the time). In other words, the Oregon Constitution distinguished between devolution and an acting governor.

In Chadwick, one party contended that the duties of the office of governor became annexed to the office of secretary of state, and are discharged as duties incident to the latter office; in other words, that the duties of the office, but not the office itself, devolve upon the secretary of state.

Id. The court was skeptical, noting that position seemed to require “either that the office of governor should continue vacant . . . ; or, second, that the office be filled, and yet he who fills it be in nowise governor, but continue to be merely secretary of state.” Id.

Accordingly, the court concluded the successor became governor:

In the first place, it is not shown how an office can be vacant, and yet there be a person, not the deputy or locum tenens of another, empowered by law to discharge the duties of the office, and who does, in fact, discharge them. It is not explained how, in such a case, the duties can be separated from the office so that he who discharges them does not become an incumbent of the office. And, in the second place, how a person can fill the office of governor without being governor. It is the function of a public officer to discharge public duties. Such duties constitute his office.

Id. at 1181. A later decision adhered to Chadwick and concluded that upon the governor’s death, “by reason of the fact that Mr. Olcott was secretary of state he automatically became governor.” Olcott, 181 P. at 482. The court concluded “when the people elected Mr. Olcott secretary of state, by the very terms of the constitution they elected him to become governor” if the incumbent died. Id. at 483.

12. Utah

Utah defines vacancy to include resignation and disability that extends for the remainder of the term. Utah Const. art. VII, § 11(1)(a). If a vacancy occurs, the lieutenant governor “shall become governor.” Id. § 11(2). The Utah Constitution also provides that if a disability is only temporary, the lieutenant governor shall discharge the powers and duties. Id. § 11(5)(a). And, it establishes that when the lieutenant governor becomes governor, a vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor. Id. § 10(3)(a)(i).

However, before 2008, the Utah Constitution, like Iowa, used only “devolve.” The Utah Attorney General issued an advisory opinion in 2003 on the question of succession. Utah A.G. Opinion No. 03-001, 2003 WL 21996258 (Aug. 18, 2003). The opinion concluded (1) “devolve” means that the lieutenant governor becomes governor, and (2) a vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor that the governor is entitled to fill by appointment. Id. at *1, 3. The attorney general relied in part on the federal history involving the word “devolve.” Because four vice presidents had become president before Utah adopted a constitution, at the time the state adopted one, “it was understood, in theory and in practice, that the Constitutional language ‘shall devolve’ meant ‘succession’ such that the Lieutenant Governor would become the Governor.” Id. at *1.

The attorney general also noted that in 1980, the citizens of Utah adopted constitutional amendments that required the governor and lieutenant governor to run on the same ticket and clarified the line of succession of executive authority. Id. Those amendments were presented to the voters as mirroring the succession of the federal government—which by this time had adopted the 25th Amendment providing the vice president becomes president. Id.

Despite the attorney general's conclusions about the existing language, the Utah Constitution was later amended to its current language to cement the attorney general's understanding of the constitutional structure.

13. Washington

Washington's succession provision is similar to Iowa's, using the word "devolve." Compare Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17, with Wash. Const. art. 3, § 10. The Washington Supreme Court confronted the provision in a 1902 case presenting the question whether the death of the governor creates a vacancy in either the office of governor or lieutenant governor. State ex rel. Murphy v. McBride, 70 P. 25, 25 (Wash. 1902). The court concluded,

The constitution having provided that in case of the death of the governor the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of governor. . . . When the lieutenant governor, by virtue of his office and of the command of the constitution, assumed the duties of governor on the death of Gov. Rogers, the office of lieutenant governor did not thereby become vacant, but the officer remained lieutenant governor, intrusted with the powers and duties of governor.

14. Wisconsin

In Wisconsin, the lieutenant governor "shall become governor" if the governor dies, resigns, or is removed. Wis. Const. art. 5, § 7(1). The lieutenant governor "shall serve as acting governor" if the governor is absent or disabled. Id. § 7(2). But the language was not always what it is today. In 1938, it matched article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution. See State ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, 280 N.W. 393, 398 (Wis. 1938) (quoting the provision in force at the time).

Under that provision, the Wisconsin Supreme Court acknowledged that the question of succession was "most important and of great public concern and interest" because the people of the state were "vitaly interested in seeing that no important office, such as that of lieutenant governor, be intruded into by any person who has not lawful authority to hold the office or to perform the duties thereof.” Id. at 394. It ultimately concluded that when a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, “the lieutenant governor does not become governor. He remains lieutenant governor, upon whom devolves the powers and duties of governor. In such a contingency no vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor.” Id. at 399.

15. Wyoming

Wyoming does not use either the word “devolve” or the phrase “become Governor.” Instead, it provides that the secretary of state “shall act as governor.” Wyo. Const. art. 4, § 6. In 1903, the governor died, and a dispute arose about the secretary of state’s compensation while fulfilling his constitutional duty to act as governor. State ex rel. Chatterton v. Grant, 73 P. 470, 470 (Wyo. 1903). The court concluded the secretary of state performed duties both in that role and as governor, and accordingly was entitled to compensation for both positions. See id. at 472. However, the court also noted it did not observe a material distinction between “devolve” and “act as.” Id. at 476.

To: Jeff Thompson, Meghan Gavin
From: David Ranscht
Date: February 6, 2017 (updated February 24, 2017)

On February 1, 2017, the Attorney General's Office received a request from state Senator David Johnson for a formal legal opinion regarding several provisions of the Iowa Constitution and the Iowa Code. Senator Johnson requested the opinion because President Donald Trump announced he intends to nominate Iowa Governor Terry Branstad as a United States Ambassador. To serve as an ambassador, Governor Branstad would have to resign his position as Governor of Iowa.

Senator Johnson requests an attorney general opinion exploring the succession provisions of the Iowa Constitution. See Iowa Code § 13.2(e) (setting forth the attorney general's authority to give written opinions when requested by a state officer); Iowa Admin. Code r. 61—1.5 (providing additional standards for requesting attorney general opinions). Essentially, Senator Johnson asks the Attorney General's Office to opine on what happens if and when Governor Branstad submits his resignation. Although some past Iowa governors have resigned, these specific questions have not arisen in Iowa before.

I. OPERATIVE CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS

The relevant provision of the Iowa Constitution is article IV, section 17, which is currently entitled "Lieutenant governor to act as governor." It provides:

In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17. This provision has never been amended. "[T]he purpose of art. IV, § 17 is to ensure that the citizens of Iowa are not without a person capable of performing the constitutional and statutory duties imposed upon a governor." 1980 Op. Att'y Gen. 550, 1980 WL 25903, at *3 (Iowa Att'y Gen. Jan. 2, 1980).

Several other state constitutions contain similar language that centers around the verb “devolve.” See, e.g., Ark. Const. art. 6, § 4; Idaho Const. art. IV, § 12; Nev. Const. art. 5, § 18; Okla. Const. art. 6, § 16; Tenn. Const. art. 3, § 12; Wash. Const. art. 3, § 10. Additionally, although they do not contain the verb “devolve,” some state constitutions provide—like article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution—that if a governor resigns, the lieutenant governor shall have the powers, authorities, and duties of governor. See, e.g., Ky. Const. § 84; Mass. Const. pt. 2, ch. II, § II, art. III; Miss. Const. art. 5, § 131.

In contrast, many state constitutions distinguish between permanent disabilities and temporary disabilities. Permanent disabilities occur when a governor dies or resigns, whereas temporary disabilities could include physical or mental incapacity, or absence from the state. In those states, generally the lieutenant governor becomes governor when a permanent disability occurs but gubernatorial powers devolve (or the lieutenant governor acts as governor) during any period of temporary disability. See, e.g., Ala. Const. art. V, § 127; Alaska Const. art. 3, §§ 9, 11; Ariz. Const. art. 5, § 6; Cal. Const. art. 5, § 10; Colo. Const. art. 4, § 13 (1), (5); Conn. Const. art. 4, § 18(a)–(b); Fla. Const. art. 4, § 3(a)–(b); Ga. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶ V(a)–(b); Haw. Const. art. 5, § 4; Ind. Const. art. 5, § 10(a); Kan. Const. art. 1, § 11; Me. Const. art. 5, pt. 1, §§ 14–15; Md. Const. art. 2, § 6(b), (d); Mich. Const. art. 5, § 26; Minn. Const. art. 5, § 5; Mo. Const. art. 4, § 11(a); Neb. Const. art. IV, § 16; N.J. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶¶ 6–7; N.M. Const. art. 5, § 7; N.Y. Const. art. 4, § 5; N.C. Const. art. III, § 3(1), (3); Ohio Const. art. III, § 15(A)–(B); Pa. Const. art. 4, § 13; S.D. Const. art. 4, § 6; Tex. Const. art. 4, § 16(c)–(d); Utah Const. art. 7, § 11(2), (5); Va. Const. art. 5, § 16; Wis. Const. art. 5, § 7(1)–(2). Article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution does not make a similar distinction; its provisions apply to all disabilities, whether temporary or permanent. See Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17.

Several other provisions of article IV of the Iowa Constitution bear upon the question of gubernatorial succession. Article IV, section 1 provides that “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.” See also 1980 Op. Att’y Gen. 550, 1980 WL 25903, at *3 (“The term ‘governor’ refers to an office and not merely to a particular person.”). Article IV, section 10 grants the governor authority to fill any office that becomes vacant if the constitution and laws do not provide a mode for filling such vacancy. Article IV, section 18 provides that the lieutenant governor “shall have the duties provided by law and those duties of the governor assigned to the lieutenant governor by the governor.” Finally, the Iowa Constitution contemplates a contingency that becomes active when multiple state officers are incapable of performing gubernatorial duties:

If there be a vacancy in the office of the governor and the lieutenant governor shall by reason of death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability become incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor, the president of the senate shall act as governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability is removed; and if the president of the senate, for any of the above causes, shall be incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor the same shall devolve upon the speaker of the house of representatives; and if the speaker of the house of representatives, for any of the above causes, shall be incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor, the justices of the supreme court shall convene the general assembly by proclamation and the general assembly shall organize by the election of a president by the senate and a speaker by the house of representatives. The general assembly shall thereupon immediately proceed to the election of a governor and lieutenant governor in joint convention.

Iowa Const. art. IV, § 19.

In 1844, when Iowa first offered a state constitution for ratification by the people, a newspaper editorial expressed disappointment that much of it was written “in very confused and bungling language” that rendered the drafters’ intent “almost or quite doubtful.” Its Style, The Iowa Standard, Vol. IV, No. 46 (Nov. 14, 1844), reprinted in Press Comments and Other Materials on the Constitutions of 1844 and 1846, at 214 (Benjamin F. Shambaugh ed., 1900). Though modern readers might feel similarly about the current Iowa Constitution, constitutional history illuminates the framework the drafters established—and why they established it.

II. CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY

1. The 1857 Convention

Iowa enacted its current constitution in 1857. As the constitutional convention began, one delegate proposed that an Executive Committee dedicated to formulating the executive branch of government consider “providing for the election of a Lieutenant Governor who, by virtue of his office, shall . . . exercise all the powers and have the title of Governor in case of the death, removal, or other disability of the Governor.” 1 The Debates of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Iowa, at 39 (W. Blair Lord rep., 1857) [hereinafter The Debates]. The previous Iowa Constitution of 1846 made no provision for a lieutenant governor. The 1857 convention agreed to the resolution. Id.

When it came time to debate provisions of article IV, a representative from the Committee read the proposed provisions to the convention. Id. at 76–78. The provisions did not include section descriptions or titles. See id. In other words, the convention did not understand article IV, section 17 to provide that the lieutenant governor “acts as” governor. That descriptive heading came later. Instead, by the words of the resolution at the outset of the convention, the drafters understood that the lieutenant governor would “have the title of Governor” if the Governor left office. Id. at 39.

When considering statutes, the Iowa Supreme Court has stated that a section heading “cannot limit the plain meaning of the text.” Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Bair, 338 N.W.2d 338, 344 (Iowa 1983). That important limitation, which prevents a code editor’s choice of language from frustrating the intent of a statute, is even more significant when considering a constitutional provision. But even if the heading of article IV, section 17—which does not use operative language from article IV, section 17 itself—sheds some light on the framers’ intent in drafting the provision, see T & K Roofing Co. v. Iowa Dep’t of Educ., 593 N.W.2d 159, 163 (Iowa 1999), other available materials better establish what the Iowa Constitution’s framers really understood “devolve” to mean and what they intended the gubernatorial succession framework to look like.

But not every delegate was convinced the convention had made the right decision. The next morning, delegate Gray asked his colleagues “to consider well the importance of the matter before striking” the provisions for a lieutenant governor. Id. at 591. He noted many other states’ constitution provided for the office of lieutenant governor and indicated “there are some advantages connected with the office.” Id. Among those advantages was the fact that the lieutenant governor “will be elected directly by the people, instead of by the Legislature.” Id. Gray found that important because “We all seem to agree in placing elections, as far as possible, directly in the power of the people.” Id. Delegate Clarke of Henry County agreed:

Gentlemen [of the convention] do not reflect that they may be taking from the people the power of selecting their own chief magistrate. When a man is a candidate for the office of Lieutenant Governor, the people always vote for him with the understanding that circumstances may arise which will make him their Governor. But if you give to the Senate the power of selecting the man who may be the Governor of the people, you take from the people this power and put it into the hands of the Senate.

Delegate Gray’s remarks sparked renewed debate on the subject, and some delegates changed their minds. For example, delegate Wilson offered that although he had originally voted to eliminate the position of lieutenant governor, “upon reflection . . . the advantages in favor of [having a lieutenant governor] are far superior to the disadvantages.” Id. at 593. Most significant, however, were Mr. Clark’s remarks:

I voted yesterday to strike out the office of Lieutenant-Governor. I had not reflected upon it well, and I am inclined to the opinion that I did not vote right. Upon hearing the argument thus far upon the question, and upon reflection, I am disposed to favor the office of Lieut.-Governor, for one reason, if there were no other: I believe that an executive officer, whoever he may be that shall perform the duties of that office, whether Governor or Lieutenant-Governor, ought to be elected directly by the people, in all cases, at least so far as it is possible to provide for it. We elect the Governor by the direct votes of the people—by the popular will—by the popular voice. In case of his removal or disability, I see no reason why the person filling his place should not be elected directly by the whole people as much as the Governor himself.

Id. at 594. Mr. Clark’s clear concern was ensuring that the person exercising the state’s executive power, “whether Governor or Lieutenant-Governor,” has a majority of the citizenry’s blessing to do so. See id.

After some further debate, the convention voted 19–14 against the amendment that would have struck the office of lieutenant governor. Id. at 595. Accordingly, the convention also restored other provisions relating to the office of lieutenant governor. See id. at 596.

2. Iowa Governors Who Resigned

Governor Kirkwood resigned in 1877 to become a United States Senator. Then-Lieutenant Governor Newbold “entered on the discharge of the duties of the executive” for the remainder of the term (just under a year) but did not appoint a new lieutenant governor “because the lieutenant-governorship was not vacant.” William H. Fleming, The Second Officer in the Government, reprinted in Annals of Iowa: A Historical Quarterly, Vol. XIII, No. 1, at 533

(1921) [hereinafter Annals of Iowa]. A later history of Iowa referred to Newbold as the “ninth Governor of Iowa” and stated he “became Governor” when Kirkwood resigned. 4 Benjamin F. Gue, History of Iowa: From the Earliest Times to the Beginning of the Twentieth Century 199–200 (1903).

Governor Cummins resigned in 1908 to become a United States Senator. Then-Lieutenant Governor Garst “entered on the performance of executive duties” for the remainder of the term (just under two months) but did not appoint a new lieutenant governor. Annals of Iowa, at 534.

Governor Hughes resigned in 1969 to become a United States Senator. Then-Lieutenant Governor Fulton assumed the duties of governor for the remainder of the term (just over two weeks) but did not appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Additionally, in 1954, Governor Beardsley died in office. Although Governor Beardsley did not resign, his death—like a resignation—was a permanent “disability” under the Iowa Constitution. Then-Lieutenant Governor Elthon assumed the duties of governor for the remainder of the term (just under two months). However, Elthon did not appoint a new lieutenant governor.

3. Interpretation and Subsequent Amendments

In 1923, Governor Kendall requested an opinion from the Attorney General’s Office because he received medical advice recommending he take an extended vacation and abstain from performing his official duties. 1923 Att’y Gen. Ann. Rep. 349, 349 (Iowa Att’y Gen. Aug. 23, 1923). The length of his expected absence was indefinite but would likely be two to three months. Id. He asked the Attorney General’s Office to opine on “whether or not the Lieutenant Governor can, during [the] temporary absence, perform the duties of Governor.” Id.

The Attorney General concluded “that during the temporary disability of the governor, that the lieutenant governor may act as governor.” Id. at 348. The opinion differentiates between the governor permanently leaving office and the governor stepping aside temporarily:

From a consideration of [article IV of the Iowa Constitution] it will be observed that in case of death, resignation, or removal from office of the governor, that the lieutenant-governor succeeds him as governor of the state for the residue of the term. It will further appear that when there is a temporary disability of the governor, the lieutenant-governor acts in his stead during the period of time such disability continues. In the first instance, the lieutenant-governor becomes governor. In the second instance he simply acts as governor during the temporary disability of his chief.

Id. The opinion makes that distinction in part because “terms of a constitution, like those of a statute, are always to be given their natural and obvious meaning. That is, the meaning in which they are commonly and ordinarily understood.” Id. at 347–46.<sup>2</sup> The Attorney General further advised Governor Kendall that, when stepping aside, he should make clear “there is no resignation or permanent abandonment of the office of governor.” Id. at 343–42.

The 1923 opinion has not been rescinded or disavowed. Neither the legislature nor the people of Iowa sought to amend the article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution to establish that the Attorney General’s interpretation was incorrect.

However, the people later amended article IV of the Iowa Constitution in other respects. Originally, article IV, section 19 established a succession order if, while acting as governor, the lieutenant governor died, resigned, was impeached or displaced, or otherwise became incapable of performing the duties of the office. The 1952 amendment to article IV, section 19 established the current language, with one exception: it referred not just to the president of the Senate, but the president pro tempore. Accordingly, the 1952 amendment removed the reference to the lieutenant governor “acting as” governor—and that language remains today. However, the 1952 amendment did not remove language in article IV, section 15—which establishes the lieutenant governor’s compensation—that referred to the lieutenant governor acting as governor.

In 1972, several provisions of article IV were changed, but they did not affect gubernatorial succession. Originally, article IV, sections 2 and 3 provided the governor and lieutenant governor served two-year terms. The 1972 amendment increased both terms to four years. It also amended article IV, section 15 to reflect the four-year terms.

The most significant constitutional amendments occurred in 1988. Those amendments, which remain in force today, provided for the first time that the governor and lieutenant governor are elected together, on one ticket, “as if these two offices were one and the same.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 3. Before 1988, it was possible for the governor and lieutenant governor to represent different political parties. The amendment brought to fruition a constitutional delegate’s statement at the 1857 convention: “The governor and lieutenant-governor will always, I presume, be the same in politics, and why not have the successor of the governor of the same politics, instead of bringing in one of the antagonistic party?” 1 The Debates, at 593.

The 1988 amendments also recast the lieutenant governor's duties. Under original article IV, section 18, the lieutenant governor was president of the senate and possessed a tiebreaking vote. If the lieutenant governor was absent, impeached, or exercising the office of Governor, the Senate was instructed to choose a president pro tempore to preside and break ties.

However, the 1988 amendments revised article IV, section 18 to provide that the lieutenant governor "shall have the duties provided by law and those duties of the governor assigned to the lieutenant governor by the governor." In other words, the 1988 amendments removed the lieutenant governor's status as president of the Senate. Accordingly, the 1988 amendments also altered article IV, section 19 to establish that if there is a gubernatorial vacancy and the lieutenant governor is incapable of performing the duties of the office, those duties devolve on the president of the Senate—not the president pro tempore.

Finally, although it is not a constitutional amendment, the Iowa legislature amended section 69.8 of the Iowa Code in 2009. 2009 Iowa Acts ch. 57, § 73. The amendment added a sentence to section 69.8 providing that "[a]n appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term." The provision was the only substantive amendment to chapter 69 in a bill that predominantly altered other chapters delineating the logistics and administration of ballots and elections.

B. Federal History

The original language of article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution matched language existing in the United States Constitution at the time. In 1857, when the Iowa Constitution was ratified, article II, section 1, clause 6 of the United States Constitution read: "In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President . . ."

Under that language, numerous presidential vacancies occurred. Each time, the Vice President became President despite the word "devolve." Two of these instances occurred before 1857: John Tyler in 1841 and Millard Fillmore in 1850. Thus, because of this history, the delegates to the 1857 Iowa constitutional convention likely understood the word "devolve" to mean that the successor became president—or on the state level, became governor.

A federal court decision from 1867 confirms this understanding:

Three times, since the adoption of the constitution, the president has died, and, under [article II, section 1, clause 6], the powers and duties of the office of president have devolved upon the vice president. All branches of the government have, under such circumstances, recognized the vice president as holding the office of president, as authorized to assume its title . . . . It has never been supposed that, under the provision of the constitution, the vice president, in acting as president, acted as the servant, or agent, or locum tenens of the deceased president, or in any other capacity than as holding the office of president fully, for the time being, by virtue of express authority emanating from the United States.

Merriam v. Clinch, 17 F. Cas. 68, 70 (C.C.S.D.N.Y. 1867).

However, neither Tyler nor Fillmore appointed a new vice president. Nor did any of the other vice presidents who succeeded to the presidency before 1967: Andrew Johnson in 1865, Chester Arthur in 1881, Theodore Roosevelt in 1901, Calvin Coolidge in 1923, Harry Truman in 1945, and Lyndon Johnson in 1963.

In 1967, the 25th Amendment superseded the original language from article II, section 1. Now, if the President dies, resigns, or is removed, "the Vice President shall become President." U.S. Const. art. 2, § 1. Furthermore, when the vice president becomes president, a vacancy occurs in the office of vice president, and the new "President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority of both Houses of Congress." Id. § 2. The 25th Amendment also established that the vice president acts as president when the president is temporarily unable to discharge the duties of the office. Id. § 3. Although the Iowa Constitution originally mirrored the United States Constitution and has been amended since 1967, the succession provisions have not changed to match the 25th Amendment.

C. Other States' Histories

While other states' constitutions and experiences do not alone determine conclusively what the Iowa Constitution means, the language used and any decisions involving that language can be valuable to a linguistic analysis. Indeed, some members of the 1857 constitutional convention expressly advocated that the convention should consider other states' provisions and experiences. For example, delegate Gray noted in support of keeping the position of lieutenant governor that many other states had such an office. 1 The Debates, at 591. Likewise, delegate Clarke of Henry County indicated other states' experiences lent to the convention a wisdom the individual members would not otherwise have:

We may certainly look to the experience of other States. This matter has been somewhat scoffed at here. Gentlemen pretend to have within them a light superior to any they can borrow. I am willing to look to the experience and wisdom of other States; and, as [Mr. Gray] has observed, I find that, in a majority of the free States, this system prevails; and if this office [of lieutenant governor] is found beneficial elsewhere, . . . why should we not introduce this provision into our Constitution?

Id. at 592. Although the existence of a lieutenant governor is now well established, these delegates' comments support the general notion that other states' constitutional provisions and history can illuminate, influence, or suggest what Iowa's language means.

As detailed above, several other state constitutions contain the word "devolve"—but that number used to be higher. See Olcott v. Hoff, 181 P. 466, 468 (Or. 1919) (collecting states that, as of 1919, provided "the powers and duties of [governor] devolve upon the lieutenant governor"). In several instances, the state constitution was amended after a judicial decision interpreting the previous language. And in one instance, the state constitution was amended to crystallize an attorney general's opinion—even though the amendment accomplished only what the attorney general opined the previous language already did.

1. Arizona

Arizona distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. If the governor dies, resigns, or is removed from office, "the secretary of state . . . shall succeed to the office of governor." Ariz. Const. art. 5, § 6. If the governor is temporarily disabled, the powers and duties "devolve upon the same person as in case of vacancy, but only until the disability ceases." Id.

Before the current language, Arizona used language materially similar to the Iowa Constitution. See State ex rel. De Concini v. Garvey, 195 P.2d 153, 154 (Ariz. 1948) (quoting the relevant provision of the Arizona Constitution as it existed at the time). While that language was in force, the governor died. Id. at 153. The attorney general filed a lawsuit asserting that the successor (the secretary of state) "did not in law or in fact become governor of Arizona . . . , but by virtue of the section the powers and duties of the office of governor merely devolved upon" him. Id. The secretary of state asserted he was "governor de jure and de facto." Id.

The Arizona Supreme Court acknowledged that "public business and tranquility demand a prompt judicial inquiry." Id. It noted the "prevailing view" at the time that "the inferior officer does not vacate his office and become governor de jure and de facto, but that the duties and powers of governor merely devolve on him and he retains his former office." Id. at 154. It ultimately followed that path, concluding that the secretary state was "acting governor." Id. at 158.

The court's decision contains two other important conclusions. First, even though the successor was acting governor, he was "entitled to physical possession of the office space and facilities provided” for the governor. Id. at 157–58. Second, the court concluded the successor’s duties in his current position “embrace the responsibility to act as governor in case any of the contingencies provided for in the constitutional provision arise.” Id. at 157.

After 1948, the Arizona Constitution was amended to its current language. The fact that the people amended the constitution suggests they believed the court’s interpretation of the word “devolve” was incorrect.

2. Arkansas

The Arkansas Constitution’s succession provision is materially identical to article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution. That provision became significant when then-Governor Bill Clinton was elected President of the United States and indicated his intention to resign as Governor of Arkansas. See Bryant v. English, 843 S.W.2d 308, 309 (Ark. 1992). In Bryant, the Arkansas Supreme Court concluded that when Clinton resigned, the office of governor would devolve upon the lieutenant governor such that the lieutenant governor became governor. See id. at 311. The court found support for its conclusion from several circumstances.

First, a previous Arkansas decision (under a previous constitutional provision when the position of lieutenant governor did not exist) expressed concern that the person tasked with exercising the powers and duties of governors might not be elected by a statewide vote. Id. at 312. That concern was alleviated with a constitutional amendment that created the position of lieutenant governor, so there was no issue with allowing the lieutenant governor to become governor, not just acting governor. See id.

Second, the court pointed out that if the lieutenant governor was only acting governor, he could continue presiding over the Senate, and that raised separation-of-powers concerns. See id.; see also Ark. Const. art. VI, § 5. However, if the lieutenant governor became governor, those concerns would be avoided. See Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 312. In Iowa, the lieutenant governor has no legislative powers; the 1988 amendment removed “presiding over the Senate” from the lieutenant governor’s duties.

Third, the court noted the chain of succession provided the powers would “devolve” upon the lieutenant governor, but if they were unable to exercise the powers and duties of the office, the president of the senate would “act as” governor. Id. The difference in language suggested “devolve” did not mean the lieutenant governor would merely act as governor. See id.

Finally, in Arkansas, historical practice had treated the lieutenant governor as governor (not acting governor) after the governor resigned. Id. at 312–13. That practice comported with the Arkansas Constitution’s command that the supreme executive power vests in a chief magistrate styled the Governor of the State of Arkansas. Id. at 313. In other words, the person who has the powers is Governor. See id. Iowa has a similar provision and a similar historical practice. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1.

In Arkansas, when the lieutenant governor becomes governor, a vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor that is filled by a special election. Ark. Code § 7-7-105; see Stratton v. Priest, 932 S.W.2d 321 (Ark. 1996) (addressing a constitutional challenge to section 7-7-105). Furthermore, the position of lieutenant governor is specifically exempted from the governor's general appointment power. In other words, Arkansas's procedure upholds the elective principle. Although the drafters of the Iowa Constitution clearly subscribed to the elective principle, there is no statute analogous to Arkansas Code section 7-7-105 in the Iowa Code.

3. California

California distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. Cal. Const. art. 5, § 10. When a permanent disability occurs, "The Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor." Id. However, like Iowa, California formerly used the word "devolve." Under that language, the California Supreme Court concluded that the lieutenant governor (1) did not actually become governor and (2) could not appoint a new lieutenant governor:

[I]t is provided that in case of the death, resignation, impeachment, absence from the state, or inability to act of the governor, "the powers and duties of his office shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease." It will be seen that in case of a vacancy in the office of governor the vacancy is not to be filled, but the powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor, who does not cease to be lieutenant governor. Under such circumstances it would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor the latter thereby becomes governor, and can appoint a lieutenant governor.

People ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 45 P. 1060, 1060 (Cal. 1896). The people have since amended the constitution to include its current language.

4. Colorado

Colorado distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. Colo. Const. art. 4, § 13. The Colorado Constitution also provides that a lieutenant governor who "accedes to the office of governor" may select a new lieutenant governor subject to "confirmation by a majority vote of both houses of the general assembly." Id. § 13(4). However, the Colorado Constitution formerly contained provisions matching the Iowa Constitution. See People ex rel. Parks v. Cornforth, 81 P. 871, 872 (Colo. 1905) (quoting the relevant provisions of the state constitution as they existed at the time). While that language was in force, a succession controversy arose. See id.

The governor resigned in 1905, and the lieutenant governor “qualified as governor.” Id. The president pro tempore of the senate then “qualified as lieutenant governor.” Id. However, at the end of the legislative session, the senate elected a new president pro tempore. Id. The question that reached the Colorado Supreme Court asked whether the previous president pro tempore remained lieutenant governor, or whether he only held that office because of his position as president pro tempore. See id.

The court concluded “the president pro tem. does not become the lieutenant governor” and that “[i]f the framers of [the] Constitution had intended that the president pro tem. of the Senate should become lieutenant governor de jure in the contingency under consideration, they could easily have said so.” Id. at 872–73. Accordingly, the court concluded only the new president pro tempore was empowered to perform the lieutenant governor’s duties. Id. at 875.

In 1974—after the federal 25th Amendment—Colorado repealed and reenacted its succession provisions, changing them to the current language.

5. Michigan

If the governor resigns, the lieutenant governor shall be governor for the remainder of the term. However, for temporary disabilities, “the powers and duties of the office of the governor shall devolve.” Mich. Const. art. V, § 26. That language differs from the Iowa Constitution, but in 1939, the relevant provision of the Michigan Constitution (then article VI, section 16) was materially similar to current article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution. See 1939 Op. Att’y Gen. 69, 71 (Mich. Att’y Gen. Mar. 28, 1939) (quoting the provision in force at the time).

That year, after the governor of Michigan died, the attorney general’s office issued an attorney general opinion regarding succession “[b]ecause of serious consequences which might follow a prolonged silence on the subject.” Id. at 69. The opinion sought to clarify whether there was “now a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor.” Id.

The attorney general answered that question “no,” adhering to the “most approved view” that when a governor dies or resigns, “no vacancy is created in the minor office by operation of law.” Id. No vacancy occurs because it was never intended that the line of succession should be broken, or that any person, who has not received the sanction of the electors by direct vote, should be appointed to a position which would entitle him, in certain eventualities, to the high office of governor.

Id. In other words, “plain rules of common sense” made it clear “that the people never intended to intrust the responsibilities of the governorship to one who has not been elected to state office.” Id. at 72.

The attorney general also noted the Michigan Constitution’s similarity to the United States Constitution and recognized that, as of 1939, “when the Vice President has succeeded to the office of President, it has never been claimed that he thereby vacated the office of Vice President.” Id. at 73. Based on the elective principle at the core of democracy—and historical practice—the opinion ultimately concluded that, upon death of the governor of the State of Michigan, his powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor; that the office of lieutenant governor is not thereby vacated; that the Constitution, by plain and unambiguous language, provides for a line of succession, from the governor, to the lieutenant governor, and to the secretary of state, a line of succession which cannot be broken by the appointment of a lieutenant governor to fill a supposed vacancy. No vacancy exists.

6. Montana

“If the office of governor becomes vacant by reason of death, resignation, or disqualification, the lieutenant governor shall become governor for the remainder of the term, except as provided in this constitution.” Mont. Const. art. VI, § 14(6).

“When there is a vacancy in the office of governor, the successor shall be the governor. The acting governor shall have the powers and duties of the office of governor only for the period during which he serves.” Id. § 14(8). An “acting governor” only happens when the governor requests it of the lieutenant governor or when the governor is disabled. See id. § 14(2)–(4).

However, before the current language, Montana (like Iowa) used the word “devolve.” See State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d 369, 370 (Mont. 1934) (quoting the provision in force at the time). After an election in 1932, the governor resigned in 1933. Id. The Montana Supreme Court concluded “when the Governor resigns or is permanently removed from office, there is no vacancy in the office of Governor in the sense that there is no one left with power to discharge the duties.” Id. The court further explained the state’s constitutional structure:

When the framers of the Constitution provided for the election of a Governor and a Lieutenant Governor as members of the executive department of the state, but conferred upon the latter no executive power or authority other than in the contingencies mentioned in [the succession provision], they manifested the intention that the people elect two qualified heads of that department—the one active, the other his lieutenant, ready at a moment’s notice to assume the duties of the office, should his superior officer, for any reason, either temporarily or permanently, become unable to perform them.

Id. at 371–72 (citation omitted).

The court also concluded that when a governor resigns or dies, there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. Id. at 372. The court explained,

When the duties, powers, and emoluments of the office of Governor devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, it cannot be said that he vacates his office of Lieutenant Governor, and, unless he does so, there is no vacancy in his office. His assumption of the duties of Governor does not create, and neither can he make, a vacancy, as he is discharging the functions of Governor by the mandate of the Constitution, and that by reason of being Lieutenant Governor. If the framers of the Constitution had intended that there should be a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor upon the resignation, death, or permanent removal of the Governor, they could have easily said so.

Id.

Two aspects of the succession structure cemented the court’s conclusion. First, if there were a lieutenant governor vacancy, the lieutenant governor / new governor could appoint a lieutenant governor, which would interrupt the line of successors chosen by the voters. This “was never contemplated and never intended by the framers of the Constitution, or the people who adopted it.” Id. Second, because the provision covered both permanent and temporary disabilities, if the lieutenant governor’s office always became vacant, another conundrum would arise. Specifically, if the governor suffered a temporary disability and the lieutenant governor took over, any person subsequently appointed to the post of lieutenant governor would essentially be squeezed out once the temporary disability ended. See id.

7. Nevada

Nevada's succession provision is materially identical to Iowa's. Compare Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17, with Nev. Const. art. 5, § 18. The Nevada Supreme Court considered the provision after the governor died in 1896. State ex rel. Hardin v. Sadler, 47 P. 450, 450 (Nev. 1897). The court concluded there was no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor:

If a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor, but there is no vacancy created thereby in the office of lieutenant governor. The officer remains lieutenant governor, but invested with the powers and duties of governor.

Id. The Nevada Constitution has not changed since 1897.

8. New Jersey

New Jersey distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities; for permanent disabilities, "the Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor," while for temporary ones, the powers of the office devolve. N.J. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶¶ 6–7. However, the New Jersey Constitution previously contained a provision like Iowa's—although there was no such thing as a lieutenant governor at the time. See State v. Heller, 42 A. 155, 156 (N.J. 1899) (quoting the provision in force at the time, which established that the governor's powers and duties devolved upon the president of the senate). Under that language, a succession dispute arose.

In 1898, the governor of New Jersey resigned. Id. The president of the senate took an oath assuming gubernatorial powers and duties but later resigned "as a member of the senate." Id. The speaker of the house, who was next in the succession order, then asserted he was now governor. See id. However, the president of the senate asserted he remained governor and his resignation only affected his senate seat. See id. The New Jersey Supreme Court concluded the president of the senate was only governor through his position as senate president:

In construing [the succession] clause of the constitution it must be borne in mind that it was carefully drawn by learned jurists, who knew how to express with exactness and precision the purpose they had in view. The provision is that, in case of the resignation of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate, and not that the president of the senate shall thereby become governor . . . . If the framers of the fundamental law had intended to transfer the president of the senate to the executive chair, and thereby to vacate his office of senator, it is reasonable to believe that they would have said so in no uncertain language. The language used is not ambiguous. It declares that the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve on the president of the senate; it does not confer upon him the title of the office. The president of the senate exercises the powers of the governor; the president of the senate performs the duties of the governor; the president of the senate receives the emoluments of that office. He is still president of the senate, with the added duties required of the chief executive of the state imposed upon him. There is no language in the constitution from which it can reasonably be inferred that his office of president of the senate was to be vacated. He retains his office of senator; and as president of the senate, and not as governor, he exercises the added powers and performs the superimposed duties.

Id. at 156–57. Accordingly, when he resigned his senate position, he also resigned his ability to exercise the powers and duties of the governor and the speaker of the house became entitled to exercise those powers and duties. Id. at 158.

There are two other important aspects of the New Jersey court’s decision. First, it concluded the successor did not actually become governor because other provisions in the state constitution referred to the governor “or person administering the government.” Id. at 157. Therefore, if the successor actually became governor, those words would be superfluous. Id. The Iowa Constitution does not contain similar language that would become superfluous if the lieutenant governor is governor following the governor’s resignation.

Second, the court highlighted the constitutional provision’s flexible nature, applying to both permanent and temporary disabilities. If the successor’s previous position automatically became vacant, even during a temporary disability, they would lose it when the temporary disability ended. Id. at 158. The court concluded that meaning of the language “could not have been within the contemplation of the able men who incorporated it in this clause relating to a matter of supreme importance.” Id.

9. New York

New York distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. When a permanent disability occurs, the lieutenant governor becomes governor, but when a temporary disability occurs, the lieutenant governor acts as governor. N.Y. Const. art. IV, § 5. In 1943, the state’s attorney general opined that a statute allowing some appointments could not be applied to a lieutenant governor vacancy because it “would lead to the anomalous result that a Governor by appointing a Lieutenant-Governor and then resigning could impose upon the people his own choice as their Governor.” 1943 N.Y. Op. Att’y Gen. No. 378, 1943 WL 54210, at *4 (N.Y. Att’y Gen. Aug. 2, 1943).

In 2008, the governor resigned, and in accordance with the constitution, the lieutenant governor became governor. See Skelos v. Paterson, 915 N.E.2d 1141, 1142 (N.Y. 2009). Although the state constitution provides that if both the office of governor and the office of lieutenant governor are vacant, the president of the senate shall act as governor, N.Y. Const. art. IV, § 6, the senate deadlocked and could not elect a temporary president, see Skelos, 915 N.E.2d at 1142. Accordingly, each political party recognized a different temporary president, which made it unclear “which one of the rival temporary presidents stood next in the line of gubernatorial succession.” Skelos, 915 N.E.2d at 1142. The governor attempted to break the deadlock by simply appointing a new lieutenant governor. Id. However, a state legislator filed a lawsuit seeking (1) a declaration that the appointment was unconstitutional and (2) an injunction preventing the governor from appointing anyone to the office of lieutenant governor. Id.

When the case reached the New York Court of Appeals, the court stated there could be no dispute that the lieutenant governor became governor and thereby left a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. Id. at 1144. It then rejected the contention “that the Constitution requires that a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor be preserved until the next . . . election” and applied a state statute—the one the attorney general had opined 60 years earlier could not apply—to fill a gap left by the constitution. Id. The court reasoned it made little sense to have “an extended vacancy running the balance of an elective term” when the constitution contained a provision intending to assure vacancies were filled. Id. at 1144–45.

The court also concluded the elective principle could not control the result of the case:

While there can be no quarrel with the proposition that, generally, election must be the preferred means of filling vacancies in elective office, it does not follow that the elective principle is preeminent when it comes to filling a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor.

Id. at 1145. It concluded that a constitutional amendment placing the governor and lieutenant governor on the same ticket subordinated the elective principle “to assure the structural integrity and efficacy of the executive branch.” Id. It acknowledged that subordinating the elective principle created the possibility an unelected individual could occupy the state’s highest office, but it concluded that was a permissible result because all rules of succession are “inevitably imperfect” and “invariably compromise elective principles” at some stage. Id. at 1146. In other words, it deferred to the legislature’s judgment in passing a statute that applied. See id. (“For now, the Legislature . . . has specified that the vacancy is to be filled not by election but by gubernatorial appointment alone—a determination that the Legislature is always free to revisit.”).

Justice Pigott relied on historical practice, noting “no one . . . harbored a suggestion” that the new governor could appoint a replacement lieutenant governor because “no Governor in the history of the State had done so.” Id.; see also id. at 1152 & n.3 (collecting 10 occasions since New York’s founding “when the position of Lieutenant Governor has become vacant” but noting none of the vacancies were filled by appointment). He also noted the constitution did not expressly provide an appointment power—but it did “provide a clear line of succession,” which could not be circumvented. See id. at 1150. He asserted the majority erred by grouping the position of lieutenant governor—one of the state’s highest offices—into what was effectively a catchall statute addressing other minor state officials. Id.; cf. Whitman v. Am. Trucking Ass’n, 531 U.S. 457, 468 (2001) (noting Congress does not “hide elephants in mouseholes”). In Justice Pigott’s view, the lieutenant governor was not addressed in the statute because the constitution already provided a method of succession. See Skelos, 915 N.E.2d at 1150.

Finally, Justice Pigott explored constitutional amendments that affected the lieutenant governor. First, in 1945, the constitution was amended to indicate “precisely what was to occur when there was a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor alone;” it indicated the temporary senate president was to perform all the duties of lieutenant governor during the vacancy. See id. at 1154–55. Second, in 1953, the constitution was amended to require that the governor and lieutenant governor be elected together, on one ticket—just as Iowa did in 1988. See id. at 1155. Accommodating those changes, Justice Pigott suggested it was improper “that a Lieutenant Governor could be appointed by a Governor with no input from the electorate and no vetting by the legislative branch of government.” Id.

There has been some academic criticism of the Skelos decision. See Patrick A. Woods, Comment, Automatic Lieutenant Gubernatorial Succession: Preventing Legislative Gridlock Without Sacrificing the Elective Principle, 76 Alb. L. Rev. 2301, 2303 (2013) (asserting Skelos “removes any electoral check from those selected to fill the position of lieutenant-governor and leaves structural problems unresolved”). But it is not universally panned. See Richard Briffault, Skelos v. Paterson: The Surprisingly Strong Case for the Governor’s Surprising Power to Appoint a Lieutenant Governor, 73 Alb. L. Rev. 675, 676–77 (2010) (asserting that the Skelos majority was right despite disagreement from the sitting attorney general, “a former chief judge, a former lieutenant governor, a former attorney general, and a leading academic expert on the state constitution”).

In any event, the decision appeared to assume that there was a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor despite earlier caselaw from other states holding almost unanimously that the lieutenant governor's ascension does not leave a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. That assumption may leave the decision on shaky analytical ground.

There are a few other differences between New York's framework and Iowa's. First, the lieutenant governor's duties include presiding over the senate in New York, but not in Iowa. Second, the New York Constitution provides for vacancies in the lieutenant governor's office alone, with no vacancy in the governor's office. N.Y. Const. art. IV, § 6. The Iowa Constitution is not as specific. Finally, the New York Constitution directs the legislature to provide for filling vacancies. N.Y. Const. art. XIII, § 3. By contrast, the Iowa Constitution contains no similar instructions for the legislature.

10. Oklahoma

Oklahoma's succession provision is similar to Iowa's, using the word "devolve"—although one difference is that in Oklahoma, "the office" devolves, while in Iowa, the powers and duties do. Compare Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17, with Okla. Const. art. 6, § 16. In a 1926 case, the Oklahoma Supreme Court concluded the office of Governor automatically devolves upon another, who by virtue of filling that office becomes the chief magistrate styled the governor of Oklahoma. Fitzpatrick v. McAlister, 248 P. 569, 572 (Okla. 1926). In other words, the person who has the powers is governor. In particular, the court noted the difference between the word "devolve," which applied only to the lieutenant governor, and "act as Governor," which applied only to those further down the line of succession. See id. Because of that difference in language, the court concluded the word "devolve" actually conferred the title and office.

The court found support for its conclusion in federal history:

[U]pon the death of President Wm. H. Harrison, Vice President Tyler became President of the United States. For almost a century this construction of the federal Constitution has stood without question. It has been recognized as correct, and acquiesced in, not only by the departments of state and all the states of the Union, but officially recognized by every civilized government in the world.

On each occasion where the President of the United States has died, the Vice President has immediately succeeded to the office of President as President of the United States, and thereupon the government of the United States has at once, through its consular offices, notified all governments of the world of the change in Presidents.

Defendant suggests that no court has ever pronounced that to be the law. To our mind, it is so clearly correct that no one has ever presumed to test its correctness in the courts. Therefore it should have greater weight than an ordinary departmental construction, not only because it has stood for almost a century, but because it has been recognized as the correct conception of our system of government, and because, for eighty-five years under this construction, there has been no friction in the machinery of government by reason of such construction.

The decision was not unanimous. A dissenting opinion suggested the lieutenant governor would perform gubernatorial duties “merely as the occupant of the office of Lieutenant Governor, to which he was elected.” Id. at 580 (Branson, V.C.J., dissenting). The dissent also highlighted the possibility that if the lieutenant governor became governor and thereby vacated the office of lieutenant governor, he could appoint a replacement. See id. at 581. That was problematic, the dissent asserted, because it would “make it impossible that the President pro tempore of the Senate would ever succeed to the performance of the duties of Governor, as was clearly contemplated in the succession line to such duties as set out in . . . the Constitution.” Id.

11. Oregon

In Oregon, the successor “shall become Governor.” Or. Const. art. V, § 8a. However, the Oregon Constitution formerly provided that the duties of governor would “devolve on the secretary of state” and if the secretary of state was disabled, “the president of the senate shall act as governor.” See Chadwick v. Earhart, 4 P. 1180, 1180 (Or. 1884) (quoting the provision as it existed at the time). In other words, the Oregon Constitution distinguished between devolution and an acting governor.

In Chadwick, one party contended that the duties of the office of governor became annexed to the office of secretary of state, and are discharged as duties incident to the latter office; in other words, that the duties of the office, but not the office itself, devolve upon the secretary of state.

Id. The court was skeptical, noting that argument seemed to require “either that the office of governor should continue vacant . . . ; or, second, that the office be filled, and yet he who fills it be in nowise governor, but continue to be merely secretary of state.” Id.

Accordingly, the court concluded the successor became governor:

In the first place, it is not shown how an office can be vacant, and yet there be a person, not the deputy or locum tenens of another, empowered by law to discharge the duties of the office, and who does, in fact, discharge them. It is not explained how, in such a case, the duties can be separated from the office so that he who discharges them does not become an incumbent of the office. And, in the second place, how a person can fill the office of governor without being governor. It is the function of a public officer to discharge public duties. Such duties constitute his office.

Id. at 1181. A later decision adhered to Chadwick and concluded that upon the governor's death, "by reason of the fact that Mr. Olcott was secretary of state he automatically became governor." Olcott, 181 P. at 482. The court concluded "when the people elected Mr. Olcott secretary of state, by the very terms of the constitution they elected him to become governor" if the incumbent died. Id. at 483.

12. Utah

Utah defines vacancy to include resignation and disability that extends for the remainder of the term. Utah Const. art. VII, § 11(1)(a). If a vacancy occurs, the lieutenant governor "shall become governor." Id. § 11(2). The Utah Constitution also provides that if a disability is only temporary, the lieutenant governor shall discharge the powers and duties. Id. § 11(5)(a). And, it establishes that when the lieutenant governor becomes governor, a vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor. Id. § 10(3)(a)(i).

However, before 2008, the Utah Constitution, like Iowa, used only "devolve." The Utah Attorney General issued an advisory opinion in 2003 on the question of succession. Utah A.G. Opinion No. 03-001, 2003 WL 21996258 (Aug. 18, 2003). The opinion concluded (1) "devolve" means that the lieutenant governor becomes governor, and (2) a vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor that the governor is entitled to fill by appointment. Id. at *1, 3. The attorney general relied in part on the federal history involving the word "devolve." Because four vice presidents had become president before Utah adopted a constitution, at the time the state adopted one, "it was understood, in theory and in practice, that the Constitutional language 'shall devolve' meant 'succession' such that the Lieutenant Governor would become the Governor." Id. at *1.

The attorney general also noted that in 1980, the citizens of Utah adopted constitutional amendments that required the governor and lieutenant governor to run on the same ticket and clarified the line of succession of executive authority. Id. Those amendments were presented to the voters as mirroring the succession of the federal government—which by this time had adopted the 25th Amendment providing the vice president becomes president. Id.

Despite the attorney general’s conclusions about the existing language, the Utah Constitution was later amended to its current language to cement the attorney general’s understanding of the constitutional structure. Furthermore, the attorney general may have reached his opinion about a lieutenant governor vacancy because (1) the legislature codified its finding that the lieutenant governor is a significant position, Utah Code § 67-1a-1; and (2) the lieutenant governor is the state’s chief election officer, so it would be important to have someone in the position, see Utah Code § 67-1a-2. The Iowa Code does not contain a similar emphasis on the lieutenant governor’s importance, and here, the secretary of state is the chief election officer. Those differences may provide a basis on which to distinguish Utah’s conclusions.

13. Washington

Washington’s succession provision is similar to Iowa’s, using the word “devolve.” Compare Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17, with Wash. Const. art. 3, § 10. The Washington Supreme Court confronted the provision in a 1902 case presenting the question whether the death of the governor creates a vacancy in either the office of governor or lieutenant governor. State ex rel. Murphy v. McBride, 70 P. 25, 25 (Wash. 1902). The court concluded,

The constitution having provided that in case of the death of the governor the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of governor. . . . When the lieutenant governor, by virtue of his office and of the command of the constitution, assumed the duties of governor on the death of Gov. Rogers, the office of lieutenant governor did not thereby become vacant, but the officer remained lieutenant governor, intrusted with the powers and duties of governor.

14. Wisconsin

In Wisconsin, the lieutenant governor “shall become governor” if the governor dies, resigns, or is removed. Wis. Const. art. 5, § 7(1). The lieutenant governor “shall serve as acting governor” if the governor is absent or disabled. Id. § 7(2). But the language was not always what it is today. In 1938, it matched article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution. See State ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, 280 N.W. 393, 398 (Wis. 1938) (quoting the provision in force at the time).

Under that provision, the Wisconsin Supreme Court acknowledged that the question of succession was “most important and of great public concern and interest” because the people of the state were “vitaly interested in seeing that no important office, such as that of lieutenant governor, be intruded into by any person who has not lawful authority to hold the office or to perform the duties thereof.” Id. at 394. It ultimately concluded that when a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, “the lieutenant governor does not become governor. He remains lieutenant governor, upon whom devolves the powers and duties of governor. In such a contingency no vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor.” Id. at 399.

15. Wyoming

Wyoming does not use either the word “devolve” or the phrase “become Governor.” Instead, it provides that the secretary of state “shall act as governor.” Wyo. Const. art. 4, § 6. In 1903, the governor died, and a dispute arose about the secretary of state’s compensation while fulfilling his constitutional duty to act as governor. State ex rel. Chatterton v. Grant, 73 P. 470, 470 (Wyo. 1903). The court concluded the secretary of state performed duties both in that role and as governor, and accordingly was entitled to compensation for both positions. See id. at 472. However, the court also noted it did not observe a material distinction between “devolve” and “act as.” Id. at 476.

III. SYNTHESIS

Several themes pervade the historical accounts. One major recurring theme is elective principle—the notion that the people should not be subject to the rule of a person none of them elected. Iowa’s constitutional delegates voiced this principle during the debates in 1857, and it has repeatedly surfaced when other states’ provisions came before courts in those states. See, e.g., Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 312; State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 372; Skelos, 915 N.E.2d at 1145.

Another theme is historical understanding. The notion that “it’s always been this way” is assuredly not reason, standing alone, to continue a particular practice; something can be legally incorrect even if it’s longstanding. See Griffin v. Pate, 884 N.W.2d 182, 208 (Iowa 2016) (Hecht, J., dissenting) (rejecting the notion that a practice should continue just “because ‘that’s the way it’s always been in Iowa’ or because ‘that’s the way it’s done elsewhere’ ”). But it can illuminate the understanding Iowa’s framers had at the time they were drafting the Iowa Constitution; it can shed light on the words’ original intent even though original intent is not the end of the analysis. See id. at 198–202 (majority opinion) (beginning analysis of a constitutional provision by determining what it was understood to mean at the time of enactment before tracing its interpretation over time). In that respect, the history of presidential succession before 1857, and the language in the United States Constitution at the time, provides a worthy indication of what Iowa's framers likely meant by the word "devolve."

A final theme is the importance of linguistic difference. Many states have changed their respective succession provisions, either because a court determined succession did not work in the way the people actually intended or perhaps just to update language. Additionally, some states differentiate between permanent and temporary disabilities—but Iowa's provision applies to both and must carry an interpretation commensurate with that flexibility. See State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 372; Heller, 42 A. at 158. Of particular importance here is the fact that the 25th Amendment was adopted in 1967, and the Iowa Constitution has seen multiple amendments since then—yet the Iowa Constitution was not changed to mirror it.

To be sure, reasonable minds can debate the meaning of the constitution. The histories discussed above in some instances contain competing answers; some say the successor becomes governor, while others say the successor is merely acting governor. Some grant a successor the power to appoint a new lieutenant governor; others don't. There is room to disagree. However, there are several factors that carry the most persuasive weight in determining what Iowa's answers are.

First, the elective principle was clearly important to the Iowa drafters. See 1 The Debates, at 591–94. And it has remained important, because even though Iowans have amended article IV of the Iowa Constitution, in doing so they retained the principle that both the governor and lieutenant governor "shall be elected." Iowa Const. art. IV, § 2. Accordingly, the elective principle deserves paramount consideration. As several courts determined, it would frustrate the elective principle and the constitutional succession order if a governor could always appoint a new lieutenant.

Second, the series of amendments to the Iowa Constitution delineate the contours of the lieutenant governor's duties. By placing the governor and lieutenant governor together on one ticket and removing the lieutenant governor's duty to preside over the senate, the people displayed their intent that the lieutenant governor be ready as a standby—just in case. See State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 371–72. The lieutenant governor's duties are as provided by law, and one of those duties flows from the constitution: the duty to become governor in the event of a vacancy. The duty is already encompassed in the office of lieutenant governor.

Finally, history carries significant weight in two respects. It illustrates that at the time article IV, section 17 was enacted, "devolve" meant that the successor becomes governor. It also suggests that the 1988 amendments consciously avoided duplicating the language of the 25th Amendment because the people of Iowa wished to uphold the elective principle.

In light of the resources and documents discussed in this memo, the answers to Senator Johnson's questions about gubernatorial succession in the event of Governor Branstad's resignation are as follows.

1. If Governor Branstad resigns, Lieutenant Governor Reynolds becomes Governor. She succeeds to the office, title, position, and powers of Governor because the person possessing the powers is styled the Governor of Iowa. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1.
2. Article IV, section 17 itself does not contain the phrase "act as governor." That section heading was added later and cannot circumvent the plain meaning of the actual language. The framers' intent in selecting the word "devolve" was to match the United States Constitution, and under the United States Constitution, the government experienced two presidential successions before 1857 in which the vice president became president. Thus, the framers understood "devolve" to mean that executive power separated between two offices merged into one in the event of a constitutional contingency.
3. If Governor Branstad resigns, no vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor. Essentially, the offices of governor and lieutenant governor merge. The voters elected Governor Branstad and Lieutenant Governor Reynolds with the understanding that Lieutenant Governor Reynolds would step in if a particular contingency—specified in article IV, section 17—occurred. One of the lieutenant governor's duties is to become Governor if that contingency occurs. Accordingly, Lieutenant Governor Reynolds becomes Governor because she is already Lieutenant Governor. Because there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor, Iowa Code section 69.8 does not apply.
4. Because there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor, there is nothing to fill. Accordingly, Governor Reynolds could not appoint a successor lieutenant governor.

92 Or. 462

Supreme Court of Oregon.

OLCOTT, GOVERNOR,
v.
HOFF, STATE TREASURER.

June 10, 1919.

In Banc.

Original proceeding in mandamus by Ben W. Olcott, Governor, against O. P. Hoff, State Treasurer. Writ ordered to issue.

**466 *462 This is an original proceeding on a petition for an alternative writ of mandamus, in which it is alleged that at the general election on November 5, 1918, James Withycombe was elected governor of the state of Oregon, and that he duly qualified for that office on January 14, 1919; that at the general election held on November 7, 1916, the petitioner, Ben W. Olcott, was elected secretary of state of the state of Oregon, and that he duly qualified for that office on December 26, 1916; that ever since he "has been and now is the duly *463 qualified and acting secretary of state," and that on March 3, 1919, James Withycombe, the duly elected and qualified governor of the state, died. Further allegations of the petition follow:

"That under and by virtue of section 8, art. 5, of the constitution of Oregon, the office of governor and the duties thereof devolved upon the secretary of state, and that on the 7th day of March your petitioner, Ben W. Olcott, took the oath of office and assumed the office and duties of governor. That he has been since that time and now is the governor of the state of Oregon. That on April 1, 1919, a warrant was duly issued by the secretary of state in favor of Ben W. Olcott, governor, for the sum of $336, in payment of the salary due said Ben W. Olcott, as governor, from March 7 to March 31 (inclusive), 1919, in accordance with law. That your petitioner has presented said warrant to O. P. Hoff, state treasurer, and that said O. P. Hoff, state treasurer, has failed and refused and still fails and refuses to pay the same, alleging as his reason that the warrant should be drawn to Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state, acting governor. That there is money in the state treasurer's hands to the credit of the fund for the payment of the salary of governor, which money was appropriated by H. B. No. 470, passed at the thirtieth session of the legislature, sufficient to pay petitioner's claim."

Wherefore the petitioner prays:

"That an alternative writ of mandamus issue out of this court, returnable on the 8th day of April, 1919, commanding the said O. P. Hoff, state treasurer, to pay said warrant, or on the failure thereof to show this court on the return day why the same has not been done, and for such other relief as may be proper, and your petitioner particularly prays that this court will define his duties and powers in relation to the office of Governor."

**467 *464 To this petition the defendant, O. P. Hoff, state treasurer, demurred upon the ground that "it appears from the face thereof that the writ does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against this defendant." The case was argued and submitted on April 10, 1919, at which time the court extended a general invitation to the bar of the state to file informal briefs on either side, as a result of which numerous and exhaustive briefs pro and con were submitted by able and distinguished attorneys, covering a wide range of research and investigation.

On behalf of the petitioner it is vigorously contended that in the interests of the general public, to settle and determine chaotic political and governmental conditions, this court should define his official title and tenure of office and prescribe his duties. The right or province of this court to decide such questions under the record is strenuously denied by opposing briefs. The vital question we are asked to decide is whether the petitioner, Mr. Olcott, holds the office of governor in fact, and, if so, for how long, or whether he has the right only to discharge the duties of that office during the remainder of his term as secretary of state. For the purposes of this opinion, all of the allegations of the petition must be deemed taken as true.

111 Mandamus
↔ Scope and extent of relief in general

On an original proceeding in mandamus in the Supreme Court, the court will decide all matters of general public interest and importance which the petition asks and which are argued in the briefs, not personal to the petitioner, and which, until decided, will seriously affect and unsettle the administration of the affairs of the state, though a decision as to such matter might be dicta as far as the parties involved are concerned.

JOHNS, J.

Under our form of government all power, both state and federal, is vested in the legislative, executive, and judicial departments. Each is separate and distinct from the other. In the affairs of state the governor is the chief executive and all other officers in that branch are more or less subordinate to his position. The office of secretary of state is next in importance. Section 1 of article 3 of the constitution provides:

“The powers of the government shall be divided into three separate departments—the legislative, the executive, including the administrative, and the judicial; and no person charged with official duties under one of these departments shall exercise any of the functions of another, except as in this constitution expressly provided.”

Sections 1 and 8 of article 5 follow:

“The chief executive power of the state shall be vested in a governor, who shall hold his office for the term of four years; and no person shall be eligible to such office more than eight in any period of twelve years.”

“In case of the removal of the governor from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the duties of the office, the same shall devolve on the secretary of state; and in case of the removal from office, death, resignation, or inability, both of the governor and secretary of state, the president of the *466 senate shall act as governor, until the disability be removed, or a governor be elected.”

The latter article also defines the qualifications of governor and the manner of his election, specifies who are ineligible for the office, and names his special powers and duties.

<sup>11</sup> In addition to such obligations and responsibilities, it is a matter of common knowledge that the governor is a member of numerous boards before which important business of all state institutions is daily transacted and by which large amounts of bonds are issued and certified for state purposes. This court knows as a matter of law that Mr. Olcott's term of office as secretary of state expires on January 3, 1921, and that if his right to the office of governor or to discharge the duties of that office ends with his term of secretary of state, another governor must be elected at the next general election. These are all matters of general public interest and importance, not personal to Mr. Olcott, and until such time as they are decided will seriously affect and unsettle the administration of the affairs of state. For such reasons, we think it is not only our province but our duty, in this kind of a case, in a measure to disregard and overlook any of the apparent forms or technicalities which have been suggested, and decide such public questions as are not inconsistent with our judicial duties.

<sup>12</sup> Whether Mr. Olcott is governor in fact and holds the office as such for the unexpired term of the late Governor Withycombe, or whether he shall discharge the duties of that office for the remainder of his term as secretary of state, depends upon the legal construction which should be placed upon section 8 of article 5 of the constitution, above quoted.

*467 As stated by Mr. Justice McBride in State v. Finch, 54 Or. 482, 103 Pac. 505, our constitution is largely copied from that of Indiana, which was adopted by that state in 1851, and which provides:

By substituting the words "secretary of state" for "lieutenant governor" that section of the Indiana organic law is made identical with the corresponding section of our own constitution. Counsel have not **468 cited, and we have not been able to find, any decision of the state of Indiana construing that section of its constitution.

The federal constitution, section 1 of article 2, provides:

"In case of the removal of the president from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the vice president."

It will be noted that by inserting the words "powers and" between the words "the" and "duties" and substituting the title "vice president" for "secretary of state" our own constitution is made identical with the federal. In so far as we are advised, this particular section of the federal constitution has never been construed by any court, yet upon the death of the president no one has ever claimed that the vice president became acting president only, or that he would not succeed to the office of president itself for the remainder of the unexpired term for which the president was elected.

We have examined the constitutions of every state in the Union, and none of them are identical with our *468 own; the closest resemblance being found in the Indiana and federal constitutions, as above noted.

Under their respective constitutions, in the event of the death of the governor, the powers and duties of that office devolve upon the lieutenant governor in the following states: Alabama, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, Wisconsin. And under like condition such duties devolve upon the president or speaker of the senate in the following named states: Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kansas, Maine, Maryland, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Tennessee, West Virginia. It is only in Oregon, Arizona, Utah, and Wyoming that in the event of the governor's death the secretary of state succeeds to his office or performs his duties. Excluding Oregon, the constitutions of Alabama, *469 Delaware, New Mexico, Oklahoma, South Carolina, and Virginia, only, expressly provide that upon the death of the governor the office of governor itself shall devolve upon his designated successor; and we have not been cited to or able to find any decision by the courts of either of those states construing that particular section of their respective constitutions.

The only decision of this court on the subject was rendered in the case of Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Or. 389, 4 Pac. 1180, which is vigorously assailed by counsel here, who claim that it was largely dictum, is not the law, and should be overruled. That case was decided at the October term, 1884, and it appears from the brief of the respondent R. P. Earhart, who was then the secretary of state, that—

"The statement of facts contained in the stipulation which is the basis of this action may be briefly stated by submitting the questions. In the event of the resignation of the governor of Oregon does the secretary of state become the governor by operation of law, and is he entitled to the salary provided by law for that office? * * * A nice question is raised by the stipulation, but it is of no importance in ascertaining whether appellant is entitled to the salary in question, that is, was the appellant the governor during the two days after the qualification of the respondent and before the qualification of Governor Thayer? And further, as the secretary of state is governor or acting governor, as the case may be, the office or duties thereof devolved on the respondent during that time. And we maintain that the title to each office terminated with the expiration of the four years after his qualification.”

Among other things, it was stipulated that—

“Mr. Earhart objects to the salary being paid from the 9th day of September, 1878, to the 11th day of September, 1878—two days—on the ground that Mr. Chadwick was not secretary of state after Mr. Earhart *470 was sworn in on the 9th day of September, 1878, though Mr. Chadwick acted as governor until and including the 11th day of September, 1878.”

The attorney for Mr. Chadwick, the appellant, made the following contention in his brief:

“In the event of the happening of any one of the above contingencies the office of governor devolves upon the secretary of state. The language in reference to the duties of secretary of state in this event is the same as that defining the office of president when the vice president succeeds to the same, except the word ‘powers’ is omitted.

“The office of governor is distinctive. It cannot merge into another. It cannot be vacant any more than can be the president’s office. The appointments under a constitution cannot be broken, whether they are made by an election or otherwise. The office is always filled. The incumbent is an incident to the office. Whether the incumbent is at the time secretary of state, he is the governor, and as much as if his appointment had been made by an election. The office devolves on him. The means used to fill the office of governor are absolute, and while they may be different according to contingencies, the one act of filling the office makes the incumbent governor. It is the office, not the man. Under a constitution there can be no such thing as an ‘acting officer.’ That is one that appears to be what he is not. No more than a clerk of a department could discharge the duties of president.

“There can be but one construction of the constitution in reference to this matter, and that is the office shall devolve on the secretary **469 of state. Duties are subordinate to the office and a part of it, and when the office devolves on the secretary of state, duties follow—prescribed, or to be prescribed, by legislative enactment. 1 Kent Com. 279.”

It was on such stipulation of facts and the briefs of respective counsel that the decision was rendered *471 wherein this court, through Mr. Chief Justice Waldo, said: “Two questions are submitted in this case. The first and principal one is, whether, when, under section 8 of article 5 of the constitution of Oregon, the duties of the office of governor devolve upon the secretary of state, he has a right to the salary of the office. Second. If this question be answered in the affirmative, whether he shall continue to perform the duties of the office for the remainder of the term of the outgoing governor, or shall he perform those duties only so long as he shall continue to be secretary of state. * * * “Counsel for the respondent claims that in the contingency provided for in said section 8 the duties of the office of governor become annexed to the office of secretary of state and are discharged as duties incident to the latter office. In other words, that the duties of the office, but not the office itself, devolve upon the secretary of state.

“This position seems to require: First, either that the office of governor should continue vacant during the time the secretary discharges its duties, and that such duties be in some way performed by the secretary of state, as such, consistently with a condition of vacancy; or, second, that the office be filled and yet he who fills it be in no wise governor, but continue to be merely secretary of state.

“In the first place, it is not shown how an office can be vacant and yet there be a person, not the deputy, or locum tenens, of another, empowered by law to discharge the duties of the office and who does in fact discharge them. It is not explained how, in such a case, the duties can be separated from the office, so that he who discharges them does not become an incumbent of the office. And, in the second place, how a person can fill the office of governor without being governor.

"It is the function of a public officer to discharge public duties. Such duties constitute his office. Hence, given a public office and one who, duly empowered, discharges its duties, and we have an incumbent in *472 that office. Such is the case here. The secretary of state, by force of the function cast upon him, becomes governor, and consequently entitled to the salary appertaining to the office.

"Nor does the language of the section, grammatically considered, bear the interpretation counsel has put upon it. Leaving out the co-ordinate clauses following the first clause, and the sentence reads: 'In case of the removal of the governor from office, the same shall devolve on the secretary of state;' that is, the office shall devolve. So, taken with each of the succeeding clauses, the word 'same' stands for 'office.'"

As to the second question, the opinion holds that the individual—

"* * * answering the description at the time the contingency arises designates him as the person who is to enter and fill the office, and when, as thus designated, he enters into the office, he holds it in his natural, and not in his official, capacity. This seems to be the principle which applies when the office of governor devolves on the secretary of state on the happening of any of the events specified in the constitution. * * * Now, as two offices may remain distinct which are not incompatible, though the officer is the same person, it would seem that the same principle should govern the holding of the office of governor by the secretary of state.

"This question therefore must also be answered in favor of the appellant, and judgment be entered accordingly."

We do not agree with the statement of counsel that other courts have refused "to accept the Chadwick Case as sound law." Upon that particular point, no United States court has ever construed the federal constitution and no state court has ever rendered any decision construing the same, or a similar provision of a state constitution.

*473 To support the argument that Mr. Olcott does not hold the office and is acting governor only, amicus curiæ, counsel for defendant, cites and relies upon the following authorities: State v. Grant, 12 Wyo. 1, 73 Pac. 470, 2 Ann. Cas. 382; State v. Sadler, 23 Nev. 357, 47 Pac. 450; Clifford v. Heller, 63 N. J. Law, 105, 42 Atl. 155, 57 L. R. A. 312; People v. Budd, 114 Cal. 168, 45 Pac. 1060, 34 L. R. A. 46; People v. Cornforth, 34 Colo. 107, 81 Pac. 871; Opinion of the Justices, 70 Me. 570; State v. Stearns, 72 Minn. 200, 75 N. W. 210; State v. McBride, 29 Wash. 335, 70 Pac. 26; Futrell v. Oldham, 107 Ark. 386, 155 S. W. 502, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 571. Those decisions were rendered under the respective constitutions of the different states, which provide as follows:

"If the governor be impeached, displaced, resign or die, or from mental or physical disease or otherwise become incapable of performing the duties of his office or be absent from the state, the secretary of state shall act as governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed." Wyoming, art. 4, § 6.

"In case of the impeachment of the governor, or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the duties of the said office, resignation or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease." Nevada, art. 5, § 18.

"In case of the death, resignation, or removal from office of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate." New Jersey, art. 5, § 12.

"In case of the impeachment of the governor, or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the powers and duties of his office, resignation, or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue *474 of the **470 term, or until the disability shall cease." California, art. 5, § 16.

"In case of the death, impeachment, or conviction of felony or infamous misdemeanor, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the state, or other disability of the governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office, for the residue of the term, or until the disability be removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor." Colorado, art. 4, § 13.

"Whenever the office of the governor shall become vacant by death, resignation, removal from office or otherwise, the president of the senate shall exercise the office of governor until another governor shall be duly qualified." Maine, art. 5, § 14.

"The lieutenant governor shall be ex officio president of the senate; and in case a vacancy should occur, from any cause whatever, in the office of governor, he shall be governor during such vacancy." Minnesota, art. 5, § 6.

"In case of the removal, resignation, death or disability of the governor, the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor." Washington, art. 3, § 10.

"In case of the death, conviction on impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the state or other disability of the governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office for the remainder of the term or until the disability be removed, or a governor elected and qualified, shall devolve upon and accrue to the president of the senate." Arkansas, art. 6, § 12.

It will be noted that in all of the sections quoted it is not the office, but the powers and duties of the office, which devolve upon his successor in the event of the death of the governor. The importance of that distinction is clearly pointed out by the recent decision of the supreme court of Arkansas in construing the constitution of that state in the case of Futrell v. Oldham, supra, *475 where the opinion says:

"If the framers of the constitution had intended to provide for the devolution of the office of governor, in case of vacancy by resignation or otherwise, upon the president of the senate, that intention could easily have been directly expressed in appropriate words. But they chose other terms which clearly observe the distinction between the course of succession of the office itself and a mere devolution of the duties and the emoluments of the office for the time being, and deliberately adopted the latter as the best means of having the government administered until the people themselves can elect a governor."

That distinction was also made and emphasized by this court in the case of Chadwick v. Earhart, supra.

W. H. Holmes, who submitted an amicus curiæ brief in the instant case, was also one of counsel for the respondent Earhart in the Chadwick Case, and then contended that "the right of the appellant to the salary would depend on whether the title of the office of governor was vested in him or not;" that the title to that office was not vested in Chadwick and that his term as governor was special, "and the time cannot be extended by implication." In his brief in the pending case he frankly says:

"If the Chadwick case was correct law, it would seem the question has already been determined judicially and there would be nothing for the attorney general to do except to state that the question has been decided by the court of last resort in the state of Oregon and that the secretary of state would be justified in following the decision. Owing to the refusal of other courts in the land to accept the Chadwick case as sound law, and inasmuch as the secretary of state wants his rights and duties defined in regard to resigning his *476 office as secretary of state, with the view of assuming the office of governor and appointing a person to the office which he proposes to resign, it is important that the question now before the court be correctly decided."

Then, as now, he vigorously asserted that it was not the law and should be overruled.

Much stress is laid upon the fact that R. P. Boise was a member of the constitutional convention, and that as circuit judge he sustained the demurrer to the complaint in the Chadwick Case. We have a very high regard and a profound respect for his judicial learning and ability, but his decision was rendered under the old practice and upon an agreed statement of facts, with a view of prosecuting an appeal and obtaining an early decision in the appellate court. Outside of the fact that Judge Boise sustained the demurrer, there is no written evidence in this or the circuit court as to what may have been his personal opinion or reason for sustaining the demurrer. The fact remains that the Chadwick Case was decided by this court in October, 1884; that the opinion of the then judges of this court, William P. Lord, E. B. Watson, and J. P. Waldo, Chief Justice, was unanimous, and that for more than 34 years it has never been questioned in this court.

Counsel now attack the grammatical construction given to that section of the constitution in the opinion, contending that the word "same" as used therein refers to the word "duties" and not to "office," and that it should be construed to mean that in case of the removal of the governor or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the duties of his office, the duties of the office, and not the office itself, should devolve upon the secretary of state. That question was *477 squarely decided in the Chadwick Case and its decision was necessary to the opinion. It was there contended that Chadwick knew of the terms and provisions of that section of the constitution when he was elected and qualified as secretary of state; that because he was secretary of state he might be called upon to perform the duties of the office of governor, and for such reason he was not entitled to receive **471 any compensation for his services in that capacity; and that even though he performed the duties of governor he should receive only his salary as secretary of state. In deciding that point the court held that the word "same" relates to and qualifies the word "office," and in legal effect that the section should read:

"In case of the removal of the governor from office or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the duties of the office, the office itself shall devolve upon the secretary of state."

Section 7 of article 2 of the organic law of Oregon adopted in 1845 provides that—

"The governor shall continue in office two years, and until his successor is duly elected and qualified; and in case of the office becoming vacant, by death, resignation or otherwise, the secretary shall exercise the duties of the office until the vacancy be filled by election."

Volume 9 of United States Statutes at large, p. 324, Act Aug. 14, 1848, c. 177, § 3, establishing the territory of Oregon, provides:

"And in case of the death, removal, resignation, or absence of the governor from the territory, the secretary shall be, and he is hereby, authorized * * * to perform all the powers and duties of the governor, during such vacancy or absence, or until another governor shall duly be appointed and qualified to fill such vacancy."

*478 Our present constitution was adopted on November 9, 1857, and its framers must have known of such terms and provisions of the organic law and territorial statutes, both of which specify that in the event of the death of the governor the secretary of state shall exercise and perform the duties of that office; that under the organic law he should perform those duties "until the vacancy be filled by election," and that under the territorial statute he should perform those duties "during such vacancy or absence, or until another governor shall duly be appointed and qualified to fill such vacancy." Yet with such knowledge it is significant that the constitution which they adopted provides that—

"In case of the removal of the governor from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the duties of the office, the same shall devolve on the secretary of state."

They did not select either, but drafted and adopted another section, using language of their own, with a different meaning. That section further says:

"In case of the removal from office, death, resignation, or inability, both of the governor and secretary of state, the president of the senate shall act as governor, until the disability be removed, or a governor be elected."

And it is contended that because in such a case "the president of the senate shall act as governor," it must follow that the section should be construed to mean that upon the death of the governor the secretary of state should "act as governor." We do not think that it will bear that construction. It specifically says that:

"In case of the removal of the governor from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge *479 the duties of the office, the same shall devolve on the secretary of state" —and that in the event of the death or disability of both the governor and the secretary of state the president of the senate shall act as governor. It does not say that the secretary of state shall act as governor, although it says that the president of the senate shall "act as governor." If it had been the intent of the framers of the constitution that the secretary of state should "act as governor," it would have been an easy matter to say so and to apply the same language to the secretary of state that it did to the president of the senate.

[3] Upon the question of stare decisis the supreme court of Washington in Re City of Seattle, 62 Wash. 218, 113 Pac. 762, says:

“The rule of stare decisis is peculiarly applicable to the construction of the constitution. The interpretation of that document should not be made dependent upon every change in the personnel of the court. When one of its clauses has been once construed, that construction should not be set aside except for the most cogent reasons. Certainty in the law is of the first importance.”

In Cooley’s Constitutional Limitations (7th Ed.) p. 83, it is said:

“Precedents, therefore, become important, and counsel are allowed and expected to call the attention of the court to them, not as concluding controversies, but as guides to the judicial mind. Chancellor Kent says: ‘A solemn decision upon a point of law arising in any given case becomes an authority in a like case, because it is the highest evidence which we can have of the law applicable to the subject, and the judges are bound to follow that decision so long as it stands unreversed, unless it can be shown that the law was misunderstood *480 or misapplied in that particular case. If a decision has been made upon solemn argument and mature deliberation, the presumption is in favor of its correctness and the community has a right to regard it as a just declaration or exposition of the law, and to regulate their actions and contracts by it. It would therefore be extremely inconvenient to the public if precedents were not duly regarded and implicitly followed. It is by the notoriety and stability of such rules that professional men can give safe advice to those who consult them, and people in general can venture to buy and trust, and to deal with each other. If judicial decisions were to be lightly disregarded, we should disturb and unsettle the great landmarks of property. When a rule has once been deliberately adopted and declared, it ought not to be disturbed unless by a court of appeal or review, and never by the same court, except for very urgent reasons, and upon a clear manifestation of error; and if the practice were75 **472 otherwise, it would be leaving us in a perplexing uncertainty as to the law.’”

This rule of construction has been adopted and followed by a long line of decisions of this court, commencing with the case of State v. Clark, 9 Or. 470, and ending with the case of Multnomah County v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 180 Pac. 104, decided April 22, 1919. The rule is well stated by Mr. Justice Burnett in his dissenting opinion in Kalich v. Knapp, 73 Or. 587, 145 Pac. 27, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1051, thus:

“Another doctrine equally well settled is that of stare decisis, to the effect that when a decision has once been rendered it amounts to an authoritative construction of the law, and should not be disregarded or overturned except for very cogent reasons showing beyond question that on principle it was wrongly decided. The principle is that laws are largely conventional rules of action, and it is more important that the rule be settled as a guiding precept to the public than that by the action of the courts the law should *481 be made to fluctuate like the tides,” citing authorities.

Section 10 of article 2 of the constitution provides that—

“ * * * Nor shall any person hold more than one lucrative office at the same time, except as in this constitution expressly permitted.”

It is contended that under section 1 of article 3, supra, and the section just quoted, no one individual can receive the emoluments and hold the offices of governor and secretary of state at the same time, but it will be noted that each of such sections contains the clause, “except as in this constitution expressly permitted,” and that the offices of governor and secretary of state are both executive or administrative, and not legislative or judicial. All of the constitution was adopted at the same time, and its various provisions must be construed as a whole, and when section 10 of article 2 and section 1 of article 3 are considered with section 8 of article 5 they are not in conflict. The devolving of the office of governor, at the death of that official, upon the secretary of state is one of the exceptions contemplated by the framers of the constitution, provided for by section 10 of article 2 and section 1 of article 3. The word “devolve” has a legal meaning and is well defined by Bouvier thus: “To pass from a person dying to a person living.”

Regardless of the question as to whether the Chadwick Case is sustained by the weight of authority, the fact remains that since its decision in October, 1884, many legislatures have come and gone; that the people have directly or indirectly had the power to amend the constitution; that for more than 34 years it has been the law of the state; and that it was decided *482 by eminent justices of this court and is sustained by such reasoning and authority as clearly to bring it within the rule of stare decisis and make it binding on this court.

Mr. Olcott is governor in fact and has the right and title to the office itself, with the accompanying right and authority to perform the duties and receive the emoluments of the office. As to whether he could resign as secretary of state, and as governor appoint another to that position and still continue to hold the office of governor, we do not feel legally justified in going beyond anything said in this opinion. That is less a public and more a personal question for Mr. Olcott.

But we do hold that, upon the death of the late Governor Withycombe, by reason of the fact that Mr. Olcott was then secretary of state he automatically became governor, and when he took the oath as such the office of governor and the title to that office were thrust upon him by the terms and provisions of section 8 of article 5 of the constitution, and that under the authority of Chadwick v. Earhart, supra, he became and is now governor in fact and is entitled to hold that office, perform all of its duties, and receive its emoluments for the full period of the unexpired term to which the late Governor Withycombe was elected. This decision is based upon the express terms and provisions of our state constitution, which was adopted by a direct vote of the people, and which within itself, in case of the removal of the governor from office, or of his death, etc., provides how and by whom the office of governor shall be filled; and for such reason it is not in conflict with the recent opinion of the majority of this court in State ex rel. v. Kellaher, 177 Pac. 944. In that kind of *483 a case there is a vacancy, and the law provides for an appointment to fill the same and states by whom the appointment shall be made. In the instant case, however, when the people elected Mr. Olcott secretary of state, by the very terms of the constitution they elected him to become governor upon the death of Governor Withycombe. There was no vacancy in that office, as the people, speaking through the constitution, have made their own selection.

The court sincerely thanks distinguished counsel for their able and instructive briefs as amici curiæ on the respective sides, and assures them that the same are duly appreciated.

Let the writ issue as prayed for in the petition.

BEAN, J., concurs.

McBRIDE, C. J. (specially concurring).

I fully concur with the reasoning of Justice JOHNS, and in the conclusion arrived at by him, but think we should go further and decide every question that is presented in the briefs.

**473 In the specially concurring opinions of Justices BURNETT and BENNETT, it is urged that the question as to whether the petitioner will hold for the remainder of the unexpired term of the late Governor Withycombe, or only until his own term as secretary of state expires, and the further question as to whether Mr. Olcott can now resign the office of secretary of state and continue to hold the office of governor, are not necessarily involved here, and that any discussion of these questions is academic, and any opinion rendered in respect to them, would be merely dictum.

If these questions involved merely the private rights of individuals this contention would undoubtedly be correct; but where the general public has an interest *484 in the controversy the courts have, with substantial unanimity, disregarded the technical limitations embraced in the term "dictum" and decided the whole controversy, where such a course appeared promotive of the public good, or calculated to settle disputed construction of provisions of the constitution and prevent future litigation concerning them. I do not now refer to or cite the decisions from those states where the law provides for the submission of such questions to the supreme court without suit, but to those having constitutions no broader in these respects than our own and to the supreme court of the United States. Giles v. Harris, 189 U. S. 475, 23 Sup. Ct. 639, 47 L. Ed. 909; Memphis St. Ry. Co. v. Rapid Transit Co., 133 Tenn. 99, 179 S. W. 635, L. R. A. 1916B, 1147, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 1045; Boise City Irr. & Land Co. v. Clark, 131 Fed. 415, 65 C. C. A. 399; Borgnis v. Falk Co., 147 Wis. 327, 133 N. W. 209, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 489; State v. Stutsman, 24 N. D. 68, 139 N. W. 83, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 776; State v. Southern Tel. & Cons. Co., 65 Fla. 67, 61 South. 119; Commonwealth of Mass. v. Klaus, 145 App. Div. 798, 130 N. Y. Supp. 713; In re Fairchild, 151 N. Y. 361, 45 N. E. 943; People v. Gen. Com. of Republican Party, 25 App. Div. 339, 49 N. Y. Supp. 723; In re Morgan, 114 App. Div. 45, 99 N. Y. Supp. 775.

In Giles v. Harris, supra, the United States supreme court says:

"Perhaps it should be added to the foregoing statement that the bill was filed in September, 1902, and alleged the plaintiff's desire to vote at an election coming off in November. This election has gone by, so that it is impossible to give specific relief with regard to that. But we are not prepared to dismiss the bill or the appeal on that ground, because to be enabled *485 to cast a vote in that election is not, as in Mills v. Green, 159 U. S. 651, 657 [16 Sup. Ct. 132, 40 L. Ed. 293], the whole object of the bill. It is not even the principal object of the relief sought by the plaintiff. The principal object of that is to obtain the permanent advantages of registration as of a date before 1903. * * *

“The traditional limits of proceedings in equity have not embraced a remedy for political wrongs. * * * But we cannot forget that we are dealing with a new and extraordinary situation, and we are unwilling to stop short of the final considerations which seem to us to dispose of the case.” Giles v. Harris, 189 U. S. 475, 484, 486, 23 Sup. Ct. 639, 641, 642 (47 L. Ed. 909).

In Memphis St. Ry. Co. v. Rapid Transit Co., supra, the supreme court of Tennessee, says:

“We have formerly said that, when any question involving the constitutionality of an act of the legislature is bona fide made and relied upon in a case, this court should take appellate jurisdiction of such a case. * * * Although we appreciate the delicacy of passing on the validity of an act of the legislature, such a duty is often imposed upon us, and we must not dodge our jurisdiction. Where an act of the legislature undertakes to regulate a particular subject, and the application of such an act is invoked by one party in a suit involving that subject, and the validity of the act is questioned by the other party, we think it proper that the statute should be tested.”

In State v. Southern Tel. & Const. Co., supra, the supreme court of Florida says:

“The railroad commissioners, acting for the state, are the relators and plaintiffs in error, and the fact that the person in whose favor the order is sought to be enforced has moved away does not show that under no circumstances can the writ be made effective for the purpose designed in this case. And even if under *486 no circumstances the writ could be made effective because of Mr. Chaires’ removal, the appellate court does not thereby lose jurisdiction of the cause, and it may be retained for the determination of questions properly presented involving the duties and authority of state officials that are of general interest to the public. * * *

“The respondent’s motion to quash the alternative writ presents questions of law that affect the authority and duties of the railroad commissioners in regulating the service rendered by telephone companies, and the public as well as the relators is interested in having the legal questions raised determined for the future guidance of the state officials. * * *

In Commonwealth of Mass. v. Klaus, supra, the court says:

“This is an appeal from an order of a justice * * * denying a motion to issue a subpoena requiring Rembrandt Peale, a person within the state, to appear and testify in a criminal action pending in the state of Massachusetts. * * * By the subpoena applied for, it was sought to procure the attendance of Peale in Massachusetts in September, 1910, and it may be that the criminal prosecution has already ended, so that his attendance would now be useless.

“On this point the papers on appeal do not advise us, but even if such were the case we should deem it our duty to examine the question of the validity of the act, because the special term decision already referred to will, unless overruled, probably serve to render the act nugatory. Appellate courts not infrequently pass upon questions affecting important public **474 interests, even where in the particular case the question has become academic.”

In Re Fairchild, supra, the court of appeals of New York says:

“The respondent contends that, inasmuch as the election has been held, the decision of the questions presented on this appeal is of no importance, as it can, *487 at most, only affect the questions of costs. We think the questions involved are of sufficient importance to require their determination by this court, as it may prevent future embarrassment in the congressional district to which the controversy relates, and also settle other questions upon which there is a conflict in the decisions of the supreme court. * * *

In People v. Gen. Com., etc., supra, the same court says:

“This court held in Re Cuddeback, 3 App. Div. 103, 39 N. Y. Supp. 388, viz.: ‘An appeal will not always be dismissed because the question is no longer a practical one. Notwithstanding the fact that an election has been held, and a decision of the question involved cannot affect the result of that election, yet, where the point at issue is one of public interest, affecting the rights of all the electors of the state, the courts will determine it.’

“Following the doctrine there laid down, it seems that we ought not, in this case, to dismiss the appeal, because the question here involved is as much a matter of public interest as the question involved in the case from which the quotation has been made. * * *

And in Re Morgan, supra, the same court says:

“* * * The sole question involved in this appeal is the constitutionality of said amendment, and, although the said election has long since passed, and therefore our decision can have no effect upon the rights of the appellant at said election, both sides urge a consideration by this court of a public question vitally affecting the conduct of elections in the future. Although in one sense academic, such considerations have moved both this court * * * and the court of appeals * * * to consider and determine cases involving the election laws, although the immediate necessity therefor has passed away. * * *”

This phase of the matter here under discussion did not escape the astute mind of Bouvier, who observes:

*488 “So also it has been held, with respect to a court of last resort, that all that is needed to render its decision authoritative is that there was an application of the judicial mind to the precise question adjudged; and that the point was investigated with care and considered in its fullest extent ([Alexander v. Worthington et al.], 5 Md. 488), and that when a question of general interest is involved, and is fully discussed and submitted by counsel, and the court decides the question with a view to settle the law, the decision cannot be considered a dictum (Id.).”

In the present case it cannot be successfully argued that the public has not a profound interest in the speedy solution of the questions submitted. There can be little question that Mr. Olcott is entitled to hold both the office of governor and secretary of state, and to draw the salaries of both. It is creditable to him that he does not wish to do the first and will not do the second. In the infancy of the state, when its business was insignificant and its revenues small, one person could well perform the duties of both governor and secretary of state, but with the enormous expansion of state business each of the three constitutional officers finds in his own department all the business which he can attend to, and more.

Questions involving the care and expenditure of vast sums of money and affecting large social and economic interests continually present themselves before the various boards, of which these officers are members. The object of having a board composed of these officers was to have the advantage of the opinions of three minds and the independent research of three persons before conclusions, vital in the administration of the state's fiscal affairs, were arrived at. Where the offices of governor and secretary of state are merged in one individual, the public loses the safeguard *489 that was intended by the constitution when it provided that certain boards should consist of three officers, namely, the governor, secretary, and treasurer. If it is possible for Mr. Olcott to give up the office of secretary of state and retain the office of governor, he should be permitted to do so, in the public interest, and we ought not to quibble about “dicta” in so declaring.

The public also has an interest in having the duration of his term of office settled. If a new governor is to be chosen at the next general election, the voters of the state should be apprised of that fact, so they may look about and weigh the qualifications of the various candidates, or prospective candidates, with a view to enabling themselves to choose intelligently. With the question undecided, and perhaps a large majority of the voters under the impression that Mr. Olcott's term will not expire at the next general election, the primary election for that office will be clouded with uncertainties not conducive to intelligent selection.

It is true that each of these questions could be presented later by two or more additional lawsuits; that to use a homely simile, we could “cut the dog's tail off by inches” instead of by making one slash and finishing the business once for all. It is true the progress by inches would furnish business for attorneys and capital for petty politicians, but it would not promote the interest of the public, which, as before shown, is to have these questions settled now.

I consider every question discussed in the various briefs absolutely settled by the case of Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Or. 389, 4 Pac. 1180, cited in the principal opinion. Chief Justice Waldo, who delivered the opinion *490 in **475 that case, was not only a lawyer of great learning but notably accurate in his choice of language, and the language used by him seems to me to bear no other construction than that when the secretary of state becomes governor he becomes such in his natural, not official, capacity; just as the vice president, on the death of the president, succeeds to the office for the remainder of the term. Such was the interpretation put upon that opinion by Justice Lord, who was one of his associates and who concurred in the opinion. After Justice Lord's retirement from the bench, he was selected as a commissioner to revise the Oregon laws, and produced the compilation which now bears his name.

His annotation to section 8 of article 5 of the constitution is as follows, citing Chadwick v. Earhart, supra:

"Under this provision when the governor resigns, the duties of the governor's office devolve upon the secretary of state, who continues to perform them for the remainder of the term."

If the language of the opinion were even obscure, which it is not, this interpretation by one of the learned justices who participated in its rendition ought to settle the question as to what the court meant to decide.

I do not consider the cases of State v. Johns, 3 Or. 533, State v. Ware, 13 Or. 380, 10 Pac. 885, and State v. Kellaher, in point in the present controversy. They were decided upon the theory that where a vacancy in an elective office is filled by appointment the people should have the right to elect a successor at the earliest opportunity. Such is not the case here. Mr. Olcott was not appointed to the office of governor. He succeeded to it by virtue of *491 his election to the office of secretary of state, just as the vice president of the United States, upon the death of the president, succeeds to that office. The people, when they elected him secretary of state, had notice, by the very terms of the constitution, that in case the governor should die he would succeed to the office of governor; they chose him with that contingency in view. In effect, in choosing a secretary of state, they chose a vice governor, the rules of whose succession to the office are in no wise different from those investing the vice president, except that while the governor lives the secretary performs the duties relating to the secretaryship, while the vice president, during the life of the president, performs the duties of president of the senate. In both instances the original source of their authority is an election by the people and not, as in the case of State v. Johns, an appointment by the executive.

For the reasons given by Justice JOHNS, as well as those urged herein, I am of the opinion that this court should declare the petitioner is governor in fact and not acting governor; that he is entitled to the salary of governor; that he holds the office for the remainder of the term of the late Governor Withycombe, and that he may resign the office of secretary of state and still hold the office of governor.

HARRIS, J. (concurring in part).

On April 1, 1919, a warrant was issued by the secretary of state in favor of "Ben W. Olcott, governor, for the sum of $336 in payment of the salary due said Ben W. Olcott, as governor, from March 7, to March 31, 1919." The state treasurer contends that the warrant "should be drawn to Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state, acting governor"; and since the warrant is not so drawn the state treasurer *492 refuses to pay it. From this brief statement it can be seen at a glance that the sole question for decision is whether the state treasurer is obliged to pay the warrant; and yet, while it is true that the only question for decision is whether the state treasurer must pay the warrant, it is also true that it may be necessary to decide certain preliminary questions before the ultimate question can be reached or decided, and therefore any opinion expressed about the preliminary questions or the ultimate question is not obiter dictum. As the writer views it, one of the preliminary questions is whether Ben W. Olcott was, from March 7th to March 31st, merely ex officio governor or governor in his natural capacity. The petitioner is probably entitled to the salary attaching to the office of governor for the period mentioned in the warrant, whether he was merely acting as governor by virtue of his office as secretary of state or whether he was governor in truth and in his natural capacity. I prefer, however, to decide the ultimate question for decision by deciding whether Ben W. Olcott was only secretary of state and merely performing the duties of the office of governor as ex officio governor or whether he was in truth governor, and thus place my conclusions upon stated, certain, and defined ground. Furthermore, since the state treasurer will be obliged to pay warrants each month so long as the petitioner is entitled to occupy the office of governor, I think that we can with propriety discuss and determine the question as to how long Ben W. Olcott is entitled to hold the office of governor, and thus decide the rights of the petitioner upon the one hand and the duties of the defendant upon the other.

The conclusion reached by this court in 1884 in Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Or. 389, 4 Pac. 1180, when *493 applied to the same facts confronting us now and here, indubitably decides that Ben W. Olcott is in truth governor. If article 5, § 8, of the state constitution, were now for the first time presented for judicial construction I would, for reasons which to me are not only persuasive but convincing, take the view that upon the removal, death, resignation, or inability of the governor to discharge the duties of the office, the **476 secretary of state becomes merely ex officio governor. In other words, it is my opinion that a correct construction of the constitution only empowered Chadwick to act as governor until he ceased to be secretary of state and then the duties of the office of governor devolved upon Earhart, the succeeding secretary of state, until Thayer qualified as governor; or, applying what I conceive to be the meaning of the constitution to the instant case, because and only because he is secretary of state, Ben W. Olcott would perform the duties of governor until his term as secretary of state expires on the first Monday in January, 1921, when his successor's term as secretary of state shall begin, and such successor would then discharge the duties of governor until the speaker of the house of representatives at the session to be held in 1921 publishes the vote for governor. Although I would entertain an opinion different from that expressed in Chadwick v. Earhart if the question of the construction of article 5, § 8, of the organic act were res integra, nevertheless whatever the views of any of us may be, candor compels each of us to admit that the question of the construction of this section of the constitution is not so plain and clear as to be entirely free from serious debate. The members of the legislative assembly of 1878 differed in their opinions as to whether Chadwick or Earhart was entitled to perform the duties of governor *494 during the two days which intervened between the expiration of Chadwick's term as secretary of state and the commencement of Thayer's term as governor; and in the subsequent litigation growing out of that situation lawyers and judges differed in their views as to whether the secretary of state became governor in his natural capacity upon the death or resignation of the governor. Stephen F. Chadwick was a member of the constitutional convention, and he asserted that he was entitled to hold the office of governor until the inauguration of Thayer, who had been elected at the June, 1878, election; but so far as the writer has been able to discover, every other member of the constitutional convention who has left any record of his view was of the opinion that Chadwick was only governor ex officio and that when Earhart became secretary of state he, and not Chadwick, was entitled to act as governor until the inauguration of Thayer. The house and senate journals of the session of 1878 contain some interesting information. Before noticing the legislative journals, however, we should first acquaint ourselves with all the facts entering into the controversy in Chadwick v. Earhart, because by so doing we can better understand the story told by the house and senate journals and better comprehend the full meaning of the decision rendered in that lawsuit.

Stephen F. Chadwick was elected secretary of state and L. F. Grover was chosen governor at the June, 1874, election. Each was elected for a term of four years. At that time the biennial sessions of the legislative assembly commenced on the second Monday of September in the even-numbered years, and this accounts for the fact that there was a regular session in 1874 and also in 1878, but commencing with 1885 the biennial sessions have begun on the second Monday *495 in January of the odd-numbered years. Article 4, § 10, State Constitution; section 2594, L. O. L. The constitution provides that the returns of every election for governor shall be sealed up and directed to the speaker of the house of representatives, who shall open and publish them in the presence of both houses of the legislative assembly. Article 5, § 4. In 1878, as now, the law provided that the term of office of the governor ceases when his successor, having been declared elected by the legislative assembly, as provided in the constitution, shall be inaugurated by taking the oath of office. Deady's Code, p. 711; section 3440, L. O. L. See, also, chapter 84, Laws 1913. In 1878, the statute provided that—

"The term of office of the secretary of state, state treasurer and state printer shall cease on the first day of the regular session of the legislative assembly next following the general election on which the terms of their successors shall begin." Deady's Code, p. 711; section 3441, L. O. L.

In 1908 the constitution was amended so as to read thus: "All officers except the governor, elected at any regular general biennial election after the adoption of this amendment, shall assume the duties of their respective offices on the first Monday in January following such election." Article 2, section 14. See Laws 1909, p. 8.

The legislative session which was held in 1878 commenced on Monday, the 9th day of September; R. P. Earhart was elected secretary of state at the June, 1878, election; Chadwick qualified as secretary of state in September, 1874, and by force of the statute then in existence his term as secretary of state ceased on September 9, 1878, and Earhart's term as secretary of state began simultaneously with the termination of *496 Chadwick's term as secretary of state. The legislative assembly of 1876 elected L. F. Grover United States senator; and on February 1, 1877, Grover resigned as governor so that he could assume the duties of United States senator. W. W. Thayer was elected governor at the June, 1878, election. The vote for governor was published by the speaker of the house on September 10th, and Thayer "took the oath of office" on September 11, 1878. Chadwick assumed and discharged the duties of governor from February 1, 1877, the date when Grover resigned, until September 11, 1878, the date when Thayer was installed in the office. Chadwick ceased to be secretary of state on September 9, 1878, the date when **477 he was succeeded by Earhart as secretary of state, and notwithstanding the fact that Earhart and not Chadwick was from that time on secretary of state the latter and not the former acted as governor.

The house and the senate each effected a permanent organization on September 9, 1878. On the following day D. P. Thompson of Multnomah county introduced House Joint Resolution No. 2, which reads as follows:

“Resolved, that a committee of three on the part of the house and two on the part of the senate be appointed to wait on his excellency, Governor R. P. Earhart, and inform him of the organization of the two houses, and that they are ready to receive any message he may be pleased to make.”

H. Green of Benton county immediately moved to amend the resolution “by striking out the word ‘Earhart’ and substituting therefor the word ‘Chadwick.’” The motion to amend prevailed, and then the resolution, as amended, was adopted by a vote of 34 for with 23 against it. Among those voting against the resolution as amended was W. A. Starkweather, who was a *497 member of the constitutional convention. When H. J. R. No. 2 was received by the senate that body adopted it. There was but one absentee, and all the members present voted for the resolution. It may be of interest to note in passing that the membership of the senate included at least seven lawyers. According to the journal of the house on September 11th:

“The convention was called to order by the president of the senate, who stated the object of the convention to be to hear the biennial message of the outgoing executive, Governor Chadwick, and also, the inaugural address of his excellency, W. W. Thayer, governor elect.”

Chadwick delivered a message to the joint convention and then Thayer “took the oath of office” and delivered his inaugural address.

We find from an examination of the records that Chadwick, who helped to frame the constitution asserted that he was governor; that Starkweather, by his vote as a member of the house of representatives, denied that Chadwick had authority to act as governor after his term of secretary of state had expired; and that R. P. Boise, who was also a member of the constitutional convention, as a circuit judge decided that Chadwick was not entitled to the salary of governor for any part of the period from February 1, 1877, to September 11, 1878. It is a very significant circumstance that Matthew P. Deady, who was the president of the constitutional convention and afterwards became a very eminent jurist, in his code of 1866 employs the following marginal heading for section 8 of article 5: “Acting governor in case of vacancy or disability.” We find members of the house of representatives, among whom were lawyers of recognized ability, expressing different views; but we also find a *498 majority of the members of the house affirmatively and squarely deciding that Chadwick was governor, and we likewise find all the members of the senate, except a single absentee, unequivocally treating Chadwick as governor, presumably with full knowledge of the controversy that had arisen in the house and of the decision reached by a majority of the members of the house concerning the official status of Chadwick. Although the decision of the legislature does not bind the court when called upon to construe the constitution, nevertheless the views of the members of the legislature, solemnly expressed at a time when the constitution was only 19 years old, are not entirely without significance and may afford some aid. We find, however, that when the controversy was finally submitted to an appellate court the question was judicially settled by the unanimous voice of that court.

A judicial decision which is clearly and manifestly erroneous, and because erroneous produces injustice and hardship, should, like the errors of any other tribunal, officer, or person, be corrected and righted at the earliest opportunity, for the doctrine of stare decisis was never intended to apply to such a situation; but when a court is confronted, as we are now, with a controversy involving the construction of a section of the constitution, and the official records of the state disclose the fact that different persons, bearing the responsibilities of public office, have in the discharge of their duties expressed variant opinions, and it appears that a legislative assembly, removed only 19 years from the date of the adoption of the constitution, has by unmistakable action decided that the resignation of the elected governor devolves the office of governor upon and transfers it to the secretary of state, and it is shown that an appellate court has by *499 a unanimous voice adjudged that the death of the elected governor devolves the office of governor upon and transfers it to the person who is secretary of state, the rule of stare decisis becomes peculiarly and pre-eminently applicable, because it accomplishes what it was designed to accomplish, by giving to the law, as construed by the courts, the qualities of certainty, definiteness, and stability. The decision rendered by the court in Chadwick v. Earhart ought to be binding upon us to the extent that it was necessary for the court to construe article 5, § 8, in order to decide the issues presented in that litigation. Turning now to the pleadings in Chadwick v. Earhart we find that Chadwick demanded of Earhart as secretary of state a warrant for $2,420.75 to cover the salary of governor for the period, commencing February 1, 1877, and ending September 11, 1878. Earhart refused to issue the warrant. Chadwick brought a proceeding for the purpose of compelling the issuance of the warrant. The stipulation upon which the case was tried contained the following recital:

**478 "Mr. Earhart objects to the salary being paid from the 9th day of September, 1878, to the 11th day of September, 1878—two days—on the ground that Mr. Chadwick was not secretary of state after Mr. Earhart was sworn in on the 9th day of September, 1878, though Mr. Chadwick acted as governor or until and including the 11th of September, 1878."

Thus it will be seen that the question of salary covered two periods: (1) From February 1, 1877, to September 9, 1878, or the period during which Chadwick was secretary of state, and (2) from September 9, 1878, to September 11, 1878, or the period during which Chadwick was not secretary of state. The court decided that Chadwick was entitled to the salary *500 of governor for both periods, and hence in order to reach that decision it became necessary to construe article 5, § 8, and to determine whether Chadwick was simply ex officio governor while secretary of state or whether the office devolved upon him in his natural capacity thus making him governor in truth; and since the court determined that the office of governor devolved upon Chadwick in his natural capacity, making him governor in truth, that decision ought to be accepted as final, and ought to govern now just as it governed then.

However, as I read it, the written opinion rendered in Chadwick v. Earhart does not decide that the people cannot elect a governor at the general election to be held in 1920, or that the person so elected cannot qualify and assume the office of governor when the speaker of the house publishes the vote in January, 1921, after the legislature convenes. Ben W. Olcott was elected secretary of state at the November, 1916, election and his term as such will expire on the first Monday in January, 1921. His successor will be elected at the November, 1920, election and such successor will assume the duties of secretary of state on the first Monday in January, 1921. James Withycombe was elected governor at the November,

1918, election and he qualified on January 14, 1919, after the speaker of the house of representatives published the vote cast for governor. James Withycombe was elected for a term of four years ending in January, 1923, but he died on March 3, 1919, and hence two regular elections will be held between the date of his death and the end of the four-year period for which he was elected. In this respect the facts in Olcott v. Hoff are essentially different from the facts in Chadwick v. Earhart; for in the latter case Grover resigned *501 on February 1, 1877, and a governor was elected at the very first opportunity which was in June, 1878, and the elected governor assumed the duties of the office at the very first opportunity, which did not occur until the speaker of the house published the vote cast for governor. When in Chadwick v. Earhart the court speaks of "the remainder of the term of the outgoing governor," reference is made to the "remainder" left after February 1, 1877, for the court was dealing with that and no other "remainder." The court was not called upon to decide, nor did it attempt to decide, whether Chadwick could have occupied the office of governor from February 1, 1875, if Grover had resigned on that date, and held it through two elections, one in 1876 and the other in 1878. As I read the opinion in Chadwick v. Earhart, no expressions appearing there or rule applied there can be found sustaining the view that the people cannot elect a governor at the next election to be held in November, 1920. When James Withycombe died, the constitution appointed Ben W. Olcott, because he was secretary of state, governor "until * * * a governor be elected," so that the office will not be without an occupant "until * * * a governor be elected." If we apply to the facts presented to us the same rules that were applied in State ex rel. v. Johns, 3 Or. 533, the conclusion is unavoidable that the legal voters can, at the election to be held in November, 1920, elect a governor who can assume the office in 1921 when the speaker of the house publishes the vote cast for governor. Be it remembered, too, that it was R. P. Boise, a member of the constitutional convention, who as circuit judge decided State ex rel. v. Johns in the circuit court, and that his reasoning was repeated with approval and that his conclusion was affirmed when the supreme court decided *502 the same case on appeal; and, moreover, one of the judges participating in the decision announced by the supreme court was P. P. Prim, also a member of the constitutional convention. The doctrines which were announced and applied in State ex rel. v. Johns were again recognized in State ex rel. v. Ware, 13 Or. 380, 10 Pac. 885, and at a more recent date followed by a majority of the court, as now constituted, in State v. Kellaher, 177 Pac. 944. The same rule was followed and put into practice when Ben W. Olcott was elected secretary of state at the 1912 election to succeed Frank W. Benson, who had died in April, 1911, after having been elected in 1910 for the full term of four years. Suppose that Frank W. Benson had not died in April, 1911, but that he had lived and filled out his term, and that Ben W. Olcott had been elected secretary of state in 1914 and re-elected in 1918 contemporaneously with the re-election of James Withycombe as governor, and suppose that Ben W. Olcott should to-day resign both the office of secretary of state and governor; would any one be so bold as to contend that the president of the senate would be entitled to act as secretary of state and also as governor, or that he could act as either until 1923? The framers of the constitution deliberately provided for the two offices of governor and secretary of state, and they intended that those offices should be occupied by different persons so long as possible; but, anticipating **479 the possibility of death, resignation, or removal, they provided for those contingencies by declaring that the secretary of state shall be automatically appointed governor "until * * * a governor be elected." This automatic appointment is temporary and ends just as soon as the people can elect a governor at the next biennial election. When the writers of the constitution *503 made the governor, secretary of state, and state treasurer a board of commissioners for the sale of school and university lands and for the investment of funds arising therefrom, they did so for the manifest purpose of bringing to the business the judgment, wisdom, and experience of three men; and every one of the various subsequent acts of the legislature making these officers the constituent members of boards was framed for the same purpose. The makers of the constitution did not intend that one person could occupy more than one of these offices any longer than was necessary.

In article 2, § 10, we read that no person shall "hold more than one lucrative office at the same time, except as in this constitution expressly permitted." There is no provision in the constitution expressly or by manifest implication declaring that the secretary of state shall hold the office of governor through two biennial elections; but, upon the contrary, the whole plan and purpose of the constitution negatives the idea that the secretary of state can hold any longer than is necessary. The constitution provides for the two offices of governor and secretary of state because the framers of the organic act deemed two offices necessary; one person is prohibited from holding two lucrative offices except as in the constitution expressly provided, because the framers of the organic act deemed it desirable that one person hold only one lucrative office. The rule established by the constitution is that one person can hold but one office; for one person to hold two offices is the exception. The framers of the constitution anticipated the contingencies of death, resignation, or removal by providing for the exception. The important business of the management of school and university lands and funds was *504 placed in the hands of three and not two persons. A board of three persons is the rule; a board of two persons is the exception. The office of governor as well as that of secretary of state is elective. An election is the rule; an appointment is the exception. Finding as we do that two offices with two persons as the officers is the rule, while two offices with one person acting as the two officers is the exception, that an election is the rule and an appointment is the exception, that a board of three commissioners for the management of the school and university lands and funds is the rule, while a board with two commissioners is the exception, we would also expect to find provisions terminating the exceptions whenever they occur, and re-establishing the rule at the very earliest opportunity. The rule was provided for because it was deemed to be the best; the exception was provided for because it was deemed to be the next best; and naturally the theory of the constitution is that the best shall be had as long as possible, while the next best shall be had only so long as necessary. As shown by the stipulation filed in Chadwick v. Earhart the "remainder" discussed and referred to in that case only covered the short period which intervened between the end of Chadwick's term as secretary of state and the commencement of Thayer's term as governor. That case, as well as every case, must be read in the light of the facts presented to the court. The conclusion that the office of governor can be filled by the people at the next election harmonizes every part of the constitution with every other part, gives full meaning to every word and every section, and as said in State ex rel. v. Johns "is in perfect accord with the spirit of our constitution and laws."

*505 There is no analogy whatever between the offices of president and vice president of the United States on the one hand and those of governor and secretary of state in the other. By the express language of the constitution of the United States the president "shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the vice president, chosen for the same term, be elected as follows." Our constitution does not tie the office of governor to that of the secretary of state; nor does it tie the latter to the former. The governor is elected "at the times and places of choosing members of the legislative assembly." Article 5, § 4. Members of the legislature are elected at the general elections which are held biennially. In brief, I take the view that Ben W. Olcott is governor in truth as distinguished from governor ex officio; that he is entitled to hold the office of governor and is entitled to the salary of that office until his successor is elected and qualified; and that the legal voters are entitled to elect a governor at the next election to be held in November, 1920, and that the person so elected is entitled to assume the duties of the office when the vote is published by the speaker of the house of representatives in January, 1921. I think, too, that the logic of the holding in Chadwick v. Earhart inevitably leads to the conclusion that the petitioner can resign as secretary of state and continue to occupy the office of governor.

BENSON, J., concurs.

BENNETT, J. (specially concurring).

In this case it appears from the pleading that the petitioner, who was secretary of state at the time of the death of Governor Withycombe, and who has assumed the office *506 of **480 governor, drew his warrant on the state treasurer for $336, being the salary as governor from the death of Governor Withycombe to the 1st of April. This warrant was drawn "in payment of the salary due said Ben W. Olcott, as governor." The defendant, the state treasurer, refused to honor this warrant upon the ground that it should have been drawn to "Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state, acting governor."

It seems the legal controversy between the parties is over a mere matter of words; the one claiming the warrant should be drawn for his salary "as governor," and the other that the warrant should have been drawn in his favor as "acting governor."

I do not think there is any question but what the warrant was sufficient, and therefore, in any view, should have been honored, and that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief prayed for. I therefore concur in the result of the opinion of Mr. Justice JOHNS.

The real purpose of the proceeding was, no doubt, to test questions which, as I view them, go far beyond the real question involved in the case. However important the public questions involved may be, I do not think we have any authority to go beyond the case presented to us. If we did and should decide questions not presented, our decision would be mere dictum, and not binding upon our successors, or even upon us individually, if we should change our individual opinion at some future date.

No doubt the power should be vested in the courts to pass upon moot questions of great public interest like this in an authoritative way, but so far the legislature does not seem to have conferred that power. I therefore reserve my opinion as to the question of whether or not the petitioner will continue to hold the *507 office of governor personally after he ceases to be secretary of state, and as to the kindred questions urged.

In view of the opinions written by the Chief Justice and some of the other justices, I deem it necessary to add something to the above brief expression of my views.

I do not view the authorities cited by Mr. Chief Justice McBride, in relation to our authority or lack of authority to pass upon questions in no way involved in the case before us as at all in point, or as giving us the slightest authority to go beyond the issues presented in this case.

In all of these cases the questions decided by the court were squarely within the issues made by the pleadings, and the decision was entirely pertinent and responsive to the actual case in litigation. In some of them the decision of the court could still be made partly or wholly effective. In others, by reason of the lapse of time or the happening of some event between the decision of the lower court and that of the appellate tribunal, the decree in the particular case could no longer be enforced, but the issues between the parties, which were living issues at the time of the commencement of the action, still remained. In such a case it is well settled that the appellate court may retain and decide the case, or it may, at its option, refuse to proceed further and dismiss the appeal.

The leading case cited—Giles v. Harris, 189 U. S. 475, 23 Sup. Ct. 639, 47 L. Ed. 909—belongs to the former class of cases, and the questions decided were not only clearly within the issues made by the pleadings, but were still practical living issues in the case at the time of the ultimate decision.

That case was a suit brought by a colored man in the state of Alabama on behalf of himself and 5,000 *508 other colored voters against the board of registrars of Montgomery county, to secure the right of permanent registration and also the registration for the coming election in November. Before the hearing was reached in the United States supreme court that election had passed, but there still remained in the case the question of permanent registration. It was in such a case that the language, quoted with so much apparent assurance that it is an authority in this case, was used. The court said:

"To be enabled to cast a vote in that election is not * * * the whole object of the bill. It is not even the principal object of the relief sought by the plaintiff. The principal object * * * is to obtain the permanent advantages of registration."

The court denied the relief upon two grounds. Having considered the case and found against the plaintiff upon one ground, it also proceeded to consider the second ground and decide against him as to that also, and it was in this connection that the court used the language, which is referred to in the second quotation:

“We are unwilling to stop short of the final considerations which seem to us to dispose of the case.”

Here then, was simply the common occurrence of there being two grounds upon which a case could be decided; both of them squarely within the issues of the case and the court deciding them both. In such a case, I think it is well settled that the court may dispose of the case upon one ground alone, or may properly pass upon both questions involved.

I cannot see how such a case furnishes an iota of authority for us to go entirely outside of every issue in this case and decide questions that are not in the case at all.

*509 It is a significant fact in the Giles Case supra, that one of the questions urged was that the new constitution of Alabama was in conflict with the federal constitution, and therefore void. No question, it would seem, could exceed such a question in public importance, yet the court refused to pass upon it, saying:

**481 Another significant thing is that the court cites with approval the previous case of Mills v. Green, 159 U. S. 651, 16 Sup. Ct. 132, 40 L. Ed. 293, in which the same court had used the following language:

“The duty of this court, as of every other judicial tribunal, is to decide actual controversies by a judgment which can be carried into effect, and not to give opinions upon moot questions or abstract propositions, or to declare principles or rules of law which cannot affect the matter in issue in the case before it.”

The case of Memphis v. Rapid Transit Co., cited from 133 Tenn. 99, 179 S. W. 635, L. R. A. 1916B, 1143, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 1045, was a suit by a street car company against a jitney company for operating jitneys in competition; the plaintiff relying upon an act of the legislature. The defendant demurred to the complaint, relying upon two grounds, one of which was that the act was unconstitutional. At the hearing it was claimed the case could be decided upon other grounds than the constitutional question, and that therefore (under the practice in that state) the cause should have been appealed to a different court. The court held the constitutional question squarely in the case, and therefore proceeded to decide the same. It was under these conditions and in regard to such a case, that the court used the language quoted.

*510 The case of Boise City Land Co. v. Clark, cited from 131 Fed. 415, 65 C. C. A. 399, was a case brought by a water company in Idaho against the county commissioners to annul an order fixing the rate it could charge in the year 1901 for water from its canals. The case was tried in the United States circuit court and appealed to the court of appeals. Before it could be reached for hearing in the latter court, the period for which the rates were fixed for that season had expired. Nevertheless the court proceeded to decide the case, which involved no question of general public importance, but the questions decided were all squarely within the issues and necessary to a decision.

It is one thing to decide the issues actually presented in a case, even although something has happened pending the appeal, making the judgment ineffective, and an entirely different matter to go clear outside of the issues, as we are asked to do.

In many cases, as in the fixing of rates for a particular year, or the right to vote at a particular election, it is impossible to reach a decision in the appellate courts before the party's right in the particular instance has expired, and he could never have the question or his rights decided if his cause should be dismissed upon that ground. In such cases the courts have always, and I think properly, exercised their discretion to dismiss the cause, or to hear and decide it, as seemed just under the particular circumstances.

The other cases of State v. Stutsman, 24 N. D. 68, 139 N. W. 83, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 776; State v. Tel. Co., 65 Fla. 67, 61 South. 119; Comm. v. Klaus, 145 App. Div. 798, 130 N. Y. Supp. 713; In re Fairchild, 151 N. Y. 361, 45 N. E. 943; People v. General Committee, 25 App. Div. 339, 49 N. Y. Supp. 723, and In re Morgan, 114 App. Div. 45, 99 N. Y. Supp. 775, *511 cited in Chief Justice McBride's opinion, are all exactly similar, in principle and in questions involved, to the case of Boise City v. Clark, supra, and are no more in point. It will be noticed that in every one of them there was a real lawsuit between real adversary parties. In no one of them did the court go outside of the issues made by the pleadings.

There is no case cited, and I do not think any one can be found, in which the court has deliberately and intentionally gone clear outside of the issues (as we are asked to do) and decided questions which were not and never had been in the case.

If we do this we are not following any beaten path; we have no precedents; we are cutting the fences that have marked the boundaries of proper judicial authority ever since we have had English-speaking courts. The common law never gave us any such authority. Neither did the state constitution, nor has the legislature. Our only pretence of authority will be the invitation of public officers, who have no more statutory right to invite us to make the decision than we have to accept the invitation.

I do not wish to quibble or to shirk my share of responsibility in deciding any question that is properly before the court. Neither am I willing to be stampeded into a decision I have no right to make, nor to rush headlong to the exercise of powers I do not possess, in order that I may have the satisfaction or the notoriety of helping to decide some important question.

This is not a case where the questions presented have become merely academic, after the case was commenced, by reason of the lapse of time. Here the question as to who will be governor if the secretary of state resigns, or if another governor should be *512 elected at the election in 1920, never was in the case, and could not be, for no such state of facts yet exists. The question may never arise. Mr. Olcott may never resign as secretary of state. He may run for governor himself at the next election.

To accept and amplify Mr. Chief Justice McBRIDE'S homely illustration, this is not a case where any one has suggested to "cut the dog's tail off by inches." It is a case where, because one dog has a broken tail which needs amputation, we are asked to drag in the other dogs in the community and mutilate them, because their tails might possibly be broken at some time in the future.

If another secretary of state, elected at the next election, shall claim the office of **482 governor, he will have a right to be heard. There will then be an actual controversy, and I think he ought not to be foreclosed, by any premature decision we may now make, in a "mock trial" on a "moot" question in an arranged and fictitious lawsuit.

As a citizen, I have a more or less well-defined opinion as to all the questions suggested here, formed partly from my own impressions and partly from the briefs of the attorney general, and those of public spirited citizens, who, at the invitation of the court, have taken enough time from their private business to file more or less careful briefs in the case. If I should don my official robe and attempt to give my half-baked street opinions judicial utterance, I would agree with Mr. Chief Justice McBRIDE as to the result, but not as to the reasoning or analogies by which he has reached that result. On the other hand, I should agree with Mr. Justice HARRIS as to his reasoning, up to a certain point, but not as to the result reached by him. But if I should attempt to do so, some other *513 judge succeeding me might properly refuse to give my opinion any binding force. He might well conclude that it takes more than a judge and a gown to make a judicial decision.

I shall content myself, therefore, with the expression of an opinion on the questions really in issue, and upon which, as I understand, we are all agreed.

BURNETT, J. (concurring in part).

In this case an alternative writ of mandamus was issued out of this court, directed to the defendant, from which, barring a clerical omission, we learn in substance that James Withycombe, the duly elected and inaugurated governor of the state, died March 3, 1919, at which time the petitioner, Ben W. Olcott was the duly elected, qualified, and acting secretary of state and has since then continued to hold the latter office. It is further recited that on April 1, 1919, the secretary of state issued a warrant in favor of Ben W. Olcott for $336, in payment of the salary due him for service as governor of the state from March 7 to March 31, inclusive, 1919, which warrant the petitioner herein has presented to the defendant as state treasurer and the latter fails and refuses to pay the same, although there is money in his hands applicable to the payment of the salary of the governor. By the writ, the defendant was required to show cause why he had not paid the warrant. On the return day the defendant demurred, not to the petition for the writ, but as the statute requires (L. O. L. § 618), to the writ itself, on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the defendant.

The sole question presented is whether the defendant is right in refusing to pay the warrant in question. We have nothing to do with the petition. It has performed *514 its office in securing the issuance of the writ, for, as shown in sections 618, 619, and 620, L. O. L., the pleadings in a proceeding by mandamus are the alternative writ, the demurrer or answer to the same, and the demurrer or reply to the answer, and none others are allowed. They are to "have the same effect and to be construed and may be amended in the same manner as pleadings in an action."

Admitted, as it is, that the regularly elected governor died during his incumbency in office and that the petitioner here was at the time the duly elected, qualified, and acting secretary of state, we are not at present concerned about whether he is performing the duties of the office of governor as de facto or de jure governor, or merely by virtue of the authority vested in him as secretary of state, or, in other words, as an alternate upon whom the constitution imposes the functions of governor in case of the death of the latter officer. So far as public interests are concerned or the rights of the people are involved, it matters not in which of the two suggested capacities the duties and the authorities of the executive office are exercised, so they are performed. It is said in the writ:

“That under and by virtue of section 8, art. 5, of the constitution of Oregon, the office of governor and the duties thereof devolved upon the secretary of state, and that on the 7th day of March, 1919, petitioner, Ben W. Olcott, took the oath of office, and that since that time he has been and now is the governor of the state of Oregon.”

This states but a mere conclusion of law and presents no issuable fact. Neither is it directly averred that the petitioner has performed any of the duties or exercised any of the powers of governor. It is presumed, however, that official duty has been regularly *515 performed, whether it be that of the secretary of state or that of a successor to a deceased governor. Indeed, it may well be doubted whether an auditing officer can assume to pass upon the amount or quality of service of any individual upon whom official duties have been cast by operation of law.

Coming to the precise question of whether the petitioner is entitled to the salary which otherwise would have been paid to the elected governor had he survived, the rule is well stated in Preston v. United States (D. C.) 37 Fed. 417, 418, thus:

“If there be no incompatibility between the respective duties of the two offices or employments, and the functions of each are separate and distinct, he is entitled to recover two compensations.”

Section 8, art. 5, of the constitution, reads thus:

**483 “In case of the removal of the governor from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the duties of the office, the same shall devolve on the secretary of state; and in case of the removal from office, death, resignation, or inability, both of the governor and secretary of state, the president of the senate shall act as governor, until the disability be removed, or a governor be elected.”

Whatever view may be taken of this clause of the fundamental law, as to the capacity in which the petitioner shall administer the duties of the chief executive, it is plain that by force of the constitution itself the duties of the two offices are not incompatible with each other, however separate and distinct they may be. In other words, the constitution itself casts the performance of the duties of both offices upon the same individual under certain circumstances, with the result that they are constitutionally compatible with each other. Under such circumstances, the extra duty having *516 been performed, as we must presume it has been, the petitioner is entitled to the compensation which the law provides for such service. As stated by Mr. Chief Justice Bigelow in State ex rel. v. La Grave, 23 Nev. 216, 45 Pac. 243, 35 L. R. A. 233:

“Another reason that may be offered for this conclusion is that it is a general principle of justice and right that, when one legally performs the duties of an office, he should be entitled to the emoluments thereof.”

In United States v. Saunders, 120 U. S. 126, 7 Sup. Ct. 467, 30 L. Ed. 594, the claimant drew a salary as clerk of a committee of congress and likewise as clerk in the president's office. The duties of the two were held not to be incompatible, and hence his claim was allowed for both salaries. In State v. Roddle, 12 S. D. 433, 81 N. W. 980, the defendant was a secretary of state and likewise was made by a statute a member of the state committee on brands and marks, carrying with it an additional compensation, and it was held that he was entitled to both emoluments. Similarly, in State ex rel. v. Walker, 97 Mo. 962, the individual who held the office of secretary of state and was also a member of the board of equalization was allowed pay for both positions. In Scranton School District v. Simpson, 133 Pa. 202, 19 Atl. 359, and in McCauley v. School District, 133 Pa. 493, 19 Atl. 410, the occupant of the office of city treasurer, who was ex officio treasurer of the school district, was allowed the statutory compensation for both positions. The same doctrine is taught in United States v. Macdaniel, 7 Pet. 1, 8 L. Ed. 587; United States v. Ripley, 7 Pet. 18, 8 L. Ed.

593; United States v. Fillebrown, 7 Pet. 28, 8 L. Ed. 596; and in Milnor v. Metz, 16 Pet. 221, 10 L. Ed. 943. In *517 Löve v. Baehr, 47 Cal. 364, the attorney general, to whom was allowed by law a statutory salary, was also made a member of the board of examiners, carrying with it a special additional compensation, and he was sustained in his claim for both emoluments. In re Conrad (C. C.) 15 Fed. 641, is a case where the same individual was claiming fees as chief supervisor and as a United States commissioner, and his claim was sustained; and in Smith v. Waterbury, 54 Conn. 174, 7 Atl. 17, the city attorney had a salary allowed to him by law and a statute allowing him certain fees for special services was sustained. In other words, the common sense principle is that he who performs services enjoined upon him by law is entitled to the compensation provided by the same law of those particular services, in the absence of anything restricting the emolument to a single office.

It is true that section 10 of article 2 of the organic law declares that:

“No person holding a lucrative office or appointment under the United States or under this state shall be eligible to a seat in the legislative assembly; nor shall any person hold more than one lucrative office at the same time, except as in this constitution expressly permitted.”

This must be read in connection with section 8 of article 5, already quoted. If the latter section be construed to invest the petitioner with the office of governor both de facto and de jure, it would constitute an exception within the meaning of section 10 of article 2. On the other hand, if it be held that he is merely exercising functions of the office of secretary of state visited upon him on account of the death of the elected governor, he would not be holding more *518 than one lucrative office within the meaning of the latter section.

This disposes of the question presented by the pleadings for our consideration. All else respecting the length of time the petitioner shall perform the duties of governor, or whether he has authority to resign the office of governor or resign the office of secretary of state and continue to hold as governor, or whether he can obstruct the order of succession provided by section 8 of article 5 by appointing a secretary of state to succeed himself, is not presented by the instant record, and any attempt to dispose of these matters in this proceeding would be gratuitous dictum. The only excuse for discussing those questions is found not in any allegation even of the petition itself, and much less in the writ which is the primary pleading, but only in the last clause of the prayer of the petition, as follows:

“And this petitioner particularly prays that this court will define his duties and powers in relation to the office of governor.”

Nowhere in the record does the petitioner intimate any desire for advice or decision **484 about his right to resign any office, or concerning the length of time he will be required or permitted to exercise its functions. As already pointed out, the petition is no part of the pleadings. McLeod v. Scott, 21 Or. 111, 26 Pac. 1061, 29 Pac. 1; Elliott v. Oliver, 22 Or. 44, 29 Pac. 1; Shively v. Pennoyer, 27 Or. 33, 39 Pac. 396. The clause of its prayer, if indeed we may consider it at all, amounts simply to a request for the court to give counsel to the petitioner on a question not presented by the record. It does not call for any decision. It is said in section 957, L. O. L.:

*519 “Any judicial officer may act as an attorney in any action, suit, or proceeding to which he is a party or in which he is directly interested. A judge of the county court or justice of the peace, otherwise authorized by law, may act as an attorney in any court other than the one of which he is judge, except in an action, suit, or proceeding removed therefrom to another court for review; but no judicial officer shall act as attorney in any court, or otherwise other than as in this section allowed. * * *”

In effect, at least, if we undertook to advise the petitioner concerning “his duties and powers in relation to the office of governor” we would violate this provision of the statute. Moreover, as declared in chapter 196, Laws 1915, it is the function of the attorney general, when requested to do so by any state official, to give his opinion in writing upon any question submitted to him in which the state of Oregon may have an interest, and he shall, when requested, give legal advice to any of said officials, boards, or commissions. For this court or its members to give such counsel as the petitioner in his prayer requests would be to usurp the functions of the attorney general in contravention of section 1 of article 3 of the constitution, dividing the powers of government into three separate departments, the legislative, the executive, including the administrative, and the judicial, and forbidding any person charged with official duties under one of these departments to exercise any of the functions of another. All we are called upon by the record before us to decide is the issue of law presented by the demurrer to the writ. All beyond that would be unwarranted and would not bind any one. We could not compel the petitioner to resign either the office of secretary of state or of governor, nor could we restrain him on the record from doing either of those acts, any *520 more than we could direct him in the care of his children or the investment of his money. It would present a situation thus described in 3 Words & Phrases, 2052:

“The mere dictum of a judge is not the decision of a court. There is nothing authoritative in a case except what is required to be decided to reach the final judgment, and what, by the judgment, becomes res adjudicata between the parties as to the subject-matter of the suit. Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 294, 21 Am. Rep. 192. ‘An obiter dictum is a gratuitous opinion, an individual impertinence, which, whether it be wise or foolish, right or wrong, bindeth none, not even the lips that utter it. Old Judge’—taken

For these reasons I concur in the direction that a peremptory writ issue commanding the state treasurer to pay to the petitioner the amount of the warrant in question; but I object to the gratuitous statement in the opinion of Mr. Justice JOHNS about the length of time the petitioner may discharge the duties of the chief executive of the state, as not within the issue presented by the record and not even requested by either party.

LA PRADE, Justice.

This is an action in quo warranto brought by the attorney general in the name of the state, upon his relation, against the Honorable Dan E. Garvey, who is now and at all times since the first Monday of January, 1947, has been the duly elected, qualified, and acting secretary of state. The complaint alleges that the Honorable Sidney P. Osborn, the duly elected and acting governor of Arizona, died on the 28th day of May, 1948. The relator then alleges that, upon the death of Governor Osborn, the respondent, as secretary of state, purportedly under and by virtue of article 5, section 6 of the constitution of the state of Arizona, unlawfully assumed the office of governor of the state of Arizona and has since unlawfully held and exercised the same. The relator further alleges that under and by virtue of said section of the constitution Dan E. Garvey did not in law or in fact become governor of Arizona upon the death of Governor Osborn, but by virtue of the section the powers and duties of the office of governor merely devolved upon Mr. Garvey as said secretary of state.

Respondent by his answer denies that he unlawfully assumed the office of governor of the state of Arizona and unlawfully holds and exercises the rights and duties of that office. He contends the facts to be that upon the death of Governor Osborn he by virtue of the constitutional provision above referred to succeeded to the duties, powers, emoluments, and rights of the office of governor, and lawfully holds such office by virtue of the constitutional provision. *306 He further maintains that he was required to and did assume the duties, powers, and privileges of the office of governor for the remainder of Governor Osborn's term, and that the office became vested in him so that he is governor de jure and de facto.

<sup>141</sup> The public business and tranquility demand a prompt judicial inquiry and final determination of the actions of the respondent **154 in admittedly holding and exercising the office of governor. It is for this reason that we have exercised our original jurisdiction in the premises, as we did in Sullivan v. Moore, 49 Ariz. 51, 64 P.2d 809 and State v. Sullivan, 66 Ariz. 348, 188 P.2d 592, and have promptly determined the issues. Two questions are presented for determination: first, upon the death of Governor Osborn did the respondent become vested with the office of governor for the remainder of the term? second, if he did not become vested with the office of Governor, is he entitled to the emoluments of the office by virtue of the fact that he must perform the duties thereof?

The first question can be answered only by reference to the pertinent constitutional and statutory provisions. Article 5, section 6, of the Arizona constitution provides:

'[Succession to governorship].—In case of the impeachment of the governor, or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the duties of his office, resignation, or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the secretary of state until the disability ceases, or during the remainder of the term.' (Emphasis supplied.)

The following section of the code, relating to the duties of secretary of state and his assistant, we consider to be pertinent and highly illuminating and informative in our search for a correct determination on the questions involved:

'Assistant secretary.—The secretary shall appoint an assistant secretary of state, who, in the absence of the secretary of state, or when the secretary of state is acting governor, shall perform the duties of the secretary.' (Emphasis supplied.) Section 4-204, A.C.A.1939.

The questions presented, though a matter of first impression in this state, are not novel. The question of the effect of the succession of an inferior officer to the duties and powers of the office of governor has been exhaustively treated by courts of last resort in many states. The prevailing view is that in such a case the inferior officer does not vacate his office and become governor de jure and de facto, but that the duties and powers of governor merely devolve on him and he retains his former office and becomes, practically speaking, ex officio governor. 24 Am.Jur., Governor, section 10. Under this view it is held that where the duties of the office of governor devolve on the president of the senate, he does not become governor, or cease to be a senator and president of the senate, and that on his resignation as *307 senator he ceases to be entitled to act as governor. Clifford v. Heller, 63 N.J.L. 105, 42 A. 155, 57 L.R.A. 312. For convenience following each citation will appear the constitutional provision of the state whose decision is referred to.

'In case of the death, resignation, or removal from office of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate.' New Jersey, article 5, par. 12, N.J.S.A.

And where such duties devolve on the lieutenant governor, an election of a lieutenant governor to fill the supposed vacancy is unauthorized. State v. Sadler, 23 Nev. 356, 47 P. 450; State v. McBride, 29 Wash. 335, 70 P. 25.

'In case of the impeachment of the governor, or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the duties of the said office, resignation or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease.' Nevada, article 5, section 18.

'In case of the removal, resignation, death, or disability of the governor, the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor.' Washington, article 3, section 10.

Nor can the lieutenant governor in such an event appoint a successor to himself as lieutenant governor. People v. Budd, 114 Cal. 168, 45 P. 1060, 35 L.R.A. 46.

'In case of the impeachment of the Governor, or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the powers and duties of his office, resignation, or absence from the State, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term, or **155 until the disability shall cease.' California, article 5, section 16.

Likewise under this rule where a vacancy in the office of governor occurs, and the president pro tempore of the senate acts under a provision that he 'shall be lieutenant governor' in such a case, he does not cease to be a senator, but retains his right to vote in that body. State v. Stearns, 72 Minn. 200, 75 N.W. 210.

'The lieutenant governor shall be ex officio president of the Senate; and in case a vacancy should occur, from any cause whatever, in the office of governor, he shall be governor during such vacancy.' Minnesota, article 5, section 6, M.S.A.

And on the election of another as president pro tempore his right to act as lieutenant governor ceases. People v. Cornforth, 34 Colo. 107, 81 P. 871.

'In case of the death, impeachment, or conviction of felony or infamous misdemeanor, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the state or other disability of the governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office, for the residue of the term, or until the disability be removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor.' Colorado, article 4, section 13.

*308 And it has been held that where the powers, duties, and emoluments devolve on the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term there was no vacancy in either the office of governor or lieutenant governor that could be filled at a general election which intervened before the expiration of the term. State v. Mitchell, 97 Mont. 252, 34 P.2d 369.

'In case of the failure to qualify, the impeachment or conviction of felony or infamous crime of the governor, or his death, removal from office, resignation, absence from the state, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office, for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease, shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor.' Montana, section 14, article 7.

[2] A vacancy in the office of governor does not arise by the impeachment of the incumbent, his removal from office, or death in the sense that there is no one left with power to discharge the duties imposed upon the governor. State v. McBride, supra; State v. Mitchell, supra. In State ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, 1938, 228 Wis. 645, 280 N.W. 393, 399, it is said:

'When a vacancy, either permanent or temporary, occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of that office devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term or until the governor, absent or impeached, shall have returned or the disability shall cease. It is clear that the lieutenant governor does not become governor. He remains lieutenant governor, upon whom devolves the powers and duties of governor. In such a contingency no vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor. * * *.'

To the same effect see Futrell v. Oldham, 107 Ark. 386, 155 S.W. 502, Ann.Cas.1915A, 571. The Arkansas constitutional provision reads as follows:

'In case of the death conviction or impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the State or other disability of the Governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office for the remainder of the term, or until the disability be removed, or a Governor elected and qualified, shall devolve upon and accrue to the President of the Sentate.' Section 12, article 6.

The same situation exists where the governor is absent from the state or physically unable to discharge the duties of his office. The framers of our constitution never intended that there should be any interim in which the affairs of state were not executed for they said in explicit language that upon the happening of any of the contingencies mentioned in section 6, article 5, supra, the powers and duties of the office of governor were to be immediately transferred to the secretary of state who was then given a mandate to discharge the duties of the office for the residue of the term for which the governor was elected. He, as secretary of state, acts *309 as governor and is empowered to perform all the duties of that office, and his official **156 acts performed as acting governor are valid. McCluskey v. Hunter, 33 Ariz. 513, 266 P. 18.

While a legislative interpretation is not binding upon us, it is nevertheless entitled to respectful consideration. We find that as long as 1922 the legislature, in enacting section 4-204, supra, was aware of the contingencies contained in the constitutional provision under consideration, and considered that there would be occasions when the secretary of state was 'acting governor.' The code section specifically provides that when the secretary of state is 'acting governor' the assistant secretary of state shall perform the duties of the secretary.

We have observed that the prevailing view is that an inferior officer does not vacate his office and become governor de jure and de facto where the several constitutions provide merely that the duties and powers of the office devolve upon him. See Annotation, Ann.Cas.1915A, 577, at page 579. Opposed to the authorities just considered are three cases, all from one jurisdiction, namely, Oregon. In the reported case of Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Or. 389, 4 P. 1180, the court had before it for consideration the constitutional provision reading as follows:

'In case of the removal of the governor from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the duties of the office, the same shall devolve on the secretary of state; and in case of the removal from office, death, resignation, or inability, both of the governor and secretary of state, the president of the senate shall act as governor until the disability be removed or a governor be elected.' (Emphasis supplied.) Section 8, article 5.

The court in analyzing grammatically the section held that the word 'same' related to and qualified the word 'office' and that in legal effect the section should read 'In case of the removal of the governor from office or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the duties of the office, the office itself shall devolve upon the secretary of state.'

In the later case of Olcott v. Hoff, 92 Or. 462, 181 P. 466, 470, the Oregon court again had before it for consideration the same section of the constitution and was asked to review its decision in the Chadwick case. It was called to the attention of the court that many courts had refused to accept its interpretation in the Chadwick case as sound law. The justice who wrote the prevailing opinion was still of the opinion that the grammatical interpretation made in the Chadwick case was correct. He attempted to distinguish the cases from Wyoming, Nevada, New Jersey, California, Colorado, Minnesota, Washington, and Arkansas by stating:

*310 devolve upon his successor in the event of the death of the governor. The importance of that distinction is clearly pointed out by the recent decision of the supreme court of Arkansas in construing the constitution of that state in the case of Futrell v. Oldham, supra, where the opinion says: 'If the framers of the constitution had intended to provide for the devolution of the office of governor, in case of vacancy by resignation or otherwise, upon the president of the senate, that intention could easily have been directly expressed in appropriate words. But they chose other terms which clearly observe the distinction between the course of succession of the office itself and a mere devolution of the duties and the emoluments of the office for the time being, and deliberately adopted the latter as the best means of having the government administered until the people themselves can elect a governor.'

Mr. Justice Harris of that court, in a separate opinion concurring in part, made this observation of the Chadwick decision:

'* * * If article 5, § 8, of the state constitution, were now for the first time presented for judicial construction I would, for reasons which to me are not only persuasive but convincing, take the view that upon the removal, death, resignation, or inability of the governor to discharge the duties of the office, the secretary of state becomes merely ex officio governor. In other words, it is my opinion that a correct construction of the constitution **157 only empowered Chadwick to act as governor until he ceased to be secretary of state and then the duties of the office of the governor devolved upon Earhart, the succeeding secretary of state, until Thayer qualified as governor; or, applying what I conceive to be the meaning of the constitution to the instant case, because and only because he is secretary of state, Ben W. Olcott would perform the duties of governor until his term as secretary of state expires on the first Monday in January, 1921, when his successor's term as secretary of state shall begin, and such successor would then discharge the duties of governor until the speaker of the house of representatives at the session to be held in 1921 publishes the vote for governor. * * *'

This justice in stating that the doctrine of state decisis should never be resorted to where an opinion was clearly and manifestly erroneous and capable of producing injustice and hardship, nevertheless for other considerations, adhered to the original decision in the Chadwick case.

In State v. Olcott, 94 Or. 633, 187 P. 286, 290, the court was again confronted with a contingency growing out of its previous interpretations. In this case, Mr. Justice

Bennett in a specially concurring opinion, made reference to the original decision in the Chadwick case and the observations of Mr. Justice Harris in Olcott v. Hoff, supra:

*311 'After much consideration and some hesitation, I feel compelled to concur in the opinion of Mr. Justice Johns upon the ground of stare decisis only. It seems to me that the case of Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Or. 389, 4 P. 1180, is directly in point and is controlling. If it were not for that case and if the question was here as a matter of first impression, I should be governed by the reasoning of Mr. Justice Harris when the question was under consideration in Olcott v. Hoff, which seems to me to present, as a matter of logic, the stronger considerations.'

<sup>[3]</sup> <sup>[4]</sup> We do not consider the decision in Chadwick v. Earhart, supra, as persuasive or authoritative. The interpretation of that case was based on the language of the constitutional provision, and we sincerely believe was not justified. In any event our constitutional provision specifically provides that 'the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the secretary of state * * *.' This section is not susceptible of the interpretation that the office shall devolve upon the secretary of state. Having concluded that the office of governor does not devolve upon the secretary of state and that Dan E. Garvey is still secretary of state and only ex officio or acting governor, it is apparent that he is not legally entitled to any extra compensation for the performance of services or duties which pertain to his office of secretary of state. By law the incumbent of an office is bound to perform all of the duties belonging to it without extra compensation. As was said in United States v. Smith, 27 Fed.Cas. 1139, page 1141, No. 16,321:

'* * * No man is under any necessity to accept an office, but having accepted it, the obligation rests upon him to discharge its duties for the remuneration which the law provides. He accepts it with a knowledge of the pay or salary attached to it, and though its duties may be onerous, and the compensation inadequate, if he chooses to retain the office he must be content with what the law gives.'

The respondent took oath to perform the duties of secretary of state. His duties embrace the responsibility to act as governor in case any of the contingencies provided for in the constitutional provision arise. Walls v. Hall, 202 Ark. 999, 154 S.W.2d 573, 136 A.L.R. 1047.

We, therefore, hold that respondent Garvey is not governor de jure or de facto but merely ex officio or acting governor invested by constitutional mandate with all of the powers and duties of that high office, which devolve upon him by virtue of the fact that he is secretary of state. Respondent, however, is entitled to physical possession of the office space and facilities provided for the chief executive of the state, but as no provision has been made that the emoluments of the office of governor inure to the secretary of state when acting governor he is entitled *312 **158 only to the compensation provided for the secretary of state.

It is the judgment of this court and it is hereby ordered that the Honorable Dan E. Garvey be and he is hereby precluded from holding or exercising the office of governor of the state of Arizona other than as secretary of state and acting governor. Let the mandate of the court issue forthwith.

Dec. 4, 1992.

Suit for declaratory judgment was filed requesting interpretation of various provisions of the Constitution of Arkansas regarding succession to the Office of Governor when the Governor resigns with more than 12 months remaining in term of office. The Circuit Court, Pulaski County, John B. Plegge, J., entered judgment declaring that upon resignation of Governor, powers and duties of the Office of Governor, but not office itself devolves upon Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of four-year term. Court also ruled that special election to fill office is not required and that Lieutenant Governor is not authorized to appoint successor to the Office of Governor. Attorney General appealed, and Lieutenant Governor cross-appealed. The Supreme Court, Dudley, J., held that: (1) constitutional amendment provides that the Lieutenant Governor serves as Governor for the residue of the term and not merely until a new Governor is elected at special election, and (2) Office of Governor itself devolves upon Lieutenant Governor.

**309 DUDLEY, Justice.

On November 6, 1990, Governor Bill Clinton was re-elected to the Office of Governor, and Jim Guy Tucker was elected to the Office of Lieutenant Governor. Both were elected and commissioned to four-year terms of office that commenced on January 15, 1991. On November 3, 1992, a little over twenty-one months later, Governor Clinton was elected to the Office of President of the United States of America. It is anticipated that Governor Clinton will resign from the Office of Governor before January 20, 1993, which is the day the oath of the Office of President of the United States will be administered. The result will be that a vacancy will exist in the Office of Governor, and more than twelve months will remain on the four-year term to which Governor Clinton was elected.

This suit for a declaratory judgment was filed requesting an interpretation of the various provisions of the Constitution of Arkansas regarding succession to the Office of Governor when the Governor resigns with more than twelve months remaining in the term of office. The trial court entered a judgment declaring that upon the resignation of Governor Clinton, the powers and duties of the Office of Governor, but not the office itself, will devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of the four-year term. The trial court also ruled that a special election to fill the office is not required and that the Lieutenant Governor is not authorized to appoint a successor to the Office of Governor. Attorney General Winston Bryant appeals from the judgment, *190 and Lieutenant Governor Jim Guy Tucker cross-appeals from that part of the judgment declaring that the Office of Governor does not devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor. On direct appeal, we affirm the trial court's judgment and hold that upon the resignation of a Governor, the powers and duties of the Office of Governor devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of the four-year term, and, on cross-appeal, we reverse and hold that the Office of Governor itself devolves upon the Lieutenant Governor.

I. Procedure

The Declaratory Judgments Act, Ark.Code Ann. §§ 16-111-101—16-111-111 (1987), provides that the purpose of the act is "to afford relief from uncertainty ... with respect to ... status," and the act is to be liberally construed to that end. The parties stipulated in the trial court that they anticipate that Governor Clinton will resign from the Office of Governor, and the trial court held that a justiciable controversy exists. We have concluded that we should decide the issue because it is a matter of significant public interest and a matter of constitutional law. See Bennett v. N.A.A.C.P., 236 Ark. 750, 370 S.W.2d 79 (1963).

II. Background

Neither the 1836 Constitution of Arkansas nor the 1861 constitution provided for the office of Lieutenant Governor. Those constitutions placed the President of the Senate next in the line of succession for the Office of Governor, and they required a special election if the remaining term of the Governor exceeded a certain period of time. The 1864 constitution, for the first time, created the office of Lieutenant Governor and provided for a statewide election to the office. Ark. Const. of 1864, art. VI, § 19. The 1868 constitution also provided for a Lieutenant Governor and stated that if the Office of Governor became vacant, the Lieutenant Governor served during the “residue of the term.” It made no provision for a special election to fill the vacancy. Ark. Const. of 1868, art. VI, § 10.

Unfortunately, the present Constitution of Arkansas, adopted in 1874, did not originally provide for the office of Lieutenant Governor. Article 6, sections 12 and 13 of the present constitution, originally placed the President of the Senate, *191 followed by the Speaker of the House, in the line of gubernatorial succession, but article 6, section 14 required a special election to fill a vacancy in the Office of Governor when the office was vacated more than twelve months before the expiration of the Governor’s **310 term. Article 6, section 12 of the present constitution originally provided that in the event of the “death, conviction or impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the State or other disability of the Governor,” the powers and duties of the office devolved on the President of the Senate “for the remainder of the term, or until the disability be removed, or a Governor elected and qualified.” When construed with the special election procedure of article 6, section 14, the reason for each of these three limitations on the President of the Senate’s period of service is obvious. Each limitation on service was tied to a different contingency. If the Governor became disabled, the President of the Senate served as Governor until the disability was removed. If the office became vacant through death, impeachment, or resignation of the Governor less than twelve months before the end of the Governor’s term, the President of the Senate served “for the remainder of the term.” If the vacancy in office occurred more than twelve months before the end of the Governor’s term, the President of the Senate served until “a Governor [was] elected and qualified” at a special election called in accordance with article 6, section 14.

Only days after his inauguration on January 18, 1907, Governor John Sebastian Little suffered a nervous breakdown. Arkansas History Commission, 1 Annals of Arkansas 1947 239 (Dallas T. Herndon ed., 1947) [hereinafter Annals ]. On February 11, 1907, Governor Little wrote Senator John I. Moore, the President of the Senate, and asked him to assume the duties of Governor. Senator Moore served as acting Governor until the adjournment of the General Assembly on May 14, 1907. Id. at 239. He was succeeded as acting Governor by Senator X.O. Pindall, who was elected President of the Senate shortly before its adjournment. Senator Pindall served as chief executive for sixteen months from May 15, 1907, until January 11, 1909, when he was replaced by the newly elected President of the Senate, Jesse M. Martin. Id. at 240. Senator Martin was acting Governor for three days until the inauguration of George W. Donaghey, who had been elected Governor at the general election of 1908. *192 Id. at 240. In sum, during the two-year period between January 15, 1907, and January 15, 1909, the affairs of Arkansas were in the hands of no less than six governors: Jeff Davis, John Sebastian Little, John I. Moore, X.O. Pindall, Jesse M. Martin, and George Donaghey. See id. at 233, 239–41.

The first seven months of 1913 were even more trying; they amounted to a gubernatorial succession crisis. The crisis was triggered when Governor Joe T. Robinson resigned from office following his election to the United States Senate. Id. at 247. W.K. Oldham was President of the Senate when Governor Robinson resigned, but because Senator Oldham was prohibited by article 5, section 18 of the constitution from serving past the end of the legislative session, the Senate elected J.M. Futrell as its President prior to adjournment on March 13, 1913. See id. at 251. Oldham argued that pursuant to article 6, section 12, he succeeded to the Office of Governor when Governor Robinson resigned and did not cease to be Governor when a new Senate President was elected. Futrell argued that he became Governor by virtue of his election as President of the Senate two days after Governor Robinson’s resignation. In Futrell v. Oldham, 107 Ark. 386, 155 S.W. 502 (1913), this court ruled in Futrell’s favor, holding that under article 6, section 12, the powers and duties of Governor devolved upon the office of the President of the Senate and not upon the individual occupying that office. In sum, during the first seven months of 1913, state government was headed by five different individuals: George Donaghey, Joe T. Robinson, W.K. Oldham, J.M. Futrell, and George W. Hays. See Annals, supra, at 244, 247, 251. This was labeled our “procession” of governors. Dr. David Y. Thomas, 1 Arkansas and Its People; A History, 1541–1930 282 (1930). The newspapers of the time spoke of the confusion. The Arkansas Democrat of January 31, 1913, contained an article that began, "Political complications in Arkansas are as thick as a London Fog." The February 8, 1913, Arkansas Democrat carried an article that **311 contains the sentence, "Kill off the antiquated method of filling a gubernatorial vacancy."

III. Amendment 6

In February 1913, Representative Kidder introduced a House Joint Resolution for a constitutional amendment that *193 would create the office of Lieutenant Governor. In part, it was a replication of the provision in the 1868 constitution. The March 5, 1913, Arkansas Democrat wrote: "There is no sound argument against the office proposed. It fixes the status of the governor's successor and does away with a special election to fill a vacancy." On March 6, 1913, Amendment 6 to the 1874 constitution was proposed by the General Assembly. See 1913 Ark. Acts 1527. Amendment 6 was submitted to, and approved by, the voters at the 1914 general election. See Combs v. Gray, 170 Ark. 956, 281 S.W. 918 (1926), for additional history of the adoption.

[1] [2] [3] Amendment 6, section 4 provides: "In the case of the [resignation] of the Governor, ... the powers and duties of the office, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term..." In interpreting constitutional amendments, we have said that a court, in order to determine the meaning and the extent of coverage of a constitutional amendment, may look to the history of the times and the condition existing at the time of the adoption of the amendment in order to ascertain the mischief to be remedied and the remedy adopted. Huxtable v. State, 181 Ark. 533, 26 S.W.2d 577 (1930). "Amendments to a constitution are not regarded as if they had been parts of the original instrument but are treated as having a force superior to the original to the extent to which they are in conflict." Grant v. Hardage, 106 Ark. 506, 509, 153 S.W. 826, 827 (1913). Repeal by implication is accomplished when a constitutional amendment takes up a whole subject anew and covers the entire subject matter of the original constitution. McCraw v. Pate, 254 Ark. 357, 494 S.W.2d 94 (1973); Berry v. Gordon, 237 Ark. 547, 376 S.W.2d 279 (1964); Pulaski County v. Downer, 10 Ark. 588 (1850). Further, a constitutional amendment is to be interpreted and understood in its most natural and obvious meaning. Carter v. Cain, 179 Ark. 79, 14 S.W.2d 250 (1929).

[4] Amendment 6 took up a new subject matter of gubernatorial succession. The citizens wanted to prevent any more gubernatorial succession crises and sought to change the procedure previously set out in article 6. It is impossible to reconcile the natural and obvious meaning of the language of the amendment, quoted above, with the special election procedure set out originally in article 6, section 14 in the factual situation before us. If the appellant Attorney General's suggested meaning were *194 adopted, and we construed "residue of the term" to only mean the Lieutenant Governor takes office only until the next special election, the constitutional amendment would, in part, amount to an exercise in futility. For these reasons, we hold that amendment 6, section 4 provides that the Lieutenant Governor serves as Governor for the residue of the term and not merely until a new Governor is elected at a special election.

We do not decide whether the special election process set out in article 6 is still viable if the Lieutenant Governor becomes Governor and then vacates the office. That issue is not before us.

[5] The trial court ruled that the "powers and duties of the Office of Governor, but not the Office of Governor" devolved upon the Lieutenant Governor. The trial court's ruling was undoubtedly based on our decision in Futrell v. Oldham, 107 Ark. 386, 155 S.W. 502 (1913), and certainly that case contains language stating that, under article 6, the President of the Senate exercised the powers of the Office of Governor, but did not actually become Governor. For several reasons, we think the holding of Futrell should be distinguished when the Governor resigns and his place is taken by the Lieutenant Governor under the provisions of amendment 6.

**312 First, the framers of amendment 6 took verbatim from article 6, section 10 of the 1868 constitution the phrase "the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor," and they did so without having the opportunity to read this court's opinion in Futrell. The House Joint Resolution proposing amendment 6 was adopted on March 6, 1913, eighteen days before this court handed down the decision in Futrell on March 24, 1913.

Second, in deciding Futrell, this court was obviously concerned that the President of the Senate had never been elected by a direct statewide vote—he had been directly elected only by the voters of a local state Senate district. The opinion provides:

The central thought [of article 6, sections 12, 13, and 14] is, that the office of Governor is never to be filled at all except by the direct vote of the people themselves, and provision is made by the Constitution for only a temporary devolution of the duties and emoluments of the office upon *195 some other functionary while a vacancy exists.

107 Ark. at 394, 155 S.W. at 505. Under amendment 6, section 2, the Lieutenant Governor is now an elected by a direct statewide vote of the people at the same time and for the same term as the Governor.

An equally important distinguishing factor is that today, under amendment 6, section 2, the Lieutenant Governor is a member of the executive branch of the government, but under article 6, as interpreted in Futrell v. Oldham, the President of the Senate was a member of the legislative branch and remained such while performing the duties of governor only until an election could be called. The opinion provides:

So, if the person discharging for the time being the duties of Governor is still President of the Senate, he cannot be Governor. He may exercise the powers of the latter office—"exercise the office of Governor," as it is otherwise expressed in another section, but he does not fill the two offices.

Under amendment 6 we are not faced with the same problem. In fact, allowing the Lieutenant Governor to succeed to the Office of Governor eliminates the separation of powers and the dual office-holding problems. If the Lieutenant Governor were not to assume the Office of Governor, he would act as Governor and still preside over the Senate and have the power to cast votes in the event of tie votes. This mixing of executive and legislative powers is avoided when the Lieutenant Governor assumes the Office of Governor and sheds the duties of Senate President. For these reasons, Futrell v. Oldham is distinguished.

Amendment 6, section 4 provides that if the Office of Governor becomes vacant, "the powers and duties of the office, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term." The next section of the amendment, section 5, provides that if the offices of both Governor and Lieutenant Governor become vacant, the President (pro tempore) of the Senate "shall act as Governor until the vacancy [is] filled." Similarly, the Speaker of the House "shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled" if the President of the Senate becomes unable to act as *196 Governor. The difference in language suggests that the Lieutenant Governor, unlike the President (pro tempore) of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, does not merely act as Governor when the Governor resigns. Rather, it suggests that he becomes the Governor.

It is also of some persuasion that for nearly three-quarters of a century the executive branch has treated a lieutenant governor as governor when he filled a vacant governor's office. The first instance occurred in 1926 when Lieutenant Governor Harvey Parnell succeeded Governor John E. Martineau. Historical Report of the Secretary of State--Arkansas 230 (1978). It also occurred when Governor Dale Bumpers resigned from the Office of Governor and Lieutenant Governor Bob Riley was commissioned governor, as well as **313 when Governor David Pryor resigned and Lieutenant Governor Joe Purcell was commissioned as Governor. See Commissions in Secretary of State's Office. In addition, we are persuaded that the drafters of amendment 6, and the voters who approved it, knew that article 6, section 2 would remain in place. It provides: "The supreme executive power of the State shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled 'the Governor of the State of Arkansas.'"

Accordingly, we hold that amendment 6, section 4 provides that upon the resignation of the Governor, the Lieutenant Governor becomes "the Governor of the State of Arkansas."

One of the parties advanced the argument that amendment 29 of the Constitution of Arkansas requires the Lieutenant Governor to appoint a new governor. We summarily reject the argument and hold that amendment 6 specifically provides for filling a vacancy in the Office of Governor.

Affirmed on direct appeal and reversed on cross-appeal.

GLAZE and CORBIN, JJ., dissent in part and concur in part.

GLAZE, Justice, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

I concur in part and dissent in part. My disagreement with the majority court has nothing to do with its holding on the merits. In fact, I totally agree with its decision as it pertains to the merits, but disagree that this court procedurally reached the merits.

This lawsuit is a declaratory judgment action and, as such, *197 requires that a present actual controversy must exist. In stating this well-recognized principle, this court stated the following:

The Declaratory Judgment Statute is applicable only where there is a present actual controversy, and all interested persons are made parties, and only where justiciable issues are presented. It does not undertake to decide the legal effect of laws upon a state of facts which is future, contingent or uncertain. A declaratory judgment will not be granted unless the danger or dilemma of the plaintiff is present, not contingent on the happening of hypothetical future events; the prejudice to his position must be actual and genuine and not merely possible, speculative, contingent, or remote. (Emphasis added.)

Andres v. First Ark. Development Finance Corp., 230 Ark. 594, 324 S.W.2d 97 (1959); see also Files v. Hill, 268 Ark. 106, 594 S.W.2d 836 (1980); McFarlin v. Kelly, 246 Ark. 1237, 442 S.W.2d 183 (1969).

Justice John A. Fogelman stated the following reason for the foregoing rule in a concurring opinion where he said:

The declaratory judgment act is not intended to be the vehicle for advisory opinions to persons not having a justiciable controversy with their apparent adversaries by a court having no jurisdiction. It is far better, in my opinion, that important questions, particularly constitutional ones, be pounded out on the anvil of advocacy by persons whose interests are vitally real, not academic, with all interested parties before the court.

Let me first point out the obvious—Governor Bill Clinton is not a party to this declaratory judgment action. Second, nowhere in the record before this court is it shown that the Governor has resigned or that he intends to resign his office. In an attempt to circumvent this obvious procedural defect in parties and the record, the parties appear to rely upon the Democratic Party of Arkansas's brief wherein it argues as follows:

The fact that Governor Clinton's exact resignation date may not be known is not a bar to determining the *198 succession issue. Governor Clinton cannot serve both as Governor and President. Article 6, Section 11 of the Arkansas Constitution provides that no "person holding office under the authority of this State, or of the United States, shall exercise the office of Governor, except as herein provided." Governor Clinton's resignation now that he has been elected President cannot **314 be doubted. Governor Clinton will resign no later than January 20, 1993, in order to assume the Presidency. Thus, it is assured that there will be a vacancy in the Governor's office no later than 58 days after November 23rd. The resulting vacancy in the office of Governor is hardly the hypothetical fact situation feared by the courts.

The parties to this lawsuit cannot stipulate or assume how a person not a party or witness in this case might act in the future; namely, that Governor Clinton will vacate the Governor's office. The majority court is wrong in allowing the parties to make such a stipulation, especially when this factual issue could have been resolved by having made the Governor a party to this action and his resignation could then have been easily confirmed. Nor was the Governor deposed or called as a witness so the resignation issue could be put to rest. Clearly, Governor Clinton has an interest in this cause since this case affects not only his duties and responsibilities as governor, but also involves the emoluments he receives from that office. Until the Governor resigns, the succession issue presented in this cause remains purely hypothetical and contingent upon his vacating the office of Governor.

In an obvious attempt to avoid the Governor's absence in this lawsuit and to cure a record failing to reflect the Governor's resignation, the Democratic Party cites Article 6, Section 11 of the Arkansas Constitution which is captioned "Incompatible Offices" and provides, "No member of Congress, or other person holding office under the authority of this State, or of the United States, shall exercise the office of Governor, except as herein provided." In citing this constitutional language, the Party concludes the Governor's resignation now that he has been elected President cannot be doubted. Of course, this is an assumption or conclusion the parties to this action are unable to make. Clearly, the above constitutional language does not mean Governor Clinton automatically resigns or vacates his office upon *199 being sworn in as President. In addition, such dual officeholder issues are decided in quo warranto or ouster, not declaratory judgment, proceedings.

My natural inclination is much like the majority court's and the parties' to this case—that (1) the Governor likely will resign sometime prior to January 20, 1993, (2) a vacancy will then exist and (3) the succession problem will be a reality. However, to indulge in this assumption on the actual facts of this case is to ignore an entire body of law that provides this court only grants declaratory judgment relief when a present actual controversy exists and all interested persons are made parties. This court's apparent willingness to address the hypothetical facts present here breaks with clear, prior precedent and, in my view, will permit parties henceforth to stipulate to future facts and events in order to obtain declaratory relief and advisory opinions. This court, instead, should require the presence of Governor Clinton in this lawsuit either as a party or a witness, so a finding as to his resignation from or vacating of office can be established. Only then will an actual controversy exist, allowing this court to decide the succession issue.

One last point—the Democratic Party, recognizing justiciability as a problem, asserts this court nevertheless can declare the law concerning the Governor-succession issue because this is a case of extreme public importance. In support of this assertion, it cites Robinson v. Arkansas Game and Fish Commission, 263 Ark. 462, 565 S.W.2d 433 (1978); Moorman v. Taylor, 227 Ark. 180, 297 S.W.2d 103 (1957); and Rockefeller v. Purcell, 245 Ark. 536, 434 S.W.2d 72 (1968). Suffice it to say, each of these cases, unlike the present case, once involved a justiciable controversy, but the actual controversy later became moot for one reason or another. Here, as already discussed, an actual controversy is yet to occur. The cases cited are simply not on point.

TEMPLE, J.

This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the governor to include in his proclamation *169 for the coming election a call to fill the office of lieutenant governor for the unexpired term of Spencer G. Millard, deceased. Respondent has filled the vacancy caused by the death of the lieutenant governor by the appointment of William T. Jeter, who has duly qualified.

In this case both parties concede—as, indeed, the exigencies of each require him to do—that the vacancy caused by the death of Millard was one which the governor had the power to fill. If there can be question of the power of the governor in this respect, therefore, we have not considered it. And no question has been made, nor have we considered, whether a mandate will issue to compel the chief executive to perform an act which, if it be his duty to perform, is enjoined upon him by the constitution as the executive, nor whether he can be compelled to perform any public duty at the instance of one who has no vested right to have it performed, nor any interest special to himself, or other than that which every citizen has in its performance; or, rather, we have not considered whether to issue the mandate asked for would trench upon the province of the executive.

The constitution provides (section 3, art. 4) that members of the assembly shall be elected in 1880 and biennially thereafter. Section 2, art. 5, provides that the governor shall be elected 'at the time and places of voting for members of assembly, and shall hold his office for four years from and after the first day of January subsequent to his election.' Section 15, art. 5, is as follows: 'A lieutenant-governor shall be elected at the same time and places, and in the same manner, as the governor; and his term of office and his qualifications of eligibility shall also be the same. He shall be president of the senate, but shall have only a casting vote therein. If, during a vacancy of the office of governor, the lieutenant-governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or become incapable of performing the duties of his office, or be absent from the state, the president pro *170 tempore of the senate shall act as governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease. The lieutenant-governor shall be disqualified from holding any other office, except as specially provided in this constitution, during the term for which he shall have been elected.' And in the following section it is provided that in case of the death, resignation, impeachment, absence from the state, or inability to act of the governor, 'the powers and duties of his office shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease.' It will be seen that in case of a vacancy in the office of governor the vacancy is not to be filled, but the powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor, who does not cease to be lieutenant governor. Under such circumstances it would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor the latter thereby becomes governor, and can appoint a lieutenant governor. Nor do I think it could be contended that when the president pro tempore of the senate acts as governor he could appoint a person to fill the vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. If he could, he would then appoint himself out of office, and it would be his duty to do so.

But it is conceded by the parties that upon the death of the lieutenant governor the governor may fill the vacancy by appointment. This is unmistakably within the language of section 8, art. 5, which reads as follows: 'When any office shall from any cause become vacant, and no mode is provided by the constitution and law for filling such vacancy, the governor shall have the power to fill such vacancy by granting a commission, which shall expire at the end of the next legislature or at the next election by the people.' An office has become vacant, and there is no other mode provided by the constitution or laws to fill it. 'The next election by the people' does not mean the *171 next general election or the next election held by the people, but it must mean that the appointee shall hold until some one has been elected to fill that office. But there is nothing in this provision which indicates when this election shall be held, but only that until some one has been elected to fill the vacancy the appointee shall hold. This section does not direct that such election shall be at the next general election. It provides simply for filling vacancies by appointment, and that such appointees shall hold until the office is filled in the manner provided by law; but does not itself provide for such election or direct when it shall be. If, however, the phrase 'the next election by **1061 the people' is equivalent to the phrase 'the next election,' and we assume that it was intended thereby to indicate the election at which such vacancy would be filled, we would feel compelled to hold that the next election is that which the constitution has provided for filling that particular office; that is, the next gubernatorial election. Many authorities may be cited in support of this proposition. In Matthews v. Shawnee Co., 34 Kan. 606, 9 Pac. 765, the governor appointed a judge to fill a vacancy. The constitution provided for an appointment to fill the vacancy until the next regular election. Upon a contest the supreme court said: 'The words 'regular election' do not necessarily mean general election, or township election, or any state, county, city, or district election. They simply mean the regular election prescribed by law for the election of the particular officer to be elected.' State v. Philips, 30 Fla. 579, 11 South. 925, involved a municipal office. The court said: 'When it is declared that the city council shall fill vacancies until the next regular election, it means until the next regular election provided by the charter for electing the officer whose term has become vacant.' To the same effect are State v. Gardner, 3 S. D. 553, 54 N. W. 606; Sawyer v. Haydon, 1 Nev. 75; *172 People v. Wilson, 72 N. C. 155; State v. Cobb, 2 Kan. 32; and People v. Mathewson, 47 Cal. 442. The effect of these decisions is that the term 'next election' means the next election for a lieutenant governor, and that the language used in section 8 cannot be understood as itself directing that at the next succeeding general election the vacancy shall be filled.

Is an election at that time authorized by any law? The constitution contains no provision for holding an election for filling this vacancy, and is silent as to whether the appointee shall hold for the residue of the term. And this is more noticeable because as to some other officers there are explicit directions upon the subject. In regard to justices of this court and judges of the superior court, it is expressly provided that in case of a vacancy the appointee shall hold until the election and qualification of a successor, 'Which election shall take place at the next general election.' Sections 3, 5, art. 6. In regard to railroad commissioners, the provision is that the appointee shall hold office for the residue of the unexpired term. The constitution is equally silent in regard to filling vacancies in other executive offices. A similar state of things existed under the constitution of 1849, and the legislature passed a law for filling such vacancies ('An act concerning offices;' April 28, 1851; St. 1851, p. 415). This act did not provide for the election of a lieutenant governor. Like the governor, he was required, in case of resignation, to resign to the legislature if that body was in session; if not in session, to the secretary of state. Such is also the requirement of the present code. Pol. Code, § 995. Like the old statute, the present code contains no provision in regard to an election to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. As to other state officers, the provision is that they shall hold for the balance of the unexpired term. There has never been in the laws a provision for an election to fill a vacancy occasioned by the death or *173 resignation of a lieutenant governor. Perhaps it was not supposed that such vacancy would ever be filled, even by appointment. At all events, there is no law, either constitutional or statutory, for such an election. In such case there can be no election. People v. Weller, 11 Cal. 49; People v. Mathewson, 47 Cal. 442; Kenfield v. Irwin, 52 Cal. 164. In Sawyer v. Haydon, 1 Nev. 75, it was said: 'We think no court or judge has gone so far as to hold that the people might hold an election or vote for any particular officer at a general election, unless some special provision was made for electing such officer for the particular term for which he is seeking to be elected, either in the constitution or some statutory enactment.' This was also said in People v. Mathewson, 47 Cal. 442. The efficacy of an election depends upon the law in pursuance of which it is held, and the fact that an office is elective does not of itself, without some law authorizing and regulating the election, render valid any attempted election. The writ is therefore denied.

GAROUTTE, J.

I concur in the judgment. The constitution provides that the powers and duties of the office of governor, in case of vacancy, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease. The constitution further provides that in case of a vacancy in both the office of governor and lieutenant governor the president pro tempore of the senate shall act as governor until the vacancy be filled. The constitution does not provide that the president pro tempore of the senate shall perform the duties of the office of lieutenant governor in case a vacancy exists in that office. And this omission to so provide is, to my mind, an unintentional lapse on the part of the framers of the constitution. Such appears to be plain when we consider that there is an express *174 provision of that instrument casting upon the president pro tempore of the senate authority to perform the duties of the office of governor if there be no lieutenant governor, taken in connection with the many other provisions of that instrument which all point to that conclusion. But no authority is found in the constitution vesting the president pro tempore of the senate with the duties of the lieutenant governor when a vacancy occurs in that office, and hence any such question is foreclosed.

The foregoing conditions being present, a vacancy **1062 occurred in the office of lieutenant governor upon the death of the incumbent, and the governor had the power to fill such vacancy by virtue of section 8, art. 5, of the constitution. That section reads as follows: 'When any office shall from any cause become vacant, and no mode is provided by the constitution and law for filling such vacancy, the governor shall have the power to fill such vacancy by granting a commission, which shall expire at the end of the next legislature or at the next election by the people.' It follows that the result of this litigation in part rests upon the true construction of the words 'the next election by the people.' It is conceded by the present incumbent of the office that the next election by the people since his appointment will be the coming presidential election to be held in November, but he claims the words should be construed to mean 'the next election by the people at which a lieutenant governor is regularly to be elected.' If the framers of an instrument of the dignity and importance of a state constitution had intended such to be the law, it was easy for them to have said so, and they should have so declared in terms. And, in the absence of a declaration of that kind, I do not consider myself authorized to so interpret a phrase of that instrument; certainly not unless the intent of its authors to that effect is plainly apparent; and we look in vain for such intent. Upon a question of statutory construction it was said in Blythe v. Ayres, 96 Cal. 582, 31 Pac. 924: 'We are not here to construct *175 a statute, but to construe a statute. We can neither interpolate nor eliminate, and we are bound to assume that the legislature enacted the law as it now stands with a due comprehension of the meaning of words, and of the rules of statutory construction, and that they incorporated into the act all that was intended, and that they intended that effect should be given to all that was found therein.' And that principle of construction applies with full force here. If any layman of ordinary intelligence, be he merchant, doctor, or mechanic, should have the question submitted to him as to the proper signification of the words here under consideration, to wit, the officer's commission shall expire 'at the next election by the people,' he would say without hesitation that the commission expired at the next general election. Such is the fair and legitimate construction of the language. There are some decisions of courts of other states which in a measure look in an opposite direction from the views here expressed. But these decisions are largely based upon provisions of law not identical with the one here involved. Many of those provisions use the term 'regular election,' and in such cases stress by the court is laid upon the word 'regular' as a most material element in arriving at the true construction of the language. Notwithstanding the foregoing construction of the constitutional provision is favorable to the petitioner, still the relief he asks must be denied. For, though the appointee's commission expire at 'the next election by the people,' still, in the absence of some law authorizing the election of a lieutenant governor at that time, no election can be held, and I find no such law. A provision of constitution or statute declaring a certain day upon which the commission of an officer shall expire is in no sense a provision that an election shall be held upon that day to fill the office. Under these conditions the present appointee of the governor will hold until his successor is elected and qualified, regardless of the day *176 upon which his commission may expire; and his successor can only be elected at a time fixed by law, which time will be at the regular state election in the year 1898.

1 Mills' Ann.St. § 1767, provides that whenever, by the resignation of the Governor, the powers and duties of his office shall devolve on the Lieutenant Governor, the Governor's salary shall cease, and the same shall be received by the Lieutenant Governor, and during the time that the Lieutenant Governor shall act as Governor "all the duties and powers of the Lieutenant Governor shall devolve on the president of the senate pro tem." Held, that the words quoted could not be construed as evidencing the intention of the framers of the Constitution that the president pro tem. of the Senate should become de jure Lieutenant Governor on the Lieutenant Governor acceding to the office of Governor.

Const. art. 4, § 13, declares that in case of resignation of the Governor the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office for the residue of the term, or until the disability is removed, shall devolve on the Lieutenant Governor. Section 14 declares that the Lieutenant Governor shall be president of the Senate, and in case of the disqualification of the Lieutenant Governor, or when he shall hold the office of Governor, then the president pro tem. "shall perform the duties of the Lieutenant Governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability is removed"; and section 10, art. 5, provides that the Senate, at the beginning and close of each regular session, and at such other times as may be necessary, shall elect one of its members president pro tem. Held, that where, after the Lieutenant Governor became Governor, on the later's resignation respondent, who was then president pro tem. of the Senate, qualified as Lieutenant Governor, but at the close of the then regular session of the Legislature relator was elected president pro tem. of the Senate, to succeed respondent, who was still a senator, the later did not become Lieutenant Governor de jure during the remainder of the term, and the right to such office passed to relator on his election as president pro tem. of the Senate.

Opinion

GUNTER, J.

Original proceeding in the nature of quo warranto. The information alleges that respondent usurps the office of lieutenant governor of this state, asks a judgment of ouster, and that the relator be declared entitled to discharge the duties and receive the emoluments of that office. The facts are: March *109 17, 1905, James H. Peobody, then governor for the term ending second Tuesday in January, 1907, resigned, and Jesse F. McDonald, then lieutenant governor, qualified as governor, and since has acted as such. March 18, 1905, respondent, a senator for the term ending first Wednesday in December, 1906, and president pro tem. of the Senate, qualified as lieutenant governor, and since has acted as such. April 3d, at the close of the regular session of the Legislature, beginning January 4, 1905, relator was elected president pro tem. to succeed respondent. Respondent is still a senator. There is no controversy but that respondent, as president pro tem. at the time the powers and duties of governor, through the resignation of Gov. Peobody, devolved upon Lieut. Gov. McDonald, was entitled to perform the duties of lieutenant governor. The question is whether such right ended with the election of relator as president pro tem. Relator insists that the duties in question are legally attached to the holder of the office of president pro tem. of the Senate, and whenever the term of office of such president expires such duties pass to his successor in office. Respondent contends that the holder of the office of president pro tem. at the time the lieutenant governor legally assumes the duties of governor, through a resignation of the governor, becomes legally invested with the title of lieutenant governor, and empowered to discharge the duties and receive the emoluments thereof for the remainder of the term for which the governor and lieutenant governor were respectively elected, and that this is true regardless of the fact that his term of office as such president pro tem. as well as senator may both expire before the termination of the residue of the gubernatorial term.

*110 1. This question is determined by the construction of the following sections of our state Constitution:

'In case of the death, impeachment, or conviction of felony or infamous misdemeanor, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the state, or disability of the governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office, for the residue of the term or until the disability be removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.' Art. 4, § 13.

'The lieutenant governor shall be president of the Senate, and shall vote only when the Senate is equally divided. In case of the absence, impeachment or disqualification from any cause of the lieutenant governor, or when he shall hold the office of governor, then the president pro tempore shall perform the duties of the lieutenant governor, until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed.' Art. 4, § 14.

'The Senate shall, at the beginning and close of each regular session, and at such other times as may be necessary, elect one of its members president pro tempore.' Art. 5, § 10.

These sections, read together, provide that the Senate shall, at the beginning and close of each regular session, and at such other times as may be necessary, elect one of its members president pro tem., and that in case of the absence, impeachment, or disqualification from any cause of the lieutenant governor, or when the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office of governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor through the death, impeachment, or conviction of felony, or infamous misdemeanor, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the state, or disability of the governor, the president pro tem. shall perform the duties of lieutenant governor until the cause preventing the lieutenant governor from discharging his official duties is removed. *111 It thus appears that if the lieutenant governor fails to perform his duties for some temporary cause, as absence or sickness, the Constitution in terms provides that while such condition exists his duties shall be performed by the president pro tem. It is conceded by counsel for respondent that in such temporary contingency the president pro tem. does not become the lieutenant governor. The same language is used in devolving duties on the president pro tem. in the event the lieutenant governor is unable to perform his duties through those of the governor devolving upon him from some permanent cause as in this case, resignation of the governor. If the framers of our Constitution had intended that the president pro tem. of the Senate should become lieutenant governor de jure in the contingency under **873 consideration, they could easily have said so. They have not so provided. They have simply said that if for some permanent cause the lieutenant governor fails to discharge his official duties they shall be performed while such condition obtains by the president pro tem. of the Senate as such.

The question under consideration was ruled in State v. Heller, 63 N. J. Law, 105, 42 Atl. 155, 57 L. R. A. 312.

Griggs, the governor of New Jersey, resigned before the expiration of his term. Vorhees, the then president of the state Senate, qualified as his successor. Later, before the expiration of the time for which Griggs had been elected, Vorhees resigned as a member of the state Senate. Immediately the speaker of the House qualified as governor, contending that the resignation of Vorhees as state senator terminated his right to officiate as governor. Vorhees claimed that, having been the legal successor of Griggs as governor at the time of the resignation, he thereby became the governor de jure for the remainder of the unexpired term of Griggs as governor, regardless *112 of the expiration of his term as state senator. The question was determined by the construction of the following provision of the New Jersey Constitution: 'In case of the * * * resignation * * * from office of the governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the Senate, and in case of his * * * resignation * * * then upon the speaker of the House of Assembly, for the time being, until another governor shall be elected and qualified.' The court, in ruling, said: 'It my judgment, the framers of the Constitution meant simply what they said-that in case the governor resigned the president of the Senate, as such, should have the powers and perform the duties of the office. Foster M. Vorhees did not become governor upon the resignation of Governor Griggs. He still continued to be a senator and president of the Senate. He could not resign the office of governor, which he never held. When he resigned and vacated the office of senator, he ceased to be president of the Senate, and could no longer exercise the functions pertaining to the executive department. Therefore upon his resignation as senator the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office devolved upon David O. Watkins, the speaker of the House of Assembly. He is de jure the speaker of the House, and of right as such speaker exercises the executive powers. He is not governor de jure or de facto in the constitutional sense of that term.' On page 110 of 63 N. J. Law, page 157 of 42 Atl. (57 L. R. A. 312) the court further said: 'It [New Jersey Constitution] declares that the powers, duties and emoluments of the office (governor) shall devolve on the president of the Senate. It does not confer upon him the title of the office. The president of the Senate exercise the powers of the governor; the president of the Senate performs the duties of the governor; the president of the Senate receives *113 the emoluments of that office. he is still president of the senate, with the added duties required of the chief executive of the state imposed upon him. There is no language in the Constitution from which it can be reasonably inferred that his office of president of the Senate was to be vacated. He retains his office of senator; and as president of the Senate, and not as governor, he exercises the added powers, and performs the superimposed duties.' The following cases are of service in construing the language under consideration: 'then the president pro tempore shall perform the duties of the lieutenant governor, until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed.' Section 13, supra. Carr v. Wilson (W. Va.) 9 S. E. 31-33, 3 L. R. A. 64; Tieman v. Haw, 49 Iowa, 315; State v. Byrne (Wis.) 73 N. W. 321. Such rulings upon similar provisions to some extent support the conclusion reached in State v. Heller, supra. See, also, 14 A. & E. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 1108. The principle of corporate law, which in effect declares that the right to hold a given corporate office is dependent upon a continued ownership of corporate stock-Oudin v. Conlan (Wash.) 75 Pac. 798-by analogy lends strength to the conclusion in State v. Heller. We conclude that respondent did not become Lieutenant Governor de jure by the duties of governor devolving upon Lieut. Gov. McDonald through the resignation of Gov. Peabody, and that by the election of relator as president pro tem., respondent, being no longer president pro tem., lost his right to perform the duties of lieutenant governor, and relator by such election became entitled to perform the duties of such office.

*114 2. As contra the conclusion we have reached respondent has cited Merriman v. Clinch, 6 Blatchf. 5, Fed. Cas. No. 9,460; People ex rel. Church v. Hopkins, 55 N. Y. 74; Chatterton v. Grant (Wyo.) 73 Pac. 470; Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Or. 389, 4 Pac. 1180. In Merriman v. Clinch, King, while holding the office of collector of customs, appointed Clinch as his deputy. King died, and Clinch for some time thereafter, under his appointment by King, and as authorized by the statute, performed the duties of the office of collector. The administrator of King sued to recover of Clinch the fees and salary of the office of collector of customs, which had come into his hands as deputy collector after the death of King and before his successor was appointed. The court held that the administrator had no claim upon the fees and salary of the office of collector accruing after the death of King. In Church v. Hopkins, Miller, superintendent of the insurance department of the state of New York, resigned before the expiration of his term. Church had been appointed by Miller deputy superintendent, and was such at the time of his resignation. Church, under his appointment **874 as deputy, and as authorized by statute, performed all the duties of superintendent. He sued to recover the salary as superintendent during the time he acted such. The court held him entitled to recover. In State ex rel. Chatterton v. Grant, Chatterton, secretary of state of Wyoming, became acting governor of that state on the death of the Governor. He continued also to perform the duties of secretary of state. He sued to recover salary as secretary of state and governor. He was permitted to recover. In Chadwick v. Earhart, Grover resigned as governor before the expiration of his term of office. Chadwick, secretary of state for the same term, qualified *115 as governor, and discharged the duties of that office and secretary of state until the expiration of the term for which he had been elected secretary of state, and the duties of governor for two days after the expiration of his term as secretary of state. A new governor and secretary of state had been elected. The secretary of state qualified, but exactly when does not appear, and the new governor failed to qualify during the first two days of his term, and during which time Chadwick, although his term as secretary of state had expired, continued to perform the duties of governor. Chadwick sued to recover the salary of governor for the entire time of his service as such, including the two days after the expiration of his term as secretary of state. The court held him entitled to recover. The Constitution of Oregon involved in the decision was that in the case of the removal of the governor from office or 'of his * * * resignation * * * the same shall devolve on the secretary of state.' The conclusion of the court that Chadwick was entitled to recover for the time he performed the duties of governor before the expiration of his term as secretary of state is not in conflict with our ruling here. The part of the decision holding that he was entitled to recover the salary of governor for the two days after the expiration of his term of office as secretary of state is against our conclusion here. The weight of the decision upon the latter point is to some extent impaired by the fact that the question received no attention in the brief of counsel for Chadwick, and but slight mention in the brief of adverse counsel. We decline, however, to follow this case as to the latter point decided therein for the reasons given in the earlier part of this opinion.

3. 1 Mills' Ann. St. § 1767, provides: 'Whenever by the impeachment of the governor, his removal from office, death or resignation, or absence *116 from the state, the powers and duties of his office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, the salary of the governor shall cease, and the same shall be received by the lieutenant governor, as a full compensation for his services until such disability shall cease; and during the time that the lieutenant governor shall act as governor the duties and powers of the lieutenant governor shall devolve upon the president of the Senate pro tem., who shall receive the salary of the lieutenant governor during such term of service.' This statute enacted shortly after the adoption of the Constitution, respondent says, should be availed of in construing sections of the Constitution under consideration, and, if so availed of, shows by the use of the words 'duties and powers of lieutenant governor shall devolve upon the president of the Senate pro tem.,' that it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution that the president pro tem. should become de jure lieutenant governor. Such words are not so construed. The Constitution of Nevada provides that when a vacancy occurs in the office of governor through any one of certain contingencies, 'the powers and the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease.' In State v. Sadler, 23 Nev. 356, 47 Pac. 450, in construing this provision, the court said: 'If a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor. But there is no vacancy created thereby in the office of lieutenant governor. The officer remains lieutenant governor, but invested with the powers and duties of governor.' The provisions of the California Constitution are identical in terms with those of Nevada, and in *117 People v. Budd, 114 Cal. 168, 45 Pac. 1060, 34 L. R. A. 46, the court said: 'Under such circumstances it would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the governor devolved upon the lieutenant governor the latter thereby becomes governor, and can appoint a lieutenant governor. Nor do I think it would be contended that when the president pro tem. of the Senate acts as governor he can appoint a person to fill the vacancy in the office of the lieutenant governor. If he could, he would then appoint himself out of office, and it would be his duty to do so.' See, also, State v. McBride (Wash.) 70 Pac. 26; State v. Stearns (Minn.) 75 N. W. 211. The statute does not, we think, enlarge the language of the Constitution, except as it provides for payment of the salary of the lieutenant governor to the president pro tem.; but, even if the language so used has the contended effect, it would not control what appears to us to be the clear meaning of the terms used in the Constitution.

4. It is contended that by certain acts officers of the executive department of the state government recognized respondent as lieutenant governor, and that this should have weight in construing the constitutional provisions in question. If there were the acts of recognition relied on in a doubtful question of construction, they should be considered, but not to control the plain terms of the Constitution.

5. It is further contended that certain **875 acts of the relator, whereby it is said he impliedly recognized respondent as lieutenant governor, should estop him from making the contention he here presses. No act of the relator could compel us to declare respondent lieutenant governor de jure when under the Constitution he is not so.

Judgment will be entered enjoining respondent from performing the duties of lieutenant governor *118 of this state, and declaring relator entitled, as president pro tem. of the Senate, to perform such duties.

Lieutenant Governor's acting as Governor upon Governor's resignation does not violate constitutional provision that all political power is vested in and derived from people, in that it deprives them of right to elect Governor, since people are presumed to know law and must be presumed to have chosen Lieutenant Governor with knowledge that during term for which he and Governor were elected, Lieutenant Governor might be called upon to exercise powers of Governor for residue of term (Const. art. 3, § 1; art. 7, §§ 1, 14).

[8] Statutes

↔Legislative Construction

Legislative interpretation, though not binding on court, is entitled to consideration.

Relators ask for writs of mandate to compel the Secretary of State to file their primary nominating petitions and to print their names on the ballot for the primary election to be held July, 1934.

At the general election in 1932, Hon. J. E. Erickson and Hon. Frank H. Cooney were elected Governor and Lieutenant Governor, respectively, of the state of Montana. On the 13th day of March, 1933, Erickson resigned. On the 6th day of June, 1934, the relators tendered to the Secretary of State their primary nominating petitions for the primary election to be held July 17, 1934, for the following offices, namely, for Governor, J. W. Speer, as Republican candidate; A. F. Lamey, as Democratic candidate. For Lieutenant Governor on the Republican ticket, Frank A. Hazelbaker and Howard A. Johnson; and on the Democratic ticket, Hugh R. Adair, W. Ray Church, and H. Eickemeyer. All these petitions were refused by the Secretary of State, and each candidate has asked that the Secretary of State be compelled to file his petition, and that his name appear on the ballot at the primary nominating election for the particular office above mentioned.

These six applications for writs of mandate were consolidated for the purpose of argument, and will be so treated in this opinion. One question is presented for decision, namely: Is there a vacancy in either the office of Governor or Lieutenant Governor?

Section 1 of article 7 of the Constitution provides: "The executive department shall consist of a governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, attorney general, state treasurer, state auditor and superintendent of public instruction, each of whom shall hold his office for four years, or until his successor is elected and qualified. *** They shall perform such duties as are prescribed in this constitution and by the laws of the state. ***"

[1] It will be noted by the foregoing provision that the term of the Governor and the Lieutenant Governor is four years, or until their successor is elected and qualified. The word "term" applies to the office and not to the person. State ex rel. Kuhl v. Kaiser, 95 Mont. 550, 27 P.(2d) 1113; State ex rel. Morgan v. Knight, 76 Mont. 71, 245 P. 267.

Section 14 of article 7 reads: "In case of the failure to qualify, the impeachment or conviction of felony or infamous crime of the governor, or his death, removal from office, resignation, absence from the state, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office, for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease, shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor."

[2] It will thus be seen that when the Governor resigns or is permanently removed from office, there is no vacancy in the office of Governor in the sense that there is no one left with power to discharge the duties imposed upon the Governor. The same situation exists where the Governor is absent from the state or physically unable to discharge the duties of his office. The framers of the Constitution never intended that there should be any interim in which the affairs of the state should not be executed, for they said in explicit language that on the happening of any of the contingencies mentioned in section 14, supra, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office were to be immediately transferred to the Lieutenant Governor, who is then given a mandate to discharge the duties of the office for the residue of the term for which the Governor was elected. He, as Lieutenant Governor, acts as Governor and is empowered to perform the duties of that office.

[3] While the legislative interpretation is not binding on us, it is nevertheless entitled to respectful consideration. We find that as early as 1895 the Legislature of this state treated the Lieutenant Governor, when he performed the duties of Governor, as acting Governor. This is disclosed in section 132, Revised Codes of 1921, as follows: "When the lieutenant-governor acts as governor, he is entitled to receive during the time he so acts, the compensation which the governor, if acting, would be entitled to receive for such time; but during such time he is not entitled, as lieutenant-governor, to any other compensation or mileage."

[4] There can be no vacancy in an office when there is a person clothed with authority to perform its duties. In State ex rel. Chenoweth v. Acton, 31 Mont. 37, 77 P. 299, 300, the *371 court, speaking through Mr. Commissioner Callaway, said: "The word 'vacancy,' as applied to an office, has no technical meaning. An office is not vacant so long as it is supplied, in the manner provided by the Constitution or law, with an incumbent who is legally qualified to exercise the powers and perform the duties which pertain to it; and, conversely, it is vacant, in the eye of the law, whenever it is unoccupied by a legally qualified incumbent, who has a lawful right to continue therein until the happening of some future event."

In State ex rel. Murphy v. McBride, 29 Wash. 335, 70 P. 25, 26, a Governor and a Lieutenant Governor were elected at the general election in November, 1900, for the term of four years. On December 26, 1901, the Governor died, and it was urged that there was a vacancy in the office of Governor and also in the office of Lieutenant Governor. The constitutional provision (art. 3, § 10) which was under consideration read as follows: "In case of the removal, resignation, death, or disability of the governor, the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor, and in case of a vacancy in both the offices of governor and lieutenant-governor, the duties of governor shall devolve upon the secretary of state, who shall act as governor until the disability be removed or a governor be elected." It will be noted that this constitutional provision does not provide that upon the resignation of the Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall serve for the residue of the term. The court, in discussing the question of vacancy, said: "It is a well-settled rule that an office is not vacant so long as it is supplied, in the manner provided by the constitution or laws, with an incumbent who is legally authorized to exercise the power and perform the duties which pertain to it. *** The constitution having provided that in case of the death of the governor the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of governor. It is not necessary to discuss the meaning of the provision 'who shall act as governor until the disability be removed or a governor be elected,' because that provision, as used here, clearly refers only to the secretary of state, in case that officer should assume the duties of governor under the contingency named. What is said above applies equally to the lieutenant governor. When the lieutenant governor, by virtue of his office and of the command of the constitution, assumed the duties of governor on the death of Gov. Rogers, the office of lieutenant governor did not thereby become vacant, but the officer remained lieutenant governor, intrusted with the powers and duties of governor."

Our attention has been called to the language of this court in State ex rel. McGowan v. Sedgwick, 46 Mont. 187, 127 P. 94, in which it is stated that upon the resignation of the Governor, there is a vacancy in that office, but we do not consider it binding, for the reason that that was not the question under consideration in that case.

[5] It is urged that upon the happening of any of the contingencies mentioned in section 14, supra, the Lieutenant Governor by exercising the powers and duties of the Governor acts also as Lieutenant Governor, and that he cannot hold two offices. This argument is answered by section 15 of article 7 of the Constitution, as follows: "The lieutenant-governor shall be president of the senate, but shall vote only when the senate is equally divided. In case of the absence or disqualification of the lieutenant-governor, from any cause which applies to the governor, or when he shall hold the office of governor, then the president pro tempore of the senate shall perform the duties of the lieutenant-governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed."

The argument is also answered in the case of State ex rel. Murphy v. McBride, supra, in which the court says: "It is argued, however, that since it is made the duty of the lieutenant governor, under the constitution, to be presiding officer of the state senate (section 16, art. 3), and as such to approve all bills passed by that body, he must, as governor, review and approve or reject bills which as lieutenant governor he has already approved. These duties are, no doubt, inconsistent; but this argument, we think, is fully met by another provision of the constitution, which provides, at section 10, art. 2, in substance, that when the lieutenant governor shall act as governor the senate shall choose a temporary president. The lieutenant governor, therefore, when the duties of governor devolve upon him, is relieved of the duties of presiding officer of the senate." See, also, Clifford v. Heller, 63 N. J. Law, 105, 111, 42 A. 155, 57 L. R. A. 312; Futrell v. Oldham, 107 Ark. 386, 392, 155 S. W. 502, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 571.

When the framers of the Constitution provided for the election of a Governor and a Lieutenant Governor as members of the executive department of the state (section 1, art. 7), but conferred upon the latter no executive power or authority other than in the *372 contingencies mentioned in section 14, supra, they manifested the intention that the people elect two qualified heads of that department—the one active, the other his lieutenant, ready at a moment's notice to assume the duties of the office, should his superior officer, for any reason, either temporarily or permanently, become unable to perform them. This to the end that the important functions of state government should not falter or halt for an instant.

[6] It cannot be said that this arrangement violates section 1 of article 3, to the effect that all political power is vested in and derived from the people, in that it deprives them of the right of electing a Governor; as the people are presumed to know the law and are certainly conversant with human frailty, they must be presumed to have chosen a Lieutenant Governor with the knowledge that, at any time during the term for which he and the Governor were elected, he might be called upon to exercise the powers and discharge the duties of governor "for the residue of the term."

[7] Neither do we think that upon resignation, death, or permanent removal of the Governor there is a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor. In any such event he, as Lieutenant Governor, shoulders immediately the duties of Governor, and while "he holds the office of governor," the president pro tempore of the senate performs the duties which theretofore devolved upon the Lieutenant Governor. When the duties, powers, and emoluments of the office of Governor devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, it cannot be said that he vacates his office of Lieutenant Governor, and, unless he does so, there is no vacancy in his office. Section 511, Rev. Codes 1921. His assumption of the duties of the office of Governor does not create, and neither can he make, a vacancy, as he is discharging the functions of Governor by the mandate of the Constitution, and that by reason of being Lieutenant Governor. If the framers of the Constitution had intended that there should be a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor upon the resignation, death, or permanent removal of the Governor, they could have easily said so. They chose, however, to say that upon the happening of either of those contingencies the Lieutenant Governor should assume the duties of the office and discharge them for the residue of the term.

It would be idle to say that upon the resignation of the Governor there was thereby created a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor, in view of the specific language of sections 14 and 15, supra. If that be true, then the Lieutenant Governor, upon assuming the powers and duties of the Governor, would be entitled to appoint a Lieutenant Governor. In this manner he could divest the people of their representative chosen by the Legislature, namely, the president pro tempore, to preside during the absence of the Lieutenant Governor. In our opinion this was never contemplated and never intended by the framers of the Constitution, or the people who adopted it.

Then, again, if the Governor were absent from the state or unable temporarily to perform the duties of his office, it could hardly be argued that while the Lieutenant Governor was discharging the duties of the office of Governor, he could appoint a Lieutenant Governor. In such a case the "disability" of the Governor may cease at any time, and he thereupon assumes the duties of his office.

[8] In view of the fact that it is our opinion that there is neither a vacancy in the office of Governor nor the office of Lieutenant Governor, other questions presented in these cases need not be considered.

The writs are denied, and the several proceedings dismissed.

Supreme Court of New Jersey.
STATE (CLIFFORD, Prosecutor)
v.
HELLER, Sheriff.
Jan. 4, 1899.

*105 1. The legality of the proceedings at the trial of a prisoner convicted of a crime by a court of competent jurisdiction cannot be challenged or reviewed by habeas corpus.

2. On a writ of certiorari allowed with the writ of habeas corpus to bring up a warrant for the execution of the prisoner, purporting to be issued by the executive department of the state government under authority of the act of April 16, 1846, the court will adjudge whether such warrant is valid.

3. When the governor of the state resigns, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office devolve, under the constitution, upon the president of the senate, but he does not thereby become the governor of the state in the constitutional sense. The president of the senate retains his office of senator, and as president of the senate he exercises the powers and performs the duties of the executive department.

4. When he resigns his office as senator, he ceases to be president of the senate, and thereupon the powers, duties, and emoluments of the executive office devolve in like manner upon the speaker of the house of assembly.

5. The granting of a reprieve and the fixing of a day for the execution of a convicted criminal is by the common law a judicial power, and cannot be exercised by the governor, or person administering the government, except in so far as it is expressly permitted by the constitution.

6. The constitution bestows upon the executive department the power to reprieve, but limits the exercise of that power to a period of 90 days after conviction, which means 90 days after sentence in the court below. As an incident to this granted power, the executive department may direct the execution to be proceeded with within the 90 days, and in that event the execution takes place not by force of the executive warrant, but in virtue of the judgment of the court.

7. After the lapse of the 90 days, the power of the executive department in this respect ceases.

Application by Edward Clifford against William Heller, sheriff, for release on habeas corpus, and certiorari by Edward Clifford against the same defendant. Petitioner remanded.

Argued November term, 1898, before DEPUE, VAN SYCKEL, and LIPPINCOTT, JJ.

*106 VAN SYCKEL, J.

Edward Clifford was convicted of murder in the first degree in the court of oyer and terminer of the county of Hudson, and sentenced by the said court on the 15th day of September, 1896. The proceedings at the trial were subsequently taken to the court of errors and appeals for review, and by the judgment of that court the judgment of the oyer and terminer was in all respects affirmed. Thereupon the court of oyer and terminer ordered the said Clifford to be executed on the 16th day of February, 1898. On the 14th day of February, 1898, Foster M. Voorhees, president of the senate of New Jersey, under his hand and the great seal of the state of New Jersey, directed the sheriff of the county of Hudson to suspend the execution of said death sentence until the 16th day of March, 1898. Further proceedings were taken on behalf of Clifford in the federal courts, by which the execution of sentence was stayed until November 25, 1898, when David O. Watkins, speaker of the house of assembly of New Jersey, under his hand and the great seal of the state, suspended the execution of said sentence until the 6th day of January, 1899, and ordered the said Clifford to be executed on that day. Clifford is now before this court on habeas corpus, and at his instance a writ of certiorari was allowed to bring before the court the proceedings upon which the state claims to rest the order of David O. Watkins, the validity of which is controverted in this case.

Our habeas corpus act provides that the following, among other, persons mentioned shall not be entitled to prosecute such writ: "Persons committed or detained by virtue of the final judgment or decree of any competent tribunal of civil or criminal jurisdiction or by virtue of any execution issued upon such judgment or decree, unless such judgment or decree be founded upon contract." It is clear, therefore, that the legality of the proceedings at the trial of Clifford cannot be challenged or reviewed by writ *107 of habeas corpus; and, if the case before us presented no other question, it would be the duty of the court to dismiss the writ as improvidently granted. But the return to the certiorari, and the facts agreed upon, present a question of great importance, in which the validity of the judgment of our courts is in no wise involved. That question is whether David O. Watkins had the power to order the execution of Clifford. If the warrant issued by him was unauthorized, **156 it is the province and the duty of this court to intervene for the purpose of preventing an unlawful execution of the person condemned.

The admitted facts controlling this controversy are as follows: On the 31st day of January, 1898, John W. Griggs, then governor of New Jersey, filed in the office of the secretary of state his resignation as governor, to take effect at the termination of that day. Foster M. Voorhees was then president of the senate of New Jersey, being a senator from the county of Union. He thereupon took the oath, diligently, faithfully, and to the best of his knowledge to administer the government of the state in conformity with the powers delegated to him; which oath was filed in the office of the secretary of state on the 1st of February, 1898. On the 18th of October, 1898, Foster M. Voorhees filed in the office of the secretary of state a paper writing, of which the following is a copy: "State of New Jersey, Executive Department. To the Secretary of State, and to the Governor or Person Administering the Government: I hereby resign my commission as a member of the senate from the county of Union. Foster M. Voorhees." David O. Watkins was then a member of the general assembly of the state of New Jersey from Gloucester county, and speaker of the house of assembly. *108 On the 18th day of October, 1898, he filed in the office of the secretary of state an oath that he would diligently, faithfully, and to the best of his knowledge, administer the government of the state in conformity with the powers delegated to him. It is insisted on behalf of the prosecutor that when Foster M. Voorhees filed in the office of the secretary of state the oath before mentioned, he ceased to be a member of the senate, and became governor of the state for the term fixed by the constitution until another governor should be elected; that his resignation of his seat in the senate was unnecessary, and could not in any wise affect the tenure of his office as governor. To support this contention the well-settled rule laid down by Chief Justice Kirkpatrick in State v. Parkhurst, 9 N. J. Law, 446, is relied upon: "That, if a person holding an office be appointed to and accept another office incompatible therewith, such acceptance of the second is a virtual surrender of and vacates the first." The argument is that Foster M. Voorhees became governor of New Jersey, and ceased thereby to be senator without resigning the latter office; that his subsequent resignation of the senatorship did not operate as a resignation of his office as governor, or in any wise affect his right to hold said office, or his duty to execute its prescribed functions; that under the constitution the office of governor could become again vacant only by the death, resignation, or removal of Foster M. Voorhees, and, as neither of those contingencies has occurred, there was no vacancy in the office of governor by which David O. Watkins could succeed to that office.

Assuming the premises of the prosecutor to be entirely sound, it seems to result, not only that the resignation of the senatorship by Foster M. Voorhees did not vacate the office of governor, but that the resignation of the senatorship was equivalent to a declaration that he resigned that office, and elected to retain the office of governor, which he did not resign. It is well settled, both in England and in this country, that title to an office cannot be challenged on habeas corpus, or in *109 any other collateral proceeding. Where the official is in possession of the office, and is executing its powers under color of title, he will be regarded at least as a de facto officer, and as to the public his official acts will be efficacious. That rule, so absolutely essential to the stability of government and the protection of the governed, should be recognized in its full force. The case sub judice is peculiar and novel. The situation is this: If Foster M. Voorhees, as president of the senate, was transferred by force of the constitutional provision to the office of governor, thereby vacating his office of senator, he is still governor of New Jersey, in full possession of the powers of the office, and under obligation to perform its duties; and if he is governor de jure, in possession of the office, David O. Watkins cannot at the same time be governor de facto, and the warrant signed by him is without the slightest legal value. All that appears in the case before us is that Gov. Griggs resigned; that Foster M. Voorhees, president of the senate, took the oath before stated; that he subsequently resigned his office of senator; that David O. Watkins is speaker of the assembly, and that he took the oath set forth. No act appears on his part to show that he is governor de facto except the oath and the signing of the death warrant. If Foster M. Voorhees was governor, and his resignation of the senatorship was not a vacation of his office as governor, he must still be governor, nothing appearing before us except his resignation as senator to show that he is not still acting and claiming to act as governor. We are constrained, therefore, to resort to an interpretation of the provisions of our state constitution touching this subject, to determine whether David O. Watkins had the right, either de jure or de facto, to do the act which has given rise to this litigation.

The clause of the constitution which provides for the vacancy in the office of governor is as follows: "In case of the death, resignation or removal from office of the governor, *110 the powers, duties and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate, and in case of his death, resignation or removal, then upon the speaker of the house of assembly, for the time being, until another governor shall be elected, and qualified; but in such case another governor shall be chosen at the next election for members of the legislature, unless such death, resignation or removal shall occur within thirty days immediately preceding such next election, in **157 which case a governor shall be chosen at the second succeeding election for members of the legislature. When a vacancy happens, during the recess of the legislature, in any office which is to be filled by the governor and senate or by the legislature in joint meeting, the governor shall fill such vacancy and the commission shall expire at the end of the next session of the legislature unless a successor shall be sooner appointed; when a vacancy happens in the office of clerk or surrogate of any county, the governor shall fill such vacancy, and the commission shall expire when a successor is elected and qualified." Article 5, cl. 12. In construing this clause of the constitution it must be borne in mind that it was carefully drawn by learned jurists, who knew how to express with exactness and precision the purpose they had in view. The provision is that, in case of the resignation of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate, and not that the president of the senate shall thereby become governor, and hold the title and the office until another governor is elected. If the framers of the fundamental law had intended to transfer the president of the senate to the executive chair, and thereby to vacate his office of senator, it is reasonable to believe that they would have said so in no uncertain language. The language used is not ambiguous. It declares that the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve on the president of the senate; it does not confer upon him the title of the office. The president of the senate exercises the powers of the *111 governor; the president of the senate performs the duties of the governor; the president of the senate receives the emoluments of that office. He is still president of the senate, with the added duties required of the chief executive of the state imposed upon him. There is no language in the constitution from which it can reasonably be inferred that his office of president of the senate was to be vacated. He retains his office of senator; and as president of the senate, and not as governor, he exercises the added powers and performs the superimposed duties. That such is not only the ordinary acceptation and the reasonable interpretation of the language employed, but also the intention of those who framed this clause, is evinced in other parts of the organic law. In clauses 9 and 10 of article 5 and clauses 2 and 3 of article 8 this language appears: "The governor or person administering the government." Why is this language so sedulously used throughout the constitution? If the president of the senate becomes governor, and ceases to be senator, he is fitly and accurately described in all those clauses by the word "governor," and therefore the words "person administering the government" are not only unnecessary and superfluous, but misdescriptive. The words "person administering the government" were inserted advisedly to describe the president of the senate who might be called upon to administer the government, but who would not thereby become or be governor; and, in the absence of that language, would not be subject to the clauses referred to. Again, article 3 of the constitution provides as follows: "The powers of the government shall be divided into three distinct departments, the legislative, executive and judicial; and no person or persons belonging to or constituting one of these departments, shall exercise any of the powers properly belonging to either of the others, except as herein expressly provided." *112 What is the significance of the words in this clause, "except as herein expressly provided"? What powers belonging to one department of government were there which it was expressly provided in the constitution might be exercised by one of the other departments? The framers of this article said by this exception, in unmistakable language, there are some powers belonging to one department of the government which it is expressly provided in this constitution shall be exercised by a person or persons belonging to one of the other departments. In the constitution we find such a provision, and it is the only one in the constitution except the power to reprieve. That provision is the one before referred to in clause 12 of article 5, which provides that the president of the senate, or, in case of his death, resignation, or removal, the speaker of the house, shall exercise the powers of the executive department of the government in the contingency therein specified. It must, therefore, have been the understanding and intention of the constitution makers that the executive powers to be exercised by a member of the legislative department were to be exercised in the capacity of a legislator, and that made the exception in article 3 a necessary provision.

But it is argued that the president of the senate is a judge of the court of impeachment, and may try himself if he is impeached, and pardon himself if convicted. This is clearly a misconception of the situation. As president of the senate he performs the duties of the chief executive, and any malfeasance in that respect is as much a violation of his duty as a senator and as president of the senate as malfeasance in his purely legislative action would be. If impeached, it would be as a senator, and not as governor. He would be tried by the senate, which is the trial court in all cases of impeachment. While there is no express provision in the constitution that a member of the senate shall not sit as a judge on his own trial if impeached, he is nevertheless incompetent, and would be excluded. The principle *113 that a man shall not be a judge in his own case is accepted universally by judicial tribunals. It is a rule of such fundamental character that it is deemed essential to the well-being of society, and underlies the organic law itself. If any doubt could arise upon this point, a reference to **158 section 3 of article 6 of the constitution should set it at rest. That section provides that all impeachments shall be tried by the senate, and that the members of the senate, when sitting for that purpose, shall each take an oath "truly and impartially to try and determine the charge in question according to evidence." It would be the sublimity of folly to attempt to bind a senator by such an oath when he was sitting in his own case. If the president of the senate was impeached and convicted, he would cease to be senator, and thereupon the powers of the executive would devolve upon the speaker of the house. The fact that the president of the senate exercises both legislative and executive functions in the view herein taken can have no significance in this discussion, when we advert to the fact that under the first state constitution the governor was not only the chief executive, but he was also president of the legislative council, with a casting vote, and presiding judge of the highest court in the state. The powers of government were more wisely distributed by the constitution of 1844, in which, by article 3, a member of one department could not exercise a power belonging to either of the others, except in the instances where the office of governor became vacant, and the power to reprieve was granted. If anything is needed to establish the correctness of this view, it is found in clause 13 of article 5, which reads as follows: "In case of the impeachment of the governor, his absence from the state or inability to discharge the duties of his office, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate; and in case of his death, resignation or removal, then upon the speaker *114 of the house of assembly for the time being, until the governor absent, or impeached, shall return or be acquitted, or until the disqualification or inability shall cease, or until a new governor be elected and qualified." In case of the absence of the governor from the state, precisely the same language is used as in clause 12 in relation to his resignation of the office, and it must necessarily receive the same interpretation. In case of his absence from the state, "the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate until the governor returns." Will it be seriously contended that, when the governor goes out of the state, the president of the senate becomes governor until the duly-elected governor returns, and thereby vacates and loses his office as senator? That such an interpretation of this language would be adopted could not have been within the contemplation of the able men who incorporated it in this clause relating to a matter of supreme importance. It is true construction, then, when the senate was composed of 10 members of one party and 11 of the other, the governor of the state, by the simple device of passing into an adjoining state, could have vacated the seat of one senator, and thus have deprived the opposing party of a majority in that branch of the legislature. In my judgment, the framers of the constitution meant simply what they said,—that, in case the governor resigned, the president of the senate, as such, should have the powers and perform the duties of the office. Foster M. Voorhees did not become governor upon the resignation of Gov. Griggs. He still continued to be a senator, and president of the senate. He could not resign the office of governor, which he never held. When he resigned and vacated the office of senator, he ceased to be president of the senate, and could no longer exercise the functions pertaining to the executive department. Therefore, upon his resignation as senator, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office devolved upon David O. Watkins, the speaker of the house of assembly. *115 He is de jure the speaker of the house, and of right, as such speaker, exercises the executive powers. He is not governor, either de jure or de facto, in the constitutional sense of that term. The act of 1898 cannot, in any respect, affect this controversy.

The question, therefore, remains to be considered whether the issuing of the warrant for the execution of Clifford was a valid exercise by David O. Watkins of the powers committed to him as speaker of the house of assembly? By the common law, where the judgment was pronounced in the oyer and terminer, a precept for execution was issued to the sheriff in the name and under the hands and seals of the three commissioners before whom judgment was given; but the precepts by justices of the jail delivery need not have been otherwise than by a simple award upon the roll. In later times there was no more done, but, after judgment was entered, the judges subscribed a calendar in paper directing the several judgments of deliverance to the parties acquitted, or the execution of the parties condemned, of which the sheriff was required to take notice openly in court. 2 Hale, P. C. p. 409. It is also quite clear that by the common law the time and place of execution were not named in the sentence; it was left to the judgment and discretion of the sheriff. The execution of the prisoner was directed by the words "sus. per coll." written against his name in a calendar prepared for the purpose. Mr. Chitty says: "The practice of the present day at the assizes is that, when all the other public business of the court is terminated, the clerk makes out in writing four lists of prisoners in the separate columns containing their crimes, verdicts, and sentences, and a blank column, in which the judge writes his pleasure respecting those capitally convicted as to be executed, respited, or transported. If the sheriff receives no special order from the judge, he executes the judgment of the law in the usual manner, according to the directions of the calendar." 1 Chit. Cr. Law, 781. **159 *116 The only instance of a warrant from the crown was in the case of high treason, where a peer of the realm was tried before parliament. Where all the rest of the judgment save the beheading was pardoned, the execution was to be under the great seal. 3 Co. Just. p. 31; 2 Hale, P. C. pp. 409-412. In felonies we think it clear that the direction for the execution of the sentence was a judicial act, for these reasons: First, that the judgment of the court was a sufficient warrant; and, secondly, issues extraneous of those raised at the trial might be raised in suspension of the sentence, which required a judicial determination,—as, for instance, where the convict is a female, she may plead that she is quick with child; and, second, if an allegation be made that since the conviction the accused has become insane. In both of these cases, as well as others, there is to be a judicial investigation. 4 Bl. Comm. 395. At common law, reprieve might be granted either by the king, under his power to pardon, or by the court; and every court which had power to award execution had power to grant a reprieve. This reprieve was simply a suspension of the sentence. In Rex v. Harris, 1 Ld. Raym. 482, "counsel urged that in criminal causes, where execution is deferred, it cannot be awarded without bringing the prisoner to the bar, to which Holt, C. J., agreed, and he cited Knightly's Case, who was indicted for high treason, and, being arraigned at bar in the king's bench, confessed the indictment, and judgment of death was pronounced against him in Easter term, and execution was countermanded, so that Trinity term passed, and then in the long vacation they had designed to execute it, and upon that all the judges of England met to consider what could be done, and it was resolved by all that in regard a term had intervened without execution done it could not be awarded without bringing Knightly to the bar; and, per Holt, C. J., it would be the same thing if Trinity term had not passed, but only begun, so that Knightly was imprisoned *117 until Michaelmas term, and in the meantime he obtained a pardon." In Sir Walter Rawley's Case the question was whether a privy seal was sufficient for execution. It was resolved on a conference between all the judges that the prisoner ought to be brought to the court, and then demanded if he could say anything, etc., and that it was not a legal course that he should be commanded by a privy seal or great seal to be executed without being demanded what he hath to say, etc. Hut. 21. If the governor can intervene and have execution by virtue of his warrant, the prisoner will be deprived of the right of a judicial determination of matters which in law are subjects of judicial cognizance. If the order which shall carry the judgment of the court into effect is one within judicial control,—as we deem it to be,—then the several constitutional provisions are to be considered. By the constitution of 1776 the governor had no power to pardon or to grant reprieve. Whatever power there was in that respect was vested in the governor and council; that is the court of appeals.

Under the power to pardon at common law the power of the king to reprieve was included, and the power of reprieve was not vested in the governor, but in the governor and council. By the act of November 16, 1820, the governor, with the advice of his privy council, had power to suspend execution of the sentence of death until the rising of the next meeting of the governor and council. By the act of 1821, where such a reprieve was granted, and a pardon was not granted at the next meeting, it was made the duty of the governor and council to appoint a time for the execution of the criminal. Elmer's Dig. p. 118. By the constitution of 1844 the executive, with the concurrence of the chancellor and of the six judges of the court of appeals, or a major part of them, may grant pardons after conviction (article 5, cl. 10); and by article 5, cl. 9, the executive was *118 given power to grant reprieve to extend until the expiration of a time not exceeding 90 days after conviction. By the act of April 16, 1846, it is provided that, where a reprieve is granted by the governor, the governor shall issue his warrant to the sheriff of the proper county, commanding him to execute the sentence at such time as shall therein be appointed and expressed. Revision, p. 290, § 123. Power to reprieve is limited to a postponement of the execution for 90 days after the conviction; that is, after the sentence in the court below. By article 3 of the constitution of 1844, before set forth, the governor is prohibited from exercising any legislative or judicial power except as in said constitution is expressly provided. The express provision of the constitution on this subject, so far as concerns the executive, is that he shall have power to suspend the sentence of the court for a period not exceeding 90 days. The term "reprieve," as used both in the constitution and in the statute, is merely the postponement of the sentence for a time. It does not and cannot defeat the ultimate execution of the judgment of the court; it merely delays it. In the exercise of the power to reprieve for 90 days, which is the constitutional limit of that power, the governor has, as an incident to that power, the right to say that at the expiration of that time the sheriff shall no longer be stayed, but shall proceed to execute the judgment of the court. The reprieve, to be in proper form, should fix a day not exceeding 90 days from the sentence, when it shall expire, and direct the execution to be proceeded with at the expiration of that time. The execution takes place then, not by order of the governor, but in virtue of the judgment of the court. The governor simply says: "The prisoner is adjudged to be executed on a certain day. I direct the execution to be postponed until a future day specified, and then the execution is to be proceeded with." *119 In Ex parte Flemming, 60 Miss. 910, **160 the court said: "The power to respite necessarily carries with it the power to fix another and later day for the execution of the death sentence, since the respite is nothing more than a suspension of the sentence until its own expiration. The subsequent execution takes place, not by virtue of a new sentence, but by reason of the expiration of the temporary suspension of the original sentence which was caused by the respite." Sterling v. Drake, 29 Ohio St. 457, is to the like effect. If there was a doubt in respect to the proper procedure in this respect, the long-continued practice of the executive department to make orders for the execution of sentences where there has been a reprieve will justify the construction that such orders may be issued, provided that the time for execution is not extended beyond the 90 days. That practice, commencing in 1853, has been pursued until the present time. The order certified into this court was made after the expiration of the 90 days, and is without any legal or constitutional warrant, and must be set aside. The order made in the case of Martin by Gov. Ludlow does not conflict with the views herein expressed. The reprieve and order were both within 90 days from the time of conviction, and, that time having elapsed, Martin was executed, not under the governor's warrant, but under an order made by the court of oyer and terminer. The traverse of the sheriff's return to the writ of habeas corpus must be stricken out, and the prisoner remanded. Let rules be entered accordingly.

CONSTITUTION, ARTICLE III, SECTION 9; ARTICLE IV, SECTIONS 5 AND 3; PUBLIC OFFICERS LAW, SECTIONS 41, 42 AND 53.

*1 In the event of the death of the Lieutenant-Governor, no election may be held in order to fill that office. The New York Constitution makes express provision for the devolution of the duties but omits provision for any election to fill the office. Only if there be no Governor and no Lieutenant-Governor, is an election required by the Constitution to fill the Governor's office. Even then there is no provision for filling the office of Lieutenant-Governor.

Department of State

You have requested my opinion—whether you should certify that the office of Lieutenant-Governor of this State is to be filled at the next general election, in view of the recent death of the late Lieutenant-Governor, the Honorable Thomas W. Wallace.

The question is answered in the negative.

From the explicit language of the Constitution it is clear that, in the event of the death of the Lieutenant-Governor, no election may be held for the purpose of filling that office. Instead, a precise devolution of the functions of that office is provided. This is completely unlike the situation that obtains with the other statewide elective offices, such as the Attorney-General and the Comptroller. Only in the event that there be no Governor and no Lieutenant-Governor does the Constitution require an election to fill the office of Governor otherwise than in the regular gubernatorial election years. Even then there is no provision for filling the office of Lieutenant-Governor.

The succession to the Governorship has always received special treatment in the various Constitutions of the State. This special treatment not only maintains uninterrupted functioning of government but seeks to make certain that the State's Chief Executive be chosen only after opportunity for the full and free expression of the people's will. Thus great and fundamental State issues may receive the undivided attention of the people and the widest attendance at the polls.

This constitutional plan of succession is patterned after the Constitution of the United States.

The first Constitution of the State was adopted in 1777, before the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. It made provision for the election of a Lieutenant-Governor in the event of his death, resignation or removal. It provided (Art. XX): "That a lieutenant-governor shall, at every election of a governor, and as often as the lieutenant-governor shall die, resign, or be removed from office, be elected in the same manner with the governor, to continue in office until the next election of a governor; * * *"

That very explicit provision was omitted from the Constitution of 1821.

The subsequent Constitutions of 1846, 1894 and 1938 have similarly omitted any provision for the election of a Lieutenant-Governor in the event of death, resignation or removal. It should be noted that these provisions of the Constitution which omitted this provision followed the adoption of the United States Constitution, which contained no provision for electing a Vice-President in the event of a vacancy in that office.

*2 The plan under all the Constitutions of this State since the one of 1777 has been for a succession to the governorship or lieutenant-governorship when either of those officers should die, resign or be removed, rather than elections to fill such offices, except when both the offices of Governor and Lieutenant-Governor are vacant. In 1847 the Legislature enacted a special law (ch. 303) requiring the election of a Lieutenant-Governor to fill a vacancy in that office. That law was never tested in the courts. In any event, it applied only to the election to be held in that year. In the same year, the general law on the subject of vacancies was amended by chapter 240 and expressly excepted the offices of Governor and Lieutenant-Governor.

The Constitution of 1894 (Art. IV, §§ 6 and 7) contained the following provisions on the subject:

“When lieutenant-governor to act as governor. § 6. In case of the impeachment of the Governor, or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, resignation, or absence from the State, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant-Governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease. But when the Governor shall, with the consent of the Legislature, be out of the State, in time of war, at the head of a military force thereof, he shall continue Commander-in-Chief of all the military force of the State.”

“Qualifications and duties of lieutenant-governor; succession to the governorship-§ 7. The Lieutenant-Governor shall possess the same qualifications of eligibility for office as the Governor. He shall be president of the Senate, but shall have only a casting vote therein. If during a vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant-Governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or become incapable of performing the duties of his office, or be absent from the State, the President of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease; and if the President of the Senate for any of the above causes shall become incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor, the Speaker of the Assembly shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease.”

The references in section 7 to a vacancy were apparently to a vacancy in the office of Governor and the references to disability to a disability of the Lieutenant-Governor. (Lincoln's Constitutional History of New York, Vol. IV, p. 490).

It is thus seen that, under the Constitution of 1894, upon a vacancy occurring in the office of Governor, the duties of that office devolved upon the Lieutenant-Governor for the remainder of the term. It was only when a vacancy existed in both the office of Governor and Lieutenant-Governor that an election was to take place and then the election was to be of a Governor only. The use of the singular noun “vacancy” when vacancies would exist in both offices makes that entirely clear. There is thus no need for an election except when the office of both Governor and Lieutenant-Governor are vacant. Since there is no need for an election when the Governor dies, certainly there is no need for an election when the Lieutenant-Governor dies while the Governor still holds office.

*3 In the revision by the Constitutional Convention of 1938, section 6 of Article IV was renumbered 5 and section 7 became section 6. The only other change in former section 6 was to delete the word “said”. The last sentence of former section 7 was divided into two sentences and amended to read:

“If the office of governor become vacant and there be no lieutenant-governor, such vacancy shall be filled for the remainder of the term at the next general election happening not less than three months after such vacancy occurs; and in such case, until the vacancy be filled by election, or in case the lieutenant-governor be under impeachment or unable to discharge the powers and duties of the office of governor or shall be absent from the state, the temporary president of the senate shall act as governor during such inability, absence or the pendency of such impeachment. If the temporary president of the senate shall be unable to discharge the power and duties of the office of governor or be absent from the state, the speaker of the assembly shall act as governor during such inability or absence.”

This amendment was obviously designed to clarify the former language and was made without any purpose to effect a change the plan of succession or the circumstances under which an election should take place. On that subject, the Chairman of the Committee on Governor and Other State Officers of the Constitutional Convention of 1938 said (Revised Record, Vol. III, p. 2523):

“We now come to Section 6. The change in this section deals with the succession in office of the Governor, and it has been made so that it will be a correct statement of succession. It is now provided that in the event a vacancy occurs in the office of Lieutenant-Governor, it should be filled by the President of the Senate. The Lieutenant-Governor is the President of the Senate, so that the language means nothing. We have redrafted the section so that it states the correct succession of officers.”

The 1938 revision removed any doubt that it is the office of Governor rather than that of Lieutenant-Governor that is to be filled in the case of vacancies in both the offices of Governor and Lieutenant-Governor and made it plain in even clearer language that it is only when there are vacancies in both offices that there is to be an election.

Any argument contrary to the conclusion which I have expressed must of necessity be based upon the general provisions of law relating to the filling of vacancies in office. The Constitution (Art. XIII § 8) provides as follows:

“The legislature shall provide for filling vacancies in office, and in case of elective officers, no person appointed to fill a vacancy shall hold his office by virtue of such appointment longer than the commencement of the political year next succeeding the first annual election after the happening of the vacancy.”

Pursuant to that direction, the Legislature has provided (Public Officers Law, § 42) that a “vacancy occurring before October fifteenth of any year in any office authorized to be filled at a general election, shall be filled at the general election held next thereafter, unless otherwise provided by the constitution, or unless previously filled at a special election.” That that provision was not intended to apply to the office of Governor or Lieutenant-Governor is made clear by other provisions of the Public Officers Law. Section 41 of that law provides:

*4 “Vacancies filled by legislature. When a vacancy occurs or exists, other than by removal, in the office of comptroller or attorney-general, or a resignation of either such officer to take effect at any future day shall have been made while the legislature is in session, the two houses thereof, by joint ballot, shall appoint a person to fill such actual or prospective vacancy.”

That section from 1849 to 1926 also embraced all of the other effective State officers except Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, viz: Secretary of State, Treasurer and State Engineer and Surveyor, until such offices were abolished as elective offices. Section 42 of the Public Officers Law, as well as section 41, applies to the offices of State Comptroller and Attorney-General (1941 A. G. 250; Matter of Moore v. Walsh, 286 N. Y. 552). If the Legislature had intended that section 42 should apply to the office of Lieutenant-Governor, it naturally would have included that office in section 41 also. The omission shows recognition of the fact that death or disability of the Lieutenant-Governor was taken care of by the rule of succession contained in the Constitution itself.

Again, section 43 of the Public Officers Law provides:

“If a vacancy shall occur, otherwise than by expiration of term, with no provision of law for filling the same, if the office be elective, the governor shall appoint a person to execute the duties thereof until the vacancy shall be filled by an election. But if the term of such officer shall expire with the calendar year in which the appointment shall be made, or if the office be appointive, the appointee shall hold for the residue of the term.”

No one has ever claimed that this section conferred upon the Governor the power to appoint his own successor. Such a contention would lead to the anomalous result that a Governor by appointing a Lieutenant-Governor and then resigning could impose upon the people his own choice as their Governor. Yet there is no distinction in language between this section and section 42 of the Public Officers Law which provides for filling vacancies in other elective offices.

Section 9 of Article III of the Constitution contains the provision:

“and the senate shall choose a temporary president to preside in case of the absence or impeachment of the lieutenant-governor, or when he shall refuse to act as president, or shall act as governor.”

Under the constitutional plan, there is in no real sense a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant-Governor when the incumbent dies, for immediately and automatically, the Temporary President of the Senate succeeds to his duties as President of the Senate (Art. III, § 9, supra) and becomes authorized to act as Governor during a vacancy in that office or when the Governor is without the State (Art. IV, § 6, supra). In my opinion, the rule of succession which the Constitution prescribes was intended to be all-inclusive and to deny to the Legislature the authority to provide for the election of a Governor or Lieutenant-Governor otherwise than provided by the Constitution itself.

*5 The functions of the Lieutenant-Governor under the Constitution are (1) to exercise the powers and perform the duties of Governor when that office is vacant or the Governor is without the State, and (2) to preside over the Senate. The Constitution makes provision for the carrying out of both of those functions by others when there is no Lieutenant-Governor. There is thus no necessity or occasion for the election of a Lieutenant-Governor when that officer dies. The Constitution recognizes this not alone in the general succession plan which it sets up, but also by an explicit provision of section 6 of Article IV. When there is no Governor and no Lieutenant-Governor, express provision is made for an election to fill the vacancy in the office of Governor (supra, page 2). Yet even upon such election for Governor, no provision is made for the election of a Lieutenant-Governor.

The rule of succession under the New York Constitution is substantially the same as the rule of succession to the presidency and vice-presidency under the Federal Constitution and statutes. Section 5 of Article II of the Constitution of the United States provides:

“In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the same shall devolve on the Vice-President and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death, Resignation or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as President, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.”

Pursuant to that authority, the Congress has provided (U. S. Code, Title 3, § 21) for the succession to the presidency, in turn, of various members of the President’s cabinet.

The Federal Constitution further provides (Art. 1, § 3):

“The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no Vote, unless they be equally divided.

The Senate shall chuse their other Officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the absence of the Vice-President, or when he shall exercise the Office of President of the United States.”

Significantly, no provision is made in either Constitution or statute for the election or appointment of a Vice-President and in the several instances in which Vice-Presidents have died in office (1853, 1875, 1885, 1899) no election has taken place or appointment been made.

In conclusion, it is apparent that the Constitution of this State makes express provision for the devolution of the Lieutenant-Governor’s duties but definitely omits provision for any election to fill the office. In fact, such a provision was contained in the first Constitution of 1777, and eliminated thereafter. Analysis of the statutes and analogies from the Federal Constitution also demonstrate that no election is proper. Moreover, the nature of the Lieutenant-Governor’s functions makes it inappropriate to attempt to fill the office otherwise than in the regular gubernatorial election years.

*6 Without discussing any technical ground which might lead to the same result (see Election Law, §§ 69, 82, 319-f), it is my opinion that you should not certify that the office of Lieutenant-Governor is to be filled at the election to be held in November.

Synopsis

Background: State Senator brought action seeking declaratory judgment that Governor could not, consistent with the New York State Constitution, appoint putative nominee to office of Lieutenant-Governor, and for permanent injunction prohibiting Governor from appointing nominee or any other individual to that office. The Supreme Court, Nassau County, William R. LaMarca, J., 25 Misc.3d 347, 884 N.Y.S.2d 812, granted the Senator's motion for a preliminary injunction enjoining the nominee from exercising any of the powers of the office of Lieutenant-Governor. The Supreme Court, Appellate Division, 65 A.D.3d 339, 885 N.Y.S.2d 92, affirmed. Governor appealed.

Holding: The Court of Appeals, Lippman, Chief Judge, held that Governor had authority to fill vacancy in office of Lieutenant-Governor by appointment.

Reversed.

Pigott, J., filed opinion dissenting in which Graffeo and Smith, JJ., concurred.

*146 **1142 OPINION OF THE COURT

Chief Judge LIPPMAN.

The issue on this appeal is whether the Governor of the State of New York has the authority to fill a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor by appointment. We now hold that he does.

I.

In November 2006, Eliot Spitzer and David Paterson were elected respectively to the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. On March 17, 2008, Governor Spitzer resigned and, pursuant to article IV § 5 of the New York Constitution, Lieutenant Governor Paterson became Governor. Fifteen months later, Republicans and Democrats split 31–31 in the Senate. Because each party recognized a different temporary *147 president of the Senate, this political deadlock complicated the conduct of day-to-day business in the Senate chamber. Moreover, it was not clear which one of the rival temporary presidents stood next in the line of gubernatorial succession.

On July 8, 2009, Governor Paterson responded to this situation by appointing Richard Ravitch to the office of Lieutenant Governor. Pursuant to article IV, § 6 of the Constitution, the Lieutenant Governor presides over the Senate and casts a tie-breaking vote on certain procedural matters. Governor Paterson relied on section 43 of the Public Officers Law in making this appointment.

The following day, plaintiff Dean G. Skelos, a State Senator elected from the 9th Senatorial District, commenced this action for a declaratory judgment that the Governor's appointment of Mr. Ravitch was unconstitutional.<sup>1</sup> He also sought to permanently enjoin the Governor from appointing any individual to the office of Lieutenant Governor. Plaintiff then moved to preliminarily enjoin Mr. Ravitch from acting in the capacity of Lieutenant Governor. Supreme Court, Nassau County granted the preliminary injunction (25 Misc.3d 347, 884 N.Y.S.2d 812 [2009] ), and the Appellate Division, Second Department, affirmed (65 A.D.3d 339; 885 N.Y.S.2d 92 [2009] ). Thus, Mr. Ravitch has, to date, not presided over the Senate.

In assessing the likelihood of plaintiff's success upon the merits (see **1143 Doe v. Axelrod, 73 N.Y.2d 748, 750, 536 N.Y.S.2d 44, 532 N.E.2d 1272 [1988] ), the Appellate Division held that

“the Governor's purported appointment of Mr. Ravitch was unlawful because no provision of the Constitution or of any statute provides for the filling of a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor other than by election, and only the temporary president of the Senate is authorized to perform the duties of that ***848 office during the period of the vacancy” (65 A.D.3d at 348, 885 N.Y.S.2d 92).

The Appellate Division sua sponte granted the Governor leave to appeal from its order, and certified a question to this Court. We now reverse.

*148 II.

The Governor has raised a threshold question as to Senator Skelos's standing to sue in light of the stringent criteria for legislator standing that we adopted in Silver v. Pataki, 96 N.Y.2d 532, 539–540, 730 N.Y.S.2d 482, 755 N.E.2d 842 [2001]. The parties do not dispute, however, that the public's interest is best served by resolving the constitutional issue presented by the Governor's action as expeditiously as possible. Accordingly, assuming, without deciding, that Senator Skelos presently has standing to sue the Governor, we now proceed to the merits (see Matter of New York State Assn. of Criminal Defense Lawyers v. Kaye, 96 N.Y.2d 512, 516, 730 N.Y.S.2d 477, 755 N.E.2d 837 [2001]; Babigian v. Wachtler, 69 N.Y.2d 1012, 1013, 517 N.Y.S.2d 905, 511 N.E.2d 49 [1987]; Matter of Roman Catholic Diocese of Albany v. New York State Dept. of Health, 66 N.Y.2d 948, 951, 498 N.Y.S.2d 780, 489 N.E.2d 749 [1985] ).

III.

Our State Constitution specifies that “[t]he legislature shall provide for filling vacancies in office” (N.Y. Const, art XIII, § 3 [emphasis supplied] ), and expressly contemplates that vacancies in elective office may be filled by appointment (see id.). In pursuance of the constitutional mandate imposed by article XIII, § 3, the Legislature has enacted three comprehensive and complementary provisions, i.e., Public Officers Law §§ 41, 42 and 43. The first of these, titled “Vacancies filled by legislature” (emphasis supplied), prescribes the means by which vacancies in the offices of State Attorney General and Comptroller are to be filled. The second, titled “Filling vacancies in elective offices” (emphasis supplied), generally requires that such vacancies occurring before September 20th of any year in office be filled by means of election at the next general election, but, in the case of a vacancy in the office of United States Senator, requires, in certain circumstances, a temporary appointment by the Governor “to fill such vacancy” (see Public Officers Law § 42[4-a]). Notably, this section specifically excepts from its scope the elective offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. The last of these vacancy-filling provisions, section 43, the one upon which the Governor relied in his appointment of Mr. Ravitch, titled “Filling other vacancies” (emphasis supplied), is plainly intended as a catchall to complete the Legislature’s satisfaction of the mandate of article XIII, § 3. Unlike its neighboring provision, section 42, section 43 does not specifically exclude any office from its application, but rather provides:

*149 “If a vacancy shall occur, otherwise than by expiration of term, with no provision of law for filling the same, if the office be elective, the governor shall appoint a person to execute the duties thereof until the vacancy shall be filled by an election” (emphasis supplied).

It is not disputed that when Governor Spitzer resigned in March 2008, then-Lieutenant Governor Paterson became Governor **1144 for the remainder of Governor Spitzer’s term (see N.Y. Const, art IV § 5). Nor can it be reasonably disputed that when Lieutenant Governor Paterson became Governor, he ceased being Lieutenant Governor, leaving a vacancy in that office. The first condition of the statute’s applicability was thus met.

The second condition of section 43—that there be no provision of law (apart from section 43) for filling the vacancy—was also satisfied. The only other provision of law bearing upon how a vacancy in the ***849 office of Lieutenant Governor alone is to be dealt with is article IV § 6 of the State Constitution, but its direction that “the temporary president of the senate shall perform all the duties of lieutenant-governor” applies only “during [the] vacancy or inability” and thus cannot fill or end the vacancy. Plaintiff does not appear to contend otherwise; indeed, the central contention of plaintiff’s argument is that the Constitution requires that a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor be preserved until the next

An appointment under Public Officers Law § 43, in contrast to the devolution mandated by article IV § 6, effectively fills the office in accordance with the command of article XIII, § 3; the article IV, § 6 devolution, although plainly necessary and useful to assure continuity of service in the short term, can at best provide only stopgap coverage of the function of the Lieutenant Governor. Properly understood, then, the two provisions—article IV, § 6 and Public Officers Law § 43—are complementary rather than duplicative and, accordingly, article IV, § 6 should not be construed, as it was by the Appellate Division, as a limitation upon gubernatorial appointment pursuant to Public Officers Law § 43. Article IV, § 6 merely states what is to occur while there is a vacancy; it does not, and cannot, consistent with the command of article XIII, § 3, be understood to state that the vacancy may not be filled.

The dissent places singular importance upon the apparent equivalence of the operative verbs in each of the provisions at issue—“execute” in Public Officers Law § 43 and “perform” in *150 article IV, § 6—arguing that the provisions must be understood as duplicative, and, accordingly, that neither provision may be applied to fill the office of Lieutenant Governor. But, a correct understanding of what the provisions at issue are intended to accomplish does not turn on whether or not these expressions are themselves semantically equivalent. When understood in context, each expression refers to a materially different assumption of authority: the assumption under section 43 is plenary, in accordance with the mandate of article XIII, § 3 that vacancies be filled, but that occurring pursuant to article IV, § 6, concededly, is not.

Nor does article XIII, § 3’s proviso that “no person appointed to fill a vacancy [in elective office] shall hold his or her office by virtue of such appointment longer than the commencement of the political year next succeeding the first annual election after the happening of the vacancy” prevent the Governor from appointing a Lieutenant Governor. The intent of the constitutional limitation is clear; namely, to assure that appointments to elective offices extend no longer than is reasonably necessary to fill such offices by election. Where, as here, an office may not legally appear on the ballot except quadrennially (see N.Y. Const, art IV, §§ 1, 6), and there will be a lengthy period before the next election for the office may be held, plaintiff’s reading of the durational limitation at issue would result in an extended vacancy running the balance of an elective term. This appears to be fundamentally incompatible with the main object of article **1145 XIII, § 3, expressed unequivocally in its first clause, which, of course, is to assure that vacancies are filled.

We have never interpreted article XIII, § 3 to impose the requirement that plaintiff finds in it. Rather, we have held that the provision demands only that “when a vacancy in elective office occurs, the vacancy must be filled by election in the shortest space of time reasonably possible” (Matter of Roher v. Dinkins, 32 N.Y.2d 180, 188, 344 N.Y.S.2d 841, 298 N.E.2d 37 [1973] [emphasis supplied]; see also Matter of Mitchell v. Boyle, 219 N.Y. 242, 248, 114 N.E. 382 [1916] ). Other states have dealt ***850 with the issue of measuring the permissible length of an appointment to an elective office similarly, holding that when the length of the appointive term is tied to the “next election” or the “first proper election” subsequent to the vacancy, what is meant is the next election at which the office may be legally filled (see People ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 114 Cal. 168, 171, 45 P. 1060, 1061 [1896]; State ex rel. Trauger v. Nash, 66 Ohio St. 612, 620–621, 64 N.E. 558, 560 [1902] ).

*151 We also reject plaintiff’s contention that article XIII must be read to forbid the appointment of a Lieutenant Governor so as to vindicate the elective principle. While there can be no quarrel with the proposition that, generally, election must be the preferred means of filling vacancies in elective office, it does not follow that the elective principle is preeminent when it comes to filling a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor.

We, of course, were completely in agreement with this contention when, in Matter of Ward v. Curran, 291 N.Y. 642, 50 N.E.2d 1023 [1943], affg. 266 App.Div. 524, 44 N.Y.S.2d 240 [3d Dept.1943], we unanimously affirmed a decision of the Appellate Division holding that, pursuant to article XIII of the Constitution and the then-current version of Public Officers Law § 42, a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor was to be filled at the next annual election subsequent to the vacancy. Our determination, however, engendered dismay in the executive branch because it raised a real possibility that the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor would be filled by individuals from opposing parties with incompatible political and policy agendas. As a consequence of our decision in Ward, Governor Dewey entreated the Legislature to amend the law, and the Legislature responded, specifically excepting the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor from the reach of Public Officers Law § 42 and its mandate that vacancies in elective office be filled by election. Subsequent constitutional amendments, requiring that the Governor and Lieutenant Governor be elected together quadrennially and by a single ballot (see N.Y. Const, art IV, §§ 1, 6), definitively eliminated any residual possibility that the executive branch would be split between members of opposing parties and, equally definitively, eliminated any possibility that a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor might be separately filled by election in a nonquadrennial year.

The elective principle, upheld by the judiciary in Ward, was thus legislatively subordinated to assure the structural integrity and efficacy of the executive branch and has remained so ever since. If it is to be restored to primacy in filling a nonquadrennial vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor, that is a matter for constitutional amendment.

That election has been deemed impermissible as a means of filling a midterm vacancy in the Lieutenant Governorship does not, however, mean that the vacancy may not be filled. Indeed, in amending the Public Officers Law to remove the office of Lieutenant Governor from the **1146 election mandate of *152 Public Officers Law § 42, the Legislature did not alter section 43, which, in the aftermath of Ward is logically understood as applying to a vacancy in the Lieutenant Governorship.<sup>2</sup> A ***851 conclusion that naturally follows this pairing of action and inaction is that the Legislature, while desirous of eliminating the problematic prospect of a divided executive, fully intended that a vacancy in the office would be filled in accordance with the mandate of article XIII, § 3, and that it would be filled by appointment pursuant to section 43. Filling the office by gubernatorial appointment is entirely consonant with the purpose of the post-Ward legislative and constitutional amendments, whereas requiring that the office be left vacant risked a scenario of the sort that the Legislature at Governor Dewey’s behest sought to avoid—one in which a president pro tem of the Senate, quite possibly of a party other than the Governor, would, while performing the duties of the Lieutenant Governor during a vacancy in the office, actively oppose the Governor’s agenda and frustrate the work of the executive branch.<sup>3</sup>

“Executive responsibilities in our government are so interwoven that the election of a Governor and Lieutenant Governor politically opposed to each other involves serious problems. As a practical matter the Governor must encounter difficulty in leaving the State even for a short period and on pressing public business. This has created the greatest embarrassment in other states, to the damage of public confidence in government and the injury of the public interest.

“Even more important, there is a great advantage in being able to entrust many of the complex administrative tasks of the Governor to an able Lieutenant Governor. I have done this repeatedly and with notable benefit to the people of the State. This would not have been possible if the Lieutenant Governor was required, as a matter of party loyalty, to lead the minority party.” (Message of the Governor In Relation to Proposed Constitutional Amendment For Joint Election of Governor and Lieutenant Governor, Feb. 9, 1953 [1953 N.Y. Legis Doc No. 36, at 3].)

To be sure, the subordination of the elective principle in this context is not entirely unproblematic. It does create the possibility *153 that an unelected individual will, for a time, occupy the State’s highest office. Rules of succession are, however, inevitably imperfect and, at some stage of the devolution they direct, invariably compromise elective principles. Before us, however, is not the abstract question of whether it would be better in the case of a vacancy in the office of the Lieutenant Governor to fill the vacancy by election or by gubernatorial appointment subject to legislative confirmation or by gubernatorial appointment alone. For now, the Legislature, pursuant to an express grant of constitutional authority, has specified that the vacancy is to be filled not by election but by gubernatorial appointment alone—a determination that the Legislature is always free to revisit.

IV

Until today, the interplay between Public Officers Law § 43 and article IV, § 6 of the Constitution presented an open legal **1147 question. Indeed, as our dissenting colleagues detail at some length, the particular legal configuration governing the outcome of the present dispute did not even come into existence until after Ward, and there have been, prior to the vacancy at issue, only two post-Ward vacancies in the office of the Lieutenant Governor. While it has been suggested that these vacancies were left unfilled because of some consensus as to the unavailability of the power of gubernatorial appointment, it is at least equally likely that they remained vacant for purely political reasons. Given these circumstances, it is entirely understandable that plaintiff has acted vigorously to ***852 defend his interpretation of the relevant constitutional and statutory provisions. Having given due consideration to plaintiff’s argument, however, we conclude that Public Officers Law § 43 affords the Governor the authority to fill a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor by appointment.

Accordingly, the order of the Appellate Division should be reversed, without costs, the motion for an injunction denied and the certified question answered in the negative.

PIGOTT, J. (dissenting).

Under the majority’s rationale, the possibility exists that the citizens of this state will one day find themselves governed by a person who has never been subjected to scrutiny by the electorate, and who could in turn appoint his or her own unelected Lieutenant Governor. Because this is contrary to the text of the New York Constitution and affords Governors unprecedented power to appoint a successor, we respectfully dissent.

*154 I.

When then-Governor Eliot Spitzer resigned and Lieutenant Governor David Paterson became our 55th Governor no one gave a thought or harbored a suggestion that he had the ability to appoint a Lieutenant Governor. This is not surprising since no Governor in the history of the State had done so. But after 15 months marked by a deeply troubled economy and a deadlock that paralyzed the State Senate, the Governor, prompted perhaps by understandable frustration, attempted on July 8, 2009 to unilaterally fill the post.

Shortly after the appointment, plaintiffs brought this action seeking judgment declaring that the Governor’s action in appointing a Lieutenant Governor was unconstitutional. The Governor, as the majority notes, asserted authority to do so pursuant to section 43 of the Public Officers Law, a section referred to by all parties as a “catch-all provision.” Until now, that provision had been used to fill vacancies in local offices but, in no instance, the second most important executive office in the state.

Supreme Court granted a preliminary injunction concluding, as relevant to this appeal, that the Senators “have alleged a usurpation of Senate power that gives rise to sufficient injury-in-fact falling within their zone of interest” and as such, they had standing to commence this action (25 Misc.3d 347, 359, 884 N.Y.S.2d 812 [2009]). Addressing the likelihood of success on the merits, the court concluded that article IV, § 6 of the Constitution “strongly suggests that the office is to remain vacant until such time as a Governor is elected” and “[s]ince a Lieutenant Governor has never been appointed, this interpretation is consistent with historical practice.” (Id.)

The court also reasoned that article XIII, § 3, which mandates the Legislature to fill “vacancies in office,” did not apply to a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor, because that constitutional provision permitted the appointee to serve only until **1148 the next election, while article IV, § 6 makes clear there can be no separate election for Lieutenant Governor. Therefore, since the Legislature is not empowered to fill the office of Lieutenant Governor under the Constitution, contrary to defendants’ urging, section 43 of the Public Officers Law is not available for that purpose. As a result, the court concluded the Senators had established a likelihood of success on the merits and granted an injunction.

The Appellate Division affirmed, rejecting defendants’ claim that Senator Skelos was without standing to bring the action, *155 noting that the Lieutenant Governor has the ability to control debate in the Senate chamber and to cast a vote to ***853 break a tie on certain procedural matters (65 A.D.3d 339, 885 N.Y.S.2d 92 [2009]). It concluded that the Governor simply did not have authority to appoint a Lieutenant Governor. That court too rejected the Governor’s reliance on Public Officers Law § 43 and determined that no provision of the Constitution nor any statute provides for the filling of the office of Lieutenant Governor other than by election.

II.

Unlike the majority, we view standing as a threshold issue that must be resolved and we determine that Senator Skelos established that he is a proper party to pursue this claim. The test for determining a litigant’s standing is twofold. “First, a plaintiff must show ‘injury in fact,’ meaning that plaintiff will actually be harmed by the challenged ... action. As the term itself implies, the injury must be more than conjectural” (New York State Assn. of Nurse Anesthetists v. Novello, 2 N.Y.3d 207, 211, 778 N.Y.S.2d 123, 810 N.E.2d 405 [2004], citing Society of Plastics Indus. v. County of Suffolk, 77 N.Y.2d 761, 772–773, 570 N.Y.S.2d 778, 573 N.E.2d 1034 [1991]). Second, the injury plaintiff asserts must fall within his or her zone of interest (Society of Plastics, 77 N.Y.2d at 773, 570 N.Y.S.2d 778, 573 N.E.2d 1034).

Our standing analysis begins—but does not end—with Silver v. Pataki, 96 N.Y.2d 532, 730 N.Y.S.2d 482, 755 N.E.2d 842 [2001]. In Silver, the Court held that Assembly Speaker Sheldon Silver—acting in his capacity as an individual legislator, and not as a legislative leader—had standing to pursue his claim that the Governor’s exercise of line-item veto power exceeded the powers granted the executive in the State Constitution. The general rule is that an individual legislator can sue—on a vote nullification or usurpation of power theory—to vindicate a personal injury, although “lost political battle” claims are not cognizable. Speaker Silver was deemed to have standing even though there were many other identifiable persons and organizations directly harmed by the exercise of the vetoes—such as any party who would have benefitted from the vetoed legislation (see Clinton v. City of New York, 524 U.S. 417, 118 S.Ct. 2091, 141 L.Ed.2d 393 [1998] [New York City, health care providers and others who would have benefitted from vetoed legislation successfully challenged constitutional validity of President Clinton’s exercise of the line-item veto]). Thus, the Court found standing in Silver even though a dismissal of Speaker Silver’s complaint would not have erected an impenetrable barrier to judicial consideration of that controversy.

*156 Although Senator Skelos’ contention that the Governor has exceeded his constitutional authority is different from the constitutional argument presented in Silver, his assertion of standing in this case is similarly legitimate. The Silver Court recognized that an individual legislator could initiate a lawsuit challenging vote nullification or usurpation of power by the Governor in the budget process, expressly rejecting **1149 the notion that only a majority of the legislative house could do so. This case does not involve the budget process but it does involve alleged overreaching by the Governor in a manner that directly affects each sitting Senator. Here it is claimed that the Governor has without constitutional authority installed an unelected person to serve as president of the Senate and, by that appointment, this private citizen has gained the authority to restrict the speech of elected Senators. This allegation of harm is not institutional in nature but is personal to each Senator.

The Lieutenant Governor's only constitutional duties are to preside over the Senate and, on occasion, issue a casting vote. If elected Senators cannot bring suit to challenge the alleged placement of a so- ***854 called "interloper" as the presiding officer of the body in which they serve, we are hard-pressed to identify who would have standing to object to this appointment. Granted, although he has expressed no inclination to do so, the Attorney General could initiate a quo warranto proceeding—but this is because a statute specifically grants him that right, not because he has standing under our common-law jurisprudence. Where a claim is justiciable—and here no one asserts that the controversy involves a political question rendering it inappropriate for judicial review—we have not interpreted our standing rules so strictly that they erect an impenetrable barrier to suit (see Consumers Union of U.S., Inc. v. State of New York, 5 N.Y.3d 327, 806 N.Y.S.2d 99, 840 N.E.2d 68 [2005]; Saratoga County Chamber of Commerce v. Pataki, 100 N.Y.2d 801, 814, 766 N.Y.S.2d 654, 798 N.E.2d 1047 [2003]; Boryszewski v. Brydges, 37 N.Y.2d 361, 364, 372 N.Y.S.2d 623, 334 N.E.2d 579 [1975] ). But if we adopt the Governor's position, that is precisely what we would be doing—raising the specter that this very significant issue concerning the constitutional validity of the Governor's appointment would be unreviewable by the judicial branch. Although the majority has chosen not to decide the issue of standing, we think it important to articulate a resolution of the standing issue given the magnitude of this case.

We further reject defendants' contention that the controversy is not ripe for review because Ravitch has not yet presided over the Senate, restricted any Senator's speech, or issued a casting *157 vote. This argument ignores the fact that Ravitch has been precluded from doing so, first by a temporary restraining order and, later, by the preliminary injunction issued by Supreme Court and affirmed by the Appellate Division. It would be ironic for this Court to dismiss a litigant's claim because, in initiating the lawsuit and obtaining preliminary relief, he was successful at postponing the imminent harm he is suing to prevent. In addition, it is alleged that the Governor's motivation in making the appointment was, in large part, to put Ravitch in a position to issue the tie-breaking vote to resolve the Senate leadership impasse—an allegation that is eminently plausible given the circumstances surrounding the appointment. This litigation—commenced soon after the appointment was made—was therefore not precipitous.

Moreover, since there appears to be no dispute that any ripeness problem would disappear the moment Ravitch presided over the Senate and ruled on any point of order, dismissing this action would only postpone a ruling on the merits in a situation where the public is manifestly best served by prompt resolution of an important constitutional issue. Nothing would be accomplished by burdening the public or the parties with further delay just to allow this inevitable scenario to play out. Nor do the parties urge us to do so.

Arriving at the merits, we note that both sides concede that the Constitution does not expressly accord the Governor the power to appoint a Lieutenant Governor. Nor can the Constitution itself be read in such a way as to permit the Governor to make an appointment to that office. The Constitution does, however, provide a clear line of succession to the office of Governor, the very purpose of article IV.

Article IV, § 6 provides that in the event of a vacancy in the offices of both Governor and Lieutenant Governor (a simultaneous vacancy): "the temporary president of the senate shall act as governor until the inability shall cease or until a governor shall be elected." If this situation arises, article IV, § 6 mandates that a prompt election be held by requiring that ***855 "a governor and lieutenant-governor shall be elected for the remainder of the term at the next general election happening not less than three months after both offices shall have become vacant." Most definitely, the framers of the Constitution were intent on having the electorate promptly fill both vacancies.

*158 Next, that section addresses a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor only, while there is a sitting Governor:

"In case of vacancy in the office of lieutenant-governor alone, or if the lieutenant-governor shall be impeached, absent from the state or otherwise unable to discharge the duties of office, the temporary president of the senate shall perform all the duties of lieutenant-governor during such vacancy or inability."

Thus, the drafters of the Constitution logically placed the duties of Lieutenant Governor in the hands of a duly elected state Senator—one who is elected president of that body by the entire Senate, representing all citizens of this state.

The majority errs in deciding that this constitutional mandate merely provides for a “caretaker” role by the temporary president for a limited interim period until the Lieutenant Governor’s office is filled by the Governor under the Public Officers Law. The majority also errs in reading the Public Officers Law, which contains specific provisions for filling vacancies in the offices of Comptroller, Attorney General, and United States Senator, to let the Lieutenant Governor’s office fall into a “catch-all” with all other elected officials in the state no matter how minor. A review of Public Officers Law §§ 41–43 makes the majority’s misreading of them clear. Together, they provide a comprehensive mechanism for dealing with vacancies in nearly every office in the state—but not that of Governor or Lieutenant Governor, who are separately treated in article IV, § 6.

Public Officers Law § 41, enacted pursuant to an express grant of authority in article IV, § 1 of the Constitution, provides for the filling of vacancies in the offices of Comptroller and Attorney General. Section 42 provides for the filling of vacancies in other elective offices, but expressly excludes the offices of Governor or Lieutenant Governor. Finally, section 43 addresses the filling of all “other vacancies” and provides: “If a vacancy shall occur, otherwise than by expiration of term, with no provision of law for filling the same, if the office be elective, the governor shall appoint a person to execute the duties thereof until the vacancy shall be filled by an election” (emphasis added).

When viewed in light of the constitutional construct of the executive office, its powers and duties, Public Officers Law § 43 cannot be construed to confer the right to fill a vacancy in the *159 Lieutenant Governor’s office. First, contrary to the majority’s view, section 43 by its terms **1151 only permits the Governor to appoint someone to an office to “execute the duties” of that office until the office can be filled by an election for the remainder of the term. Yet article IV of the Constitution clearly provides that when there is a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor, the duties of that office are assumed by the temporary president of the Senate—there is no language restricting the duration that the temporary president of the Senate fulfills those duties. This situation differs from the scenarios presented in cases like People ex rel. Smith v. Fisher, 1840 WL 3540, 24 Wend 215 [1840] and People ex rel. Henderson v. Snedeker, 1856 WL 6750, 4 Kern.

52, 14 N.Y. 52 [1856], in which a deputy took over when an elected official such as a county clerk was unable to complete a term of office and the deputy was then properly replaced by a gubernatorial appointee. The statutes at issue in ***856 those cases made clear that the deputy was to perform the duties of the elected office only until someone else could be “elected or appointed” and therefore clearly indicated that the deputy’s authority was intended to cease when the Governor appointed a replacement for the elected official. As such, the Court held that the deputy performed the duties of office only until the Governor appointed a replacement who, in turn, fulfilled the duties only until an election could be held.

In contrast, article IV, § 6 does not state that the temporary president of the Senate will fulfill the duties of the office of Lieutenant Governor only until someone else is appointed nor, unlike article IV, § 1 (addressing the offices of Comptroller and Attorney General), does it specifically direct the Legislature to craft a procedure for filling a midterm vacancy in that office. Rather, the clause unqualifiedly states that the temporary president of the Senate is to perform the duties of the Lieutenant Governor “during such vacancy.” Furthermore, article IV precludes a midterm election for the office of Lieutenant Governor because it requires the Governor and Lieutenant Governor to be jointly elected in quadrennial elections (unless there is a simultaneous vacancy in both offices [see art IV, §§ 1, 6]).

Because the Constitution, particularly article IV, § 6, instructs that the temporary president of the Senate, an elected official, is to “perform” the duties of Lieutenant Governor during a vacancy, it leaves no room for anyone else to “execute” the duties of that office under Public Officers Law § 43. In this regard, we note that neither this Court nor the Legislature has *160 ever drawn a distinction between “executing” the duties of an office and “performing” those duties. The cases the defendants cite for this questionable distinction do not support it. Furthermore, there are numerous statutes that use words like “execute,” “fulfill,” “perform,” “discharge,” “act as” and the like to confer precisely the same authority.<sup>1</sup> Article IV, § 6 of the Constitution similarly contains synonyms that describe the inability of officers to act and the obligations that devolve on their successors, indicating that these officials “discharge” duties, “perform” duties or “act as” their predecessors—and it is evident that all of these mean the same thing. There is simply no **1152 evidence that the Legislature intended that Public Officers Law § 43 apply to the office of Lieutenant Governor when it adopted that provision. And if it did, the result would be a conflict. Contrary to the majority’s view that constitutional provisions are to be “harmonized” with statutes, it is axiomatic that where there is an incompatibility between the Constitution and a statute, the Constitution governs and the statute bows.

<sup>1</sup> See e.g. County Law § 652(1) (undersheriff shall “execute the duties of the office of sheriff” until a new sheriff is elected or appointed); County Law § 914 (deputy shall, “subject to the provisions of the public officers law, have all the powers and fulfill all the duties of the county clerk”); Town Law § 42 (until a successor is appointed, the deputy town supervisor shall “perform all of the duties of the supervisor”); Second Class Cities Law § 62 (deputy city comptroller “shall discharge the duties of the office” in the event of a vacancy).

Of equal importance, article XIII, § 3 limits the duration of any appointment under section 43 by directing that “no person appointed to fill a vacancy shall hold his or her office by virtue of such appointment longer than the commencement of the political year next succeeding the first annual election after the happening of the vacancy” (emphasis added).<sup>2</sup> Yet, ***857 article IV, § 1 *161 mandates that the Governor and Lieutenant Governor run together and only on the quadrennial, thus barring the Lieutenant Governor from running for office separate from the Governor in a nonquadrennial year. These provisions, read together, can only be reasonably interpreted to mean that the drafters of the Constitution intended that a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor remain unfilled until the next gubernatorial election, with the temporary president of the Senate performing the duties of Lieutenant Governor in the interim.

<sup>2</sup> If article XIII, § 3 is applied to a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor under the facts presented here, since the vacancy occurred on March 17, 2008, this would mean that a midterm election would have had to be held in November 2008 (the first “annual election after the happening of the vacancy”) and any appointee—who would have had to be chosen by the Governor before that time—could serve only until the winner of that midterm election took office at “the commencement of the [next] political year,” which would have been January 1, 2009 (see art XIII, § 4). Such a midterm election is expressly precluded under several provisions of the Constitution (see art IV, §§ 1, 6) and, in any event, there was no appointment in 2008. Defendants argue that the time frames in article XIII, § 3 have not been strictly applied but, even reading some flexibility into the provision (and our precedent has not clearly done so), the fact remains that the clause requires a prompt election to replace an appointee and this must occur as soon as possible after the vacancy arises. Certainly, it does not authorize a long-term appointment to fulfill a complete unexpired term.

IV

The construction of our Constitution over two centuries refutes the majority’s reading of it. This is not the first time that a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant–Governor has arisen. There have been at least 10 occasions since the first New York Constitution was adopted in 1777 when the position of Lieutenant Governor has become vacant,<sup>3</sup> but no Governor has ever seen fit to assert that he had the power to appoint a Lieutenant Governor to fill the vacancy. On two of those occasions, there were midterm elections to fill the vacancies. But that cannot occur under our current Constitution, because both the Constitution and the Public Officers Law have since been amended in significant **1153 respects.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>4</sup> The first of the two elections to fill Lieutenant Governor vacancies occurred in 1847 as a result of a special statute passed by the Legislature (see L. 1847, ch. 303). The constitutional validity of that statute was never challenged. The second such election resulted from Matter of Ward v. Curran, 266 App.Div. 524, 44 N.Y.S.2d 240 [3d Dept.1943], affd. without op. 291 N.Y. 642, 50 N.E.2d 1023 [1943].

The position of Lieutenant Governor was created in New York’s first Constitution of 1777 (adopted before the United States Constitution), which provided for an election to fill a vacancy in that office in the event the Lieutenant Governor *162 died, resigned or was removed from office (see Constitution of 1777 art XX). But that clause was removed in the 1821 Constitution and no Constitution since that time has specified any procedure for filling a Lieutenant Governor vacancy. In this respect, our State Constitution was similar to the Federal Constitution, which did not contain a procedure for filling a vacancy in the office of Vice President until the adoption ***858 of the 25th Amendment in 1967. Instead, the New York Constitution has spelled out a chain of succession in the event of the death or other inability of the Governor or Lieutenant Governor, currently codified in article IV, § 6. The Constitution and the statutes upon which the defendants rely have never been read to permit appointment of a Lieutenant Governor, even though there have been many opportunities for prior Governors to advance such a reading.

The decision in Matter of Ward v. Curran, 266 App.Div. 524, 44 N.Y.S.2d 240 [3d Dept.1943], affd. without op. 291 N.Y. 642, 50 N.E.2d 1023 [1943]—which involved the eighth Lieutenant Governor vacancy in New York’s history—held that the Constitution, as it was then worded, permitted an election to fill the vacancy, but it does not support the majority’s view that such a vacancy can be filled by appointment. The controversy underlying Ward arose in July 1943 when Lieutenant Governor Thomas Wallace died, creating a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor. Governor Thomas Dewey and Wallace had been elected the previous November on the Republican ticket. Albert Ward, the State Chair of the Democratic Party, brought a mandamus proceeding against the Secretary of State to compel an election to fill the office of Lieutenant Governor in the upcoming November 1943 election. Both Governor Dewey and Attorney General Nathaniel Goldstein took the position that such an election would be illegal as the Constitution required that the Governor and Lieutenant Governor be chosen at the same time and for the same term (the Constitution did not yet require that these offices be elected jointly by single vote). They further asserted that article III, § 9 of the Constitution—a provision addressing the powers of the Legislature—directed the Senate to “choose a temporary president to preside in case of the absence or impeachment of the lieutenant-governor.” (266 App.Div. at 526, 44 N.Y.S.2d 240.) They did not, however, rest their analysis on the predecessor to article IV, § 6 because, at that time, it did not contain any language indicating *163 that the temporary president of the Senate assumed the powers of the Lieutenant Governor.<sup>5</sup> shall possess the same qualifications of eligibility for office as the governor. He shall be president of the senate, but shall have only a casting vote therein. If the office of governor become vacant and there be no lieutenant-governor, such vacancy shall be filled for the remainder of the term at the next general election happening not less than three months after such vacancy occurs; and in such case, until the vacancy be filled by election, or in case the lieutenant-governor be under impeachment or unable to discharge the powers and duties of the office of governor or shall be absent from the state, the temporary president of the senate shall act as governor during such inability, absence or the pendency of such impeachment. If the temporary president of the senate shall be unable to discharge the powers and duties of the office of governor or be absent from the state, the speaker of the assembly shall act as governor during such inability or absence. The lieutenant-governor shall receive for his services an annual salary of ten thousand dollars.”

“The lieutenant-governor

**1154 In a divided decision, the Appellate Division directed the Secretary of State to conduct the election pursuant to the predecessor of Public Officers Law § 42. The majority reasoned that it was inappropriate for the person who fulfills the duties of Lieutenant Governor to be someone who was elected only by the voters of a single senatorial district. They emphasized: “It is a fundamental principle of our form of government that a vacancy in an elective office should be filled by election as soon as practicable after the vacancy occurs” ***859 (266 App.Div. at 526, 44 N.Y.S.2d 240 [emphasis added]). The dissenter believed that such an election would be unconstitutional because article IV, § 1 contains the only provision authorizing an election for Governor or

Lieutenant Governor and requires that such office be filled in quadrennial elections. Thus, he concluded that the office of Lieutenant Governor could not be filled at a general election that was not a quadrennial election. This Court affirmed without opinion (291 N.Y. 642, 50 N.E.2d 1023 [1943]).

Upset with this turn of events, Governor Dewey urged the Legislature to begin the process of amending the Constitution and to change Public Officers Law § 42 to preclude an election for the office of Lieutenant Governor (Message of Governor Thomas E. Dewey to the Legislature, Jan. 5, 1944, 1944 N.Y. Legis. Doc. No. 1, at 17–18). The Legislature heeded the Governor’s call on both counts. It immediately amended Public Officers Law § 42—the statute on which Ward had relied—so that it *164 expressly excluded the Governor and Lieutenant Governor from its ambit (as it continues to do today) (see L. 1944, ch. 3). The Legislature also passed amendments to the New York Constitution that were ultimately adopted by vote of the People.

More specifically, article IV, § 6 was amended in 1945 to add a provision directly addressing what is to occur when there is a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor alone.<sup>6</sup> This amendment was **1155 significant for several reasons. Whereas the 1938 version of this clause did not indicate that the temporary president of the Senate fulfills the duties of Lieutenant Governor during a vacancy in that office, the 1945 version expressly so provided. Furthermore, the 1945 version indicated precisely what was to occur when there was a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor alone—“the temporary president ... shall perform all the duties of lieutenant-governor ... during such vacancy.” The 1945 amendments also stated that the Lieutenant Governor can never be separately elected from the Governor. These constitutional amendments, combined with the *165 legislative amendment to Public Officers Law § 42, overruled Ward.

“The lieutenant-governor shall possess the same qualifications of eligibility for office as the governor. He shall be president of the senate, but shall have only a casting vote therein. The lieutenant-governor shall receive for his services an annual salary of ten thousand dollars.

“If the office of governor become vacant and there be no lieutenant-governor, the offices of governor and lieutenant-governor shall be filled for the remainder of the terms at the next general election happening not less than three months after the vacancy in the office of governor occurs. No election of a lieutenant-governor shall be had in any event except at the time of electing a governor. Until the vacancies in the offices of the governor and lieutenant-governor be filled by election, the temporary president of the senate then in office or his successor as such temporary president shall perform all the duties of lieutenant-governor and shall act as governor.

“If the office of lieutenant-governor alone be vacant, or in case the lieutenant-governor be under impeachment, unable to discharge the powers and duties of the office of governor or shall be absent from the state, the temporary president of the senate then in office or his successor as such temporary president shall perform all the duties of lieutenant-governor, including the duty of acting as governor when necessary, during such vacancy, inability, absence or the pendency of such impeachment.

“If ... the temporary president of the senate ... be unable to discharge the powers and duties of such office or be absent from the state, the speaker of the assembly shall act as governor during such inability or absence” (emphasis added to identify new language).

In the years since 1945, other constitutional amendments have moved still further ***860 away from Ward’s holding. In 1953, the Constitution was amended to require that the Governor and Lieutenant Governor be “chosen jointly, by the casting by each voter of a single vote applicable to both offices” (art § 1), echoing another of Governor Dewey’s recommendations. Additional clarification of the chain of succession occurred in 1949 and 1963 amendments.

Defendants and the majority use Ward as support for the conclusion that a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor can be filled through gubernatorial appointment under Public Officers Law § 43. They contend that, unlike Public Officers Law § 42, section 43 was not amended in the wake of Ward to expressly exclude the office of Lieutenant Governor. But nothing in Ward suggests that section 43 ever applied to that office. Ward held that the Lieutenant Governor vacancy could be filled by election—not by gubernatorial appointment. In Ward, the Appellate Division majority determined that it would be inappropriate to allow the office of Lieutenant Governor to be filled by the temporary president of the Senate for the entire unexpired term because that legislative leader had been elected only by the voters of one district of the state. It seems highly unlikely that the Ward court would have endorsed the notion that a Lieutenant Governor could be appointed by a Governor with no input from the electorate and no vetting by the legislative branch of government.

In fact, shortly before the litigation, Attorney General Goldstein issued an opinion clarifying that such an appointment would be inconsistent with the constitutional and statutory scheme. Citing Public Officers Law § 43, the Attorney General observed:

“No one has ever claimed that this section conferred upon the Governor the power to appoint his own successor. Such a contention would lead to the anomalous result that a Governor by appointing a Lieutenant-Governor and then resigning could impose upon the people his own choice as their Governor” (1943 Ops. Atty. Gen. 378, 382, available at 1943 WL 54210, *4).

This point, which was repeated in the Attorney General’s brief *166 in Ward, was not disputed by the parties or the Appellate Division.

As we noted, the fact that no Governor has previously attempted to appoint a Lieutenant Governor, while significant, does not resolve the legal issue before us. But it does show a remarkable consensus **1156 that such an appointment was impermissible. This consensus may result in part from a similarity between our Constitution and the Federal Constitution, which lacked a procedure for filling a vacancy in the office of Vice President until a constitutional amendment was adopted in 1967. The 25th Amendment (§ 2) now provides: “Whenever there is a vacancy in the Office of the Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.” New York constitutional commentators and participants at constitutional conventions have examined whether it would be advisable to adopt a similar mechanism by which the Governor could fill a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor by appointment. Proposals for constitutional amendments have been submitted over the years that would have authorized gubernatorial appointment with the advice and consent of the Senate (see Proposition No. 923, 8 Proceedings of the Constitutional Convention of the State of New York, June 12, 1967, at 606–608) or, comparable to the 25th Amendment, with confirmation by a majority vote of both houses of the Legislature (see 1985 Rep. of N.Y. Law Rev. Commn, reprinted in 1985 McKinney’s Session Laws of N.Y., at 2483, 2575). To ***861 date, none of these proposals has been acted upon.

Supporters of the proposed amendments, like the Governor and some of the amici curiae, make strong policy arguments in support of allowing the Governor to make an appointment to fill a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor. But since our Constitution does not currently permit such a procedure, the constitutional amendment process is the only appropriate vehicle for such a change.

V

The majority and defendants rely on decisions from other states to support their arguments but the cases cited are not persuasive. The constitutional provisions at issue in those cases were different from New York clauses that guide our analysis, either because there was no temporal provision that limited the duration that an appointee could hold an office to a specific and *167 ascertainable date (as there is in article XIII, § 3 of the New York Constitution) (see People ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 114 Cal. 168, 45 P. 1060 [1896]; State ex rel. Trauger v. Nash, 66 Ohio St. 612, 64 N.E. 558 [1902]; State ex rel. Weeks v. Day, 14 Fla. 9 [1871]; In re Advisory Opinion to the Governor, 688 A.2d 288 [R.I. 1997] ), or there was no clause directing that a particular official was to fulfill the duties of Lieutenant Governor in the event of a vacancy in that office alone (as there is in article IV, § 6 of the New York Constitution) (see Advisory Opinion to Governor, 217 So.2d 289 [Fla.1968] ), or both provisions were absent (see State ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, 228 Wis. 645, 280 N.W. 393 [1938] ). In any event, most of these cases were subsequently overruled by constitutional amendment or legislative enactment.

VI.

Despite our disagreement, we join the majority in acknowledging the good faith and good intentions of all parties in this difficult and important case. At the time the Governor named a Lieutenant Governor, two Senators credibly claimed the position of temporary president of the Senate. The resulting uncertainty over the temporary president’s identity created two practical problems. First, it clouded the line of gubernatorial succession; and second, the absence of an acknowledged presiding officer thwarted day-to-day business in the Senate. While the amici’s dire characterizations of this political deadlock may be overstated, it is easy to understand why the Governor felt impelled to act and has **1157 vigorously defended his position. But neither the Governor nor this Court can amend the Constitution. Our Constitution’s provisions governing gubernatorial succession have been scrutinized repeatedly over the past few decades, and have consistently been adjudged adequate. We should adhere to the Constitution we have, which simply does not authorize what the majority now sanctions.

WALDO, C.J.

Two questions are submitted in this case. The first and principal one is whether, when, under section 8, art. 5, Const.Or., the duties of the office of governor devolve upon the secretary of state, he has a right to the salary of the office. Second, if this question be answered in the affirmative, whether he shall continue to perform the duties of the office for the remainder of the term of the outgoing governor, or shall he perform those duties only so long as he shall continue to be secretary of state? "In case of the removal of the governor from office, or *390 of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the duties of the office, the same shall devolve on the secretary of state, and in case of the removal from office, death, resignation, or inability both of the governor and secretary of state, the president of the senate shall act as governor until the disability be removed, or a governor be elected." Const.Or. art. 5, § 8. If the office of governor continue after the governor ceases to hold the office under this section; if the office be not vacant, but shall be lawfully filled by one acting therein directly as the agent of the state, and not in the character of deputy of a governor incumbent,—it would seem difficult to distinguish such a person from a governor of right and in fact.

Counsel for the respondent claim that in the contingency provided for in said section 8 the duties of the office of governor became annexed to the office of secretary of state, and are discharged as duties incident to the latter office; in other words, that the duties of the office, but not the office itself, devolve upon the secretary of state. This position seems to require—First, either that the office of governor should continue vacant during the time the secretary discharges its duties, and that such duties be in some way performed by the secretary of state, as such, consistently with a condition of vacancy; or, second, that the office be filled, and yet he who fills it be in nowise governor, but continue to be merely secretary of state.

an incumbent in that office. Such is the case here. The secretary of state, by force of the function cast upon him, becomes governor, and consequently entitled to the salary appertaining to the office. Nor does the language of the section, grammatically considered, bear the interpretation counsel have put upon it. Leaving out the co-ordinate clauses following the first clause, and the sentence reads: "In case of the removal of the governor from office, the same shall devolve on the secretary of state." That is, the office shall devolve. So, taken with each of the succeeding clauses, the word "same" stands for "office."

The constitution of the United States, providing for the contingency of a vacancy in the office of president, is nearly the same with the provision of our state constitution providing for a vacancy in the office of governor. The only difference conceivably material is that the constitution of the United States has the words "powers and duties," where the constitution of Oregon has only the word "duties." But it is conceived that duties necessarily imply powers, and that in legal effect the language of the two constitutions is the same. See U.S. v. Bassett, 2 Story, 404. Of this provision of the constitution of the United States, in Merriam v. Clinch, 6 Blatchf. 9, (1867,) Mr. Justice BLATCHFORD said:

"Three times since the adoption of the constitution the president has died, and, under the provision referred to, the powers and duties of the office of *392 president have devolved on the vice-president. All branches of the government have, under such circumstances, recognized the vice-president as holding the office of president, as authorized to assume its title, and as entitled to its emoluments. The vice-president holds the office of president until a successor to the deceased president comes to assume the office, at the expiration of the term for which the deceased president and the vice-president were elected."

The case of People v. Hopkins, 55 N.Y. 74, is much in point. In 1859 a law was passed in New York establishing the office of superintendent of insurance. The superintendent was to be appointed by the governor for the term of three years, with authority to appoint clerks, one of whom was to be designated his deputy, and to "possess the powers and perform the duties attached by law to the office of principal, during a vacancy in such office, and during the absence and inability of his principal." The superintendent resigned his office, **1182 the duties of which thereupon devolved upon the deputy. The deputy claimed the salary of a superintendent during the time he discharged the duties of the office, and it was held that he was entitled to such salary. The court, by GROVER, J., supported the conclusion reached by references which are especially pertinent in this case:

"But there are precedents which, though not judicial, I regard as entitled to be considered as decisive of the question under consideration. In the constitution of the state adopted in 1822 will be found the following provision: 'In case of the impeachment of the governor, or his removal from office, death, resignation, or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term, or until the governor, absent or impeached, shall return or be acquitted.' Const. 1822, art. 3, § 6. On the eleventh *393 of February, 1828, the office of governor became vacant by the death of De Witt Clinton, the then incumbent of the office, and its powers and duties, under the above provision of the constitution, devolved upon Nathaniel Pitcher, then lieutenant governor. The question arose whether he was to be regarded, in the exercise of the powers and performance of the duties so vested in him, as acting governor, or in the performance of the contingent duties of lieutenant governor, and, as a consequence, whether he was entitled to the salary of the former office, or the compensation given to the lieutenant governor for his services as such. It was held by William L. Marcy, then comptroller, that he was to be regarded as the acting governor, and entitled to the salary given by law to that officer. The same question, under the same provision, again arose in 1829 upon the resignation of the office of governor by Martin Van Buren, and the powers and duties of the office devolving upon Enos T. Throop, then lieutenant governor, and were decided the same way by Silas Wright, then comptroller. It will be seen that these questions were identical with that in the present case. We surely shall not go far astray in following the precedents established by these able jurists, wise statesmen, and rigid economists."

The principle on which the second question is to be decided, namely, whether the appellant ceases to be governor when he ceases to be secretary of state, seems to be this: If an office be appendant, as the expression is in 1 Leon. 321, to another office, the determination of the first office will determine the second. This is the case where an officer holding any office is ex officio entitled to some other office. For instance, in City of Portland v. Denny, 5 Or. 160, the recorder of the city of Portland was ex officio a justice of the peace, but on the determination of his office of recorder he would have ceased to be a justice of the peace. *394 On the contrary, if the nomination or appointment to an office be by a descriptio personarum of one who, on some contingency, is to enter and fill another office, the answering the description at the time the contingency arises designates him as the person who is to enter and fill the office, and, when thus designated, he enters into the office, he holds it entirely independent of the first office. This seems to be the principle which applies when the office of governor devolves on the secretary of state on the happening of any of the events specified in the constitution. That the president of the senate, who holds under a similar title, ceases to be president of the senate when he becomes governor seems evident, for the two offices **1183 are incompatible at common law, and there is no constitutional implication that both offices shall be held together. It would follow, therefore, that the president of the senate would hold the office of governor, once incumbent, without reference to his office of president of the senate. Now, as two offices may remain distinct, though the officer is the same person, it would seem that the same principle as to the office of governor should govern the holding of the office of governor by the secretary of state.

This question, therefore, must also be answered in favor of the appellant, and judgment must be entered accordingly. Judgment reversed.

Re: Opinion Request on Gubernatorial Succession

*1 Governor Michael O. Leavitt
Governor's Office
210 State Capitol
Salt Lake City, UT 84114-0000

Dear Governor Leavitt:

This letter responds to your request for legal guidance on the question whether the Lieutenant Governor, upon the resignation of the Governor, succeeds to the Office of Governor or whether she becomes an "acting" Governor. Based upon the provisions of Article VII, § 11 of the Utah Constitution, the history of the adoption of that section and its amendment in 1980, case law and actions in other states (there being no Utah case on point), and the efficient operation of government, it is my conclusion that upon resignation of the Governor, the Lieutenant Governor succeeds to that office, and becomes the Governor.

Upon its adoption, the Utah Constitution provided that in the case of the resignation of the Governor the "powers and duties of the Governor shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor." Article VII, § 11. That language followed the provisions in the United States Constitution, Article II, § 1(6), that in the event of the removal of the President, his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office that "the same shall devolve to the Vice President." The federal experience under that language was that the Vice President succeeded to the office of, and became, the President. This succession occurred four times prior to the adoption of Utah's Constitution - John Tyler in 1840, Millard Fillmore in 1850, Andrew Johnson in 1765, and Chester Arthur in 1881. Therefore, at the time of the adoption of the Utah Constitution, it was understood, in theory and in practice, that the Constitutional language "shall devolve" meant "succession" such that the Lieutenant Governor would become the Governor.

Utah's succession provision was revisited in 1980 when the citizens of the State of Utah adopted amendments revising the Executive Article. Among other changes, the revision created the Office of Lieutenant Governor in place of the Secretary of State, required the candidates for Governor and Lieutenant Governor to run on the same ticket, clarified the line of succession of executive authority, and a procedure to determine gubernatorial disability while providing continuity in government. See Senate Joint Resolution 7, passed March 8, 1979 and adopted in November, 1980. Included with the information provided to the electorate in the Voter Information Pamphlet in 1980, when they adopted the amendments, was the impartial analysis by the Legislative Research Director Jon Memmott and arguments in favor of the Executive Article revision by proponent senators Karl N. Snow and Fred W. Finlayson. The impartial analysis noted that candidates for the Office of Lieutenant Governor and Governor run on the same ticket "as in the case with the candidates for the office of President and Vice President of the United States." The arguments in favor of the revision also noted that "the proposed amendment clarifies the present order of succession, making it similar to that of the U.S. Constitution." Thus, the electorate were told that the creation of the Office of Lieutenant Governor and the succession provisions were similar to, and modeled on, the federal system. In addition to the long history of succession to President by Vice Presidents, the U.S. Constitution had been amended by that time that to clarify "in the case of removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice President shall become President." The United States Constitution, Amendment 25, § 1, effective February 23, 1967.

*2 Because the Utah constitutional language that the "powers and duties devolve" came from equivalent federal language where the Vice President succeeded to and became the President, and because the citizens adopted amendments to the Utah Constitution providing for a Lieutenant Governor and a succession "similar to that of the United States Constitution," the intent of the provisions and the understanding and expectation of the citizens who adopted them, was that succession would be similar to the federal system and that the Lieutenant Governor would succeed to the Office of Governor and become Governor.

This issue has been faced in a number of other states with constitutional language similar to Utah. See Bryant v. English, 843 S.W.2d 308 (Arkansas 1992) and Chadwick v. Earhart, 4 P. 1180 (Oregon 1884), reaffirmed in State v. Alcott, 187 P. 286 (Oregon 1920). In Bryant, a case stemming from the resignation of Governor Clinton to become President, the Court in arriving at its conclusion analyzed the language of the Arkansas Constitution, the history of the provisions and the times when it was adopted, the effect on state government of different interpretations, and how the office had been viewed. Arkansas's constitution, like Utah's, provided that powers and duties "devolve" to the Lieutenant Governor. The Court also looked to the further Arkansas provision, similar to Utah's, that upon the vacancy of the Offices of both Governor and Lieutenant Governor that the President of the Senate (or in his inability, the Speaker of the House) "shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled." (Emphasis added). The Court stated, at page 312:

The difference in language suggests that the Lieutenant Governor, unlike the President (pro tempore) of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, does not merely act as Governor when the Governor resigns. Rather, it suggests that he becomes Governor.

The Court thus held, under the same language as in the Utah Constitution (i.e., that the powers and duties of the Governor "shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term"), that upon resignation of the Governor, the Lieutenant Governor becomes the Governor and is not an "acting Governor." The similarity of Arkansas's constitutional provisions and the reasoning of the Arkansas Court is persuasive authority for interpreting the Utah Constitution.

Some other states, under similar (and dissimilar) language have ruled differently - that the successor (either the Lieutenant Governor, Secretary of State or President of the Senate) does not become Governor, but "acts" as Governor. See e.g., State ex rel. De Concini v. Garby, 195 P.2d 153 (Arizona 1940). However, I am not persuaded by that other line of cases. Further, most of those are older cases and in most instances the legislatures and citizens amended their constitution after the court decision to clearly provide that the successor does become the Governor. See e.g. Arizona, California, Montana, and Wisconsin. Thus, case law from other states, and specifically the Bryant case, as well as the people's response to contrary decisions, support my determination that under the Utah Constitution upon resignation of the Governor the Lieutenant Governor becomes the Governor.

*3 The specific language of the Utah Constitution does not lead to a contrary conclusion. As indicated above, the operative language is that upon the resignation "the powers and duties of the Governor shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor." Article VII § 11, Utah Constitution. That specific language and word "devolve" came from the United States Constitution which had long been interpreted to mean that the Vice President succeeded to and became the President upon resignation or death of the President. The alternative claim would be that the Lieutenant Governor becomes the "acting" Governor, exercising the powers and duties of the office, but not assuming the title, nor the power to appoint a Lieutenant Governor. However, the only provisions in the Utah Constitution providing for someone to "act as Governor" under a succession is in the case of a vacancy in the both the Offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor, where the President of the Senate, or if he/she is unable, the Speaker of the House "shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled." Article VII § 11, Utah Constitution. As was noted in Bryant v. English above, different language respecting the Lieutenant Governor and the legislative leaders would suggest a different treatment - the Lieutenant Governor, unlike the President of the Senate or Speaker of the House who would "act as Governor," becomes the Governor.

It is thus my conclusion that upon the resignation of Governor Leavitt, Lieutenant Governor Walker succeeds to and becomes Governor of the State of Utah. Upon her becoming Governor, the Office of Lieutenant Governor becomes vacant and is subject to the Governor's appointment power under Article VII, § 10, of the Utah Constitution.

A separate question and issue has been raised whether the exercise of that appointment power by the Governor requires Senate confirmation. Article VII § 10 provides that the Governor shall "nominate, and by and with the consent of the Senate, appoint all state and district officers whose offices are established by this Constitution and whose appointment is not otherwise provided for." However, the appointment of the Lieutenant Governor by the Governor is "otherwise provided for," as that section further sets forth that if the Office of Lieutenant Governor is vacant "it shall be the duty of the Governor to fill the same by appointment, from the same political party of the removed person; and the appointee shall hold office until a successor shall be elected and qualified, as provided by law.” This provides specific appointment authority, with separate appointment requirements, and thus is an appointment that is “otherwise provided for.” Therefore, Senate confirmation is not necessary.

The conclusion that Senate confirmation is not necessary was similarly reached by the Utah Supreme Court in Matheson v. Ferry, 641 P.2d 674 (Utah 1982). The Court stated, at page 692:

The construction is also consistent with the policy underlying the language in § 10 that the Governor shall fill unexpired vacancies in the major elective State offices, i.e., Lieutenant Governor, State Auditor, State Treasurer, and Attorney General without senatorial confirmation. In such cases, the sole restriction upon the power of the Governor in making the appointment is that the appointee must be from the same party as the party of the person who previously held that office. (Emphasis added).

*4 Thus, when a Lieutenant Governor succeeds to the Office of Governor, the vacated Lieutenant Governor’s Office will need to be filled by the Governor with an appointment in accordance with Article VII, § 10, without the consent of the Senate.

My conclusion that Lieutenant Governor Walker will become Governor Walker upon resignation of Governor Leavitt will hopefully end the current questions surrounding this issue and provide for a clear and complete transition. If I can be of further assistance in this matter, or if you have further questions, please contact me.

Sincerely,

Mark L. Shurtleff

MOUNT, J.

These two cases involve the same questions, and for that reason were consolidated at the argument and heard as one. They are applications for a writ of mandamus to respondent, requiring him to issue his *337 proclamation for the election of a governor, a lieutenant governor, and three justices of the supreme court at the next general election. It appears from the petitions that Hon. John R. Rogers and Hon. Henry McBride were at the general election held in November, 1900, elected to the offices of governor and lieutenant governor, respectively, for the term of four years, beginning on the second Monday of January, 1901; that these officers duly qualified as such, and entered upon the discharge of their respective duties; that on December 26, 1901, the Honorable John R. Rogers died, and respondent thereupon took the oath of office, and is now acting governor; that there is a vacancy in the office of governor, and also in the office of lieutenant governor. It also appears that the legislature of 1901 passed an act increasing the number of judges of this court from five to seven; that appointments were made to fill the vacancies created by the act; that the terms of office of the two judges so appointed will expire on the second Monday of October, 1902; that the governor refuses to issue his proclamation for the election of a governor, lieutenant governor, and two supreme court justices at the next general election, to be held in November of this year. Respondent appeared and filed a demurrer to each of the petitions.

The first question presented is, does the death of the governor cause a vacancy in that office, which may be filled by an election for the unexpired term, and, if not, does the office of lieutenant governor become vacant when the incumbent assumes the duties of governor? The provisions of the constitution relating to this question are as follows: Section 2, art. 3: 'Governor, Term of Office. The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a governor, who shall *338 hold his office for a term of four years, and until his successor is elected and qualified.' Section 3, art. 3, provides that the lieutenant governor shall hold his office for four years, and until his successor is elected and qualified. Section 10, art. 3: 'Vacancy in. In case of the removal, resignation, death or disability of the governor, the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, and in case of a vacancy in both the offices of governor and lieutenant governor, the duties of governor shall devolve upon the secretary of state, who shall act as governor until the disability be removed or a governor be elected.' This last section clearly provides (1) that upon the death of the governor the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor; and (2) in case of a vacancy in the offices of both governor and lieutenant governor the duties of governor devolve upon the secretary of state, who shall act until the disability be removed or a governor elected. This provision of the constitution of this state is in effect the same as the provision of the constitution of the United States with reference to the succession of the vice president to the office of president of the United States. Upon the death or disability of the president, it has uniformly been held that the vice president holds the office of president until a successor to a deceased president comes to assume the office. Merriam v. Clinch, 6 Blatchf. 9, Fed. Cas. No. 9,460. In that case it was said: 'It has never been supposed that, under the provision **26 of the constitution, the vice president, in acting as president, acted as the servant or agent or locum tenens of the deceased president or in any other capacity than as holding the office of president fully, for the time being, by virtue of express authority emanating from the United States.' *339 In the case of Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Or. 389, 4 Pac. 1180, where the court was considering a constitutional provision of the state of Oregon in almost the identical language of section 10, supra, it was said: 'In the first place, it is not shown how an office can be vacant, and yet there be a person, not the deputy or locum tenens of another, empowered by law to discharge the duties of the office, and who does in fact discharge them. It is not explained how in such a case the duties can be separated from the office, so that he who discharges them does not become an incumbent of the office, and, in the second place, how a person can fill the office of governor without being governor.' It is a well-settled rule that an office is not vacant so long as it is supplied, in the manner provided by the constitution or laws, with an incumbent who is legally authorized to exercise the power and perform the duties which pertain to it. Mechem, Pub. Off. § 125; Throop, Pub. Off. § 431. The constitution having provided that in case of the death of the governor the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of governor. It is not necessary to discuss the meaning of the provision, 'who shall act as governor until the disability be removed or a governor be elected,' because that provision, as used here, clearly refers only to the secretary of state, in case that officer should assume the duties of governor under the contingency named. What is said above applies equally to the lieutenant governor. When the lieutenant governor, by virtue of his office and of the command of the constitution, assumed the duties of governor on the death of Gov. Rogers, the office of lieutenant governor did not thereby become vacant, but the officer remained lieutenant governor, intrusted *340 with the powers and duties of governor. People v. Budd, 114 Cal. 168, 45 Pac. 1060, 34 L. R. A. 46; State v. Sadler, 23 Nev. 356, 47 Pac. 450; People v. Hopkins, 55 N. Y. 74; Robertson v. State, 109 Ind. 79, 10 N. E. 582, 643. It is argued, however, that since it is made the duty of the lieutenant governor, under the constitution, to be presiding officer of the state senate (section 16, art. 3), and as such to approve all bills passed by that body, he must, as governor, review and approve or reject bills which as lieutenant governor he has already approved. These duties are, no doubt, inconsistent; but this argument, we think, is fully met by another provision of the constitution, which provides, at section 10, art. 2, in substance, that when the lieutenant governor shall act as governor the senate shall choose a temporary president. The lieutenant governor, therefore, when the duties of governor devolve upon him, is relieved of the duties of presiding officer of the senate.

The legislature of 1901 passed the following act:

'An act increasing the number of judges of the supreme court of the state of Washington, and declaring an emergency.

'Section 1. The supreme court of the state of Washington, from and after the passage of this act, up and to the first Tuesday, after the first Monday in October, 1902, shall consist of seven judges: provided, that after the first Tuesday after the first Monday in October, 1902, said supreme court shall consist only of five judges.

'Sec. 2. The governor is hereby authorized to appoint one from each of the dominant political parties the two additional judges provided for by section 1 of this act, which appointees shall hold office until the first Tuesday *341 after the first Monday in October, 1902, and no longer, and each of the said judges shall receive a salary of four thousand dollars per annum.'

Section 3 declares an emergency. After this act was passed, the governor, by authority thereof, made two appointments as provided therein. It is conceded in this case that the legislature may increase the number of judges of this court from five to seven; but it is argued (1) that when the increase is once made no decrease can be made, and (2) that the temporary increase made is in conflict with the constitutional term. We are therefore urged to hold that so much of the act as increased the number of judges of this court to seven may be allowed to stand, and the remainder be declared void, thereby making a permanent increase, instead of a temporary one. This reasoning, it seems to us, must fail, because by the very terms of the act the increase of the number of judges from five to seven was temporary. This intention is clearly and definitely expressed as the single purpose of the act, so that if the temporary increase is void the whole act must fail. Cooley, Const. Lim. (6th Ed.) p. 211. The rule of law is well settled in this country that the legislative department is not made a special agency for the exercise of specially defined legislative powers, but is intrusted with general authority to make laws at discretion, except where the constitution has imposed limits upon this legislative power. Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 104, 201. In other words, the constitution of this state is a limitation upon the powers of the legislature, and not a grant of power. Hence, before an act of the legislature may be declared unconstitutional, it must appear that the act is in conflict with some express *342 provision of the constitution which prohibits the act or parts of the act complained of. Bearing this rule in mind, we consider the questions presented:

1. The constitution provides (section 2, art. 4): 'The supreme court shall consist of five **27 judges, a majority of whom shall be necessary to form a quorum and pronounce a decision. * * * The legislature may increase the number of judges of the supreme court from time to time, and may provide for separate departments of said court.' The evident meaning of the first provision is that this court shall never be decreased below five judges. The second provision gives express authority for an increase of the number of judges. There is no express provision for a decrease in the number after the increase has been made unless it be found in the phrase 'from time to time.' If it be conceded, as argued by relators, that the words 'from time to time' mean that the legislature may at one time make one increase, and at another time another increase, these words add nothing to the declaration that 'the legislature may increase the number of judges of the supreme court,' because without the words 'from time to time' that authority rests in the legislature by reason of the fact that no limitation is placed upon the number to which the court may be increased. We must therefore look for some meaning in the words 'from time to time,' or conclude that they were used without purpose. These words are defined by lexicographers to mean 'occasionally.' The word 'occasionally' is defined to mean: 'As occasion demands or requires; as convenience requires; accidentally, or on some special occasion.' But whatever may be the technical meaning of the words, they certainly cannot be held to mean that the legislature may not decrease the number of judges after the increase *343 thereof. If, therefore, the legislature has power to increase the number of judges as occasion or convenience requires, and there is no restriction upon a decrease, except below five, it follows that a decrease may be had to this minimum when necessity or occasion requires, of which necessity or occasion the legislature is the exclusive judge. Again, the fact that the constitution has placed a minimum limit and permitted an increase in the number of judges is a strong inference that the increased number may be reduced to the minimum. Furthermore, the legislative and the executive branches of the state government have placed this construction upon their powers, and, where these co-ordinate branches have construed a constitutional provision and acted upon it, great weight will be given thereto. State v. Rusk, 15 Wash. 403, 46 Pac. 387.

2. Does the act conflict with the provision relating to the terms fixed by the constitution? Section 3, art. 4, of the constitution, provides: 'The judges of the supreme court shall be elected by the qualified electors of the state at large, at the general state election, at the times and places at which state officers are elected, unless some other time be provided by the legislature. * * * After the first election the terms of judges elected shall be six years from and after the second Monday in January next succeeding their election. If a vacancy occur in the office of a judge of the supreme court, the governor shall appoint a person to hold the office until the election and qualification of a judge to fill the vacancy, which election shall take place at the next succeeding general election, and the judge so elected shall hold the office for the remainder of the unexpired term.' The term fixed by this provision is six years, and applies only to judges elected. This term begins on the second Monday in January next succeeding an election, and *344 cannot be changed by the legislature. Mechem, Pub. Off. § 387; Throop, Pub. Off. § 311; State v. Twichell, 4 Wash. St. 715, 31 Pac. 19. The vacancy here referred to is evidently intended to apply to a vacancy which shall continue beyond an election and for the remainder of the unexpired term. The unexpired term referred to is the remainder of the six-year term. The clear intention of this section of the constitution is (1) to require that the judges of this court shall be elected whenever there is an election at which they may be elected; (2) that the terms of judges elected shall be six years; and (3) that appointive judges shall not serve for a longer time than the next succeeding general election and the qualification of a successor. There is no limitation, either express or implied, upon the legislature to make appointive terms extend to an election. The limitation is that, where a vacancy occurs which extends beyond an election, then an appointee shall hold until the next succeeding general election, and until the qualification of a judge to fill the vacancy. It cannot be said that all vacancies which occur in the membership of this court may be filled by an appointee from the time of the appointment to the next succeeding general election, because a vacancy may occur after the election of a successor to one of the elected judges, and before the expiration of his term, where no election intervenes, which vacancy could be filled by appointment only until the expiration of the term. State v. Black, 22 Minn. 336. For example, the regular elective term of Judge REAVIS expires on the second Monday of January, 1903. His successor will be elected regularly in November of this year. No other general election will be held until November, 1904. If Judge REAVIS should resign on the day *345 following the election in November next, and the governor should appoint a person to fill the vacancy occurring by reason of such resignation, it certainly cannot be held that such an appointee may hold office until the next succeeding election, two years hence, and thus deprive the regularly elected judge from taking office on the second Monday in January next succeeding his election. The term of an appointive judge, therefore, is not fixed, except that it cannot extend beyond an election and the qualification of his successor, or to the end of the term. When the term of judges elected was fixed at six years, it was intended thereby to distinguish elected judges from appointed judges, and to fix the **28 terms of elected judges for a definite time, and to limit the terms of appointed judges to the next election. Within that limit the legislative power is complete. It may provide for a term of any length of time up to the succeeding general election. This term is appointive. But if a vacancy is created which extends beyond an election, the provisions of the constitution apply, and the legislature has no authority to change or modify the 'terms' therein contained. The act in question does not attempt to change or modify the terms of judges elected. It undertakes to create a vacancy, and to terminate the vacancy at a fixed time before an election can take place, and before an elective term may begin; and this, we hold, may be done, because there is no fixed constitutional appointive term. It is certainly not necessary that a general act be passed, increasing the number of judges for an indefinite time, and that subsequently another act be passed, decreasing this number. What may be done by a legislative body indirectly may be done directly. The act in question is not in conflict with any constitutional term, and, in so far as it increased the *346 number of judges of this court temporarily, was not in conflict with any provision of the constitution.

The writs prayed for will be denied.

REAVIS, C. J.

I concur in the conclusion that no vacancy exists in the office of governor, and that a lieutenant governor ought not to be elected this fall. I am unable, however, to assent to the construction given to the statute entitled 'An act increasing the number of judges of the supreme court of the state of Washington, and declaring an emergency' (Laws 1901, p. 345), in the majority opinion. I feel convinced that sound canons of constitutional interpretation impose the duty of declaring section 2 of this law void. The statute is already set out in the majority opinion. This section adds additional qualifications to the office of judge to those required in the constitution, and defines and limits the duration of terms of the two judges appointed by the governor until the first Tuesday after the first Monday in October, 1902. The legislature has no power to define the term or prescribe the qualification of a judicial officer. This seems clear under the plain provisions of the constitution. If there be one rule set at rest by judicial authority,—including, among other courts that have spoken upon the question, this court,—it is that when the term, qualifications, salary, or method of election of a judicial officer is prescribed in the constitution, the legislature is incompetent to change, modify, or in any manner interfere with such requirements in the organic law. Thus the term cannot be abridged or extended by legislative act. In State v. Twichell, 4 Wash. St. 715, 31 Pac. 19, this court had before it for construction the act of March 3, 1890, *347 entitled 'An act providing for an additional number of superior court judges, and declaring an emergency to exist.' Laws 1889-90, p. 346. This law provided for additional superior court judges in several counties, and their appointment by the governor until the ensuing general election in November of the same year. Section 3 provided for the election of two judges in King county, as follows: 'At the general election in 1890, there shall be elected in the county of Spokane one superior judge, and in the county of Pierce two superior judges, and in the county of King two superior judges, for said counties, in addition to the judges now provided for by law in said counties, who shall hold their offices for the term of four years from and after the second Monday in January, 1891.' It will be observed that the section directs the election of the two judges in King county at the election in November, 1890, and fixed their terms for four years after the second Monday in January, 1891. The proceeding before the court was mandamus to compel the election of the successors of these two additional judges at the November election in 1892, and the complaint of the relator was that the relator was that the legislature had extended the term prescribed for superior court judges in the constitution. The court observed in determining this case: 'On March 3, 1890, the legislature passed an act providing for additional judges in the counties of Spokane, Pierce, and King. Section 3 of said act provides that 'at the general election in 1890 there shall be elected * * * in the county of King, two superior judges * * * in addition to the judge now provided for by law in said county, who shall hold their offices for the term of four years from and after the second Monday in January, 1890.' Before the enactment of that law there had been but one judge elected for said county of King. He was *348 elected at the election for the adoption of the constitution in 1889, and, under the provisions of said constitution, his term of office will expire in January next, and his successor must be elected at the coming November election. And if the provisions of the law of March 3, 1890, above quoted, are of force, it is conceded that said successor to the judge elected in 1889 is the only one to be so elected. The contention on the part of the petitioner, however, is that so much of the law above quoted as assumes to fix the term of office of the judges therein provided for is unconstitutional and void. The appellant contends that such provision is not only not opposed to any express provision of the constitution, but is in entire harmony with the letter and spirit thereof. To determine the right of these respective contentions is to determine the controversy at bar. If the constitution has not provided for the terms of additional judges, which might be provided for the courts of the several counties by the legislature, it follows, as of course, that **29 the legislature has full power to enact in regard thereto. If, on the other hand, the constitution has so provided, such provision must control, and any attempt of the legislature to change or modify the same would be absolutely void and of no effect. * * * Thus construing it, we are forced to the conclusion that the constitution makers intended that the regular term of all superior court judges should be uniform, and that the regular incumbents of said offices should hold for the same term,—not only as to its duration, but also as to the time of its commencing and ending. And we think that the additional judges to be provided by act of the legislature, when so provided, occupied exactly the same relation to the constitution and the term of office therein provided for as did those created by the constitution itself. If the legislature had simply provided for two additional judges for the county of King, and stopped there, the legislation would have been effective. If this is true, it must be because the term of office and other provisions as to salary, etc., were covered by the constitution. The constitution created the office of judge of *349 the superior court. It provided that a certain number of judges should be elected. It also provided that the legislature might authorize and require the election of an additional number of judges. It does not follow, however, as contended for by appellant, that because the election of a portion of the judges was authorized by the constitution itself, and another portion thereof by the legislature, that the respective portions bear any other than a common relation to all the provisions of the constitution relating to such officers. The term of office, then, of all the judges, must be held to have been provided for in the constitution. * * * If this construction of the clause above referred to is to obtain, it follows that a definite term, ending three years from the second Monday of January, 1890, applicable to all superior court judges, whether provided for in the constitution or by legislation, was fixed in the constitution. If the constitution has thus provided definite terms, it would, of course, follow that the legislature could not change or modify the same.' The language of the court has been cited at considerable length here, because I am impressed with the view that its reasoning and authority should be controlling in the construction of the statute of 1901, supra, now before the court. The same care and deliberation was expressed in section 3, art. 4, of the constitution, relating to the terms and qualifications of the supreme judge, as in the section relating to the superior judge; and this is also true of the election of the judges of both courts, and the method of filling vacancies in these offices.

The majority of the court, as I understand, concludes that the legislature cannot alter or modify the terms of the judges elected, and has no power to change the method of filling vacancies in the terms prescribed by the constitution; and the authorities cited in the opinion fully sustain the rule. It is then announced, *350 'If, therefore, the legislature has power to increase the number of judges as occasion or convenience requires, and there is no restriction upon a decrease, except below five, it follows that a decrease may be had to this minimum when necessity or occasion requires, of which necessity or occasion the legislature is the exclusive judge.' If this be the correct rule, the fair deduction therefrom is that the framers of the constitution intended to create five constitutional judges with fixed qualifications, duration of terms, and salaries, who should always sit with the court, and additional judges of occasion or necessity may be designated by the legislature in such numbers and for such times as it may deem expedient. It would seem fairly to follow, also, that the legislature might, so far as any express limitation goes, appoint the additional judges for a month, or, as here, 18 months, or any intervening time between two general elections. Such appointive judges are certainly not filling any vacancies mentioned in the constitution, for it definitely fixed the appointing power of the governor 'to vacancies' until the next general election, or, if to the end of the regular term, then that terminates in the successor who is the judge elected at a general election. The constitution, with much particularity and certainty, provides for the election of all judges, and very minutely fixes the power and procedure for filling vacancies. It says: 'If a vacancy occur in the office of a judge of the supreme court, the governor shall appoint a person to hold the office until the election and qualification of a judge to fill the vacancy, which election shall take place at the next succeeding general election, and the judge so elected shall hold the office for the remainder of the unexpired term.' It may be thus observed that the appointment by the governor of the two additional judges in the present instance *351 was made under the act of 1901, supra, for there was no vacancy filled, ending with the general election. But according to the construction of the court here, the governor's appointment was made for a full term created by the legislature. Then, if the legislature could create a special term in duration, its power is necessarily plenary to appoint judges itself, instead of authorizing appointment by the governor, for they are legislative officers, and there would seem to be no express restriction upon adding qualifications for the judges not mentioned in the constitution; that is, one could be from each dominant party, or any other qualification not expressly inhibited which the legislature might deem expedient,—as that some of the judges should be Socialists, and the other Democrats or Republicans. It is plain that these offices are elective. The vacancy is an emergency,—an unforeseen event,—and must **30 always occur at the time in an office then in existence; and it is only an interval in the incumbency of the existing office, and cannot be a vacancy if it envelops the whole duration of the office. Somewhere in the term,—in the commencement, during its course, or before its ending,—there must be an elected judge. No executive appointment can extend beyond the next general election. Thus Judge WHITE was appointed by Governor Rogers to the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Judge Gordon in June, 1900, but he was thereafter elected to fill the unexpired vacancy in November, 1900. Section 5, art. 4, of the constitution, relating to vacancies in the office of superior court judge, is in identical words with the requirement for filling the vacancies in this court. In State v. Millett, 20 Wash. 221, 54 Pac. 1124, the question of filling the vacancy of superior court judge was determined. It was there said: *352 'The commission of the governor only entitles the holder to retain office until his successor is elected and qualified, and the word 'remainder,' as found in that section, relates to the term existing at the date of the election, not to a term beginning some months later. * * * Counsel for the respondent has urged upon the consideration of the court the importance of having a fixed and certain time at which elected officers shall qualify, and argues that great public inconvenience might follow if it were held that a judge elected to fill a vacancy might qualify any time after the result of the election is declared. * * * However, the constitution plainly limits the right of the appointed judge to hold until the election and qualification of his successor at the next succeeding general election.'

It seems to be suggested that the constitution is a limitation only upon legislative power, and that the express limitation must be found to inhibit the power of the legislature, at its discretion, to create and define the tenure of appointive judges, while admitting that it cannot interfere with the constitutional office of the original five judges. However, there is no express limitation in words on the legislative power to diminish the number of the judges below five. There is in words no such limitation as to the diminution of salaries, but all here concede such limitations exist by implication. It could hardly be successfully maintained that the legislature could increase the court if the power to increase had not been conferred. I understand the correct rule of construction to be that the mandate 'thou shalt,' when used in directing the organization of the court and fixing the number of its members, also implies negatively the inhibition 'thou shalt not' add any other number, and it therefore required power affirmatively given to increase the number after the first organization. The sovereign powers of the state were deliberately *353 distributed in framing the constitution into legislative, executive, and judicial departments. In the supreme and superior courts were reposed the judicial functions, and their organization, powers, qualifications, and terms of the judges, are defined. The independence of the court is guarded in all cases by fixed tenures of office and salaries during the terms. The convention, when vesting such functions in courts, had in view as well the future as the present of the state, and foresaw its large growth and development, and the necessity that would arise for increasing the number of judges for the courts, and it provided for such increase from 'time to time' by the legislature. But it plainly intended to preserve the harmony and the unity of this court in the tenure and qualifications of its judges. I conclude that section 2 of the act of 1901, supra, and the same idea wherever expressed elsewhere in the act, is a departure from that intention, and that the plain mandate of the constitution carries with it the implied prohibition upon the creation of legislative offices such as the act of 1901 does if all its provisions are held valid. However, the void section of this statute may be eliminated, and the law, in its substance, be valid. The title is perfect: 'An act increasing the number of judges of the supreme court, and declaring an emergency.' This is clearly within the authority of the constitution. The first section declares that after the enactment the court shall consist of seven members. Here the limitation imposed upon the terms of the judges and the added qualifications were beyond the power of the legislature. In State v. Twichell, supra,—the case where the legislature had extended the term of superior judges,—the court declared that such interference was beyond the competency *354 of the legislature, but held that portion of the statute within its competency valid, and gave effect to the law; observing that the power of the legislature was limited to providing for the increase of the number of judges. So in this case the legislature was only competent to provide the number of judges to be added to the court. It was unnecessary and was immaterial that the act provided for their appointment by the governor, for the constitution had already designated the method of filling the vacancies by the governor, and so it may be said of the specifications of the salaries. I understand the true rule of construction, approved by the great weight of, if not by unanimous, authority, is that if the valid exercise of legislative power can be separated from the void, and is susceptible of operation, the valid will be enforced. A few of such authorities may be mentioned here: Cooley, Const. Lim. (4th Ed.) pp. 214–216; Commissioners v. George (Ky.) 47 S. W. 779, 84 Am. St. Rep. 454; State v. Brewster, 44 Ohio St. 589, 9 N. E. 849; State v. Thoman, 10 Kan. 191; Griebel v. State, 111 Ind. 369, 12 N. E. 700. In the case of State v. Blend, 121 Ind. 514, 23 N. E. 511, 16 Am. St. Rep. 411, the rule is admirably stated as follows: 'It is equally well settled **31 that, when a part of a statute is unconstitutional, if by striking from the act all that part which is void, that which is left is complete in itself, sensible, capable of being executed, and wholly independent of that which is rejected, the courts will reject that which is unconstitutional and enforce the remainder.' I conclude that the statute here, with the void features eliminated, is clear and sensible, and should be enforced; that there is a valid increase of this court by the addition of two constitutional judges; that the two members appointed *355 by Gov. Rogers are filling vacancies contemplated by the constitution; and that their successors to fill the unexpired terms ought to be elected at the general election in November, and the writ should issue for that purpose.

ANDERS, J.

I concur in the foregoing opinion of Chief Justice REAVIS.

Demurrer to the petition, considered as a complaint, is sustained.

On May 19, 1938, James W. Martin of Ozaukee county, pursuant to the procedural rules laid down in In re Exercise of Original Jurisdiction of Supreme Court, 201 Wis. 123, 229 N.W. 643, petitioned this court for leave to bring, in the name of the state of Wisconsin, an original action of quo warranto, for the purpose of having determined by what authority Herman L. Ekern holds the office of lieutenant governor of this state, and if it be found that he holds that office without lawful authority, to oust and exclude him therefrom. Upon the filing of the petition an order *394 was made by Mr. Chief Justice ROSENBERRY requiring Mr. Ekern to show cause why the petitioner should not be given leave to bring, in the name of the state, an original action in this court. Pursuant to that order, the petition was heard on May 31, 1938. The question whether leave to commence the action should be granted was argued by the attorneys for the petitioner and for Mr. Ekern. The court thereupon took a recess and conferred on the question of granting the prayer of the petition. After a brief conference, the court was of the view that the question presented required studious and painstaking consideration. Upon reconvening, the court stated that it would take the matter under advisement. It was then suggested, that if the petitioner and the respondent would stipulate, that in the event the court granted leave to commence the action, the petition should be considered as a complaint, to which the respondent demurred, the court would then hear arguments on the merits. The parties so stipulated and the merits were argued.

The petition in substance alleges: That the petitioner is a citizen, resident, taxpayer and elector of Ozaukee county; that prior to the making of his petition he demanded in writing of Orland S. Loomis, the attorney general of this state, that he bring the action in the name of the state, but that the attorney general refused so to do, and therefore the petitioner asks leave to bring the action as a private person in the name of the state; that on November 3, 1936, Philip F. LaFollette, was elected governor of the state of Wisconsin and Henry A. Gunderson was elected lieutenant governor thereof; that Philip F. LaFollette took the oath of office as governor on January 4, 1937, and ever since has been the governor of this state; that on the same day Henry A. Gunderson took the oath as lieutenant governor and continued to act as such officer until October 18, 1937, when he resigned; that by reason of the resignation of Henry A. Gunderson as lieutenant governor, a vacancy occurred in that office, without the right, authority or warrant in law to have the same filled by appointment; that on May 16, 1938, Philip F. LaFollette, as governor of this state, appointed Herman L. Ekern to the office of lieutenant governor of this state; that Mr. Ekern accepted said appointment and on May 17, 1938, took the oath of office, assumed the duties thereof and ever since then has held the office and exercised the duties thereof; that the act of Philip F. LaFollette in appointing Herman L. Ekern to the office of lieutenant governor, was without warrant in law and therefore a clear usurpation and abuse of power; and that Mr. Ekern, in taking said office and in acting as lieutenant governor usurped and intruded into said office without warrant in law. The petition, considered as a complaint, demands judgment that the appointment of Herman L. Ekern to the office of lieutenant governor be declared void; that he be adjudged guilty of usurping and intruding into and unlawfully holding said office; that he be ousted and excluded therefrom and that the office of lieutenant governor be declared vacant.

NELSON, Justice.

The first question for determination is whether this court should grant leave to the petitioner to bring an original action in the name of the state of Wisconsin. Such leave is asked because the attorney general has refused to bring the action. The question which the petitioner seeks to have determined is most important and of great public concern and interest. Obviously the people of this state are vitally interested in seeing that no important office, such as that of lieutenant governor, be intruded into by any person who has not lawful authority to hold the office or to perform the duties thereof.

[1] [2] [3] The office of governor is one of high dignity in which the people have a paramount interest, Attorney General ex rel. Bashford v. Barstow, 4 Wis. 567. The office of lieutenant governor is likewise of great importance because upon the incumbent thereof may at any time devolve the powers and duties of the governor. Sec. 7, art. 5, Const. That the question sought to be determined is publici juris and is one which relates to "the sovereignty of the state, its franchises or prerogatives, or the liberties of its people," cannot be gainsaid. Attorney General v. Railroad Cos., 35 Wis. 425; Attorney General v. Eau Claire, 37 Wis. 400; In re Income Tax Cases, 148 Wis. 456, 134 N.W. 673, 135 N.W. 164; In *395 re Exercise of Original Jurisdiction of Supreme Court, supra.

[4] Assuming for the moment that under the circumstances alleged, the petitioner is a proper person to bring the action in the name of the state, we think it clear, that under the rules stated in the four cases just cited, the petitioner properly invokes the original jurisdiction of this court. In a very early case the question: Why was original jurisdiction of these high prerogative writs given to the supreme court? was propounded and answered thus:

"Because these are the very armor of sovereignty. Because they are designed for the very purpose of protecting the sovereignty and its ordained officers from invasion or intrusion, and also to nerve its arm to protect its citizens in their liberties, and to guard its prerogatives and franchises against usurpation. The convention might well apprehend that it would never do to dissipate and scatter these elements of the State sovereignty among five, ten, twenty or forty inferior tribunals, and wait their tardy progress through them to the supreme tribunal, upon whose decision must finally depend their efficacy!" Attorney General v. Blossom, 1 Wis. 277 (*317) at page 287>(*330).

The petitioner asks leave to bring this action in behalf of the state, by virtue of the provisions of sec. 294.04, Stats., which so far as here material provides:

"(1) An action may be brought by the attorney-general in the name of the state, upon his own information or upon the complaint of any private party, against the parties offending in the following cases:

"(a) When any person shall usurp, intrude into or unlawfully hold or exercise any public office, civil or military. ***

"(2) Such action may be brought in the name of the state by a private person on his own complaint when the attorney-general refuses to act or when the office usurped pertains to a county, town, city, village or school district." [5] [6] Sec. 294.04 was enacted by the legislature as sec. 336, of ch. 120, Laws of 1856, and as a part of our code. Ever since its enactment it has continued in force without amendment except that the word "school" was inserted before the word "district" in the last line thereof. Giving to the words and phrases of that statute a construction according to their common and approved usage, sec. 370.01 (1), it would seem that their meaning is so clear and unambiguous as not to require construction. That statute was construed by this court in 1875. In State ex rel. Wood v. Baker, 38 Wis. 71, 81, Mr. Chief Justice Ryan, speaking for the court said:

"Sec. 6, ch. 160, R.S., relates to proceedings in the nature of quo warranto for usurpation of office; and authorizes the attorney general to bring an action in the name of the state 'upon his own information or upon the complaint of any private person.' Interpreted by the constitution and translated into legal phraseology, we take this to mean that, in such cases, the attorney general may file an information in the nature of quo warranto, ex officio or upon the relation of a private person. The word 'complaint' cannot mean a pleading so called in the code, but seems to be used in a general sense, as a substitute for relation; and the attorney general certainly proceeds ex officio when he acts on his own information only. So far, therefore, we see no material change of the law. The section, however, goes on to provide that such an action may be brought 'in the name of the state, by a private person, on his own complaint, when the attorney general refused to act, or when the office usurped pertains to a county, town, city or district.'" Before such a statute, the courts of the state might perhaps, in proper cases, have authorized proceedings in the name of the attorney general, if that officer wrongfully refused to act, and it was necessary to proceed in his name. Att'y. Gen'l. ex rel. Bashford v. Barstow, 4 Wis., 567. Be that as it may, this branch of the section gives a new proceeding by private parties, in the name of the state, without use of the attorney general's name or office, in cases of local office, and in all cases in which that officer may refuse to act. This proceeding is plainly in the nature of a civil action, although in the name of state. 3 Black. Com., 263."

That the construction given to that statute at the time was the only one that reasonably could be given to it seems clear. However, the respondent contends that the words "a private citizen" do not mean any private citizen but only a private person who is entitled to the office. That contention is based upon the holding of this court in State ex rel. Heim v. Williams, 114 Wis. 402, 405, 90 N.W. 452. *396 Mr. Justice Dodge, speaking for the court in that case, in respect to the right of the relator there to maintain the action, and in respect to sec. 3466, Stats. 1898 (now sec. 297.04) said (page 453):

"But our statute has recognized or created an additional province for such a suit by providing (section 3466, Rev.St. 1898): 'Such action may be brought in the name of the state by a private person on his own complaint when the attorney general refuses to act.' Under that statute it has provided (section 3463) that the proceeding is by 'civil action,' thus making it subject to section 2605: 'Every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest;' or, to transpose the idea, that a party, in order to prosecute, must have a real interest in the object to be accomplished. State ex rel. Peacock v. Orvis, 20 Wis. 235; State ex rel. Chase v. McKinney, 25 Wis. 416; State ex rel. Wood v. Baker, 38 Wis. 71, 81; State ex rel. Att'y. Gen'l. v. Cunningham, 81 Wis. 440, 471, 487, 51 N.W. 724, 15 L.R.A. 561; State ex rel. Glenn v. Stein, 13 Neb. 529, 14 N.W. 481; Att'y. Gen. ex rel. Lawrence v. Trombly, 89 Mich. 50, 58, 50 N.W. 744. The relator, though using the name of the state to sue, neither alleges nor claims any but a private interest. He does not assume to champion the rights of the public, which would be presented were the attorney general here present on behalf of the state, but predicates his right to such wholly upon his title to the office. If he has not such title, then he has no interest in a judgment ousting the respondent from the office, save such as is common to all citizens or members of the community. That title is denied, and therefore becomes the first subject for inquiry and decision."

That language apparently has remained unchallenged up to the present time, probably for the reason that no similar action has been brought. Only twice has that case been referred to. State ex rel. Harley v. Lindemann, 132 Wis.

47, 111 N.W. 214; and State ex rel. Kleist v. Donald, 164 Wis. 545, 160 N.W. 1067. In the first case mentioned, it was cited to the proposition that (page 215) "there can be no question but what the offices alleged to have been usurped are public offices and pertain to the city of Milwaukee and the public schools therein, within the meaning of the statute quoted. Upon the facts thus admitted it is well settled that the relator may rightfully maintain this action in the name of the state." In the second case mentioned, it was cited in connection with a contention of the relator which was not considered sound. In State ex rel. Heim v. Williams, supra, the cause of action which the relator asserted was so obviously without merit that the court may have failed to consider the full implications of the language used. The court no doubt intended by the following language: "The relator, though using the name of the state to sue, neither alleges nor claims any but a private interest. He does not assume to champion the rights of the public, which would be presented were the attorney general here present on behalf of the state, but predicates his right to sue wholly upon his title to the office," strictly to base its holding on the allegations of the complaint. An examination of the complaints, original and amended, (Vol. 695, Cases and Briefs) reveals that the relator there in bringing the action had only one purpose in mind and that was to obtain the office for himself. This court gave no thought or consideration in that case to the proposition that a vindication of a public right was also involved. In Re Income Tax Cases, supra, this court, in speaking of the original jurisdiction of this court, said: (page 500, 134 N.W. page 686)

"This transcendent jurisdiction is a jurisdiction reserved for the use of the state itself when it appears to be necessary to vindicate or protect its prerogatives or franchises or the liberties of its people. The state uses it to punish or prevent wrongs to itself or to the whole people. The state is always the plaintiff, and the only plaintiff, whether the action be brought by the Attorney General, or, against his consent, on the relation of a private individual under the permission and direction of the court. It is never the private relator's suit. He is a mere incident. He brings the public injury to the attention of the court, and the court, by virtue of the power granted by the Constitution, commands that the suit be brought by and for the state. The private relator may have a private interest which may be extinguished (if it be severable from the public interest), yet still the state's action proceeds to vindicate the public right. The fact that in many cases, as, for example, cases of unlawful imprisonment, the private wrong and the *397 public wrong are so closely identified that the ending of the private wrong necessarily puts an end to the public wrong, makes no difference with the principle."

What the court there said is, in our view, clearly correct and is particularly applicable here where the petitioner seeks to vindicate no private right but only the public right to have its offices filled and held only by those who are legally elected or appointed thereto, and to have the powers and duties thereof exercised and performed only by those entitled to such offices. While it is not specifically stated in the petition that leave is asked to bring the action for the purpose of vindicating a public right, that is obviously the primary and only purpose of the action which the petitioner asks leave to bring. So construing the petition, as we think it clearly must be construed, we have a petition in which a private person, a citizen, elector and taxpayer of this state asks leave to bring an action in the name of the state for the purpose of vindicating a public, not a private right, upon the refusal of the attorney general to bring it. In a situation like this, where an appointment has been made to fill a vacancy in office, there never can be a petitioner or relator who has any claim or title to such office. Unless a citizen, upon the refusal of the attorney general to bring the action, can obtain leave to bring an action in the name of the state to determine whether such appointment is lawful, then the lawfulness of the appointment will never be determined and the alleged wrongful usurpation or unlawful intrusion into the office cannot be questioned. Let us assume that a lieutenant governor tenders his resignation to the legislature, as he is required to do if the legislature is in session, sec. 17.01 (1), Stats.; that the legislature then proceeds by joint resolution, without authority of law, to make an appointment to fill the vacancy; and that the attorney general, upon request of a private person, refuses to bring an action to determine whether such appointee is the lieutenant governor of this state, or a usurper and intruder into such office. Could it be argued that leave should not be granted to a private person to bring an action in the name of the state for the purpose of determining whether such lieutenant governor so elected or appointed is a de jure officer or a mere usurper? We think not. Similar examples readily suggest themselves. Without further discussion, we are of the opinion that the prayer of the petition for leave to bring the action should be granted.

[7] The conclusion of the court that leave to bring the action should be granted renders the stipulation made at our bar, and heretofore mentioned, effective. The petition, from now on, will be considered as a complaint to which the respondent has demurred. The petitioner will now be referred to as the relator and the respondents as the defendant.

So many of the allegations of the complaint as are material, may be summarized as follows: Philip F. LaFollette was elected governor of the state of Wisconsin on November 3, 1936, and Henry A. Gunderson was elected lieutenant governor of this state at the same time. Both Philip F. LaFollette and Henry A. Gunderson, on January 4, 1937, took their oaths of office as governor and lieutenant governor respectively. Philip F. LaFollette, at all times since January 4, 1937, has been the governor of this state. On October 16, 1937, Henry A. Gunderson resigned as lieutenant governor. On May 16, 1938, Philip F. LaFollette, as governor, appointed the defendant, Herman L. Ekern, to the office of lieutenant governor. Herman L. Ekern, on May 17, 1938, took the prescribed oath of office, assumed the duties of the office and ever since has exercised the functions thereof.

The relator asserts that Philip F. LaFollette, as governor of this state, was without legal authority to appoint the defendant to the office of lieutenant governor and that the defendant has ever since his appointment and qualification usurped and intruded into the office of lieutenant governor.

The sole question for decision is whether the governor of this state, under the constitution and laws passed in pursuance thereof, has the authority to appoint one having the required qualifications to the office of lieutenant governor. The controversy which has arisen requires a reference to and a construction of the following provisions of our constitution and laws which concededly are applicable.

Sec. 1, art. 5. "The executive power shall be vested in a governor, who shall hold his office for two years; a lieutenant governor shall be elected at the same time, and for the same term."

Sec. 2, art. 5. "No person except a citizen of the United States and a qualified *398 elector of the state shall be eligible to the office of governor or lieutenant governor."

Sec. 7, art. 5. "In case of the impeachment of the governor, or his removal from office, death, inability from mental or physical disease, resignation, or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term or until the governor, absent or impeached, shall have returned, or the disability shall cease. ***"

Sec. 8, art. 5. "The lieutenant governor shall be president of the senate, but shall have only a casting vote therein. If, during a vacancy in the office of governor, the lieutenant governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or from mental or physical disease become incapable of performing the duties of his office, or be absent from the state, the secretary of state shall act as governor until the vacancy shall be filled or the disability shall cease."

Sect. 9, art. 13. "All county officers whose election or appointment is not provided for by this constitution shall be elected by the electors of the respective counties, or appointed by the boards of supervisors, or other county authorities, as the legislature shall direct. All city, town and village officers whose election or appointment is not provided for by this constitution shall be elected by the electors of such cities, towns and villages, or of some division thereof, or appointed by such authorities thereof as the legislature shall designate for that purpose. All other officers whose election or appointment is not provided for by this constitution, and all officers whose offices may hereafter be created by law, shall be elected by the people or appointed, as the legislature may direct."

Sec. 10, art. 13. "The legislature may declare the cases in which any office shall be deemed vacant, and also the manner of filling the vacancy, where no provision is made for that purpose in this constitution."

Sec. 17.27(4), Stats. "Any other vacancy. In case of a vacancy in any office in the state where no other provision is made for filling the same, it shall be filled by appointment by the governor."

It is conceded that there is no provision in our constitution or laws which specifically provides for the filling of a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor.

[8] The relator contends that under our constitution there can never be a vacancy in the office of the lieutenant governor because sec. 8, art. 5, provides that "if, during a vacancy in the office of governor, the lieutenant governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or from mental or physical disease become incapable of performing the duties of his office, or be absent from the state, the secretary of state shall act as governor until the vacancy shall be filled or the disability shall cease" and because that provision of the constitution prevents a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. The contention, in our opinion, is not sound. That Henry A. Gunderson resigned as lieutenant governor is alleged in the complaint. That since he resigned he has not been lieutenant governor is conceded. That there was a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor is conceded. That there was a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor from October 18, 1937, to May 16, 1938, seems so clear as to require no discussion. The term "vacancy" as applied to an office has no technical meaning. In State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 97 Mont. 252, 34 P.2d 369, 371, it was said:

"The word 'vacancy' as applied to an office, has no technical meaning. An office is not vacant so long as it is supplied, in the manner provided by the Constitution or law, with an incumbent who is legally qualified to exercise the powers and perform the duties which pertain to it; and, conversely, it is vacant, in the eye of the law, whenever it is unoccupied by a legally qualified incumbent, who has a lawful right to continue therein until the happening of some future event." See, also, State ex rel. Murphy v. McBride, 29 Wash. 335, 70 P. 25.

But it is argued that there can be no vacancy in an office when there is a person who is qualified and authorized to perform the duties thereof. Citing State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, supra, a case in which alleged vacancies in the offices of governor and lieutenant governor were considered.

The provision: "if, during a vacancy in the office of governor, the lieutenant governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or from mental or physical disease become incapable of performing the duties of his office, or be absent from the state, the secretary of state shall act as governor until the vacancy shall be filled or the disability shall cease," clearly recognizes (1) that there may be a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor as the result of impeachment, displacement, resignation, death or mental or physical disease, which renders *399 him incapable of performing the duties of his office, or as a result of his absence from the state, but not as a result of the powers and duties of the office of governor devolving upon him, and (2) that upon the happening of any of those contingencies, during a vacancy in the office of governor, the secretary of state shall act as governor until the vacancy shall be filled or the disability shall cease. The phrase, "or the disability shall cease," may be referable either to the disability of the governor or the lieutenant governor, and the phrase "until the vacancy shall be filled" may likewise be referable to a vacancy in the office of governor or to a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor, which occurs "during a vacancy in the office of governor."

[9] When a vacancy, either permanent or temporary, occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of that office devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term or until the governor, absent or impeached, shall have returned or the disability shall cease. It is clear that the lieutenant governor does not become governor. He remains lieutenant governor, upon whom devolves the powers and duties of governor. In such a contingency no vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor. State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, supra; State ex rel. Hardin v. Sadler, 23 Nev. 356, 47 P. 450; People ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 114 Cal. 168, 45 P. 1060, 34 L.R.A. 46. It is likewise clear that if, during a vacancy in the office of governor, a vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor, the secretary of state shall act as governor. He does not become either governor or lieutenant governor. He does not perform the duties of lieutenant governor except as he acts as governor. He does not cease to be secretary of state. Under our constitution the secretary of state can act as governor only when there occurs, during a vacancy in the office of governor, a vacancy also in the office of lieutenant governor. To hold otherwise would amount to judicially changing the language of our constitution. It is our opinion that the office of lieutenant governor unquestionably became vacant upon the resignation of Mr. Gunderson which vacancy could be filled, if there be authority under the constitution and laws to fill it by appointment. Sec. 10, art. 13, provides that "the legislature may declare the cases in which any office shall be deemed vacant, and also the manner of filling the vacancy, where no provision is made for that purpose in this constitution." As hereinbefore stated, no provision is made in our constitution for the filling of a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. It is conceded that prior to the enactment of ch. 422, Laws of 1921, there was no law which authorized the filling of a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. Sec. 17.27 (4) was enacted in 1921, upon the advice of the revisor of statutes. In submitting the bill which contained the following language which the legislature subsequently enacted into law:

"A new subsection is added to section 17.27 of the statutes to read:

"(17.27) (4) Any other vacancy. In case of a vacancy in any office in the state where no other provision is made for filling the same, it shall be filled by appointment by the governor," the revisor appended the following:

"Note: This is a blanket provision to take care of any omission in the laws for filling vacancies."

It is contended by the relator that in construing sec. 17.27 (4), the court should apply the rule that specific provisions of a statute should prevail over general provisions upon the same subject. Degutes v. State, 189 Wis. 435, 207 N.W. 948; Wisconsin Gas & Electric Co. v. City of Ft. Atkinson, 193 Wis. 232, 213 N.W. 873, 52 A.L.R. 1033. The rule in our opinion is not applicable because there is no specific provision in our constitution or laws relating to the filling of a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor, and consequently there is no conflict between a specific law and a general law.

[10] The relator further contends that in construing this statute we should apply, as an aid to construction, the doctrine of noscitur a sociis. It is pointed out that while the statute was enacted by the legislature as a new subsection it was numbered sec. 17.27 (4) and that its application should therefore be restricted to the vacancies mentioned in paragraph (1), (2) and (3), of sec. 17.27. See Boardman v. State, 203 Wis. 173, 233 N.W. 556; City of Milwaukee v. Kassen, 203 Wis. 383, 234 N.W. 352; Fox v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co., 210 Wis. 213, 246 N.W. 511. The contention might have some merit had paragraph (4) been adopted at the same time that paragraphs (1), (2) and (3), were enacted. Paragraph (4), clearly, was denominated by the revisor as "a blanket provision to take care of any omission in the laws for filling vacancies." That is quite significant. Paragraph (4) is clear and unambiguous. It is *400 all-inclusive. It authorizes the governor to fill a vacancy in any office in the state where no other provision is made for filling the same. Its plain provisions are broad enough to include an appointment to the office of lieutenant governor when a vacancy exists in that office. We cannot give to it a construction which would except from its provisions a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor.

Nor can we say that the construction, which in our opinion must be given to paragraph (4), is so violative of the spirit of our constitution and the fundamental concepts therein expressed, as to impel a holding that the legislature never intended to authorize the governor to appoint a lieutenant governor when a vacancy occurs in that office. It is therefore our conclusion that the governor was authorized to appoint Herman L. Ekern to the office of lieutenant governor, which became vacant upon the resignation of Henry A. Gunderson and that therefore the complaint does not state a cause of action.

The demurrer to the complaint is sustained.

*470 P. B. Coolidge, for relator.

J. A. Van Orsdel, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

Opinion

POTTER, J.

The sole question involved in this case is whether the relator is entitled to receive the salary provided and appropriated by law for both the offices of Governor and Secretary of State. From the petition herein, it appears that at the general election held November 4, 1902, De Forest Richards was elected to the office of Governor of the state of Wyoming for the term of four years from the first Monday in January, 1903, and on said first Monday in January, 1903, to wit, January 5th, he duly and regularly qualified as such Governor and entered upon the duties of such office. He died April 28, 1903, thereby causing a vacancy in said office, to be filled in the manner required by law. At the same general election the relator, Fenimore Chatterton, was elected to the office of Secretary of State for the same term of four years; and he duly qualified as such, and entered upon the discharge of the duties of that office, on said first Monday in January, 1903, and continues to occupy said office and to perform the duties thereof. Upon the death of Gov. Richards, and on the date thereof, the relator, as required by statute, issued a proclamation announcing the death of the Governor, and that, as is provided by section 6 of article 4 of the Constitution of said state, and section 50 of the Revised Statutes of 1899, he had assumed and entered upon the duties of Governor of the state; and the allegation of the petition is that on said date said relator did assume and enter upon the duties of Governor, and has continued to fill said office, and act as Governor, in addition to his duties as Secretary of State, exercising all the powers and performing all the duties of that office. It is alleged that the relator is eligible to the office, and not under impeachment, and that, his assumption of the office having occurred more than 20 days before the next general election of county officers, the powers and duties of Governor will devolve upon the relator until the next general election, which will occur November 8, 1904. It is alleged that the salaries of both the Governor and

Secretary of State for the year 1903 have been appropriated by the Legislature, and are in the Treasury of the state, except the monthly installments for January, February, March, and April, which have been already disbursed; that on the 1st day of June, 1903, the relator presented to the respondent, the duly elected and qualified Auditor of the State, an itemized account, duly verified as required by law, showing that there was due relator the sum of $208.33, his salary as Acting Governor for the month of May, 1903, and the further sum of $166.66, his salary as Secretary of State for the same month, and he then and there demanded of said auditor that he draw his warrant on the State Treasurer for said amounts. Thereupon the auditor refused to draw a warrant for the payment of said account; and indorsed on the statement thereof his refusal, and the reasons therefor, as *471 follows: "It is understood that this voucher is presented, and that my refusal to pay the same is made, for the purpose of having the Supreme Court of the State of Wyoming decide the question whether or not the Secretary of State is entitled to receive two salaries—the salary of Governor, as Acting Governor, and the salary of Secretary of State. In order that this question may be settled, I hereby refuse payment."

The prayer of the petition is that a writ of mandamus issue, commanding the Auditor to issue and deliver to the relator his two warrants on the Treasurer for the respective amounts claimed. An alternative writ of mandamus was allowed, and the petition is met by a general demurrer, upon which the cause has been heard and must be determined. The demurrer admits all the material allegations that are well pleaded, and doubtless the facts are accurately set forth. The demurrer has been deemed by counsel to raise the only question at issue, viz., the right of relator to the salaries of the two offices. The material constitutional provisions relating to the office of Governor, and the compensation thereof, are as follows:

"The executive power shall be vested in a Governor, who shall hold his office for the term of four (4) years and until his successor is elected and qualified." Article 4, § 1.

"If the Governor be impeached, displaced, resign or die, or from mental or physical disease or otherwise become incapacitated of performing the duties of his office, or be absent from the state, the Secretary of State shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed." Section 6.

"Until otherwise provided by law, the Governor shall receive an annual salary of two thousand five hundred dollars, the Secretary of State, State Auditor, State Treasurer, and Superintendent of Public Instruction shall each receive an annual salary of two thousand dollars, and the salaries of any of the said officers shall not be increased or diminished during the period for which they were elected, and all fees and profits arising from any of the said offices shall be covered into the State Treasury." Section 13.

Sections 4, 5, 7, 8, and 9 of the said article prescribe the duties of the office of Governor. It is unnecessary for the purpose of this opinion to recite those duties in detail; but it may be well to say that the Governor is, by the Constitution, made commander in chief of the military forces of the state, and it is provided that he may call out the same to execute the laws, suppress insurrection, and repel invasion. He may convene the Legislature on extraordinary occasions. He is required to transact all necessary business with the officers of the government, civil and military, and to expedite all such measures as may be resolved upon by the Legislature, and see that the laws are faithfully executed. He is given power to remit fines and forfeitures, and to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons after conviction, for all offenses except treason and cases of impeachment. He is authorized in case of a vacancy in public office to fill the same by appointment, where no other mode of filling the vacancy is provided by law. Every bill passing the Legislature must be presented to him before it becomes a law, and, if approved by him, he is required to sign it. He is given a veto power over legislative measures. After specifically prescribing a number of the duties of the office of Governor, it is provided by section 12 of the same article as follows: "The powers and duties of the Secretary of State, of State Auditor, Treasurer and Superintendent of Public Instruction shall be as prescribed by law." And the first Legislature of the state proceeded to define the duties of Secretary of State. Rev. St. 1899, §§ 54-69. None of the duties of the office of Governor were thereby imposed upon the Secretary of State, nor was any reference made therein to the duty of such officer to act as Governor; and it is obvious that the duties and powers of the office of Governor do not ordinarily pertain to the office of Secretary of State.

The statutory provisions on the subject of succession in the office of Governor are as follows:

"In case of the removal, death, resignation or inability of the Governor of the State of Wyoming, the Secretary of State, or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation or inability, then the President of the last Senate, or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Speaker of the last House of Representatives, or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the State Auditor, or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the State Treasurer, shall act as Governor until the disability of the Governor is removed, or a Governor shall be elected." Rev. St. 1899, § 50.

"Whenever the powers and duties of the office of Governor of the state of Wyoming shall devolve upon any of the persons named in the foregoing section as therein provided, the person upon whom such duties shall devolve, shall issue a proclamation to the effect that the person theretofore an incumbent in said office of Governor, naming him, has ceased to act as such, naming the reason, and stating that such person succeeding to the duties and powers of such office has assumed the duties and powers thereof." Rev. St. 1899, § 51.

"Whenever the powers and duties of the office of the Governor of the state of Wyoming shall devolve upon a person, as herein before provided, the person acting as Governor shall continue to act as Governor, as aforesaid, until the end of the term of the Governor: provided, such assumption of office is made as aforesaid less than twenty days before the next general election of county officers, preceding the next ensuing general election for state officers; but should such assumption be made as aforesaid previous to twenty days before a general election for county officers, then and in that case, the person acting as Governor as aforesaid, shall issue an additional proclamation calling for the election of a Governor to fill the unexpired term, which election shall take place at the same time as the general election for county officers, and such election, together with the returns and canvass thereof, shall be conducted in all respects as though it was an original election for Governor. When the state canvassing board shall have canvassed the vote of the election as aforesaid, and in the manner provided by law, declared a person at such election to be elected as Governor, such person shall, within thirty days after such canvass, or as soon thereafter as possible, qualify and assume the duties and powers of Governor, and shall be the Governor of the state of Wyoming for the remainder of the unexpired term of Governor." Rev. St. 1899, § 52.

"The foregoing provisions shall only apply to persons who are eligible to the office of Governor of the state of Wyoming under the Constitution of the state of Wyoming, and who are not under impeachment by the House of Representatives of the state of Wyoming, at the time the powers and duties shall devolve upon them respectively." Rev. St. 1899, § 53.

These provisions were enacted by the first state Legislature under the following title: "An act to provide for an Acting Governor in case of the removal, death, resignation or inability of the Governor, and to provide for the election of his successor.”

Outside the constitutional provisions rendering certain officers ineligible to hold another office during the term for which they may respectively have been elected, there is no statute of this state prohibiting a person from holding and exercising the duties of two offices that are not incompatible, nor, if legally holding such offices, from receiving the compensation that is attached to each by law. It certainly cannot be held that the offices of Governor and Secretary of State are incompatible, in the sense that the same person, if Secretary of State, cannot legally act in the dual capacity, and perform the duties of each office, upon the death, disability, or resignation of the Governor, since the Constitution and statutes expressly require it. No question of compatibility is involved. Whether the same person could be lawfully elected to both offices is not before us for consideration. That contingency will hardly occur. The situation that confronts us is that the law designates the Secretary of State in a case like the present to act as Governor; and he will be required to so act until after the next general election, that will not occur until November, 1904. During that period all the powers of the Governor and all the duties of that responsible office will devolve upon him. He cannot escape them any more than one regularly chosen to the office. In the meantime he has all the powers, and is subject to all the responsibilities, attaching to the office of Secretary of State. There is no express provision of the statute entitling him to the salary of the office of Governor, nor, as already indicated, is there any provision expressly forbidding its payment to him. The relator being the regularly elected and qualified Secretary of State, it must be conceded that he is entitled to receive the salary provided by law to be paid to that officer. In the absence of statute expressly or by necessary implication depriving him of the compensation belonging to that office upon assuming the powers and duties of Governor, he would have a right to it, even if permitted to draw the salary of the other office. In view of our statutes, or rather the absence of statutory provision on the subject, we cannot conceive of any principle upon which the salary attaching to the office of Secretary of State can be denied him, whatever may be his right to the compensation provided by law for the office of Governor. It seems clear and reasonable that, if he is found entitled to receive the salary of the executive office, he will necessarily be entitled to the salaries of both offices.

It is a general principle that an officer who holds two or more separate and distinct offices, not incompatible with each other, to each of which compensation is attached, may recover the compensation provided by law for each office. Mechem on Pub. Off. 859. In considering the case of a person seeking the recovery of salary claimed to be due him as clerk of a committee in Congress, who had during part of the period also occupied a position as clerk in the office of the President, and the effect of certain sections of the statute prohibiting double or extra compensation, the Supreme Court of the United States said: “We are of the opinion that, taking these sections all together, the purpose of this legislation was to prevent a person holding an office or appointment for which the law provides a definite compensation, by way of salary or otherwise, which is intended to cover all the services which, as such officer, he may be called upon to render, from receiving extra compensation, additional allowances, or pay for other services which may be required of him either by act of Congress or by order of the head of his department, or in any other mode, added to or connected with the regular duties of the place which he holds, but that they have no application to the case of two distinct offices, places, or employments, each of which has its own duties and its own compensation, which offices may both be held by one person at the same time. In the latter case he is, in the eye of the law, two officers, or holds two places or appointments, the functions of which are separate and distinct; *473 and, according to all the decisions, he is in such case entitled to recover the two compensations. In the former case he performs the added duties under his appointment to a single place, and the statute has provided that he shall receive no additional compensation for that class of duties unless it is so provided by special legislation.” United States v. Saunders, 120 U. S. 126, 7 Sup. Ct. 467, 30 L. Ed. 594. In the case of Converse v. United States, 21 How. 463, 16 L. Ed. 192, the court was called upon to construe various provisions of statute limiting the right of certain officers to additional compensation, and with reference to some of them it was said: “But they can by no fair interpretation be held to embrace an employment which has no affinity or connection, either in its character or by law or usage, with the line of his official duty, and where the service to be performed is of a different character and for a different place, and the amount of compensation regulated by law.” But it was held that, as the services for which compensation was claimed were foreign to the regular official duties of the officer, he was entitled to recover; the compensation to be paid for such services having been fixed by law, and the money appropriated to pay it. Upon the general principle above stated, compensation for services rendered in the discharge of the duties of both offices were allowed one occupying the position of chief supervisor of elections and also United States commissioner. In re Conrad (C. C.) 15 Fed. 641. And the two duties of crier and messenger, although separate offices, were held not incompatible, and where the same person held both offices he was allowed the compensation of both. Preston v. United States (D. C.) 37 Fed. 417.

Where the city treasurer was required by law to act ex officio as school treasurer, giving bond for each office, and taking a separate oath of office for each, he was held to be entitled not only to the salary of his office as city treasurer, but also to the salary or compensation of school treasurer. Scranton Sch. Dist. v. Simpson, 133 Pa. 202, 19 Atl. 359. It appearing in that case that a statute had been enacted providing that the city treasurer should be ex officio school treasurer, it was held that the latter office had not been abolished, but that the statute merely designated the person who should fill it. It was held in Missouri, where an appropriation was made by law for the payment of compensation to members of the State Board of Equalization, that the Secretary of State, who was constituted a member of the board by the Constitution, was entitled to compensation for services rendered by him in that capacity. State ex rel. v. Walker, 97 Mo. 162, 10 S. W. 473. And in South Dakota, where the Secretary of State was, under the law, a member of the brand and mark committee, and the law provided a compensation to be paid each member, said officer was held entitled to such compensation, in addition to his salary as Secretary of State. State v. Roddle, 81 N. W. 980. See, also, State ex rel. v. La Grave (Nev.) 48 Pac. 193; Badeau v. U. S., 130 U. S. 439, 9 Sup. Ct. 579, 32 L. Ed. 997; Love v. Baehr, 47 Cal. 364.

The Attorney General has filed a brief herein in support of the demurrer and he presents an able argument against relator's claim. We do not understand that he disputes the general principle, but his contention is that in acting as Governor the relator is but performing his duty as Secretary of State. The argument is that the duty is one imposed upon the Secretary of State, and is not foreign to the duties of that office; that his situation is not analogous to the case of a Lieutenant Governor who assumes the office of Governor in case of a vacancy in that office through the death or resignation of the regularly chosen incumbent thereof; that the relator does not become the successor of the deceased Governor, and is not, in fact, Governor, but simply acts in that capacity until, in obedience to the mandate of the statute, a successor may be regularly elected by the people. It is even argued that a vacancy continues to exist, and will so continue until some person is chosen at the next election to serve the balance that may remain of the unexpired term, and that in the meantime the state is and will be without a Governor. In this connection it should be remembered that the statute providing for succession in the office of Governor uses precisely the same language in designating the various officers or persons who shall in certain prescribed contingencies act as Governor. No different words are employed in describing the duty of President of the Senate or Speaker of the House upon the occurrence of the event that would require either of them to assume the duties of Governor. It is evident that the powers and rights of either would not be in any way superior to or different from the powers and rights of the relator under like circumstances. If the relator does not occupy the office of Governor, but merely executes the duties of Secretary of State in assuming the responsibilities and powers of Governor, then it would seem that the same thing would be true of the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House, and that, should either of them be required to act as Governor, he would be merely performing certain duties added for the time being to his office. And it would follow that, although the law has provided no compensation to be paid to those officers except during a session of the Legislature, they would not be entitled to the salary of the Governor, or any other compensation, until the Legislature should make further provision. In this case we are not concerned with a mere temporary disability of the Governor, or his temporary absence from the state, and the occasional assumption of his duties by another while he continues to occupy the office and draw the salary thereof; nor are we *474 called upon to consider what the rule would be in such cases. The contention of the Attorney General seems to be supported in some measure by the case of United States v. Smith, 27 Fed. Cas. 1139 (No. 16,321). That was a suit upon the bond of the Secretary of the territory of Minnesota, and the officer set up in defense an account against the government, including an item for salary due him as Acting Governor during the absence of that officer. There had not occurred a vacancy in the office, as we read the case, but the Governor was absent from the territory on certain occasions, and during such absence the Secretary acted. The statute authorizing him to do so provided that he should discharge the duties of the executive "in case of the death, removal, resignation, or necessary absence of the Governor from the territory." Act March 3, 1849, c. 121, § 3, 9 Stat. 404. In charging the jury, the district judge said: "The defendant took the office of Secretary knowing that in any of the emergencies specified the duties of Governor would devolve on him. And the law made no provision for any additional compensation in that event. In assuming the office of Secretary of the territory the defendant became bound to act as Governor, if necessary under the law, as fully as he was obliged to discharge any other duty as Secretary. It pertained to the office of Secretary, though not strictly within the legitimate range of its duties. The salary certainly was less than the labor and responsibility required, but this is an evil which this court and jury cannot remedy without usurping legislative power." The learned court moreover held that the item came within the operation of an act of Congress forbidding the allowance to one individual for the salaries of two different offices on account of his having performed the duties thereof at the same time. Notwithstanding that the general language of the court might be held to be applicable to the situation of relator, we think it is not a necessary implication that upon facts like those in the case at bar the court would have expressed the same opinion respecting the character of the duties of the officer. Again, in State, etc., v. Heller (N. J. Sup.) 42 Atl. 155, 57 L. R. A. 312, it was said, in view of the language of the Constitution, that although the President of the Senate, in case of a vacancy in the office of Governor, exercises the powers and performs the duties of Governor, and receives the emoluments of that office, he does not become Governor, but that he still holds the office of President of the Senate, with the added duties required of the chief executive imposed upon him. He was held to be the "person administering the government," since the Constitution, in various clauses, used the words "the Governor or person administering the Government." The statute there evidently gave the officer the emoluments of the office, and hence his right thereto was not involved in the case.

We are not altogether satisfied that the question whether the relator is in fact the governor of the state in the same sense as one regularly elected to that office is material to the determination of his right to the salary of the office. He is at least the Acting Governor. The expression both of the statute and Constitution is that he "shall act as Governor." And the statute requires him to issue a proclamation to the effect that he has "succeeded" to the duties and powers of the office, and has assumed such duties and powers. Moreover, the statute (section 52) refers to the act of the officer in taking upon himself the powers and duties of governor as an "assumption of office." And in case such "assumption of office" is made less than 20 days before the next general election of county officers, preceding the next ensuing general election for state officers, the "person acting as Governor" is required to "continue to act as Governor" until the end of the term. The significance of this requirement is made more manifest when it is remembered that an election for county officers occurs every two years, whereas a regular election for state officers occurs but once in four years; and hence the person so acting as Governor might be required to serve in that capacity more than one-half of the entire term, and until the end thereof, in which event, also, the vacancy, as such (that is, for the existing term), would not be filled at all by an election, but the Acting Governor would be succeeded by one elected for a new and full term. Whether the relator has succeeded to the title of Governor, or not, it must be conceded, we think, that he may appropriately assume at least the title of Acting Governor. Possibly that is his correct title, in the performance of executive functions. It is unnecessary, however, to decide that question.

We are not convinced that the duties of Acting Governor are attached to the office of Secretary of State. It seems to us that the more reasonable view is that the person occupying the office of Secretary of State is designated to act as Governor. This view is impressed upon us and strengthened whether we consider the nature of the duties of the two offices, or the legislation concerning them. We have already alluded to the fact that the Constitution imposes upon the Legislature the duty of prescribing the duties of Secretary of State, while it enumerates many of the powers and duties of the Governor, and the further fact that in the chapter defining the duties of the former office the Legislature omitted any reference to the requirement that the incumbent should in certain contingencies act as Governor. It appears to us to be incontrovertible that the two offices are separate and distinct, each having its own duties and responsibilities. *475 The duties and powers of one do not pertain to, nor are they legitimately connected with, the other office. It is doubtless true that, whenever by law the Secretary is required to attest or countersign any document bearing the signature of the Governor, he continues to do so, and, when necessary, attaches the great seal of the state thereto, notwithstanding that it is the same person who signs in both capacities. It may be conceded, for the purposes of the case, that in a strictly technical sense the relator is not Governor. But it would not necessarily follow, in our judgment, that the salary of the office is not to be paid to him. To all intents and purposes he is the Governor of the state, and in a constitutional sense he is Acting Governor, at least. As such he is required to perform various duties, and is authorized to exercise very great powers, entirely distinct from the duties of his other office—such duties as not only by our written law, but ordinarily, are imposed and conferred solely upon the chief executive officer of a state. It might also be conceded, without seriously impairing the relator's right to the salary in question, that in a limited sense the office of Governor is vacant. But we are not able to subscribe to the proposition that there is an absolute and unqualified vacancy in the office. That would imply either that there is no one lawfully authorized to perform its duties, or that they are temporarily an adjunct of another office. In State ex rel. v. Henderson, 4 Wyo. 555, 35 Pac. 520, 22 L. R. A. 751, Chief Justice Groesbeck, speaking for this court, said: "An office cannot be said to be vacant while any person is authorized to act in it, and does so act." That language was employed in determining a question not involved here, viz., the authority of the Governor in a certain case to appoint to an office. We think—and may have something further to say on that subject—that the duties have not become an adjunct of another office. The statute, as already indicated, seems to indicate quite clearly that the Secretary, in entering upon the discharge of the duties, shall assume an office, and that reference is manifestly to some office other than that of Secretary of State. It is a conceded fact, and must be, that the relator is lawfully authorized to perform the duties of the office of Governor.

We deem it unnecessary to discuss technically the question of vacancy in the office. In the sense that the law contemplates that there shall be an incumbent of the office regularly chosen to that position, it may be admitted that a vacancy has occurred, and continues to exist, which can be filled only through an election by the people. But the office is now supplied in the manner provided by the Constitution and statutes, with an incumbent who is legally qualified to exercise its powers and perform the duties which pertain to it; and, although such incumbent is merely designated as an Acting Governor, he is for all practical purposes in possession of the office and all of its prerogatives.

In this connection it is difficult to perceive much, if any, distinction between the facts in this case, and where, a vacancy occurring in an elective office, the Governor or some other competent authority has appointed some person to fill the office until the next general election, at which time the people are required to choose some one to serve out the remainder of the unexpired term. That is the case in the event of a vacancy in the office of Justice of the Supreme Court, and on three occasions there has occurred such a vacancy, which was filled by appointment of the executive until the following general election, when an incumbent for the balance of the unexpired term was elected. In the case of Governor, instead of an appointment by some other officer until an opportunity regularly arrives for the people to signify their preference, the law itself designates a person who shall act.

Under the Constitution of the state of Oregon, in case of the removal of the Governor, or his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the duties of the office, the same was made to devolve upon the Secretary of State. In the case of Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Or. 389, 4 Pac. 1180, one of the questions, as stated in the opinion, was whether, when the duties of the office of Governor devolve upon the Secretary of State, he has a right to the salary of the office. The court answered the question in the affirmative. It was said in the opinion: "If the office of Governor continue after the Governor ceases to hold the office under this section—if the office be not vacant, but shall be lawfully filled by one acting therein directly as the agent of the state, and not in the character of deputy of a Governor incumbent—it would seem difficult to distinguish such a person from a Governor of right and in fact." And again, in response to the argument that the duties of the office of Governor became annexed to the office of Secretary of State, and were discharged as duties incident to the latter office: "In the first place, it is not shown how an office can be vacant, and yet there be a person, not the deputy or locum tenens of another, empowered by law to discharge the duties of the office, and who does in fact discharge them. It is not explained how in such a case the duties can be separated from the office, so that he who discharges them does not become an incumbent of the office. And, in the second place, how a person can fill the office of Governor without being Governor. It is the function of a public officer to discharge public duties. Such duties constitute his office. Hence, given a public office, and one who, duly empowered, discharges its duties, and we have an incumbent in that office. Such is the case here. The Secretary of State, by force of the function cast upon him, becomes Governor, and *476 consequently entitled to the salary appertaining to the office." Counsel endeavors to distinguish the Oregon case from the case at bar on account of the provision in the Constitution of that state that the office shall "devolve" upon the Secretary of State, while the language of our law is that he shall act as Governor. We fail to observe any material distinction. The same section of the Oregon Constitution, in providing for succession in case of the removal, death, resignation, or disability of both the Governor and Secretary of State, declared that in such case "The President of the Senate shall act as Governor." Const. Or. Art. 5, § 8. And in the case cited, in determining the tenure of office as Governor of the Secretary of State, the court mentioned the possibility of the President of the Senate succeeding to the office, and referred to him in language indicating quite clearly that he would be regarded as Governor, for it was said that he would hold the office of Governor, once incumbent, without reference to his office of President of the Senate, and also that he would cease to be President of the Senate when he became Governor. It is evident that the Oregon court itself perceived no distinction between the declaration that the office should devolve, and one that a certain person should act as Governor.

In the case of People v. Hopkins, 55 N. Y. 74, it was held that a deputy of the Superintendent of Insurance, upon whom the law imposed the duties of the office during a vacancy in the principal office, and during the absence and inability of the incumbent thereof, was entitled to the salary of a superintendent during the time he discharged the duties of the office. The statutory provision was that the deputy should "possess the powers and perform the duties attached by law to the office of the principal, during a vacancy in such office, and during the absence and inability of his principal." Laws 1859, p. 882, c. 366, § 2. There the deputy was only empowered to perform the duties and possess the powers, etc., during a vacancy in the office. The office was not made otherwise to devolve upon him. Yet he was entitled to the salary. And in this connection it might be pertinent to inquire what considerations ordinarily determine whether or not compensation shall be paid an officer, and the amount thereof. Our own Constitution furnishes an answer. It is provided in section 1 of article 14 that "The Legislature shall, from time to time, fix the amount of such salaries as are not already fixed by this Constitution, which shall in all cases be in proportion to the value of the services rendered and the duty performed." And in 23 Ency. L. (2d. Ed.) 387, "salary" is defined as "a fixed annual or periodical payment for services, depending upon the amount of service rendered." In fixing a salary to be paid the executive of the state, it would be difficult, we imagine, to show that it was intended by those who framed the fundamental instrument of our state government to bestow the compensation in consideration of the acceptance of the title of Governor. It will hardly be questioned that the salary was intended as compensation for the rendition of services and the performance of duty. The opinion in the case last above cited possesses further interest in view of the argument made in this case to the effect that the relator should not be allowed the salary because he only acts as Governor, and is not Governor in fact. The court, in its opinion, stated that the statute made the deputy, to all intents and purposes, acting superintendent for the time during which there is no other superintendent, and referred to certain precedents, not judicial, but, as stated, furnished by "able jurists, wise statesmen, and rigid economists." It seems that in February, 1828, the office of governor of New York became vacant by the death of De Witt Clinton, and that its powers and duties devolved upon the then Lieutenant Governor. The learned judge states that the question arose whether the officer aforesaid was to be regarded as Acting Governor, and entitled to the salary of the office; and it was held by the Comptroller that he was to be so regarded, and was entitled to the salary. And the same conclusion was reached on a subsequent occasion. The New York Constitution declared that the "powers and duties of the office" should devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, but the court states that he was regarded as "Acting Governor"; and it is noticeable that not the office, but the "powers and duties" of the office, were made to devolve upon him. It will probably be conceded that the powers and duties of the Governor's office have devolved upon the relator in this case.

The Constitution of Nevada provides, in case of vacancy in the office of Governor, that "the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor." Here, again, we have the "powers and duties," rather than the "office," devolving, if there is any distinction. It was held by the Supreme Court of Nevada that a Lieutenant Governor upon whom the powers and duties of Governor had devolved in consequence of the death of the incumbent of that office was entitled to the salary attached to the office. State ex rel. v. La Grave, 23 Nev. 216, 45 Pac. 243, 35 L. R. A. 233. It seems to have been argued in that case that the relator remained Lieutenant Governor, exercising the powers and duties of Governor. In a concurring opinion, Chief Justice Bigelow expressed a doubt as to whether the Lieutenant Governor became "Governor," in the full sense of the term; but he said that he filled the office, not temporarily, but permanently, and that he became at least permanent Acting Governor for the residue of the term. The learned chief justice referred to the proposition, as a general principle of *477 justice and right, that, where one legally performs the duties of an office, he should be entitled to the emoluments thereof. And he held that any doubt as to the right of the officer to receive the salary should be resolved in his favor. The question whether, upon the assumption of the duties of Governor by the Lieutenant Governor, a vacancy was created in the latter office, subsequently came before the same court; and it was held that a vacancy did not exist, but that the officer remained Lieutenant Governor, but invested with the powers and duties of Governor. State ex rel. v. Sadler (Nev.) 47 Pac. 450. Under similar constitutional provisions, the declaration being that the "powers and duties" of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, the Supreme Court of California, in People ex rel. v. Budd, 45 Pac. 1060, 34 L. R. A. 46, say: "It will be seen that in case of a vacancy in the office of Governor the vacancy is not to be filled, but the powers and duties devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, who does not cease to be Lieutenant Governor." And it was held that he could not appoint a Lieutenant Governor, upon the principle, evidently, that there would not be a vacancy in the office on account of the assumption by the incumbent of the duties of Governor. And so in the case at bar it is not contended on either hand that a vacancy has occurred in the office of Secretary of State. No question of salary was involved in the California case above cited. The language of the court seems, however, to sustain the argument of the Attorney General that the vacancy in the office of Governor is not filled in consequence of the assumption of its duties by the Secretary of State.

Our views as to the fact of vacancy in the office have, in a measure, been stated, although, in our opinion, it is immaterial whether there is a technical vacancy or not. We believe it more reasonable to say that the office is to all practical intents and purposes occupied by the officer upon whom the law has imposed its powers and duties, and that at least he is Acting Governor, and as such comes within the meaning and operation of the law prescribing a salary for the office of Governor. We cannot accept the proposition that the very high and responsible duties of the executive office have been given such a movable character by the law as to be attached in certain contingencies first to the office of Secretary of State, then possibly in succession to the offices of President of the Senate, Speaker of the House of Representatives, Auditor, and State Treasurer. In our judgment, the conclusion more consonant with reason and the rules governing the interpretation of statutes is that the duties and powers remain as incident and attached to the office of Governor continually, and that when exercised and performed by either of the officers authorized by law, in case the regular incumbent has ceased to act, they are exercised and performed as the powers and duties of the office of Governor. Indeed, the language of the law clearly so implies, when it requires the designated officer to act as Governor. He is required to perform all the service that constitutes the consideration for the salary provided by law. In the absence of statute expressly or by necessary implication forbidding the relator from receiving the compensation attached to both offices, we see no reason why the same should not be paid to him upon his proper and lawful demand. There is nothing inequitable in this conclusion. The state has duly appropriated the money to pay the salary, and the money is in the treasury. The services for which the salary is provided are being performed, and have been performed for the period covered by the claim of the relator here in question. He is required to give attention to the duties of two state offices. His responsibilities are largely increased, and every principle of justice requires that he be compensated. This is recognized in many of the states by an express provision of either Constitution or statute allowing the one upon whom the duties of Governor have devolved to be paid the compensation attached by law to the office. The demurrer will be overruled.

Under Const. art. 5, § 18, providing that, in case of vacancy in the office of governor, the powers and duties shall devolve on the lieutenant governor; and section 17, providing that if, during a vacancy in the office of governor, the lieutenant governor die or become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the president pro tempore of the senate shall act as governor till the vacancy is filled,—vacancy in the office of governor creates no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor.

BELKNAP, C. J.

This is an application for a writ of mandamus requiring respondent to commission relator as lieutenant governor of the state. The petition, among other things, alleges that the Honorable John E. Jones, the duly-elected governor of the state, died upon the 10th day of April, 1896; that thereupon the powers and duties of the office of governor devolved upon respondent, the lieutenant governor, who is now the acting governor of the state; that at the last general election relator was the candidate of the Silver party and of the Democratic party for the office of lieutenant governor, and received the highest number of votes cast for any candidate for that office, and was elected. A demand upon and refusal by respondent to issue a certificate of election are alleged, and this court is asked to issue a writ of mandamus requiring him to do so. The attorney general has demurred to the petition, upon the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to entitle relator to the relief prayed for.

The provisions of the constitution bearing upon the subject are as follows (article 5):

“Sec. 17. A lieutenant governor shall be elected at the same time and places, and in the same manner, as the governor, and his term of office and eligibility shall also be the same. He shall be president of the senate, but shall have only a casting vote therein. If during a vacancy in the office of governor, the lieutenant governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or become incapable of performing the duties of the office, or be absent from the state, the president pro tempore of the senate shall act as governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability cease.

“Sec. 18. In case of the impeachment of the governor, or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the duties of the said office, resignation, or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease.”

The gubernatorial succession is covered by the foregoing provisions. If a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor, but there is no vacancy created thereby in the office of lieutenant governor. The officer remains lieutenant governor, but invested with the powers and duties of governor. Again, if, during a vacancy in the office of governor, the lieutenant governor becomes incapable of discharging the duties of the office of governor from any of the causes enumerated in the constitution, —in other words, if a vacancy exists in both the office of governor and lieutenant governor,—the president pro tempore of the senate acts as governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability cease. People v. Budd (Cal.) 45 Pac. 1060. There being no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor, the demurrer must be sustained, and the writ dismissed. It is so ordered.

Supreme Court of Oklahoma.

v.

McALISTER, Secretary of State Election Board, et al.

No. 17513.

June 28, 1926.

Syllabus by the Court.

Article 6 of the Constitution defines the executive department of the state, and names certain officers who shall be vested with executive powers.

Section 2 of said article is as follows: "The supreme executive power" of the estate "shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled 'the Governor * * * of Oklahoma.'"

Section 4 of said article contains the following provision, to wit: "The Governor, secretary of state, state auditor, and state treasurer shall not be eligible immediately to succeed themselves."

Sections 15 and 16 are in pari materia to the extent that they relate to and form part of, the entire purpose and scheme provided for in article 6, and to such extent only. They are independent of each other to the extent that they deal with, and provide for, the distinctly different conditions which each does provide for.

Said section 15 provides for such vacancies only as may be caused by the elected Governor's temporary absence from his office, and where, though absent from his office, he still retains his right to the office, still possesses his right, upon his return to assume the duties and exercise the powers of his office, and further provides that, during such vacancy, if the Lieutenant Governor becomes incapable of performing the duties of the office, then the President of the Senate may act as Governor, and, in case of his disability, the Speaker of the House may act as Governor during such vacancy, thus making complete and adequate provisions for taking care of the peculiar contingency and condition which it seeks to provide for, viz. vacancies occasioned by a temporary absence or inability of the Governor, where the Governor still has the right to return to his office and assume its duties, and to this extent section 15 is independent of section 16.

Const. art. 6, § 16, is as follows: "In case of impeachment of the Governor, or of his death, failure to qualify, resignation, removal from the state, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term or until the disability shall be removed."

Thus section 16 makes provision for a wholly different contingency and condition to that provided for in section 15. Section 16 provides for occasions where the individual rights of the elected Governor, as distinguished from the public rights, have been terminated, where his rights to return to the office and assume its powers have been foreclosed, and, in order to protect the right of the public to a continuation of the functions of government, in such case, section 16 provides that the office of Governor, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term, thus making complete and adequate provision for the particular contingency and condition *570 which it seeks to provide for, and to this extent section 16 is independent of section 15.

Const. art. 6, § 16, creates no vacancy, contemplates no vacancy, mentions no vacancy. It simply makes provision for an uninterrupted functioning of the office of chief executive with a duly commissioned officer at the head of such department thereby avoiding a vacancy.

When the elected Governor becomes impeached, as is the condition presented here, the office of Governor automatically devolves upon another. The person on whom such office devolves necessarily fills such office, exercising all the powers, discharging all the duties, and enjoying all the emoluments, compensation, honor and prestige which pertain to such office. The person who thus fills the office of chief magistrate is styled "the Governor of Oklahoma." He is the Governor for the simple reason that he governs. He governs officially for the reason that section 16 expressly vests him with authority to do so. Therefore he is the official Governor, and, being the official Governor, he is rendered ineligible to succeed himself by the inhibition contained in section 4, art. 6, of the Constitution.

HARRISON, J.

This proceeding was begun in the district court to test the eligibility of Mr. M. E. Trapp to succeed himself in the office of Governor.

Mr. Trapp had theretofore filed his application with the state election board as a candidate for nomination for Governor, and plaintiff sought to enjoin said board from certifying Mr. Trapp's name to the state board of affairs, and to enjoin the state board of affairs from having Mr. Trapp's name printed as a candidate for Governor on the official ballots to be voted at the forthcoming primary election to be held in August of this year.

The trial court denied the injunction, and plaintiff appealed. Plaintiff contends that, under the provisions of article 6 of the Constitution, Mr. Trapp is not eligible to the office of Governor. Defendants contend that he is eligible. The controversy arose out of the following facts, viz.:

At the November election, 1922, J. C. Walton was elected Governor, and defendant M. E. Trapp was elected Lieutenant Governor, and both went into office in January, 1923. In November, 1923, Mr. Walton was impeached and removed from office by the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment, and thereupon, by virtue of section 16, art. 6, of the Constitution, the office of Governor devolved upon the Lieutenant Governor, who was defendant Mr. M. E. Trapp, who has occupied the office of Governor, and exercised the powers of Governor, from the date of said impeachment until the present date, and is now occupying such office with the powers thus conferred by said section 16, and is seeking the nomination for Governor, and to ultimately succeed himself to the office of Governor at the general election in November of this year.

Plaintiff in error contends that under section 16, art. 6, of the Constitution, the office of Governor devolved upon the Lieutenant Governor immediately upon the impeachment of Governor Walton, and that thereupon Lieutenant Governor Trapp became the Governor in fact and in law, and that, having held and filled the office of Governor, and exercised the powers of Governor, and enjoyed the emoluments of the office of Governor from the time said office devolved upon him until the present time, he is not now eligible to succeed himself to the office of Governor at the ensuing term because of the inhibition contained in section 4, art. 6, of the Constitution, which is as follows:

"The Governor, secretary of state, state auditor, and state treasurer shall not be eligible immediately to succeed themselves."

*571 On the other hand, it is contended by defendants in error that, upon the impeachment of Mr. Walton, there became a vacancy in the office of Governor, which has never been filled, but which has existed to the present time, and now exists, and that, though the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office of Governor devolved upon Lieutenant Governor Trapp upon the impeachment of Governor Walton, yet Mr. Trapp did not thereby become Governor in every sense of the word, but became merely Acting Governor during a vacancy, and that, not being Governor, but being merely "Acting Governor," he is therefore not rendered ineligible by the inhibition contained in said section 4, art. 6.

Defendants in error further contend that, by harmonizing the provisions of sections 15 and 16 of said article 6, and construing the two sections together, it will be seen that no vacancy was caused in the office of Lieutenant Governor by the devolution of the office of Governor upon the Lieutenant Governor, and no vacancy now exists in the office of Lieutenant Governor, and that therefore Mr. Trapp is still Lieutenant Governor, but that a vacancy does exist in the office of Governor by reason of Governor Walton's impeachment and removal from office, and that Mr. Trapp's being merely "Acting Governor" during such vacancy does not fill such vacancy, and therefore the inhibition in said section 4, art. 6, does not apply to him; that said inhibition applies only to an "elected Governor," and does not apply to one upon whom the "office of Governor" has devolved by virtue of said section 16.

From the foregoing may be seen the respective positions of the parties to this controversy, and that the main question to be determined is whether, under the existing conditions, the inhibitive provision in said section 4 applies to Mr. Trapp.

The questions involved have all been briefed and orally argued by the parties hereto, and, in addition to the briefs and oral arguments of parties in the instant case (case No. 17520, J. B. A. Robertson v. State Election Board and M. E. Trapp, 248 P. 583), which involves the identical questions herein presented, and seeks the very same relief herein sought, have also been briefed, and were orally argued and submitted with this case, the briefs in both cases to be used in each.

It is notable that, while numerous authorities have been cited in support of the contentions of the parties, yet no case has been cited where the identical conditions here presented, and the identical questions of law here involved, have ever been passed upon and decided by any court of last resort. We have been unable to find any case ourselves that is at all similar in all of its phases.

Though plaintiff in error is represented by able and diligent counsel, and defendant in error represented by a remarkable array of powerful lawyers, yet no case directly in point has been cited; that is, no case where any candidate has ever aspired to any office in the face of a similar constitutional inhibition against his immediately succeeding himself in office. Hence, in the absence of a controlling decision, it becomes necessary to search the provisions of our Constitution for a solution of the problem presented, guided in so doing by such light as the partially analogous cases cited may afford us. Article 4 of our Constitution distributes the powers of state government into three separate departments, viz. legislative, executive, and judicial.

[1] Article 6 defines the executive department, and names certain state officers who shall be vested with executive power. The provisions of said article 6 pertinent to the questions under consideration are:

Section 1, which says:

"The executive authority of the state shall be vested in a Governor, Lieutenant Governor, secretary of state, state auditor, Attorney General, state treasurer, superintendent of public instruction, state examiner and inspector, chief mine inspector, commissioner of labor, commissioner of charities and corrections, commissioner of insurance, and other officers provided by law and this Constitution, each of whom shall keep his office and public records, books, and papers at the seat of government, and shall perform such duties as may be designated in this Constitution or prescribed by law."

Section 2, which says:

"The supreme executive power shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled 'The Governor of the state of Oklahoma.'"

Section 4, which, after prescribing the length of term of office of certain state officers, including the Governor, says:

"The Governor, secretary of state, state auditor, and state treasurer shall not be eligible immediately to succeed themselves."

Section 15, which says:

"The Lieutenant Governor shall possess the same qualifications of eligibility for office as the Governor. He shall be President of the Senate, but shall have only a casting vote therein, and also in joint vote of both houses. If, during a vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die or be absent from the state, or become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the President, pro tempore, of the Senate, shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease; and if the President, pro tempore, of the Senate, for any of the above enumerated causes, shall become incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease. Further provisions for succession to the office of Governor shall be prescribed by law.”

*572 Section 16, which says:

“In case of impeachment of the Governor, or of his death, failure to qualify, resignation, removal from the state, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term or until the disability shall be removed.”

These are the sections of said article 6 which bear directly upon the question before us, viz. whether the defendant M. E. Trapp is eligible to succeed himself in the office of Governor. It is observed that in section 1, art. 6, supra, the Lieutenant Governor is named as one of the executive officers of the state, and is vested with executive authority. He is expressly made a part of the executive department. As to what his executive powers are, and when and how he may exercise them, will be seen in the further course of our analysis.

By section 2, supra, it will be seen that the supreme executive power is in reality vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled “the Governor * * * of Oklahoma.” The real executive head, therefore, the office in whom the supreme executive power of the state is in intentment and in reality vested, is a chief magistrate. It is in the office of chief magistrate that the supreme executive power is lodged. The person who exercises the supreme executive power of the state does so by virtue of his being the chief magistrate.

The person on whom such office by the Constitution devolves necessarily fills such office, and exercises all powers lodged in such office, and is charged with all the duties pertaining to such office, and enjoys all the emoluments, compensations, honor, and prestige which belong to such office. The person who thus fills the office of chief magistrate is styled “the Governor of Oklahoma.” He is the “Governor” for the simple reason that he governs. A Governor is one who governs. He governs officially for the reason that section 16 vests him with authority to do so, and requires him to do. Therefore he is the official Governor. The provision of section 4, supra, speaks for itself. It simply says in simple words:

“The Governor * * * shall not be eligible immediately to succeed

Section 15, supra, prescribes that the Lieutenant Governor shall possess the same qualifications of eligibility for office as the Governor. It also imposes other than executive duties upon the Lieutenant Governor, viz.: He shall be president of the Senate, and shall have a casting vote therein, and a casting vote also in joint session of both houses. These duties are not imposed upon him, nor these powers conferred upon him, because he is one of the executive officers of the state, for they are not executive duties—they are legislative duties. The Constitution does not say why these duties are imposed upon the Lieutenant Governor. It may have prescribed such duties for him because, as a rule in states of the Union, similar duties and powers are generally given to the Lieutenant Governor, and because, under the federal Constitution, the Vice President performs similar duties, such being the general custom and general conception of the proper and harmonious method of running the entire machinery of our government. But, whatever may have been the reason for giving these powers and duties to the Lieutenant Governor, it is a fact that they are given him by our Constitution.

Said section 15 further provides that, if, during a vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall be impeached, or become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the President pro tempore of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled, and, if the President of the Senate, for any reason, becomes incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, then the Speaker of the House shall act as Governor until the disability ceases. Now let it be observed that the words “shall act as Governor” are not applied to the Lieutenant Governor, but are applied only to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House in cases where the Lieutenant Governor is under a disability. The words “shall act as Governor,” or, as defendants in error put it, “the Acting Governor,” are not anywhere in the Constitution applied to the Lieutenant Governor.

They are applied nowhere else, nor to any one else, except to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House, and to them only in cases where “the Lieutenant Governor becomes incapable of performing the duties of the office.” This section nowhere denominates the Lieutenant Governor as a mere “Acting Governor,” nor does it imply that he is regarded as only “an Acting Governor.” It says, “or become incapable of performing the duties of the office,” meaning the office of Governor. Then, in such case, the President of the Senate shall act as Governor, and, if he be disqualified, then the Speaker of the House shall act as Governor. The Lieutenant Governor is nowhere spoken of as "Acting Governor."

[3] But section 16, supra, provides that, in case of impeachment of the Governor, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor. This section does not say, "upon the Lieutenant Governor who shall act as Governor," but it says:

"The said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term or until the disability shall be removed."

It means that all the powers, duties, and responsibilities of the office of Governor shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, and *573 that all the emoluments, compensation, honor, dignity, and prestige of the said office shall be his. He is thereby made the chief magistrate in fact by the plain language of the Constitution. He is vested with all the powers, and charged with all the duties and responsibilities, and is given all compensations, which belong to the chief magistrate, in whom the supreme executive power of the state is vested. "The said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor."

But, it is insisted by defendants in error, persistently and repeatedly, that the two sections (15 and 16) must be construed together, and that, by construing them together, we find a vacancy in the office of Governor, a vacancy which, they claim, we are not at liberty to read out of the Constitution, a vacancy which is not filled by the Lieutenant Governor, as he is a mere "Acting Governor," a vacancy which the law makes no provision for filling except by an election. But, upon examination of the two sections, we find that, by either construing the two sections together, or by construing them separately, we nowhere find the Lieutenant Governor referred to as "Acting Governor." Furthermore, we nowhere find the words "shall act as Governor," except in cases where the Lieutenant Governor is, for some reason, rendered incapable of performing the duties of Governor. Then the President of the Senate or Speaker of the House shall "act as Governor."

Under section 16, when the Governor is impeached, and his rights become foreclosed, the office devolves upon the Lieutenant Governor.

[6] The word "devolve" is defined by lexicographers and in law dictionaries as meaning to roll or tumble down or descend; to be transmitted by course of events, or by operation of law; to transfer from one person to another; to pass by transmission to another; to pass from a person dying to a person living; to pass from the possessor to a successor. See Webster's Int. Dict. 1923; Funk & Wagnall's Stand. Dict.; Black's Law Dict.: 14 Cyc. 286; Words and Phrases, both First and Second Series; 18 C. J. 1034, and notes.

Hence, when Governor Walton became impeached, when the judgment of the high court of impeachment was pronounced, the official powers of Mr. Walton ended, his rights of tenure were ended, and the office of chief magistrate of the state, the office in which is lodged the supreme executive powers of the state, automatically, instantaneously with the ending, descended upon, passed down to, devolved upon, Mr. Trapp. There was no interim, no vacancy, no delay in the transmission, no interruption in, no suspension of, the functions of government—they passed right on.

By the judgment of impeachment, Mr. Walton's authority ceased; his term and tenure ended; his individual rights were foreclosed; "the said office, with its compensation," devolved automatically upon Mr. Trapp. There was no vacancy created, none intended, none contemplated. It was never intended that, under the conditions provided for in section 16, there should be an interim during which the state would have no Governor, and the functions of government be suspended, but, on the contrary, it is wisely provided in said section 16, that, when by operation of law, or by reason of other circumstances, the authority of the elected Governor is terminated, his tenure ended, and his individual rights foreclosed, the said office (the Governor's office), with its compensation, shall devolve upon another, in order that the functions of government may continue without interruption, and the public rights be protected.

Section 16 deals with conditions wholly different and distinct in their very nature from the conditions dealt with in section 15, and to this extent the two sections are independent of each other. It is contended by defendants in error that the two sections must be construed together to give effect to either, and the case of Ex parte Crump, 10 Okl. Cr. 133, 135 P. 428, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1036, in which Judge Doyle, who delivered the opinion of the Criminal Court of Appeals, held that the two sections (15 and 16, article 6) are in pari materia.

[2] We concur with the learned judge in the view that said sections 15 and 16 are in pari materia to the extent that they relate to, and form a part of, the entire purpose of article 6 to the extent that they aid in providing for, and constitute, an element of the entire scheme intended to be provided for in article 6, but to such extent only. They are independent of each other to the extent that they deal with, and completely provide for, the distinctly different conditions which each does provide for.

Section 15 anticipates vacancies such as may be caused by the Governor's absence from the state, and other circumstances which may cause a temporary absence of the Governor from his office, and refers to such occasions as vacancies, but these are occasions where, though the Governor may be absent from his office, though he may be sick or out of the state, and temporarily away from his office, yet he still retains his right to the office. His right to the office has not been terminated, his term nor tenure has not been ended, by operation of law by judicial proceedings, nor by other circumstances. He still has, still possesses, his right to the office, and, upon his return, may assume the duties and exercise the powers of his office. Such instances the Constitution treats as vacancies, and provides for the filling of such vacancies, and that, when either the President of the Senate or Speaker of the House fills such vacancies, he merely acts as Governor during such vacancy.

[4] But section 16 deals with a wholly different *574 and distinct condition—a condition which was deemed essential to be separately dealt with, and one which past history has shown to have been necessary to be dealt with, viz. a condition where the chief magistrate, the one who is styled “the Governor of Oklahoma,” has been impeached and removed from office, where his rights have been foreclosed and his term and tenure ended. In such case there is no vacancy; therefore no need to speak of a vacancy. The office immediately devolves upon the Lieutenant Governor. Hence section 16 does not speak of a vacancy.

It is unnecessary to draw a distinction between a “temporary vacancy” and a “permanent vacancy.” It is unnecessary to say whether there is a distinction between the two terms. Section 15 unquestionably has reference to temporary vacancies, and to temporary vacancies only, and deals with, and provides for, temporary vacancies only. Nowhere does article 6 speak of a permanent vacancy. Section 16, in dealing with the conditions which it provides for, does not recognize a vacancy of any kind, but provides that the powers of government may continue right on; that the ship of state, as it were, may continue its course without interruption, and with a duly commissioned chief executive at the helm.

[5] Defendants in error say:

“Section 15 is the sole and only section of the Constitution which authorizes any one to exercise and perform the powers and duties of the office of Governor other than the elected Governor himself.”

This contention has no support from the Constitution. If it were true, then the Lieutenant Governor has no authority under any circumstances to exercise the powers and discharge the duties of Governor and draw a Governor's pay. For it must be clearly seen that section 15 does not in express words give to the Lieutenant Governor any such powers and privileges, but does expressly say that in certain cases the President of the Senate or, in case of his disability, the Speaker of the House may act as Governor, but it nowhere expressly says that the Lieutenant Governor, under any circumstances, may act as Governor. Hence, if section 15 is the only section which authorizes the Lieutenant Governor to act as Governor, and it be true, as defendants contend, that he has no authority except such as is expressly given him, then he has no authority, under any circumstances, to exercise the powers of Governor, for it is only by implication that section 15 authorizes him to exercise such powers. The following language in said section 15, to wit:

“If, during a vacancy of the office of Governor the Lieutenant Governor shall be impeached, * * * or become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the President, pro tempore, of the Senate, shall act as Governor; * * * and if the President, pro tempore, of the Senate, * * * shall become incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled, * * *”

—is the only language in section 15 which even implies that the Lieutenant Governor shall ever, at any time, exercise the powers of Governor, or even “act as Governor.” However, the above language does imply that, in case of a temporary absence of the Governor, that is, such a temporary absence as renders him incapable of discharging his duties, then the Lieutenant Governor may exercise a Governor's powers and perform a Governor's duties, unless, for some of the reasons mentioned, he is rendered incapable of doing so, but it is by implication only that he derives such authority from section 15. But, as heretofore pointed out, section 16 expressly says:

“In case of impeachment of the Governor * * * or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the

Lieutenant Governor.”

As to the contention of defendants in error that the inhibition in section 4, supra, applies to an elected Governor only, and does not apply to one on whom the office of Governor devolves, we must answer that the Constitution says no such thing. The Constitution says the Governor shall not be eligible immediately to succeed himself. This inhibition is not confined to an elected Governor, at least by any express language, nor is it confined to any particular length of term, nor is its application restricted to a four-year term. It simply says the Governor shall not be eligible immediately to succeed himself. In its literal sense, and its every practical working sense, a Governor is one who governs, and, conversely, one who governs is Governor. The language of section 4 in its literal significance applies to the one who is governing at the time the circumstances arise for an election to succeed himself, and does not except any one from the force of the ineligibility clause merely because he may have been governing for a short period only.

Defendants in error contend that it should apply only to an elected Governor who has served a four-year term, and that it should not apply to a portion of a four-year term; that, if the elected Governor should be impeached one week or one day, before the time for filing as a candidate to succeed himself, under such circumstances it would be absurd to apply the provision of said section 4. As to whether these suggested conditions may ever become possibilities, we are not called upon to decide. The present case does not present such a condition, and it would be mere dictum for us to say what should be done under such remote possibilities. It might suffice to say, however, that, if such *575 conditions should arise, the courts will cross that bridge when it is reached.

Defendants in error argue also that the plaintiff's contention would bring about a condition wherein the elected Governor, if he saw fit to do so, in order to prevent the Lieutenant Governor from running for Governor, might resign or be removed or impeached a week or a day before the time for announcing as a candidate, and thereby force the Lieutenant Governor to act as Governor during the remaining week or day of the term, and then, by applying section 4, prevent the Lieutenant Governor from running for office. This is another bridge which the courts will cross when it is reached. In this connection, however, it is perceived that such remote possibilities might as easily come from the opposite direction. For example, an elected Governor might fail to qualify; he might die on the day before his time for taking office. In such case the office of Governor would devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for four years, and he might serve until the time arrived for filing as a candidate and resign, and thereby make it the duty of the President of the Senate or Speaker of the House to act as Governor, with an understanding with the President of the Senate or Speaker of the House that no change would be made in governmental policies, nor in the numerous appointive boards and employees, and again announce and run for Lieutenant Governor, with an understanding with some person running for Governor that, if elected, he would not qualify, but would leave the powers and duties of the office of Governor to devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, who, if he should be elected as Lieutenant Governor, would then have another four-year term in the office of Governor, and the same proceeding might possibly be repeated for a number of terms, at the end of which terms he could run for Governor himself, claiming that he had been only "Acting Governor," thus perpetuating himself in the office of Governor, the very condition which section 4 expressly prohibits. So, while it is seen that these theoretic possibilities may work both ways, yet none of such conditions are before us now, and that bridge will be crossed when it is reached.

We now have before us an actual and clearly defined problem with the provisions of the Constitution as our only rule for solution. The authorities cited afford us very little light. None of them deal with conditions anything like similar to the conditions here presented, and none of them have been construed constitutional provisions identical with ours.

It is unnecessary to give space to the constitutional provisions of other states, nor to a discussion of the effect which such provisions have in other states, nor is it proper for us to interpret the decisions from other states to the extent of saying what effect they have on such states, but we may properly say what application the decisions of another state has to the law of our state, and may properly say what degree of persuasiveness they have upon us in construing the laws of our state, and, as no decisions have been cited exactly in point, and no constitutional provisions construed identical with ours, we are forced to construe our own Constitution with the effect it has upon our state in view. Again referring to the Crump Case, supra, and to the case of People v. Wells, 2 Cal. 198, which is quoted from with apparent approval by the Criminal Court of Appeals in the Crump Case, and which is separately cited by defendants, we find that neither of those decisions deal with a condition at all similar to the one here presented. In the Crump Case the court was dealing with an occasion of temporary absence of the Governor from the state; the question being whether during such temporary absence the Lieutenant Governor had authority to issue pardons. The court was dealing with an absence, a vacancy, which was essentially temporary. The facts in the case and the reasoning of the court show that it was essentially temporary, and that the court had such a condition in view; looked at it from that standpoint of a temporary vacancy in reaching its final conclusion. In that case, the absence of the Governor was only a temporary absence, and the vacancy created in his office was only a temporary vacancy. The Governor, though temporarily absent, still had the constitutional right, upon his return, to assume the duties of the office of Governor, but, under the conditions here presented, the impeached Governor has no right to return and oust the present Governor and assume the powers of the office of Governor. Mr. Walton's rights to the office, his tenure of office, his term of office, which as the California case says, belonged to him as an individual, have been terminated and foreclosed by the court of impeachment, but, as was also held in the California case, the people's right to a continuous functioning of the government has not ceased.

These are the conditions which we have here, and section 16 provides for just such conditions. Hence neither the Crump Case nor the California case are controlling in this case further than heretofore indicated. Defendants lay stress upon the concluding words of section 16, to wit, "or until the disability shall be removed." We are dealing with a condition where the disability cannot be removed; the law provides no means for its removal; it has become final; and it is our duty to avoid speculations and deal with the actual condition which confronts us.

Plaintiff in error cites three Oregon cases, viz. Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Or. 389, 4 P. 1180; Olcott, Gov., v. Hoff, Treas., 92 Or. 462, 181 P. 466; State ex rel. Roberts v. Olcott, 94 Or. 633, 187 P. 286, in support of his contentions.

We do not feel at liberty to say what effect the decisions of the court of Oregon have upon *576 the state of Oregon, but it is obvious to us that the conclusions were reached from a different standpoint than the standpoint here presented. The first Oregon case was dealing with the mere sordid question of salary, the question being Section 16, art. 6, Constitution of Oklahoma:

"In case of impeachment of Governor, or of his death, failure to qualify, resignation, removal from the state, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall whether the secretary of state, under certain conditions, was entitled to the Governor's salary, and in the second case also the question of salary appears to have been the bone of contention. In the third case the court followed the previous holding under the doctrine of stare decisis. However, it was held in the Oregon cases that the person on whom the office of Governor devolves becomes Governor.

The case of Futrell v. Oldham, 107 Ark. 386, 155 S. W. 502, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 571, is cited by defendants in error, but that case is not in point here. In the opinion the court said:

"The case turns on the question whether, on the resignation of the Governor, the then incumbent of the office of President of the Senate succeeded to the vacated office, or whether merely as such President of the Senate the powers, duties and emoluments of the office * * * devolved upon him while he remained President."

This case is not in point here because it deals with a different condition, and for the further reason that the President of the Senate is not made an executive officer, nor constituted a part of the executive department by the Constitution of Arkansas, as is the Lieutenant Governor constituted by the Oklahoma Constitution. Plaintiff in error also cites section 1, art. 2, of the Constitution of the United States, and the instances, six separate occasions, where, upon the death of the President, the Vice President has succeeded to the office of President and became President of the United States, and has been so recognized. Said section of the federal Constitution is identical with ours, with the exception that ours is the stronger and more definite, as may be seen from the following parallel:

Section 1, art. 2, Constitution of the United States of America:

devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term or until the disability shall be removed.”

It will be seen that the only difference between the two Constitutions, both dealing with the same conditions, is that the federal Constitution says, “the same shall devolve on the Vice President,” while the Oklahoma Constitution says, “the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor.” Defendant in error argues that no court has ever decided that the Vice President became President upon the death of the President, and appears to discount the departmental construction which the various departments of the federal government, including the federal Congress, have placed upon the above provisions of the federal Constitution. This construction has stood since April 4, 1841, when, upon the death of President Wm. H. Harrison, Vice President Tyler became President of the United States. For almost a century this construction of the federal Constitution has stood without question. It has been recognized as correct, and acquiesced in, not only by the departments of state and all the states of the Union, but officially recognized by every civilized government of the world.

On each occasion where the President of the United States has died, the Vice President has immediately succeeded to the office of President as President of the United States, and thereupon the government of the United States has at once, through its consular offices, notified all governments of the world of the change in Presidents.

Defendant suggests that no court has ever pronounced that to be the law. To our mind, it is so clearly correct that no one has ever presumed to test its correctness in the courts. Therefore it should have greater weight than an ordinary departmental construction, not only because it has stood for almost a century, but because it has been recognized as the correct conception of our system of government, and because, for eighty-five years under this construction, there has been no friction in the machinery of government by reason of such construction. While this construction of the federal Constitution is entitled to weight, yet we are not confined to such construction as our sole guide in construing our own. The plain language of our Constitution, under the universally accepted meaning of the language used, is sufficient unto itself.

Defendant contends that every man has a right to run for Governor, and if elected, to become Governor once. This we concede, provided he possesses the constitutional qualifications for the office, but he must be thirty years of age; must have been a resident of the state three years; and must not be immediately succeeding himself in the office of Governor. Possessing these qualifications, he may become Governor as often as the people elect him, but, lacking in either of them, his personal ambitions to become Governor are not to be weighed in the scales with the public interest and welfare.

The framers of the Constitution and the people in adopting the inhibition in section 4, supra, must have had reasons for so doing. The Constitution itself does not say what those reasons were, and we shall not assume *577 to say what they were, but we may say what effect such provision has, and do say that it has a most wholesome and much-needed effect. We judicially know that under the law the Governor of this state has very extensive powers. He is a member of, and ex officio chairman of, several of the most important and powerful boards and commissions of the state. That he has authority to appoint and remove members of many important boards and commissions, and to dictate the employment of every clerk, stenographer, helper, and janitor allowed by law to be employed by such boards. We judicially know that he is ex officio chairman of the state board of equalization, which has power to equalize and fix property values and the rate of taxation; that he has power as chief executive to convoke the Legislature, and to veto acts of the Legislature, to issue pardons to persons who have been duly convicted in the courts, and power to call out the militia and many other far-reaching powers, and we also judicially know that under the law the present incumbent has all of the above-mentioned powers, and as a matter of common knowledge, we know that too long an exercise of such tremendous powers by one man may bring about oppression and detriment to the public welfare, and that too long a tenure of office with the powers which a Governor has may enable him to build up a dangerous, and possibly invincible, political machine with which to perpetuate his powers.

While we do not know, and do not pretend to say, whether the present incumbent or any other Governor has ever used his powers wrongfully or oppressively, yet we do know that section 4 whatever may have been the reason for its adoption, has the effect of preventing these possible dangers, and do know that it is well to guard against them.

Mr. Trapp is just as much a Governor, in every literal and practical sense and effect, as though he had been elected to the office. He has all the powers, emoluments, and immunities which could be conferred upon him by an election, as well as the same individual rights of tenure and occupancy which an elected Governor has, and, except by impeachment for misconduct, there is no provision of law by which he can be divested of such rights until the end of his term. He is now filling the office which, upon the impeachment of Mr. Walton, devolved upon him by section 16, and section 4 says, "The Governor shall not be eligible immediately to succeed himself."

Discerning our system and plan of government, and our constitutional provisions for the operation of same as we do, the reasons herein given become potent and conclusive.

The judgment of the trial court is therefore reversed, with directions to issue the order of injunction herein sought.

Reversed.

NICHOLSON, C. J., dissents.

BRANSON, V. C. J. (dissenting).

In this court the parties bear the same adversary positions as they bore in the district court. They are, therefore, referred to as plaintiff and defendants.

One Kirby Fitzpatrick, as plaintiff, sued the state board of public affairs, the state election board, and the individual members of each. He prayed relief, enjoining the defendants from causing to be printed on the official Democratic primary ballots to be used throughout the state in the primary, to be held, as required by law, the first Tuesday in August, 1926, the name of M. E. Trapp. The said M. E. Trapp had duly filed his application with the said defendant election board to be placed on such ballots as a candidate for nomination for Governor of Oklahoma, and his said application to be placed on said ballots had been by said board accepted.

The question of the propriety of the injunctive remedy sought is by none of the parties drawn in question, and the same will, therefore, not be discussed. Only a part of the substance of the pleadings is necessary to be stated for a clear understanding of the issue.

At the regular November election, 1922, one J. C. Walton was duly elected as Governor of the state of Oklahoma. He was inaugurated by taking the constitutional oath on the 8th day of January, 1923, and thereafter continued to fill the office until the 23d day of October, 1923, when the House of Representatives duly assembled, filed impeachment charges with the state Senate, and the state Senate did, by resolution, on said last-named date, suspend him from office; but on the trial the charges were sustained, and judgment entered removing him from office. Section 168, C. O. S. 1921.

At the same time the said Walton was elected Governor, the said M. E. Trapp was duly elected Lieutenant Governor of the state of Oklahoma for the constitutional term of four years, beginning on the 8th day of January, 1923, and on said date the said M. E. Trapp qualified as Lieutenant Governor by taking the constitutional oath of office, and, as defendants contend, has ever since been Lieutenant Governor by reason of his election to said office and his qualification as such officer.

An extended discussion of the one question presented is unnecessary to make lucid the conclusion we reach. That one question is whether the said M. E. Trapp is eligible to be Governor for the term for which he seeks to be nominated and elected, and which term begins under the Constitution the second Monday in January, 1927. The plaintiff alleges that he is ineligible, and contends that, *578 because of his ineligibility, he should not be placed on the primary ballots as aforesaid; while the defendants, taking the view that he is eligible, have accepted his filing, and intend to place his name, unless prevented from doing so, upon such ballots.

Whether he is eligible depends upon the construction to be placed on certain provisions of the Constitution of the state. The correlation of these said provisions are before this court for the first time, and we must say what they mean, for they are not without ambiguity. We have no exact precedent from the decisions of any other state to ease our task, for, while we find similar provisions in many Constitutions, we find none of them exact as ours in their entirety. The decisions of other courts hereinafter cited are helpful so far as they deal with provisions similar to certain provisions here in question, but from the point at which they stop we must follow a rule of reason all our own. It is admitted that the ineligibility attaches only to the Governor.

Before considering the particular provisions which bear directly on the dispute, consideration of the provisions of the Constitution as to who may be Governor and how he may become Governor we consider important. Bearing thereon we cite, but give only the substance of, the provisions, constitutional and statutory.

Article 6 (Williams' Oklahoma Constitution) creates the executive department of state government, names the officers in whom executive authority is lodged, and, in a measure, the conditions under which such authority is so lodged. Section 3 thereof makes any male person who has been an elector of the state for three years, and is not less than thirty years of age, eligible to be elected either Governor or Lieutenant Governor. Section 1 thereof provides, among other things:

"The executive authority of the state shall be vested in a Governor, Lieutenant Governor," etc.

It cannot be considered amiss to point out here that the express language of this section vests executive authority in the Lieutenant Governor of the state. Just when he can exercise the same, and what authority he can exercise, depends upon other provisions of the Constitution hereinafter discussed. Before going to them, however, we think it important to call the attention of the reader to the fact that article 3 (Williams' Oklahoma Constitution) provides for mandatory elections for state and other officers. The provisions of said article 3 of the Constitution as to mandatory elections were vitalized by statutory enactments passed by the first state Legislature of the state. This Legislature convened soon after Statehood day, which was November 16, 1907, and the statute so vitalizing the said article 3 as to the mandatory selection of officers by popular elections is now brought down in our statutes as chapters 40 and 41, C. O. S. 1921. Section 6093, C. O. S. 1921, vitalizes that provision of article 3 of the Constitution which provides for a mandatory primary system. Section 6126 provides for the election of persons so nominated at the primary the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November of each even numbered year, beginning in 1908.

Reverting again to the Constitution, we find that section 4 of said article 6 provides that the term of office of Governor, and the term of office of the Lieutenant Governor (which runs concurrently), shall be four years from the second Monday of January next after their election, and that it further provides that the Governor shall not be eligible to immediately succeed himself. We come to the question here at issue: Who is the individual made ineligible to immediately succeed himself? The language of the said section is that the Governor is ineligible to immediately succeed himself. The language of section 1 of the same article makes clear that executive authority is vested in both the Governor and the Lieutenant Governor. These sections contemplate that two individuals shall be elected at the same election for the same term of office, and that executive authority shall be vested in each. They are each required to have the same qualifications, but the latter is not cloaked with the same ineligibility as the former. Each is elected by the electors of the state. We think it is not subject to debate that there is no provision in the Constitution or statute whereby the Governor can be appointed by any individual or collection of individuals. There are ample provisions in the Constitution and statutes under which most of the other numerous officers of the state may fill their respective offices by appointment by the Governor, or other designated appointing power, for section 13 of article 6 provides that the Governor shall commission all officers who are not commissioned by law, and, when any office shall become vacant, he shall, unless otherwise provided by law, appoint a person to fill the vacancy until a successor shall have been elected. Under this provision it is not subject to debate that, if the Lieutenant Governor should die, be removed on impeachment, or remove from the state, or otherwise be taken from the office, the Governor is directed by the said section to appoint a Lieutenant Governor, at least until the succeeding election. If the Governor should die, or be removed from office, there is nothing in the Constitution which authorizes the Lieutenant Governor to appoint a Governor.

We then ask ourselves the question: Can there be, under the Constitution of Oklahoma, a constitutional Governor except as the electorate of the state makes one at an election? We find no provision in the Constitution *579 which says so, nor do we find any which can be fairly so construed. Being the chief officer of the state, the ordinary meaning of the language used as to him expressly reserved to the people the sole power to make a Governor. Said section 1 of article 6 is different from other Constitutions dealing with the same matter. It vests executive power, not as a function to an office whoever may be holder thereof, but in individuals, and so far as is involved here, in individuals referred to as Governor and Lieutenant Governor. Section 2 of article 6 makes a distinction between the executive power vested by section 1 in the Governor and the executive power vested in the Lieutenant Governor, in that it makes the executive power of the Governor supreme. Said section 2 says:

—but it cannot be said, with right reason, that, because this section vests supreme executive power in a chief magistrate, styled the Governor of the state of Oklahoma, it thereby robs the Lieutenant Governor of the executive power which the preceding section said should exist in the Lieutenant Governor. We ask ourselves the question: Under what circumstances could executive power be exercised by the Lieutenant Governor, and what power? Unless we desire to read something into said section 4 of article 6, or to read something out of the same, the conclusion is inevitable that a constitutional Governor is a person nominated at a primary, and elected at a general, election for a term of four years. Under said section 2 his right to use the executive power vested in him by section 1 is supreme, and, when it exists at all, it supercedes any executive power vested in the Lieutenant Governor, and such power so vested in the latter is dormant until some condition arises under which he can exercise the same. The Governor exercises supreme executive power from the day of his inauguration for a period of four years, subject to the conditions of sections 15 and 16 of article 6, which are, in substance, to wit, his impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, removal from the state, or inability to exercise the same, or vacancy in his office. When some one of these contingent conditions arises, it operated to strike down, or suspend, the Governor’s executive power.

And, under such circumstances, shall we say that the executive power vested in the Lieutenant Governor cannot then be exercised by him? That part of section 1 in referring to the Lieutenant Governor is meaningless, unless the exercise of executive authority by the Lieutenant Governor was intended to be conditioned on the happening of some of the provisions enumerated in sections 15 and 16 of article 6. If some of said conditions exist, then under the said sections the performance of the duties of the supreme executive, whatever those may be made by law, are charged to the Lieutenant Governor, but the performance of these duties by him are not, as Governor for the Constitution does not say so, and he was not so elected. The Constitution does not say when the Lieutenant Governor exercises executive authority so given him by section—he does so as Governor—but said section 1, when read in the light of the other sections of article 6, clearly recognizes that the elected Governor may be unable to exercise the same or to fill the office either because of impeachment, conviction on impeachment charges, death, failure to qualify, removal from the state, or some other inability, such as absence from the state, sickness, etc. The constitutional convention, knowing that some of the above disabilities might exist, or that the office might become vacant, and knowing that the same must be continuously filled in the sense that the duties of the office must be performed in the interest of the public good, in effect says that, if from any of these causes he, the Governor, is suffering from inability to discharge the duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of the term or until the disability shall be removed.

From the oral argument presented by counsel for plaintiff, the writer is unable to escape the conclusion that plaintiff’s position is that we must turn the question here in dispute solely upon the language of the said section 16, and that part thereof which provides:

Diligent search can be made of each section of said article 6, creating and dealing with the executive department, and nothing therein can be found of an executive nature to be done by the Lieutenant Governor, except when a contingency arises as contemplated by sections 15 and 16. There is nothing in any section of said article (and no other article) that either expressly or by fair intendment indicates that, on the contingency of said sections arising, the Lieutenant Governor can exercise executive authority in any status other than as Lieutenant Governor. And can any reason be given why it should be exercised by him other than as Lieutenant Governor when the only section vesting such authority in him says that it is vested in a Lieutenant Governor? The Governor being possessed of supreme executive authority until some contingency, as specified supra, arises, no executive authority can be exercised by the Lieutenant Governor, but, when such contingency does arise, *580 he performs the duties of the office merely as the occupant of the office of Lieutenant Governor, to which he was elected.

Suppose we accept the contention of the plaintiff referred to in the foregoing paragraph, to the effect that the question must be decided by the language, “that the said office, with its compensation shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor,” and do not consider other sections dealing with the same matter (to do this, however, would violate all rules of constitutional and statutory construction), we then are faced with a definition of the word “office” as given in the latest authentic edition of Webster’s New International Dictionary as “a right to exercise a public function or employment and receive the emoluments thereto belonging." (Webster gives another: "In its fullest sense, office embraces the elements of tenure, duration, duties, and emoluments.") Suppose we substitute the said definition of office in the sentence relied on by the plaintiff. It will then read that the right to exercise the public functions (of the Governor—ours), and receive the emoluments thereto belonging, devolves upon the Lieutenant Governor. Would such sentence demote him as Lieutenant Governor and promote him as constitutional Governor? Would that strip him of his character as one official, and make him another official? No such conclusion can be reached by any fair or logical process of reasoning, and there is no provision in the Constitution of the state whereby a person elected as one official may, by operation of law, take on the status of another official. If we even omit Webster's definition set out, supra, we find in sections 15 and 16 of article 6 that the term "office" and "duties and powers of the office" are shown by the context to have been intended to mean that, when the person elected as Governor or Lieutenant Governor dies, or is otherwise incapacitated, it is only the duties and powers which he might have exercised that can be performed by another and distinct officer.

It must be noted that section 16 draws no distinction between his status in exercising executive authority by the Lieutenant Governor where there is a permanent disability, such as death or removal from office, and where there is merely a temporary disability on the part of the supreme executive. This was clearly pointed out in the case of Ex parte Hawkins, 10 Okl. Cr. R. 396, 136 P. 991, and in Ex parte Crump, 10 Okl. Cr. 133, 135 P. 428, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1036, in which the Criminal Court of Appeals of this state construed sections 15 and 16 of article 6, supra. In so construing them, that court cited with approval the logical reasoning of the Supreme Court of California in the case of People v. Wells, 2 Cal. 198. There is no section of the Constitution, unless we read something into it, which undertakes to make the Lieutenant Governor a constitutional Governor merely because he may exercise powers that would be, but for some contingency as set out above, exercised by the supreme executive. But plaintiff argues vigorously that the Constitution never contemplated that a vacancy should ever exist in the office of Governor. The idea plaintiff expresses is only true in the sense that the Constitution never contemplated that there should not be some one within the state who could exercise executive authority ordinarily exercised by the Governor. But there is nothing to be found therein which indicates that it must always be exercised by the officer known as Governor. This is clear from section 15, which, among other things, says:

"If, during a vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die or be absent from the state, or become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the President, pro tempore, of the Senate, shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease."

We think this section clearly shows that the makers of the Constitution contemplated that a vacancy might exist in the office of Governor, either temporary or permanent. When a permanent vacancy occurs, said section clearly directs that the Lieutenant Governor shall exercise the powers and duties of the office, and, if during that time he (the Lieutenant Governor) should be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or be absent from the the state, section 15 directs that the President pro tempore of the Senate shall perform the duties of the office, and also provides for additional succession to such duties. Should we give the said constitutional provisions the construction contended for by plaintiff, and say, as he desires, that, when the Governor is removed from office, the Lieutenant Governor becomes the constitutional Governor, it would be tantamount to saying that the Lieutenant Governor as such was not given any executive authority, under any contingency, by the language of section 1. Such would lead to confusion, and such confusion, as we believe, the adroit minds of those who framed the Constitution would have prevented had they anticipated this court would read into the Constitution a construction of its provisions that would make a Lieutenant Governor constitutional Governor, though never elected as such. The inability of the Governor to immediately succeed himself is a limitation upon the right given to every citizen of the state to seek this high office who possesses qualifications set out above. Unless clear from the language used, we must not give this restrictive provision a meaning that would so penalize a man, who had been elected only as Lieutenant Governor, when, and if while serving, he should be nominated and elected Governor, he would be disqualified to take the office when inauguration day *581 arrived, if the Governor had died or been removed between election day and inauguration day. Should we give it the construction plaintiff contends for, then the minute the Governor resigns, is removed on impeachment, or dies, the Lieutenant Governor instantly becomes the constitutional Governor by operation of law, and the office of Lieutenant Governor thereby becomes vacant. If this is the law, under section 13 of said article 6, supra, he could immediately appoint a Lieutenant Governor, and, if feeling friendly to the deposed Governor, he could forthwith hand such impeached and removed Governor a commission as the Lieutenant Governor of the state, and then, if the friendship extended that far, out of personal consideration for the Governor so removed, could resign himself as Governor, whereupon the Governor so impeached could forthwith become the constitutional Governor by operation of law. Shall we read these provisions into article 6, which might bring about such conditions when otherwise they would not be possible. If on the removal of the Governor the Lieutenant Governor automatically is removed from the office to which he was elected, and instantly becomes Governor, in the exercise of his appointive power, under section 13, he is directed to appoint some one as Lieutenant Governor, and could do it forthwith, and this would operate to make it impossible that the President pro tempore of the Senate would ever succeed to the performance of the duties of Governor, as was clearly contemplated in the succession line to such duties as set out in section 15 of the Constitution.

The construction we give leaves effective the ineligibility of the elected Governor to be or become Governor for the term immediately succeeding that for which he was elected and served either in part or in whole, and does not extend the said ineligibility to an individual not specifically made ineligible by section 4. Again, should we give the meaning plaintiff contends for, we would make it possible to defeat such intent of section 4 in this, to wit, that the elected Governor, after serving for approximately three and one-half years, could resign before the primary, the Lieutenant Governor would then become automatically the constitutional Governor, and the Governor elected for the term then running, thus, by his own act, making himself eligible to be Governor for the next term, could forthwith enter the race, and, if elected, would be qualified, for that he would not be immediately succeeding himself, a constitutional Governor having served in the interim. Likewise, in the instant case, if M. E. Trapp is Governor in the constitutional sense of the term, he could forthwith appoint a Lieutenant Governor; then resign. His appointee would then be the constitutional Governor, and Trapp could continue his campaign, and, if elected, could qualify as Governor the second Monday in January, 1927, for the reason that he would not be "immediately succeeding himself;" but another constitutional Governor would have filled the office in the interim. No such possibility of juggling with this high office was ever intended, but, when all provisions are considered, the Constitution means that, if A. is honored by being elected Governor for a term of four years, he is ineligible to be Governor the next term which begins four years later. That is what the Constitution says, and it means that, and nothing more. That meaning prevents possible and probable unseemly and disconcerting conditions, and we must adhere to it.

We are driven to these conclusions: First, that under the Constitution of Oklahoma, there cannot be a constitutional Governor, except when elected as such by the electors of the state. Second, that under section 1 executive authority is vested in both the Governor and the Lieutenant Governor, but that under section 2 supreme executive authority is vested in the Governor, and the Lieutenant Governor cannot exercise executive authority until a contingency arises, as set forth in sections 15 and 16 of said article. Third, that under said sections a vacancy may occur and exist in the office of Governor, in which event the Lieutenant Governor, as such, exercises the executive authority which the Governor, but for the arising of the contingency, would have exercised. Fourth, that, if while so exercising such authority, the Lieutenant Governor is impeached, displaced, resigns, dies, or is absent from the state, etc., the President pro tempore of the Senate may perform such duties. Fifth, that the Lieutenant Governor, who runs and is elected as such, cannot by operation of law be made a constitutional Governor, but is merely a constitutional Lieutenant Governor, and may exercise executive authority when the Chief Executive, to wit, the Governor, is removed, dies, or cannot otherwise act. Sixth, that this construction gives force to the language of section 1, section 2, section 4, section 13, section 15, and section 16, which are all the sections dealing with the subject, and thereby creates no possibility of a confusion in the performance of the executive functions. Neither does it destroy or strike down the succession provided by section 15 of said article to the duties of the office of the executive, such as might occur otherwise.

We think our reasons and conclusions are borne out by these cases: Sadler State ex rel. v. La Grave, 23 Nev. 216, 45 P. 243, 35 L. R. A. 233; State ex rel. Hardin v. Sadler, 23 Nev. 356, 47 P. 450; People v. Cornforth, 34 Colo. 107, 81 P. 871; Clifford v. Heller, 63 N. J. Law, 105, 42 A. 155, 57 L. R. A. 312; *582 People v. Budd, 114 Cal. 168, 45 P. 1060, 34 L. R. A. 46; State v. McBride, 29 Wash. 335, 70 P. 25; State ex rel. Chatterton v. Grant, 12 Wyo. 1, 73 P. 470, 2 Ann. Cas. 382; Clifford v. Heller, 63 N. J. Law, 105, 42 A. 155, 57 L. R. A. 312; Futrell v. Oldham, 107 Ark. 386, 155 S. W. 502, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 571.

"It will be seen that in case of a vacancy in the office of Governor the vacancy is not to be filled, but the powers and duties devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, who does not cease to be Lieutenant Governor. Under such circumstances it would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the Governor devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor the latter thereby becomes Governor, and can appoint a Lieutenant Governor. Nor do I think it could be contended that when the President pro tempore of the Senate acts as Governor he could appoint a person to fill the vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor. If he could, he would then appoint himself out of office, and it would be his duty to do so."

Again, if we consider sections 15 and 16 separately instead of together, do we find anything in section 16 which authorizes M. E. Trapp to be Governor? Under the facts as they were and are, can we not see by an analysis of that section that, when Trapp began to perform the duties of the office, it was not as Governor? No one contends for a moment that mere inability or disability on the part of the elected Governor would make the Lieutenant Governor Governor in fact. Under this section 16 the first thing mentioned is, "In case of impeachment of the Governor, * * * the office 'devolves,' etc., upon the Lieutenant Governor."

What does impeachment mean? And could impeachment have made Trapp Governor? It certainly could if the word "devolve" means what plaintiff contends, for he says that is the one word which made Trapp Governor. This court has definitely said through Justice Harrison in the case of State ex rel. Trapp v. Chambers, District Judge, 96 Okl. 78, 220 P. 890, 30 A. L. R. 1144, that—

" 'Impeachment' of the Governor, within the meaning of section 16, art. 6, of the Constitution, is the adoption of articles of impeachment by the House of Representatives, and the presentation thereof to the Senate, and the indication by that body that the same are accepted for the purpose of permitting prosecution thereof, and the impeachment of the Governor operates to suspend him; the duties and emoluments of the office automatically devolving upon the Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of the term or until the disability is removed by the acquittal of the Governor of the charges preferred against him."

So the word "devolve" clearly from said opinion did not make Trapp Governor while impeachment charges were pending against Walton, for this court said there: "The duties and emoluments" of the Governor "devolved" upon Trapp.

The second contingency set out in section 16 is, in case of death, the office "devolves." Walton was not then, and is not now, dead, so "devolve" did not make Trapp Governor under that contingency. The third is, in case of his failure to qualify, the office "devolves." Walton did not fail to qualify, and "devolve" could not make Trapp Governor under that contingency. The fourth contingency is in case of resignation, the office "devolves." "Devolve" did not make him Governor for this reason, for Walton did not resign. The fifth contingency is, in case of his removal from the state, the office "devolves." Walton did not remove from the state, so that contingency not having taken place, "devolve" did not make Trapp Governor. The sixth and last contingency of said section 16 is in case of inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the office "devolves" upon the Lieutenant Governor "until the disability is removed." This contingency did not permit "devolve" to make Trapp Governor, for there was no "inability" on the part of Walton to discharge the powers and duties of Governor, for that "inability" is a condition that may be removed or terminated, or, in other words, is temporary. It is defined by lexicographers as "an inherent lack of power to perform the thing in question." An illustration would seem to make it clear. For instance, if Walton had been afflicted with insanity, this would have brought about a lack of power to perform the duties of the office which inhered in him personally, and such inability as might be removed such as acquittal on the impeachment charges would have restored him to the right to perform the duties of the office.

Section 16 was given this meaning as far back as 1913, by Judge Henry Furman, a man of recognized learning, and a judge of eminent ability. In the case of Ex parte Hawkins, 10 Okl. Cr. 396, 136 P. 991, he said:

"This case presents simply a cold question of law, and must be decided as such without reference to any other considerations. Article 6, § 16 (Williams' Constitution, § 165) provides in express terms that all of the powers of the Governor shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor during the inability of the Governor to discharge the powers and duties of said office, and until such disability shall be removed. * * * The Governor may go to other states * * * without forfeiting his office. * * * During his absence, or inability to act, the Lieutenant Governor is vested with all of the powers of Governor. * * * The Constitution provides that there shall always be some one within the State clothed with power to perform the duties of Chief Executive. * * * The powers of the Lieutenant Governor to act, during the inability of the Governor, are not derived from the invitation or request of the *583 Governor; but they rest alone upon the provisions of the Constitution of Oklahoma.”

This comes from the pen of one long since removed from divergent judicial and political views. He was discussing the identical section of the Constitution plaintiff relies on as making a Governor out of a Lieutenant Governor. Judge Furman said in brief that, during an inability of the Governor to act, the Lieutenant Governor came forward, not to say “I am Governor,” but to do the work and perform the duties which the Governor would have done but for the inability. This shows clearly the futility of considering section 16 separate from sections 1 and 15 of the same article.

Plaintiff admitted in oral argument that section 15 should come after section 16; that this mistake was made in enrolling the article by the enrolling clerk. This is only important, if at all, in reading the two sections together. If they are so read in the light of the above authorities, they will in substance be: When the Governor has impeachment charges pending against him, fails to qualify, resigns, removes from the state, or possesses inability to act, or (section 15) if during a vacancy of the office of Governor from any of the above causes which would create a vacancy, or from death, or removal by a judgment of a court of impeachment, the duties and powers of the Governor are held and performed by the Lieutenant Governor, and if during such vacancy the Lieutenant Governor suffers impeachment or removal from office or inability to act, the President pro tempore of the Senate shall perform the duties, then the Speaker of the House, and then such other persons as the Legislature may provide by law.

Section 168, C. O. S. 1921, on impeachments, provides in closing:

“If two-thirds of the Senators present shall vote yea upon any charge or count contained in the article of impeachment, the accused shall be adjudged guilty [by the Senate as a court of impeachment—ours], and the judgment of the court shall be that he be removed from office.”

That is what created the vacancy in the office of Governor in the present term, and was such a vacancy in such office as is referred to in section 15 of article 6 of the Constitution, and during which that section and section 16 requires that the Lieutenant Governor shall have the power and perform the duties of the office and such of them as would otherwise be required of the Governor. It was such contingency actually occurring which was anticipated by the Constitution as the reason for vesting executive authority in the Lieutenant Governor in section 1 of the same article clearly to be exercised on the contingencies set out in sections 15 and 16.

We feel that the usage grown up in departmental construction of the national government that on a vacancy in the office of the elected President the Vice President becomes President is not even persuasive here, for there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States that makes the elected President, or a successor to him, ineligible to succeed himself, and the question here could never arise as to the presidency.

It must be noted in conclusion that not one decided case from all the states is cited to support the opinion of the court on the question here involved, though there are numerous ones, as set out above on similar questions.

The writer believes the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed.

Attached are a bunch of items I ran across in doing some searching this afternoon that I haven't previously shared. Of particular interest is the 1977 Idaho AG opinion (Evans). Unfortunately, I couldn't find any indication that the Idaho Supreme Court actually did what the AG opinion recommended.

I don't see anything in these materials that contradicts what we have discussed so far. In fact, there's some pretty strong language in the Indiana case (Robertson) that supports our theory. None of the other cases directly address the scenario in front of us, but possibly provide some helpful clarity by way of evaluating related scenarios.

The general consensus appears to be that the alternative scenario we've discussed (governor stays but lt. gov. resigns) gives the governor an appointment power. CA and WI deal with that expressly. So does the Rhode Island case (which is the advisory opinion attached here)—although the dissent in that case appears to consider "lieutenant governor resigns" and "lieutenant governor becomes governor after governor resigns" to be the same thing, and I'm not sure that's true under our framework.

One interesting wrinkle is North Carolina (Thomas). The court in that case held that even if the lieutenant governor dies, the replacement has to wait until the next general election to be elected with a new governor. In other words, no appointment is allowed and there's not even a special election.

The 1947 Ohio AG opinion says if the governor-elect dies, the lieutenant governor-elect does not become governor; instead, the previous governor holds over. The Ohio Constitution was amended in 1976 to fix that.

I found four instances of using statutes to obtain a new lieutenant governor, but none of them match the question here.

Two of them dealt not with our facts but with the governor staying and the lieutenant resigning or dying—WI and OH. Ohio even issued a writ of mandamus to the governor compelling him to appoint someone new in accordance with the statute. But the common thread between them is that each state's constitution authorizes or even directs the legislature to provide for appointment, for filling vacancies, or for defining vacancy—something the Iowa Constitution lacks. Ohio also amended its constitution in 1989 to provide that when there is a lieutenant governor vacancy (i.e. when the governor stays but lieutenant resigns), the governor fills it by appointment—so the statute would no longer be in use there.

The third is New York, but New York (like WI and OH) contains a constitutional provision ordering the legislature to provide for appointments and vacancies. On that basis, I'd say it's distinguishable.

The fourth instance of using a statute to obtain a lieutenant governor is Arkansas, but the statute there provides for an election, not an appointment.

I'll look forward to discussing next week.

ELLIOTT, C. J.

On the twelfth day of January, 1887, the relator, Alonzo G. Smith, filed an information against the appellant, praying an injunction against him restraining him from "obtruding, or attempting to intrude, himself into the office of lieutenant governor," and for a judgment of ouster "excluding him" from that office. The relator's information alleges that, on the seventh day of November, 1884, the relator was duly elected a member of the senate of the general assembly of the state of Indiana, that he duly qualified, and that on the thirteenth day of April, 1885, he was chosen president of the senate; that he accepted the office, and entered on the discharge of its duties; that upon the assembling of the senate, in January, 1887, he was reelected president of that body, and was in possession of that office at the time the information was filed. It is also alleged that Manlon D. Manson was elected to the office of lieutenant governor in November, 1884, and that, having qualified, he held that office until July, 1886, when he vacated it, by accepting a federal office; that on the second day of November, 1886, at the general election then held, a majority of the voters of the state, assuming that a vacancy existed in the office of lieutenant governor, were procured to vote for the respondent for that office; that returns of the vote, regular in form, were made by the proper officers; that such returns were duly certified to the secretary of state, and that certified statements of the votes were delivered to the speaker of the house of representatives. It is further alleged that, on the tenth day of January, 1887, the speaker of the house of representatives opened and published the returns in the presence of the members of the house of representatives, the senate not being present nor in session at the time; that the speaker declared that the respondent had received a majority of the votes cast at the election, and had been duly elected lieutenant governor; that the respondent thereupon took the oath of office, and unlawfully intruded into the office by attempting to exercise its functions and duties, and that the speaker of the house recognized him as the lieutenant governor of the state. The information also avers that the respondent claims the right to exercise the function of the office of the president of the senate, and is unlawfully interfering with the rights of the relator as such officer; and that the senate, by a majority of its members, supports the claim of the relator to be *583 the presiding officer, while the house of representatives, by a majority of its members, sustains the claim of the respondent. Summons was issued and served on the appellant; and a temporary restraining order was granted, enjoining him from attempting to perform any of the duties of the office of president of the senate. From this order the appellant appeals.

On the thirteenth day of January, 1887, the appellant entered a special appearance, and filed a verified plea, denying the jurisdiction of the court, alleging in his plea that he had never been a resident or inhabitant of Marion county, but was, and had been for more than 20 years, a resident and citizen of the county of Ablen. The appellee demurred to this plea, and his demurrer was sustained.

The question at the threshold is this: Had the circuit court jurisdiction to hear and determine the cause? If that court had no power over the cause, this court, of course, has none.

Two things are absolutely essential to the power of a court to decide a legal controversy,—jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and jurisdiction of the person. Both must exist, otherwise it is the imperative duty of the court to decline to do more than ascertain and declare that it has no power to examine or decide the merits of the controversy. Authors and courts agree upon this rudimentary principle of law. Neither in reason nor upon authority can there be a doubt as to its soundness. Power is essential to the validity of every act, judicial, legislative, or executive. Where there is no power to hear and determine, there can be no judicial decision. Expressions of individual opinion there may be, but a judicial judgment there cannot be. A judicial judgment is the product of power,—the power of the law,—and is not the mere expression of the individual opinion of the judge. The question is purely and intrinsically one of power, for the jurisdiction of a court consists solely in its power to hear and determine the causes brought to its bar. If jurisdiction does not exist, power is absent; and, if power is lacking, an expression of opinion, upon any other than a jurisdictional question, although judicial in form, is simply the opinion of its author,—valuable it may possibly be as an argument, but effective as the opinion of the court it is not. “Jurisdiction,” says a recent writer, “is the right to pronounce judgment acquired by due process of law.” Herm. Estop. § 69. At another place this writer says: “Jurisdiction is authority to hear and determine.” Id. § 73. Again, speaking of the court, he says: “It must act judicially in all things, and cannot then transcend the power conferred by law.”

In Mills v. Com., 13 Pa. St. 627, the court said: “Jurisdiction’ is the power and authority to declare the law. The very word in its origin imports as much. It is derived from the words ‘juris’ and ‘dico,’—‘I speak by the law.’”

Chief Justice Shaw said: “To have jurisdiction is to have power to inquire into the fact,” and “to apply the law.” Hopkins v. Com., 3 Metc. 460.

Chief Justice Marshall, speaking upon a kindred subject, said: “Judicial power, as contradistinguished from the power of the laws, has no existence. Courts are the mere instruments of the law, and can will nothing.” Osborn v. United States Bank, 9 Wheat. 738.

In In re School-law Manual, 4 Atl. Rep. 878, the supreme court of New Hampshire declared that, where there was no jurisdiction, it was not only the duty of the court not to express an opinion, but it was its duty not to have an opinion, on the merits of the cause.

The supreme court of Texas in Withers v. Patterson, 27 Tex. 491, said: “The jurisdiction of a court means the power or authority which is conferred upon a court by the constitution and laws to hear and determine causes between parties, and to carry its judgments into effect.”

These are a few only of the many statements that abound in the books and reports, and declare what all must concede to be the law of the land. Accepting *584 these statements as correct, then the conclusion must be that, where there is no jurisdiction, there is no power. No consideration can be imagined, nor reason conceived, which will justify a court in assuming to pronounce a judgment where it has neither the right nor the power to hear or decide. It is only where courts can speak by the law that they can rightfully speak at all. An expression of opinion by a judicial tribunal, where it has no power to speak by the law, is utterly devoid of force. A decision without jurisdiction is a judgment only in form, for it is absolutely and everywhere void. The author from whom we have quoted says: “If a court has no jurisdiction, its decision is a nullity; and it matters not what facts it finds, or what questions it decides,—in fact they are nullities. If without jurisdiction it cannot adjudicate the real merits of the case, it cannot adjudicate any other question, whether it be introductory, incidental, or collateral.” Herm. Estop. § 68. Another author says: “Where there is no jurisdiction, it does not belong to the proper functions of a court to give an opinion upon a matter submitted to them for the guidance of parties or inferior tribunals. * * * The whole business of a court is confined to giving decisions in cases properly before it.” Wells, Jur. 10. In Elliott v. Piersol, 1 Pet. 328, the supreme court of the United States said, in speaking of a court: “But, if it act without authority, its judgments and orders are regarded as nullities.” Our own court has decisively affirmed this elementary doctrine. Smith v. Myers, 9 N. E. Rep. 692, (this term.)

The only course which a court can rightfully pursue is to decline to speak in all cases where it cannot speak by the law. It is not a matter of choice; it is a matter of duty. The duty is as solemn and imperative as any one among all the grave duties that rest upon the courts of the country. Nor ought the courts to give opinions which are in form judgments, but in reality mere phantomatic resemblances, since, in more ways than one, such a course is productive of evil.

To the judicial department, as the most conservative of all the co-ordinate branches of the government, is intrusted the high duty of declaring and enforcing the law as it exists, and upon the officers of that department rests, more strongly than upon the officers of the other departments, the solemn obligation to unwaveringly abide by the established principles of law. A great and important part of the duty of the courts is to compel citizens and officers to obey the rules of law, and they cannot, upon any imaginable ground, be themselves excused for violating those principles. It is the plain and solemn duty of the courts to apply to themselves the rules which they enforce against others. Courts, most of all the instruments of the law, should sternly refuse to transgress its rules. It is an established principle of law, long settled and firmly maintained, that courts will not decide any question affecting the merits of a case over which it has no jurisdiction, and no court can, without a plain and inexcusable breach of duty, violate that principle. No one thing in all jurisprudence can be of higher importance than that the judiciary should inflexibly adhere to the law as it comes from the hands of the law-makers.

The question upon the facts stated in the appellant's plea is whether there was any jurisdiction in the circuit court over the person of the appellant, not whether there was a defect in its process, or an irregularity in the service of its writs. There is no middle ground; there is either complete jurisdiction, or an utter want of jurisdiction. If, upon the facts stated in the plea, the law is that the appellant may be sued in Marion county, there is plenary jurisdiction; if the law is that he cannot be there sued, then there is an absolute want of power to proceed a single step against him. It is either power, or no power. The court cannot look beyond or outside of the record, and on the record the question is, was there any jurisdiction at all?

It is enough for the decision of this court to affirm that there was no jurisdiction of the person of the appellant. It is not necessary, nor, indeed, *585 proper, to decide any other questions than those of jurisdiction. The want of jurisdiction of the person is fatal to the right to go further into the cause. It is an elementary rule that, without jurisdiction, there is no validity or vitality in any judgment; for, to give the slightest vitality to the judgment, there "must be jurisdiction of the cause and of the person." Herm. Estop. § 54. As there was no jurisdiction of the person, this cause cannot in any event go back to the court from which it came for trial, but it goes back there only to be cast out.

Jurisdiction of the person of the appellant could only have been acquired in an action brought in the county of Allen, where he resided. Section 312 of the Code governs this case, for it does not fall within the provisions of any other section. That section reads thus: "In all other cases the action shall be commenced in the county where the defendants, or some one of them, has his usual place of residence." This language is broad and comprehensive in its scope, and mandatory in its effect. It is the positive command of the law that all actions, except those otherwise provided for, shall be brought in the county where the defendant resides, and there is no authority to bring them elsewhere. It is not within the power of the court to create an exception. To do that would be judicial legislation, and judicial legislation is always odious, for legislation by the courts is usurpation. There is no escape from the command of the statute, and it is the duty of the courts to enforce it. They have no discretion to change it, nor have they power to take a case out of its operation. They must apply the law as it is written in section 312 to all cases for which a different provision has not been made by the legislature. If the law is faulty, the legislature, and not the courts, must amend it; for the courts have no authority to change a line or a word, since there is neither ambiguity nor obscurity. Section 1132 does not impair the force or effect of the section under immediate mention. The provision of section 1132 is that an information may be filed by the prosecuting attorney of the circuit court in the proper county, and "the proper county" can only be ascertained by exploring the statute. It is to the law, and to the law alone, that we can look to ascertain what is "the proper county;" and the law informs us that "the proper county" is the county of the defendant's usual residence. The "proper county" can only be the county where the law authorizes actions to be instituted, for no other county can, with accuracy or propriety, be said to be "the proper" county. Our cases have uniformly held that all actions except those for which express provision is made must be brought in the county where the defendant resides. A forcible example is supplied by the case of State v. Whitewater, etc., Co., 8 Ind. 320, which was an action to compel, by mandate, the rebuilding of a bridge in Dearborn county. The court held that the action must be brought in Fayette county, where the defendant resided, saying, among other things: "But it is assumed that the present action is local in its nature, and must be brought in the county where the duty sought to be enforced is to be performed. The Code points out and defines the subject-matter of all the actions which must be instituted in the county in which the subject of the action, or some part thereof, is situated; but the case at bar does not seem to be within the definition." Hawley v. State, 69 Ind. 98, strongly enforces the same general doctrine. That was a prosecution for bastardy, and it was held that it must be instituted in the county where the defendant resided; the court saying: "Such proceedings, being transitory in their character, must, under the Code, be commenced in the county in which the defendant resides, when he is a resident of the state." In other cases the court has asserted the policy of the statute to be—what, indeed, its language plainly imports—to require all actions, not expressly otherwise provided for, to be brought in the county where the defendant resides. Hodson v. Warner, 60 Ind. 214; Boorum v. Ray, 72 Ind. 151; Robbins v. Alley, 38 Ind. 553; Ewing v. Ewing, 24 Ind. 468; Michael v. Thomas, Id. 72; McCauley v. Murdock *586, 97 Ind. 229; State v. Board, etc., of Vanderburgh Co., 49 Ind. 457; Coleman v. Lyman, 42 Ind. 289.

It must therefore be deemed the settled law of this state that all actions must be brought in the county where the defendant resides, except such as the statute expressly provides shall be brought elsewhere.

It is assumed that this is not strictly a civil action, but is a special proceeding, and is not governed by section 312 of the Code. But it has been expressly ruled that such a proceeding as this is a civil action. In Reynolds v. State, 61 Ind. 392, the question came directly before the court, and in deciding it the court said: "It is clear, we think, from this section of the Code, that an information in the nature of a quo warranto in this state is a civil action."

If, however, it were conceded that the position of the appellee is tenable, still it would by no means result that section 312 does not apply; for it is now quite well settled that the provisions of the Code do apply to all proceedings, whether under special statutes or not, unless excluded by the provisions of those statutes. Evans v. Evans, 105 Ind. 204, 5 N. E. Rep. 24, 768; Bass v. Elliott, 105 Ind. 517, 5 N. E. Rep. 663, and cases cited; Burkett v. Holman, 104 Ind. 6, 3 N. E. Rep. 406; Burkett v. Bowen, 104 Ind. 184, 3 N. E. Rep. 768; Powell v. Powell, 104 Ind. 18, 3 N. E. Rep. 639. Statutes are to be regarded as forming parts of one great and uniform body of law, and are not to be deemed isolated and detached systems, complete in themselves. Lutz v. City of Crawfordsville, ante, 411, (this term; Humphries v. Davis, 100 Ind. 274. It would be a departure from principle to declare that each "special proceeding" is complete in itself, and it would be a departure productive of serious evils, for scarcely one of all the "special proceedings" can be carried into practical effect without aid from the Code of Civil Procedure. It is necessary in almost, if not quite, every instance to refer to the provisions of the Code in order to give any effect to these special proceedings; and certainly this must have been intended by the legislature, for, had it undertaken to make each system complete in itself, many ponderous volumes of statutes would have been required.

It is the judgment of this court that the circuit court had no jurisdiction to grant the order of injunction, and that, upon the facts set forth in the appellant's plea, that court had no jurisdiction of the person of the appellant.

The cause is remanded, with instructions to dissolve the restraining order, and for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

MITCHELL, J.

While concurring in the opinion of the court to the extent that it holds that an information to try the title to an office can only be tried, unless by consent, in the county in which the defendant resides, I do not concur in the view that there was such a want of jurisdiction in the court below over the person of the defendant as excuses this court from giving a statement in writing of each question arising in the record, and the decision of the court thereon. Section 5, art. 7, Const. The record discloses that the appellant was personally served with summons in Marion county; that he appeared in person and by counsel, and pleaded in abatement of the jurisdiction of the court. It therefore became, at most, a mixed question of law and fact, to be determined by the learned judge, whether or not jurisdiction of the defendant's person had been acquired, either by the process of the court or by the consent of the defendant. The court may have decided erroneously, but, if it did, this was an error in no sense different from any other which occurs in the progress of a cause. As is said by a standard author: "There is a difference between want of jurisdiction and a defect in obtaining jurisdiction. At common law, the defendant was brought within the power of the court by service of the brevia or original writ. In this country the same object is accomplished by the service of summons, * * * or by the voluntary appearance of the defendant *587 in person or by attorney. From the moment of the service of process, the court has such control over the litigants that all its subsequent proceedings, however erroneous, are not void. If there is any irregularity in the process, or in the manner of its service, the defendant must take advantage of such irregularity by some motion or proceeding in the court wherein the action is pending." Freem. Judgm. § 126.

It cannot, therefore, with propriety be said that the court below had no jurisdiction over the person of the defendant. It decided, upon inspection of its own process, that it had jurisdiction; and while it may be true that, upon the facts as they appear, or may be hereafter shown, its jurisdiction may have been defectively obtained, and that the restraining order may well be for that reason dissolved, it does not follow that this court, because it finds one error, is thereby excused from giving its decision upon the real questions which the record presents. Certainly no court has ever set up the unwarranted pretense that it could with propriety either give a decision, or intimate an opinion, in a case which involved a subject-matter over which it had no jurisdiction, or where it had no jurisdiction of the parties. The record before us does not present such a case. If the court below had decided, as it very properly did in the recent case of Smith v. Myers, 9 N. E. Rep. 692, (present term,) that it had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the duty of this court would have terminated with the examination of that question. So, also, if, after having acquired, through its process, jurisdiction of the appellant's person, it had decided that its jurisdiction was so imperfect as not to warrant it in proceeding further, the examination of that question would have ended our duty on this appeal. The court below, however, decided that it had jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, and proceeded to adjudge other questions which appear in the record. Precedents will be looked for in vain to support the proposition that an erroneous decision of a nisi prius court on the subject of the completeness of its jurisdiction over the person of a litigant renders it improper for an appellate court, after the nisi prius court has held its jurisdiction complete, to examine other questions subsequently decided by such court, and properly presented by the record. The reason why such question should be passed upon is that it is within the power of the parties at any moment to perfect the defective jurisdiction of the court below over their person by consent. We cannot say, in advance, that they may not do so, especially if the decision of the court should be favorable to the party defectively served. "This is in accordance with the general line of judicial precedent, and is sanctioned by an example furnished by so illustrious a tribunal as that of the supreme court of the United States, under the presidency of Chief Justice Marshall, he himself delivering the opinion in the given case. Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137. We cannot greatly err in following the precedent set by so learned and pure a court." State v. Allen, 21 Ind. 516.

The questions of chief concern to the parties, and which, by reason of the relation of the parties to the state, are of vital importance to the public, relate to the jurisdiction of the court over the subject-matter of the information. This subject also involves the validity of the election held in November, 1886, for lieutenant governor. These subjects concern the second office in one of the departments of state. Between the office in contest and that of chief executive of the state is interposed only the slender thread upon which hangs a single life. Should the governor become disabled, the confusion which vexes the public service now would be transferred to, and turn into chaos, the office of the chief executive, to be settled there by such means as the contestants and their respective adherents might be able and willing to employ.

The question always properly first in order in every court is whether it has jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit. This and cognate questions were elaborately argued by learned and eminent counsel on both sides. The exigencies of the public service demand that they should be settled.

*588 The relator's case proceeds upon the theory that an election for lieutenant governor can only occur once in four years. His claim is that in April, 1885, the senate, of which body he was then and still is a member, elected him as its president pro tempore. By virtue of this election, he asserts that he became vested with a right to discharge the duties of the office of president of the senate on any occasion when the lieutenant governor should thereafter be absent, until the senate, in its pleasure, should remove him. He alleges that the senate, when it assembled in January, 1887, recognized his right, and reelected him to the office. Thus he claims to have been incumbent in the office of president of the senate, by a title founded in the constitution, at the time and before the election in 1886 occurred, and that he is now in the discharge of its duties under the authority of the constitution. Thus, he asserts that the constitution has prescribed a method for supplying any vacancy which may occur in the office in question during the period intervening quadrennial elections, and that by his election by the senate the office was supplied before the election in 1886 occurred. Hence the argument is, there was no vacancy which authorized or required an election by the electors of the state, or which gave color of support to any of the subsequent steps in that connection, resulting finally in the declaration by the speaker of the house that the respondent had been elected to the office of lieutenant governor.

The position of the respondent is, in effect, that if both the law and the fact be as claimed by the relator, yet the court cannot so decide—First. Because the controversy involves a contest over the election of, and is therefore said to be a contested election for, lieutenant governor. All such contests, it is argued, are by the constitution expressly committed to the final determination of the general assembly. Second. Because, even though this should not be considered a case of contested election, since the subject of the information involves the right to exercise an office which pertains to a co-ordinate branch of the state government, the contention is that it is a matter exclusively of political, and not of judicial, concern. Hence it is said the subject-matter is foreign to the jurisdiction of, and is not cognizable by, the courts.

The first question for consideration, therefore, is, do the facts presented in the information make this a case of contested election, within the purview of section 6, art. 5, of the constitution, which reads as follows: "Contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor shall be determined by the general assembly in such manner as may be prescribed by law?" Pursuant to this provision, the general assembly has enacted, in substance, that the election of any person declared elected by popular vote to any state office may be contested by any elector entitled to vote for such person. Provision is made for the organization of a committee, to be selected from the members of both houses, before which the contest is to be carried on. The causes of contest are prescribed, and the mode of procedure marked out. The judgment of this committee is to be reported to each house separately, and is to be conclusive. The causes for which an election may be contested are (1) irregularity or malconduct; (2) ineligibility of the contestee; (3) infamous crime in the contestee; (4) illegal votes. Section 4756, Rev. St. 1881.

An examination of the constitution, and legislation which has followed, makes it manifest that all contested elections for governor or lieutenant governor are committed to the exclusive judgment of the general assembly, to be determined by the committee for which provision is made, under the rules and regulations prescribed in the statute. From the authorities, and upon principle, these general conclusions may be deduced: (1) When the constitution confers the power and enjoins the duty of determining contested elections upon the general assembly, its power in that respect is plenary, final, and exclusive in the specific cases mentioned. (2) When the constitution confides to a legislative body the power to judge of the election and qualification of its own members, the exercise of that power belongs exclusively to the body to which it is so committed, *589 and is not the subject of review in the courts or by any other body State v. Baxter, 28 Ark. 129; State v. Marlow, 15 Ohio St. 114; State v Tomlinson, 20 Kan. 692; People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481; People v. Fitzgerald, 41 Mich. 2, 2 N. W. Rep. 179; Alter v. Simpson, 46 Mich. 138, 8 N. W. Rep. 724; State v. Gilmore, 20 Kan. 551; O'Ferrall v. Colby, 2 Minn. 180, (Gil. 148;) Cooley, Const. Lim. 133; McCrary, Elect. § 515; Hulseman v. Rems, 41 Pa. St. 396.

While it is undoubtedly true that every contested election involves the title to an office, it cannot, with propriety, be said that every contest or litigation which involves the title to an office is a contested election. If the relator had, as he assumes, a vested legal right in the office of president of the senate, which had its inception and attached to him prior to, and which is in nowise dependent upon or connected with, the election through which the respondent claims, it is not apparent how such right can become involved in a contested election. If, under the constitution and law, the relator had a right anterior to the election, and if, as he further assumes, the election was unauthorized, then the mere holding of such election could not involve the pre-existing title in an election contest. The vested right could not have been annihilated by an unauthorized election, nor can the question of the existence of such a right, anterior to and independent of the election, be taken out of the cognizance of the judicial tribunals by the mere fact of an election. The logic of the adverse contention is, conceding all that the relator claims in respect to his antecedent right, as well as the invalidity of the election, that the title of the relator has nevertheless become so involved in and confused by the form of an election that there is now no power to ascertain and declare the title, except by resolving the controversy into a case of contested election, and by sending it to the general assembly. By this method of reasoning the jurisdiction of the court over the subject-matter is sought to be defeated. This view of the situation is not, in my opinion, maintainable either in reason or upon authority.

The right in dispute is cognizable only by judicial authority. All the judicial power of the state, except such as is specially conferred upon other departments of the government, is committed to the courts. The authorities support the proposition that, where one department of the government is, in special cases, authorized to exercise power which belongs in general to another department, the exercise of such power will be limited strictly to the subjects specially enumerated. To declare what the law is, is a judicial function. Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 168; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137; McDonald v. Keeler, 99 N. Y. 463.

The judicial power committed to the general assembly is, in respect to the subject now under consideration, only such as strictly pertains to cases of contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor. The causes for such contest are specifically enumerated in the statute. These causes are only such as arise out of and pertain to an election. Before there can be a contested election an election must have been held. An election implies the choice of a qualified person to an office, by an electoral body, at the time, and substantially in the manner and with the safeguards, provided by law. The electoral body may manifest its choice in a manner which leaves no doubt of the fact of choice; yet, if such choice be manifested at a time or under conditions unknown to the law, the fact of choice, however unmistakable, goes for nothing. Under a government such as ours, the people derive their power to elect officers from the written law which they themselves have prescribed. It is not inherent, to be exercised upon any and every occasion when they may assemble together. The force and efficacy of the ballot is derived from the constitution and laws; and no one can predicate title to an office upon a popular vote, unless such vote was cast at a time when the constitution and laws authorized an election for that office to be holden. McKune v. Weller, 11 Cal. 49; Foster v. Scarff, 15 Ohio St. 532; Sawyer v. Haydon, 1 Nev. 75; *590 Biddle v. Willard, 10 Ind. 62; Com. v. Meeser, 44 Pa. St. 341; State v. Stauffer, 11 Neb. 173; State v. Whittemore, Id. 173; State v. Buck, 13 Neb. 273; State v. Hedlund, 16 Neb. 566; McCrary, Elect. § 109; Cooley, Const. Lim. (5th Ed.) 747.

If, by the constitution, the electors have surrendered to others, chosen by themselves, the power to supply the office the title to which is in dispute, by electing another to perform the duties of the office, they may not, without changing the fundamental law, resume such power at their pleasure. The adverse argument is, in effect, that, because there has been an election in form, the court may not inquire whether there has been an election in law and in fact. Because a title to an office is asserted as the result of an election, the pre-existing title of an incumbent in the same office becomes merged in the form of such election, and is hence no longer a subject of judicial inquiry in the courts.

But it is said, even if this be not a case of contested election, the subject of the right or office in dispute is cognizable solely by the political departments of the state government. Hence it is said the court below has and had no jurisdiction to entertain the subject of the information. Whatever the determination of the general assembly may be, even though, as in the case now under consideration, one branch of the assembly determines in favor of one claimant, and the other branch in favor of the other, it is said the judgment of the general assembly is conclusive on the courts and the people in a case like this. The argument is that an exposition by the courts of the law of the case would be to subordinate the supreme will of the legislature,—would be an encroachment upon its prerogative. The argument addressed to this feature of the case derives its force mainly from the alleged impotency of the court. Whatever its judgment may eventually be, it is said, it possesses no power to enforce its mandate, and hence its jurisdiction would be futile. The assumption is that, under our system of government, official station may be of such quality and degree that all inquiry into the title or pretense of one who asserts a right or claim to such station is denied the judicial department. In respect to this assumption, an author distinguished for his learning has said: “There is a basis of truth in this argument; the executive of the state cannot be subordinated to the judiciary, and may in general refuse obedience to writs by which this is attempted. But when the question is, who is the executive of the state? the judges have functions to perform which are at least as important as those of any other citizens, and the fact that they are judges can never be a reason why they should submit to usurpation. A successful usurpation can only be accomplished with the acquiescence of the other departments; and the judges, for the determination of their own course, must in some form inquire into and take notice of the facts.” Cooley, Const. Lim. 786; High, Ext. Rem. § 634; Kerr v. Trego, 47 Pa. St. 292.

It has been contended, in effect, that this is an application to the court to determine who shall preside over the senate, and that, because that body is a branch of an independent department of the state government, it has the inherent and exclusive right to determine that question for itself. That, if it determines that the relator has the right, it is possessed of ample power, without the aid of the court, to protect him in its enjoyment; and, if it is the pleasure of the senate that the respondent should preside, it is not in the power of the court to subordinate its will. The argument is specious, but it rests on a misapprehension of the case as it appears upon the record. The court is not asked to confer a right upon, or create a title in, the relator, nor is it asked to determine who shall preside over the senate. The case proceeds upon the theory that the senate, in the exercise of its constitutional prerogative, has conferred the right upon the relator, and that the respondent is unlawfully interfering with the right so conferred, and still recognized as existing, by the body which conferred, and had the power to confer, the right. The judgment of the court in this as in all other controversies *591 concerning the rights of parties cannot create the right in one, or destroy it in the other. The rights of each are fixed by the constitution, and the jurisdiction of the court is invoked, as the mere instrument of the constitution, to ascertain and declare their rights as they are. The office of the court in all controversies is not to create rights, but to ascertain and enforce them when ascertained. In this respect the case is not different from any other controversy between parties involving rights of property. Nor is the jurisdiction of the court to be determined by the situation of the parties, or their ability to enforce their respective rights, without the aid of the court. Because a controversy has arisen between two individuals involving the right or franchise to preside over the senate, in no legal sense involves the senate, as a legislative body, further than such controversy may affect the dignity and decorum which should attend its sessions. The senate has no more power to adjudicate, except provisionally, upon an existing legal right or title of its presiding officer, than it has upon the legal rights of any other individual. Grant that the senate has the power, as it doubtless has, to refuse to permit its chamber to be made the arena in which to settle the disputed right or title, by such means as may seem available to the parties, does it follow that either party is forever precluded from invoking the judgment of the law upon the right in dispute? The general assembly, or either branch of it, cannot act judicially upon the right in dispute. Suppose it be true, as it is claimed on the one hand, that the relator is presiding over the senate without authority of law, and in open defiance of the lawfully expressed will of the people, will it be said that because he does so with the concurrence of the senate, and under the protection of its officers, that the respondent's right is destroyed unless he establish it by force? Must the right be forever abandoned without judicial examination? Or suppose it be true, as is asserted on the other hand, that the respondent, in defiance of law, being supported by the house, intrudes into and interferes with the constitutional rights of the relator, are the parties without other means of settling their rights under the law, except it be to set their respective supporters in array? The right must remain in perpetual dispute until some tribunal which has authority to pronounce judgment of the law declares in favor of one party or the other. The law is without force or efficiency until vitality is breathed into it through the judgment and process of the court. Until the court speaks the judgment of the law, the contest must proceed by methods extrajudicial, except one party or the other abandon his claim. Shall the court, the exponent of the law, though formally invoked, refuse to speak while the unseemly contest goes on; or must it first inquire whether the party against whom it may declare, will obey the voice of the law before it makes response?

It cannot be admitted or shown that the parties are reduced to this extremity. The same constitution which conferred the right, wherever it may be lodged, has provided the remedy for its protection. That instrument requires that "all courts shall be open, and every man, for an injury done to him in his person, property, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law." Authority to adjudge the disputed claim having been lodged in no other tribunal, the courts must declare the law, and then it becomes the duty of the chief executive, under the sanction of his oath, to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed." Whenever it becomes a question whether or not there was a vacancy to be filled by an election or appointment, or where the question is, did the law authorize the election or appointment in a given case? it is universally held that the courts have jurisdiction to determine the law of the case. There is no authority which holds to the contrary. Com. v. Meeser, 44 Pa. St. 342; Prouty v. Stroer, 11 Kan. 235; Attorney General v. Francis, 26 Kan. 724; Page v. Hardin, 8 B. Mon. 648.

A decision by the legislature that a constitutional office is vacant cannot destroy the pre-existing title of an incumbent. The question presented by *592 the record, and questions closely analogous, have been the subjects of adjudication in the courts of last resort in some of the states, as well as in the supreme court of the United States. Uniformly the jurisdiction of the courts to determine the title to an office is maintained, unless the right to determine such title has been expressly confided to some other tribunal. The person claiming such a vested right may invoke the aid of the court to ascertain and protect his right against any one who unlawfully assails it.

Thus, in the case of Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137, which involved the right of the court to coerce the delivery of a commission by the head of one of the departments of the federal government, through which it was claimed an individual had secured a vested right in an office, Chief Justice Marshall said: "If one of the heads of departments commits an illegal act under color of his office, by which an individual sustains an injury, it cannot be pretended that his office alone exempts him from being sued in the ordinary mode of proceeding, and being compelled to obey the judgment of the law. * * * It is not by the office of the person to whom the writ is directed, but the nature of the thing to be done, that the propriety or impropriety of issuing the mandamus is to be determined."

The proceeding here is not against the respondent as an officer, but because it is alleged he unlawfully assumes to act as such, to the injury of another who claims the right. Being sued as an individual who is wrongfully attempting to exercise the functions of an office, he may not cover himself with the mantle of the office in dispute, and in that character claim that he is so related to a co-ordinate branch of the government that all judicial inquiry must be suspended. Attorney General v. Barstow, 4 Wis. 567; Cunningham v. Macon, etc., R. Co., 109 U. S. 446, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 292, 609; U. S. v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378; U. S. v. Boutwell, 17 Wall. 604; Kendall v. Stokes, 3 How. 87; Bates v. Clark, 95 U. S. 204; U. S. v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 270, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 903; High, Extr. Rem. §§ 634, 635, and notes.

Whether the court below properly entertained jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the information can only be determined by inquiring whether the election held in November, 1886, for lieutenant governor, was or was not a valid election. If the election was authorized by the constitution and laws, then the votes of the electors communicated a title to the office of lieutenant governor to the respondent which can neither be impeached nor inquired into save by the general assembly. If the election was not authorized by law, then, in legal contemplation, there has been no election, and the pre-existing title of the relator cannot be involved in a case of contested election. His title, in that event, is the subject of adjudication in the courts.

Article 5 of the constitution, entitled "Executive," creates two offices or public stations, and makes provision for the election of three officers. The offices created embrace the duties of the chief executive of the state and those of the president of the senate. The officers for whose election and service provision is made are entitled, respectively, "governor," "lieutenant governor," and "president of the senate." These stand related to each other so as to supply an order of succession. The first two are elected by the people, and are each to hold their office during four years. The third is to be elected by the senate whenever the occasion may require. While the officer entitled "governor" fills the chief executive office, the one entitled "lieutenant governor" is, so long as he is able to attend, virtute officii president of the senate. While the lieutenant governor presides over the senate, he who may become president is a senator. In the absence of the one next above, the one next below succeeds to his duties. In respect to the first two, the plain implication is that when one is chosen the other must be. This inference arises from the manner in which the elector is required to designate for whom he votes, and from the manner of the return, canvass, and publication of the vote. The official term of both are fixed alike, the beginning and ending thereof being fixed for all time. The duties which pertain to the office of chief executive are prescribed, and provision is made that, in case of the removal from office of the governor, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the duties of the office, the same shall devolve on the lieutenant governor. Section 10 also enjoins upon the general assembly to provide by law for the case of removal from office, death, resignation, or inability, both of the governor and lieutenant governor, and to declare what officer shall then act as governor. The officer so to be declared is then to act accordingly until the disability be removed, or a governor be elected. It is provided that the lieutenant governor shall, by virtue of his office, be president of the senate, with the right to join in debate, and vote when the senate is in committee of the whole, and to give the casting vote when the senate is equally divided. Such other duties as are annexed to the office of president of the senate arise by parliamentary law. The duties thus assigned to the lieutenant governor are precisely those which parliamentary law assigns to the presiding officer or speaker of a legislative assembly. Cush. Man. §§ 306-310. Section 11 provides that whenever the lieutenant governor shall act as governor, or shall be unable to attend as president of the senate, the senate shall elect one of its own members as president for the occasion.

Thus it will be seen that the fifth article of the constitution has created the executive office, divided it into official terms of four years each from a given day, and provided that the tenure of those who may fill the office, or discharge its duties, shall be four years. It has also created the office of president of the senate, and designated the manner in which it shall be supplied with an incumbent. It has made provision for the election of three constitutional officers, to the end that two constitutional offices may be constantly and without interruption supplied with incumbents. Two of the officers are to be elected concurrently, by the electoral body at large, every four years. The election of the third may or may not be held in abeyance until the occasion for his election arises. When the occasion arises he is to be elected by the senate. The inquiry then is, how may the occasion arise which requires the election of the third officer for which the constitution has made provision, and what are to be his official duties when he is called into being? Provision having been made for three officers, while concurrent duties were prescribed for but two, the inference arises at once that the framers of the constitution deliberately contemplated that emergencies might arise in which a supernumerary officer would be necessary, in order to secure the discharge of the duties pertaining to the executive department. It is at once apparent that an order of succession was accordingly arranged, so as to prevent the possibility of a vacancy during any of the executive terms into which the future had been divided. Contemplating the possible removal from office, or of the death, resignation, or other disability, of the governor, and to the end that the executive office might not thereby become vacant of a constitutional incumbent, it was provided that, upon the happening of any such event, the duties of that office should at once devolve upon the lieutenant governor. This provision made it impossible that the succession in the office of governor should ever be broken during an executive term, or the office become vacant, while there remained a governor or lieutenant governor qualified to act. Foreseeing, moreover, that, in the event the lieutenant governor should be required to assume the functions of governor, he would be unable to perform the incompatible duty of acting as president of the senate, and realizing that the lieutenant governor might be unable to attend as such president by reason of death, resignation, or other cause, the framers of the constitution ordained that it should be the duty of the senate to elect a president pro tempore for any such occasion. This was to the end that a qualified person might be at hand, or might at once be supplied, when the occasion demanded, who should be *594 clothed with the power to discharge the duties which by the constitution were assigned to the lieutenant governor by virtue of his office.

Thus it will appear, by attending to the constitutional scheme, that there never can be a moment, during any quadrennial period, when the constitution itself has not supplied an officer qualified to discharge the duties assigned to the governor or lieutenant governor without calling for the intervention of the electoral body. In the character of lieutenant governor, that official is required, during the inability, whether temporary or continuous, of the governor, to discharge the functions of the executive office, while during any like inability of the lieutenant governor to act as president of the senate the duties of that station are devolved upon the president pro tempore.

Still further, the article of the constitution which makes provision for the succession in the executive office contemplates the possibility that both the governor and lieutenant governor may at the same time be disabled from discharging the functions of their respective stations. So far attention has been given to the precautions taken in order that a vacancy might not occur in the event of the death or disability of one or the other of these two officers. As it serves to justify the conclusion that in no event was it contemplated that an election should intervene during the progress of an executive term, it may be well to consider briefly the other contingency provided for. What was deemed necessary in the event of the death, resignation, or inability of both governor and lieutenant governor? Was it contemplated that a vacancy would or might then occur in both offices? Clearly not. This is apparent from the fact that the general assembly was enjoined to declare what officer should, in such an emergency, act as governor; and why not, in the event of the death or resignation of both, also declare who should then be lieutenant governor? Plainly because the only duties annexed to that office pertained to the senate; and therefore, in the next succeeding section, to the senate was committed the duty, in any and every contingency, of supplying a person to perform those duties. There was hence neither necessity for, nor propriety in, an injunction that the general assembly should declare by law who should act as lieutenant governor, in case of the death or resignation of that officer. The duty of supplying a person to perform the functions of that office was to be and was committed without limitation to the senate, by requiring the election of a president pro tempore as often as occasion might require. In pursuance of the constitutional mandate, the general assembly provided, in section 5559, Rev. St. 1881, as follows: "In case of the removal from office by death * * * of both governor and lieutenant governor, a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the president of the senate shall act as governor until the vacancy be filled, and, if there be no president of the senate, the secretary of state shall convene the senate for the purpose of electing a president thereof." It thus appears that the constitution, as also the legislation which followed in obedience to its requirement, indicates that the only account which was to be taken of the death, resignation, or other inability of the lieutenant governor was that, if the senate had not already done so, it should then elect a president pro tempore.

It follows, from a proper construction of the constitution, that there can be no vacancy in the office of governor or lieutenant governor so long as either remains qualified to act. Upon the death or disqualification of both, the constitution contemplates that a vacancy may occur in the executive office alone. To meet such a possible emergency, it required the general assembly to declare by law what officer should then act as governor. This has been done accordingly. The confusion in which the situation is involved grows out of an attempt to confound names with things; titles with offices. It seems to be supposed that the duties and office of lieutenant governor and president of the senate, which in virtue of his office the lieutenant governor may or may not fill, depending on circumstances, can only be filled by supplying some one to *595 act therein with the title of lieutenant governor. This is the fundamental error which underlies the appellant's case. An office without a legally authorized incumbent is not filled by merely employing a given title, nor can an office become legally vacant while the constitution supplies an incumbent who possesses all the other requisite qualifications except the title. It is the substance, and not the shadow; the legally elected and authorized incumbent, and not the title,—that fills the office. In case of the death or resignation of the governor, the executive office becomes, for the time being, titularly vacant. It does not, however, while there is a lieutenant governor, become vacant in fact. In case the lieutenant governor acts as governor, or in case of his death or resignation, the office of president of the senate is, in respect of the name, vacated by the lieutenant governor, but it no more becomes vacant in fact than does the office of governor in the case first supposed.

The framers of the constitution were not so much concerned that there should always be two persons supplied with the title of "governor" and "lieutenant governor," respectively, as that there should always be at hand two persons legally qualified to discharge the respective duties of chief executive and president of the senate. As was pertinently said in the case of Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Or. 389, 4 Pac. Rep. 1180: "It is not shown how an office can be vacant, and yet there be a person, not the deputy or locum tenens of another, empowered by law to discharge the duties of the office, and who does in fact discharge them. It is not explained how, in such a case, the duties can be separated from the office, so that he who discharges them does not become an incumbent of the office. * * * It is the function of a public officer to discharge public duties. Such duties constitute his office. Hence, given a public office, and one who, duly empowered, discharges its duties, and we have an incumbent in that office."

In New York a law was passed establishing the office of superintendent of insurance. The superintendent was to be appointed by the governor for the term of three years, with authority to designate his deputy. The deputy was to possess the powers and perform the duties attached by law to the office, during absence and inability of the principal. The superintendent resigned his office. The court of appeals, speaking of the status of the former deputy after the resignation of the superintendent, said: "It thus appears that the statute confers, in the case of a vacancy, upon the deputy all the powers, and imposes upon him all the duties, of the office of superintendent during its continuance. In short, it makes him, to all intents and purposes, acting superintendent, for the time during which there is and can be no other superintendent. The act contemplates that there shall at all times be a person clothed with all the powers, and subject to all the duties, of superintendent." People v. Hopkins, 55 N. Y. 74.

So, it may be said here, the executive department of the state is fashioned upon such a scheme as that each executive term consists of four years, each term having a definite beginning and ending. The electoral body designates at quadrennial elections two persons, one of whom acquires an absolute right to be chief executive for four years; the other becomes a contingent, to act in case of the inability of the first-named. Meanwhile the constitution assigns certain duties to the contingent connected with the senate. The senate is authorized and required to supply a contingent for the lieutenant governor, to discharge the duties assigned him, in case of his inability to attend as president of the senate; and thus the constitution contemplates that there shall be a contingent to the governor, and one to the lieutenant governor, each clothed with all the power, and subject to all the duties, of the principal officer.

The argument in support of the validity of the election has its foundation on section 18 of article 5 of the constitution. This section provides, among other things, that, when at any time a vacancy shall have occurred in any state office, the governor shall fill such vacancy by appointment, which shall *596 expire when a successor shall have been elected and qualified. Learned counsel in support of their position say: "We maintain * * * that the constitution does contemplate vacancies in the office of lieutenant governor. We say it is a state office, within the meaning of section 18, and that when a vacancy occurs, it being a state office, it is entirely competent, nay, it is the duty of the governor to appoint a lieutenant governor to serve until a successor can be elected." In my opinion this position is wholly untenable. There is nothing in the constitution which so much as raises an inference that the office of lieutenant governor can become vacant in a legal or actual sense. Nor is the constitution fairly capable of such a construction as would authorize the strange anomaly of a chief executive appointing to office one who might, by his voluntary act, succeed to the executive office the next day after the appointment was made. The confusion arises out of the fact that the office, and the duties which pertain to it, are spoken of as entirely distinct, whereas they are inseparably connected. It is only where there is an existing office, without an incumbent lawfully authorized to discharge its duties, that the office is, in the eye of the law, vacant. The very idea and definition of the word "office" implies the right to exercise a public function or employment. The inevitable, logical conclusion, therefore, is that, wherever there is an existing office, the duties of which the law devolves upon a person or officer named upon the happening of any given event, the person or officer so designated becomes, upon the happening of the event named, the incumbent of the office. This is so, not because the person becomes eo nomine the officer, but because, while lawfully in the discharge of its duties, he fills the office. There were therefore, assuming the facts stated in the information to be true, two inseparable obstacles to the appointment by the governor of a lieutenant governor when Gen. Manson vacated the office. One was, the office was not vacant, because the relator had been elected and was then president pro tempore of the senate; the other was that the constitution made provision for supplying the office, if it was not already supplied, by an election by the senate.

In Clarke v. Irwin, 5 Nev. 111-128, the court say: "Two things must concur—there must be a vacancy, and no provision made by the constitution for filling the office—before the governor can exercise the appointing power." Neither of the foregoing conditions was present. As was, in effect, said in the case last above cited: If there was a vacancy, then the very constitution which created the office filled the same, and there was no such condition of things as authorized an appointment. An executive system in which the chief executive could, in any event, appoint his own successor apparent, thereby vesting such appointee with power to become president of the senate, has, in my opinion, found no precedent in our form of government, either state or national.

The argument is that, a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor having occurred, such vacancy was to be filled, first, by appointment by the governor, and then by the electoral body in November, 1886, under the provisions of sections 4678, Rev. St. 1881. This section provides that a general election shall be held in the month of November, biennially, at which all existing vacancies in office shall be filled, unless otherwise provided by law. It is said there is nothing in the constitution which forbade the people to fill the vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. To this there are three sufficient answers: (1) There was no vacancy. (2) If there was, the constitution provided a mode of filling it other than by the electoral body, viz., by the election of a president pro tempore of the senate. (3) The constitution, by the clearest implication, forbids an election for governor or lieutenant governor except for the term of four years, which term can in no case commence at any other than the times specified in that instrument.

It is argued that the election, if lawfully holden, could only confer title for the unexpired executive term. This construction reduces the office of lieutenant *597 governor, the term of which is fixed in the constitution at four years, to the level of offices created by legislative enactment, and subjects the office by judicial interpolation, rather than by construction, to the operation of section 5567, Rev. St. 1881, which provides “that every person elected to fill any office in which a vacancy has occurred shall hold such office for the unexpired term thereof.” It has, however, been repeatedly held by this court that this statute has no application to an office created by, and the term of which is fixed in, the constitution. Governor v. Nelson, 6 Ind. 496; Baker v. Kirk, 33 Ind. 517; State v. Long, 91 Ind. 351. It must therefore be regarded as the settled law of this state that when a person is elected to an office created by, and the term of which is fixed in, the constitution, such election confers an indefeasible title for the full constitutional term. The emphatic language of the constitution is: “There shall be a lieutenant governor, who shall hold his office during four years.” The construction contended for would, in effect, require the court to add: “Except in case of an election to fill a vacancy, when he shall hold only during the unexpired term of such office.” To do this is equally beyond the power of the court and the legislature. People v. Burbank, 12 Cal. 378. If it is competent by construction thus to add to the constitution, the enactment of section 5567 was wholly unnecessary, as the provisions of that section could as readily have been interpolated into the statute by construction as into the constitution. That the constitution makes no provision for elections to fill vacancies in the office of governor or lieutenant governor, or for the limitation of the terms of persons elected to fill vacancies in those offices, is conclusive that no such vacancies were contemplated.

Among other objections to the construction thus given the constitution, and which has, again and again, been given it in the administration of the executive department of the government, it has been contended that there would result an irreconcilable conflict between sections 8 and 10 of article 5. The first provides that no person holding any office under the government of the United States or of this state shall fill the office of governor or lieutenant governor. The second provides that, in case of the death or disability of both governor and lieutenant governor, the general assembly shall declare what officer shall then act as governor until the disability be removed. It is said that to declare that another officer of the state shall act as governor in such a contingency is a violation of section 8. The framers of the constitution cannot be involved in such contradiction. The scheme of the constitution does not contemplate that either the lieutenant governor or the president of the senate shall, in any event, discharge the functions of two incompatible offices. When the lieutenant governor acts as governor, or fills the executive office, he does so in the character of lieutenant governor, and ceases for the occasion to be president of the senate. When the president pro tempore of the senate acts as president, he does so in the character and office of senator, and does not become in name lieutenant governor. The office of president of the senate is for the time being appendant to that of senator. When, however, the contingency arises that the president of the senate is to act as governor, he does so in his natural and not in his official capacity as senator. He ceases for the occasion to be senator. This is according to the principle declared in Chadwick v. Earhart, supra. It is there said: “If an office be appendant, as the expression is in 1 Leon. 321, to another office, the determination of the first office will determine the second. * * * On the contrary, if the nomination or appointment to an office be descriptio personarum of some one who holds some office by the title of which he is described, and who on some contingency is to enter and fill another office, the answering the description at the time the contingency arises designates him as the person who is to enter and fill the office, and when, as thus designated, he enters into the office, he holds it in his natural, and not in his official, capacity.” The application of this principle results in dissipating all of the supposed incongruities in the constitutional provisions to which reference has been made.

*598 The same reasoning by which it is sought to prove that the office of lieutenant governor becomes vacant upon the death or resignation of that officer would, if valid, prove that under like circumstances the office of governor also becomes vacant. It would also prove that when the lieutenant governor, by reason of the death or resignation of the governor, acts as chief executive, the office of lieutenant governor becomes vacant. Yet it is conceded that in such a case the latter office does not become vacant, and that the lieutenant governor, while filling the office of governor, does so as, or in the character of, lieutenant governor. Will it be pretended that, while acting as governor in such a case, the lieutenant governor actually fills two offices,—that of chief executive and president of the senate? or does he fill the one in fact, and the other in name, by his title?

In 1861, after the governor-elect resigned, and the distinguished citizen who, as lieutenant governor, supplied the executive chair, assumed the duties of the executive, he as actually and effectually vacated the discharge of any official duty in any other office than that of governor as though he had died on the day he assumed the executive function. It was absolutely certain that from thenceforth, during the remainder of the executive term, he would be disqualified and unable to preside over the senate. Did the office of lieutenant governor thereby become vacant? Should there have been an election for lieutenant governor holden in 1862, while Gov. Morton was actually filling the executive chair in the character of lieutenant governor, so as to have supplied the state with two lieutenant governors? or was the office of governor, while it was thus so adequately and actually filled, vacant, so that there should have been an election to supply that office? Perhaps it is well that the question which now perplexes the affairs of state was then not so much as even suggested, to add confusion to the crisis which was then upon the people.

Consider the situation in which the affairs of the state are involved at this moment. The general assembly, which it is asserted is the only body capable and authorized to decide the pending controversy, consists of two wholly independent bodies. The senate has decided for itself that the right and title to the office in dispute was conferred by its election on the relator, while the house has given its judgment that the election, the result of which was declared by its speaker, conferred the title on the respondent. Each separate branch of the general assembly has given its judgment on the case. The result of the judgment of the general assembly is to present the people of the state two persons contending for one office, each supported by the judgment of one separate branch of the legislative department of the state. In this extremity the court is appealed to by one of the parties, and asked to expound the constitution and declare the law in respect to his claim of title to the office in dispute. Shall it now be said that the best and only judgment which, under the constitution, the law can give in the premises, is that which has been declared by the general assembly? Is the extremity such that the confusion which now distracts the public service must continue until one or the other of the claimants tires of the contest, or abandons his claim, or may the court in this, as in any other case of disputed right, declare the law?

On behalf of the appellant it was contended that the issuance of an injunction in a case like this was in excess of the jurisdiction of the court. After a careful consideration of the subject, I am constrained to concur in this view. Without elaborating, my conclusion is that all that a court can properly entertain in a case involving the title to an office such as that in controversy is some appropriate proceeding to determine the right in dispute. Its jurisdiction is limited to giving judgment on the naked legal right. So long as the title remains unsettled, it is not the province of the court to interfere by the extraordinary remedy of injunction for the protection of one or the restraint of the other litigant. This principle is peculiarly applicable to the case before us, which involves a right to exercise an office which can only be exercised *599 under the supervision and protection of a co-ordinate branch of the government. While the legislative department has no power to pass judicially upon the title involved, each house, when separately assembled, or both when in joint assembly, has the power and the right to maintain its own dignity, and the good order and decorum of its proceedings. For this purpose, when the right to preside is in dispute, each may and must determine provisionally, until the right is judicially settled, who shall preside over its deliberations. Hence, while the courts are under the solemn duty when their jurisdiction is properly invoked of determining the title, they may not in a contest of such gravity interpose their authority in a matter which concerns the propriety of the conduct and proceedings of the senate or joint assembly of the two houses. So far as the relator has invoked the jurisdiction of the court by an information, the proceeding is appropriate to the end that the title to the office in dispute may be judicially determined. Cochran v. McCleary, 22 Iowa, 75. The feature of the case which invokes the restraining power of the court cannot, in my opinion, be entertained. Beal v. Ray, 17 Ind. 554; Smith v. Meyers, 9 N. E. Rep. 692, (present term.)

For these reasons, while I think the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the restraining order should nevertheless be dissolved, and the further order of the court should be that, unless the respondent waives the question of jurisdiction over his person, the pending case should be dismissed.

HOWK, J.

My judgment yields a ready and earnest assent to each and all of the conclusions of Mitchell, J., upon each and all of the momentous questions discussed by him in this important cause. I cannot say aught which would give additional force to his able and exhaustive arguments upon each of these questions. Therefore I content myself with earnestly concurring in his opinion.

NIBLACK, J.

I concur with the conclusion reached in this case that, upon the facts disclosed by the record, the court below had no jurisdiction over the person of the appellant, and that for that reason, if for no other, the judgment appealed from ought to be reversed. I also agree that, having reached the conclusion that there was no jurisdiction over the person of the appellant, there is nothing we can say on the merits of the controversy which can properly be considered as of binding authority as a decision in the cause. But I trust that, under the circumstances, it will not be deemed inappropriate for me to express some individual views on some of the questions discussed by my brother judges who have preceded me. I am further of the opinion that the court did not have, and could not be made to have, any jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the action.

Sections 4, 5, and 6 of article 5 of the present constitution of this state, as they are known by their original numbers, are as follows:

"Sec. 4. In voting for governor and lieutenant governor, the electors shall designate for whom they vote as governor, and for whom as lieutenant governor. The returns of every election for governor and lieutenant governor shall be sealed up and transmitted to the seat of government, directed to the speaker of the house of representatives, who shall open and publish them in presence of both houses of the general assembly.

Sec. 5. The persons respectively having the highest number of votes for governor and lieutenant governor shall be elected; but, in case two or more persons shall have an equal and highest number of votes for either office, the general assembly shall, by a joint vote, forthwith proceed to elect one of said persons governor or lieutenant governor, as the case may be.

Sec. 6. Contested elections for governor or lieutenant governor shall be determined by the general assembly in such manner as may be prescribed by law."

*600 These provisions of the constitution, as I believe, confer upon the general assembly of this state exclusive power and control over—First, acting in part through the speaker of the house of representatives, who is charged with the duty of opening and publishing the returns, the matter of computing the votes cast at any election for governor and lieutenant governor respectively, and of determining and declaring the result arrived at by such computation; secondly, the matter of electing both the governor and lieutenant governor, when, by reason of a tie in the votes cast, there has been no choice by the people;

thirdly, all matters of contest arising out of the alleged election of any person, either as governor or lieutenant governor, and consequently, all questions affecting the rights of any person to hold the office of either governor or lieutenant governor.

The phrase "contested elections" has no technical or legally defined meaning. An election may be said to be "contested" whenever an objection is formally urged against it which, if found to be true in fact, would invalidate it. This must be true both as to objections founded upon some constitutional provision as well as upon any mere statutory enactment. The primary meaning of the verb "to contest," as given by Webster, is "to make a subject of dispute, contention, or litigation; to call in question; to controvert; to oppose; to dispute." It is further defined as meaning, "to defend, as a suit or other judicial proceeding; to dispute, or resist, as a claim by due course of law; to litigate." The power, therefore, to "determine contested elections" for governor or lieutenant governor, necessarily carries with it jurisdiction over every possible objection which may, under the constitution or any statute, be urged against the so-called election of any person to either one of those offices. Section 4743, Rev. St. 1881, and the next three succeeding sections, prescribing the manner of proceeding in contesting the election of state officers, were evidently intended to carry into effect the provision of the constitution concerning contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor; but the subsequent section, (4756,) which states generally the causes for which an election may be contested, does not specifically enumerate the objection presented in this case against the validity of the election of the appellant as lieutenant governor as a cause of contest; and it is for this reason claimed that the general assembly has no jurisdiction to hear and determine such a contest as the complaint in this case was intended to present, and that hence, there being no other remedy, the courts must have jurisdiction to hear and determine such a contest. This does not by any means follow. As applicable to a tribunal having only statutory jurisdiction to hear and determine a contested election case, the claim might have much plausibility, but, as applicable to a tribunal upon which the constitution has conferred complete jurisdiction, such a claim can have no foundation. It must be borne in mind that the constitution says that "contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor shall be determined by the general assembly." This is equivalent to saying that all such contested elections must be so determined. The failure, therefore, of the general assembly to provide that a particular state of facts, which, under the constitution, ought to render an election for governor or lieutenant governor invalid, shall constitute a cause of contest, is simply a failure on its part to fully meet all the requirements of the constitution, and, in the very nature of things, no authority is thereby conferred upon the courts to supply the omission.

As I construe the various sections of the constitution having some bearing on the subject under discussion, in the light of the principles and usage governing American elections, the election of a governor or lieutenant governor may be contested for causes other than those specifically enumerated in the statute. If the person receiving the highest number of votes should prove to be an idiot or insane, and hence incapable of either comprehending the nature of the oath he would be required to take, or of discharging the duties of the *601 office to which he has been elected, might not such a palpable disqualification be made a ground of contest? So, if the person receiving the greater number of votes should, after the election, commit some high crime or misdemeanor, amounting to an impeachable offense under the constitution, if committed after taking office, might not the general assembly, upon a contest, declare him to be incapable of taking the office? If there was no vacancy in the office at the time the election was held, or if the vacancy was one which the people were not authorized to fill at that time, could not either one of such facts be brought to the attention of the general assembly by an elector under the provisions of sections 4743 and 4744 of the statute above referred to, and the validity of the election be thus contested? If not, why not? But, however that may be, I, for the reasons given, maintain that, whatever power the courts might otherwise have had to adjudicate controversies arising out of elections for governor or lieutenant governor, all jurisdiction over such questions has been conferred upon the general assembly, to be exercised by it in such manner as has been or may hereafter be prescribed by law, and that, consequently, the courts of the state are wholly without jurisdiction to determine such controversies. The constitutional provisions which I have above set out take this case out of the rules of decision on kindred questions in some of the other states, and render many of the cases cited and relied on in argument totally inapplicable as precedents at the present hearing.

A careful examination of the constitution and existing laws will disclose that all that pertains to the returns and the contesting of the elections for governor and lieutenant governor, and to the counting in and inauguration of these officers, stands upon a footing different from that of other state officers. The governor and lieutenant governor receive no commissions as muniments of title to their offices. The only authentic record of any matter relating to their election is found in the journal of the two houses of the general assembly. All the state officers who receive commissions must have their oaths of office indorsed upon their respective commissions, and certified copies of such oaths must be filed in the office of the secretary of state. Section 5519, Rev. St. 1881, prescribes the oath which every public officer of the state is required to take before entering upon the duties of his office. Section 5521 further enacts that "members of the general assembly shall take such oath before taking their seats, which shall be entered on the journals, and the governor and lieutenant governor shall each take such oath in presence of both houses of the general assembly in convention, and the same shall be entered on the journals thereof." Thus it will be seen that every thing having relation to the returns and contests of their elections, to counting them in, and to the inauguration of governor and lieutenant governor, is wholly committed to the general assembly, as much so and as exclusively, I respectfully submit, as each house is made the judge of the election returns and qualifications of its own members. The governor and lieutenant governor may for cause be impeached by the house of representatives, and tried and removed by the senate, or may, in common with other state officers, be removed by a two-thirds vote of both houses. The courts, for the causes stated, have absolutely nothing to do either with inducting the governor and lieutenant governor into office, or with excluding them therefrom, in the first instance, or in getting them out of office after they may have forfeited their right to remain in. Under the peculiar structure of our state constitution, these are political and hence not judicial questions, and are committed to the general assembly as the chief representatives of the political power of the state.

But it is claimed that the case presented is that of two persons claiming the right to discharge the duties of the same office, and that, in such a case, the statute expressly authorizes a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto to settle such a controversy independently of any provision of the constitution concerning contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor. But *602 the appellant bases his claim of right to preside over the senate upon the assumption that he is the duly-elected and qualified, and hence acting, lieutenant governor of the state. The relator of the appellee bases his claim to be recognized as the presiding officer of the senate upon the assumption that there is at present a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor, and that, being a member of that body, he has, under the constitution, been elected president pro tempore of the senate, which confers upon him the exclusive right of presiding over its deliberations. Each, therefore, bases his claim to preside over the senate upon a title essentially different from the other. Conceding all the relator claims, he has not thereby become, in any proper sense, the lieutenant governor of the state. He is still a senator, and as such entitled to vote upon all questions coming before the senate. He does not occupy, and, while remaining a senator cannot be made to occupy, those supernumerary relations to the senate which are by the constitution imposed upon the lieutenant governor. There is nothing in the constitution or laws of this state which prescribes the duties of a president pro tempore of the senate, or confers upon him any fixed tenure of office. Under the parliamentary law, to which we must alone look in the absence of any constitutional or statutory provision on the subject, the president pro tempore of the senate is only its presiding officer during the pleasure of that body. He may be removed at any time by a vote of the senate, or the election of some other senator to the same position. At all events, his term cannot extend beyond the legislative term during which he is elected. Every fourth year, therefore, his term of office must, at the utmost, expire about two months before the end of the concurrent term of lieutenant governor. On this subject see section 3, art. 4, of the constitution, also section 9, art. 5, of the same instrument. Consequently the relator and the appellant cannot with propriety be considered as claimants to the same office. The points of collision between them are sui generis, and do not, as I conceive, present a case either authorizing or requiring judicial intervention.

The condition of things complained of is really one of disorganization between the two houses of the general assembly, one recognizing the appellant as the lawfully-elected and duly-qualified lieutenant governor of the state, and the other denying his title to that office. This condition of disorganization develops a controversy over which the courts, on general principles, have no jurisdiction, and concerning which no court can exercise even the slightest control. It presents a case for legislative, and consequently not judicial, arbitrament.

So far as I am able to perceive, the senate has the unquestionable right to determine who is entitled to act as its presiding officer. Section 16, art. 4, of the constitution, declares that "each house shall have all powers necessary for a branch of the legislative department of a free and independent state." This provision is nothing more than an affirmation of the principles of the parliamentary law as applicable to the separate powers and relative independence of the two houses of a legislative body like our general assembly. Each house is entitled to decide every question which falls within its own exclusive jurisdiction. When, therefore, there is a contest as to which of two persons is entitled to preside over the senate, the question, from the very necessity of the situation, becomes one which the senate must decide. It may, as a matter of abstract law, decide incorrectly; but if it shall, I know of no tribunal this side of the ballot-box which is authorized to review its decision. It has all the organization and official force necessary for the enforcement of its own rules and orders, and as much power in that respect as any other tribunal which does not command the military forces of the state. It may, under parliamentary laws, punish persons guilty of a contempt of its authority. See Cush. Parl. Law, pars. 655, 671. This is also recognized as an existing power by sections 14 and 15, art. 4, of the constitution. In short, neither house either needs *603 or is entitled to receive any aid or assistance from the courts in the performance of the various duties which the constitution has devolved upon it. Then, too, I know of nothing in the constitution, or in any statute, or prescribed by any rule of parliamentary law, which designates any officer as the person entitled to preside when the two houses meet in joint convention. The right of a particular person or officer to thus preside might be established by a joint rule of the two houses, but the complaint in this case makes no mention of such a joint rule. Assuming, therefore, that no such rule is in existence here, I have no reason for believing that, when the two houses assemble in joint, an aggregate majority of the body thus composed may not call whomsoever it pleases to the president's chair, and authorize him to preside for the occasion. It has most usually been the custom in this state for either the lieutenant governor or president pro tempore of the senate to preside on such occasions, but the custom thus most usually observed has not ripened into, or ever been accepted as, a precedent of binding authority. If, therefore, a joint convention may select whomsoever it pleases to preside over its proceedings, it is too plain for argument that no court can inhibit the person thus selected from so presiding. I consequently know of no principle on which the restraining order granted in this case can be sustained, conceding that the court below had jurisdiction over the person of the appellant.

In response to much that has been said upon the subject in argument, I feel quite assured that the senate of this state is not, like the senate of the United States, a continuous body. In the senate of the United States a majority constitutes a quorum, and, as there is always more than a quorum of qualified senators holding seats in that body, its organized existence is necessarily continuous. But in the senate of this state two-thirds of its members are necessary to make a quorum. As one-half of its members go out of office at the end of each legislative term of two years,—that is to say, on the day after each general and biennial election,—it becomes, at the end of each such legislative term, a disorganized body; and, as the officers of the senate comprise an essential part of its organization, it necessarily results that the terms of such officers expire when the body becomes disorganized for want of a quorum. See section 3, art. 4, of the constitution, above referred to. This, of course, includes the president pro tempore, when one has been elected. Cush. Parl. Law, pars. 283, 296.

I might still further enlarge upon some of the views I have thus expressed, but I deem it unnecessary for any practical purpose.

ELLIOTT, C. J.

It will not, I trust, be thought improper for me to add something to what I have said in the foregoing opinion; for in that opinion I spoke for the court, expressing in part, but not in full, my own views. I fully concur in the opinion of my Brother Niblack that the courts have no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this action, and, as the subject has been by him so fully and so ably discussed, little can be added.

I began the investigation of this question with the impression that the courts had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, but I leave it with the firm conviction that they have not. This impression arose from a belief that it is better and safer that such controversies as this should be settled by some other tribunal than the legislature, but, while still impressed with that belief, I am compelled to yield to the settled rules of the law, and the clear words of the constitution. Whatever may be the views of a court or judge upon a question of constitutional policy, the expressed will of the people, as written in their constitution, must be obeyed and enforced. I am convinced that the framers of the constitution have conferred upon the general assembly exclusive authority over such controversies as this, although, regarded as a question of policy, I am persuaded that it would have been wiser to have intrusted the authority to some other tribunal. The makers of the constitution had *604 power to vest the authority in the legislature, and they have done it. To their judgment all must yield.

The grant of power to the legislature cannot be defeated upon the presumption that it will not be justly exercised. On the contrary, it is the duty of the judiciary to assume that the legislators will faithfully and impartially perform the duty imposed upon them by the constitution they have solemnly sworn to support. Courts must accord to the legislature the same solemn sense of duty, and the same conscientious resolution to perform it unmoved by improper motives that they can claim for themselves. In Brown v. Buzan, 24 Ind. 194, it was said: "The judiciary ought to accord to the legislature as much purity of purpose as it would claim for itself, as honest a desire to obey the constitution, and also a high capacity to judge of its meaning." It is therefore natural and reasonable to conclude that the framers of the constitution, influenced by this principle, believed that the legislature would impartially hear and determine all controversies, and, acting, upon that belief, inserted in that instrument the provision investing the general assembly with power to determine all contests for the offices of governor and lieutenant governor.

There was a time in our history when eminent men, statesmen and jurists, believed that the courts had arrogated to themselves a power which did not belong to them, and that its assumption was hostile to the spirit of our institutions. So thought Jefferson, Madison, Jackson, Randolph, Van Buren, and Bancroft in the earlier years of the republic, and so thought Abraham Lincoln in the more recent years. 2 Bancroft, Hist. Const. 198, 202; Garland's Life of Randolph, 327; Van Buren, Pol. Hist. 8; Lincoln's First Inaugural Address. The illustrious lawyers and statesmen of the early years were leaders of men, and their utterances did much to mould and give tone to public opinion. Their most radical views prevailed with many in their own times, and are advocated by lawyers of our own day. (Mr. Street's Address before American Bar Association, 1883.) The influence of these great men was wide spread, and there is no doubt that their views controlled in a great measure the members of the constitutional conventions of the older states, and inspired them with the belief that the public good demanded that bounds be set to the power of the judiciary. Our own conventions—that of 1816 and that of 1851—borrowed from the older states, and, influenced by the same reasons as those which had moved the conventions of those states to limit the power of the judiciary in matters of a practical nature, distributed the power by investing authority over controversies respecting the title to the executive offices in the general assembly.

The members of the convention which framed the federal constitution believed that the courts should only decide purely judicial questions. One of the historians of the debates of that body gives us substantially this account of the actions of its members. Dr. Johnson, that historian says, moved an amendment to the provisions relating to the jurisdiction of the courts, whereupon Mr. Madison said “he doubted whether it was not going too far to extend the jurisdiction of the court generally to cases arising under the constitution, and whether it ought not to be limited to cases of a judiciary nature. The right of expounding the constitution in cases not of this nature ought not to be given to that department. The motion of Dr. Johnson was agreed to, nem. con., it being generally supposed that the jurisdiction given was constructively limited to cases of a judiciary nature.” 5 Elliott's Debates, 483. It is now firmly settled, and as I believe wisely settled, in accordance with sound governmental policy and true principles of jurisprudence, that the judiciary has power to decide, in all cases over which it has jurisdiction, upon the constitutionality of legislative and executive acts, but this just result was only reached after a fierce and stubborn conflict. Judges who asserted this principle were denounced in bitterest terms in high places and in the public *605 prints. Nor did the attack upon them end in words. In 1796, during the troublous times in Rhode Island so well described by Mr. McMasters in his History of the American People, the judges of the superior court were impeached for deciding an act of the legislature to be unconstitutional, and, although they were acquitted, they lost their offices. In 1806 two of the judges of the supreme court of Ohio (Judges Tod and Pease) were impeached for making a similar decision, but, after a bitter contest, they were acquitted. These contests were the subject of much discussion, and the conduct of the judges was in many quarters wrathfully assailed, and in others stoutly defended. Denunciations of what was asserted to be the tyrannical usurpation of authority rang throughout the land, and many men, some of them great leaders, declared that the power of the judiciary must be confined within narrower limits. The strife profoundly agitated the public mind, and its influence was felt in the halls of the conventions, and it led to a limitation upon the power of the courts.

It is always proper to examine the history of the country, and study the discussions of the times, in order to ascertain the meaning of constitutional provisions. It is, indeed, often necessary to do so, and from these sources light is oftentimes obtained that clears away obscurity and difficulty. Cooley, Const. Lim. 81. In this instance history supplies material aid, for it informs us that there was a reason for limiting the power of the judiciary, and a purpose to be accomplished in doing it.

A reason urged by some who denied the power asserted by the courts was that a power so great should not be intrusted to men whose terms of office were for life, as in the earlier years of the republic were the terms of the judges of the state and federal courts. It was thought by many—whether justly or not, it is not for the judiciary to decide—that it was wiser and better to place the authority of determining contests respecting the rights to office in the hands of the officers whose terms of office were not of great duration. Ohio, Kentucky, and other states have taken the entire power from the courts, and placed it in special tribunals. Our own court has recognized the general principle that it is often best to intrust high power to officers whose terms are short. In Brown v. Buzan, 24 Ind. 194, it was said: “Thus, to whatever extent this court might err in denying the rightful authority of the law-making department, we should chain that authority, for a long period, at our feet. It is better and safer, therefore, that the judiciary, if err it must, should not err in that direction. If either department must overstep the limits of its constitutional power, it should be that whose official life will soonest end. It has the least motive to usurp power not given, and the people can sooner relieve themselves of its mistakes. This reasoning supplies grounds for sustaining the policy of distributing the power of settling contests for office, for, if that power is lodged in the legislature, the people can, at short and often recurring intervals, rebuke where rebuke is needed, and approve where approval is merited.”

Another reason given in support of the policy of placing contests for office under the jurisdiction of special tribunals is thus stated by the highest court of Kentucky: “The very purpose of providing these boards was to prevent the ordinary tribunals of justice from being harassed with the investigation, and being involved in the excitement to which these cases may be expected to give rise." Newcum v. Kirtley, 13 B. Mon. 515. This argument is not without force. The wider the separation between judicial questions and political ones the better, for courts should be kept, if possible, entirely beyond the domain of political controversies. But this is aside from our path, for it is not for the courts to judge of the strength or soundness of reasons which influenced the framers of the constitution to enact the provisions there written; it is quite enough for them to know that there was a reason and a purpose in the minds of the men who wrought the constitution of the commonwealth.

*606 The power of determining who is or who is not rightfully entitled to the chief executive offices of the state is, indeed, a very high one; and, if the courts have that power, then, as they do undoubtedly have it over all other offices except the legislative, they would have control over all offices save the legislative, and there was therefore at least some reason to doubt whether it was wise that they alone should wield a power of such great magnitude. It is, at all events, very evident that the makers of our constitution deemed it wise to limit the power of the courts by investing the general assembly with authority to decide all contests involving the title to the two principal executive offices of the state. These are certainly plausible, if not convincing, reasons for a distribution of the high power of determining titles to office, since, as has been shown, if it is left wholly in the courts, they are invested with the highest power in the government, and one that some have not hesitated to affirm is autocratic. It is, indeed, claiming very much for the courts to assume that they possess the supreme power to decide all contests involving titles to office; and it is evident that the framers of the constitution, regarding it as better to divide the power and limit the authority of the courts, placed all contests for the chief executive offices under the jurisdiction of the legislature. If it was not intended to take contests involving the title to the executive offices from the judiciary, there would have been no necessity for any specific provision upon the subject; and it cannot be inferred that the framers of so solemn an instrument as the constitution have done a vain and fruitless thing. But the provision is in the constitution, and it is there for a reason. Because it was deemed wise to divide the power, it was written: "Contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor shall be determined by the general assembly." The meaning of the word "contested" is neither doubtful nor obscure, as my Brother Niblack has shown, and as any one may see by turning to the works of the lexicographers. We are to interpret the constitution by assigning to the words employed their usual meaning. Chief Justice Marshall said: "The framers of the constitution, and the people who adopted it, must be understood to have employed words in their natural sense, and to have intended what they have said." Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 188. Judge Cooley says: "What a court has to do is to declare the law as it is written." Cooley, Const. Lim. 67.

The constitution vests in the general assembly sole and supreme jurisdiction over all disputes, controversies, or questions, whatsoever form or position they may assume, arising out of a contest for the office of governor or lieutenant governor. The authority is to decide all phases of the controversy, not some part or parcel of it. This is the plain import of the language employed, neither clouded by doubt, nor obscured by uncertainty. It is a settled principle that, where jurisdiction of a subject is conferred upon any tribunal, it has jurisdiction of every part of it, and of every question of law or fact that can possibly arise from the beginning to the end of the controversy. Once jurisdiction attaches, it exists for all purposes, all questions are within the authority of the tribunal, and no other tribunal in the world has a right to interfere with its decision except where there is a right of review or appeal. The rule rests on a solid foundation, for, if one tribunal might decide one part of a controversy, and another some other part, there would be a hopeless confusion that no power could clear away, and a disastrous conflict that no tribunal could reconcile. If it were conceded that the power to hear and determine contests involving the title to the office of lieutenant governor is purely a judicial power, it would not impair the force of the constitutional provision referred to; for it cannot be doubted that the people, in their sovereign capacity, and as the source of all power, may invest the legislature with pure judicial power. They have, indeed, done so in more instances than one. It is a mistake to assume that the constitution confers power upon the people, for the people's power is primary, original, inherent and supreme. Constitutions *607 limit, but do not create, power of the people. The constitution is the creature, not the creator, of the people's power. In many instances powers of a judicial nature are conferred upon the legislature, and it has always been held that, where such a power is conferred, it is exclusive and supreme. No other tribunal can share in its exercise, nor any court control it. People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 492; State v. Gilmore, 20 Kan. 551; State v. Tomlinson, Id. 692;

Dalton v. State, 43 Ohio St. 652; Smith v. Myers, and cases cited, 9 N. E. Rep. 692.

A high tribunal has been established by the constitution for the trial of contests involving the title to the offices of governor and lieutenant governor. That tribunal has all authority over the subject, or it has none. It is not possible to assume that it may decide some questions, but not all, without contravening the long-established rule that jurisdiction over the subject is jurisdiction over every question that can arise. The high tribunal provided by the constitution is the special one to which all questions in a dispute, contest, or controversy, involving the title to either of the executive offices, must be submitted. Where exclusive authority is vested in a special tribunal, courts have no jurisdiction to control, supervise, or review its decisions. In Wright v. Fawcett, 42 Tex. 203, it was said, in speaking of judicial power: "To decide the result of an election is a question of a different character; it is part of the process of political organization, and not a question of private right." Hulseman v. Rems, 41 Pa. St. 396; and see Arberry v. Beavers, 6 Tex. 469; Baker v. Chisholm, 3 Tex. 157; Walker v. Tarrant Co., 20 Tex. 16. Where the law has provided a mode of deciding cases of contested elections designed to be final, the courts have no authority to adjudicate such cases other than such as the law gives them. Batman v. Megowan, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 533; Grier v. Shackelford, 3 Brev. 491; Skerrett's Case, Brightly, Elect. Cas. 320; Ewing v. Filley, 43 Pa. St. 389. This principle is again asserted in Rogers v. Johns, 42 Tex. 339. It was decided in the case of State v. Harmon, 31 Ohio St. 250, that "the authority conferred on the senate to try contested elections is not a judicial power, within the meaning of the constitution." In State v. Marlow, 15 Ohio St. 114, a similar principle was declared, the court saying: "Jurisdiction being thus specially conferred upon other tribunals, and the mode of its exercise prescribed, it cannot be inferred that it was intended by the constitution to be differently exercised by a proceeding in quo warranto as at common law, or by the supreme or district courts under a mere general grant of jurisdiction in quo warranto." The constitution of Arkansas contains this provision: "Contested elections shall likewise be determined by both houses of the general assembly in such manner as is now, or may hereafter be, prescribed by law;" and the supreme court of that state held that a controversy between claimants to the office of governor must be determined by the legislature, the court saying: "Under this constitution, the determination of the question as to whether a person exercising the office of governor has been duly elected or not is vested exclusively in the general assembly of the state, and neither this nor any other court has jurisdiction to try a suit in relation to such contest, be the mode or form what it may, whether at the suit of the attorney general, or on the relation of a claimant through him, or by an individual alone, claiming a right to the office. Such issue should be made before the general assembly. It is their duty to decide, and no other tribunal can determine that question." State v. Baxter, 28 Ark. 129.

No contest, controversy, or dispute respecting the right to an office, can ever be determined without deciding both questions of law and fact. Every controversy of a legal nature involves two elements,—law and fact,—and a tribunal having jurisdiction over the subject must, of necessity, have power to decide both the law and the fact. Without this power, no progress could be made, and an adjudication would be impossible. The elements of law and *608 fact which enter into all controversies are so blended and interwoven as to be absolutely inseparable. The law is the arbiter, and the facts invoke its powers. Without law, there is no power to decide; for without it there would be no rule to determine the force and effect of the facts. On principle, it is plain that jurisdiction to hear and determine involves power to decide all questions of law and fact. But authority is not wanting. In Batman v. Megowan, supra, it was said, in speaking of a special tribunal, that "its decisions are final on all questions both of law and fact which may be involved in the investigation of the rights of the claimants to the office in contest." Courts unhesitatingly decide all questions, whether of law or of fact, in election contests, and, surely, what the courts may do the high constitutional tribunal composed of the law-makers of the commonwealth must do. It is not necessary to go through the cases, for, beginning with Waldo v. Wallace, 12 Ind. 569, it has been the uniform practice to decide all questions of law, the grave as well as the trifling, which the contest involves. This is the rule everywhere,—in the legislative halls, and in the courts. One of the many examples where congress decided a pure question of law was that of Gholson v. Clarborne, decided in 1837, where the question was, as here, the right to hold an election. Cong. Elect. Cas. 9. Howard v. Cooper is another illustration, for in that case the question was as to the validity of an election. In the case of Mr. Grafien, of Virginia, the question was purely one of law, and was as to the right to hold an election at the time Mr. Grafien claimed to have been elected. Id. 282, 465. Precedents are, however, not needed, for it cannot be conceived that power to determine a contest, dispute, or controversy means nothing more than authority to determine the facts.

A high tribunal has been designated by the people to determine all contests for the office of lieutenant governor. There the people have placed that great power, and there it must rest, until the people in their sovereign capacity shall change their constitution.

ZOLLARS, J.

When the questions here involved are examined, it is not at all surprising that the honorable gentlemen, parties to this litigation, have honestly differed as to their rights, and the proper method of having those rights settled. Nor is it at all strange that their able and learned counsel have also differed, both as to the rights, and the forum in which those rights are to be ascertained and settled. The novelty and importance of the questions involved, and the want of entire harmony upon each proposition, has seemed to render it proper for different members of the court to submit their individual views upon some of the questions about which there is a difference of opinion.

At the bottom of the controversy is the controlling question as to whether or not the election for lieutenant governor in November last was authorized by the constitution and statutes of the state. Upon that question the relator, Smith, seeks a decision by the court. That question, on the other hand, the respondent, Robertson, claims the court cannot decide, because it has not jurisdiction so to do—First, because it has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the controversy; and, second, because it has no jurisdiction over his person.

We are thus met in limine with the question of jurisdiction. Jurisdiction is not a question of propriety, policy, or choice, but one of power. Jurisdiction is the power to decide. When the question is made, the court must first examine and determine whether or not it has jurisdiction. When it is ascertained that it has not, both the power and the duty of the court are at an end. When a question is before a court for decision, it is its duty, without hope of commendation or fear of censure, to decide it. And when a court has once determined that it has not jurisdiction to decide and adjudicate, it should have the courage, without hope of commendation or the fear of censure, *609 to say so, and to refrain from the expression of an opinion that will be a mere dictum, and from making an adjudication that will bind no one. An opinion or an adjudication without jurisdiction is a mere brutum fulmen, not only not binding upon the parties to the suit, but which the humblest citizen of the state may disregard with impunity. Such adjudications might well tend to destroy that confidence which it is to be hoped the people have in the conservatism and integrity of the courts. The courts are the great conservators of organized society. If, by decisions extra judicial, or by thoughtless, biased, and unjust criticisms, the people shall utterly lose confidence in them, then, indeed, shall we be at the beginning of the end, when anarchy shall take the place of order.

The question of jurisdiction, as made here, is twofold. As I have said, it is insisted by the respondent, Robertson, that the Marion circuit court had not, and hence this court has not, jurisdiction over his person, he being a resident of Allen county. That he was and is a resident of Allen county, and not of Marion county, is admitted on all hands. After a careful examination of the question, we all agree that, by reason of his not being a resident of Marion county, the Marion circuit court did not have jurisdiction over his person. Upon that branch of the case I agree fully with what is said by Elliott, C. J. The respondent, Robertson, might have waived the point of the want of jurisdiction over his person. He did not do so. On the contrary, he insisted, and still insists, upon the objection. The courts cannot compel such a waiver. We have no reason to assume or presume that he will, in any event, change his attitude in that regard.

The novel and difficult branch of the question of jurisdiction which is before us for decision is as to whether or not the court had or has jurisdiction over the subject-matter; in other words, whether the court had or has the power to decide in this case, and as between the parties here litigant, the legality and constitutionality of the election for lieutenant governor in November last. That question has challenged the greatest research and the best thought of each one of us.

I agree with Judges Niblack and Elliott that in this case the court has not jurisdiction of the subject-matter. I do not, however, agree with all of the reasoning by which they reach that conclusion. Upon that question the arguments of counsel have taken a wide range, involving the structure of the state government, and the checks and balances as established by the constitution.

It is argued, on the one hand, that an adjudication by the courts of the questions here involved would be an unwarranted interference with, and an unwarranted infringement upon, the duties, functions, and prerogatives of the legislative department of the government by the judicial department. As applied simply to the judicial and legislative departments of the government, as such, the argument, in my judgment, is not sound. Article 3 of the constitution (Rev. St. 1881, § 96) is as follows: "The powers of the government are divided into three separate departments,—the legislative, the executive, including the administrative, and the judicial; and no person charged with official duties under one of these departments shall exercise any of the functions of another, except as in this constitution expressly provided." By section 16 of article 4 of the constitution (Rev. St. 1881, § 112) it is ordained that each house of the general assembly shall have all the powers necessary for a branch of the legislative department of a free and independent state. The primary object, and the proper functions of the legislative department of the government, as such, is not to settle controversies between citizens, nor to adjudicate upon their rights, whether those rights relate to private property or public office. The primary object of the department, and its proper function, is to determine upon policy, and to carry that policy, by legislation, into laws. In distinguishing between judicial and legislative acts, the United States supreme court in Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 761, said: "The one determines *610 what the law is, and what the rights of the parties are with reference to transactions already had; the other prescribes what the law should be in the future cases arising under it." So, in the case of Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 46, Chief Justice Marshall said: "The difference between the departments undoubtedly is that the legislative makes, the executive executes, and the judiciary construes, the laws." In speaking of the difference between a judicial and legislative act, the supreme court of Tennessee, in the case of Mabry v. Baxter, 11 Heisk. 690, said: "The one is a determination of what the existing law is, in relation to some existing thing already done or happened, while the other is a predetermination of what the law shall be for the regulation of all future cases falling under its provisions." As a member of and in the convention which framed our constitution, Judge Biddle said: "What is the legislative power? It is that power by and through which a state makes its laws. * * * The general assembly has no other duty or power than to make laws. After a law has been enacted, this department has no further power over the subject. It can neither adjudge the law, nor execute it." So far as the legislative department settles, or may settle, the state policy, it may properly be called the political department of the government.

The question upon which the relator, Smith, here seeks an adjudication, however, very clearly is neither a political nor a legislative question. It is not what ought to be done as a matter of state policy, nor what manner of laws ought to be passed for future cases, or as a rule of future action. It is purely a judicial question, involving the proper construction of the constitution, and the laws already in existence, upon the question of the term and the election of a lieutenant governor. It is therefore not a question that belongs to the legislative or political department of the government, as such.

If the legislature has authority, either concurrent or exclusive, to decide the question, it is not because it is in the legislative department of the government, but because provisions of the constitution and statutes, enacted in pursuance thereof, other than I have yet referred to, clothe that body with the extraordinary power, which is neither legislative nor political, but judicial. As we have seen, one of the co-ordinate branches of the government is the judicial. It is ordained by section 1 of article 7 of the constitution (Rev. St. 1881, § 161) that "the judicial power of the state shall be vested in a supreme court, in circuit courts, and in such other courts as the general assembly may establish." This is a general grant of all judicial power to the judicial department of the government, to the exclusion of the other departments, and, with appropriate legislation in pursuance of the grant, carries into the courts for final adjudication all judicial questions, unless there are other constitutional provisions lodging judicial power in certain cases elsewhere. The constitution is the people's. They made it, and they are sovereign. They had the right to lodge the judicial power of the government which they established wherever they saw fit; and if we shall find that, from the general grant of judicial power to the judicial department, they have, by the same constitution, carved out a certain portion as to certain cases, and lodged it elsewhere, there is no choice for the courts but to respect and to give force and effect to what they have done, whatever may have been the preconceived notion of the individual judges as to the existence or the propriety of such special grant.

Section 4 of article 5 of the constitution provides that "the returns of every election for governor and lieutenant governor shall be sealed up and transmitted to the seat of government, directed to the speaker of the house of representatives, who shall open and publish them in the presence of both houses of the general assembly." Section 5 of the same article provides that "the persons respectively having the highest number of votes for governor and lieutenant governor shall be elected; but, in case two or more persons shall have an equal and the highest number of votes for either office, the general assembly shall, by joint vote, forthwith proceed to elect one of the said persons *611 governor or lieutenant governor, as the case may be." Section 5521 of the statutes (Rev. St. 1881) provides that the governor and lieutenant governor shall each take an oath of office in the presence of both houses of the general assembly in convention, and that the same shall be entered upon the journals thereof. The two houses thus canvass the vote for governor and lieutenant governor, not because they constitute the legislative department of the government, nor because the duties are legislative, but because the constitution imposes the duty, and clothes them with the power in the way of a special grant. In my judgment, by the constitution, the two houses are constituted a special tribunal, in the nature of a board of canvassers, to open and publish the returns of the votes for governor and lieutenant governor. And I do not think that the grant is any broader simply because it is to the two houses. I think that, in the same words, the grant would have carried with it just as much authority had it been to the state officers, constituting them a special tribunal to canvass the votes for governor and lieutenant governor, and to make a record of the result. Would such a grant constitute the state officers a judicial tribunal in such a sense as that their determination upon the returns before them would be conclusive as to the validity of the election, and as to the election of the person declared elected governor or lieutenant governor? It is not the publishing of the votes by the speaker of the house, nor his declaration of the result, that makes the persons voted for governor or lieutenant governor, but the number of votes received. So the constitution declares.

Does the grant of power to the two houses to publish the returns, and declare the result, constitute them a judicial tribunal in such a sense as that their determination and declaration upon the returns before them are conclusive as to the validity of the election, and as to the election of the persons declared to be elected? I think not. I think that the action of the two houses in publishing the returns and in declaring the results is purely ministerial. They declare the result upon the returns before them, but back of that there may be a sufficient number of illegal votes to change the result, and the majority candidate may be ineligible.

No authority seems to be given to the two houses, when thus in joint convention, to summon the interested parties before them, to send for or to examine witnesses as to the illegality of votes, or as to the ineligibility of the persons voted for.

In the state of Wisconsin, the attorney general, the secretary of state, and the state treasurer were, by statute, constituted a board of state canvassers. As such a board, they had the authority, and it was made their duty, "upon the statements of elections made by the board of county canvassers, to examine and make a statement of the whole number of votes cast at any such elections for the offices of governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, etc., to certify such statements to be correct, and thereupon determine the result." It was held by the supreme court of that state that the duties were not judicial, but purely ministerial. Attorney General v. Barstov, 4 Wis. 567, (812.) In that case the proceeding was an information in the nature of quo warranto to oust from the office a person who was claiming to be governor by virtue of an election, and who had been declared elected by the board of state canvassers. It was contended by Mr. Carpenter, with great ability, learning, and research, that the suit could not be maintained—First, because the determination of the board of state canvassers was final; and, second, because it would be an unwarranted interference with the executive department by the judicial department of the government. The argument was answered by the court's holding that the board was not a judicial tribunal, and that the proceedings were not to affect the executive department, but to oust a person who had wrongfully intruded into the office of the chief executive. See the comments of Cooley on that case. Cooley, Const. Lim. (2d. Ed.) 264. See, to the same effect, also, Dickey v. Reed, 78 Ill. 261; Gass v. State, 34 Ind. 425.

*612 Clearly, a proceeding by information against a usurper into an executive office is not an encroachment upon the executive department of the government. It has been frequently held by this court that the judiciary may control executive action as to matters purely ministerial. The Governor v. Nelson, 6 Ind. 496; Biddle v. Willard, 10 Ind. 62; Baker v. Kirk, 33 Ind. 517; Gray v. State, 72 Ind. 567, (577.) And yet this court has steadily maintained the independence of the co-ordinate departments of the government, refusing to yield its jurisdiction, and refusing to exercise functions belonging to the legislative or executive departments. La Fayette, M. & B. R. Co. v. Geiger, 34 Ind. 185, (196); Butler v. State, 97 Ind. 373;

Johnston v. Board, etc., 107 Ind. 15, (24,) 8 N. E. Rep. 1, and cases there cited; Columbus, etc., Ry. Co. v. Board, etc., 65 Ind. 427; Shoultz v. McPheeters, 79 Ind. 373.

The record of the canvass by the two houses of the declaration of the result and of the oath is doubtless prima facie evidence of the elections of the persons declared to be elected governor or lieutenant governor, just as the certificate of election and the commission issued to other officers are prima facie evidence of their election. In a collateral proceeding, such record is doubtless conclusive evidence of the election, but it is not conclusive in a direct proceeding, authorized by the constitution and laws, and especially is it not conclusive as to whether or not there was a valid election under the constitution and laws. As to the force of decisions by boards of canvassers and of certificates of elections and commissions, see Cooley, Const. Lim. (2d Ed.) 623; State v. Shay, 101 Ind. 36; O'Ferrall v. Colby, 2 Minn. 180, (Gil. 148:); Prince v. Skillin, 71 Me. 361.

If the constitution contained no provision upon the subject under discussion other than those so far examined, I am satisfied that a claimant for the office of governor or lieutenant governor would have a right, under existing statutes, to go into the courts and contest the validity of the election of the person declared elected by the two houses. And especially am I satisfied that the law officers of the state, moving in behalf of the people, would have such a right. McCrary, Elect. (2d Ed.) § 264. Each house is the judge, and the exclusive judge, of the election and qualification of its members. That right they get partially from the constitution, and partially from the usages and laws of parliamentary bodies. But the right thus acquired has no application to the lieutenant governor, because he is not a member of either house. The constitution assigns to him certain duties as president of the senate, but that does not make him a senator, nor a member of the body, in such sense as that the senate may pass upon his election and qualification as a member. See Winter v. Thistlewood, 101 Ill. 450.

There is, however, another provision of the constitution which, in my judgment, enlightened by much research, and the best thought I have been able to give to the subject, is controlling and conclusive against the right of the relator, Smith, to maintain this action. The conclusion which I have been constrained to reach, I may say, is not in accord with my first impressions. The provision of the constitution to which I refer is section 6 of article 5, (Rev.

St. 1881, § 132,) and is as follows: "Contested elections for governor or lieutenant governor shall be determined by the general assembly in such manner as may be prescribed by law." That section, without doubt in my mind, invests the general assembly with judicial power to hear and determine contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor; and to the extent, and no further, that such powers are thereby granted, they diminish the general grant of judicial powers to the judicial department proper. The clause, "in such manner as may be prescribed by law," has no reference to the grant of power. It neither enlarges nor lessens the grant. It has reference only to the manner or mode of executing the powers granted. The power thus granted to the general assembly cannot be augmented or abridged by legislation, nor by a failure of legislation. The statute provides that the election of any person *613 declared elected by popular vote to a state office may be contested by any elector who was entitled to vote for such person. It also provides that such contest shall be tried before a committee of seven chosen from each house of the general assembly; that the committee shall report their judgment in the premises to both branches of the general assembly; that it shall be entered upon the journals of the respective houses, and shall be conclusive. Rev. St. 1881, § 4746 et seq. Section 4756 of the statute specifies certain causes as grounds of contest. That the election was without constitutional and statutory authority is not specified as one of such causes.

If, however, in the case before us, the election for lieutenant governor in November last was without constitutional authority, the respondent, Robertson, has no right to the office. The infirmity in his title to the office, in such case, would arise out of the invalidity of the election; and as such invalidity, if it exists, is to be determined by an examination of the constitution and the statutes, I think it might be assigned as a cause of contest, although it is not specifically named in the above section of the statute as such cause.

But, as said by Niblack, J., to concede that the invalidity of the election is not specified in the statute as a cause of contest, and that to be made available it must be there specified, would not change the matter. The constitution creates the general assembly the exclusive tribunal for the determination of contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor. It remains such exclusive tribunal, whatever be the character of the legislation as to causes and mode of procedure, or whether there is any legislation at all upon the subject. The jurisdiction of that tribunal, being established by the constitution, cannot, as I have said, be changed by legislative enactment. The statute, as we have seen, establishes the general assembly a tribunal for the trial and determination of contested elections for other state offices. The jurisdiction to try contested elections for such other offices, being conferred by statute, may be limited by the statutes which confer it, or by other statutes. As to such contests, the statutes may confer upon the courts concurrent jurisdiction in a like or different mode of procedure. That, as we shall see, has been done in this state.

It is argued by counsel that the case before us, instituted by the relator, Smith, is not a case of contested election, nor in the nature of such a proceeding. Clearly this is a contest over an office. The relator asserts his rights as president of the senate, and seeks to have those rights settled in this contest with the respondent. He asserts that the respondent was elected lieutenant governor at a general election in November last, but is not lieutenant governor, because that election was without authority. His success, upon his theory, depends upon the question as to whether or not that election was valid or invalid. The respondent, as stated in the complaint, claims that by virtue of that election he is lieutenant governor, and, as such, entitled to preside over the senate. That claim the relator contests; or, to use the definition of the word "contest," that claim he "calls in question," "contends against," "controverts," "disputes," "opposes," "resists," and seeks to "litigate" in this proceeding. He is "calling in question," "contending against," "controverting," "disputing," "resisting," "contesting," the election of the respondent to the office of lieutenant governor. To say that the election through which the respondent claims was without authority, that for that reason there was no election in the eye of the law, and that, therefore, the relator is not contesting, or seeking to contest, an election, will not do. Whether or not there was a valid election is the very question in contest. The relator's complaint shows that the respondent is claiming to have been elected lieutenant governor at the last general state election; that that election was in all regards conducted according to the forms of law, and that the respondent received a majority of the votes cast for lieutenant governor. His election to the office, however, is disputed, contested, on the ground that the election *614 for lieutenant governor was without authority,—in violation of the constitution.

An examination of the statutes under which this proceeding was instituted will show that the proceeding is and must be a contest for an office, and that, when an election is involved, a contest of that election. So far as material here, that statute is as follows:

"Sec. 1131, Rev. St. 1881. An information may be filed against any person * * * in the following cases: First, when any person shall usurp, intrude into, or unlawfully hold or exercise any public office, or any franchise within this state, or any office in any corporation created by the authority of this state. .

Sec. 1132. The information may be filed by the prosecuting attorney in the circuit court of the proper county, upon his own relation, whenever he shall deem it his duty to do so, or shall be directed by the court or other competent authority, or by any other person on his own relation, whenever he claims an interest in the office, franchise, or corporation which is the subject of the information."

"Sec. 1134. Whenever an information shall be filed against a person for usurping an office by the prosecuting attorney, he shall also set forth therein the name of the person rightfully entitled to the office, with an averment of his right thereto; and, when filed by any other person, he shall show his interest in the matter, and he may claim the damages he has sustained."

"Sec. 1136. In every case contesting the right to an office, judgment shall be rendered upon the rights of the parties, and for the damages the relator may show himself entitled to, if any," etc.

"Sec. 1137. If judgment be rendered in favor of the relator, he shall proceed to exercise the functions of the office after he has been qualified as required by law; and the court shall order the defendant to deliver over all books," etc.

"Sec. 1141. Whenever any person shall be found guilty of any usurpation of or intrusion into or unlawfully exercising any office * * * within this state, * * * the court shall give judgment of ouster against the defendant, and exclude him from the office," etc.

"Sec. 1144. When an information is filed by the prosecuting attorney, he shall not be liable for costs; but, when it is filed upon the relation of a private person, he shall be liable for costs, unless the same are adjudged against the defendant."

There are no italics in the above statutes as printed. They are used here to direct attention to certain portions which I regard as important in the case. Under that statute, when any person shall intrude, etc., into a public office, an information may be filed by the prosecuting attorney upon his own relation, or by any other person, "whenever he claims an interest in the office." He must show his interest in the office. "In every case contesting the right to an office," judgment shall be rendered "upon the rights of the parties." "If judgment be rendered in favor of the relator, he shall proceed to exercise the functions of the office." Other statutes provide for contesting elections for county, township, and city offices. In some instances, special tribunals are created. These statutes also prescribe a mode of procedure. Rev. St. 1881, § 4768 et seq.

The tribunals thus created, as well as the tribunal for the determination of contests in the case of state offices other than governor and lieutenant governor, are statutory, and, as I have said, the authority which created them may give the courts concurrent jurisdiction. It has often been contended in this state that the special and statutory tribunals for the determination of contested elections have exclusive jurisdiction, and that such contests cannot be determined in a proceeding by information. The contention has always been disregarded, and it has been held that the election of all officers (except for governor and lieutenant governor, as to which there has been no adjudication) *615 may be contested and determined in a proceeding by information. Those holdings were rested upon the ground that the tribunals for the trial of such contests were statutory, and not constitutional, such as the tribunal established by the constitution for the determination of contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor. It has uniformly been held, too, that in order that a private person may prosecute a proceeding by information, he must show that he has an interest in the office. When he has shown this he may, in that proceeding, contest the election of the adverse claimant, if he claims through an election. And when the claim of the adverse claimant is that he is entitled to the office by virtue of an election, the contest waged by the relator, although in the form of a proceeding by information, is, in every practical sense of the term, a contest of an election. The election relied upon by the adversary in such case is contested, and, for all practical purposes, the proceeding is one of contested election. See State v. Shay, 101 Ind. 36, and cases there cited; State v. Adams, 65 Ind. 393. In the case last above it was said: "This court has frequently held that the right to an office may be contested by an information during the time the statute for contesting elections was in force." See, also, Reynolds v. State, 61 Ind. 393; State v.

Gallagher, 81 Ind. 558; Elam v. State, 75 Ind. 518; Gass v. State, 34 Ind. 425.

It is not necessary to a contested election that both parties to the contest shall have been voted for at the contest. Any citizen qualified to vote at the election may be a contestor. Rev. St. 1881, § 4743. We must judge of the nature of the relator's case by the facts he states in his complaint. He does not claim to be lieutenant governor, but he does claim that, as president pro tempore of the senate, he has the right to perform the duties which belong to the office of lieutenant governor. To that extent he claims to have an interest and right in the office of lieutenant governor. That right he asserts against the respondent; and, as I have said, he shows in this complaint that the respondent received the majority of the votes of the electors of the state at the general election in November last for the office of lieutenant governor; that the election was in all things regular; and that the respondent claims to have been and was elected to that office, if the election was authorized by the constitution. He contests the respondent's claim upon the ground that the election was invalid, being without constitutional sanction. He contests the election. The controversy is purely a private one between the relator and the respondent. The end sought is an adjudication that the respondent was not elected lieutenant governor, and hence is not entitled to preside as president of the senate, and that therefore the relator is entitled to preside as president of the senate, having been duly elected to that position. This is not a case where there has been no election at all. Whatever may be said as to the constitutionality of the election, the respondent comes into the contest through an election at which all the people voted. Although not in name, in my judgment this is a proceeding to contest the election of the respondent to the office of lieutenant governor. The relator is thus waging a contest in the courts which by the constitution belongs exclusively to another forum. It must be waged and settled before the general assembly. That tribunal alone has jurisdiction of the subject-matter. It has exclusive jurisdiction, too, over everything that pertains to the controversy, both of law and fact. See People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481.

There is no partition of the jurisdiction, giving to the general assembly authority to determine the questions of fact, and to the courts authority to determine the law in the same case. If the tribunal created to determine contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor were established by statute, and not by the constitution, the relator might avail himself of the proceeding by information, as here attempted. The tribunal being established by the constitution, he must seek his remedy in that tribunal. This conclusion *616 is fully sustained by the authorities cited by Elliott, C. J., and which I need not cite here at length. State v. Baxter, 28 Ark. 129; Baxter v. Brooks, 29 Ark. 173.

It has been held in some of the states that, when special tribunals are established by statute for the determination of contested elections, their jurisdiction is exclusive, as against any proceeding by information in the courts on the part of a claimant to the office. Com. v. Baxter, 35 Pa. St. 263; Com. v. Leech, 44 Pa. St. 332; State v. Marlow, 15 Ohio St. 114.

It does not result from the holding that the courts have not jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this controversy, that the parties are without remedy. They have open to them the tribunal ordained by the constitution of the state. It ought to be presumed that that tribunal is a capable and impartial one. The fathers had sufficient faith in it to establish it. We must respect their work, and trust it. Possibly it might have been better to have lodged in the judicial department of the government the jurisdiction to try contests involving the chief executive officers of the state. However that may be, we must take the constitution as we have received it, and yield obedience to its several provisions until they may be changed, if change is desirable. What I have said in the foregoing is with strict reference to the precise case before us.

Where there has in fact been an election, as in the case before us, and one of two persons claim an office through such an election, and another, disputing such an election, claims an interest in the same office, or its duties and emoluments, they must settle that contest in the tribunal established by the constitution, and cannot settle it in the courts in a proceeding by information. When we have determined that the court below was without jurisdiction, we have determined that its orders and judgments, whatever they were, must be reversed. I do not say that in no case can the courts in a proceeding by information in the nature of quo warranto, upon the relation of the proper law officer, oust from the office of governor or lieutenant governor a wrongful intruder and usurper. That question is not before us. I may add that there is a very marked difference between a proceeding by information, instituted by private persons, and a proceeding by information in the nature of quo warranto upon the relation of a public prosecuting attorney. In the one case the private person seeks to settle and protect private rights in a public office; in the other, the officer moves in behalf of the sovereign people. See the following cases: Reynolds v. State, 61 Ind. 393, (403); People v. Holden, 28 Cal. 128; Com. v. Burrell, 7 Pa. St. 34; Hesing v. Attorney General, 104 Ill. 292; Vogel v. State, 107 Ind. 374, 8 N. E. Rep. 164.

No. 6330.

**558 Syllabus by the Court.*

1. Section 87 of the Constitution conferring original jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court to issue writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, quo warranto, certiorari, and injunction expressly provides that: "No jury trial shall be allowed in said supreme court, but in proper cases questions of fact may be sent by said court to the district court for trial."

2. Under the pleadings in this proceeding there is an issue of fact involved properly triable to a jury.

3. Where a question of fact properly triable to a jury arises in an original proceeding in quo warranto in the Supreme Court, and it appears that conditions exist which make it practically impossible to secure a trial jury, and where the parties to the proceeding waive a trial by jury and ask the *559 Supreme Court to try the question itself, and it appears that the ends of justice so require, the court will hear and determine such question.

4. Under section 73 of the Constitution, no person is qualified for the office of Governor of North Dakota who has not resided within the state for the five years next preceding his election.

5. The term "resided," in section 73 of the Constitution, means having had a residence, as defined by section 14, Comp. Laws 1913.

6. Every person has in law a residence where such person remains when not called elsewhere for labor or special or temporary purpose, and to which he returns in seasons of repose. Such person can have but one residence which he cannot lose until another is gained. Leaving his place of residence is not an abandonment unless he establishes another, and a new residence can be established only by the union of act and intent.

7. Where a person having legal residence in North Dakota removes to Minnesota, and there lives with his family in the same apartment for a period of approximately twenty months, and during such time registers as a voter as required by the laws of Minnesota, votes at the primary and general elections, and exercises the rights of a citizen of Minnesota, it is held, for reasons stated in the opinion, that he acquires a legal residence in Minnesota, notwithstanding his intention to return to North Dakota at some indefinite time in the future.

8. Section 72 of the Constitution, providing that the powers and duties of the office of Governor devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor in case of the disability of the Governor, does not differentiate between a disability existing before election and one occurring after election.

9. In event of the disqualification of the Governor elect, the election and qualification of the Lieutenant Governor supplies a successor to the former Governor or Acting Governor, and the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of the term for which the disqualified Governor elect was chosen.

Original application in the Supreme Court for writ of quo warranto by the State, on the relation of P. O. Sathre, Attorney General, against Thomas H. Moodie and another.

Writ granted.

BURKE, Chief Justice.

[1] This is an original proceeding in quo warranto instituted in this court upon the application of the Attorney General. It involves the title to the office of Governor. In the information it is alleged that the respondent Thomas H. Moodie received a majority of the votes cast at the last general election for the office of Governor; that a certificate of election was duly issued to him, and that he has qualified and entered upon the discharge of his duties as Governor; and that the respondent, Walter Welford, at the same election, was elected Lieutenant Governor, and that he has duly qualified as such officer. It is further alleged in the information that the said respondent, Thomas H. Moodie, did not possess the qualifications prescribed by section 73 of the State Constitution, and that he is ineligible to the office of Governor in this: (1) That he is not a citizen of the United States; and (2) that he had not "resided five years next preceding the election within the state."

The respondent Moodie filed a return wherein he denied the averments of the information and asserted that he was and is a citizen of the United States, and that he had resided within North Dakota the five years next preceding said general election, and, hence, possesses the qualifications which the Constitution prescribes for the incumbent of the office of Governor.

The pleadings in the case presented questions of fact properly triable to a jury. This court, therefore, entered an order that:

"Whereas, in the above entitled action there are presented issues of fact which are properly triable to a jury,

And whereas, the provision of the constitution (North Dakota Constitution, § 87) conferring original jurisdiction upon the supreme court expressly provides that 'no jury shall be allowed in the Supreme Court but in proper cases questions of fact may be sent by said court to the district court for trial.' * * *

It is ordered:

1. That the issues of fact in this case be sent to the district court of Ramsey County for trial; that such issues of fact be tried to a jury, unless the parties expressly waive trial by jury, and the trial judge accepts *560 such waiver and determines to try the case without a jury.

2. That the Hon. C. W. Buttz, one of the judges of the Second Judicial District of North Dakota, whose chambers are located in said Ramsey County, be and he hereby is designated as the judge to preside at the trial of said action."

On January 21, 1935, Judge Buttz made the following report to this court: "January 7, 1935, Supreme Court made order in this case that issues of fact be sent District Court Ramsey County for trial designating me judge to preside at trial. I was notified of entry of order on same day. Shortly thereafter was informed that Attorney General might file application for change of place of trial. On same day I communicated with him requesting if such application were made it be presented promptly so that case might be tried as expeditiously as possible. In order to cause as little inconvenience as possible and to expedite disposition of case I arranged for hearing the application for change of place of trial and conference with counsel for respective parties before January 14th. They were unable to agree. At that time counsel for both sides present at Fargo and application for change of place of trial was submitted by attorney general. Conformable to usual practice gave the opposing side opportunity until Saturday night submit rebutting affidavits. At that time had not the slightest doubt that it would be possible to obtain fair and impartial jury either in Ramsey county or in any other county to which case might be transferred, if a change of place of trial were ordered. Both sides and myself have honestly tried to expedite trial. Not a moment was wasted. Careful consideration has led me to conclusion that county chosen by Supreme Court, namely Ramsey, is probably most impartial county and, consequently, I denied application for change of venue as it appeared to me that in all circumstances there is greater probability of obtaining a fair and impartial jury in Ramsey County than in any other county in state. However recently addresses have been broadcast over radio purporting to discuss not only all facts in case but procedure adopted. In many instances in such manner as to tend to discredit decision that may ultimately be reached. In similar instances discussions have appeared in press. According to press House of Representatives have discussed and passed resolutions looking toward impeachment of Governor Moodie for same reasons and grounds that are involved in this action. According to statements in press communications have been sent to members of legislative assembly from practically every section of state expressing opinions on very issues involved in this case. In short, there has been developed such intense feeling dissension and turmoil as to render it difficult if not impossible to obtain fair and impartial jury in any county of state. In my opinion there is greatest likelihood that no jury would agree upon verdict; great probability is that disagreement will result. In short, it is my deliberate judgment that the conditions which have been brought about in this state the past week makes it highly probable that an attempt to try case to a jury would be wholly futile and merely involve needless expense and tend to prolong present state of uncertainty and turmoil. Therefore, am of opinion that ends of justice will be best served if case be returned to Supreme Court for final disposition."

Immediately after this report had been received by this court, counsel for the respective parties were informed and directed to appear. They did so appear. The report was duly considered, and in open court counsel for the respective parties announced that they fully acquiesced in the report and that they waived trial by jury and requested the Supreme Court to try all issues in the case, both of law and of fact. The question, therefore, presented itself whether in the circumstances this court should try and determine the issues of fact in the case.

[2] The primary function of this court is to exercise appellate jurisdiction; that is, to review on appeal the decisions rendered in the trial courts. Section 86 of the State Constitution expressly so provides. It says that, except as otherwise provided in the Constitution, the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction only. In addition to the appellate jurisdiction the Constitution grants to the Supreme Court a general superintending control over all inferior courts; and it also grants to the Supreme Court original and prerogative jurisdiction "to issue writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, quo warranto, certiorari, injunction and such other original and remedial writs as may be necessary to the proper exercise of its jurisdiction," and authorizes the court to hear and determine the same. North Dakota Constitution, § 87. But the section of the Constitution which grants this power specifically outlines the procedure to be employed by the court in carrying it into effect. *561 It says that in all original proceedings "no jury trial shall be allowed in said supreme court, but in proper cases questions of fact may be sent by said court to a district court for trial." North Dakota Constitution, § 87.

Before the North Dakota Constitution was adopted, perplexing questions had arisen in other states as regards the right of trial by jury of questions of fact in quo warranto proceedings brought directly in the Supreme Court. In Wisconsin and Kansas it had been found necessary to impanel a jury in the Supreme Court for the purpose of trying questions similar to those involved in this case. State v. Messmore, 14 Wis. 125; State v. Allen, 5 Kan. 213; State v. Foster, 32 Kan. 14, 3 P. 534. In a quo warranto proceeding brought in the Supreme Court of Michigan, that court had referred the case to a circuit court for trial, the refusal of the lower court to try the case to a jury was held to be error, and it was said that it was not within the power of the Supreme Court to deprive a party of the right of trial by jury. People v. Doesburg, 16 Mich. 133. The provisions of the Constitutions of Wisconsin, Michigan, and Kansas, conferring original jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court, were quite similar to those of the Constitution of North Dakota, but in none of those Constitutions was there a provision similar to that in section 87 of the North Dakota Constitution: "No jury trial shall be allowed in said supreme court, but in proper cases questions of fact may be sent by said court to a district court for trial."

This is the first time in the history of this court that it has been confronted with the trial and determination of disputed questions of fact in a quo warranto proceeding instituted in this court. In all other quo warranto proceedings that have been instituted directly in this court no questions of fact were presented. And, so far as we can ascertain, during the entire history of the state there have been presented to this court for determination only two controversies involving title to an elective state office.

The first case involved the office of state superintendent of public instruction, and arose following the general election of 1918. At that election one Minnie J. Nielson received the highest number of votes for that office. A certificate of election was issued, and she duly qualified. But the incumbent, N. C. McDonald, refused to turn the office over to her. The Attorney General applied to this court for a writ of mandamus to compel the office to be surrendered to Miss Nielson. The incumbent, McDonald, sought to assert, among other defenses, that Miss Nielson did not possess the prescribed legal qualifications, and that, consequently, he was entitled to continue in office. This court held that the certificate of election issued to Miss Nielson was prima facie evidence of title to the office; that such prima facie title could not be defeated in a mandamus proceeding by averments of fact involving the ultimate title to the office, and directed a writ of mandamus to be issued. Miss Nielson was accordingly placed in possession of the office. State v. McDonald, 41 N. D. 389, 170 N. W. 873. After that decision had been rendered, McDonald, the incumbent, made application to the Supreme Court for leave to institute an original proceeding in quo warranto in the Supreme Court. The Attorney General appeared in opposition to the application, pointed out that the proceeding involved a trial and determination of issues of fact, and contended that the relator should be required to institute action in the nature of quo warranto in the district court and try the issues there. This court denied the application for leave to institute an original proceeding in this court. The incumbent, McDonald, thereupon brought action in the district court, and the issues in the case were tried and determined there, and the controversy was brought to this court on appeal. McDonald v. Nielson, 43 N. D. 346, 175 N. W. 361.

The second controversy arose in 1934, and involved the question whether the Governor of the state had been placed under disability as a result of a conviction for felony so as to cause the duties and powers of the Governor's office to devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor. That case presented no question of fact. It presented questions of law only. State ex rel. Olson v. Langer (N. D.) 256 N. W. 377.

It seems entirely clear that the framers of the Constitution did not intend that the Supreme Court ordinarily should hear witnesses, and weigh their testimony, and try and determine disputed questions of fact, especially where such questions were of such nature as to be properly triable to a jury; but it was intended that when an issue of fact properly triable to a jury arose in a proceeding in the Supreme Court, such question should be sent to a district court for trial. In short, the procedure adopted in this case was in accord with the intent, spirit, and purpose of the Constitution. But in view of the existing conditions (which according to *562 the certificate of the trial judge arose after this court sent the case to the district court for trial we are agreed that this court not only may, but should, try the case.

The jurisdiction conferred upon this court by section 87 of the Constitution is a prerogative jurisdiction. This jurisdiction "is not only limited to the prerogative writs, but it is confined to prerogative causes." Attorney General v. Eau Claire. 37 Wis. 400, 443. The people of North Dakota in their Constitution conferred this great judicial power upon the Supreme Court that it might be used in their behalf for the assertion of sovereign rights and to protect and vindicate the prerogatives and franchises of the state and the liberties of the people. This principle was announced in the early history of the state, and has been steadfastly adhered to. State of North Dakota v. Nelson County, 1 N. D. 88, 45 N. W. 33, 8 L. R. A. 283, 26 Am. St. Rep. 609; State v. Archibald, 5 N. D. 359, 66 N. W. 234; State ex rel. Linde v. Taylor. 33 N. D. 76, 156 N. W. 561, L. R. A. 1918B, 156, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 583.

"The jurisdiction," said Chief Justice Morgan (State v. Fabrick, 17 N. D. 532, 536, 117 N. W. 860, 861), "is not to be exercised unless the interests of the state are directly affected. * * * The matters to be litigated must not only be publici juris, but the sovereignty of the state, or its franchises or prerogatives, or the liberties of its people, must be affected. * * * There must be presented matters of such strictly public concern as involve the sovereign rights of the state, or its franchises or privileges."

"This transcendent jurisdiction," said Chief Justice Winslow of Wisconsin (State ex rel. Bolens v. Frear, 148 Wis. 456, 134 N. W. 673, 686, L. R. A. 1915B, 569, 606, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1147), "is a jurisdiction reserved for the use of the state itself when it appears to be necessary to vindicate or protect its prerogatives or franchises or the liberties of its people. The state uses it to punish or prevent wrongs to itself or to the whole people. * * *"

The governmental power thus reserved, by the people for use by the state to protect, preserve, and vindicate the sovereign rights of the state and of the people may not be thwarted or rendered impotent because circumstances render it difficult or even impossible to pursue the ordinary methods of procedure. And where, as here, it is shown that conditions exist which render the usual and ordinary methods of procedure inapplicable, inadequate, or unavailing, other appropriate judicial means will be adopted so that the great ends for which the jurisdiction was reserved may not be defeated. Hence, inasmuch as in this case the usual and ordinary procedure was shown to be inadequate and ineffective, the court decided to try and determine all the issues in the case, both of law and of fact, directly in this court. Accordingly a trial was had at which evidence was adduced.

A written stipulation that Mr. Moodie is a citizen of the United States was filed leaving only the question of his constitutional qualification as to residence.

It is conceded that Thomas H. Moodie sold his newspaper at Mohall; that he left Mohall for Minneapolis, not intending to return to Mohall; that he arrived in Minneapolis in August, 1929; that he lived with his wife in Minneapolis until the 3d day of April, 1931, at 2545 Blaisdell avenue; that he registered as a voter and voted at the primary in June and at the general election in the fall; that his wife, with his knowledge, also, registered as a voter that year. But it is his contention that his residence in Minneapolis was temporary; that he went to Minneapolis because certain newspaper organizations in that city had information relating to papers in North Dakota which he, Moodie, might purchase, and while waiting for an opportunity to purchase he had temporary employment on the Tribune.

Mr. Moodie is a newspaper man. He practically grew up in a newspaper office and apparently there was no kind of work about a newspaper office that he did not know and could not do. He could set type, run a linotype machine, write editorials, political or otherwise. He apparently was a very versatile and industrious man. He worked on newspapers in Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth, Virginia, Bemidji, New Orleans, St. Louis, Langdon, Grand Forks, Fargo, Wahpeton, Ray, Long Beach, San Francisco, Mohall, Williston, Minot, Bismarck, and other cities. He apparently could drop into a city or town and go right to work in a newspaper office in some capacity. When he lived in a town or city long enough to entitle him to vote, he voted, and there never was any question about the legality of his vote or his right to cast the same.

[3] The term "resided," as used in the Constitution, means having had a legal residence; that is, a residence entitling one to vote or to hold office in the state of North Dakota. Residence is defined in section 14, Comp. Laws 1913, and the parts of section 14 which are *563 applicable to the facts in the instant case are as follows:

“§ 14. Every person has in law a residence. In determining the place of residence the following rules are to be observed:

1. It is the place where one remains when not called elsewhere for labor or other special or temporary purpose, and to which he returns in seasons of repose;
2. There can be only one residence;
3. A residence cannot be lost until another is gained; * * *
7. The residence can be changed only by the union of act and intent.”

[4] [5] In other words, every person has in law a residence where such person remains when not called elsewhere for labor or other special or temporary purpose and to which he returns in seasons of repose; that he can have but one residence, and the one residence to which he is entitled he cannot lose until another is gained; that is, leaving his place of residence is not an abandonment unless he establishes another, and a new residence can only be established by the union of act and intent; that is, there must be an actual change of residence, together with an intention to make such change.

[6] The sole question of fact in the case is, Did Thomas H. Moodie establish a legal residence in Minneapolis; that is, was there a union of act and intent to change the residence from Mohall, N. D., and establish it in Minneapolis, Minn.? The act of moving to Minneapolis from Mohall without any intention of returning to Mohall and the living in Minneapolis with his wife at 2545 Blaisdell avenue for a period of one year and nearly eight months are conceded, so that the question of fact is narrowed down to Mr. Moodie's intention.

Such questions have been many times in the courts, and the law for determining the intention is well settled.

In the case of Nelson v. Gass, 27 N. D. 357, 146 N. W. 537, 538, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 796, this court held: “The place of one's residence for the purpose of voting is where he has his established home, the place where he is habitually present, and to which, when he departs, he intends to return, and must be determined from all the facts and circumstances, and the intention must be accompanied by acts in harmony therewith.” Syllabus par. 9.

In the opinion the court said:

“A good-faith intent of a voter to make a place his home for all purposes is one essential element entering into the determination of the question of residence, and a domicile once gained does not continue until a new one is acquired for voting purposes, nor does a right to vote at a particular poll or district continue until the right to vote elsewhere is shown; but the shortest absence coincident with an intention to change the residence defeats the right to vote at the former domicile. Kreitz v. Behrensmeyer, 125 Ill. 141, 17 N. E. 232, 8 Am. St. Rep. 349.

* * * Berry v. Wilcox, 44 Neb. 82, 62 N. W. 249, and note in 48 Am. St. Rep. 712. The question of residence must be determined from all the facts and circumstances surrounding the person, as related to his residence, and the intention must be accompanied by acts in harmony with the declared intention, and, notwithstanding one may testify that his intention was to make his home in a certain place, if his acts are of a character to negative his declaration or inconsistent with it, it is clear that the court cannot be governed by his testimony as to intention.

In harmony with our views we quote briefly from State v. Savre, 129 Iowa, 122, 105 N. W. 387, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 455, 113 Am. St. Rep. 452: ‘A person cannot live in one place and by force of imagination constitute some other his place of abode. The intent and the fact, as already stated, must concur.’ * * * See, also, People v. Moir, 207 Ill. 180, 69 N. E. 905, 99 Am. St. Rep. 205; Gardner v. Board of Education, 5 Dak. 259, 38 N. W. 433; People v. Ellenbogen, 114 App. Div. 182, 99 N. Y. S. 897; Frost v. Brisbin, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 11 [32 Am. Dec. 423]; White v. Slama, 89 Neb. 65, 130 N. W. 978, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 518. In Widmayer v. Davis, 231 Ill. 42, 83 N. E. 87, 88, it was held that a man who lived for a year or more in a ward, but prior to an election moved away, and left clothing and kept the key of the house in which he had lived, so he might be entitled to vote, was not a qualified voter.”

In Shelton v. Tiffin, 6 How. 163, 185, 12 L. Ed. 387, the court said: “On a change of domicile from one State to another, citizenship may depend upon the intention of the individual. But this intention may be shown more satisfactorily by acts than declarations.”

In The Venus, 8 Cranch, 253, 279, 3 L. Ed. 562, it is said: “If it sufficiently appear that the intention of removing was to make a permanent settlement, or for an indefinite time, the right of domicil is acquired.”

In the case of State v. Stoelting, 53 N. D. 736, 208 N. W. 101, 103, this court said: “While registering and voting in a particular place is not conclusive, it is strong circumstantial *564 proof of residence.” This statement of the law is supported by the great weight of authority. The fact of voting is not conclusive, but it is a strong circumstance which indicates the intention of the voter to cast a legal vote.

The case of Kadlec v. Pavik, 9 N. D. 278, 83 N. W. 5, was an election contest. It was claimed that one Jarus was foreign-born; that he came to this country about ten years before the election was held and when he was about twenty years old. There was no evidence to show that he had ever denationalized himself. He lived in Walsh county for seven or eight years before this election was held. The contestant showed these facts and then showed that the records of Walsh county failed to show that he had ever declared his intention to become a citizen of this country or received his final naturalization papers. From these facts the trial court concluded that a legal presumption arose that Jarus was not a legal voter, and this court said: “It is a case that rests largely upon presumptions. The alienage being shown, it is presumed to continue until evidence to the contrary is shown. Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483, 25 L. Ed. 628. But, when it is shown that the party has cast a vote in this country, then this presumption disappears, and the opposite presumption prevails, because the law will not presume that a party has committed an unlawful act. Gumm v. Hubbard, 97 Mo. 311, 11 S. W. 61 [10 Am. St. Rep. 312].”

In that case it was shown that Jarus was foreign-born and the presumption of law that this condition continued until the contrary was shown was overcome by the presumption of law that the vote cast was a legal vote. The same presumption applies to the vote cast by Mr. Moodie at the primary election and the general election which followed in Minneapolis; that is, the presumption is that his voting in Minneapolis was legal. An examination of the authorities will show that the law, as stated by Judge Spalding (Nelson v. Gass, supra), for determining residence is supported by the great weight of authority, and it is entirely unnecessary to cite the authorities at length. But see Pacific Mutual Ins. Co. v. Tompkins, 101 F. 539, 41 C. C. A. 488; Tuttle v. Wood, 115 Iowa, 507, 88 N. W. 1056; Hairston v. Hairston, 27 Miss. 704, 61 Am.

“By the use of the word “intention” in the statute it is reasonably clear the legislature did not mean an undefined or undefinable purpose on the part of the voter to return to his former residence at some unknown time during the course of his life. To entertain a doubtful, vague, or equivocal purpose to return does not prove the fact of “intention” as used in the statute, when reasonably construed in view of the legislative object and the general law on the subject of domicile. That a person may live in one voting district and do business there and at the same time retain a right to vote in another district is undoubtedly true; but the right depends upon a reasonable intention to resume his former home and to rebut the presumption that he had abandoned it.” Kennan on Residence and Domicile, § 500, quoting from Felker v. Henderson, 78 N. H. 509, 102 A. 623, L. R. A. 1918E, 510.

“The difficulties which are met with in connection with this question are due not so much to any obscurity or uncertainty in the law as to the infinite variety of facts and circumstances which have to be considered in its application to individual cases. In every case of change of domicile there are three essential elements which must concur, viz:

First. A definite abandonment of the former domicile.

Second. Actual removal to, and physical presence in the new domicile.

Third. A bona fide intention to change and to remain in the new domicile permanently or for an indefinite time.

Nothing is better settled in the law of domicile than that every change must be facto et animo—in fact and intent. It is also elementary that every man must have a domicile somewhere, that the presumption is against a change of domicile and that the burden of proof rests upon the one alleging a change of domicile.” Kennan on Residence and Domicile, § 92. Putnam v. Johnson, 10 Mass. 488; Wharton, Conflict of Laws, § 58; Sleeper v. Paige, 15 Gray (Mass.) 349.

"A person's residence is the place of his domicile, or place where his habitation is fixed without any present intention of removing therefrom. The words 'inhabitant,' 'citizen,' and 'resident,' as employed in different constitutions to define the qualifications of electors mean substantially the same thing; and one is an inhabitant, resident, or citizen at the place where he has his domicile *565 or home. Every person at all times must be considered as having a domicile somewhere, and that which he has acquired at one place is considered as continuing until another is acquired at a different place." Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, p. 1365; People v. Turpin, 49 Colo. 234, 112 P. 539, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 766, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 724; Welsh v. Shumway, 232 Ill. 54, 83 N. E. 549; Elam v. Maggard, 165 Ky. 733, 178 S. W. 1065; Carwile v. Jones, 38 Mont. 590, 101 P. 153; In re Rooney, 172 App. Div. 274, 159 N. Y. S. 132; Finn v. Bd. of Canvassers, 24 R. I. 482, 53 A. 633; Clarke v. McCowan, 107 S. C. 209, 92 S. E. 479; Seibold v. Wahl, 164 Wis. 82, 159 N. W. 546, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 400.

In the case of In re Rooney, 172 App. Div. 274, 159 N. Y. S. 132, 133, the court said:

"There is no suggestion that any one of these men intended to commit a crime; they have acted in entire good faith, believing that they had a right to determine for themselves their voting residences, as distinguished from their homes, based upon some popular impressions which have found their justification in the determination of the court in People v. Platt, 117 N. Y. 159, 22 N. E. 937. * * *

It is true, of course, that a person may have two or more residences, as distinguished from a domicile (Bischoff v. Bischoff, 88 App. Div. 126, 85 N. Y. S. 81, and authorities there cited); but the word 'residence' or 'resident,' when used in the Constitution, or in statutes relating to the subject of voting and eligibility to office, jurisdiction in divorce, probate, and administration, etc., is in nearly every case synonymous with 'domicile.' Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Ives [Sup.] 3 N. Y. S. 895, and authorities there cited; Bell v. Pierce, 51 N. Y. 12, 17; Barney v. Oelrichs, 138 U. S. 529, 532, 11 S. Ct. 414, 34 L. Ed. 1037; De Meli v. De Meli, 120 N. Y. 485, 491, 24 N. E. 996, 17 Am. St. Rep. 652."

Now, what are the facts to which this law must be applied? Thomas H. Moodie was practically all his life engaged in the newspaper business. He was a legal resident of Mohall, N. D., in July, 1929, when he sold his newspaper and wrote and published a beautiful farewell message to its patrons and the citizens generally of Mohall, expressing many fine and beautiful sentiments of good will and concluding with a statement that his future was indefinite. He stored part of his furniture in Mohall and part of it at Minot, N. D., went with his wife to Minneapolis, and took up a residence in an apartment at 2545 Blaisdell avenue, where he remained for a period of one year and nearly eight months. During that time, and after he had been at this place for a period which lawfully entitled him to vote, he registered as a voter as required by the laws of the state of Minnesota, voting at the primary and at the general election in the fall for state and county officers in the state of Minnesota.

He filed a federal income tax return, giving his residence as 2545 Blaisdell avenue, Minneapolis. The laws of Minnesota require a license to fish, and provide for a resident license and a nonresident license. Mr. Moodie took out a resident license, and gave his address as 2545 Blaisdell avenue, Minneapolis, Minn. When he returned to North Dakota in 1931 and became a resident of Williston. in answer to the question in his state income tax return, viz., "Did you file an income tax return last year?" he answered "No, not a resident then." He also made three applications for automobile licenses in Minnesota while there, giving his place of residence 2545 Blaisdell avenue, Minneapolis. The automobile applications we do not consider very important, as nonresidents, after a certain limited time, are required to take out an automobile license. However, they are admissible for what they are worth as evidence of intention. As against these physical facts are the statements of the witnesses to whom he talked when he went to Minneapolis and to whom he said that he intended to purchase a paper in North Dakota and return to that state. We think from the whole record that Mr. Moodie did intend to return to the state of North Dakota some time. His testimony, his statements to the witnesses in Minneapolis, and the fact that he did return, all indicate an intention to return some time. On the witness stand his truthfulness was apparent to every one. He answered all questions without hesitation when the answers were unfavorable as well as when they were favorable. He stated that his plans were indefinite when he left Mohall; that within a week from the time he sold his paper at Mohall he began negotiations for "The Williston Herald"; that he left Mohall not intending to return to Mohall; that his employment with the Tribune was temporary; that he wanted to get into business for himself, preferably in North Dakota; but that he would purchase a country paper elsewhere than in North Dakota, if he got a good buy. His truthfulness and candor on the stand were recognized and acknowledged by the Attorney General in his argument. It is true *566 that Mr. Moodie stated that he was asked to vote in Minneapolis and he thought he had a right to vote as he had lived there for the lawful time, and that his voting there would not affect his residence in North Dakota. But his registering and voting in Minneapolis were in harmony with his custom of voting wherever he was on election day if he had been in the state and election precinct long enough to cast a legal vote. It is quite apparent from this record, that while Mr. Moodie had an intention to return some time to North Dakota, he had the intent when he registered as a voter in Minneapolis to cast his vote as he had always cast it, and that he did not intend to exercise any rights of citizenship in North Dakota while he was in Minnesota, but intended to exercise them in Minnesota. He knew that North Dakota had an absent voter's ballot law; but he did not attempt to vote by absent ballot, and did not in any way claim any benefit or any privilege of citizenship in North Dakota.

As stated in the case of Dickinson v. Brookline, 181 Mass. at page 196, 63 N. E. 331, 92 Am. St. Rep. 407, "When you intend the facts to which the law attaches a consequence, you must abide the consequence whether you intend it or not."

Mr. Moodie intended to cast a legal vote in Minnesota, and he was qualified under the laws of Minnesota to vote at the election at which he voted. His manner of voting in Minneapolis was no different from his manner of voting in Grand Forks, Wahpeton, Mohall, and Williston. He took an interest in public affairs, as every good citizen should, and always voted when and wherever he could cast a legal vote. No one ever questioned the legality of any vote he ever cast in North Dakota, Minnesota, or elsewhere. They were all legal votes. He did not register in Minnesota as a voter until after he had been living at 2545 Blaisdell avenue for the length of time required by law to entitle him to vote.

His residence at 2545 Blaisdell avenue, Minneapolis, Minn., was intended as a legal residence for the purpose of voting and enjoying all the civil rights and privileges granted by the Constitution and the laws of Minnesota, and to secure such rights he strictly complied with all the requirements of the law. There is nothing in this record which reflects in any way upon Mr. Moodie. He violated no law and did no wrong; but his removing to Minneapolis and establishing a voting residence there deprived him of his legal residence in North Dakota during the time he was in Minneapolis, and it necessarily follows that he was not a resident of North Dakota for the five years next preceding the election in November, 1934, as required by section 73 of the Constitution.

This proceeding was instituted by the Attorney General. The state itself is plaintiff. Its purpose is not merely to try the title of Mr. Moodie to the office of Governor, but also to determine the question of succession in case Mr. Moodie is held ineligible. Accordingly, the Attorney General joined Mr. Welford as a party respondent and set forth in the information that "in the event that the said respondent Thomas H. Moodie be held to be disqualified and ineligible to hold such office for the term commencing on the first Monday in January, 1935, the powers and duties thereof will devolve upon the respondent Walter Welford and it will thereby and then become his duty to exercise the powers and duties of the office of Governor of North Dakota. * * *" And the Attorney General's information concluded with the prayer, "That the court declare, state and fix the rights, status, and legal relations of the said respondent Walter Welford to the office of Governor and for such other and further relief as the court may deem just and proper in the premises."

It therefore becomes necessary to consider the status of Walter Welford and his legal relation to the office of Governor. The Constitution of the state says:

Section 71: "The executive power shall be vested in a governor, who shall reside at the seat of government and shall hold his office for the term of two years and until his successor is elected and duly qualified."

Section 72: "A lieutenant governor shall be elected at the same time and for the same term as the governor. In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, failure to qualify, absence from the state, removal from office, or the disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted or the disability be removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor."

Under section 71 the Governor holds office until "his successor is elected and duly qualified." Under section 72, in event of the "failure to qualify" on the part of the Governor, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor. Since Thomas H. Moodie did not possess the qualifications required of a Governor at the time of the general election, he was under legal disability. It is undisputed that Walter Welford *567 was legally elected and has qualified as Lieutenant Governor. Under section 678, Comp. Laws 1913, all state officers are required to qualify on or before the first Monday of January next succeeding their election, or within ten days thereafter. When the time arrived for the state officers elected at the general election of 1934 to qualify, Ole H. Olson was the Acting Governor. The Governor had been disqualified (State ex rel. Olson v. Langer (N. D.) 256 N. W. 377), and the disability resulting in such disqualification still exists.

[7] The word successor as used in section 71 means some one who is intrusted with the powers and is obligated to perform the duties of his predecessor. The Lieutenant Governor is not appointed to fill a vacancy. No act is required on the part of any official or governmental body to confer upon him the powers and duties of Governor in event of the "impeachment, resignation, failure to qualify, absence from the state, removal from office, or the disability of the governor." His authority is derived directly from the Constitution. From the above-quoted language, it will be noted that a number of specific instances are set out followed by the general term, "or the disability of the governor." In State ex rel. Olson v. Langer (N. D.) 256 N. W. 377, 383, this court, in discussing the meaning of this last phrase, said: "The word 'disability' has a reasonably definite meaning. It means: 'State of being disabled; deprivation or want of ability; absence of competent physical, intellectual, or moral power, means, fitness, or the like; an instance of such want or deprivation.' It connotes 'want of legal qualification to do a thing; legal incapacity, incompetency, or disqualification; also, an instance or cause of such incapacity.' Webster's New International Dictionary. We must presume, of course, that the words used by the framers of the Constitution were used in their ordinarily accepted sense, unless the contrary clearly appears. Indeed, unless given the ordinary and accepted meaning, disability would have no place in this constitutional provision."

[8] [9] The lack of residential qualifications on the part of the Governor is a legal disability. The Constitution does not differentiate between a disability existing before election and one occurring after election in regard to the right of the Lieutenant Governor to assume the powers and duties of the office of Governor. The provision in the Constitution devolving these powers and duties upon him must be construed in the light of reason. The context must be considered. When the framers of the Constitution used the language which we are here considering, they intended to include legal as well as physical or mental disabilities, and did not exclude disabilities existing prior to election.

[10] Even though the general election of 1934 was a legal nullity in so far as the election of a Governor is concerned, we must bear in mind that there was a legal and valid election of a Lieutenant Governor. There was an expression of the electors as to both offices. Careful reasoning leads us to the conclusion that the framers of our Constitution intended by section 72 to designate a person who would act as Governor in event that the person elected as Governor should fail or cease for any reason to act. The general function of the Lieutenant Governor is to act in event the Governor cannot or does not exercise the powers and perform the duties of his office. He must possess the same qualifications as the Governor. These qualifications are not affected by the particular type or nature of the disability which prevents the Governor from acting. The Constitution does not say that the Lieutenant Governor shall act if the Governor is under certain disabilities and shall not act if he labors under others. The Governor elect could not legally qualify as Governor for the term to which he was elected because of his failure to possess the required qualifications. The Lieutenant Governor, elected at the same election, does possess the required qualifications. He has been chosen by the people to act as Governor in event the Governor fails to qualify, or is unable to act because of disability. Section 2 of the Constitution states: "Government is instituted for the protection, security and benefit of the people." Clearly the interests of those who hold office or seek authority are of minor importance when considered in the light of the declared purpose of the Constitution.

The purpose of a hold-over provision is to conserve the public interests by preventing a vacancy in office. Such provision is not designed or intended to extend the tenure of office by an incumbent for his own benefit beyond the specified term. 23 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 147. It is the policy of the law of this state that every two years the people shall choose not only the Governor, but the officer or officers who shall succeed the Governor and perform the duties of his office in case he for any reason is unable to qualify, or dies or becomes disqualified to serve during the term of office. A hold-over *568 provision applies only when there is no qualified successor; but in this case there is a qualified successor. The framers of the Constitution, having in mind the great importance of the office of Governor, provided not merely for one successor, but they provided for another successor (Const. N. D. § 72) in case the first should, for any reason, be unable to serve, and for still another in case the second should also be unable to serve. Const. N. D. § 77.

If the Governor elect fails to qualify or is disqualified, the Lieutenant Governor is the successor in office to the former Governor or Acting Governor. The election and qualification of a Governor or of a Lieutenant Governor, in event the Governor elect is disqualified, meets the requirement of section 71 that the Governor serves until his successor is elected and duly qualified. In event of the disqualification of the Governor elect, the legal election and qualification of the Lieutenant Governor supplies a successor and terminates the former administration. The purpose of the provision in section 71 of the Constitution to the effect that the Governor "shall hold his office * * * until his successor is elected and duly qualified" is to prevent a hiatus in government; to guard against any lapse or period when there would be no officer to discharge the duties of Governor. It is a provision made for the benefit of the public. It is a lengthening out of the service of the incumbent to the commencement of the term of a new incumbent authorized to exercise the powers and perform the duties of Governor, whether that new incumbent be a newly elected Governor or other officer authorized to exercise the functions of the office. When such new incumbent qualifies and takes possession of the office, the old administration is at an end. It cannot be revived. The functions of Governor devolve upon the officials elected at the last general election in the order of succession provided for in the Constitution. Walter Welford will serve as Acting Governor for the residue of the term for which Thomas H. Moodie was elected. It is the duty of Mr. Moodie to surrender the office of Governor to Lieutenant Governor Welford. Though Mr. Moodie is not entitled to hold the office, nevertheless no question can be raised as to the validity of the official acts performed by him. Under the wise provisions of the law, every act so done is valid and effective. He was clothed with prima facie title to the office. State ex rel. Sathre v. Byrne et al. (N. D.) 258 N. W. 121; State ex rel. Butler v. Callahan, 4 N. D. 481, 61 N. W. 1025. He was a de facto officer. As such he was clothed with all the rights and powers that he would have enjoyed as a de jure officer possessed of every qualification. State v. Ely, 16 N. D. 569, 113 N. W. 711, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 638.

The application for the writ must be granted. It is assumed the respondents will act in conformity with this decision without the issuance of a formal writ.

Opinion

**376 *43 Original Action for declaratory relief dated on December 11, 1942, by State of Wisconsin, upon the relation of John E. Martin, Attorney General, plaintiff, v. Julius P. Heil, Governor, and Walter S. Goodland, Lieutenant Governor, respectively, defendants. The court having assumed original jurisdiction upon the petition of the Attorney General, a complaint was duly filed and motions for judgment by Julius P. Heil and Walter S. Goodland were made for the purpose of raising issues of law upon the facts alleged therein. Such motions for judgment were duly made on December 14, 1942.

In view of the pressure of time and for the purpose of making a clear and orderly presentation of the legal issues, counsel *44 informally agreed, in conference with the court, that generally speaking, the following questions were presented by the facts appearing in the complaint:

(1) Does the present incumbent of the office of governor hold over beyond the expiration of his present term until his successor is chosen and qualified?

(2) If he does not so hold over, is there a vacancy after the fourth of January, 1943 in the office of governor?

If there is a vacancy, how is the same to be filled?

(a) By the devolution of the powers and duties of the office upon the lieutenant-governor?

If so, for what term or period?

(b) By special election?

If so, by whom may such a special election be called?

(c) Does the present incumbent have authority to appoint his successor?

The facts of the petition will be stated in the opinion.

**377 *45 WICKHEM, Justice.

The facts of this case are not in dispute and are thus set forth in the complaint: Julius P. Heil was elected governor on November 5, 1940, for a term beginning the first Monday in January, 1941. He duly qualified for the office and has since been, and is now, the duly elected and qualified governor. Walter S. Goodland, at the same election, was elected to the office of lieutenant-governor, qualified for the office, and is now the duly elected and qualified lieutenant-governor. On November 3, 1942, Orland S. Loomis was elected to the office of governor to succeed Julius P. Heil and a certificate of election issued and delivered to him. At the same election, Walter S. Goodland was elected to succeed himself in the office of lieutenant-governor, a certificate of election was issued to him, and on December 9, 1942, he filed his oath of office as lieutenant-governor for the term beginning the first Monday in January, 1943. Orland S. Loomis died on December 7, 1942, not having taken the oath of office as governor, but having, however, on November 30, 1942, entered upon his duties as governor-elect by holding budget hearings as provided by section 15.08, Stats. Upon his death, Walter S. Goodland undertook to conduct such budget hearings on December 11, 1942, continuing throughout that day, but has not subsequently held such hearings.

Upon these facts, the questions heretofore referred to have arisen. It needs no argument to demonstrate that an early determination of these questions is of the utmost importance to the people of the state of Wisconsin in order that the government of the state may function in a valid and orderly manner.

Broadly speaking, the questions presented are whether the present incumbent, Julius P. Heil, holds over for the whole or any part of the term for which Orland S. Loomis was elected; whether, if he does, he holds over only until such time as by special election a successor to Orland S. Loomis can be elected; whether, if Julius P. Heil does not hold over as governor for *46 any part of the ensuing term, he may appoint a successor, either to hold for the term or until a special election be called to select a successor to Orland S. Loomis; whether, on the other hand, Walter S. Goodland as the duly elected lieutenant-governor, on the first Monday of January, 1943, by virtue of applicable constitutional provisions, will succeed to the powers, duties and functions of governor for the whole of the term for which Orland S. Loomis was elected. The questions have been stated factually, in order to present at the outset, the results of the various contentions of the parties.

An understanding of the questions presented may be promoted by setting forth the provisions of the constitution and statutes material to a consideration of these questions.

Article V, Section 1, Constitution, provides: "The executive power shall be vested in a governor, who shall hold his office for two years; a lieutenant governor shall be elected at the same time, and for the same term."

Article V, Section 7, Constitution, provides: "In case of the impeachment of the governor, or his removal from office, death, inability from mental or physical disease, resignation, or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term or until the governor, absent or impeached, shall have returned, or the disability shall cease. * * *"

Article V, Section 8, Constitution, provides: "* * * If, during a vacancy in the office of governor, the lieutenant governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or from mental or physical disease become incapable of performing the duties of his office, or be absent from the state, the secretary of state shall act as governor until the vacancy shall be filled or the disability shall cease."

Article XIII, Section 10, Constitution, provides: "The legislature may declare the cases in which any office shall be deemed vacant, and also the manner of filling the *47 vacancy, where no provision is made for that purpose in this constitution."

Section 17.03, Stats., is entitled "Vacancies, how caused." Subsection (9) of this section provides that a public office becomes vacant upon "The death or declination in writing of any person elected or appointed to fill a vacancy or for a full term before he qualifies, or his death or such declination before the time when, by law, he should enter upon the duties of his office to which he was elected or appointed."

**378 Section 7.01 is entitled "Elections to fill vacancies." Subsection (2) provides for special elections to fill vacancies in the office of United States senator or representatives in the Congress of the United States. Subsection (3) provides for special elections to fill vacancies in the office of state senator or assemblyman. Subsection (4) provides: "A vacancy in any other elective state office (except that of governor or lieutenant governor), if it occurs more than six months before the expiration of the current term, may be filled at a special election held not later than sixty days before the next general election."

Section 17.19 (4), Stats., provides: "In the office of secretary of state, treasurer, attorney-general or state superintendent, by appointment by the governor, and a person so appointed shall hold office until his successor is elected, as provided in section 7.01, and qualifies, but if no such election is held, the person so appointed shall hold office for the residue of the unexpired term."

Section 17.27, Stats., is entitled "Vacancies in other offices; how filled" and subsection (4) provides: "In case of a vacancy in any office in the state where no other provision is made for filling the same, it shall be filled by appointment by the governor."

*48 [1] As the questions agreed upon by counsel are framed, the first is whether the present incumbent holds over beyond the expiration of his present term until his successor is elected and qualified. With the exception of one brief amicus curiae, it is conceded in all briefs which urge that a successor to Mr. Loomis may be selected by special election, that there must be a holding over by the incumbent or a devolution of the powers of that office for a portion of the term upon the lieutenant-governor, in order to avoid the probability of a situation in which for a time there would be no governor, or any person empowered to discharge his functions. This is true because it would be difficult in any event to conduct a special election after November in time for the successor to qualify by the first Monday of January, next. It would, of course, be quite impossible to do so if the death occurred just before the time when the governor-elect was to qualify. It is inconceivable, in view of the time, care and effort put upon the subject of succession by the constitutional convention that such an hiatus was left unprovided for. If the governor holds over, the possibility of a special election to take care of the office for a portion of the ensuing term may be considered. If he does not, it is impossible to find any constitutional ground for a conclusion that the office is to be vacant in function and fact until filled by special election. We are of the view that the constitution does not authorize the incumbent of the office of governor to hold over under any circumstances, beyond the term for which he was elected. The constitutional provision is not that the governor shall hold for a period of two years and until his successor shall be elected and qualified. The provision is that the governor shall hold for a term of two years. The absence of words extending the term until such time as a successor has been duly elected and qualified is, of course, not wholly conclusive and as pointed out in State ex rel. Pluntz v. Johnson, 176 Wis. 107, 184 N.W. 683, 186 N.W. 729, there has been a tendency in the authorities to *49 hold, in spite of the absence of these words, that an incumbent holds over until his successor is selected and qualified. In the Pluntz case, which is cited as authority for the proposition that the present incumbent holds over beyond his term, this court upon rehearing and after a contrary ruling had been vigorously defended in the original opinion, held that an elective sheriff holds over until his successor is elected and qualified, although the applicable constitutional provision did not specifically so extend the term. The court grounded its conclusions upon the tendencies of the authorities, upon practical construction and upon the inconvenience and annoyance which would result from suspension of official functions, if no person was authorized to act as sheriff.

We are strongly of the view that the opinion has no bearing upon this case. The Pluntz case construed Article VI, section 4 of the Constitution. This section deals with the time and manner of election of sheriffs, coroners, registers of deeds, district attorneys, and all other county officers, except judicial officers. As originally enacted, the section provided that sheriffs should be elected once every two years and as often as "vacancies shall happen". It will be noted that Article VI, section 4, Constitution, never has specifically defined the term of a sheriff, the extent of the term being implied from the fact that a sheriff was elected every two years. See **379 State ex rel. Knutson v. Johnson, 171 Wis. 521, 177 N.W. 899. In 1882 the section was amended to provide that all vacancies should be filled by appointment, and that the person appointed "shall hold only for the unexpired portion of the term to which he shall be appointed and until his successor shall be elected and qualified." To conclude that an elective sheriff did not hold over until his successor was elected and qualified would not only create a complete vacancy in that office until the successor qualified, with all the resulting disorder and inconvenience, but a wholly irrational distinction between an appointive and an elective sheriff. In none of the offices *50 dealt with in Article VI, section 4, Constitution, does the constitution provide for substitutes or in any way take care of the discharge of official functions during such a period.

[2] When to the practical construction found by the court to have existed from the time the constitution was adopted was added that furnished by the amendment of 1882, itself, the court found it possible, although not without great difficulty, to conclude that elective and appointive sheriffs were intended by the constitution to have the same term. The constitutional provision with respect to the governor presents quite a different problem. The language is not merely that a governor shall be elected every two years as in the case of a sheriff, but that his term shall be two years. There is no such aid to a liberal construction of Article V, section 1, Constitution, as was furnished by the 1882 amendment to Article VI. Further than this the governor is the executive head of the state—the holder of a political office of the first importance. The report of the constitutional convention indicates that the members of that convention were greatly concerned and gave profound consideration to every aspect of the office of governor. There was, for example, vigorous advocacy of a one-year term and a limit to the number of successive terms he could serve. The debates evidence to a considerable degree that distrust of the executive which belongs to the period of the Revolution and the years following it. Elaborate precautions were taken to provide as completely as possible, for his term and the contingencies of his inability to serve, and we cannot believe that it was the purpose of the constitution to permit an incumbent to hold over at all. Even if the holding over was merely until a successor could be chosen, such a governor would discharge many of the most important functions of the office during the period of his holding over. While this is especially true now, because the biennial session of the legislature commences shortly after the governor's inauguration, the difference at the time of the adoption of the constitution *51 was only one of degree. There is every reason in the case of a great political office like that of governor for giving to the constitutional term of two years its literal significance. There is, on the other hand, little practical objection in an administrative office to permitting a sheriff or clerk of court to give continuity to the administration of his office by continuing until a successor is elected and qualified. While the Pluntz case states that the tendency of the authorities is in the direction of liberal construction, we have discovered no case in which such a construction was applied to the office of governor. We are of the view that under the constitution the present governor does not hold over beyond the term of office for which he was elected.

[3] The next question is whether, assuming that the governor does not hold over, there will, after the fourth of January, 1943, be a vacancy in the office of governor, and if there is such a vacancy, how the same is to be filled. We deem it convenient at this point to consider the proper construction of Article V, section 7, Constitution, since this is one of the two sections making express provision for the discharge of the functions of the office of governor in case of the inability of the governor to act. In this connection we express our strong conviction that Article V, section 7, Constitution, either devolves the powers and duties of governor upon the lieutenant-governor for the complete term in such a situation as is here presented, or it does not impose them upon him at all. The language of section 7 is open to no other construction. It is suggested in one of the briefs that the office remains vacant, although the functions devolve upon the lieutenant-governor, and that since the office remains vacant, steps may be taken to fill this vacancy by special election. While the premise is true and was expressly sustained in State ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, 228 Wis. 645, 280 N.W. 393, the difficulty with the conclusion is that the vacancy specified by section 7 is completely provided for by section 7 itself, thus leaving no room for the *52 operation of Article XIII, section 10, which permits the legislature to provide the manner in which vacancies shall be filled where the constitution contains no **380 provision for that purpose. It is contended by counsel for incumbent that the terms of section 7 plainly and unambiguously refer to the disability of a governor who has actually qualified. It is strongly argued that the term "residue" implies that only a part of the term remained to be served when the disability occurred. It is argued from this that the constitution in section 7 has only taken care of a situation in which a qualified governor, by reason of the circumstances detailed, has become unable to serve the rest of his term, and that the situation in which a governor has wholly failed to qualify is unprovided for. It would follow from this that by authority of Article XIII, section 10, Constitution, the legislature may define the vacancy and prescribe the manner of filling it. The legislature, having in section 17.03(9), Stats. included in the definition of a vacancy the death or declination before he qualified of a person elected to office, the situation is claimed to be one which must be dealt with by special election or appointment in accordance with statutory provisions applicable to such situations. The first question to be answered is whether the language of section 7 so clearly and unambiguously supports the position of counsel for the incumbent that it is not open to construction. It is our conclusion that it does not. The use of the word "governor" in section 7 does not unambiguously exclude "governor-elect." The term "governor-elect" is a merely statutory designation, and not a constitutional word. There is no reason, so far as rules having to do with the use of language generally are concerned, why the term "governor" may not include "governor-elect" for a particular term, and it is a particular term that the constitution deals with in section 7. Webster's dictionary defines governor as "the person elected as chief executive official of a State in the United States. * * *" It requires no more interpolation to hold that the term "governor" *53 includes "governor-elect" than it does to limit it to "qualified and acting" governor. We see no reason why the word "governor" as used in section 7 may not reasonably be taken to include an elected governor who has not qualified.

[4] A more formidable difficulty is presented by the word "residue." It is asserted that this term usually has the meaning of "rest" or "remainder" and unambiguously implies that a part of the term will always have elapsed when the disability occurs and that it inevitably follows that a qualified governor must have occupied the office for the elapsed portion. This would be quite persuasive if we failed to consider the peculiar purpose for which the term "residue" was used in section 7. It plainly deals, not with the beginning, but with the termination of the devolution of the governor's powers upon the lieutenant-governor. Its purpose is to indicate that unless the governor, absent or impeached, "shall have returned, or the disability shall cease" the lieutenant-governor is to hold until the end of the term. The lieutenant-governor clearly takes over the functions of the office upon the happening of the disability. Since the word "residue" is clearly used to establish the period of the lieutenant-governor's devolved powers, the implication that he acts to fill out a partially expired term is much weakened—if not destroyed. The word "residue" so used is correctly applied to the whole of a term, as well as to a part. Two constitutional provisions of other states illustrate the points made. In the constitution of West Virginia, the provisions corresponding to section 7 are as follows:

"In case of the death, conviction on impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, or other disability of the Governor, the President of the Senate shall act as Governor". Article 7, § 16.

Here it will be noticed that failure to qualify is one of the specified contingencies, and the word "governor", where first used, clearly applies to governor-elect. The Nebraska constitution, Article 4, § 16, provides that in case of the death, impeachment and *54 notice thereof to the accused, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the state or other disability of the governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall be removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor. Here, as in the West Virginia provision, failure to qualify is specifically made one of the contingencies upon which the lieutenant-governor is to exercise the powers and duties of governor. In the Nebraska constitution the term "governor" includes "governor-elect" and "residue" is applicable to the whole of the term as well as to a part.

[5] [6] [7] A further objection may briefly be referred to. A listing of the contingencies upon which the powers and duties of the office of governor shall devolve upon **381 the lieutenant-governor include two that probably cannot apply to a governor who has not qualified. Those are impeachment and removal from office. However, this does not mean that the rest of the contingencies, to wit: death, inability from mental or physical disease, resignation or absence from the state, cannot as well apply to a governor-elect as to a fully qualified governor. The fact that some of the specified contingencies can only apply to a governor who has qualified imports no such limitation into contingencies which are capable of applying to a governor-elect. The provisions of section 8 of Article V of the constitution bear importantly upon the construction of section 7. It is there provided that if during a vacancy in the office of governor, the lieutenant-governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, etc., the secretary of state shall act as governor until the vacancy shall be filled, or the disability shall cease. It apparently deals with the contingencies provided for by section 7, assumes that the lieutenant-governor acts as governor during a vacancy in that office, and implies that section 7 merely contains a general description of a vacancy in the office of governor. This would be important since the failure of a governor to qualify is within the general definition of "vacancy." *55 See, in this connection, State ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, 228 Wis. 645, 280 N.W. 393. Some ambiguity is created in section 8 by the statement that the secretary of state shall act as governor until the vacancy shall be filled or the disability shall cease, but it is arguable that the words "vacancy shall be filled" relate to the return of an absent governor in contrast with one who has been impeached but who has removed his disability. We have sought to do no more in our analysis of section 7 than to demonstrate that the language of that section may reasonably be construed to provide for devolution of the powers of the governor upon the lieutenant-governor where the former has never qualified. It is, of course, arguable that the language was not intended to cover that situation and the section is not wholly free from ambiguity. It is extremely important in the interpretation of constitutional provisions that we avoid determinations based purely on technical or verbal argument and that we seek to discover the true spirit and intent of the provisions examined. We must not fail to give effect to plain and completely unambiguous language in the constitution, but where there is a reasonable ground to differ concerning the sense in which language is used, the provision should be examined in its setting in order to find out, if possible, the real meaning and substantial purpose of those who adopted it.

[8] In view of the foregoing, consideration should be given to the debates and proceedings of the constitutional convention itself. The committee on the executive, legislative and administrative, comprising seven members, reported to the convention on December 21, 1847, provisions identical with those now constituting article V of the constitution. There was a vigorous debate on the question whether there was any necessity for providing for the office of lieutenant-governor. It was at first voted to amend section VII by striking out all reference to a lieutenant-governor and imposing his duties upon the president of the senate. In the course of the debate upon *56 this amendment the contingencies named in section VII were attacked as too remote to warrant the expense of providing a lieutenant-governor. The proponents of the section denied the remoteness and asserted that it was highly improper and opposed to the genius of our institutions to substitute for the lieutenant-governor a legislative officer of the senate who had never been voted upon by the people as a whole. They contended that the people should elect a governor, lieutenant-governor and secretary of state, "thereby providing for all contingencies which could arise". Ultimately, the convention reconsidered its action after further debate and voted to retain section 7 in the present form. In the course of the second debate one of the objectors to the creation of the office of lieutenant-governor stated that the latter was at best, a mere minute-man—an officer without duties, save as president of the senate. He saw no good reason why these duties could not as well be performed by a president of that body, duly elected by its members; and in case of vacancy in the office of governor providing that the secretary of the territory should issue a proclamation for an election to fill the vacancy provided an incumbent was deemed necessary. In opposition to this, one of the delegates stated that while he did not feel strongly about the matter, a contingency might occur in which his services might be highly necessary and he was in favor of providing for all contingencies that might occur **382 and therefore on the whole, he was in favor of having such an officer. "Wisconsin Historical Collections", "The Attainment of Statehood", Quaipe, volume XXIX, page 268. Article V, section 7, Constitution, was adopted and has never since been amended.

It appears quite clearly that the provisions of the New York constitution of 1846 were available and used by the delegates to our constitutional convention. The corresponding section of the New York constitution of 1821 was identical with section 7 as ultimately adopted in this state, except that the words "inability from mental or physical disease" did not *57 occur in the New York constitution of 1821, article 3, § 6. The corresponding section of the New York constitution of 1846, article 4, § 6, as ultimately adopted, was identical with section 7 of the Wisconsin constitution, except that it substituted "inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office" for the reference to mental or physical disease. It is interesting, however, to note that the proposed section as originally presented to the New York convention of 1846 is identical with section 7, except that the Wisconsin version substitutes the words "shall have returned" for "shall return" and omits the word "all" before the words "the military force".

In the light of this similarity, it is significant that the debates took almost precisely the same course in New York as they did in Wisconsin. Throughout the debates in New York, the defenders of the provision for the office of lieutenant-governor constantly recur to the need in case of the death or inability of the governor, for "someone to fill his place"—"to take upon himself the office of governor in case of vacancy”—and stressed these considerations as the sole substantial reasons for having a lieutenant-governor at all. The fact that at least a portion of the draft of the New York constitution was before the delegates of the Wisconsin convention is stated in Attorney General ex rel. Schantz v. Brunst, 3 Wis. 787. It is evident to us that both the draft and the debates of the New York constitution were known to the delegates to the Wisconsin convention and that our convention copied and adopted a proposed draft of the matter covered by section 7, including a portion later deleted there.

[9] [10] We conclude that there is not the slightest evidence in the proceedings of the constitutional convention of any intention to make a distinction between the case of a duly elected governor who, by reason of death or some other circumstance, has failed to qualify, and that of one who has qualified and later has become disabled to act. The carefully prescribed succession without adverting to this distinction is, standing *58 alone, a strong circumstance indicating that no such distinction was intended to be preserved. To suppose, in the absence of language clearly compelling that conclusion, that there was an intended distinction as to vacancy and devolution of power between the case of a governor who died the day before he qualified, and one who died the day after that event seems wholly unreasonable in view of the fact that the only purpose asserted in the Wisconsin and New York constitutions for having a lieutenant-governor was to insure that in all contingencies the functions of the office of governor would be discharged without interruption. That the foregoing was the practical construction of section 7 by the legislature is evidenced by the fact that there has been no legislative effort to deal with the situation at all. The office of governor is excepted from elaborate provisions for special elections to fill vacancies and no specific provisions for filling vacancies in the office of governor have ever been enacted. This is not an accidental omission. The legislature never supposed it had any duties to perform with respect to vacancies in the office of governor. It may be answered that the office of lieutenant-governor is also excepted from provisions for special election, and that we held in State ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, supra, that this made operative section 17.27(4), Stats. providing for filling the office by appointment. In that case, however, there was concededly a vacancy, and no constitutional provision for filling it. There was no ambiguity of construction which would warrant resort to practical construction. We have found no case directly in point. The North Dakota case of State v. Moodie, 65 N.D. 340, 258 N.W. 558, goes much further than our conclusions here. Upon identical constitutional provisions, section 72, it was held that the lieutenant-governor had the duties of governor devolved upon him in a case where by reason of nonresidence the governor lacked the qualifications for office, and the election **383 was completely void. Several cases take a contrary view. *59 Carr v. Wilson, 32 W.Va. 419, 9 S.E. 31, 3 L.R.A. 64; State ex rel. Thayer v. Boyd, 31 Neb. 682, 48 N.W. 739, 51 N.W. 602. These cases appear to us not to be in point for the reason that in none of them was a governor considered to have been elected at all. For example, in the Carr case, the constitution of West Virginia, article 7, § 16, specifies failure to qualify as one of the contingencies upon which the powers of the governor devolved upon the lieutenant-governor. This case, nevertheless, held that where no governor was ever elected, the situation was not within the contingencies of the devolution clause, which in respects other than above noted was substantially identical with section 7.

[11] We conclude that with respect to the office of governor, the constitution takes care of every contingency involving a duly elected governor, except one in which the governor, lieutenant-governor and secretary of state are all unable to function, a contingency evidently considered so remote as not to call for specific mention. Viewing the provision of section 7 in the light of the constitutional history of the office of lieutenant-governor, and of the practical construction by the legislature, we are of the view that on the first Monday of January, 1943, the powers and duties of the office of governor will devolve upon Walter S. Goodland, the duly elected lieutenant-governor, for the entire term for which Mr. Loomis was elected. The language of section 7 readily accommodates itself to this construction and the construction conforms to the general constitutional purpose providing for succession as well as the reasons for the creation of the office of lieutenant-governor as these appear from the debates of the constitutional convention. It is something more than a make-weight that this conclusion obviates many practical difficulties which any other construction would raise. It avoids the holding over of a governor, either de jure or de facto; it invests with the powers and duties of governor, a person who at the same election as that in which the deceased governor-elect prevailed, was deliberately chosen by the people for no other important *60 purpose than to substitute for the governor; it avoids an interregnum and the expense of a special election which could in most cases furnish a substitute only for the least important portion of the ensuing term.

[12] We have not heretofore discussed the proposition that the incumbent may, in the circumstances, appoint a successor. The contention calls for no extended discussion. It fails in view of our conclusion as to the proper construction of section 7, of article V. It would fail in any event, under the doctrine of State v. Roden, 219 Wis. 132, 262 N.W. 629, since such an appointment would be for a vacancy not arising during the incumbency of the present governor.

The foregoing disposes of all questions submitted by the parties and so importantly affecting the interests of the people of this state as to warrant the exercise of original jurisdiction.

We take this occasion to acknowledge the substantial help given by the able briefs filed by the parties, as well as those filed amicus curiae. We commend the correct and public-spirited attitude of the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of State and Attorney General, whose high-minded efforts to promote the orderly processes of government by a decision in this case evidence fidelity to their duties as citizens and public officers in a democracy.

It is held:

(1) That the present incumbent of the office of governor does not hold over beyond the expiration of his present term;

(2) That on and after the 4th day of January, 1943, there will be a vacancy in the office of governor;

(3) That the vacancy in the office of governor on January 4, 1943, results in the devolution of the powers and duties of the office upon the lieutenant-governor for the residue of the term, that is, for the term ending on the first Monday in January, 1945;

*61 (4) That because, as indicated in (3), the constitution devolves the duties of the office upon the lieutenant-governor, a special election cannot be called to fill the vacancy;

(5) That for the reason stated in (3) and because of the doctrine of State v. Roden, 219 Wis. 132, 262 N.W. 629, the present incumbent has no authority to fill by appointment a vacancy in the office of governor.

Office of the Attorney General

State of Idaho
Opinion No. 77-1

Lieutenant Governor of Idaho

Per Request for Attorney General Opinion.

QUESTION PRESENTED:

' . . . , I would appreciate the preparation of a formal Attorney General's opinion on the Constitutional authority and procedure for nomination and appointment of a Lieutenant Governor to succeed the office upon my vacating the same.'

CONCLUSION:

The question presented anticipates the imminent resignation of the office of Governor of Idaho so as to assume the post of United States Secretary of the Interior. The Idaho Constitution provides, 'In case of the * * * resignation [of the Governor], the powers, duties and emoluments of the office for the residue of the term * * * shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.' This section, read in tandem with the next section of the Idaho Constitution regarding temporary performance of the duties of lieutenant governor by the president pro tempore of the Senate until the vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor is filled, together with the Article 4, § 6, power of the governor to appoint state officers would seem to clearly imply a succession by the lieutenant governor to the office of governor, thus creating a vacancy in the lieutenant governor's office. There is not only logic, but also case law to support such a conclusion. However, there is substantial case law interpreting constitutional provisions virtually identical in wording to Idaho's which conclude that under such circumstances the lieutenant governor never truly succeeds to the office of governor, is merely an acting, ex officio governor throughout the remaining term, and vacates his underlying office at the peril of not only losing the right to that office but also the right to act as governor.

With such indecision in the decided law regarding the nature of the right of holding the office of governor by the person designated by the Constitution to perform the duties of the same we feel ill advised in recommending to the incumbent Lieutenant Governor a course of action which, if we are wrong, could be fatal not only to his elected office, but also to any person he attempted to appoint to perform lieutenant governor duties after the Governor has resigned.

RECOMMENDATION:

We, therefore, recommend that the following constitutional questions be presented to the Idaho Supreme Court for its immediate consideration, by way of extraordinary writ:

1. When the Governor resigns does the Lieutenant Governor become Governor de jure or de facto, or is he merely acting governor or governor ex officio?

2. Upon resignation of the Governor is there a 'vacancy' created in the office of Lieutenant Governor, or does the Lieutenant Governor remain as such while also assuming the duties, powers and emoluments of Governor?

*2 3. While performing the duties of Governor is the Lieutenant Governor entitled to the Governor's salary, and if so, is he also entitled to the salary as Lieutenant Governor?

4. After the Governor has resigned does the Lieutenant Governor perform only the duties of Governor, or is he also required to perform his duties as Lieutenant Governor whenever physically possible?

5. When physically impossible for the Lieutenant Governor to perform his duties as such due to performing the duties of Governor, either part or full time as interpreted by the Court, does the president pro tempore of the Senate perform the duties of Lieutenant Governor on a part-time basis, full time basis, or does he only act until the 'vacancy' in the office of Lieutenant Governor is filled by appointment by the Governor?

6. After the Governor has resigned and the duties, powers and emoluments of the office of Governor have devolved upon the Lieutenant Governor, may the Lieutenant Governor safely resign his office so as to create a vacancy therein, or will such a resignation act to destroy the foundation upon which the Idaho Constitution allows him to act as Governor?

We conclude that these questions are beyond the scope of this office due to the numerous conflicting case law interpreting similar constitutional provisions. Only the Idaho Supreme Court can provide the final, definitive answers.

ANALYSIS:

Clearly, in Idaho the governor has the power to appoint someone to fill a true 'vacancy' in the office of Lieutenant Governor. Article 4, § 6, Idaho Constitution. Since the lieutenant governor is not one of the enumerated state officers listed therein, such appointment falls under that portion of Article 4, § 6, which requires the Governor to 'nominate and, by and with the consent of the senate, appoint all officers whose offices are established by the constitution, * * *, and whose appointment * * * is not otherwise provided for.' Though certain constitutional officers are later listed in the constitutional provisions and, apparently, may be appointed without senatorial consent, the lieutenant governor is not among those listed. That being so, the provisions of Section 50-904 and 50-914, Idaho Code, relating to appointments, which by 1968 constitutional amendment must be followed for appointment of those enumerated constitutional officers, are inapplicable to appointing a person to fill a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor, and any person so appointed to fill a true 'vacancy' in that office would hold office until the expiration of the remaining elective term. Moon v. Masters, 73 Idaho 146, 247 P.2d 158 (1952); Budge v. Gifford, 25 Idaho 521, 144 P. 333 (1914).

The threshold problem, however, remains that of determining when a 'vacancy' has occurred in the office of Lieutenant Governor. Idaho's constitutional succession provisions relating to filling the office of Governor when that person resigns, dies or is otherwise disqualified must be carefully scrutinized. With the expected and impending resignation of the incumbent Governor, it is apparent that, upon such resignation, Article 4, § 12, Idaho Constitution, comes into effect. That section provides:

*3 In case of the * * * resignation [of the governor], the powers, duties and emoluments of the office for the residue of the term * * * shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

Note well that said section does not provide that the lieutenant governor shall succeed to the office of Governor, but merely that the powers, duties and emoluments of the office shall 'devolve' upon him. As will be noted later herein, most of the courts treat this act of devolution not as creating a true 'vacancy' in the office of lieutenant governor, but, rather, as acting to create a situation whereby the lieutenant governor must, by law, act as governor while still holding the office, together with its responsibilities, of lieutenant governor. To resolve the obvious dilemma thus created of one person attempting to perform the duties of two important executive offices simultaneously, these same courts hold that the next person in line of succession, in Idaho's case the president pro tempore of the Senate [Article 4, § 13, Idaho Constitution] shall assume the duties of lieutenant governor whenever his gubernatorial duties interfere with his exercise of his duties as lieutenant governor. Idaho has a specific constitutional provision covering such a contingency. Article 4, § 13, Idaho Constitution provides:

* * * [W]hen he [the lieutenant governor] shall hold the office of governor, then the president pro tempore of the Senate shall perform the duties of the lieutenant governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed.

Yet, as noted above, most courts hold that resignation of a governor does not create a 'vacancy' in the office of lieutenant governor when that person assumes the devolved duties as governor. The term 'disability' is apropos to such a situation inasmuch as the lieutenant governor is unable, at some times, to be in two places at once—to perform the duties of both offices simultaneously, but, what constitutes a 'removal' of the 'disability'? Must the lieutenant governor and president pro tempore of the Senate constantly be in communication so as to know from one minute to the next who is to do what at any given point in time? This is the gist of the holdings of the majority of case law on the subject, yet adherence to such construction produces an absurd result. At some point in this 'chain of succession' it must be realized that state government is, when a governor resigns, short one very vital person. It matters not whether we consider that we are not lacking a lieutenant governor, because the pro tempore acts to fill that office during the 'disability' period, or whether we are without a pro tempore. In either event we are short one key person. And the very exigencies and complexities of modern state government can hardly allow a state to limp along with such a shortage. Such absurdity may well be 'the law' as presently interpreted by the courts of many states, including neighboring states with constitutional provisions quite similar or virtually identical to those of Idaho. However, logic, and the law, should allow the conclusion to be reached that a permanent 'devolution' upon death or resignation of the Governor results in a true succession by the lieutenant governor to the office of Governor, thus creating a 'vacancy' in the office of Lieutenant Governor which may be filled by gubernatorial appointment. Yet, the cases do not on the whole so hold. In fact, there is case law to the effect that a person who did have the gubernatorial duties devolve on him by resignation of the incumbent governor lost the right to act as governor when he resigned the underlying office which gave him the constitutional right to perform the duties of governor. The primary New Jersey case which so holds is discussed herein. There is no clear-cut answer to the question posed which may be analyzed and resolved with legal exactness. The logical result which would result in the greatest efficiency and continuity of state government may well not be the legal result. This is one of those perplexing situations where the Attorney General must seek resort to the Idaho Supreme Court for a final legal resolution of the dilemma which is tailored to the Idaho Constitution and the needs of the Idaho people.

*4 The Oregon Supreme Court, in Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Or. 389, 4 P. 1180 (1884), considered whether, when under the Oregon Constitution 'the duties of the office of governor devolve upon the secretary of state, he has a right to the salary of the office.' [4 P. at 1180.] They considered:

In the first place, it is not shown how an office can be vacant, and yet there be a person, not the deputy or locum tenens of another, empowered by law to discharge the duties of the office, and who does in fact, discharge them. It is not explained how, in such a case, the duties can be separated from the office so that he who discharges them does not become an incumbent of the office of governor without being governor. It is the function of a public officer to discharge public duties. Such duties constitute his office. Hence, given a public office, and one who, duly empowered, discharges its duties, and we have an incumbent in that office. Such is the case here. The secretary of state, by force of the function cast upon him, becomes governor, and consequently entitled to the salary appertaining to the office. Id. at 1181.

Thus, in Oregon, it was decided long ago that the next-in-line for the office of governor upon a resignation, death or disability of the incumbent thereof became fully vested with the office itself, not merely an ex officio, or acting, governor. The Oregon constitutional provision regarding devolution, however, is not exactly identical to Idaho's. Next, in Olcott v. Hoff, 92 Or. 462, 181 P. 466 (1919), the Oregon Supreme Court again considered its constitutional devolution section and posed:

The vital question we are asked to decide is whether the petitioner, Mr. Olcott, holds the office of governor in fact, and, if so, for how long, or whether he has only the right to discharge the duties of that office during the remainder of his term as secretary of state. 181 P. at 466.

The relevant portions of the Oregon Constitution provided: 'In case of the removal of the governor from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the duties of the office, the same shall devolve on the secretary of state.' Article 5, § 8, Oregon Constitution. As pondered with regard to the U.S. Constitution, what does the phrase 'the same' modify—'duties'—or 'the office'? The Court proceeded to review in detail numerous cases from other jurisdictions which held that the lieutenant governor, under such circumstances is merely an 'acting governor' and does not 'hold' the office of governor, then stated:

It will be noted that in all of the [constitutional] sections quoted it is not the office, but the powers and duties of the office, which devolve upon his successor in the event of the death of the governor. Id. at 470.

Justice Johns, writing for the Court in an opinion in which five of the seven justices concurred, stated:

Mr. Olcott is governor in fact and has the right and title to the office itself, with the accompanying right and authority to perform the duties and receive the emoluments of the office. As to whether he could resign as secretary of state, and as governor appoint another to that position and still continue to hold the office of governor, we do not feel legally justified in going beyond anything said in this opinion. That is less a public and more a personal question for Mr. Olcott. [Emphasis supplied.] Id. at 472.

*5 Three justices believed that the Court should have taken the next logical step and hold that Olcott could, in fact, resign as secretary of state and appoint a successor to that office in his capacity as governor. Chief Justice McBride felt: There can be little question that Mr. Olcott is entitled to hold both the office of governor and secretary of state, and draw the salaries of both. It is creditable to him that he does not wish to do the first and will not do the second. In the infancy of the state, when its business was insignificant and its revenues small, one person could well perform the duties of both governor and secretary of state, but with the enormous expansion of state business [by 1919] each of the three constitutional officers finds in his own department all the business which he can attend to, and more. Id. at 474.

The Chief Justice concluded:

For the reasons expressed by Justice JOHNS, as well as those urged herein, I am of the opinion that this court should declare the petitioner is governor in fact and not acting governor; that he is entitled to the salary of governor; that he holds the office for the remainder of the term of the late Governor Withycombe, and that he may resign the office of secretary of state and still hold the office of governor. Id. at 475.

Justice Harris concluded similarly, with Justice Benson concurring:

In brief, I take the view that Ben W. Olcott is governor in truth as distinguished from governor ex officio, that he is entitled to hold the office of governor and is entitled to the salary of that office until his successor is elected; . . . I think, too, that the logic of the holding in Chadwick v. Earhart inevitably leads to the conclusion that the petitioner can resign as secretary of state and continue to occupy the office of governor. Id. at 479.

The question remains as to whether this decision was reached through interpreting the nuances of words and the proper modification of certain words by yet other words, or whether it was a decision which attempted to reach a practical, effective approach to a complex problem by not giving undue influence to technical terms and rules of construction.

Third in the important trilogy of Oregon cases is State ex rel. O'Hare v. Appling, 215 Or. 303, 334 P.2d 482 (1959), which posed the question of an implied resignation when the secretary of state became elected governor, and the time of such implied resignation. The Court noted with approval these general principles:

The doctrine of implied resignation is thus stated in 100 A.L.R. 1170:

'* * * if the holding of two offices by the same person, at the same time, is inhibited by the Constitution or statute, a forbidden incompatibility is created similar in its effect to that of common law, and, as in the case of the latter, it is well settled by an overwhelming array of authority that the acceptance of a second office of the kind prohibited operates, ipso facto, to absolutely vacate the first office.'

*6 The multitude of decisions from all over the United States and England cited in the extensive annotation beginning at 100 A.L.R. 1162 fully bears out the foregoing statement that this doctrine has the support of 'an overwhelming array of authority.' . . . The quoted language of the Supreme Court of Maine in Stubbs v. Lee, 64 Me. 195, 198:

'Where one has two incompatible offices, both cannot be retained. The public has a right to know which is held and which is surrendered. It should not be left to chance, or to the uncertain and fluctuating whim of the office-holder to determine. The general rule, therefore, that the acceptance of and qualification for an office incompatible with one then held is a resignation of the former, is one certain and reliable as well as one indispensable for the protection of the public.' 334 P.2d at 486.

The Court went on to conclude that the offices of Secretary of State and Governor were incompatible. Likewise, it should be concluded that, in Idaho, the offices of Lieutenant Governor and Governor are incompatible.

In Merriam v. Clinch, 6 Blatchf. 5, Fed. Cas. No. 9,460 (S.D.N.Y. 1867, upon the death of a collector of customs it was claimed that certain emoluments belonged to his estate. In holding to the contrary, the Court considered Article 2, § 6, United States Constitution, under which due to death, resignation, or inability to discharge 'the powers of the said office [of president], the same shall devolve upon the vice president,' and noted:

Three times since the adoption of the constitution, the president has died, and, under the provisions referred to, the powers and duties of the office of president have devolved upon the vice president. All branches of the government have, under such circumstances, recognized the vice president as holding the office of president, as authorized to assume its title, and as entitled to its emoluments. The vice president holds the office of president until a successor to the deceased president comes to assume the office, at the expiration of the term for which the deceased president and vice president were elected. . . . It has never been supposed that, under the provision of the constitution, the vice president, in acting as president, acted as the servant, or agent, or locum tenens of the deceased president, or in any other capacity than as holding the office of president fully, for the time being, by virtue of express authority emanating from the United States. [Emphasis supplied.] 17 Fed. Cas. at p. 70.

As will be seen from the analysis of the Oregon cases, where the state's Constitution uses similar phraseology to the United States Constitution, the conclusion as to what the person upon whom executive duties devolve succeeds to may turn upon the interpretation of what the words 'the same' modify. Isolating the key phrase 'the powers of the said office, the same shall devolve', it is critical to the concept and nature of succession whether 'the same' modifies 'the powers'—signifying a status of merely acting temporarily as the executive—or whether 'the same' modifies 'office'—signifying a true succession by the second-in-command to the full status of the executive for the remainder of the executive's term. This dilemma, when coupled with substantial conflicting case law not only from other neighboring states with constitutional devolution sections virtually identical to Idaho's, but also from other jurisdictions, creates a circumstance where legal advice on the question presented herein becomes futile when rendered by any other than the Idaho Supreme Court.

*7 A leading case which takes a position contrary to Oregon's is State v. Heller, 63 N.J. Law. 105, 42 A. 155, 57 L.R.A. 312 (1899). In Heller, New Jersey Governor Griggs resigned before the expiration of his term and Vorhees, then president of the state Senate, qualified as his successor. Later, before the expiration of the term for which Griggs had been elected, Vorhees resigned as a member of the state Senate. Immediately, the speaker of the House qualified as governor, contending that the resignation of Vorhees, as state senator, terminated his right to officiate as governor. Vorhees, however, claimed that, having been the successor of Griggs as governor at the time of Griggs' resignation, he thereby became governor de jure for the remainder of the unexpired gubernatorial term, regardless of the expiration of his term as state senator. The New Jersey Constitution, substantially like Idaho's, provided that: 'In case of the * * * resignation * * * from the office of the governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the Senate, and in case of his * * * resignation * * * then upon the speaker of the House of Assembly * * *.' In the Idaho Constitution the first devolution is on the lieutenant governor, then upon the president pro tempore of the state Senate. The New Jersey court ruled:

In construing this clause of the constitution it must be borne in mind that it was carefully drawn by learned jurists, who knew how to express with exactness and precision the purpose they had in view. The provision is that, in case of the resignation of the governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate, and not that the president of the senate shall thereby become governor, and hold the title and the office until another governor is elected. If the framers of the fundamental law had intended to transfer the president of the senate to the executive chair, and thereby to vacate his office, it is reasonable to believe that they would have said so in no uncertain language. The language used is not ambiguous. It declares that the powers, duties and emoluments of the office shall devolve on the president of the senate; it does not confer upon him the title of the office. The president of the senate exercises the powers of the governor; the president of the senate performs the duties of the governor; the president of the senate receives the emoluments of that office. He is still president of the senate, with the added duties required of the chief executive of the state imposed upon him. There is no language in the constitution from which it can reasonably be inferred that his office of president of the senate was to be vacated. He retains his office of senator; and as president of the senate, and not as governor, he exercises the added powers and performs the superimposed duties. [Emphasis supplied.] 42 A. at 157

Further considering the nature of the constitutional grant of power when a governor resigns, the New Jersey Supreme Court held:

*8 In my judgment, the framers of the Constitution meant simply what they said—that in case the governor resigned the president of the Senate, as such should have the powers and perform the duties of the office. Foster M. Vorhees did not become governor upon the resignation of Governor Griggs. He still continued to be a senator and president of the Senate. He could not resign the office of governor, which he never held. When he resigned and vacated the office of senator, he ceased to be the president of the Senate, and could no longer exercise the functions pertaining to the executive department. Therefore upon his resignation as senator the powers, duties and emoluments of the office [of governor] devolved upon David O. Watkins, the speaker of the House of Assembly. He is de jure the speaker of the House, and of right as such speaker exercises the executive powers. He is not governor de jure or de facto in the constitutional sense of that term. [Emphasis supplied.] Id. at 158.

Next, the Colorado Supreme Court in People ex rel. Parks v. Cornforth, 34 Col. 107, 81 P. 871 (1905), was presented with this factual setting: In 1905 Governor Peabody resigned and Lieutenant Governor McDonald qualified as governor and acted as such. Cornforth, president pro tempore of the state Senate qualified and acted as lieutenant governor during the same period but was replaced as president pro tempore later in 1905 by Parks, though Cornforth remained a senator. The question was whether the right of Cornforth to act as lieutenant governor ended with the election of Parks as president pro tempore. Construing Article 4, § 13 and Article 4, § 14, Colorado Constitution, which are virtually identical to Article 4, § 12 and Article 4, § 13, Idaho Constitution, regarding assuming the duties of governor and lieutenant governor upon death, resignation, or disability, the Colorado Supreme Court analyzed:

The same language is used in devolving duties on the president pro tem. [although the word 'devolve' does not appear in the Colorado or Idaho Constitutions regarding the pro tem. assuming lt. governor duties] in the event the lieutenant governor is unable to perform his duties through those of the governor devolving upon him from some permanent cause as in this case, resignation of the governor. If the framers of our constitution had intended that the president pro tem. of the Senate should become lieutenant governor de jure in the contingency under consideration, they could easily have said so. They have not so provided. They have simply said that if for some permanent cause the lieutenant governor fails to discharge his official duties they shall be performed which such condition obtains by the president pro tem. of the Senate as such. 81 P. at 872-873.

The Court, after considering several cases from other jurisdictions, concluded that the duty to act as lieutenant governor appertained to the holder of the office of president pro tempore of the state senate, and did not create a de jure vested right in the holder of that office at such time as the governor died and the lieutenant governor had the gubernatorial duties devolve upon him. Thus, the newly elected pro tempore was entitled to assume, when necessary, the duties of lieutenant governor whenever the same could not be performed by the lieutenant governor while acting as governor.

*9 The neighboring state of Washington has also had occasion to consider the question of devolution of duties upon the lieutenant governor, in State ex rel. Murphy v. McBride, 29 Wash. 335, 70 P. 25 (1902). In 1900, Rogers was elected governor and McBride was elected lieutenant governor. Rogers died in late 1901. As stated: The first question presented is, does the death of the governor cause a vacancy in that office, which may be filled by an election for the unexpired term, and, if not, does the office of lieutenant governor become vacant when the incumbent assumes the duties of governor? 70 P. at 25.

As in the Idaho and Montana Constitutions, the 'succession' provision of Washington's Constitution provided that the duties of the office of governor 'devolve upon the lieutenant governor' upon resignation, death or disability of the governor. The Court noted:

This provision of the constitution of this state is in effect the same as the provision of the constitution of the United States with reference to the succession of the vice president to the office of president of the United States. Upon the death or disability of the president, it has uniformly been held that the vice president holds the office of president until a successor to a deceased president comes to assume the office. Merriam v. Clinch, 6 Blatchf. 9, Fed. Cas. No. 9,460. In that it was said: 'It has never been supposed that, under the provision of the constitution, the vice president, in acting as president, acted as the servant or agent or locum tenens of the deceased president, or in any other capacity other than as holding the office of president fully, for the time being, by virtue of express authority emanating from the United States.' Id. at 25-26.

Next, the Court considered one of the Oregon cases, then concluded:

It is a well settled rule that an office is not vacant so long as it is supplied, in the manner provided by the constitution or laws, with an incumbent who is legally authorized to exercise the power and perform the duties which pertain to it. [Citations omitted.] The constitution having provided that in case of the death of the governor the duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of governor . . . What is said above applies equally to the lieutenant governor. When the lieutenant governor, by virtue of his office and of the command of the constitution, assumed the duties of governor on the death of Gov. Rogers, the office of lieutenant governor did not thereby become vacant, but the officer remained lieutenant governor, intrusted with the powers and duties of governor. [Emphasis supplied; citations omitted.] It is argued, however, that since it is made the duty of the lieutenant governor, under the constitution, to be presiding officer of the state senate (section 16, art. 3), and as such to approve all bills passed by that body, he must, as governor, review and approve or reject bills which as lieutenant governor he has already approved. These duties are, no doubt, inconsistent; but this argument, we think, is fully met by another provision of the constitution, which provides, at section 10, art. 2, in substance that when the lieutenant governor shall act as governor the senate shall choose a temporary president. The lieutenant governor, therefore, when the duties of governor devolve upon him, is relieved of the duties of presiding officer of the senate. [Emphasis supplied.] Id. at 26.

*10 In yet another neighboring state, Montana, that state's Supreme Court was called upon, in State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 97 Mont. 252, 34 P.2d 369 (1934), to consider whether the following facts led to the creation of vacancies in executive offices of the State. At the 1932 general election, Erickson was elected governor and Cooney was elected lieutenant governor. In March, 1933, Erickson resigned as governor. The Court framed the sole question presented for review as follows: 'Is there a vacancy in either the office of Governor or Lieutenant Governor?' [34 P.2d at 370.] Article 7, § 4, Montana Constitution, which when the word 'treason' is added is identical to Article 4, § 12, Idaho Constitution, provided for devolvement of the powers, duties and emoluments of the office of governor on the lieutenant governor when the governor resigned or otherwise could not perform the duties of office. The Montana Court held:

It will thus be seen that when the Governor resigns or is permanently removed from office, there is no vacancy in the office of Governor in the sense that there is no one left with power to discharge the duties imposed upon the Governor . . . The framers of the Constitution never intended that there should be any interim in which the affairs of the state should not be executed, for they said in explicit language that on the happening of any of the contingencies mentioned in section 14, supra, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office were to be immediately transferred to the Lieutenant Governor, who is then given a mandate to discharge the duties of the office for the residue of the term for which the Governor was elected. He, as Lieutenant Governor, acts as Governor and is empowered to perform the duties of that office. [Emphasis supplied.]

There can be no vacancy in an office when there is a person clothed with authority to perform its duties. In State ex rel. Chenoweth v. Action, 31 Mont. 37, 77 P. 299, 300, the court, speaking through Mr. Commissioner Callaway, said: 'The word 'vacancy,' as applied to an office, has no technical meaning. An office is not vacant so long as it is supplied, in the manner provided by the Constitution or law, with an incumbent who is legally qualified to exercise the powers and perform the duties which pertain to it; and, conversely, it is vacant, in the eye of the law, whenever it is unoccupied by a legally qualified incumbent, who has a lawful right to continue therein until the happening of some future event.' 34 P.2d at 370-371.

The Court next noted:

It is urged that upon the happening of any of the contingencies in section 14, supra, the Lieutenant Governor by exercising the powers and duties of the Governor acts also as Lieutenant Governor, and that he cannot hold two offices. This argument is answered by section 15 of article 7 of the [Montana] Constitution [exactly identical with Article 4, § 13, Idaho Constitution] . . .

The argument is also answered in the case of State ex rel. Murphy v. McBride, supra, [29 Wash. 335, 70 P. 25 (1902), quoting therefrom the explanation and acceptance of the inconsistent duties as constitutionally authorized and resolved by temporary action of the temporary president of the state senate.]

*11 When the framers of the Constitution provided for the election of a Governor and a Lieutenant Governor as members of the executive department of the state (section 1, art. 7), but conferred upon the latter no executive power or authority other than in the contingencies mentioned in section 14, supra, they manifested the intention that the people elect two qualified heads of that department—the one action, the other his lieutenant, ready at a moment's notice to assume the duties of the office should his superior officer, for any reason, either temporarily or permanently, become unable to perform them. This to the end that the important functions of state government should not falter or halt for an instant. Id. at 371-372.

Concerning the concept of a vacancy occurring when the duties of governor devolved upon the lieutenant governor by constitutional action, the Court concluded:

Neither do we think that upon resignation, death, or permanent removal of the Governor there is a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor. In any such event he, as Lieutenant Governor, shoulders immediately the duties of Governor, and while 'he holds the office of Governor,' the president pro tempore of the senate performs the duties which theretofore devolved upon the Lieutenant Governor. When the duties, powers and emoluments of the office of Governor devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, it cannot be said that he vacates his office of Lieutenant Governor, and, unless he does so, there is no vacancy in his office. [Emphasis supplied; code citation omitted.] His assumption of the duties of the office of Governor does not create, and neither can he make, a vacancy, as he is discharging the functions of Governor and by the mandate of the Constitution, and that by reason of being Lieutenant Governor. [Emphasis supplied.] If the framers of the Constitution had intended that there be a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor upon the resignation, death or permanent removal of the Governor, they could have easily said so. They chose, however, to say that upon the happening of either of those contingencies the Lieutenant Governor should assume the duties of the office and discharge them for the residue of the term. [Emphasis supplied.] Id. at 372.

Note that, on the one hand, the Court, by stating 'unless he does so' implies that the lieutenant governor could resign his office when the Governor's duties devolved upon him under the Constitution and, thus, create a 'vacancy' in the office of Lieutenant Governor, yet, on the other hand notes that he only has the right to act as governor 'by reason of being Lieutenant Governor'. This exact issue has been considered by New Jersey's highest court as has previously been discussed. In concluding its line of reasoning about the lack of vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor the Court stated:

It would be idle to say that upon the resignation of the Governor there was thereby created a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor, in view of the specific language of sections 14 and 15, supra. If that be true, then the Lieutenant Governor, upon assuming the powers and duties of the Governor, would be entitled to appoint a Lieutenant Governor. In this manner he could divest the people of their representative chosen by the Legislature, namely the president pro tempore, to preside during the absence of the Lieutenant Governor. In our opinion this was never contemplated and never intended by the framers of the Constitution, or the people who adopted it. Id. at 372.

*12 Under a constitutional provision similar to Idaho's, the Arizona secretary of state assumed the duties of governor. The germane question presented to the Court in State ex rel. De Concini v. Garvey, 67 Ariz. 304, 195 P.2d 153 (1948), was: 'upon the death of Governor Osborne did the respondent become vested with the office of governor for the remainder of the term?' [195 P.2d at 154.] it was held:

The framers of our constitution never intended that there should be any interim in which the affairs of state were not executed for they said in explicit language that upon the happening of any of the contingencies mentioned in section 6, article 5, supra, [Arizona Constitution] the powers and duties of the office of governor were to be immediately transferred to the secretary of state who was then given a mandate to discharge the duties of the office for the residue of the term for which the governor was elected. He, as secretary of state, acts as governor and is empowered to perform all the duties of that office, and his official acts performed as acting governor are valid. [Citation omitted.]

We have observed that the prevailing view is that an inferior officer does not vacate his office and become governor de jure and de facto where the several constitutions provide merely that the duties and powers of the office devolve upon him. Id. at 155-156.

The Court concluded:

The respondent took an oath to perform the duties of secretary of state. His duties embrace the responsibility to act as governor in case any of the contingencies provided for in the constitutional provision arise. [Citation omitted.]

We, therefore, hold that respondent Garvey is not governor de jure or de facto but merely ex officio or acting governor invested by constitutional mandate with all of the powers and duties of that high office, which devolve upon him by virtue of the fact that he is secretary of state. Respondent, however, is entitled to physical possession of the office space and facilities provided for the chief executive of the state, but as no provision has been made that the emoluments of the office of governor inure to the secretary of state when acting as governor he is entitled only to the compensation provided for the secretary of state. Id. at 157–158.

Since Idaho's constitutional provision provides that the lieutenant governor is entitled to 'the powers, duties and emoluments' of the office of governor, it seems clear that the lieutenant governor would accede to the governor's salary whenever he assumed the role of that chief executive, regardless of whether it was determined that he held the office de facto or de jure, or merely ex officio or as acting governor. The question of whether the lieutenant governor remains further entitled to the emoluments, including salary, of that office while the gubernatorial duties have devolved upon him is still an open one. As noted herein, courts have gone both ways on the issue, some holding that the person may draw both salaries even where there is an express constitutional prohibition against an officer of state government being paid more than one salary. Only the courts may provide the definitive answer for Idaho to that dilemma.

*13 In State ex rel. Chatterton v. Grant, 12 Wyo. 1, 73 P. 470 (1903), Chatterton, Wyoming secretary of state, became acting governor upon the death of the incumbent governor by virtue of that state's constitution. He continued also to perform the duties of secretary of state. He sued to recover salary as secretary of state and also as governor. The Wyoming Supreme Court permitted him to recover both salaries, holding, in effect, that he was performing, with constitutional sanction, the duties of both offices, and ruled:

It certainly cannot be held that the offices of Governor and Secretary of State are incompatible, in the sense that the same person, if Secretary of State, cannot legally act in the dual capacity and perform the duties of each office, upon the death, disability, or resignation of the Governor, since the Constitution and statutes expressly require it. No question of compatibility is involved. 73 P. at 472.

In Nevada, in State ex rel. Hardin v. Sadler, 23 Nev. 356, 47 P. 450 (1897), the Nevada Constitution provided for devolution of powers and duties of the office of governor upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term or until any disability should cease. Construing this provision, the Nevada Supreme Court ruled:

If a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor. But there is no vacancy created thereby in the office of lieutenant governor. The officer remains lieutenant governor, but invested with the powers and duties of governor. 47 P. at 450.

Though the Nevada Court chose to use the term 'vacancy' regarding the status occurring in the office of governor, it would appear that the better reasoned conclusion, supported by most case law, is that no true 'vacancy' does occur in the governor's office through death, resignation, disability, or the like, inasmuch as the Constitution calls for mandatory, automatic succession in such cases. Thus, in no instant of time can a true 'vacancy' be deemed to have occurred so long as there remains a constitutionally designated and qualified officer able to assume the powers, duties and emoluments of the office of governor.

In yet another Nevada Supreme Court case, State ex rel. Sadler v. La Grave, 23 Nev. 216 45 P. 243, 35 L.R.A. 233 (1896), the Nevada state comptroller contended that when the powers and duties of the office of governor devolved upon the lieutenant governor by virtue of that state's Constitution (similar to Idaho's), no change occurs in the position of that officer, who remains lieutenant governor, exercising the powers and duties of the governor, but not entitled to the salary attached to the office. The Nevada Supreme Court held that the lieutenant governor while acting governor was entitled to the salary attached to the office of governor. Concurring, Chief Justice Bigelow noted:

I concur in the judgment, but do not wish to be understood thereby as holding that, upon the death of the governor, the lieutenant governor becomes 'governor' in the full sense of the term. Justice Belknap's opinion might possibly be so construed. 45 P. at 245.

*14 In Furtrell v. Oldham, 107 Ark. 386, 155 S.W. 501, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 571 (1913), as stated by the Court: The case turns on the question whether, on the resignation of the Governor, the then incumbent of the office of president of the senate succeeded to the vacated office, or whether merely as such president of the senate the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office of Governor devolved upon him while he remained president. 155 S.W. at 503.

As will be seen from the style of the question the constitutional provision in Arkansas relating to devolution when a governor leaves office is virtually identical to that of Idaho, except that their president of the senate is apparently not also termed lieutenant governor, as is the case in Idaho. The Court concluded:

If the framers of the Constitution had intended to provide for the devolution of the office of Governor, in case of vacancy by resignation, or otherwise, upon the president of the senate, that intention could easily have been expressed in appropriate words. But they chose other terms which clearly observe the distinction between the course of succession of the office itself and the mere devolution of the duties and emoluments of the office for the time being, and deliberately adopted the latter as the best means of having the government administered until the people themselves can elect a governor. Id. at 505.

In the case of People ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 114 Cal. 168, 45 P. 1060 (1896), the lieutenant governor died during his term and the governor appointed a successor. Both parties conceded that the vacancy caused by the death of the incumbent was one which the governor had the power to fill. Construing California's constitutional provision relating to 'vacancies' in the offices of governor and lieutenant governor, the Court noted:

It will be seen that in case of a vacancy in the office of governor the vacancy is not to be filled, but the powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor, who does not cease to be lieutenant governor. [Emphasis supplied.] Under such circumstances it would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor the latter thereby becomes governor, and can thereby appoint a lieutenant governor. Nor do I think it could be contended that when the president pro tempore of the senate acts as governor he could appoint a person to fill the vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. If he could, he would then appoint himself out of office, and it would be his duty to do so.

But it is conceded by the parties that upon the death of the lieutenant governor the governor may fill the vacancy by appointment. This is unmistakably within the language of section 8, art. 5 [California Constitution] . . . 45 P. at 1060.

Though considering whether a deputy was authorized to assume the duties of the superintendent of the state insurance department during the absence and inability of the superintendent, the New York appellate court in People ex rel. Church v. Hopkins, 55 N.Y. 74 (1873), considered precedent in that state's executive branch noting:

*15 But there are precedents which, though not judicial, I regard as entitled to be considered as decisive of the question under consideration. [The New York constitutional provision for powers and duties of governor devolving upon the lieutenant governor were set out.] On the 11th day of February, 1828, the office of Governor became vacant by the death of De Witt Clinton, the then incumbent of the office, and its powers and duties, under the above provision of the Constitution, devolved upon Nathaniel Pitcher, then lieutenant governor. The question arose whether he was to be regarded, in the exercise of the powers and performance of his duties so vested in him, as acting governor, or in the performance of the contingent duties of lieutenant governor, and, as a consequence, whether he was entitled to the salary of the former office, or the compensation given to the lieutenant governor for his services as such. It was held by William L. Marcy, then comptroller, that he was to be regarded as the acting governor, and entitled to the salary given by law to that officer. The same questions, under the same provision, again arose in 1829, upon the resignation of the office of governor by Martin Van Buren, and the powers and duties of the office devolving upon Enos T. Throop, then lieutenant governor, and were decided in the same way by Silas Wright, then comptroller. It will be seen that these questions were identical with that in the present case. We surely shall not go far astray in following the precedents established by these able jurists, wise statesmen and rigid economists. 55 N.Y. at 80-81.

All justices concurred.

It should be readily apparent from the foregoing cases that though several states have considered situations similar to that which Idaho faces, under similar constitutional provisions, there is no consistent underlying thread tying all the cases together into a uniform pattern. The interpretations of various aspects of the devolution problem are so diverse that it is perilous for any but a court to tread in the area. As a consequence of the lack of uniform interpretation this is one situation where the Attorney General believes that discretion and duty both require submission of the basic question and its numerous side issues to the Idaho Supreme Court in the first instance.

STATE BOARD OF ELECTIONS, David M. McConnell, Chairman; Warren R. Williams, Joseph E. Zaytoun, Robert S. Ewing, Dan S. Judd, Members of the State Board of Elections; and Raymond C. Maxwell, Executive Secretary, Respondents.

Feb. 28, 1962

Mandamus proceeding to compel State Board of Elections to accept petitioner's filing fee and to certify him as a candidate for office of lieutenant-governor in primary election to fill unexpired term of deceased lieutenant-governor. The Superior Court, Wake County, Wm. Y. Bickett, J., dismissed the proceeding, and the petitioner appealed. The Supreme Court, Denny, J., held that the succession of governor and lieutenant-governor is fixed by the constitution and a vacancy in the office of lieutenant-governor may not be filled at an election for any portion of unexpired term.

Affirmed.

**165 *402 This is a proceeding instituted in the Superior Court of Wake County by the petitioner, J. Max Thomas, who seeks to have the court issue in his behalf a writ of mandamus compelling respondent State Board of Elections to accept his filing fee and certify him as a candidate for the office of Lieutenant-Governor of North Carolina in the primary election to be held in the year 1962, to fill the unexpired term of the late H. Cloyd Philpot as Lieutenant-Governor of North Carolina.

The petitioner tendered a notice of candidacy and a filing fee of $21.00 to the respondents on 15 December 1961. Petitioner is seeking to become a candidate of the Democratic Party for the office of Lieutenant-Governor in the primary to be held in May 1962.

Respondents answered the petition and denied the legal right of the petitioner to become a candidate for such office and alleged that said office was not open for the filing of candidates and would not be until the primary to be held in 1964.

The respondents filed a demurrer ore tenus to the petition and the matter was heard before his Honor, William Y. Bickett, Resident Judge of the Tenth Judicial District, in Chambers in the Wake County Courthouse in Raleigh, North Carolina, on 20 January 1962.

There were no questions or issues of fact to be determined or passed upon. It was admitted that the petitioner tendered the proper filing fee, and that he is eligible in all respects to become a candidate of the Democratic Party for the office of Lieutenant-Governor of this State if, under the Constitution and laws of this State, the year 1962 and the primary to be held in said year is the proper time for the election of a candidate to fill such office. Therefore, the matter was heard upon the pleadings and the demurrer interposed by the respondents and upon argument of counsel.

His Honor sustained the demurrer ore tenus, ordered that no writ of mandamus issue, and dismissed the proceeding. Judgment was entered accordingly.

The petitioner appeals to this Court, assigning error.

Opinion

DENNY, Justice.

The question presented for determination arises out of the following factual situation: The Honorable H. Cloyd Philpot was *403 elected Lieutenant-Governor of this State for a term of four years in the general election in November 1960, and took the oath of office and entered upon the duties of the office in January 1961. He died on 19 August 1961.

**166 As a matter of history, the Honorable Tod R. Caldwell was elected Governor and the Honorable Curtis H. Brogden was elected Lieutenant-Governor of North Carolina for four-year terms in 1872. Governor Caldwell died on 11 July 1874. Lieutenant-Governor Brogden took the oath of office as Governor on 14 July 1874. See Governor's Message to the General Assembly, reported in the Journal of the House, Session 1874-75, beginning on page 21.

It might be well to note that the succession of Lieutenant-Governor Brogden to the office of Governor is the only instance in the history of this State since the office of Lieutenant-Governor was created by the Constitutional Convention of 1868, when the Lieutenant-Governor succeeded to the Governorship before the midterm general election. In each other instance in which a Lieutenant-Governor has succeeded to the Governorship in this State, the vacancy in the office of Governor occurred after the midterm general election had been held. However, Governor Caldwell having died on 11 July 1874, less than thirty days prior to the next general election held on 6 August 1874, the question now before this Court has never been, nor could it have been, raised until the death of Lieutenant-Governor Philpot.

[I] Therefore, the determinative question presented on this appeal is simply this: Is the succession of Governor and Lieutenant-Governor fixed by our Constitution, thereby excluding the right to have the vacancy in the office of Lieutenant-Governor filled by election prior to November 1964?

In considering the question presented, it is well to keep in mind that the offices of Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, aside from the powers and duties, are treated in the same constitutional manner. For example: The offices of the Executive Department of the State government were established and the terms fixed by the provisions of Article III, Section 1 of the Constitution of North Carolina, which read as follows: 'OFFICERS OF THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT; TERMS OF OFFICE.--The executive department shall consist of a Governor, in whom shall be vested the supreme executive power of the State; a Lieutenant-Governor, a Secretary of State, an Auditor, a Treasurer, a Superintendent of Public Instruction, an Attorney General, a Commissioner of Agriculture, a Commissioner of Labor, and a Commissioner of Insurance, who shall be elected for a term of four years by the qualified electors of the State, at the same time and places and in the same manner as members of the General Assembly *404 are elected. Their term of office shall commence on the first day of January next after their election, and continue until their successors are elected and qualified: Provided, that the officers first elected shall assume the duties of their office ten days after the approval of this Constitution by the Congress of the United States, and shall hold their offices four years from and after the first day of January.'

The eligibility requirements of the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor are set out in the Constitution and are the same. Article III, Section 2 of the Constitution is as follows: 'QUALIFICATIONS OF GOVERNOR AND LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR.--No person shall be eligible as Governor or Lieutenant-Governor unless he shall have attained the age of thirty years, shall have been a citizen of the United States five years, and shall have been a resident of this State for two years next before the election; nor shall the person elected to either of these two offices be eligible to the same office more than four years in any term of eight years, unless the office shall have been cast upon him as Lieutenant-Governor or President of the Senate.' (Emphasis added.)

There is certainly no denial of the fact that when the office of Governor becomes vacant, there is a constitutional plan of succession other than by an election, to fill the vacancy for the unexpired term. It is necessary, therefore, to examine the several sections of the Constitution bearing on the **167 duties of the Lieutenant-Governor and the procedure to be followed when the 'powers, duties and emoluments of the office of Governor shall devolve' upon the Lieutenant-Governor and he is unable to act.

Article III, Section 11 prescribes the duties of the Lieutenant-Governor as follows: 'DUTIES OF THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR.--The Lieutenant-Governor shall be President of the Senate but shall have no vote unless the Senate be equally divided. He shall receive such compensation as shall be fixed by the General Assembly.'

Article III of the Constitution deals with the Executive Department of our State government. The Lieutenant-Governor is an officer of the Executive Department. Even so, Article II of our Constitution which deals with the Legislative Department of the government, in Section 19, provides as follows: 'PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.--The Lieutenant-Governor shall preside in the Senate, but shall have no vote unless it may be equally divided.' Article II further contains the following provisions in Section 20: 'OTHER SENATORIAL OFFICERS.--The Senate shall choose its other officers and also a speaker (protempore) in the absence of the Lieutenant-Governor, or when he shall exercise the office of Governor.'

The constitutional method of succession is set out in *405 Article III, Section 12 of our Constitution which reads as follows: 'IN CASE OF IMPEACHMENT OF GOVERNOR, OR VACANCY CAUSED BY DEATH OR RESIGNATION.--In case of the impeachment of the Governor, his failure to qualify, his absence from the State, his inability to discharge the duties of his office, or, in case the office of Governor shall in anywise become vacant, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant-Governor until the disabilities shall cease or a new Governor shall be elected and qualified. In every case in which the Lieutenant-Governor shall be unable to preside over the Senate, the senators shall elect one of their own number president of their body; and the powers, duties and emoluments of the office of Governor shall devolve upon him whenever the Lieutenant-Governor shall, for any reason, be prevented from discharging the duties of such office as above provided, and he shall continue as acting Governor until the disabilities be removed, or a new Governor or Lieutenant-Governor shall be elected and qualified. Whenever, during the recess of the General Assembly, it shall become necessary for the President of the Senate to administer the government, the Secretary of State shall convene the Senate, that they may elect such president.'

We think the provisions of our Constitution clearly point out upon whom the powers, duties and emoluments of the offices of Governor and Lieutenant-Governor shall devolve in the event of a vacancy in either or both of said offices. We think this view is further supported by the provisions of Section 13 of Article III in our Constitution which reads as follows: 'DUTIES OF OTHER EXECUTIVE OFFICERS.--The respective duties of the Secretary of State, Auditor, Treasurer, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Attorney General, Commissioner of Agriculture, Commissioner of Labor, and Commissioner of Insurance shall be prescribed by law. If the office of any of said officers shall be vacated by death, resignation, or otherwise, it shall be the duty of the Governor to appoint another until the disability be removed or his successor be elected and qualified. Every such vacancy shall be filled by election at the first general election that occurs more than thirty days after the vacancy has taken place, and the person chosen shall hold the office for the remainder of the unexpired term fixed in the first section of this article: Provided, that when the unexpired term of any of the offices named in this section in which such vacancy has occurred expires on the first day of January succeeding the next general election, the Governor shall appoint to fill said vacancy for **168 the unexpired term of said office.' This last proviso was authorized by Chapter 1033 of the North Carolina Session Laws of 1953, *406 and submitted to and approved by a vote of the people at the general election held on 2 November 1954.

It will be noted that the offices of Commissioner of Agriculture, Commissioner of Labor, and Commissioner of Insurance, have been created since the adoption of the Constitution in 1868 and Sections 1 and 13 of Article III of the Constitution amended to include these offices in the Executive Department of the State government.

The petitioner contends that his petition for a writ of mandamus is clearly supported by the provisions of G.S. s 163-7, reading as follows: 'FOR VACANCIES IN STATE OFFICES.--Whenever any vacancies shall exist by reason of death, resignation, or otherwise, in any of the following offices, to wit, Secretary of State, Auditor, Treasurer, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Attorney General, Solicitor, Justices of the Supreme Court, judges of the superior court, or any other State officer elected by the people, the same shall be filled by elections, to be held in the manner and places and under the same regulations and rules as prescribed for general elections, at the next regular election for members of the General Assembly which shall occur more than thirty days after such vacancy, except as otherwise provided for in the Constitution.'

In our opinion, when the General Assembly enacted the foregoing statute, it clearly recognized that the Governor and the Lieutenant-Governor were not subject to its provisions and that is the reason the statute contains the provision, 'except as otherwise provided for in the Constitution.'

Moreover, the Constitution does not otherwise provide except as to the offices of Governor and Lieutenant-Governor.

If it had been the intent of the framers of the Constitution to authorize or require the election of a successor to fill a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant-Governor, as required with respect to the offices named in the Constitution in Section 13, Article III, then we can think of no sound reason why the framers of the Constitution did not include the office of Lieutenant-Governor in Section 13, Article III of the Constitution. Every office in the Executive Department of the State government created by the Constitutional Convention of 1868, was named in Section 13 of Article III of the Constitution, and the manner of succession in the event of a vacancy in any of said offices is explicitly set out therein, except the offices of Governor and Lieutenant-Governor.

Moreover, in each of the offices named in Section 13, Article III of the Constitution in which a vacancy is required to be filled, the duty is imposed upon the Governor to appoint another to fill the office until a successor is elected and qualified.

[2] *407 Consequently, if the contentions of the petitioner are correct, we can think of no valid reason why the Governor should not have appointed a successor to Lieutenant-Governor Philpot immediately after his death, to serve until the next general election. We hold, however, there is no constitutional provision which authorizes the Governor to appoint a successor to Lieutenant-Governor Philpot, to fill out the vacancy now existing by reason of his death. Furthermore, no Governor has ever attempted to appoint another to fill a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant-Governor.

Here, again, we think the framers of the Constitution deliberately and advisedly provided for the succession of Governor and Lieutenant-Governor otherwise than by election, thereby withholding from the Governor the power to name his potential successor. On the other hand, whenever it becomes necessary for a President of the Senate to be elected, upon whom the powers, duties and emoluments of the office of Governor or Lieutenant-Governor may devolve, the power and responsibility for electing a President of the Senate is vested **169 by the Constitution in that body. Section 12, Article III of the Constitution of North Carolina.

The factual situation involved in this appeal is not controlled by the decision in Rodwell v. Rowland, 137 N.C. 617, 50 S.E. 319.

We hold that the Constitution provides for the succession of the Governor and the Lieutenant-Governor and does not authorize a vacancy in either office to be filled at an election for any portion of an unexpired term. Section 12, Article III of the Constitution of North Carolina.

[3] We further hold that when a vacancy occurs in the office of Lieutenant-Governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office of Lieutenant-Governor devolve upon the President of the Senate who shall discharge the duties and powers of the office of Lieutenant-Governor for the unexpired portion of the term to which the Lieutenant-Governor was elected.

In the case of State v. Emery, 224 N.C. 581, 31 S.E.2d 858, 157 A.L.R. 441, Stacy, C. J., speaking for the Court, said: 'The will of the people as expressed in the Constitution is the supreme law of the land. Warrenton v. Warren County, 215 N.C. 342, 2 S.E.2d 463. In searching for this will or intent all cognate provisions are to be brought into view in their entirety and so interpreted as to effectuate the manifest purposes of the instrument. * * *

When the provisions of our Constitution bearing on the question now before us are properly interpreted, we think they support in letter and spirit the conclusion we have reached.

[4] '* * * Mandamus is an action or proceeding of a civil nature, extraordinary *408 in the sense that it can be maintained only when there is no other adequate remedy and designed to enforce clear legal rights or the performance of ministerial duties which are enjoined by law; but the writ will not be issued to enforce an alleged right which is in doubt.' Not only must the plaintiff show that he has a clear legal right; he must show that the opposing party is under legal obligation to perform the act or to grant the relief for the performance or enforcement of which the action is prosecuted. * * * 'McIntosh, North Carolina Practice and Procedure, Second Edition, Volume 2, Section 2445.

In our opinion, the petitioner is not entitled to the writ he seeks and we so hold; therefore, the judgment from which this appeal was taken is

Affirmed.

In re ADVISORY OPINION TO THE GOVERNOR (Appointment to Fill Vacancy
In Office of Lieutenant Governor).

No. 96-565-M.P.
Jan. 22, 1997.

Governor filed request for written opinion concerning his authority to fill vacancy in office of lieutenant governor. The Supreme Court held that: (1) governor had authority under Rhode Island Constitution to fill vacancy in office of lieutenant governor for remainder of four-year term for that constitutional office after lieutenant governor vacated his office by assuming office as member of United States House of Representatives, and (2) lieutenant governor appointed by governor to fill vacancy in that office would be expected to serve until next general election, unless General Assembly were to take action that diminished or shortened such period of service.

Opinion

To His Excellency Lincoln Almond, Governor of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations.

We have received from Your Excellency a request for our written opinion in accordance with article 10, section 3, of the Rhode Island Constitution on the following question.

“Does the Governor have authority pursuant to Article 9, Section 5 of the Rhode Island Constitution to fill a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of a four-year term for that constitutional office?”

Upon receipt of your request, the court invited briefs to be filed by those who were proponents of the Governor's power to appoint and also by those who opposed the purported appointive power of the Governor in respect to filling the vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor. Briefs were filed by the executive counsel to the Governor and the Attorney General, who supported the Governor's appointive power. Briefs were filed on behalf of the Rhode Island House of Representatives and its Speaker and on behalf of the Majority Leader of the Rhode Island Senate, opposing the purported appointive power of the Governor to fill the vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor.

All parties agree that the office of Lieutenant Governor became vacant by operation of law on January 7, 1997, when the incumbent *290 Lieutenant Governor, Robert A. Weygand, assumed office as a member of the United States House of Representatives. This action on his part vacated his office as Lieutenant Governor pursuant to the provisions of article 3, section 6, of the Rhode Island Constitution, which forbid any person holding office under the government of the United States to act as a general officer of this state or as a member of the General Assembly. It is undisputed that Lieutenant Governor Weygand took the oath of office as a member of the United States Congress on January 7, 1997, and that his doing so created a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor.

The Governor argues that he has the power to appoint a person to fill this vacancy pursuant to article 9, section 5, of the Rhode Island Constitution which reads as follows:

“Authority to fill vacancies.—The governor may fill vacancies in office not otherwise provided for by this Constitution or by law, until the same shall be filled by the general assembly, or by the people.”

I

Propriety of the Request

[1] Neither the proponents nor the opponents of the Governor's appointive power have challenged the propriety of this request. We have stated on numerous occasions that we shall give an advisory opinion to the Governor on a matter that has a bearing on a present constitutional duty awaiting performance by the Governor. See, e.g., In re Advisory From The Governor, 633 A.2d 664, 666 (R.I.1993); In re Advisory Opinion (Chief Justice), 507 A.2d 1316, 1319 (R.I.1986); In re Request for Advisory Opinion Regarding House Bill 83-H-5640, 472 A.2d 301, 302 (R.I.1984).

The present request asks our opinion concerning the power of the Governor to appoint a person to fill a vacancy in a constitutional office for the remainder of the prior incumbent's term. This question certainly has a bearing upon the performance of a constitutional duty by the Governor, and thus the request is appropriate and requires our written response.

II

Existence of the Power

[2] The provisions of article 9, section 5, of the Rhode Island Constitution are straightforward and unambiguous. The Governor is endowed by these provisions with the authority (not mandatory) to "fill vacancies in office not otherwise provided for by this Constitution or by law, until the same shall be filled by the general assembly, or by the people." The Senate and the House as amici agree that there is no specific provision in the State Constitution for the filling of a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor. This is contrasted with the clearly focused provisions contained in article 4, section 4, of the Constitution, which provide for filling of a vacancy in the offices of the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, or the General Treasurer by the Grand Committee of the General Assembly. This section also authorizes the Governor to appoint some person to fill such a vacancy until a successor is elected by the General Assembly and is qualified to act.

The House and the Senate are in consonance in contending that although the Constitution does not provide for the filling of a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor, save by the general provisions of article 9, section 5, the provisions of that section are nevertheless not triggered by a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor. They argue that other provisions of the Constitution provide for transfer of the functions of the office of Lieutenant Governor in his absence or inability to serve for any cause. For example, the Constitution does provide for the election of a person to preside over the Senate in the absence of the Lieutenant Governor in article 8, section 3. This section reads as follows:

"Presiding officer in absence of lieutenant governor.-If by reason of death, resignation, absence, or other cause, the lieutenant governor is not present, to preside in the senate, the senate shall elect one of its own members to preside during such absence or vacancy; and until such election is made by the senate, the secretary of state shall preside. The presiding *291 officer of the senate shall preside in grand committee and in joint assembly."

The Constitution also provides in article 9, section 10, that in the event of a vacancy in both the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor, the Speaker of the House of Representatives "shall in like manner fill the office of governor during such vacancy." The amici House and Senate also contend that historical precedents under both the Charter of King Charles II of 1663 and the prior Constitution of 1843 militate against the propriety of a gubernatorial appointment of a person to fill a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor.<sup>1</sup>

[3] We confirm our observation contained in Kass v. Retirement Board of the Employees' Retirement System, 567 A.2d 358, 360 (R.I.1989), that " 'a page of history is worth a volume of logic' in determining the extent of state as well as federal constitutional limitations," quoting Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes in New York Trust Co. v. Eisner, 256 U.S. 345, 349, 41 S.Ct. 506, 507, 65 L.Ed. 963, 983 (1921). Nevertheless, we also adhere to the proposition that when a constitutional provision is clear and unambiguous, we must accord its provisions their plain and ordinary meaning, City of Pawtucket v. Sundlun, 662 A.2d 40, 45 (R.I.1995); In re Advisory Opinion to the Governor, 612 A.2d 1, 7 (R.I.1992), and "no word or section must be assumed to have been unnecessarily used or needlessly added." Kennedy v. Cumberland Engineering Co., 471 A.2d 195, 198 (R.I.1984). Historical anecdotal occurrences cannot overcome a clear and unambiguous grant of constitutional power.

[4] We also agree, as we set forth in Kass, that historically the power of the General Assembly has been plenary and unlimited, save as this authority may have been limited by the Constitution of the United States and/or the Constitution of the State of Rhode Island. 567 A.2d at 360. Unlike the United States Congress, the Rhode Island General Assembly does not look to our State Constitution for grants of power. In re Advisory Opinion to the House of Representatives, 485 A.2d 550, 553 (R.I.1984); Payne & Butler v. Providence Gas Co., 31 R.I. 295, 316, 77 A. 145, 154 (1910). "Accordingly, this court has consistently adhered to the view that the General Assembly possessed 'all of the powers inhering in sovereignty other than those which the constitution textually commits to the other branches of our state government and that those that are not so committed * * * are powers reserved to the general assembly.'" Kass, 567 A.2d at 361 (quoting Nugent v. City of East Providence, 103 R.I. 518, 525-26, 238 A.2d 758, 762 (1968)). In answering the question propounded by the Governor, we must look to the text of article 9, section 5, to determine whether that provision of our Constitution endows the Governor with the power to fill a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor. We believe that it does in clear and unambiguous terms.

Although article 8, section 3, of the Constitution provides for the performance of functions by others "[i]f by reason of death, resignation, absence, or other cause, the lieutenant governor is not present," no provision purports to deal with the filling of a vacancy in that office save the general provisions of article 9, section 5. Consequently this section is controlling.

In answering the question propounded by Your Excellency, the justices of this court do not purport to comment upon policy questions relating to the desirability or the necessity of filling a vacancy in this general office but only respond to the question concerning the power of the Governor to do so. We are of the opinion that article 9, section 5, allows the Governor to fill any vacancy that is not otherwise provided for by the Constitution or by law.

*292 Given the plenary authority of the General Assembly, we have little doubt that it could have enacted a statute providing for the filling of a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor as has been suggested by the Attorney General in his brief. We find no express prohibition in the Constitution withholding such power, nor is it forbidden by necessary implication.<sup>2</sup> Nevertheless, the General Assembly has not enacted such a statute, and therefore, the Governor's power to appoint is clearly authorized by article 9, section 5, of the Constitution.

III

Duration of Such Appointment

[5] In light of our recognition of the plenary power of the General Assembly, we cannot say unequivocally that absent death, resignation, or other circumstances causing an additional vacancy a person appointed by the Governor pursuant to article 9, section 5, would serve until the next general election. We are of the opinion that such person would be expected to serve for that period unless the General Assembly were to take action that might diminish or shorten such period of service by providing another method for filling the vacancy for the remainder of the term of office. See, e.g., Casey v. Willey, 89 R.I. 87, 96-97, 151 A.2d 369, 374 (1959); In re Filling of Vacancies by the Governor (Railroad Comm'r), 28 R.I. 602, 606, 67 A. 802, 803 (1907). In issuing this caveat, we do not purport to determine the validity of any such actions as might be taken by the General Assembly subsequent to an appointment by the Governor but only to indicate that such an action might have a significant bearing upon the term during which the person appointed to the vacant office of Lieutenant Governor might serve. However, we reiterate that the Governor's constitutional authority to fill vacancies "is only for a temporary purpose-until the normal elective power shall act." In re Filling of Vacancies by the Governor, 28 R.I. at 606, 67 A. at 803. With respect to the office of Lieutenant Governor, "the normal elective power" is the people. The General Assembly has not yet attempted to act in order to invoke this elective power and we have no way of knowing whether it will do so before the existing term of office expires, or if it does act, whether such actions as it may decide to take would be valid.

For the reasons stated, we answer the question addressed to us by the Governor in the affirmative with the caveat that action by the General Assembly might affect the length of the term that such an appointee might serve.

LEDERBERG, Justice, dissenting.

I respectfully disagree with the majority's conclusion that section 5 of article 9 of the Rhode Island Constitution authorizes a Governor to fill by appointment a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor. Rather, section 5 of article 9 grants a limited and defined power to a governor to fill only those vacancies "not otherwise provided for by this Constitution or by law." The section does not endow a governor with authority to fill a vacancy in the constitutional office of Lieutenant Governor because the Constitution provides that the people shall elect a Lieutenant Governor. It is inconceivable that the *293 framers intended that a vacancy in that particular constitutional office be filled "by appointment" by the Governor for the very reason that the majority recognizes, namely, "other provisions of the constitution provide for the performance of [the] functions " of that office during any such vacancy. Hence, such a vacancy is "otherwise provided for."

The constitution assigns two duties to the Lieutenant Governor: first, to serve as the presiding officer of the Senate and the Grand Committee, R.I. Const. art. 8, sec. 2, and second, to accede to the governorship in the event of a vacancy in that office, R.I. Const. art. 9, sec. 9. The constitution specifically provides that, in the absence of the Lieutenant Governor, "the senate shall elect one of its own members to preside." Article 8, section 3. In fact, even the Lieutenant Governor's duty to preside over the Senate and the Grand Committee will expire on January 14, 2003, at which time "the senate shall elect its president, who shall preside in the senate and in grand committee." Article 8, section 2. In respect to the unlikely event that vacancies arise in the offices of both Governor and Lieutenant Governor, the Constitution provides that the Speaker of the House of Representatives would accede to the governorship. R.I. Const. art. 9, sec. 10. Thus, by expressly providing for the assumption of all duties assigned to the Lieutenant Governor, the Constitution has thereby plainly "provided for" the eventuality of a vacancy in that office. Consequently, the Governor's authority under article 9, section 5, to fill vacancies that are "not otherwise provided for" clearly does not apply to a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor.

My colleagues aptly assert that "[a] page of history is worth a volume of logic." Happily, in this case, we do not require volumes of logic to compel the conclusion that the office is to remain vacant in the event of absence, inability, or vacancy. And, in fact, there are volumes of history to support this conclusion.

In each instance that the office of Lieutenant Governor has become vacant since the adoption of the Constitution of 1843, the position has remained vacant until the people elected a Lieutenant Governor at the following election. "Our task in construing constitutions is to give effect to the intent of the framers." City of Pawtucket v. Sundhm, 662 A.2d 40, 45 (R.I.1995). In so doing, it is appropriate for this Court to consult extrinsic sources and to "look to the history of the times and examine the state of affairs as they existed when the [provisions were] framed and adopted." Id. In this case, the historical record reveals seven occasions when the office of Lieutenant Governor became vacant. Rhode Island Manual at 205-13 (1991-1994).

In July 1853, just eleven years after the Constitution was adopted, the Lieutenant Governor acceded when the Governor resigned, and the office of lieutenant governor remained vacant for ten months (out of a twelve-month term) until May 1855. In September 1862, the Lieutenant Governor resigned after his election to the United States Senate, and the office of Lieutenant Governor remained unoccupied for eight months until May 1863. In February 1928, the Lieutenant Governor acceded upon the death of the Governor, and the office of Lieutenant Governor became vacant for eleven months (of a two-year term) until January 1929. From April 1944 to January 1945, a period of nine months, the Lieutenant Governor's office was unoccupied after the Lieutenant Governor resigned to accept a judicial appointment. From October 1945 to January 1947, the Lieutenant Governor's office was vacant for fifteen months of a two-year term, when the Governor resigned and the Lieutenant Governor acceded. In December 1950, the Governor again resigned, and the Lieutenant Governor acceded to his office, creating a vacancy in the Lieutenant Governor's office until January 1951. Finally, in April 1956, the Lieutenant Governor resigned upon his appointment to Superior Court, and the office of lieutenant governor remained vacant for nine months until January 1957. There is no evidence in the historical record that the Governor, or for that matter the General Assembly, ever filled or attempted to fill any of these vacancies by appointing a new Lieutenant Governor.

The majority refers in footnote 1 supra to “numerous instances under the Constitution of 1843 when vacancies in the office of Lieutenant Governor either were filled by the *294 Grand Committee or were left vacant” and notes that the “historical outline is interesting but scarcely controlling [because w]e must construe the current provisions of the Constitution of 1986.” As the historical outline clearly reveals, however, vacancies in the office of Lieutenant Governor were never filled after the 1843 Constitution was adopted.<sup>3</sup> Moreover, the provision of the 1986 Constitution we are asked to construe, namely article 9, section 5, is identical to article 7, section 5, of the 1843 Constitution. Ergo, history in this case is not merely “interesting” but is compelling and conclusive as well.

Changes in the constitutional framework of government should not be effectuated without the approval of the people: “the constitution which at any time exists, till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all.” R.I. Const. art. 1, sec. 1 (quoting the Father of his Country). The comprehensive review of our constitution in 1986 presented an opportunity for the framers to provide for filling this vacancy by appointment had they intended that the office should not remain vacant. For example, article 4, section 4, in contrast, does direct that vacancies in the constitutional offices of Secretary of State, General Treasurer, and Attorney General be filled by the General Assembly. That section specifically grants power to the Governor to fill vacancies in these three offices in the event the Legislature is not in session, but such appointees serve only “until a successor elected by the general assembly is qualified to act.”

The majority's conclusion misapplies the constitutional history of this state and fails to defer to a century and a half of this court's jurisprudence on the respective powers of the legislative and executive departments. “[T]he power of the General Assembly in this state, as in other states, has been plenary and unlimited, save as this authority may have been limited by the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of Rhode Island.” Kass v. Retirement Board of the Employees' Retirement System, 567 A.2d 358, 360 (R.I.1989). The framers “stoutly * * * refused to vest the executive department with full executive powers.” Gorham v. Robinson, 57 R.I. 1, 23, 186 A. 832, 844 (1936). Fourteen years after the adoption of the 1842 Constitution, this Court recognized the extremely limited power of the executive, stating that “[t]he executive power had been nominal, merely, under the charter; and the constitution extends it very little.” G & D Taylor & Co. v. Place, 4 R.I. 324, 349-50 (1856). And, only a year ago, this court concluded that “the executive department-chief executive has today essentially the same limited powers first given in 1842. All that have been added in the intervening one hundred and fifty-three years since that time, are the Governor's limited pardoning and veto powers.” Narragansett Indian Tribe v. State, 667 A.2d 280, 281 (R.I.1995).

In spite of the ample history of the office of Lieutenant Governor remaining vacant and in disdain of our unwavering precedents that have construed the Governor's power as “nominal” and “limited,” my colleagues read the catchall provision of article 9, section 5, as providing the remarkable enumerated power to appoint a constitutional officer. The majority does this notwithstanding our previous interpretation of this section as “only a power given to the executive for general convenience in case some other custodian of it has not been provided, and it is only for a temporary purpose-until the normal elective power shall act.” (Emphasis *295 added.) In re Filling of Vacancies by the Governor (Railroad Comm'r), 28 R.I. 602, 606, 67 A. 802, 803 (1907).

It is my opinion that one cannot extract from article 9, section 5, the grant of the extraordinary executive power to appoint the Lieutenant Governor, a constitutional general officer, who, by the very mandate of the Constitution, must be elected by the citizens of this state. “[S]uch a construction would go far beyond any meaning which can be legitimately deduced from the text and would be an attempt to stretch its provisions to include circumstances not contemplated by those who framed it.” 28 R.I. at 606, 67 A. at 804.

- 1 The amici and our colleague cite numerous instances under the charter when the General Assembly filled vacancies in the office of deputy governor and numerous instances under the Constitution of 1843 when vacancies in the office of Lieutenant Governor either were filled by the Grand Committee or were left vacant. This historical outline is interesting but scarcely controlling. We must construe the current provisions of the Constitution of 1986. Moreover, the mere fact that a constitutional power has not been exercised does not prove that the power does not exist.
- 2 The maxim "expressio unius est exclusio alterius" is too weak a foundation upon which to rest a prohibition based upon necessary implication. See Opinion of the Court to the Governor in the Matter of the Constitutional Convention, 55 R.I. 56, 69-73, 178 A. 433, 440-41 (1935). The requirement of article 4, section 4, of the Rhode Island Constitution that vacancies in the office of the Secretary of State, the Attorney General, or the General Treasurer be filled in a certain manner is not inconsistent with an exercise of power by the General Assembly to provide by law for the filling of a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor in a different or, indeed, in a similar manner. 55 R.I. at 69-73, 178 A. at 440-41.
- 3 The record reveals one instance in which a vacancy in the position of Lieutenant Governor-elect was filled by the General Assembly. On December 16, 1901, governor-elect William Gregory died, and Charles Kimball, who at the time was both incumbent Lieutenant Governor and Lieutenant Governor-elect, became Governor. Rhode Island Manual at 206-07, 212-13 (1991-1994). On February 18, 1902, the Grand Committee elected George Shepley to the position of Lieutenant Governor. It appears that the authority for this election was section 3 of amendment XI to the Constitution of 1843, which is substantially the same as article 4, section 3, of the 1986 Constitution, pertaining to vacancies among general officers-elect, and not any general authority to fill vacancies arising during the term of office of Lieutenant Governor. In any event, history provides no precedent of a Governor's filling a vacancy in the lieutenant governorship, which is the issue before us.

1. GOVERNOR, SUCCESSION TO OFFICE—DEVOLUTION OF POWERS AND DUTIES—DEATH OF PERSON ELECTED GOVERNOR PRIOR TO INDUCTION INTO OFFICE—LAW FOUND IN CONSTITUTION OF OHIO, ARTICLE III, SECTION 2—FORCE AND EFFECT OF ANY LAW ENACTED BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY.
  2. PERSON ELECTED GOVERNOR—ENTITLED TO HOLD OFFICE, DISCHARGE DUTIES AND RECEIVE EMOLUMENTS, TERM OF TWO YEARS, COMMENCING ON SECOND MONDAY OF JANUARY, NEXT AFTER ELECTION AND UNTIL SUCCESSOR ELECTED AND QUALIFIED.
  3. WHERE PERSON ELECTED GOVERNOR DIES SUBSEQUENT TO ELECTION AND PRIOR TO SECOND MONDAY IN JANUARY NEXT FOLLOWING—PERSON HOLDING OFFICE ENTITLED TO CONTINUE UNTIL SUCCESSOR ELECTED AND QUALIFIED.

4. "GOVERNOR" — "GOVERNOR-ELECT" — IF PERSON ELECTED GOVERNOR SHOULD DIE BEFORE INDUCTION INTO OFFICE, DUTIES AND POWERS OF OFFICE WOULD NOT DEVOLVE UPON LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR.

SYLLABUS:

1. The entire law governing the succession to the office of governor and the devolution of the powers and duties thereof in the event of the death of the person elected to such office prior to his induction thereinto is set out in the Constitution of Ohio and, consequently, an act prescribing a method of such succession or devolution different from that provided for by the Constitution, would, if enacted by the General Assembly, be unconstitutional and without any force and effect in law.

2. Under Section 2 of Article III of the Constitution of Ohio, a person elected to the office of governor is entitled to hold such office and discharge the duties and receive the emoluments thereof for a term of two years commencing on the second Monday of January next after his election, and until his successor is elected and qualified.

3. Where the person elected to the office of governor dies subsequent to his election thereto and prior to the second Monday in January next following, the person holding said office is entitled to hold the same beyond the term for which he was elected and continue therein until his successor is elected and qualified.

4. The term "governor," as the same appears in Section 15 of Article III of the Constitution of Ohio, does not include "governor-elect" and, consequently, if a person elected to the office of governor should die before being inducted into said office, the duties and powers thereof would not devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

Columbus, Ohio, February 3, 1947

Hon. Thos. E. Bateman, Clerk of the Senate
Columbus, Ohio

Dear Sir:

This will acknowledge receipt of a copy of Senate Resolution No. 21, adopted by the Senate of the 97th General Assembly, which resolution reads as follows:

"Relative to a successor to a governor in case of death of a governor-elect prior to taking office.

WHEREAS, The importance of deciding the successor to a governor-elect who dies before the term of office for which he was elected commences is being forcibly brought to the attention of the public, and

WHEREAS, The constitution of Ohio, in Article 3, Section 2, seems to indicate that the incumbent governor might hold his office until a successor is elected and qualified, and

WHEREAS, This constitutional provision is ambiguous when applied to the situation above stated, and

WHEREAS, It is desirable that this question be determined in order that the orderly processes of the state government might continue in the event of such happenings, now

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED, By the Ohio Senate that the attorney general of Ohio is hereby requested for an opinion as to the constitutional authority of the General Assembly to enact laws designating the person to assume the office of governor in the event that the governor-elect should die between the date of his election and the date of the beginning of the term of office for which he was elected."

A search of the Constitution and the statutes of Ohio reveals but three sections of the former which appear to be pertinent to the question concerning the devolution of the duties of the office of governor in the event of the death of the governor-elect before being inducted into office. Said sections, to-wit, Sections 1, 2 and 15 of Article III of the Constitution of Ohio, read as follows:

Section 1. "The executive department shall consist of a governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, auditor of state, treasurer of state, and an attorney general, who shall be elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, by the electors of the state, and at the places of voting for members of the general assembly."

Section 2. "The governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, treasurer, and attorney general shall hold their offices for two years; and the auditor for four years. Their terms of office shall commence on the second Monday of January next after their election, and continue until their successors are elected and qualified."

Section 15. "In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office, for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor."

It is apparent from an examination of the above sections that if the answer to the aforesaid question is to be found at all, it must be found therein. In such case, there is left no room for the operation of statutes prescribing the manner in which such duties shall devolve upon the happening of said contingency. In other words, if the above provisions of the Constitution, in their operation, are thought to be unsatisfactory, the power to effect a change therein rests with the people themselves and not with the General Assembly.

Therefore, if the question presented by your resolution is to be answered categorically, it must be stated that the General Assembly is without constitutional authority to enact laws designating the person to assume the duties of the office of governor in the event the governor-elect should die between the date of his election and the date of the beginning of the term of office for which he was elected, or perhaps, expressed more accurately, any laws which might be enacted by the General Assembly which would prescribe a method other than that provided for by the Constitution would be unconstitutional and, consequently, without any force and effect.

However, since your resolution calls attention to the importance of deciding who the successor to a governor-elect would be in the event of his death prior to the commencement of the term for which he was elected, and in order that the initial steps to effectuate a constitutional amendment may be taken by the General Assembly in the event that body, in its wisdom, decides that the constitutional procedure now in force is unsatisfactory, I shall proceed with a consideration of said question.

First, and possibly of paramount importance in the resolution thereof, are the concluding words of Section 2 of Article III of the Constitution. Said section, if dissected and only those parts thereof pertaining to the office of governor exposed, would read:

"The governor shall hold his office for two years and his term of office shall commence on the second Monday of January next after his election and continue until his successor is elected and qualified."

From this it is manifest that unless a successor to an incumbent governor has been elected and is qualified to enter upon the office of governor on the date of the commencement of the term, such incumbent governor will hold over beyond the term for which he was elected. There is certainly no ambiguity of language here which can cast doubt on such conclusion.

It becomes necessary, then, to determine the scope in meaning of the word "successor". The question is: Does such word include, under certain circumstances, the person elected as lieutenant governor for a term commencing at the expiration of the term for which the incumbent governor was elected? I find myself unable to reach such conclusion.

Webster's New International Dictionary, Second Edition, defines "successor" as "* * * one who succeeds to a throne, title, or estate, or is elected or appointed to an office. * * * vacated by another." It will be noted that under the provisions of Section 15 of Article III of the Constitution, the lieutenant governor does not, in case of the happening of any of the contingencies enumerated therein, succeed to the office of governor. Said section provides "* * * the powers and duties of the office * * * shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor." The definition of "devolve" appearing in Webster's New International Dictionary, Second Edition, is "To transfer from one person to another." Therefore, since the lieutenant governor, when called upon to exercise the powers and duties of the office of governor which may have devolved upon him by reason of said constitutional provision, in no sense becomes governor, it is difficult to perceive how he can, in such case, be regarded as a "successor to the governor."

This precise question was before the Supreme Court of Wisconsin in State, ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, 228 Wis., 645, wherein constitutional provisions similar to those of Ohio were under consideration. In said case, decided by the court in 1938, it was held:

"3. Under Section 7, Article V, Constitution, the powers and duties of the office of governor devolve on the lieutenant governor during a vacancy in the office of governor, but the lieutenant governor does not become governor, and remains lieutenant governor, on whom devolves the powers and duties of governor, and in such contingency no vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor; but under Section 8, Article V, there may be a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor as a result of impeachment, displacement, resignation, death, or incapacitating disease."

See also: State, ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 97 Mont., 252; State, ex rel. Hardin v. Sadler, 23 Nev., 356; People, ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 114 Cal., 168.

This brings me to the next point. In order to conclude that the lieutenant governor would succeed to the office of governor in the event of the death of the person elected to the latter office prior to the commencement of the term for which he was elected, it would, of course, be necessary to construe the word "governor" as it appears in Section 15 of Article III of the Constitution as including "governor-elect."

The word "governor" appears throughout the Constitution in numerous sections. Section 5 of Article III of the Constitution provides that the supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in the governor. Certainly, nobody would contend for one moment that the supreme executive authority of this state is vested in the person elected to the office of governor prior to the time that he is inducted into said office.

Section 8 of Article III of the Constitution empowers the governor to convene the General Assembly in special session. In view of this, could it be tenably argued that the governor-elect could exercise this power? The Constitution (Section 16, Article II) provides that if the governor signs a bill passed by the General Assembly it shall become law. It would certainly require no argument to convince a court that an act of the General Assembly, signed by the governor-elect, has no force and effect. In Section 11 of Article III of the Constitution it is provided that the governor shall have power, after conviction, to grant reprieves, commutations and pardons for crimes. No argument, ingenious though it might be, could release a convict from the penitentiary on a pardon signed by the governor-elect. Section 2 of Article XVII of the Constitution empowers the governor to fill by appointment any vacancy which may occur in any elective state office, other than that of a member of the General Assembly or of governor. Certainly, no one could be found who is bold enough to assert that an appointment to fill a vacancy in a state office could be made by the governor-elect.

Therefore, if the word "governor," as the same appears in the above, and many other sections of the Constitution, can only mean the person who, after being elected to the office of governor, has entered upon his term, no logical or sensible argument could be advanced why said word should be given a different and broader meaning when it appears in Section 15 of Article III of the Constitution.

It is a familiar rule of construction that the same word or phrase, when used in different statutes, should be given the same meaning in each. In this regard, it is stated in 37 O. Jur., 573:

"The same word or phrase when employed in different acts by the same body ought generally to be understood to mean the same thing. Indeed, where the language of an existing statute is ambiguous and the legislature by a previous enactment upon the same subject has, in express language or by clear and indubitable inference, clearly indicated the meaning of the ambiguous word or phrase used in such statute, it will be presumed, in the absence of a later expression to the contrary, to have used the word or phrase in subsequent legislation in the same sense. Accordingly, the meaning of similar terms in other statutes has been used as an aid in determining the meaning of such ambiguous term in the statute under consideration—especially where the statutes containing the similar provisions have been the subject of judicial interpretation. * * *"

See: State, ex rel. v. Tomlinson, 99 O. S. 233; Iroquois Co. v. Meyer, 80 O. S. 676; Heckman v. Adams, 50 O. S. 305; State, ex rel. v. Conn, 110 O. S., 404; Cincinnati Traction Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, 113 O. S. 618.

It is likewise well settled that the rules governing the construction of statutes are applicable to the construction of constitutions. McMahon v. Keller, 11 O. App. 410; Miami County v. Dayton, 92 O. S. 215; Shryock v. Zanesville, 92 O. S. 375. In the latter case, it was stated at page 383:

"In construing constitutional provisions the court must apply the same general rules governing the construction of statutes, mindful, however, of the limitation that in such construction a strict rather than a liberal construction should be had; but after all, the real intention of the body framing the law, be it constitutional convention or general assembly, must be ascertained, if humanly possible, and gives full effect."

An officer-elect is defined in Webster's New International Dictionary, Second Edition, as "A person chosen to an office, but not yet actually inducted into it."

In the case of Cordell v. Frizell, 1 Nev. 130, decided by the Supreme Court of Nevada in 1865, the court, in commenting on the distinction between an officer and an officer-elect, stated at page 132:

"The only question for us to determine is, was the relator, on the 31st day of October, 1864 (the day the Constitution took effect), a county officer under the laws of the territory of Nevada? Counsel for relator say the Constitution applies the term 'officer,' as well to those elected as to those who are actually in office, and refer us to several sections where the word officer is used when alluding, not to those in office, but to those elected to fill an office at a future day. Those who have been elected but not inducted into office, are, properly speaking, officers-elect—those in office are simply officers—those who have been in office, but have gone out, are properly ex-officers. It is very proper, in either conversation or writing, when speaking of an officer elect, to leave off the suffix, and style him simply an officer, if the context of the sentence shows you are speaking of one not yet inducted into office, but who is to be at a future day; so, too, in speaking of an ex-officer, you may leave off the prefix under like circumstances. But if the term 'officer' is used in a sentence where there is nothing to qualify or control its meaning, everybody understands it refers to an officer then holding and enjoying the office."

In view of the above, I find myself impelled to the conclusion that the word "governor", as used in Section 15 of Article III of the Constitution, means the person holding the office of governor and not the person elected thereto who has not yet entered upon his term.

In reaching the above conclusion, I am not unmindful of the case of State, ex rel. Martin v. Heil, 242 Wis. 41, wherein it was held by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin that:

"The word 'governor,' in general, means the person elected as chief executive official of a state, and the word 'governor,' as used in Section 7, Article V, Constitution, includes, not only a qualified and acting governor, but also a governor-elect who has not qualified and who dies before the beginning of the term for which he was elected."

In discussing the meaning of the word "governor" in Section 7 of Article V of the Constitution of Wisconsin, which contains provisions substantially similar to those of Section 15 of Article III of the Constitution of Ohio, it was stated by Wickhem, J., at page 52:

"* * * The first question to be answered is whether the language of Section 7 so clearly and unambiguously supports the position of counsel for the incumbent that it is not open to construction. It is our conclusion that it does not. The use of the word 'governor' in Section 7 does not unambiguously exclude 'governor-elect.' The term 'governor-elect' is a merely statutory designation, and not a constitutional word. There is no reason, so far as rules having to do with the use of language generally are concerned, why the term 'governor' may not include 'governor elect' for a particular term, and it is a particular term that the Constitution deals with in Section 7. Webster's dictionary defines governor as 'the person elected as chief executive official of a state in the United States. * * *' It requires no more interpolation to hold that the term 'governor' includes 'governor-elect' than it does to limit it to 'qualified and acting' governor. We see no reason why the word 'governor' as used in Section 7 may not reasonably be taken to include an elected governor who has not qualified."

Since the above statement, which has utterly failed to work conviction in my mind, is all that appears in the opinion as a basis for the holding of the court on this point, I feel that such holding can be cast aside with perfect impunity and without qualm of conscience.

There remains one more cogent reason why the powers and duties of the office of governor would not, under the circumstances set out in your resolution, devolve upon the lieutenant governor. It is to be noted that Section 15 of Article III of the Constitution provides that in case of the death, etc., of the governor, the powers and duties of the office, "for the residue of the term," shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

"Residue" is defined in Webster's New International Dictionary, Second Edition, as "that which remains after a part is taken, separated, removed or designated; remnant; remainder; rest." "Residue," as defined by Bouvier, is that which remains of something after taking away some part of it. See also: Stevens v. Flower, 46 N. J. Eq. 340; Morgan v. Huggins, 48 Fed. 3; Ricker v. Brown, 183 Mass. 424; United States v. Crary, 2 F. Supp. 870.

Therefore, since "residue" in its natural and popular sense signifies what is left of a number or quantity or period of time after something has been taken therefrom, the duties of the office of governor, were they to devolve upon the lieutenant governor immediately upon the latter's induction into office, which, under Section 2 of Article III of the Constitution, is simultaneous with the induction of the governor into office, clearly would not devolve for the residue of the term of the governor. The fact that the word "residue" is written into the section clearly indicates that a part of the term must have elapsed before the powers and duties of the office of governor could devolve upon the lieutenant governor, and, consequently, it would follow that the governor must have entered upon his term of office before the constitutional provision under discussion would apply.

Up to this point, with the exception of State, ex rel. Martin v. Heil, supra, wherein constitutional provisions unlike those in Ohio govern, I have not brought attention to any decisions dealing with the main question before me. While neither of the following cases is exactly in point with the factual situation presented in your resolution, I, nevertheless, feel that the reasoning in each is persuasive and should be given consideration.

In State, ex rel. Thayer v. Boyd, 31 Neb. 682, the Supreme Court of Nebraska had before it a case wherein the person receiving the highest number of votes for the office of governor was ineligible, under the constitution, to be elected. The constitutional provisions applicable were set out in Sections 1 and 16 of Article V of the Constitution of Nebraska then in force (1891). Said sections read:

“Section 16. In case of the death, impeachment, and notice thereof to the accused, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the state, or other disability of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall be removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.”

Notwithstanding the fact that the latter section, above quoted, named as one of the contingencies upon the happening of which the duties of the office of governor would devolve upon the lieutenant governor, the failure of the governor to qualify, the court held that the incumbent governor held over for the full term succeeding that for which he was elected. In commenting on the import of the above constitutional provisions the court stated:

“The provisions of the first section are plain and unambiguous. It provides that the governor shall hold his office for two years, ‘and until his successor is elected and qualified.’ If Section 1 stood alone it could not be successfully disputed that it was not only the privilege, but the duty of the governor to hold the office until his successor shall be duly elected and qualified. (People v. Osborne, 7 Col., 605; Tappan v. Gray, 9 Paige, 506; People v. Bissell, 49 Cal., 407; People v. Whitman, 10 Id., 38; State v. McMullen, 46 Ind., 307; State v. Lusk, 18 Mo., 333; Commonwealth v. Hanley, 9 Pa. St., 513; State v. Jenkins, 43 Mo., 261; State v. McMillen, 23 Neb., 389; Carr v. Wilson, 32 W. Va., 419.)

Under the provisions of Section 16, quoted above, the duties of the office of governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor in certain contingencies, among which are the failure of the governor elect to qualify, and disability of the governor. The words 'other disability,' as used in the section, have no reference to the ineligibility of the person to be elected to the office, but were intended by the framers of the constitution to cover any disability of the governor not specifically enumerated in the section, occurring after the commencement of his term of office. The failure to elect a governor, on account of the ineligibility of the person receiving the highest number of votes for the office, is not a disability of the governor."

Another case which should be given consideration is Ex parte Lawhorne, 18 Grattan 85, decided by the Court of Appeals of Virginia in 1868. Since the constitutional provisions in this case made the governor ineligible for the same office for the term next succeeding that for which he was elected, and notwithstanding this fact the court held that the governor, whose term had expired, held over until his successor was elected and qualified, I am constrained to regard the same as of compelling force in the instant case.

The report of that case shows that Francis Pierpont was elected and qualified as governor of that state for the term of four years from the 1st day of January, 1864. On the 13th day of January, 1868, no successor to him having been elected or qualified, Governor Pierpont granted a full and immediate pardon to James Lawhorne, who was then confined in the penitentiary under a sentence for grand larceny. The superintendent of the penitentiary refused to release him on the ground that Pierpont's term of office had expired on January 1, 1868. Lawhorne applied to the court for a writ of habeas corpus.

Section 22 of Article VI of the Constitution of Virginia, then in force, provided that "judges and all other officers, whether elected or appointed, shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices, after their terms of service have expired, until their successors are qualified."

Section 1 of Article V of that constitution fixed the term of governor at four years, commencing on the first day of January succeeding his election, and made him ineligible to the same office for the term next succeeding that for which he was elected.

Section 8 provided for the election of a lieutenant governor at the same time, and for the same term as the governor.

Section 9 provided that "In case of the removal of the governor from office, or of his death, failure to qualify, resignation, removal from the state, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor; and the General Assembly shall provide by law for the discharge of the executive functions in other necessary cases."

The court held that the Constitution made it obligatory upon Pierpont to discharge the duties of the office of governor until his successor was qualified, and that the pardon granted by him was valid.

With respect to the governor's right to hold over, the court stated at page 87:

"* * * It is important, as before stated, that there should be some person always ready to perform the duties of every office; and when an incumbent has served out the term for which he was elected or appointed, who can be more suitable than he, as a general rule, to continue to discharge the duties of his office until his successor is qualified? He has been once elected or appointed to the office, and is therefore presumed to be fit for it. He has served out his term, and is therefore presumed to be familiar with its duties."

In the course of the court's discussion concerning the constitutional provisions prohibiting two successive terms of office, it was stated:

"Much stress is laid on the first of these sections, which declares the governor, after holding the office for the term of four years, to 'be ineligible to the same office for the term next succeeding that for which he was elected,' &c., from which an intention is inferred to make him incapable of continuing to discharge the duties of his office after the expiration of his term of service. But this is not a well-founded inference. The policy of making him ineligible to the same office for the next succeeding term was to avoid exposing him to the temptation of using means afforded him by his office to secure his re-election to the same office, or his election to another office during his term of service. There was no reason whatever for rendering him incompetent to continue to discharge the duties of his office after the expiration of his term of service and until the qualification of his successor. No policy of the law requires it. He cannot be supposed to have any agency, official or otherwise, in bringing about the occasion for such continuance. There is not a word in the constitution which either expresses or implies an intention to render him incompetent to continue to discharge the duties of his office on such an emergency. The words, 'and be ineligible to the same office for the term next succeeding that for which he was elected,' refer solely to a popular re-election for a full term of service, and not to his continuing, ex officio, when the occasion requires it, to discharge the duties of his office after his term of service has expired, and until his successor is qualified—an occasion which is not likely often to arise, nor to be of long continuance; but however often it may arise, or however long it may continue, or whatever may have produced it, the same principle applies to the case. * * *"

Before concluding, I might also invite attention to the fact that of the contingencies enumerated in Section 15 of Article III of the Constitution, only two, to-wit, death and other disability, can apply to a governor-elect. Impeachment, resignation and removal, if any one of such events occur, can operate only against the person holding the office and not the person elected thereto who has not yet entered upon the term. Certainly the person elected to the office of governor can not be impeached prior to the time that he is inducted into such office, nor can he resign from said office before such time, and obviously he can not be removed therefrom before he occupies it. To me it seems unlikely that the framers of the Constitution, when they named certain contingencies and then used the term "governor", intended such term to include persons who under no circumstances could have the contingencies named happen to them.

In view of the above, and without further prolonging this discussion which has perhaps been unduly extended, you are advised that in my opinion:

1. The entire law governing the succession to the office of governor and the devolution of the powers and duties thereof in the event of the death of the person elected to such office prior to his induction thereinto is set out in the Constitution of Ohio and, consequently, an act prescribing a method of such succession or devolution different from that provided for by the Constitution, would, if enacted by the General Assembly, be unconstitutional and without any force and effect in law.

2. Under Section 2 of Article III of the Constitution of Ohio, a person elected to the office of governor is entitled to hold such office and discharge the duties and receive the emoluments thereof for a term of two years commencing on the second Monday of January next after his election, and until his successor is elected and qualified.

3. Where the person elected to the office of governor dies subsequent to his election thereto and prior to the second Monday in January next following, the person holding said office is entitled to hold the same beyond the term for which he was elected and continue therein until his successor is elected and qualified.

4. The term "governor," as the same appears in Section 15 of Article III of the Constitution of Ohio, does not include "governor-elect" and, consequently, if a person elected to the office of governor should die before being inducted into said office, the duties and powers thereof would not devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

Respectfully,

HUGH S. JENKINS,
Attorney General.

On February 1, 2017, the Attorney General's Office received a request from state Senator David Johnson for a formal legal opinion regarding several provisions of the Iowa Constitution and the Iowa Code. Senator Johnson requested the opinion because President Donald Trump announced he intends to nominate Iowa Governor Terry Branstad as a United States Ambassador. To serve as an ambassador, Governor Branstad would have to resign his position as Governor of Iowa.

Senator Johnson requests an expedited-attorney general opinion exploring the succession provisions of the Iowa Constitution. See Iowa Code § 13.2(e) (setting forth the attorney general's authority to give written opinions when requested by a state officer); Iowa Admin. Code r. 61--1.5 (providing additional standards for requesting attorney general opinions). Essentially, Senator Johnson asks the Attorney General's Office to opine on what happens if and when Governor Branstad submits his resignation. Although some past Iowa governors have resigned, these specific questions have not arisen in Iowa before.

I. OPERATIVE CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS

The relevant provision of the Iowa Constitution is article IV, section 17, which is currently entitled "Lieutenant governor to act as governor." It provides:

In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17. This provision has never been amended. "[T]he purpose of art. IV, § 17 is to ensure that the citizens of Iowa are not without a person capable of performing the constitutional and statutory duties imposed upon a governor." 1980 Op. Att'y Gen. 550, 1980 WL 25903, at *3 (Iowa Att'y Gen. Jan. 2, 1980).

Several other state constitutions contain similar language that centers around the verb “devolve.” See, e.g., Ark. Const. art. 6, § 4; Idaho Const. art. IV, § 12; Nev. Const. art. 5, § 18; Okla. Const. art. 6, § 16; Tenn. Const. art. 3, § 12; Wash. Const. art. 3, § 10. Additionally, although they do not contain the verb “devolve,” some state constitutions provide—like article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution—that if a governor resigns, the lieutenant governor shall have the powers, authorities, and duties of governor. See, e.g., Ky. Const. § 84; Mass. Const. pt. 2, ch. II, § II, art. III; Miss. Const. art. 5, § 131.

In contrast, many state constitutions distinguish between permanent disabilities and temporary disabilities. Permanent disabilities occur when a governor dies or resigns, whereas temporary disabilities could include physical or mental incapacity, or absence from the state. In those states, generally the lieutenant governor becomes governor when a permanent disability occurs but gubernatorial powers devolve (or the lieutenant governor acts as governor) during any period of temporary disability. See, e.g., Ala. Const. art. V, § 127; Alaska Const. art. 3, §§ 9, 11; Ariz. Const. art. 5, § 6; Cal. Const. art. 5, § 10; Colo. Const. art. 4, § 13 (1), (5); Conn. Const. art. 4, § 18(a)–(b); Fla. Const. art. 4, § 3(a)–(b); Ga. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶ V(a)–(b); Haw. Const. art. 5, § 4; Ind. Const. art. 5, § 10(a); Kan. Const. art. 1, § 11; Me. Const. art. 5, pt. 1, §§ 14–15; Md. Const. art. 2, § 6(b), (d); Mich. Const. art. 5, § 26; Minn. Const. art. 5, § 5; Mo. Const. art. 4, § 11(a); Neb. Const. art. IV, § 16; N.J. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶¶ 6–7; N.M. Const. art. 5, § 7; N.Y. Const. art. 4, § 5; N.C. Const. art. III, § 3(1), (3); Ohio Const. art. III, § 15(A)–(B); Pa. Const. art. 4, § 13; S.D. Const. art. 4, § 6; Tex. Const. art. 4, § 16(c)–(d); Utah Const. art. 7, § 11(2), (5); Va. Const. art. 5, § 16; Wis. Const. art. 5, § 7(1)–(2). Article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution does not make a similar distinction; its provisions apply to all disabilities, whether temporary or permanent. See Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17.

Several other provisions of article IV of the Iowa Constitution bear upon the question of gubernatorial succession. Article IV, section 1 provides that “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.” See also 1980 Op. Att’y Gen. 550, 1980 WL 25903, at *3 (“The term ‘governor’ refers to an office and not merely to a particular person.”). Article IV, section 10 grants the governor authority to fill any office that becomes vacant if the constitution and laws do not provide a mode for filling such vacancy. Article IV, section 18 provides that the lieutenant governor “shall have the duties provided by law and those duties of the governor assigned to the lieutenant governor by the governor.” Finally, the Iowa Constitution contemplates a contingency that becomes active when multiple state officers are incapable of performing gubernatorial duties:

If there be a vacancy in the office of the governor and the lieutenant governor shall by reason of death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability become incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor, the president of the senate shall act as governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability is removed; and if the president of the senate, for any of the above causes, shall be incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor the same shall devolve upon the speaker of the house of representatives; and if the speaker of the house of representatives, for any of the above causes, shall be incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor, the justices of the supreme court shall convene the general assembly by proclamation and the general assembly shall organize by the election of a president by the senate and a speaker by the house of representatives. The general assembly shall thereupon immediately proceed to the election of a governor and lieutenant governor in joint convention.

Iowa Const. art. IV, § 19.

In 1844, when Iowa first offered a state constitution for ratification by the people, a newspaper editorial expressed disappointment that much of it was written “in very confused and bungling language” that rendered the drafters’ intent “almost or quite doubtful.” Its Style, The Iowa Standard, Vol. IV, No. 46 (Nov. 14, 1844), reprinted in Press Comments and Other Materials on the Constitutions of 1844 and 1846, at 214 (Benjamin F. Shambaugh ed., 1900). Though modern readers might feel similarly about the current Iowa Constitution, constitutional history illuminates the framework the drafters established—and why they established it.

II. CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY

1. The 1857 Convention

Iowa enacted its current constitution in 1857. As the constitutional convention began, one delegate proposed that an Executive Committee dedicated to formulating the executive branch of government consider “providing for the election of a Lieutenant Governor who, by virtue of his office, shall . . . exercise all the powers and have the title of Governor in case of the death, removal, or other disability of the Governor.” 1 The Debates of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Iowa, at 39 (W. Blair Lord rep., 1857) [hereinafter The Debates]. The previous Iowa Constitution of 1846 made no provision for a lieutenant governor. The 1857 convention agreed to the resolution. Id.

When it came time to debate provisions of article IV, a representative from the Committee read the proposed provisions to the convention. Id. at 76–78. The provisions did not include section descriptions or titles. See id. In other words, the convention did not understand article IV, section 17 to provide that the lieutenant governor “acts as” governor. That descriptive heading came later. Instead, by the words of the resolution at the outset of the convention, the drafters understood that the lieutenant governor would “have the title of Governor” if the Governor left office. Id. at 39.

When considering statutes, the Iowa Supreme Court has stated that a section heading “cannot limit the plain meaning of the text.” Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Bair, 338 N.W.2d 338, 344 (Iowa 1983). That important limitation, which prevents a code editor’s choice of language from frustrating the intent of a statute, is even more significant when considering a constitutional provision. But even if the heading of article IV, section 17—which does not use operative language from article IV, section 17 itself—sheds some light on the framers’ intent in drafting the provision, see T & K Roofing Co. v. Iowa Dep’t of Educ., 593 N.W.2d 159, 163 (Iowa 1999), other available materials better establish what the Iowa Constitution’s framers really understood “devolve” to mean and what they intended the gubernatorial succession framework to look like.

Notably, despite the resolution at the outset of the 1857 convention, Iowa considered having no lieutenant governor at all. During debate on article IV, delegate Warren proposed an amendment to article IV, section 17 that replaced the words “Lieutenant Governor” with “Secretary of State.” 1 The Debates, at 587. Delegate Clarke of Johnson County<sup>1</sup> proposed instead “that the duties of the office of Governor, in case of a vacancy, shall devolve upon the president of the Senate.” Id. The convention passed the amendment as Clarke proposed it, inserting the words “president of the Senate” in place of “Lieutenant Governor.” Id. Accordingly, the convention also deleted other provisions referring to the lieutenant governor’s duties and place in the line of succession. See id. at 587–88.

But not every delegate was convinced the convention had made the right decision. The next morning, delegate Gray asked his colleagues “to consider well the importance of the matter before striking” the provisions for a lieutenant governor. Id. at 591. He noted many other states’ constitution provided for the office of lieutenant governor and indicated “there are some advantages connected with the office.” Id. Among those advantages was the fact that the lieutenant governor “will be elected directly by the people, instead of by the Legislature.” Id. Gray found that important because “We all seem to agree in placing elections, as far as possible, directly in the power of the people.” Id. Delegate Clarke of Henry County agreed:

Gentlemen [of the convention] do not reflect that they may be taking from the people the power of selecting their own chief magistrate. When a man is a candidate for the office of Lieutenant Governor, the people always vote for him with the understanding that circumstances may arise which will make him their Governor. But if you give to the Senate the power of selecting the man who may be the Governor of the people, you take from the people this power and put it into the hands of the Senate.

Delegate Gray’s remarks sparked renewed debate on the subject, and some delegates changed their minds. For example, delegate Wilson offered that although he had originally voted to eliminate the position of lieutenant governor, “upon reflection . . . the advantages in favor of [having a lieutenant governor] are far superior to the disadvantages.” Id. at 593. Most significant, however, were Mr. Clark’s remarks:

I voted yesterday to strike out the office of Lieutenant-Governor. I had not reflected upon it well, and I am inclined to the opinion that I did not vote right. Upon hearing the argument thus far upon the question, and upon reflection, I am disposed to favor the office of Lieut.-Governor, for one reason, if there were no other: I believe that an executive officer, whoever he may be that shall perform the duties of that office, whether Governor or Lieutenant-Governor, ought to be elected directly by the people, in all cases, at least so far as it is possible to provide for it. We elect the Governor by the direct votes of the people—by the popular will—by the popular voice. In case of his removal or disability, I see no reason why the person filling his place should not be elected directly by the whole people as much as the Governor himself.

Id. at 594. Mr. Clark’s clear concern was ensuring that the person exercising the state’s executive power, “whether Governor or Lieutenant-Governor,” has a majority of the citizenry’s blessing to do so. See id.

After some further debate, the convention voted 19–14 against the amendment that would have struck the office of lieutenant governor. Id. at 595. Accordingly, the convention also restored other provisions relating to the office of lieutenant governor. See id. at 596.

2. Iowa Governors Who Resigned

Governor Kirkwood resigned in 1877 to become a United States Senator. Then-Lieutenant Governor Newbold “entered on the discharge of the duties of the executive” for the remainder of the term (just under a year) but did not appoint a new lieutenant governor “because the lieutenant-governorship was not vacant.” William H. Fleming, The Second Officer in the Government, reprinted in Annals of Iowa: A Historical Quarterly, Vol. XIII, No. 1, at 533

(1921) [hereinafter Annals of Iowa]. A later history of Iowa referred to Newbold as the “ninth Governor of Iowa” and stated he “became Governor” when Kirkwood resigned. 4 Benjamin F. Gue, History of Iowa: From the Earliest Times to the Beginning of the Twentieth Century 199–200 (1903).

Governor Cummins resigned in 1908 to become a United States Senator. Then-Lieutenant Governor Garst “entered on the performance of executive duties” for the remainder of the term (just under two months) but did not appoint a new lieutenant governor. Annals of Iowa, at 534.

Governor Hughes resigned in 1969 to become a United States Senator. Then-Lieutenant Governor Fulton assumed the duties of governor for the remainder of the term (just over two weeks) but did not appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Additionally, in 1954, Governor Beardsley died in office. Although Governor Beardsley did not resign, his death—like a resignation—was a permanent “disability” under the Iowa Constitution. Then-Lieutenant Governor Elthon assumed the duties of governor for the remainder of the term (just under two months). However, Elthon did not appoint a new lieutenant governor.

3. Interpretation and Subsequent Amendments

In 1923, Governor Kendall requested an opinion from the Attorney General’s Office because he received medical advice recommending he take an extended vacation and abstain from performing his official duties. 1923 Att’y Gen. Ann. Rep. 349, 349 (Iowa Att’y Gen. Aug. 23, 1923). The length of his expected absence was indefinite but would likely be two to three months. Id. He asked the Attorney General’s Office to opine on “whether or not the Lieutenant Governor can, during [the] temporary absence, perform the duties of Governor.” Id.

The Attorney General concluded “that during the temporary disability of the governor, that the lieutenant governor may act as governor.” Id. at 348. The opinion differentiates between the governor permanently leaving office and the governor stepping aside temporarily:

From a consideration of [article IV of the Iowa Constitution] it will be observed that in case of death, resignation, or removal from office of the governor, that the lieutenant-governor succeeds him as governor of the state for the residue of the term. It will further appear that when there is a temporary disability of the governor, the lieutenant-governor acts in his stead during the period of time such disability continues. In the first instance, the lieutenant-governor becomes governor. In the second instance he simply acts as governor during the temporary disability of his chief.

Id. The opinion makes that distinction in part because “terms of a constitution, like those of a statute, are always to be given their natural and obvious meaning. That is, the meaning in which they are commonly and ordinarily understood.” Id. at 347–46.<sup>2</sup> The Attorney General further advised Governor Kendall that, when stepping aside, he should make clear “there is no resignation or permanent abandonment of the office of governor.” Id. at 343–42.

The 1923 opinion has not been rescinded or disavowed. Neither the legislature nor the people of Iowa sought to amend the Iowa Constitution to establish that the Attorney General’s interpretation was incorrect.

However, the people later amended article IV of the Iowa Constitution. Originally, article IV, section 19 established a succession order if, while acting as governor, the lieutenant governor died, resigned, was impeached or displaced, or otherwise became incapable of performing the duties of the office. The 1952 amendment to article IV, section 19 established the current language, with one exception: it referred not just to the president of the Senate, but the president pro tempore. Accordingly, the 1952 amendment removed the reference to the lieutenant governor “acting as” governor—and that language remains today. However, the 1952 amendment did not remove language in article IV, section 15—which establishes the lieutenant governor’s compensation—that referred to the lieutenant governor acting as governor.

In 1972, several provisions of article IV were changed, but they did not affect gubernatorial succession. Originally, article IV, sections 2 and 3 provided the governor and lieutenant governor served two-year terms. The 1972 amendment increased both terms to four years. It also amended article IV, section 15 to reflect the four-year terms.

The most significant constitutional amendments occurred in 1988. Those amendments, which remain in force today, provided for the first time that the governor and lieutenant governor are elected together, on one ticket, “as if these two offices were one and the same.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 3. Before 1988, it was possible for the governor and lieutenant governor to represent different political parties. The amendment brought to fruition a constitutional delegate’s statement at the 1857 convention: “The governor and lieutenant-governor will always, I presume, be the same in politics, and why not have the successor of the governor of the same politics, instead of bringing in one of the antagonistic party?” 1 The Debates, at 593.

The 1988 amendments also recast the lieutenant governor's duties. Under original article IV, section 18, the lieutenant governor was president of the senate and possessed a tiebreaking vote. If the lieutenant governor was absent, impeached, or exercising the office of Governor, the Senate was instructed to choose a president pro tempore to preside and break ties.

However, the 1988 amendments revised article IV, section 18 to provide that the lieutenant governor "shall have the duties provided by law and those duties of the governor assigned to the lieutenant governor by the governor." In other words, the 1988 amendments removed the lieutenant governor's status as president of the Senate. Accordingly, the 1988 amendments also altered article IV, section 19 to establish that if there is a gubernatorial vacancy and the lieutenant governor is incapable of performing the duties of the office, those duties devolve on the president of the Senate—not the president pro tempore.

Finally, although it is not a constitutional amendment, the Iowa legislature amended section 69.8 of the Iowa Code in 2009. 2009 Iowa Acts ch. 57, § 73. The amendment added a sentence to section 69.8 providing that "[a]n appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term." The provision was the only substantive amendment to chapter 69 in a bill that predominantly altered other chapters delineating the logistics and administration of ballots and elections.

B. Federal History

The original language of article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution matched language existing in the United States Constitution at the time. In 1857, when the Iowa Constitution was ratified, article II, section 1, clause 6 of the United States Constitution read: "In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President . . . ."

Under that language, numerous presidential vacancies occurred. Each time, the Vice President became President despite the word "devolve." Two of these instances occurred before 1857: John Tyler in 1841 and Millard Fillmore in 1850. Thus, because of this history, the delegates to the 1857 Iowa constitutional convention likely understood the word "devolve" to mean that the successor became president—or on the state level, became governor.

A federal court decision from 1867 confirms this understanding:

Three times, since the adoption of the constitution, the president has died, and, under [article II, section 1, clause 6], the powers and duties of the office of president have devolved upon the vice president. All branches of the government have, under such circumstances, recognized the vice president as holding the office of president, as authorized to assume its title . . . . It has never been supposed that, under the provision of the constitution, the vice president, in acting as president, acted as the servant, or agent, or locum tenens of the deceased president, or in any other capacity than as holding the office of president fully, for the time being, by virtue of express authority emanating from the United States.

Merriam v. Clinch, 17 F. Cas. 68, 70 (C.C.S.D.N.Y. 1867).

However, neither Tyler nor Fillmore appointed a new vice president. Nor did any of the other vice presidents who succeeded to the presidency before 1967: Andrew Johnson in 1865, Chester Arthur in 1881, Theodore Roosevelt in 1901, Calvin Coolidge in 1923, Harry Truman in 1945, and Lyndon Johnson in 1963.

In 1967, the 25th Amendment superseded the original language from article II, section 1. Now, if the President dies, resigns, or is removed, “the Vice President shall become President.” U.S. Const. art. 2, § 1. Furthermore, when the vice president becomes president, a vacancy occurs in the office of vice president, and the new “President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority of both Houses of Congress.” Id. § 2. The 25th Amendment also established that the vice president acts as president when the president is temporarily unable to discharge the duties of the office. Id. § 3. Although the Iowa Constitution originally mirrored the United States Constitution and has been amended since 1967, the succession provisions have not changed to match the 25th Amendment.

C. Other States' Histories

While other states' constitutions and experiences do not alone determine conclusively what the Iowa Constitution means, the language used and any decisions involving that language can be valuable to a linguistic analysis. Indeed, some members of the 1857 constitutional convention expressly advocated that the convention should consider other states' provisions and experiences. For example, delegate Gray noted in support of keeping the position of lieutenant governor that many other states had such an office. 1 The Debates, at 591. Likewise, delegate Clarke of Henry County indicated other states' experiences lent to the convention a wisdom the individual members would not otherwise have:

We may certainly look to the experience of other States. This matter has been somewhat scoffed at here. Gentlemen pretend to have within them a light superior to any they can borrow. I am willing to look to the experience and wisdom of other States; and, as [Mr. Gray] has observed, I find that, in a majority of the free States, this system prevails; and if this office [of lieutenant governor] is found beneficial elsewhere, . . . why should we not introduce this provision into our Constitution?

Id. at 592. Although the existence of a lieutenant governor is now well established, these delegates' comments support the general notion that other states' constitutional provisions and history can illuminate, influence, or suggest what Iowa's language means.

As detailed above, several other state constitutions contain the word "devolve"—but that number used to be higher. See Olcott v. Hoff, 181 P. 466, 468 (Or. 1919) (collecting states that, as of 1919, provided "the powers and duties of [governor] devolve upon the lieutenant governor"). In several instances, the state constitution was amended after a judicial decision interpreting the previous language. And in one instance, the state constitution was amended to crystallize an attorney general's opinion—even though the amendment accomplished only what the attorney general opined the previous language already did.

1. Arizona

Arizona distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. If the governor dies, resigns, or is removed from office, "the secretary of state . . . shall succeed to the office of governor." Ariz. Const. art. 5, § 6. If the governor is temporarily disabled, the powers and duties "devolve upon the same person as in case of vacancy, but only until the disability ceases." Id.

Before the current language, Arizona used language materially similar to the Iowa Constitution, ~~which utilized the word "devolve" for both permanent and temporary disabilities.~~ See State ex rel. De Concini v. Garvey, 195 P.2d 153, 154 (Ariz. 1948) (quoting the relevant provision of the Arizona Constitution as it existed at the time). While that language was in force, ~~the governor of Arizona died.~~ Id. at 153. The attorney general filed a lawsuit asserting that the successor (the secretary of state) "did not in law or in fact become governor of Arizona . . . , but by virtue of the section the powers and duties of the office of governor merely devolved upon" him. Id. The secretary of state asserted he was "governor de jure and de facto." Id.

The Arizona Supreme Court acknowledged that "public business and tranquility demand a prompt judicial inquiry." Id. It noted the "prevailing view" at the time that "the inferior officer does not vacate his office and become governor de jure and de facto, but that the duties and powers of governor merely devolve on him and he retains his former office." Id. at 154. It ultimately followed that path, concluding that the secretary state was "acting governor." Id. at 158.

The court's decision contains two other important conclusions. First, even though the successor was acting governor, he was "entitled to physical possession of the office space and facilities provided" for the governor. Id. at 157–58. Second, the court concluded the successor's duties in his current position "embrace the responsibility to act as governor in case any of the contingencies provided for in the constitutional provision arise." Id. at 157.

After 1948, the Arizona Constitution was amended to its current language. The fact that the people amended the constitution suggests they believed the court's interpretation of the word "devolve" was incorrect.

2. Arkansas

The Arkansas Constitution's succession provision is materially identical to article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution. That provision became significant when then-Governor Bill Clinton was elected President of the United States and indicated his intention to resign as Governor of Arkansas. See Bryant v. English, 843 S.W.2d 308, 309 (Ark. 1992). In Bryant, the Arkansas Supreme Court concluded that when Clinton resigned, the office of governor would devolve upon the lieutenant governor such that the lieutenant governor became governor. See id. at 311. The court found support for its conclusion from several circumstances.

First, a previous Arkansas decision (under a previous constitutional provision when the position of lieutenant governor did not exist) expressed concern that the person tasked with exercising the powers and duties of governors might not be elected by a statewide vote. Id. at 312. That concern was alleviated with a constitutional amendment that created the position of lieutenant governor, so there was no issue with allowing the lieutenant governor to become governor, not just acting governor. See id.

Second, the court pointed out that if the lieutenant governor was only acting governor, he could continue presiding over the Senate, and that raised separation-of-powers concerns. See id.; see also Ark. Const. art. VI, § 5. However, if the lieutenant governor became governor, those concerns would be avoided. See Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 312~~id.~~ In Iowa, the lieutenant governor has no legislative powers; the 1988 amendment removed "presiding over the Senate" from the lieutenant governor's duties.

Third, the court noted the chain of succession provided the powers would "devolve" upon the lieutenant governor, but if they were unable to exercise the powers and duties of the office, the president of the senate would "act as" governor. Id. The difference in language suggested "devolve" did not mean the lieutenant governor would merely act as governor. See id.

Finally, in Arkansas, historical practice had treated the lieutenant governor as governor (not acting governor) after the governor resigned. Id. at 312–13. That practice comported with the Arkansas Constitution’s command that the supreme executive power vests in a chief magistrate styled the Governor of the State of Arkansas. Id. at 313. In other words, the person who has the powers is Governor. See id. Iowa has a similar provision and a similar historical practice. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1.

In Arkansas, when the lieutenant governor becomes governor, a vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor that is filled by a special election. Ark. Code § 7-7-105; see Stratton v. Priest, 932 S.W.2d 321 (Ark. 1996) (addressing a constitutional challenge to section 7-7-105). Furthermore, the position of lieutenant governor is specifically exempted from the governor’s general appointment power. In other words, Arkansas’s procedure upholds the elective principle. Although the drafters of the Iowa Constitution clearly subscribed to the elective principle, there is no statute analogous to Arkansas Code section 7-7-105 in the Iowa Code.

3. California

California distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. Cal. Const. art. 5, § 10. When a permanent disability occurs, “The Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor.” Id. However, like Iowa, California formerly used the word “devolve.” Under that language, the California Supreme Court concluded that the lieutenant governor (1) did not actually become governor and (2) could not appoint a new lieutenant governor:

[I]t is provided that in case of the death, resignation, impeachment, absence from the state, or inability to act of the governor, “the powers and duties of his office shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease.” It will be seen that in case of a vacancy in the office of governor the vacancy is not to be filled, but the powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor, who does not cease to be lieutenant governor. Under such circumstances it would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor the latter thereby becomes governor, and can appoint a lieutenant governor.

People ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 45 P. 1060, 1060 (Cal. 1896). The people have since amended the constitution to include its current language.

4. Colorado

Colorado distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. Colo. Const. art. 4, § 13. The Colorado Constitution also provides that a lieutenant governor who “accedes to the office of governor” may select a new lieutenant governor subject to “confirmation by a majority vote of both houses of the general assembly.” Id. § 13(4). However, the Colorado Constitution formerly contained provisions matching the Iowa Constitution. See People ex rel. Parks v. Cornforth, 81 P. 871, 872 (Colo. 1905) (quoting the relevant provisions of the state constitution as they existed at the time). While that language was in force, a succession controversy arose. See id.

The governor resigned in 1905, and the lieutenant governor “qualified as governor.” Id. The president pro tempore of the senate then “qualified as lieutenant governor.” Id. However, at the end of the legislative session, the senate elected a new president pro tempore. Id. The question that reached the Colorado Supreme Court asked whether the previous president pro tempore remained lieutenant governor, or whether he only held that office because of his position as president pro tempore. See id.

The court concluded “the president pro tem. does not become the lieutenant governor” and that “[i]f the framers of [the] Constitution had intended that the president pro tem. of the Senate should become lieutenant governor de jure in the contingency under consideration, they could easily have said so.” Id. at 872–73. Accordingly, the court concluded only the new president pro tempore was empowered to perform the lieutenant governor’s duties. Id. at 875.

In 1974—after the federal 25th Amendment—Colorado repealed and reenacted its succession provisions, changing them to the current language.

5. Michigan

If the governor resigns, the lieutenant governor shall be governor for the remainder of the term. However, for temporary disabilities, “the powers and duties of the office of the governor shall devolve—.” Mich. Const. art. V, § 26. That language differs from the Iowa Constitution, but in 1939, the relevant provision of the Michigan Constitution (then article VI, section 16) was materially similar to current article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution. See 1939 Op. Att’y Gen. Ann. Rep. 69, 71 (Mich. Att’y Gen. Mar. 28, 1939) (quoting the provision in force at the time).

That year, after the governor of Michigan died, the attorney general’s office issued an attorney general opinion regarding succession “[b]ecause of serious consequences which might follow a prolonged silence on the subject.” Id. at 69. The opinion sought to clarify whether there was “now a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor.” Id.

The attorney general answered that question “no,” adhering to the “most approved view” that when a governor dies or resigns, “no vacancy is created in the minor office by operation of law.” Id. No vacancy occurs because it was never intended that the line of succession should be broken, or that any person, who has not received the sanction of the electors by direct vote, should be appointed to a position which would entitle him, in certain eventualities, to the high office of governor.

Id. In other words, “plain rules of common sense” made it clear “that the people never intended to intrust the responsibilities of the governorship to one who has not been elected to state office.” Id. at 72.

The attorney general also noted the Michigan Constitution’s similarity to the United States Constitution and recognized that, as of 1939, “when the Vice President has succeeded to the office of President, it has never been claimed that he thereby vacated the office of Vice President.” Id. at 73. Based on the elective principle at the core of democracy—election by the people—and historical practice—, the opinion ultimately concluded that, upon death of the governor of the State of Michigan, his powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor; that the office of lieutenant governor is not thereby vacated; that the Constitution, by plain and unambiguous language, provides for a line of succession, from the governor, to the lieutenant governor, and to the secretary of state, a line of succession which cannot be broken by the appointment of a lieutenant governor to fill a supposed vacancy. No vacancy exists.

6. Montana

“If the office of governor becomes vacant by reason of death, resignation, or disqualification, the lieutenant governor shall become governor for the remainder of the term, except as provided in this constitution.” Mont. Const. art. VI, § 14(6).

“When there is a vacancy in the office of governor, the successor shall be the governor. The acting governor shall have the powers and duties of the office of governor only for the period during which he serves.” Id. § 14(8). An “acting governor” only happens when the governor requests it of the lieutenant governor or when the governor is disabled. See id. § 14(2)–(4).

However, before the current language, Montana (like Iowa) used the word “devolve.” See State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d 369, 370 (Mont. 1934) (quoting the provision in force at the time). After an election in 1932, the governor resigned in 1933. Id. The Montana Supreme Court concluded “when the Governor resigns or is permanently removed from office, there is no vacancy in the office of Governor in the sense that there is no one left with power to discharge the duties.” Id. The court further explained the state’s constitutional structure:

When the framers of the Constitution provided for the election of a Governor and a Lieutenant Governor as members of the executive department of the state, but conferred upon the latter no executive power or authority other than in the contingencies mentioned in [the succession provision], they manifested the intention that the people elect two qualified heads of that department—the one active, the other his lieutenant, ready at a moment’s notice to assume the duties of the office, should his superior officer, for any reason, either temporarily or permanently, become unable to perform them.

Id. at 371–72 (citation omitted).

The court also concluded that when a governor resigns or dies, there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. Id. at 372. The court explained,

When the duties, powers, and emoluments of the office of Governor devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, it cannot be said that he vacates his office of Lieutenant Governor, and, unless he does so, there is no vacancy in his office. His assumption of the duties of Governor does not create, and neither can he make, a vacancy, as he is discharging the functions of Governor by the mandate of the Constitution, and that by reason of being Lieutenant Governor. If the framers of the Constitution had intended that there should be a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor upon the resignation, death, or permanent removal of the Governor, they could have easily said so.

Id.

Two aspects of the succession structure cemented the court’s conclusion. First, if there were a lieutenant governor vacancy, the lieutenant governor / new governor could appoint a lieutenant governor, which would interrupt the line of successors chosen by the voters. This “was never contemplated and never intended by the framers of the Constitution, or the people who adopted it.” Id. Second, because the provision covered both permanent and temporary disabilities, if the lieutenant governor’s office always became vacant, another conundrum would arise. Specifically, if the governor suffered a temporary disability and the lieutenant governor took over, any person subsequently appointed to the post of lieutenant governor would essentially be squeezed out once the temporary disability ended. See id.

7. Nevada

Nevada's succession provision is materially identical to Iowa's. Compare Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17, with Nev. Const. art. 5, § 18. The Nevada Supreme Court considered the provision after the governor died in 1896. State ex rel. Hardin v. Sadler, 47 P. 450, 450 (Nev. 1897). The court concluded there was no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor:

If a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor, but there is no vacancy created thereby in the office of lieutenant governor. The officer remains lieutenant governor, but invested with the powers and duties of governor.

Id. The Nevada Constitution has not changed since 1897.

8. New Jersey

New Jersey distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities; for permanent disabilities, “the Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor,” while for temporary ones, the powers of the office devolve. N.J. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶¶ 6–7. However, the New Jersey Constitution previously contained a provision like Iowa's—although there was no such thing as a lieutenant governor at the time. See State v. Heller, 42 A. 155, 156 (N.J. 1899) (quoting the provision in force at the time, which established that the governor's powers and duties devolved upon the president of the senate). Under that language, a succession dispute arose.

In 1898, the governor of New Jersey resigned. Id. The president of the senate took an oath assuming gubernatorial powers and duties but later resigned “as a member of the senate.” Id. The speaker of the house, who was next in the succession order, then asserted he was now ~~entitled to exercise the powers and duties of governor~~. See id. However, the president of the senate asserted he remained governor and his resignation only affected his senate seat. See id. The New Jersey Supreme Court concluded the president of the senate was only governor through his position as senate president:

In construing [the succession] clause of the constitution it must be borne in mind that it was carefully drawn by learned jurists, who knew how to express with exactness and precision the purpose they had in view. The provision is that, in case of the resignation of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate, and not that the president of the senate shall thereby become governor . . . . If the framers of the fundamental law had intended to transfer the president of the senate to the executive chair, and thereby to vacate his office of senator, it is reasonable to believe that they would have said so in no uncertain language. The language used is not ambiguous. It declares that the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve on the president of the senate; it does not confer upon him the title of the office. The president of the senate exercises the powers of the governor; the president of the senate performs the duties of the governor; the president of the senate receives the emoluments of that office. He is still president of the senate, with the added duties required of the chief executive of the state imposed upon him. There is no language in the constitution from which it can reasonably be inferred that his office of president of the senate was to be vacated. He retains his office of senator; and as president of the senate, and not as governor, he exercises the added powers and performs the superimposed duties.

Id. at 156–57. Accordingly, when he resigned his senate position, he also resigned his ability to exercise the powers and duties of the governor and the speaker of the house became entitled to exercise those powers and duties. Id. at 158.

There are two other important aspects of the New Jersey court’s decision. First, it concluded the successor did not actually become governor because other provisions in the state constitution referred to the governor “or person administering the government.” Id. at 157. Therefore, if the successor actually became governor, those words would be superfluous. Id. The Iowa Constitution does not contain similar language that would become superfluous if the lieutenant governor is governor following the governor’s resignation.

Second, the court highlighted the constitutional provision’s flexible nature, applying to both permanent and temporary disabilities. If the successor’s previous position automatically became vacant, even during a temporary disability, they would lose it when the temporary disability ended. Id. at 158. The court concluded that meaning of the language “could not have been within the contemplation of the able men who incorporated it in this clause relating to a matter of supreme importance.” Id.

9. New York

New York distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. When a permanent disability occurs, the lieutenant governor becomes governor, but when a temporary disability occurs, the lieutenant governor acts as governor. N.Y. Const. art. IV, § 5. In 1943, the state’s attorney general opined that a statute allowing some appointments could not be applied to a lieutenant governor vacancy because it “would lead to the anomalous result that a Governor by appointing a Lieutenant-Governor and then resigning could impose upon the people his own

In 2008, the governor resigned, and in accordance with the constitution, the lieutenant governor became governor. See Skelos v. Paterson, 915 N.E.2d 1141, 1142 (N.Y. 2009). Although the state constitution provides that if both the office of governor and the office of lieutenant governor are vacant, the president of the senate shall act as governor, N.Y. Const. art. IV, § 6, the senate deadlocked and could not elect a temporary president, see Skelos, 915 N.E.2d at 1142. Accordingly, each political party recognized a different temporary president, which made it unclear “which one of the rival temporary presidents stood next in the line of gubernatorial succession.” Skelos, 915 N.E.2d at 1142. The governor attempted to break the deadlock by simply appointing a new lieutenant governor. Id. However, a state legislator filed a lawsuit seeking (1) a declaration that the appointment was unconstitutional and (2) an injunction preventing the governor from appointing anyone to the office of lieutenant governor. Id.

When the case reached the New York Court of Appeals, the court ~~recognized it was undisputed~~ stated there could be no dispute that the lieutenant governor became governor and thereby left a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. Id. at 1144. It then rejected the contention “that the Constitution requires that a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor be preserved until the next . . . election” and applied a state statute—the one the attorney general had opined 60 years earlier could not apply—to fill a gap left by the constitution. Id. The court reasoned it made little sense to have “an extended vacancy running the balance of an elective term” when the constitution contained a provision intending to assure vacancies were filled. Id. at 1144–45.

The court also concluded ~~what it called~~ “the elective principle” could not control the result of the case:

While there can be no quarrel with the proposition that, generally, election must be the preferred means of filling vacancies in elective office, it does not follow that the elective principle is preeminent when it comes to filling a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor.

Id. at 1145. It concluded that a constitutional amendment placing the governor and lieutenant governor on the same ticket subordinated the elective principle “to assure the structural integrity and efficacy of the executive branch.” Id. It acknowledged that subordinating the elective principle created the possibility an unelected individual could occupy the state’s highest office, but it concluded that was a permissible result because all rules of succession are “inevitably imperfect” and “invariably compromise elective principles” at some stage. Id. at 1146. In other words, it deferred to the legislature’s judgment in passing a statute that applied. See id. (“For now, the Legislature . . . has specified that the vacancy is to be filled not by election but by gubernatorial appointment alone—a determination that the Legislature is always free to revisit.”).

The decision was not unanimous. The dissenting opinion principally highlighted the possibility “that the citizens . . . will one day find themselves governed by a person who has never been subjected to scrutiny by the electorate, and who could in turn appoint his or her own unelected Lieutenant Governor.” Id. at 1147 (Pigott, J., dissenting). Justice Pigott asserted that was “contrary to the text of the New York Constitution and affords Governors unprecedented power.” Id.

Justice Pigott relied on historical practice, noting “no one ~~gave a thought or~~ . . . harbored a suggestion” that the new governor could appoint a replacement lieutenant governor because “no Governor in the history of the State had done so.” Id.; see also id. at 1152 & n.3 (collecting 10 occasions since New York’s founding “when the position of Lieutenant Governor has become vacant” but noting none of the vacancies were filled by appointment). He also noted the constitution did not expressly provide an appointment power—but it did “provide a clear line of succession,” which could not be circumvented. See id. at 1150. He asserted the majority erred by grouping the position of lieutenant governor—one of the state’s highest offices—into what was effectively a catchall statute addressing other minor state officials. Id.; cf. Whitman v. Am. Trucking Ass’n, 531 U.S. 457, 468 (2001) (noting Congress does not “hide elephants in mouseholes”). In Justice Pigott’s view, the lieutenant governor was not addressed in the statute because the constitution already provided a method of succession. See id. Skelos, 915 N.E.2d at 1150.

Finally, Justice Pigott explored constitutional amendments that affected the lieutenant governor. First, in 1945, the constitution was amended to indicate “precisely what was to occur when there was a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor alone;” it indicated the temporary senate president was to perform all the duties of lieutenant governor during the vacancy. See id. at 1154–55. Second, in 1953, the constitution was amended to require that the governor and lieutenant governor be elected together, on one ticket—just as Iowa did in 1988. See id. at 1155. Accommodating those changes, Justice Pigott suggested it was improper “that a Lieutenant Governor could be appointed by a Governor with no input from the electorate and no vetting by the legislative branch of government.” Id.

There has been some academic criticism of the Skelos decision. See Patrick A. Woods, Comment, Automatic Lieutenant Gubernatorial Succession: Preventing Legislative Gridlock Without Sacrificing the Elective Principle, 76 Alb. L. Rev. 2301, 2303 (2013) (asserting Skelos “removes any electoral check from those selected to fill the position of lieutenant-governor and leaves structural problems unresolved”). But it is not universally panned. See Richard Briffault, Skelos v. Paterson: The Surprisingly Strong Case for the Governor's Surprising Power to Appoint a Lieutenant Governor, 73 Alb. L. Rev. 675, 676–77 (2010) (asserting that the Skelos majority was right despite disagreement from the sitting attorney general, “a former chief judge, a former lieutenant governor, a former attorney general, and a leading academic expert on the state constitution”).

In any event, the decision appeared to assume that there was a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor despite earlier caselaw from other states holding almost unanimously that the lieutenant governor's ascension does not leave a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. That assumption may leave the decision on shaky analytical ground.

There are a few other differences between New York's framework and Iowa's. First, the lieutenant governor's duties include presiding over the senate in New York, but not in Iowa. Second, the New York Constitution provides for vacancies in the lieutenant governor's office alone, with no vacancy in the governor's office. N.Y. Const. art. IV, § 6. The Iowa Constitution is not as specific. Finally, the New York Constitution directs the legislature to provide for filling vacancies. N.Y. Const. art. XIII, § 3. By contrast, the Iowa Constitution contains no similar instructions for the legislature.

10. Oklahoma

Oklahoma's succession provision is similar to Iowa's, using the word “devolve”—although one difference is that in Oklahoma, “the office” devolves, while in Iowa, the powers and duties do. Compare Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17, with Okla. Const. art. 6, § 16. In a 1926 case, the Oklahoma Supreme Court concluded the office of Governor automatically devolves upon another, who by virtue of filling that office becomes the chief magistrate styled the governor of Oklahoma. Fitzpatrick v. McAlister, 248 P. 569, 572 (Okla. 1926). In other words, the person who has the powers is governor. In particular, the court noted the difference between the word “devolve,” which applied only to the lieutenant governor, and “act as Governor,” which applied only to those further down the line of succession. See id. Because of that difference in language, the court concluded the word “devolve” actually conferred the title and office.

The court found support for its conclusion in federal history:

[U]pon the death of President Wm. H. Harrison, Vice President Tyler became President of the United States. For almost a century this construction of the federal Constitution has stood without question. It has been recognized as correct, and acquiesced in, not only by the departments of state and all the states of the Union, but officially recognized by every civilized government in the world.

On each occasion where the President of the United States has died, the Vice President has immediately succeeded to the office of President as President of the United States, and thereupon the government of the United States has at once, through its consular offices, notified all governments of the world of the change in Presidents.

Defendant suggests that no court has ever pronounced that to be the law. To our mind, it is so clearly correct that no one has ever presumed to test its correctness in the courts. Therefore it should have greater weight than an ordinary departmental construction, not only because it has stood for almost a century, but because it has been recognized as the correct conception of our system of government, and because, for eighty-five years under this construction, there has been no friction in the machinery of government by reason of such construction.

The decision was not unanimous. A dissenting opinion suggested the lieutenant governor would perform gubernatorial duties “merely as the occupant of the office of Lieutenant Governor, to which he was elected.” Id. at 580 (Branson, V.C.J., dissenting). The dissent also highlighted the possibility that if the lieutenant governor became governor and thereby vacated the office of lieutenant governor, he could appoint a replacement. See id. at 581. That was problematic, the dissent asserted, because it would “make it impossible that the President pro tempore of the Senate would ever succeed to the performance of the duties of Governor, as was clearly contemplated in the succession line to such duties as set out in . . . the Constitution.” Id.

11. Oregon

In Oregon, the successor “shall become Governor.” Or. Const. art. V, § 8a. However, the Oregon Constitution formerly provided that the duties of governor would “devolve on the secretary of state” and if the secretary of state was disabled, “the president of the senate shall act as governor.” See Chadwick v. Earhart, 4 P. 1180, 1180 (Or. 1884) (quoting the provision as it existed at the time). In other words, the Oregon Constitution distinguished between devolution and an acting governor.

In Chadwick, one party contended that the duties of the office of governor became annexed to the office of secretary of state, and are discharged as duties incident to the latter office; in other words, that the duties of the office, but not the office itself, devolve upon the secretary of state.

Id. The court was skeptical, noting that argument seemed to require “either that the office of governor should continue vacant . . . ; or, second, that the office be filled, and yet he who fills it be in nowise governor, but continue to be merely secretary of state.” Id.

Accordingly, the court concluded the successor became governor:

In the first place, it is not shown how an office can be vacant, and yet there be a person, not the deputy or locum tenens of another, empowered by law to discharge the duties of the office, and who does, in fact, discharge them. It is not explained how, in such a case, the duties can be separated from the office so that he who discharges them does not become an incumbent of the office. And, in the second place, how a person can fill the office of governor without being governor. It is the function of a public officer to discharge public duties. Such duties constitute his office.

Id. at 1181. A later decision adhered to Chadwick and concluded that upon the governor’s death, “by reason of the fact that Mr. Olcott was secretary of state he automatically became governor.” Olcott, 181 P. at 482. The court concluded “when the people elected Mr. Olcott secretary of state, by the very terms of the constitution they elected him to become governor” if the incumbent died. Id. at 483.

12. Utah

Utah defines vacancy to include resignation and disability that extends for the remainder of the term. Utah Const. art. VII, § 11(1)(a). If a vacancy occurs, the lieutenant governor “shall become governor.” Id. § 11(2). The Utah Constitution also provides that if a disability is only temporary, the lieutenant governor shall discharge the powers and duties. Id. § 11(5)(a). And, it establishes that when the lieutenant governor becomes governor, a vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor. Id. § 10(3)(a)(i).

However, before 2008, the Utah Constitution, like Iowa, used only “devolve.” The Utah Attorney General issued an advisory opinion in 2003 on the question of succession. Utah A.G. Opinion No. 03-001, 2003 WL 21996258 (Aug. 18, 2003). The opinion concluded (1) “devolve” means that the lieutenant governor becomes governor, and (2) a vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor that the governor is entitled to fill by appointment. Id. at *1, 3. The attorney general relied in part on the federal history involving the word “devolve.” Because four vice presidents had become president before Utah adopted a constitution, at the time the state adopted one, “it was understood, in theory and in practice, that the Constitutional language ‘shall devolve’ meant ‘succession’ such that the Lieutenant Governor would become the Governor.” Id. at *1.

The attorney general also noted that in 1980, the citizens of Utah adopted constitutional amendments that required the governor and lieutenant governor to run on the same ticket and clarified the line of succession of executive authority. Id. Those amendments were presented to the voters as mirroring the succession of the federal government—which by this time had adopted the 25th Amendment providing the vice president becomes president. Id.

Despite the attorney general’s conclusions about the existing language, the Utah Constitution was later amended to its current language to cement the attorney general’s understanding of the constitutional structure. Furthermore, the attorney general may have reached his opinion about a lieutenant governor vacancy because (1) the legislature codified its finding that the lieutenant governor is a significant position, Utah Code § 67-1a-1; and (2) the lieutenant governor is the state’s chief election officer, so it would be important to have someone in the position, see Utah Code § 67-1a-2. The Iowa Code does not contain a similar emphasis on the lieutenant governor’s importance, and here, the secretary of state is the chief election officer. Those differences may provide a basis on which to distinguish Utah’s conclusions.

13. Washington

Washington’s succession provision is similar to Iowa’s, using the word “devolve.” Compare Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17, with Wash. Const. art. 3, § 10. The Washington Supreme Court confronted the provision in a 1902 case presenting the question whether the death of the governor creates a vacancy in either the office of governor or lieutenant governor. State ex rel. Murphy v. McBride, 70 P. 25, 25 (Wash. 1902). The court concluded,

The constitution having provided that in case of the death of the governor the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of governor. . . . When the lieutenant governor, by virtue of his office and of the command of the constitution, assumed the duties of governor on the death of Gov. Rogers, the office of lieutenant governor did not thereby become vacant, but the officer remained lieutenant governor, intrusted with the powers and duties of governor.

14. Wisconsin

In Wisconsin, the lieutenant governor “shall become governor” if the governor dies, resigns, or is removed. Wis. Const. art. 5, § 7(1). The lieutenant governor “shall serve as acting governor” if the governor is absent or disabled. Id. § 7(2). But the language was not always what it is today. In 1938, it matched article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution. See State ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, 280 N.W. 393, 398 (Wis. 1938) (quoting the provision in force at the time).

Under that provision, the Wisconsin Supreme Court acknowledged that the question of succession was “most important and of great public concern and interest” because the people of the state were “vitaly interested in seeing that no important office, such as that of lieutenant governor, be intruded into by any person who has not lawful authority to hold the office or to perform the duties thereof.” Id. at 394. It ultimately concluded that when a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, “the lieutenant governor does not become governor. He remains lieutenant governor, upon whom devolves the powers and duties of governor. In such a contingency no vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor.” Id. at 399.

15. Wyoming

Wyoming does not use either the word “devolve” or the phrase “become Governor.” Instead, it provides that the secretary of state “shall act as governor.” Wyo. Const. art. 4, § 6. In 1903, the governor died, and a dispute arose about the secretary of state’s compensation while fulfilling his constitutional duty to act as governor. State ex rel. Chatterton v. Grant, 73 P. 470, 470 (Wyo. 1903). The court concluded the secretary of state performed duties both in that role and as governor, and accordingly was entitled to compensation for both positions. See id. at 472. However, the court also noted it did not observe a material distinction between “devolve” and “act as.” Id. at 476.

III. SYNTHESIS

Several themes pervade the historical accounts. One major recurring theme is ~~what the New York court referred to as the elective principle~~—the notion that the people should not be subject to the rule of a person none of them elected. Iowa’s constitutional delegates voiced this principle during the debates in 1857, and it has repeatedly surfaced when other states’ provisions came before courts in those states. See, e.g., Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 312; State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 372; Skelos, 915 N.E.2d at 1145.

Another theme is historical understanding. The notion that “it’s always been this way” is assuredly not reason, standing alone, to continue a particular practice; something can be legally incorrect even if it’s longstanding. See Griffin v. Pate, 884 N.W.2d 182, 208 (Iowa 2016) (Hecht, J., dissenting) (rejecting the notion that a practice should continue just “because ‘that’s the way it’s always been in Iowa’ or because ‘that’s the way it’s done elsewhere’ ”). But it can illuminate the understanding Iowa's framers had at the time they were drafting the Iowa Constitution; it can shed light on the words' original intent even though original intent is not the end of the analysis. See id. at 198–202 (majority opinion) (beginning analysis of a constitutional provision by determining what it was understood to mean at the time of enactment before tracing its interpretation over time). In that respect, the history of presidential succession before 1857, and the language in the United States Constitution at the time, provides a worthy indication of what Iowa's framers likely meant by the word “devolve.”

A final theme is the importance of linguistic difference. Many states have changed their respective succession provisions, either because a court determined succession did not work in the way the people actually intended or perhaps just to update language. Additionally, some states differentiate between permanent and temporary disabilities—but Iowa's provision applies to both and must carry an interpretation commensurate with that flexibility. See State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 372; Heller, 42 A. at 158. Of particular importance here is the fact that the 25th Amendment was adopted in 1967, and the Iowa Constitution has seen multiple amendments since then—yet the Iowa Constitution was not changed to mirror it.

To be sure, reasonable minds can debate the meaning of the constitution. The histories discussed above in some instances contain competing answers; some say the successor becomes governor, while others say the successor is merely acting governor. Some grant a successor the power to appoint a new lieutenant governor; others don't. There is room to disagree. However, there are several factors that carry the most persuasive weight in determining what Iowa's answers are.

First, the elective principle was clearly important to the Iowa drafters. See 1 The Debates, at 591–94. And it has remained important, because even though Iowans have amended article IV of the Iowa Constitution, in doing so they retained the principle that both the governor and lieutenant governor “shall be elected.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 2. Accordingly, the elective principle deserves paramount consideration. As several courts determined, it would frustrate the elective principle and the constitutional succession order if a governor could always appoint a new lieutenant.

Second, the series of amendments to the Iowa Constitution delineate the contours of the lieutenant governor's duties. By placing the governor and lieutenant governor together on one ticket and removing the lieutenant governor's duty to preside over the senate, the people displayed their intent that the lieutenant governor be ready as a standby—just in case. See State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 371–72. The lieutenant governor's duties are as provided by law, and one of those duties flows from the constitution: the duty to become governor in the event of a vacancy. The duty is already encompassed in the office of lieutenant governor.

Finally, history carries significant weight in two respects. It illustrates that at the time article IV, section 17 was enacted, “devolve” meant that the successor becomes governor. It also suggests that the 1988 amendments consciously avoided duplicating the language of the 25th Amendment because the people of Iowa wished to uphold the elective principle.

In light of the resources and documents discussed in this memo, the answers to Senator Johnson’s questions about gubernatorial succession in the event of Governor Branstad’s resignation are as follows.

1. If Governor Branstad resigns, Lieutenant Governor Reynolds becomes Governor. She succeeds to the office, title, position, and powers of Governor because the person possessing the powers is styled the Governor of Iowa. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1.
2. Article IV, section 17 itself does not contain the phrase “act as governor.” That section heading was added later and, ~~like a statutory heading,~~ cannot circumvent the plain meaning of the actual language. The framers’ intent in selecting the word “devolve” was to match the United States Constitution, and under the United States Constitution, the government experienced two presidential successions before 1857 in which the vice president became president. Thus, the framers understood “devolve” to mean “become.”
3. If Governor Branstad resigns, no vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor. Essentially, the offices of governor and lieutenant governor merge. The voters elected Governor Branstad and Lieutenant Governor Reynolds with the understanding that Lieutenant Governor Reynolds would step in if a particular contingency—specified in article IV, section 17—occurred. One of the lieutenant governor’s duties is to become Governor if that contingency occurs. Accordingly, Lieutenant Governor Reynolds becomes Governor because she is already Lieutenant Governor. Because there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor, Iowa Code section 69.8 does not apply.
4. Because there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor, there is nothing to fill. Accordingly, Governor Reynolds could not appoint a successor lieutenant governor.

I also requested from the Oklahoma AG a copy of their opinion number 65-235, which is too old to be in full text on their website and also not on Westlaw. A journal article I was reading described it as answering "no" to the question "If the Lieutenant Governor succeeds to the Governorship (due to death, resignation, or impeachment of the Governor), does the then Governor have the authority to appoint another person to the Lieutenant Governorship?"

The person I talked to in Oklahoma said they would look for it and email me. I'll forward it when he does.

I. If Governor Branstad Resigns, Is Lieutenant Governor Reynolds Governor?

Article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution is the key to answering this question. “[T]he purpose of art. IV, § 17 is to ensure that the citizens of Iowa are not without a person capable of performing the constitutional and statutory duties imposed upon a governor.” 1980 Op. Att’y Gen. 550, 1980 WL 25903, at *3 (Iowa Att’y Gen. Jan. 2, 1980). That section provides,

In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17.<sup>1</sup> Article IV, section 17 has remained unchanged since 1857.

I focus here on two notable aspects of article IV, section 17. First, while death and resignation are permanent exits from office, the phrase “other disability” includes temporary conditions such as physical or mental incapacity. See 1923 Op. Att’y Gen. 263, 263 (Iowa Att’y Gen. Aug. 23, 1923) (answering a question posed by the governor about the exercise of gubernatorial power under article IV, section 17 during an extended hiatus recommended by his physician). Therefore, article IV, section 17 must carry an interpretation commensurate with its flexibility; its provisions must establish a framework applicable to several possible factual scenarios without creating “friction in the machinery of government by reason of such construction.” Fitzpatrick v. McAlister, 248 P. 569, 576 (Okla. 1926).

---

<sup>1</sup> Article IV, section 17 bears a section heading stating “Lieutenant governor to act as governor.” I give that heading no weight in my analysis. During the 1857 Iowa convention, the constitutional provisions did not include section descriptions or titles when read into the record. See 1 The Debates of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Iowa, at 76–78 (W. Blair Lord rep., 1857). The original handwritten version of the Iowa Constitution does not include section descriptions or titles either. See generally Iowa Const., at https://www.legis.iowa.gov/docs/publications/icnst/attachments/Iowa\_Constitution\_Scanned.pdf. Furthermore, a section heading “cannot limit the plain meaning of the text.” Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Bair, 338 N.W.2d 338, 344 (Iowa 1983). That important limitation, which prevents a code editor’s choice of language from frustrating the intent of a statute, is even more significant when considering a constitutional provision.

The second important piece of article IV, section 17 is the word “devolve”—a downward transfer. Does it mean the lieutenant governor is governor, or that the lieutenant governor is something less—such as acting governor or governor ex officio?

One important guidepost in determining the meaning of “devolve” is what it was understood to mean at the time it was enacted:

In the interpretation of the Constitution . . . we are to ascertain the meaning by getting at the intention of those making the instrument. What thought was in the mind of those making the Constitution—what was their intention, is the great leading rule of construction.

Ex parte Pritz, 9 Iowa 30, 32 (1858); accord Griffin v. Pate, 884 N.W.2d 182, 186 (Iowa 2016) (beginning analysis of a constitutional provision “by looking back to review the history” of it “to gain a better understanding of the concept” as applied in a current case); Redmond v. Ray, 268 N.W.2d 849, 853 (Iowa 1978) (“In construing a constitution, our purpose is to ascertain the intent of the framers.”); Des Moines Joint Stock Land Bank v. Nordholm, 253 N.W. 701, 723 (Iowa 1934) (Claussen, C.J., dissenting) (“[W]hy should not the [constitutional] language be construed as it was understood by the people who adopted it?”).

There are several important pieces to the historical puzzle that, once assembled, illuminate the framework the Iowa Constitution's framers established.

A. *Constitutional Debates. The Iowa Constitution of 1846 made no provision for a lieutenant governor. However, as the 1857 constitutional convention began, one delegate proposed that a committee dedicated to formulating the executive branch of government consider "providing for the election of a Lieutenant Governor who, by virtue of his office, shall . . . exercise all the powers and have the title of Governor in case of the death, removal, or other disability of the Governor." 1 The Debates of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Iowa, at 39 (W. Blair Lord rep., 1857) [hereinafter The Debates]. The convention agreed to the resolution. Id. Accordingly, the drafters of article IV, section 17 envisioned that the lieutenant governor would "have the title of Governor" if the governor left office. Id.

B. *Federal Language and History. In 1857, when the Iowa Constitution was ratified, article II, section 1, clause 6 of the United States Constitution read: "In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President . . . ." Thus, article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution matched language in the United States Constitution at the time.

Under that federal language, several presidents died in office. Following each death, the Vice President was considered President, not "acting President.” Two of these instances occurred before 1857: John Tyler in 1841 and Millard Fillmore in 1850. Because of this history, the delegates to the 1857 Iowa constitutional convention likely understood the word “devolve” to mean that upon the governor’s exit from office, the lieutenant governor would be governor. See State v. Baldon, 829 N.W.2d 785, 810 (Iowa 2013) (Appel, J., specially concurring) (noting “the drafters of the Iowa Constitution were well aware” of existing federal law when writing in 1857).

A federal court decision from 1867 confirms this understanding:

Three times, since the adoption of the constitution, the president has died, and, under [article II, section 1, clause 6], the powers and duties of the office of president have devolved upon the vice president. All branches of the government have, under such circumstances, recognized the vice president as holding the office of president, as authorized to assume its title . . . . It has never been supposed that, under the provision of the constitution, the vice president . . . acted as the servant, or agent, or locum tenens of the deceased president, or in any other capacity than as holding the office of president fully, for the time being, by virtue of express authority emanating from the United States.

Merriam v. Clinch, 17 F. Cas. 68, 70 (C.C.S.D.N.Y. 1867). The three instances to which the court referred were Tyler, Fillmore, and Andrew Johnson in 1865.

Likewise, the Oklahoma Supreme Court relied upon federal history several decades later in analyzing the word “devolve:”

[U]pon the death of President Wm. H. Harrison, Vice President Tyler became President of the United States. For almost a century this construction of the federal Constitution has stood without question. It has been recognized as correct, and acquiesced in, not only by the departments of state and all the states of the Union, but officially recognized by every civilized government in the world.

Defendant suggests that no court has ever pronounced that to be the law. To our mind, it is so clearly correct that no one has ever presumed to test its correctness in the courts. Therefore it should have greater weight than an ordinary departmental construction, not only because it has stood for almost a century, but because it has been recognized as the correct conception of our system of government, and because, for eighty-five years under this construction, there has been no friction in the machinery of government by reason of such construction.

Fitzpatrick, 248 P. at 576. Between Merriam in 1867 and Fitzpatrick in 1926, three more presidents died in office—and once again, after each death, the Vice President was considered President.<sup>2</sup> The consistent federal understanding of the word “devolve” over several decades further informs my determination of what “devolve” means in article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution.

C. Other Original Executive Branch Provisions. Related provisions enacted alongside article IV, section 17 can also aid in determining the meaning of the word “devolve.” Cf. Iowa Code § 4.1(38) (2017) (“Words and phrases shall be construed according to the context . . . .”). Several other original provisions in article IV of the Iowa Constitution bear upon the question of transferring or shifting executive power. Although some provisions of article IV have been amended since 1857, I initially focus on the original provisions, because those—together with section 17—established the original framework as the drafters intended it.

Article IV, section 1 provides that “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1. In other words, the person who has the powers is governor. Like article IV, section 17, article IV, section 1 has remained unchanged since 1857.

Article IV, sections 2 and 3 originally established that the governor and lieutenant governor would be elected by the people—but not on the same ticket.

Article IV, section 18 made the lieutenant governor President of the Senate with a tiebreaking vote, but provided that “when [the lieutenant governor] shall exercise the office of Governor, the Senate shall choose a President pro tempore.”

Article IV, section 15 established that the lieutenant governor would serve until a successor was elected and qualified, and that “while acting as Governor,” the lieutenant governor would receive the same pay as provided for the governor.

Article IV, section 19 established how executive power would transfer when multiple state officers were incapable of performing gubernatorial duties:

If the Lieutenant Governor, while acting as Governor, shall be impeached, displaced, resign, or die, or otherwise become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the President pro tempore of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled, or the disability removed; and if the President of the Senate, for any of the above causes, shall be rendered incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, the same shall devolve upon the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

In light of these provisions, it is my opinion that section 1 and original section 18 complement each other and dovetail with section 17. Because the framers understood that the lieutenant governor would “have the title of Governor,” <sup>1</sup> The Debates at 39, they also provided in section 18 that when the powers and duties devolved (as section 17 instructed), the lieutenant governor would “exercise the office of Governor.” That aligns with the foundational principle that the person who has the powers is governor. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1. The foundational principle is paramount.

D. Other States’ Experiences. Iowa is not the first state to face questions regarding a governor’s permanent departure from office. While other states’ constitutions and experiences do not alone determine conclusively what the Iowa Constitution means, I find valuable to my analysis the language used in those states’ constitutions, court decisions or attorney general opinions involving that language, and any subsequent linguistic changes.

My review of available authority reveals a relatively even divide. When the issue has surfaced and the relevant constitutional provision utilized the word “devolve,” some authorities in other states have concluded that the lieutenant governor is governor. In view of the question as I have phrased it, I call these the “yes” decisions. See, e.g., Bryant v. English, 843 S.W.2d 308, 311 (Ark. 1992) (“[W]e hold that . . . the Lieutenant Governor serves as Governor for the residue of the term . . . .”); State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d 369, 370 (Mont. 1934) (“[W]hen the Governor resigns or is permanently removed from office, there is no vacancy in the office of Governor in the sense that there is no one left with power to discharge the duties imposed upon the Governor.”); Fitzpatrick, 248 P. at 577 (“Mr. Trapp is just as much a Governor, in every literal and practical sense and effect, as though he had been elected to the office.”); Chadwick v. Earhart, 4 P. 1180, 1181 (Or. 1884) (“[I]t is not shown how . . . . a person can fill the office of governor without being governor.”); State ex rel. Murphy v. McBride, 70 P. 25, 26 (Wash. 1902) (“The constitution having provided that in case of the death of the governor the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of governor.”); 1939 Op. Att’y Gen. 69, 73 (Mich. Att’y Gen. Mar. 28, 1939) (concluding when the governor dies, the lieutenant governor is “governor of the state [for] all intents and purposes”).

Others have concluded that the lieutenant governor or next person “in line” is not truly governor, but is instead only acting governor. I call these the “no” decisions. See, e.g., State ex rel. De Concini v. Garvey, 195 P.2d 153, 154 (Ariz. 1948) (concluding the person upon whom the powers and duties of governor devolve after the governor’s death or resignation “is not governor de jure or de facto but merely ex officio or acting governor”); People ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 45 P. 1060, 1060 (Cal. 1896) (“[I]t would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor the latter thereby becomes governor . . . .”); State ex rel. Hardin v. Sadler, 47 P. 450, 450 (Nev. 1897) (“If a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor . . . . The officer remains lieutenant governor, but invested with the powers and duties of governor.”); State v. Heller, 42 A. 155, 157 (N.J. 1899) (“The language used is not ambiguous. It declares that the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve on the president of the senate; it does not confer upon him the title of the office.”); State ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, 280 N.W. 393, 399 (Wis.

1938) (“[T]he lieutenant governor does not become governor. He remains lieutenant governor, upon whom devolves the powers and duties of governor.”).

E. Analysis. The substantial amount of “no” decisions are significant. Although Iowa has “no obligation to adopt a rule just because it has generally been adopted elsewhere,” Handeland v. Brown, 216 N.W.2d 574, 577 (Iowa 1974), all of the “no” decisions are based on a careful parsing of the word “devolve” and the other relevant constitutional language. When resolving legal quandaries, precision and nuance matter. See Rivera v. Woodward Res. Ctr., 865 N.W.2d 887, 897 (Iowa 2015). Thus, placing Iowa among the “no” decisions would be legally defensible. Indeed, in 1977, the Idaho Attorney General acknowledged that, although he believed them to be somewhat counterintuitive, the “no” decisions suggested “the lieutenant governor never truly succeeds to the office of governor” under the Idaho Constitution (which at the time used the word “devolve”). Idaho Op. Att’y Gen. No. 77-1, 1977 WL 25063, at *1 (Idaho Att’y Gen. Jan. 4, 1977). The Idaho Attorney General went on to recommend that only the Idaho Supreme Court could answer the question definitively as a matter of Idaho law. See id.

Nonetheless, I find the “yes” decisions more persuasive than the “no” decisions. Several of the “no” decisions have been superseded by subsequent constitutional amendments in their respective states. Those amendments often changed the framework for transferring executive power to provide that the lieutenant governor “becomes governor” or “shall be governor” when the governor dies, resigns, or otherwise leaves office permanently. See, e.g., Ariz.

Const. art. V, § 6; Cal. Const. art. V, § 10; N.J. Const. art. V, § 1 ¶ 6; Wis. Const. art. V, § 7(1). In other words, the people of the respective states amended the constitution to clarify the framework of executive power, suggesting they believed the court's previous interpretation was incorrect.

Additionally, with specific regard to New Jersey, the Heller court noted several phrases in the state's constitution that referred to the governor "or person administering the government." Heller, 42 A. at 157. If the person exercising executive power after the governor's resignation was governor, the court concluded, the phrase "person administering the government" would be superfluous. See id. Thus, the Heller decision is distinguishable because it was based in part on unique constitutional language. The Iowa Constitution does not similarly refer to the governor "or person administering the government."

I also conclude the "no" decisions elevate form over substance, which the Iowa Supreme Court has repeatedly cautioned against. See, e.g., Lewis v. Jaeger, 818 N.W.2d 165, 179 (Iowa 2012); State ex rel. Miller v. Smokers Warehouse Corp., 737 N.W.2d 107, 110 (Iowa 2007); Van Baale v. City of Des Moines, 550 N.W.2d 153, 156 (Iowa 1996). The "no" decisions are somewhat technical, drawing a linguistic distinction that, while noteworthy, makes no substantive difference under the circumstances presented here. Whether her title would be governor or acting governor, there could be little dispute that if Governor Branstad resigns, now-Lieutenant Governor Reynolds would possess authority to sign legislation, appoint new members of state boards and commissions, issue pardons, and even receive the governor's salary. Instead, the dispute centers on the exact wording of her new title.

On that score, article IV, section 1 of the Iowa Constitution carries significant weight. That section provides, "The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa." Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1. In other words, the person who has the powers is governor. The powers make the governor, carrying with them the title. As the Arkansas Supreme Court concluded under a similar provision in the Arkansas Constitution, this means when the powers and duties of governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor, that person is thereafter styled the governor. See Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 313; accord Fitzpatrick, 248 P. at 572 ("He is the 'Governor' for the simple reason that he governs."). Thus, there is no substantive difference between governor and acting governor when the governor's exit is permanent. See State ex rel. Chatterton v. Grant, 73 P. 470, 474 (Wyo. 1903) (concluding that, after the governor died, the question whether a person "[wa]s in fact the governor of the state" was immaterial because, whether governor or acting governor, the person had the powers and duties of the office).

The "yes" decisions also comport with the Iowa framers' understanding of the lieutenant governor's role and with our state's historical practice. As I have noted, in creating the office of lieutenant governor, the framers expected that person to "have the title of Governor" if the governor left office. 1 The Debates, at 39. Furthermore, on four previous occasions the governor of Iowa has resigned or died in office—and each time, the lieutenant governor was thereafter treated as governor. See William H. Fleming, The Second Officer in the Government, reprinted in Annals of Iowa: A Historical Quarterly, Vol. XIII, No. 1, at 533–34 (1921) (recalling Governor Kirkwood’s resignation in 1877 and Governor Cummins’s resignation in 1908); Legis. Servs. Agency, Pieces of Iowa’s Past: Lieutenant Governors Who Have Become Governor 2–3 (Mar. 8, 2017), available at <https://www.legis.iowa.gov/docs/publications/TB/855445.pdf> (noting Governor Beardsley’s death in 1954 and Governor Hughes’s resignation in 1969). Although historical practice standing alone does not mandate a similar result now, the historical practice is consistent with the framework of executive power I have described. See Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 312 (finding it “of some persuasion” that, when the governor of Arkansas died or resigned, the lieutenant governor was historically treated as governor).

Unlike the constitutional amendments in the “no” states, Iowa’s amendments to article IV do not change or alter my analysis of the effect of article IV, section 17. A 1952 amendment to article IV, section 19 removed a reference to the lieutenant governor “acting as” governor, replacing it with “if there be a vacancy in the office of Governor”—and that language remains today. However, the 1952 amendment did not remove language in article IV, section 15—which establishes the lieutenant governor’s compensation—that referred to the lieutenant governor acting as governor.

There is a natural tendency to ascribe significance to the change, but those amendments don’t really say much about the title of the person upon whom the powers and duties devolve—because article IV, section 1 controls that question. The more significant piece of the 1952 amendments, in my view, was a section providing that if the governor-elect died, resigned, or failed to qualify, the lieutenant governor-elect would “assume the powers and duties of governor” upon inauguration. As I have noted, article IV, section 1 would therefore make the person with the powers the governor. In other words, although the governor-elect provision was later repealed, the 1952 amendment solidified—not altered—the existing framework for the transfer of executive power in the event of a constitutional contingency.<sup>3</sup>

In 1972, several provisions of article IV were changed, but they did not affect sections 1 or 17. Originally, article IV, sections 2 and 3 provided the governor and lieutenant governor served two-year terms. The 1972 amendment merely increased both terms to four years. Thus, they do not indicate any significant change in the constitutional framework for transferring executive power.

Iowa enacted more significant amendments in 1988. The 1988 amendments provided for the first time that the governor and lieutenant governor are elected together, on one ticket, “as if these two offices were one and the same.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 3. Before 1988, it was possible for the governor and lieutenant governor to represent different political parties. The amendment brought to fruition a constitutional delegate’s statement at the

1857 convention: “The governor and lieutenant-governor will always, I presume, be the same in politics, and why not have the successor of the governor of the same politics, instead of bringing in one of the antagonistic party?” 1 The Debates, at 593.

The 1988 amendments also recast the lieutenant governor’s duties. Under original article IV, section 18, the lieutenant governor was president of the senate and possessed a tiebreaking vote. If the lieutenant governor was absent, impeached, or exercising the office of Governor, the Senate was instructed to choose a president pro tempore to preside and break ties.

However, the 1988 amendments revised article IV, section 18 to provide that the lieutenant governor “shall have the duties provided by law and those duties of the governor assigned to the lieutenant governor by the governor.” In other words, the 1988 amendments removed the lieutenant governor’s status as president of the Senate. The only remaining duty “provided by law” is to receive the powers and duties of governor under article IV, section 17 if the governor leaves office; there are no additional statutory duties imposed upon the lieutenant governor. As the Montana Supreme Court put it:

When the framers of the Constitution provided for the election of a Governor and a Lieutenant Governor as members of the executive department of the state, but conferred upon the latter no executive power or authority other than in the contingencies mentioned . . . , they manifested the intention that the people elect two qualified heads of that department—the one active, the other his lieutenant, ready at a moment’s notice to assume the duties of the office, should his superior officer, for any reason, either temporarily or permanently, become unable to perform them.

State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 371–72. Therefore, the 1988 amendments do not alter my analysis on this question.

F. Answer. After considering the Iowa Constitution’s language, placing it in historical perspective, and comparing other legal analyses on similar topics, it is my opinion that under article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution, if the governor resigns and the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor, the lieutenant governor has the title of governor.

Court of Appeals of New York.

Dean G. SKELOS et al., as Duly Elected Members of the New York State Senate, Respondents,

v.

David PATERSON, as Governor of the State of New York, et al., Appellants.

Sept. 22, 2009.

Synopsis

Background: State Senator brought action seeking declaratory judgment that Governor could not, consistent with the New York State Constitution, appoint putative nominee to office of Lieutenant-Governor, and for permanent injunction prohibiting Governor from appointing nominee or any other individual to that office. The Supreme Court, Nassau County, William R. LaMarca, J., 25 Misc.3d 347, 884 N.Y.S.2d 812, granted the Senator's motion for a preliminary injunction enjoining the nominee from exercising any of the powers of the office of Lieutenant-Governor. The Supreme Court, Appellate Division, 65 A.D.3d 339, 885 N.Y.S.2d 92, affirmed. Governor appealed.

Holding: The Court of Appeals, Lippman, Chief Judge, held that Governor had authority to fill vacancy in office of Lieutenant-Governor by appointment.

Reversed.

Pigott, J., filed opinion dissenting in which Graffeo and Smith, JJ., concurred.

*146 **1142 OPINION OF THE COURT

Chief Judge LIPPMAN.

The issue on this appeal is whether the Governor of the State of New York has the authority to fill a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor by appointment. We now hold that he does.

I.

In November 2006, Eliot Spitzer and David Paterson were elected respectively to the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. On March 17, 2008, Governor Spitzer resigned and, pursuant to article IV § 5 of the New York Constitution, Lieutenant Governor Paterson became Governor. Fifteen months later, Republicans and Democrats split 31–31 in the Senate. Because each party recognized a different temporary *147 president of the Senate, this political deadlock complicated the conduct of day-to-day business in the Senate chamber. Moreover, it was not clear which one of the rival temporary presidents stood next in the line of gubernatorial succession.

On July 8, 2009, Governor Paterson responded to this situation by appointing Richard Ravitch to the office of Lieutenant Governor. Pursuant to article IV, § 6 of the Constitution, the Lieutenant Governor presides over the Senate and casts a tie-breaking vote on certain procedural matters. Governor Paterson relied on section 43 of the Public Officers Law in making this appointment.

The following day, plaintiff Dean G. Skelos, a State Senator elected from the 9th Senatorial District, commenced this action for a declaratory judgment that the Governor's appointment of Mr. Ravitch was unconstitutional.<sup>1</sup> He also sought to permanently enjoin the Governor from appointing any individual to the office of Lieutenant Governor. Plaintiff then moved to preliminarily enjoin Mr. Ravitch from acting in the capacity of Lieutenant Governor. Supreme Court, Nassau County granted the preliminary injunction (25 Misc.3d 347, 884 N.Y.S.2d 812 [2009] ). and the Appellate Division, Second Department, affirmed (65 A.D.3d 339, 885 N.Y.S.2d 92 [2009] ). Thus, Mr. Ravitch has, to date, not presided over the Senate.

In assessing the likelihood of plaintiff's success upon the merits (see **1143 Doe v. Axelrod, 73 N.Y.2d 748, 750, 536 N.Y.S.2d 44, 532 N.E.2d 1272 [1988] ), the Appellate Division held that

“the Governor's purported appointment of Mr. Ravitch was unlawful because no provision of the Constitution or of any statute provides for the filling of a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor other than by election, and only the temporary president of the Senate is authorized to perform the duties of that ***848 office during the period of the vacancy” (65 A.D.3d at 348, 885 N.Y.S.2d 92).

The Appellate Division sua sponte granted the Governor leave to appeal from its order, and certified a question to this Court. We now reverse.

*148 II.

The Governor has raised a threshold question as to Senator Skelos's standing to sue in light of the stringent criteria for legislator standing that we adopted in Silver v. Pataki, 96 N.Y.2d 532, 539–540, 730 N.Y.S.2d 482, 755 N.E.2d 842 [2001]. The parties do not dispute, however, that the public's interest is best served by resolving the constitutional issue presented by the Governor's action as expeditiously as possible. Accordingly, assuming, without deciding, that Senator Skelos presently has standing to sue the Governor, we now proceed to the merits (see Matter of New York State Assn. of Criminal Defense Lawyers v. Kaye, 96 N.Y.2d 512, 516, 730 N.Y.S.2d 477, 755 N.E.2d 837 [2001]; Babigian v. Wachtler, 69 N.Y.2d 1012, 1013, 517 N.Y.S.2d 905, 511 N.E.2d 49 [1987]; Matter of Roman Catholic Diocese of Albany v. New York State Dept. of Health, 66 N.Y.2d 948, 951, 498 N.Y.S.2d 780, 489 N.E.2d 749 [1985] ).

III.

Our State Constitution specifies that “[t]he legislature shall provide for filling vacancies in office” (N.Y. Const, art XIII, § 3 [emphasis supplied] ), and expressly contemplates that vacancies in elective office may be filled by appointment (see id.). In pursuance of the constitutional mandate imposed by article XIII, § 3, the Legislature has enacted three comprehensive and complementary provisions, i.e., Public Officers Law §§ 41, 42 and 43. The first of these, titled “Vacancies filled by legislature” (emphasis supplied), prescribes the means by which vacancies in the offices of State Attorney General and Comptroller are to be filled. The second, titled “Filling vacancies in elective offices” (emphasis supplied), generally requires that such vacancies occurring before September 20th of any year in office be filled by means of election at the next general election, but, in the case of a vacancy in the office of United States Senator, requires, in certain circumstances, a temporary appointment by the Governor “to fill such vacancy” (see Public Officers Law § 42[4-a] ). Notably, this section specifically excepts from its scope the elective offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. The last of these vacancy-filling provisions, section 43, the one upon which the Governor relied in his appointment of Mr. Ravitch, titled “Filling other vacancies” (emphasis supplied), is plainly intended as a catchall to complete the Legislature's satisfaction of the mandate of article XIII, § 3. Unlike its neighboring provision, section 42, section 43 does not specifically exclude any office from its application, but rather provides:

*149 “If a vacancy shall occur, otherwise than by expiration of term, with no provision of law for filling the same, if the office be elective, the governor shall appoint a person to execute the duties thereof until the vacancy shall be filled by an election” (emphasis supplied).

It is not disputed that when Governor Spitzer resigned in March 2008, then-Lieutenant Governor Paterson became Governor **1144 for the remainder of Governor Spitzer's term (see N.Y. Const, art IV § 5). Nor can it be reasonably disputed that when Lieutenant Governor Paterson became Governor, he ceased being Lieutenant Governor, leaving a vacancy in that office. The first condition of the statute's applicability was thus met.

The second condition of section 43—that there be no provision of law (apart from section 43) for filling the vacancy—was also satisfied. The only other provision of law bearing upon how a vacancy in the ***849 office of Lieutenant Governor alone is to be dealt with is article IV § 6 of the State Constitution, but its direction that “the temporary president of the senate shall perform all the duties of lieutenant-governor” applies only “during [the] vacancy or inability” and thus cannot fill or end the vacancy. Plaintiff does not appear to contend otherwise; indeed, the central contention of plaintiff's argument is that the Constitution requires that a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor be preserved until the next quadrennial election.

An appointment under Public Officers Law § 43, in contrast to the devolution mandated by article IV § 6, effectively fills the office in accordance with the command of article XIII, § 3; the article IV, § 6 devolution, although plainly necessary and useful to assure continuity of service in the short term, can at best provide only stopgap coverage of the function of the Lieutenant Governor. Properly understood, then, the two provisions—article IV, § 6 and Public Officers Law § 43—are complementary rather than duplicative and, accordingly, article IV, § 6 should not be construed, as it was by the Appellate Division, as a limitation upon gubernatorial appointment pursuant to Public Officers Law § 43. Article IV, § 6 merely states what is to occur while there is a vacancy; it does not, and cannot, consistent with the command of article XIII, § 3, be understood to state that the vacancy may not be filled.

The dissent places singular importance upon the apparent equivalence of the operative verbs in each of the provisions at issue—“execute” in Public Officers Law § 43 and “perform” in *150 article IV, § 6—arguing that the provisions must be understood as duplicative, and, accordingly, that neither provision may be applied to fill the office of Lieutenant Governor. But, a correct understanding of what the provisions at issue are intended to accomplish does not turn on whether or not these expressions are themselves semantically equivalent. When understood in context, each expression refers to a materially different assumption of authority: the assumption under section 43 is plenary, in accordance with the mandate of article XIII, § 3 that vacancies be filled, but that occurring pursuant to article IV, § 6, concededly, is not.

Nor does article XIII, § 3's proviso that “no person appointed to fill a vacancy [in elective office] shall hold his or her office by virtue of such appointment longer than the commencement of the political year next succeeding the first annual election after the happening of the vacancy” prevent the Governor from appointing a Lieutenant Governor. The intent of the constitutional limitation is clear; namely, to assure that appointments to elective offices extend no longer than is reasonably necessary to fill such offices by election. Where, as here, an office may not legally appear on the ballot except quadrennially (see N.Y. Const, art IV, §§ 1, 6), and there will be a lengthy period before the next election for the office may be held, plaintiff's reading of the durational limitation at issue would result in an extended vacancy running the balance of an elective term. This appears to be fundamentally incompatible with the main object of article **1145 XIII, § 3, expressed unequivocally in its first clause, which, of course, is to assure that vacancies are filled.

We have never interpreted article XIII, § 3 to impose the requirement that plaintiff finds in it. Rather, we have held that the provision demands only that "when a vacancy in elective office occurs, the vacancy must be filled by election in the shortest space of time reasonably possible" (Matter of Roher v. Dinkins, 32 N.Y.2d 180, 188, 344 N.Y.S.2d 841, 298 N.E.2d 37 [1973] [emphasis supplied]; see also Matter of Mitchell v. Boyle, 219 N.Y. 242, 248, 114 N.E. 382 [1916] ). Other states have dealt ***850 with the issue of measuring the permissible length of an appointment to an elective office similarly, holding that when the length of the appointive term is tied to the "next election" or the "first proper election" subsequent to the vacancy, what is meant is the next election at which the office may be legally filled (see People ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 114 Cal. 168, 171, 45 P. 1060, 1061 [1896]; State ex rel. Trauger v. Nash, 66 Ohio St. 612, 620-621, 64 N.E. 558, 560 [1902] ).

*151 We also reject plaintiff's contention that article XIII must be read to forbid the appointment of a Lieutenant Governor so as to vindicate the elective principle. While there can be no quarrel with the proposition that, generally, election must be the preferred means of filling vacancies in elective office, it does not follow that the elective principle is preeminent when it comes to filling a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor.

We, of course, were completely in agreement with this contention when, in Matter of Ward v. Curran, 291 N.Y. 642, 50 N.E.2d 1023 [1943], affg. 266 App.Div. 524, 44 N.Y.S.2d 240 [3d Dept.1943], we unanimously affirmed a decision of the Appellate Division holding that, pursuant to article XIII of the Constitution and the then-current version of Public Officers Law § 42, a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor was to be filled at the next annual election subsequent to the vacancy. Our determination, however, engendered dismay in the executive branch because it raised a real possibility that the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor would be filled by individuals from opposing parties with incompatible political and policy agendas. As a consequence of our decision in Ward, Governor Dewey entreated the Legislature to amend the law, and the Legislature responded, specifically excepting the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor from the reach of Public Officers Law § 42 and its mandate that vacancies in elective office be filled by election. Subsequent constitutional amendments, requiring that the Governor and Lieutenant Governor be elected together quadrennially and by a single ballot (see N.Y. Const, art IV, §§ 1, 6), definitively eliminated any residual possibility that the executive branch would be split between members of opposing parties and, equally definitively, eliminated any possibility that a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor might be separately filled by election in a nonquadrennial year.

The elective principle, upheld by the judiciary in Ward, was thus legislatively subordinated to assure the structural integrity and efficacy of the executive branch and has remained so ever since. If it is to be restored to primacy in filling a nonquadrennial vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor, that is a matter for constitutional amendment.

That election has been deemed impermissible as a means of filling a midterm vacancy in the Lieutenant Governorship does not, however, mean that the vacancy may not be filled. Indeed, in amending the Public Officers Law to remove the office of Lieutenant Governor from the **1146 election mandate of *152 Public Officers Law § 42, the Legislature did not alter section 43, which, in the aftermath of Ward is logically understood as applying to a vacancy in the Lieutenant Governorship.<sup>2</sup> A ***851 conclusion that naturally follows this pairing of action and inaction is that the Legislature, while desirous of eliminating the problematic prospect of a divided executive, fully intended that a vacancy in the office would be filled in accordance with the mandate of article XIII, § 3, and that it would be filled by appointment pursuant to section 43. Filling the office by gubernatorial appointment is entirely consonant with the purpose of the post-Ward legislative and constitutional amendments, whereas requiring that the office be left vacant risked a scenario of the sort that the Legislature at Governor

Dewey's behest sought to avoid—one in which a president pro tern of the Senate, quite possibly of a party other than the Governor, would, while performing the duties of the Lieutenant Governor during a vacancy in the office, actively oppose the Governor's agenda and frustrate the work of the executive branch.<sup>3</sup>

To be sure, the subordination of the elective principle in this context is not entirely unproblematic. It does create the possibility *153 that an unelected individual will, for a time, occupy the State's highest office. Rules of succession are, however, inevitably imperfect and, at some stage of the devolution they direct, invariably compromise elective principles. Before us, however, is not the abstract question of whether it would be better in the case of a vacancy in the office of the Lieutenant Governor to fill the vacancy by election or by gubernatorial appointment subject to legislative confirmation or by gubernatorial appointment alone. For now, the Legislature, pursuant to an express grant of constitutional authority, has specified that the vacancy is to be filled not by election but by gubernatorial appointment alone—a determination that the Legislature is always free to revisit.

IV

Until today, the interplay between Public Officers Law § 43 and article IV, § 6 of the Constitution presented an open legal **1147 question. Indeed, as our dissenting colleagues detail at some length, the particular legal configuration governing the outcome of the present dispute did not even come into existence until after Ward, and there have been, prior to the vacancy at issue, only two post-Ward vacancies in the office of the Lieutenant Governor. While it has been suggested that these vacancies were left unfilled because of some consensus as to the unavailability of the power of gubernatorial appointment, it is at least equally likely that they remained vacant for purely political reasons. Given these circumstances, it is entirely understandable that plaintiff has acted vigorously to ***852 defend his interpretation of the relevant constitutional and statutory provisions. Having given due consideration to plaintiff's argument, however, we conclude that Public Officers Law § 43 affords the Governor the authority to fill a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor by appointment.

Accordingly, the order of the Appellate Division should be reversed, without costs, the motion for an injunction denied and the certified question answered in the negative.

PIGOTT, J. (dissenting).

Under the majority's rationale, the possibility exists that the citizens of this state will one day find themselves governed by a person who has never been subjected to scrutiny by the electorate, and who could in turn appoint his or her own unelected Lieutenant Governor. Because this is contrary to the text of the New York Constitution and affords Governors unprecedented power to appoint a successor, we respectfully dissent.

*154 I.

When then-Governor Eliot Spitzer resigned and Lieutenant Governor David Paterson became our 55th Governor no one gave a thought or harbored a suggestion that he had the ability to appoint a Lieutenant Governor. This is not surprising since no Governor in the history of the State had done so. But after 15 months marked by a deeply troubled economy and a deadlock that paralyzed the State Senate, the Governor, prompted perhaps by understandable frustration, attempted on July 8, 2009 to unilaterally fill the post.

Shortly after the appointment, plaintiffs brought this action seeking judgment declaring that the Governor's action in appointing a Lieutenant Governor was unconstitutional. The Governor, as the majority notes, asserted authority to do so pursuant to section 43 of the Public Officers Law, a section referred to by all parties as a "catch-all provision." Until now, that provision had been used to fill vacancies in local offices but, in no instance, the second most important executive office in the state.

Supreme Court granted a preliminary injunction concluding, as relevant to this appeal, that the Senators "have alleged a usurpation of Senate power that gives rise to sufficient injury-in-fact falling within their zone of interest" and as such, they had standing to commence this action (25 Misc.3d 347, 359, 884 N.Y.S.2d 812 [2009] ). Addressing the likelihood of success on the merits, the court concluded that article IV, § 6 of the Constitution "strongly suggests that the office is to remain vacant until such time as a Governor is elected" and "[s]ince a Lieutenant Governor has never been appointed, this interpretation is consistent with historical practice.” (Id.)

The court also reasoned that article XIII, § 3, which mandates the Legislature to fill “vacancies in office,” did not apply to a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor, because that constitutional provision permitted the appointee to serve only until **1148 the next election, while article IV, § 6 makes clear there can be no separate election for Lieutenant Governor. Therefore, since the Legislature is not empowered to fill the office of Lieutenant Governor under the Constitution, contrary to defendants’ urging, section 43 of the Public Officers Law is not available for that purpose. As a result, the court concluded the Senators had established a likelihood of success on the merits and granted an injunction.

The Appellate Division affirmed, rejecting defendants’ claim that Senator Skelos was without standing to bring the action, *155 noting that the Lieutenant Governor has the ability to control debate in the Senate chamber and to cast a vote to ***853 break a tie on certain procedural matters (65 A.D.3d 339, 885 N.Y.S.2d 92 [2009] ). It concluded that the Governor simply did not have authority to appoint a Lieutenant Governor. That court too rejected the Governor’s reliance on Public Officers Law § 43 and determined that no provision of the Constitution nor any statute provides for the filling of the office of Lieutenant Governor other than by election.

II.

Unlike the majority, we view standing as a threshold issue that must be resolved and we determine that Senator Skelos established that he is a proper party to pursue this claim. The test for determining a litigant’s standing is twofold. “First, a plaintiff must show ‘injury in fact,’ meaning that plaintiff will actually be harmed by the challenged ... action. As the term itself implies, the injury must be more than conjectural” (New York State Assn. of Nurse Anesthetists v. Novello, 2 N.Y.3d 207, 211, 778 N.Y.S.2d 123, 810 N.E.2d 405 [2004], citing Society of Plastics Indus. v. County of Suffolk, 77 N.Y.2d 761, 772–773, 570 N.Y.S.2d 778, 573 N.E.2d 1034 [1991]). Second, the injury plaintiff asserts must fall within his or her zone of interest (Society of Plastics, 77 N.Y.2d at 773, 570 N.Y.S.2d 778, 573 N.E.2d 1034).

Our standing analysis begins—but does not end—with Silver v. Pataki, 96 N.Y.2d 532, 730 N.Y.S.2d 482, 755 N.E.2d 842 [2001]. In Silver, the Court held that Assembly Speaker Sheldon Silver—acting in his capacity as an individual legislator, and not as a legislative leader—had standing to pursue his claim that the Governor’s exercise of line-item veto power exceeded the powers granted the executive in the State Constitution. The general rule is that an individual legislator can sue—on a vote nullification or usurpation of power theory—to vindicate a personal injury, although “lost political battle” claims are not cognizable. Speaker Silver was deemed to have standing even though there were many other identifiable persons and organizations directly harmed by the exercise of the vetoes—such as any party who would have benefitted from the vetoed legislation (see Clinton v. City of New York, 524 U.S. 417, 118 S.Ct. 2091, 141 L.Ed.2d 393 [1998] [New York City, health care providers and others who would have benefitted from vetoed legislation successfully challenged constitutional validity of President Clinton’s exercise of the line-item veto] ). Thus, the Court found standing in Silver even though a dismissal of Speaker Silver’s complaint would not have erected an impenetrable barrier to judicial consideration of that controversy.

*156 Although Senator Skelos’ contention that the Governor has exceeded his constitutional authority is different from the constitutional argument presented in Silver, his assertion of standing in this case is similarly legitimate. The Silver Court recognized that an individual legislator could initiate a lawsuit challenging vote nullification or usurpation of power by the Governor in the budget process, expressly rejecting **1149 the notion that only a majority of the legislative house could do so. This case does not involve the budget process but it does involve alleged overreaching by the Governor in a manner that directly affects each sitting Senator. Here it is claimed that the Governor has without constitutional authority installed an unelected person to serve as president of the Senate and, by that appointment, this private citizen has gained the authority to restrict the speech of elected Senators. This allegation of harm is not institutional in nature but is personal to each Senator.

The Lieutenant Governor’s only constitutional duties are to preside over the Senate and, on occasion, issue a casting vote. If elected Senators cannot bring suit to challenge the alleged placement of a so- ***854 called “interloper” as the presiding officer of the body in which they serve, we are hard-pressed to identify who would have standing to object to this appointment. Granted, although he has expressed no inclination to do so, the Attorney General could initiate a quo warranto proceeding—but this is because a statute specifically grants him that right, not because he has standing under our common-law jurisprudence. Where a claim is justiciable—and here no one asserts that the controversy involves a political question rendering it inappropriate for judicial review—we have not interpreted our standing rules so strictly that they erect an impenetrable barrier to suit (see Consumers Union of U.S., Inc. v. State of New York, 5 N.Y.3d 327, 806 N.Y.S.2d 99, 840 N.E.2d 68 [2005]; Saratoga County Chamber of Commerce v. Pataki, 100 N.Y.2d 801, 814, 766 N.Y.S.2d 654, 798 N.E.2d 1047 [2003]; Boryszewski v. Brydges, 37 N.Y.2d 361, 364, 372 N.Y.S.2d 623, 334 N.E.2d 579 [1975]). But if we adopt the Governor’s position, that is precisely what we would be doing—raising the specter that this very significant issue concerning the constitutional validity of the Governor’s appointment would be unreviewable by the judicial branch. Although the majority has chosen not to decide the issue of standing, we think it important to articulate a resolution of the standing issue given the magnitude of this case.

We further reject defendants’ contention that the controversy is not ripe for review because Ravitch has not yet presided over the Senate, restricted any Senator’s speech, or issued a casting *157 vote. This argument ignores the fact that Ravitch has been precluded from doing so, first by a temporary restraining order and, later, by the preliminary injunction issued by Supreme Court and affirmed by the Appellate Division. It would be ironic for this Court to dismiss a litigant’s claim because, in initiating the lawsuit and obtaining preliminary relief, he was successful at postponing the imminent harm he is suing to prevent. In addition, it is alleged that the Governor’s motivation in making the appointment was, in large part, to put Ravitch in a position to issue the tie-breaking vote to resolve the Senate leadership impasse—an allegation that is eminently plausible given the circumstances surrounding the appointment. This litigation—commenced soon after the appointment was made—was therefore not precipitous.

Moreover, since there appears to be no dispute that any ripeness problem would disappear the moment Ravitch presided over the Senate and ruled on any point of order, dismissing this action would only postpone a ruling on the merits in a situation where the public is manifestly best served by prompt resolution of an important constitutional issue. Nothing would be accomplished by burdening the public or the parties with further delay just to allow this inevitable scenario to play out. Nor do the parties urge us to do so.

**1150 III.

Arriving at the merits, we note that both sides concede that the Constitution does not expressly accord the Governor the power to appoint a Lieutenant Governor. Nor can the Constitution itself be read in such a way as to permit the Governor to make an appointment to that office. The Constitution does, however, provide a clear line of succession to the office of Governor, the very purpose of article IV.

Article IV, § 6 provides that in the event of a vacancy in the offices of both Governor and Lieutenant Governor (a simultaneous vacancy): “the temporary president of the senate shall act as governor until the inability shall cease or until a governor shall be elected.” If this situation arises, article IV, § 6 mandates that a prompt election be held by requiring that ***855 “a governor and lieutenant-governor shall be elected for the remainder of the term at the next general election happening not less than three months after both offices shall have become vacant.” Most definitely, the framers of the Constitution were intent on having the electorate promptly fill both vacancies.

*158 Next, that section addresses a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor only, while there is a sitting Governor:

“In case of vacancy in the office of lieutenant-governor alone, or if the lieutenant-governor shall be impeached, absent from the state or otherwise unable to discharge the duties of office, the temporary president of the senate shall perform all the duties of lieutenant-governor during such vacancy or inability.”

Thus, the drafters of the Constitution logically placed the duties of Lieutenant Governor in the hands of a duly elected state Senator—one who is elected president of that body by the entire Senate, representing all citizens of this state.

The majority errs in deciding that this constitutional mandate merely provides for a “caretaker” role by the temporary president for a limited interim period until the Lieutenant Governor’s office is filled by the Governor under the Public Officers Law. The majority also errs in reading the Public Officers Law, which contains specific provisions for filling vacancies in the offices of Comptroller, Attorney General, and United States Senator, to let the Lieutenant Governor’s office fall into a “catch-all” with all other elected officials in the state no matter how minor. A review of Public Officers Law §§ 41–43 makes the majority’s misreading of them clear. Together, they provide a comprehensive mechanism for dealing with vacancies in nearly every office in the state—but not that of Governor or Lieutenant Governor, who are separately treated in article IV, § 6.

Public Officers Law § 41, enacted pursuant to an express grant of authority in article IV, § 1 of the Constitution, provides for the filling of vacancies in the offices of Comptroller and Attorney General. Section 42 provides for the filling of vacancies in other elective offices, but expressly excludes the offices of Governor or Lieutenant Governor. Finally, section 43 addresses the filling of all “other vacancies” and provides: “If a vacancy shall occur, otherwise than by expiration of term, with no provision of law for filling the same, if the office be elective, the governor shall appoint a person to execute the duties thereof until the vacancy shall be filled by an election” (emphasis added).

When viewed in light of the constitutional construct of the executive office, its powers and duties, Public Officers Law § 43 cannot be construed to confer the right to fill a vacancy in the *159 Lieutenant Governor’s office. First, contrary to the majority’s view, section 43 by its terms **1151 only permits the Governor to appoint someone to an office to “execute the duties” of that office until the office can be filled by an election for the remainder of the term. Yet article IV of the Constitution clearly provides that when there is a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor, the duties of that office are assumed by the temporary president of the Senate—there is no language restricting the duration that the temporary president of the Senate fulfills those duties. This situation differs from the scenarios presented in cases like People ex rel. Smith v. Fisher, 1840 WL 3540, 24 Wend 215 [1840] and People ex rel. Henderson v. Snedeker, 1856 WL 6750, 4 Kern. 52, 14 N.Y. 52 [1856], in which a deputy took over when an elected official such as a county clerk was unable to complete a term of office and the deputy was then properly replaced by a gubernatorial appointee. The statutes at issue in ***856 those cases made clear that the deputy was to perform the duties of the elected office only until someone else could be “elected or appointed” and therefore clearly indicated that the deputy’s authority was intended to cease when the Governor appointed a replacement for the elected official. As such, the Court held that the deputy performed the duties of office only until the Governor appointed a replacement who, in turn, fulfilled the duties only until an election could be held.

In contrast, article IV, § 6 does not state that the temporary president of the Senate will fulfill the duties of the office of Lieutenant Governor only until someone else is appointed nor, unlike article IV, § 1 (addressing the offices of Comptroller and Attorney General), does it specifically direct the Legislature to craft a procedure for filling a midterm vacancy in that office. Rather, the clause unqualifiedly states that the temporary president of the Senate is to perform the duties of the Lieutenant Governor “during such vacancy.” Furthermore, article IV precludes a midterm election for the office of Lieutenant Governor because it requires the Governor and Lieutenant Governor to be jointly elected in quadrennial elections (unless there is a simultaneous vacancy in both offices [see art IV, §§ 1, 6]).

Because the Constitution, particularly article IV, § 6, instructs that the temporary president of the Senate, an elected official, is to “perform” the duties of Lieutenant Governor during a vacancy, it leaves no room for anyone else to “execute” the duties of that office under Public Officers Law § 43. In this regard, we note that neither this Court nor the Legislature has *160 ever drawn a distinction between “executing” the duties of an office and “performing” those duties. The cases the defendants cite for this questionable distinction do not support it. Furthermore, there are numerous statutes that use words like “execute,” “fulfill,” “perform,” “discharge,” “act as” and the like to confer precisely the same authority.<sup>1</sup> Article IV, § 6 of the Constitution similarly contains synonyms that describe the inability of officers to act and the obligations that devolve on their successors, indicating that these officials “discharge” duties, “perform” duties or “act as” their predecessors—and it is evident that all of these mean the same thing. There is simply no **1152 evidence that the Legislature intended that Public Officers Law § 43 apply to the office of Lieutenant Governor when it adopted that provision. And if it did, the result would be a conflict. Contrary to the majority's view that constitutional provisions are to be “harmonized” with statutes, it is axiomatic that where there is an incompatibility between the Constitution and a statute, the Constitution governs and the statute bows.

Of equal importance, article XIII, § 3 limits the duration of any appointment under section 43 by directing that “no person appointed to fill a vacancy shall hold his or her office by virtue of such appointment longer than the commencement of the political year next succeeding the first annual election after the happening of the vacancy” (emphasis added).<sup>2</sup> Yet, ***857 article IV, § 1 *161 mandates that the Governor and Lieutenant Governor run together and only on the quadrennial, thus barring the Lieutenant Governor from running for office separate from the Governor in a nonquadrennial year. These provisions, read together, can only be reasonably interpreted to mean that the drafters of the Constitution intended that a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor remain unfilled until the next gubernatorial election, with the temporary president of the Senate performing the duties of Lieutenant Governor in the interim.

IV

The construction of our Constitution over two centuries refutes the majority's reading of it. This is not the first time that a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant-Governor has arisen. There have been at least 10 occasions since the first New York Constitution was adopted in 1777 when the position of Lieutenant Governor has become vacant,<sup>3</sup> but no Governor has ever seen fit to assert that he had the power to appoint a Lieutenant Governor to fill the vacancy. On two of those occasions, there were midterm elections to fill the vacancies. But that cannot occur under our current Constitution, because both the Constitution and the Public Officers Law have since been amended in significant **1153 respects.<sup>4</sup>

The position of Lieutenant Governor was created in New York's first Constitution of 1777 (adopted before the United States Constitution), which provided for an election to fill a vacancy in that office in the event the Lieutenant Governor *162 died, resigned or was removed from office (see Constitution of 1777 art XX). But that clause was removed in the 1821 Constitution and no Constitution since that time has specified any procedure for filling a Lieutenant Governor vacancy. In this respect, our State Constitution was similar to the Federal Constitution, which did not contain a procedure for filling a vacancy in the office of Vice President until the adoption ***858 of the 25th Amendment in 1967. Instead, the New York Constitution has spelled out a chain of succession in the event of the death or other inability of the Governor or Lieutenant Governor, currently codified in article IV, § 6. The Constitution and the statutes upon which the defendants rely have never been read to permit appointment of a Lieutenant Governor, even though there have been many opportunities for prior Governors to advance such a reading.

The decision in Matter of Ward v. Curran, 266 App.Div. 524, 44 N.Y.S.2d 240 [3d Dept.1943], affd. without op. 291 N.Y. 642, 50 N.E.2d 1023 [1943]—which involved the eighth Lieutenant Governor vacancy in New York's history—held that the Constitution, as it was then worded, permitted an election to fill the vacancy, but it does not support the majority's view that such a vacancy can be filled by appointment. The controversy underlying Ward arose in July 1943 when Lieutenant Governor Thomas Wallace died, creating a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor. Governor Thomas Dewey and Wallace had been elected the previous November on the Republican ticket. Albert Ward, the State Chair of the Democratic Party, brought a mandamus proceeding against the Secretary of State to compel an election to fill the office of Lieutenant Governor in the upcoming November 1943 election. Both Governor Dewey and Attorney General Nathaniel Goldstein took the position that such an election would be illegal as the Constitution required that the Governor and Lieutenant Governor be chosen at the same time and for the same term (the Constitution did not yet require that these offices be elected jointly by single vote). They further asserted that article III, § 9 of the Constitution—a provision addressing the powers of the Legislature—directed the Senate to “choose a temporary president to preside in case of the absence or impeachment of the lieutenant-governor.” (266 App.Div. at 526, 44 N.Y.S.2d 240.) They did not, however, rest their analysis on the predecessor to article IV, § 6 because, at that time, it did not contain any language indicating *163 that the temporary president of the Senate assumed the powers of the Lieutenant Governor.<sup>5</sup>

**1154 In a divided decision, the Appellate Division directed the Secretary of State to conduct the election pursuant to the predecessor of Public Officers Law § 42. The majority reasoned that it was inappropriate for the person who fulfills the duties of Lieutenant Governor to be someone who was elected only by the voters of a single senatorial district. They emphasized: “It is a fundamental principle of our form of government that a vacancy in an elective office should be filled by election as soon as practicable after the vacancy occurs” ***859 (266 App.Div. at 526, 44 N.Y.S.2d 240 [emphasis added]). The dissenter believed that such an election would be unconstitutional because article IV, § 1 contains the only provision authorizing an election for Governor or Lieutenant Governor and requires that such office be filled in quadrennial elections. Thus, he concluded that the office of Lieutenant Governor could not be filled at a general election that was not a quadrennial election. This Court affirmed without opinion (291 N.Y. 642, 50 N.E.2d 1023 [1943]).

Upset with this turn of events, Governor Dewey urged the Legislature to begin the process of amending the Constitution and to change Public Officers Law § 42 to preclude an election for the office of Lieutenant Governor (Message of Governor Thomas E. Dewey to the Legislature, Jan. 5, 1944, 1944 N.Y. Legis. Doc. No. 1, at 17–18). The Legislature heeded the Governor's call on both counts. It immediately amended Public Officers Law § 42—the statute on which Ward had relied—so that it *164 expressly excluded the Governor and Lieutenant Governor from its ambit (as it continues to do today) (see L. 1944, ch. 3). The Legislature also passed amendments to the New York Constitution that were ultimately adopted by vote of the People.

More specifically, article IV, § 6 was amended in 1945 to add a provision directly addressing what is to occur when there is a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor alone.<sup>6</sup> This amendment was **1155 significant for several reasons. Whereas the 1938 version of this clause did not indicate that the temporary president of the Senate fulfills the duties of Lieutenant Governor during a vacancy in that office, the 1945 version expressly so provided. Furthermore, the 1945 version indicated precisely what was to occur when there was a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor alone—“the temporary president ... shall perform all the duties of lieutenant-governor ... during such vacancy.” The 1945 amendments also stated that the Lieutenant Governor can never be separately elected from the Governor. These constitutional amendments, combined with the *165 legislative amendment to Public Officers Law § 42, overruled Ward.

In the years since 1945, other constitutional amendments have moved still further ***860 away from Ward's holding. In 1953, the Constitution was amended to require that the Governor and Lieutenant Governor be “chosen jointly, by the casting by each voter of a single vote applicable to both offices” (art § 1), echoing another of Governor Dewey's recommendations. Additional clarification of the chain of succession occurred in 1949 and 1963 amendments.

Defendants and the majority use Ward as support for the conclusion that a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor can be filled through gubernatorial appointment under Public Officers Law § 43. They contend that, unlike Public Officers Law § 42, section 43 was not amended in the wake of Ward to expressly exclude the office of Lieutenant Governor. But nothing in Ward suggests that section 43 ever applied to that office. Ward held that the Lieutenant Governor vacancy could be filled by election—not by gubernatorial appointment. In Ward, the Appellate Division majority determined that it would be inappropriate to allow the office of Lieutenant Governor to be filled by the temporary president of the Senate for the entire unexpired term because that legislative leader had been elected only by the voters of one district of the state. It seems highly unlikely that the Ward court would have endorsed the notion that a Lieutenant Governor could be appointed by a Governor with no input from the electorate and no vetting by the legislative branch of government.

In fact, shortly before the litigation, Attorney General Goldstein issued an opinion clarifying that such an appointment would be inconsistent with the constitutional and statutory scheme. Citing Public Officers Law § 43, the Attorney General observed:

“No one has ever claimed that this section conferred upon the Governor the power to appoint his own successor. Such a contention would lead to the anomalous result that a Governor by appointing a Lieutenant–Governor and then resigning could impose upon the people his own choice as their Governor” (1943 Ops. Atty. Gen. 378, 382, available at 1943 WL 54210, *4).

This point, which was repeated in the Attorney General's brief *166 in Ward, was not disputed by the parties or the Appellate Division.

As we noted, the fact that no Governor has previously attempted to appoint a Lieutenant Governor, while significant, does not resolve the legal issue before us. But it does show a remarkable consensus **1156 that such an appointment was impermissible. This consensus may result in part from a similarity between our Constitution and the Federal Constitution, which lacked a procedure for filling a vacancy in the office of Vice President until a constitutional amendment was adopted in 1967. The 25th Amendment (§ 2) now provides: “Whenever there is a vacancy in the Office of the Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.” New York constitutional commentators and participants at constitutional conventions have examined whether it would be advisable to adopt a similar mechanism by which the Governor could fill a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor by appointment. Proposals for constitutional amendments have been submitted over the years that would have authorized gubernatorial appointment with the advice and consent of the Senate (see Proposition No. 923, 8 Proceedings of the Constitutional Convention of the State of New York, June 12, 1967, at 606–608) or, comparable to the 25th Amendment, with confirmation by a majority vote of both houses of the Legislature (see 1985 Rep. of N.Y. Law Rev. Commn, reprinted in 1985 McKinney's Session Laws of N.Y., at 2483, 2575). To ***861 date, none of these proposals has been acted upon.

Supporters of the proposed amendments, like the Governor and some of the amici curiae, make strong policy arguments in support of allowing the Governor to make an appointment to fill a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor. But since our Constitution does not currently permit such a procedure, the constitutional amendment process is the only appropriate vehicle for such a change.

V

The majority and defendants rely on decisions from other states to support their arguments but the cases cited are not persuasive. The constitutional provisions at issue in those cases were different from New York clauses that guide our analysis, either because there was no temporal provision that limited the duration that an appointee could hold an office to a specific and *167 ascertainable date (as there is in article XIII, § 3 of the New York Constitution) (see People ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 114 Cal. 168, 45 P. 1060 [1896]; State ex rel. Trauger v. Nash, 66 Ohio St. 612, 64 N.E. 558 [1902]; State ex rel. Weeks v. Day, 14 Fla. 9 [1871]; In re Advisory Opinion to the Governor, 688 A.2d 288 [R.I. 1997] ), or there was no clause directing that a particular official was to fulfill the duties of Lieutenant Governor in the event of a vacancy in that office alone (as there is in article IV, § 6 of the New York Constitution) (see Advisory Opinion to Governor, 217 So.2d 289 [Fla.1968] ), or both provisions were absent (see State ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, 228 Wis. 645, 280 N.W. 393 [1938] ). In any event, most of these cases were subsequently overruled by constitutional amendment or legislative enactment.

VI

Despite our disagreement, we join the majority in acknowledging the good faith and good intentions of all parties in this difficult and important case. At the time the Governor named a Lieutenant Governor, two Senators credibly claimed the position of temporary president of the Senate. The resulting uncertainty over the temporary president's identity created two practical problems. First, it clouded the line of gubernatorial succession; and second, the absence of an acknowledged presiding officer thwarted day-to-day business in the Senate. While the amici's dire characterizations of this political deadlock may be overstated, it is easy to understand why the Governor felt impelled to act and has **1157 vigorously defended his position. But neither the Governor nor this Court can amend the Constitution. Our Constitution's provisions governing gubernatorial succession have been scrutinized repeatedly over the past few decades, and have consistently been adjudged adequate. We should adhere to the Constitution we have, which simply does not authorize what the majority now sanctions.

Footnotes

- 1 Senator Pedro Espada, Jr. initially joined Senator Skelos as a plaintiff in this action; however, Senator Espada did not file a brief on this appeal. We therefore refer to only one plaintiff for purposes of this opinion.
- 2 As the Attorney General pointed out in his 1943 pre-Ward opinion, "there [was] no distinction in language between [section 43] and section 42 of the Public Officers Law" (1943 Ops. Atty. Gen. 378, 382, 1943 WL 54210). And at the time of the post-Ward amendment to the Public Officers Law, the Legislature was well aware that section 42 had been held to apply to the office of Lieutenant Governor, even though the office was not specifically mentioned. The same language, appearing in section 43, could not in this Ward-defined context have been understood to exclude the office of Lieutenant Governor.
- 3 The rationale for the post-Ward amendments was well summarized by Governor Dewey in his February 1953 address to the Assembly:

"Executive responsibilities in our government are so interwoven that the election of a Governor and Lieutenant Governor politically opposed to each other involves serious problems. As a practical matter the Governor must encounter difficulty in leaving the State even for a short period and on pressing public business. This has created the greatest embarrassment in other states, to the damage of public confidence in government and the injury of the public interest.

"Even more important, there is a great advantage in being able to entrust many of the complex administrative tasks of the Governor to an able Lieutenant Governor. I have done this repeatedly and with notable benefit to the people of the State. This would not have been possible if the Lieutenant Governor was required, as a matter of party loyalty, to lead the minority party." (Message of the Governor In Relation to Proposed Constitutional Amendment For Joint Election of Governor and Lieutenant Governor, Feb. 9, 1953 [1953 N.Y. Legis Doc No. 36, at 3].)
- 1 See e.g. County Law § 652(1) (undersheriff shall "execute the duties of the office of sheriff" until a new sheriff is elected or appointed); County Law § 914 (deputy shall, "subject to the provisions of the public officers law, have all the powers and fulfill all the duties of the county clerk"); Town Law § 42 (until a successor is appointed, the deputy town supervisor shall "perform all of the duties of the supervisor"); Second Class Cities Law § 62 (deputy city comptroller "shall discharge the duties of the office" in the event of a vacancy).
- 2 If article XIII, § 3 is applied to a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor under the facts presented here, since the vacancy occurred on March 17, 2008, this would mean that a midterm election would have had to be held in November 2008 (the first "annual election after the happening of the vacancy") and any appointee—who would have had to be chosen by the Governor before that time—could serve only until the winner of that midterm election took office at "the commencement of the [next] political year," which would have been January 1, 2009 (see art XIII, § 4). Such a midterm election is expressly precluded under several provisions of the Constitution (see art IV, §§ 1, 6) and, in any event, there was no appointment in 2008. Defendants argue that the time frames in article XIII, § 3 have not been strictly applied but, even reading some flexibility into the provision (and our precedent has not clearly done so), the fact remains that the clause requires a prompt election to replace an appointee and this must occur as soon as possible after the vacancy arises. Certainly, it does not authorize a long-term appointment to fulfill a complete unexpired term.
- 3 The vacancies occurred in 1811, 1828, 1829, 1847, 1885, 1910, 1913, 1943, 1973 and 1985. Six occurred as a result of the succession of the Lieutenant Governor to the office of Governor. The remaining four stemmed from either the death or resignation of the Lieutenant Governor. The most recent vacancies occurred in December 1973 when Lieutenant Governor Malcolm Wilson succeeded to the Governorship upon the resignation of Nelson Rockefeller (Senator Anderson, temporary president of the Senate at the time, fulfilled the duties until the end of the term) and in February 1985 when Lieutenant Governor Alfred DelBello resigned (again, Senator Anderson fulfilled the duties until the end of the term).

4 The first of the two elections to fill Lieutenant Governor vacancies occurred in 1847 as a result of a special statute passed by the Legislature (see L. 1847, ch. 303). The constitutional validity of that statute was never challenged. The second such election resulted from Matter of Ward v. Curran, 266 App.Div. 524, 44 N.Y.S.2d 240 [3d Dept.1943], affd. without op. 291 N.Y. 642, 50 N.E.2d 1023 [1943].

5 The 1938 version of article IV, § 6 that was in effect when Ward was decided read as follows:

"The lieutenant-governor shall possess the same qualifications of eligibility for office as the governor. He shall be president of the senate, but shall have only a casting vote therein. If the office of governor become vacant and there be no lieutenant-governor, such vacancy shall be filled for the remainder of the term at the next general election happening not less than three months after such vacancy occurs; and in such case, until the vacancy be filled by election, or in case the lieutenant-governor be under impeachment or unable to discharge the powers and duties of the office of governor or shall be absent from the state, the temporary president of the senate shall act as governor during such inability, absence or the pendency of such impeachment. If the temporary president of the senate shall be unable to discharge the powers and duties of the office of governor or be absent from the state, the speaker of the assembly shall act as governor during such inability or absence. The lieutenant-governor shall receive for his services an annual salary of ten thousand dollars."

6 The 1945 version of article IV, § 6 provided:

"The lieutenant-governor shall possess the same qualifications of eligibility for office as the governor. He shall be president of the senate, but shall have only a casting vote therein. The lieutenant-governor shall receive for his services an annual salary of ten thousand dollars.

"If the office of governor become vacant and there be no lieutenant-governor, the offices of governor and lieutenant-governor shall be filled for the remainder of the terms at the next general election happening not less than three months after the vacancy in the office of governor occurs. No election of a lieutenant-governor shall be had in any event except at the time of electing a governor. Until the vacancies in the offices of the governor and lieutenant-governor be filled by election, the temporary president of the senate then in office or his successor as such temporary president shall perform all the duties of lieutenant-governor and shall act as governor.

"If the office of lieutenant-governor alone be vacant, or in case the lieutenant-governor be under impeachment, unable to discharge the powers and duties of the office of governor or shall be absent from the state, the temporary president of the senate then in office or his successor as such temporary president shall perform all the duties of lieutenant-governor, including the duty of acting as governor when necessary, during such vacancy, inability, absence or the pendency of such impeachment.

"If ... the temporary president of the senate ... be unable to discharge the powers and duties of such office or be absent from the state, the speaker of the assembly shall act as governor during such inability or absence" (emphasis added to identify new language).

GOVERNOR'S SURPRISING POWER TO APPOINT A LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

Copyright (c) 2010 Albany Law School; Richard Briffault

On July 8, 2009, Governor David Paterson surprised New York's legal and political world by announcing his intention to appoint Richard Ravitch to fill the vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. No New York governor had ever appointed a lieutenant governor before. Paterson's action was widely denounced as unauthorized and unconstitutional. Four months later, observers were even more astonished when the Court of Appeals in Skelos v. Paterson upheld the governor's action. This article explains why the governor and Court of Appeals were right to conclude that the governor had statutory and constitutional authority for his action. Indeed, the case for the governor's action is quite straightforward and surprisingly strong. That authority follows from the plain text of a statute, the leading judicial precedent, and the relevant provisions of the state constitution. By contrast, the case against the governor's action was quite weak, relying more on extra-textual and policy concerns than the law itself.

I. Introduction

On July 8, 2009, Governor David Paterson surprised New York's political and legal world by announcing his intention to appoint Richard Ravitch as lieutenant governor, thereby filling the vacancy in that office created on March 17, 2008, when Governor Eliot Spitzer resigned and Paterson, then lieutenant governor, became governor. As Court of Appeals Judge Eugene Pigott later put it, *676 when Paterson became governor, "no one gave a thought or harbored a suggestion that he had the ability to appoint a Lieutenant Governor."<sup>1</sup> No provision of the state constitution expressly authorizes the governor to appoint a lieutenant governor.<sup>2</sup> Instead, the constitution provides that "the temporary president of the senate shall perform all the duties of lieutenant-governor" if there is a vacancy in that office.<sup>3</sup> There have been at least ten vacancies in the office of lieutenant governor,<sup>4</sup> and at no time before July 2009 did a governor ever attempt to appoint a lieutenant governor to fill the vacancy.<sup>5</sup> Indeed, at the time Governor Paterson acted, the office of lieutenant governor had been vacant for fifteen months and he had made no previous attempt to fill it. On the eve of Governor Paterson's action, Attorney General Andrew Cuomo announced that such an appointment was "not constitutional."<sup>6</sup> The constitutionality of Governor Paterson's move was subsequently denounced by a former chief judge, a former lieutenant governor, a former attorney general, and a leading academic expert on the state constitution.<sup>7</sup> When the inevitable court challenge resulted, a state supreme court justice and a unanimous four-judge appellate division panel in rapid succession held the governor's action unconstitutional.<sup>8</sup>

*677 Yet the Court of Appeals ultimately upheld the governor's appointment<sup>9</sup>--and the Court of Appeals was right. The governor's action was authorized by the plain meaning of a state statute, supported by judicial precedent, and consistent with both the text and structure of the state constitution. The legal grounds for challenging the governor's action were weak and inconsistent, ultimately relying more on the arguments that "it's never been done before" and extra-textual concerns about undue gubernatorial power than legal texts. Although no constitutional provision expressly authorized the governor's action, no constitutional or statutory provision barred it, either. A gubernatorial action authorized by statute and not precluded by the constitution or any other law is presumptively valid.

The Ravitch litigation is a reminder that even when it comes to constitutional questions, widely held but untested assumptions and reliance on traditions and past practices (or the lack of them) is no substitute for close and careful reading of the relevant constitutional and statutory texts and case law. The fact that something has never been done before may only mean that it "present [s] an open legal question,"<sup>10</sup> not that it is unauthorized or prohibited.

The Ravitch litigation underscores the continuing importance of the longstanding view of a state constitution as a limitation, and not a grant of powers, so that the legislature has plenary authority to exercise a power as long as it is not limited by the New York State Constitution.<sup>11</sup> So, too, the Ravitch dispute reminds us just how problematic are some of our laws dealing with the filling of vacancies in statewide elective office. One benefit of this dispute could be closer attention to the vacancies issue. Certainly, the scandals that engulfed Governor Paterson in early 2010 only further underscored the value of having a lieutenant governor in place and the uncertainty about gubernatorial succession removed.

*678 Part II of this comment provides a brief chronology of the events leading to Governor Paterson's naming of Richard Ravitch as lieutenant governor, and of the litigation that followed. Part III analyzes the legal issues raised by the governor's action. Part IV concludes by considering the implications for state constitutional law and for the specific question of filling vacancies in state office.

II. A Tumultuous Term: From the Election of Eliot Spitzer to the Judicial Validation of the Appointment of Richard Ravitch

In November 2006, Eliot Spitzer, then the state attorney general, and David Paterson, then a state senator and senate minority leader, both Democrats, were together elected governor and lieutenant governor of the State of New York by an overwhelming 65.7% of the vote.<sup>12</sup> Less than fifteen months into his term, Governor Spitzer, engulfed by scandal, resigned, and on March 17, 2008, Lieutenant Governor Paterson, by virtue of article IV, section 5 of the state constitution,<sup>13</sup> became New York's 55th governor.<sup>14</sup> Thereafter, the position of lieutenant governor remained vacant until the summer of 2009. Article IV, section 6 provides that in the event of a vacancy in that office, the temporary president of the senate "shall perform all the duties of lieutenant-governor during such vacancy."<sup>15</sup> When Paterson became governor, the senate majority leader and temporary president of the senate was Joseph Bruno, a Republican. At that time, Senator Bruno became acting lieutenant governor.<sup>16</sup> On June 24, 2008, Senator Bruno, also buffeted by scandal, stepped down from his leadership post (he quit the senate altogether on July 18, 2008)<sup>17</sup> and Senator Dean Skelos, another Republican, became majority leader, temporary senate president, and acting lieutenant governor.<sup>18</sup> In the November 2008 *679 elections, for the first time since 1965, the Democratic Party won a majority of senate seats<sup>19</sup> and on January 7, 2009, the Democratic leader, Malcolm Smith, became senate majority leader, temporary president of the senate, and, as a result, acting lieutenant governor.<sup>20</sup>

Senator Smith's hold on power was a precarious one, however. His party held a slender 32-30 majority,<sup>21</sup> and even before the Democrats took control of the senate in January 2009, a group of four Democrats had temporarily withheld their support from the party leadership while they negotiated terms for their votes.<sup>22</sup> On June 8, 2009, the Democratic majority broke apart as two Democrats--Senators Pedro Espada and Hiram Monserrate--bolted their party and joined the thirty Republicans in an effort to remove Senator Smith as temporary president.<sup>23</sup> They adopted a resolution electing Senator Espada temporary president and Senator Skelos majority leader.<sup>24</sup> The rest of the Democratic Senators refused to accept the legitimacy of this action and went to state supreme court, Albany County, seeking a declaration that Smith was still temporary president.<sup>25</sup> That action was dismissed as an “improvident intrusion into the affairs of the senate” by the court on June 16.<sup>26</sup> In the meantime, Senator Monserrate had returned to the Democratic fold on June 15, leaving the senate evenly split between two groups of thirty-one, each claiming control, including the right to choose the senate’s leadership and determine its agenda.<sup>27</sup> During this period, it was unclear who was temporary president of the senate and acting lieutenant governor—Senator Espada or Senator Smith—so that it was unclear who could preside *680 over the senate or who would take over as governor should Governor Paterson become incapacitated.<sup>28</sup>

That 31-31 division persisted for nearly a month, leaving the senate stalled and unable to do any business.<sup>29</sup> Mid-June 2009 was a particularly unfortunate time for such deadlock. A number of significant laws, including the one giving the mayor of New York City control over the city’s schools, were set to expire on June 30.<sup>30</sup> Similarly, a number of laws authorizing state and local taxes were due to expire on June 30, and other laws authorizing new revenue measures were needed by June 30th if taxes—essential for the local revenue collections needed to balance local budgets—were to be in place at the start of the local government fiscal year on July 1.<sup>31</sup> The senate was unable to take action on any of these measures.<sup>32</sup> Governor Paterson repeatedly called the senate into extraordinary session to address these matters. The senate met in special session eighteen times, with the two contending groups meeting separately within the chamber, “gaveling in and minutes later gaveling out without conducting any meaningful legislative business.”<sup>33</sup> As a result, tens of millions of dollars of state and local revenues were lost, and “the tax structures and budgets of towns and cities across the state were in shambles.”<sup>34</sup> The senate’s failure to approve tax measures required New York City to postpone the hiring of 250 police officers, 150 firefighters, 175 school safety agents, 150 crossing guards, and thirty-four emergency operators.<sup>35</sup> The state comptroller estimated that the total direct cost of the senate stalemate to the state and to local governments was $2.9 billion.<sup>36</sup> Moreover, on July 1, the old New York City Board of Education— *681 defunct since 2002—sprang back to life, unsettling the governance structure for New York City’s public schools.<sup>37</sup>

Finally, on July 8th, Governor Paterson moved to break the senate impasse by naming Richard Ravitch—a distinguished senior civic and business leader, who had previously served as chair of the state Urban Development Corporation and as head of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority—as lieutenant governor.<sup>38</sup> Under the constitution, the lieutenant governor not only presides over the senate but can cast a “casting vote,” that is, he can break ties on procedural matters.<sup>39</sup> Ravitch’s appointment would have enabled the senate to organize itself and get back to business. Indeed, even though the legal status of Ravitch’s appointment was immediately clouded by litigation, and Ravitch was not cleared to preside over the senate until the Court of Appeals’s decision in late September, the governor’s action had an immediate effect. On July 9th, Senator Espada returned to the Democratic fold, giving the Democrats a working majority in the senate<sup>40</sup> and making Malcolm Smith once again temporary senate president.

Governor Paterson had barely announced Ravitch’s appointment when Senators Skelos and Espada sued to block Ravitch from taking office. The two senators sought a temporary restraining order from state supreme court, Nassau County, barring the appointment.<sup>41</sup> A temporary restraining order was issued on July 9th, but was vacated later the same day by the Appellate Division, Second Department.<sup>42</sup> Thereafter the litigation moved swiftly through three levels of the state judiciary. After briefing and oral argument, Supreme Court, Nassau County, on July 22 granted a preliminary injunction barring Ravitch from exercising any of the powers of the office of lieutenant governor.<sup>43</sup> That injunction was affirmed by a unanimous four-judge panel of the Appellate Division, Second Department on August 20th.<sup>44</sup> While the case was pending *682 before the appellate division, Senator Espada dropped out, leaving Senator Skelos to carry the challenge alone. Relying on somewhat different reasoning and turning aside a host of technical questions<sup>45</sup> in order to resolve the central question of gubernatorial power, both the supreme court and the appellate division concluded that the governor's action was unauthorized by law and unconstitutional.<sup>46</sup> On September 22nd, a closely divided Court of Appeals reversed, in an opinion by Chief Judge Lippman, joined by Judges Ciparick, Read, and Jones.<sup>47</sup> Judge Pigott, joined by Judges Graffeo and Smith, issued a strong dissent.<sup>48</sup>

III. Legal Analysis: Why the Court of Appeals Was Right

A. The Case for the Governor's Power to Appoint a Lieutenant Governor

The case for the governor's power to appoint a lieutenant governor is surprisingly straightforward, relying on the plain meaning of a state statute, clear judicial precedent, and state constitutional provisions dealing with the lieutenant governor, along with some traditional norms of statutory construction and constitutional interpretation.

1. The Statutory Authorization

The statute is section 43 of the Public Officers Law, which provides that when a vacancy occurs in an "elective" office, "otherwise than by expiration of term," and there is "no provision of law for filling" that vacancy, the governor "shall appoint a person to execute the duties thereof until the vacancy shall be filled by an election."<sup>49</sup> The office of lieutenant governor is an elective office. The vacancy in it was created otherwise than by expiration of term. And there is no other provision for filling that vacancy.

*683 Other provisions of the Public Officers Law address the filling of other vacancies. Section 41 provides a mechanism for filling vacancies in the offices of attorney general and comptroller.<sup>50</sup> Section 42 provides generally for the filling of vacancies in elective office, primarily by election, including special elections.<sup>51</sup> Section 42, however, specifically excludes the governor and lieutenant governor from its scope.<sup>52</sup> With the office of lieutenant governor not covered by section 41 and expressly excluded from section 42, it falls within the "catchall"<sup>53</sup> language of section 43.

2. The Precedent

The applicability of section 43 to the office of lieutenant governor is confirmed by an older decision of the appellate division, affirmed by the Court of Appeals, Ward v. Curran.<sup>54</sup> The Ward case arose after the death of Lieutenant Governor Thomas Wallace in 1943.<sup>55</sup> At that time, section 42 of the Public Officers Law did not contain the exclusion of the office of lieutenant governor from its directive that a special election be used to fill a vacancy in elective office--that exclusion was added in response to Ward.<sup>56</sup> The secretary of state, however, resisted ordering a special election to fill the vacancy created by Wallace's death.<sup>57</sup> The attorney general agreed with the secretary of state that an election was not needed.<sup>58</sup> He argued that section 42 did not apply to the office of lieutenant governor, and that the question of vacancies in the office of lieutenant governor was fully taken care of by the constitutional provision authorizing the temporary president of the senate to act as lieutenant governor in the event of a vacancy in that office.<sup>59</sup> According to the attorney general, with the temporary president so acting, the office was not vacant and an election was not needed.<sup>60</sup> The appellate division rejected the attorney general's argument<sup>61</sup> *684 and the Court of Appeals agreed.<sup>62</sup> Although section 42 was subsequently amended to exclude the lieutenant governor from the special election provision,<sup>63</sup> the legislature did not so modify section 42's companion provision, section 43.

The Ward decision confirms the applicability of the Public Officers Law vacancy-filling provisions to the office of lieutenant governor even though the office is not specifically mentioned; it was not mentioned in section 42 when Ward held that section 42 applied to the lieutenant governor. Ward also confirms that the legislature was aware of the fact that broadly-phrased Public Officers Law provisions apply to the lieutenant governor when, after Ward, it amended section 42 but not section 43. The interpretative canon of “[m]eaningful [v]ariation,”<sup>64</sup> and the related rule of expressio unius est exclusio alterius<sup>65</sup> indicate that the exclusion of the lieutenant governor from one section of the Public Officers Law but not from the next complementary section, section 43, was intentional. As the United States Supreme Court once observed, “[w]here Congress includes particular language in one section of the statute but omits it in another . . . it is generally presumed that Congress acts intentionally and purposely in the disparate inclusion or exclusion.”<sup>66</sup> The Court of Appeals has similarly concluded that “where the Legislature lists exceptions in a statute, items not specifically referenced are deemed to have been intentionally excluded.”<sup>67</sup>

In light of Ward and these traditional canons of construction, Chief Judge Lippman was plainly correct in concluding that “in amending the Public Officers Law to remove the office of lieutenant governor from the election mandate of Public Officers Law § 42, the Legislature did not alter section 43, which, in the aftermath of Ward is logically understood as applying to a vacancy in the *685 lieutenant governorship.”<sup>68</sup>

3. The Constitutional Provisions

The Ravitch decision is also supported by two constitutional provisions: the sentence of article IV, section 1, which was given its current form as a result of an amendment to the constitution adopted in 1953,<sup>69</sup> and a sentence added to article IV, section 6 in 1945.<sup>70</sup> The critical language in article IV, section 1 states:

The executive power shall be vested in the governor who shall hold office for four years; the lieutenant-governor shall be chosen at the same time, and for the same term. . . . They shall be chosen jointly, by the casting by each voter of a single vote applicable to both offices.<sup>71</sup>

The key language in article IV, section 6 is: “No election of a lieutenant governor shall be had in any event except at the time of electing a governor.”<sup>72</sup>

These provisions that the governor and lieutenant governor “shall be chosen at the same time, and for the same term,”<sup>73</sup> and that the lieutenant governor shall not be separately elected,<sup>74</sup> were added at the request of Governor Dewey in direct response to the Ward decision.<sup>75</sup> Dewey had been governor at the time of Lieutenant Governor Wallace's death<sup>76</sup> and had been gearing up to run for president in 1944. He had sought to avoid the special election because it raised the possibility of a Democrat being elected lieutenant governor and succeeding to the governorship in the event Dewey won the presidency.<sup>77</sup> With the state senate safely in Republican hands, having the temporary senate president serve as the acting lieutenant governor, and succeeding to the governorship, *686 was preferable.

Upset by the Ward decision, Governor Dewey “urged the Legislature to begin the process of amending the constitution and to change Public Officers Law § 42 to preclude an election for the office of Lieutenant Governor. . . . The Legislature heeded the Governor's call on both counts.”<sup>78</sup> Public Officers Law section 42 was amended to exclude the lieutenant governor,<sup>79</sup> and the constitution was amended, by the language just quoted, to bar the separate election of the lieutenant governor.

As Governor Dewey explained in his Messages to the Legislature concerning the amendment to article IV, section 1:

Executive responsibilities in our government are so interwoven that the election of a Governor and a Lieutenant Governor politically opposed to each other involves serious problems.

. . . [T]here is a great advantage in being able to entrust many of the complex administrative tasks of the Governor to an able Lieutenant Governor. . . . This would not have been possible if the Lieutenant Governor was required, as a matter of party loyalty, to lead the minority party.<sup>80</sup>

As amended, article IV establishes the principle that the governor and lieutenant governor are partners, united by “party loyalty” and a common purpose, with the governor entitled to “entrust many of the complex administrative tasks of [state]” to his teammate, the lieutenant governor.<sup>81</sup> As Governor Dewey put it, “[g]ood government requires responsible cohesive administration.”<sup>82</sup>

Gubernatorial appointment of a lieutenant governor to fill a vacancy in that office, pursuant to Public Officers Law section 43, is entirely consistent with the structure established by article IV, sections 1 and 6, making the governor and lieutenant governor political teammates and enabling the governor to look to a loyal lieutenant governor for assistance. It is certainly far more consistent with this constitutional vision than leaving the acting *687 lieutenant governorship in the hands of a legislator, like Senator Bruno or Senator Skelos, who is the leader of the opposition party in the senate, or in the hands of someone like Senator Espada, who displays no discernable party loyalty at all.

Taken together, then, the case for the governor's action is extremely clear. Public Officers Law section 43 gives the governor authority to make an appointment to fill a vacancy in elective offices, including lieutenant governor. Ward v. Curran confirms that the Public Officers Law applies to the office of lieutenant governor,<sup>83</sup> and traditional canons of interpretation require the conclusion that by amending section 42 to exclude the lieutenant governor without so amending section 43, the legislature intended the lieutenant governor to be covered by section 43. So, too, gubernatorial appointment fulfills the vision expressed by the post-Ward constitutional amendments that the lieutenant governor is to be the governor's political partner.

B. Rejecting the Unpersuasive Case Against the Governor's Power to Appoint a Lieutenant Governor

The case against the governor's power to appoint a lieutenant governor is more complex, relying on inconsistent and insubstantial theories, strained readings of the relevant legal texts, and ultimately on non-textual policy arguments. These arguments can be boiled down to six points: (1) section 43 does not apply because the office of lieutenant governor is not elective; (2) section 43 does not authorize gubernatorial appointment; (3) section 43 does not apply because the office of lieutenant governor is not vacant; (4) section 43 is invalid because the legislature's authority to enact the vacancy-filling measure is based on article XIII, section 3 of the constitution, and section 43 is inconsistent with that provision of the constitution; (5) gubernatorial appointment is inconsistent with “the elective principle”;<sup>84</sup> and finally, (6) the governor cannot make an appointment because no governor has ever made such an appointment before.

The first and second points are flatly inconsistent with the *688 governing texts. The third and fourth points have some merit, but the third fails to account for the constitution's specific language while the fourth relies on an unduly crabbed reading of the constitutional text. The fifth point is inconsistent with the claim that the lieutenant governor is not elected,<sup>85</sup> and is belied by the constitution's prohibition of a special election for lieutenant governor. The final point is not a legal argument at all. These points are addressed below.

1. Lieutenant Governor Is an Elective Office

The principal argument addressed by the supreme court, Nassau County against the governor's power to act pursuant to section 43 is that the "office of lieutenant-governor is not an 'elective office' within the meaning of § 43" since the lieutenant governor is elected on a joint ticket with the governor.<sup>86</sup> But that is nonsense. The constitution provides for the election of a lieutenant governor.<sup>87</sup> This argument was dropped even by the appellate judges who opposed the governor.<sup>88</sup> Chief Judge Lippman's opinion for the Court of Appeals properly assumed without discussion that the lieutenant governor is an elective office.<sup>89</sup>

2. Section 43 Authorizes the Governor to Fill Vacancies in Elective Office

The second contention, discussed by both the appellate division and the Court of Appeals, that section 43 does not actually authorize the governor to fill vacancies,<sup>90</sup> is equally nonsensical. To be sure, it relies on the language of section 43, which provides that "the governor shall appoint a person to execute the duties" of the offices to which it applies, and does not say something like "shall appoint someone to fill the vacancy."<sup>91</sup> But this hyper-technical *689 argument ignores the fact that section 43 is titled "filling other vacancies," much as section 41 is entitled "vacancies filled by legislature" and section 42 is entitled "filling vacancies in elective offices."<sup>92</sup> Plainly, the legislature assumed that all three consecutive sections within the article of the Public Officers Law entitled "creation and filling of vacancies" dealt with filling vacancies. Although the title of a legislative section is not controlling, it is surely relevant to the interpretation of the statute.<sup>93</sup> Moreover, this argument is not limited to the office of lieutenant governor, but potentially could be used against the power to appoint to fill a vacancy in any elective office covered by section 43, in effect nullifying the statute. Again, Chief Judge Lippman was plainly correct in treating section 43, with sections 41 and 42, as part of a package of "vacancy-filling provisions."<sup>94</sup>

3. The Office of Lieutenant Governor Was Vacant

The claim that section 43 is inapplicable to the lieutenant governor position because there is no vacancy to fill is somewhat more substantial. The constitution directs that in the event of a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor, "the temporary president of the senate shall perform all the duties of lieutenant-governor during such vacancy."<sup>95</sup> Arguably, then, the office is not vacant. But "perform[ing] the duties" is not quite the same thing as filling the vacancy. The distinction is highlighted by comparing this language with the provision of the constitution directing that, in the event of the governor's death, resignation, or removal from office, the lieutenant governor "shall become governor for the remainder of the term."<sup>96</sup> By that language, the lieutenant governor fills the vacancy in the office of governor. By contrast, the temporary president of the senate is merely acting as lieutenant governor.

The difference between filling a vacancy and merely acting as lieutenant governor is underscored by the fact that the lieutenant governor gives up his former post to become governor while the temporary senate president remains temporary senate president while "perform[ing] the duties" of lieutenant governor. Dual office- *690 holding is highly unusual in our system, and the presumption ought to be that the temporary senate president is merely "perform [ing] the duties" of lieutenant governor, not actually becoming lieutenant governor. So, too, the identity of the person "perform[ing] the duties" of lieutenant governor can keep changing. There were four people "perform[ing] those duties" between 2008 and 2009--Joseph Bruno, Dean Skelos, Malcolm Smith, and Pedro Espada. This is hardly consistent with any one of them filling the vacancy. In addition, the temporary president of the senate's "perform[ance of] the duties" of lieutenant governor raises the uneasy possibility that he will be able to cast two votes in the senate--his own vote as a senator, and, in the event of a tie, the casting vote of the lieutenant governor.<sup>97</sup> With a 31-31 or even a 32-30 senate, the prospect of a tie and a casting vote by the senate majority leader/acting lieutenant governor is not at all farfetched. Then-Majority Leader Joseph Bruno chuckled at a 2008 forum that he would be "happy to have two votes."<sup>98</sup> Double-voting is even more troubling than dual office-holding. While the constitution may be read to permit it in this instance, given the problematic nature of double-voting it makes sense to treat the authorization of double-voting as only a temporary measure, rather than one locked in for the duration of the lieutenant governor's term.

These concerns growing out of the temporary senate president's continuing role in the senate while also acting as lieutenant governor confirm that the better reading of article IV, section 6 is the one adopted by the Court of Appeals majority, that the temporary senate president does not fill the vacancy but provides "only stopgap coverage of the function of the Lieutenant Governor."<sup>99</sup> As Chief Judge Lippman's opinion explained:

Properly understood, then, the two provisions--article IV, § 6 and Public Officers Law § 43--are complementary rather than duplicative and, accordingly, article IV, § 6 should not be construed, as it was by the Appellate Division, as a limitation upon gubernatorial appointment pursuant to *691 Public Officers Law § 43.<sup>100</sup>

4. Application of Section 43 to the Office of Lieutenant Governor Is Not Inconsistent with Article XIII, Section 3.

Probably the strongest argument against the governor's action is the one based on article XIII, section 3. That provision authorizes the legislature to provide for filling vacancies in office, and in case of elective officers, no person appointed to fill a vacancy shall hold his or her office by virtue of such appointment longer than the commencement of the political year next succeeding the first annual election after the happening of the vacancy.<sup>101</sup> Article XIII, section 3 is apparently the source of the legislature's authority to enact the vacancy-filling provisions of the Public Officers Law, but its requirement that the appointee filling a vacancy cannot serve "longer than the commencement of the political year next succeeding the first annual election after the happening of the vacancy"<sup>102</sup> is arguably inconsistent with the governor's power to appoint a lieutenant governor to fill out the remainder of the lieutenant governor's term. The language suggests that any appointee's term should have ended after the 2008 election as the lieutenant governor position became vacant in March 2008, or for an appointment made in July 2009, the 2009 election.

But this argument is also unpersuasive. The constitution does not define the term "political year." All it says, in article XIII, section 4, is that "[t]he political year and legislative term shall begin on the first day of January,"<sup>103</sup> but that does not indicate which January--2009, 2010, or 2011--or whether, given section 4's focus on the legislative term, that the "political year" is the same for all offices. Certainly, it is not the general case that appointments to fill vacancies in elective offices are good only until the first of January in the year after the appointment is made. Indeed, that is not the rule for filling any of the vacancies in statewide office. Section 42 (4-a) of the Public Officers Law provides that if a vacancy occurs in the elective office of United States Senator in an even-numbered year within sixty days before the annual primary day, which is *692 usually in September, the governor can appoint someone who will serve until "the third day of January in the year following the next even numbered calendar year."<sup>104</sup> In other words, someone appointed, say, "in late August 2010, would serve until January 2013, or nearly two and a half years,"<sup>105</sup> while "someone appointed in an odd-numbered year would hold office until 'the third day of January in the next odd numbered calendar year.'"<sup>106</sup> Thus, pursuant to section 42 (4-a), Senator Kirsten Gillibrand's appointment could last "nearly two years."<sup>107</sup>

Section 41 of the Public Officers Law goes even further, authorizing "the Legislature to fill vacancies in the elective offices of Attorney General and Comptroller for the duration of the vacant term."<sup>108</sup> Therefore, Comptroller DiNapoli's legislative appointment in early 2007 means his term will not expire until January 2011, lasting almost four years.<sup>109</sup>

Therefore, “[i]n light of the uncertain meaning of ‘political year’ in the context of filling vacancies in statewide offices,”<sup>110</sup> like United States Senator, attorney general, and comptroller, and given the “‘same time, same term’ provision of Article IV, § 1,”<sup>111</sup> it is probably best to treat the term “political year” for appointment to fill the vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor, as one that runs with the Governor’s and Lieutenant Governor’s constitutional four-year term of office. That would be consistent with the legislature’s power to appoint an attorney general or comptroller for the duration of those offices’ four-year terms, as well as with article IV’s evident desire to treat the governor and lieutenant governor as a team.<sup>112</sup>

The Court of Appeals was, thus, consistent with longstanding state practice in holding that the purpose of the political year provision is “to assure that appointments to elective offices extend no longer than is reasonably necessary to fill such offices by election.”<sup>113</sup> Given article IV’s directive that the lieutenant governor can be elected only at an election for governor, article XIII *693 would be satisfied if the appointive term ran until “the next election at which the office may be legally filled.”<sup>114</sup> Consistent with the “whole act” rule,<sup>115</sup> this nicely and appropriately harmonizes the relevant constitutional provisions and also reflects “the main object of article XIII, § 3, expressed unequivocally in its first clause, which, of course, is to assure that vacancies are filled.”<sup>116</sup>

5. The “Elective Principle” Does Not Bar a Gubernatorial Appointment

Diametrically opposed to the claim that section 43 does not apply because the lieutenant governor is not elected is the argument that gubernatorial appointment violates the so-called “electoral principle.” This argument was put forward with great rhetorical force by the plaintiffs and by Judge Pigott’s dissent. Judge Pigott stressed that the appointed lieutenant governor could succeed to the governorship in the event of the latter’s death or resignation with “the possibility exist[ing] that the citizens of this state will one day find themselves governed by a person who has never been subjected to scrutiny by the electorate.”<sup>117</sup>

In early March 2010, with Governor Paterson mired in scandals, Judge Pigott’s concern proved prescient, but the legal argument that an “electoral principle” limits the appointive power is weak. The “electoral principle phrase” draws on language in the Ward opinion, which in turn quoted an earlier case, to the effect that “[i]t is a fundamental principle of our form of government than a vacancy in an elective office should be filled by election as soon as practicable after the vacancy occurs.”<sup>118</sup> But whatever the power of the “elective principle” idea in Ward, it was displaced by the people and the legislature when the constitution and the Public Officers Law were amended to bar a special election to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. As the Court of Appeals put it, “the elective principle, upheld by the judiciary in Ward, was thus legislatively subordinated to assure the structural integrity and *694 efficacy of the executive branch.”<sup>119</sup>

The elective principle, including the filling of vacancies in elective office by election is, of course, a sound idea. But for a host of offices--attorney general and comptroller, whose vacancies are filled by legislative selection; the office of United States Senator, for which the governor can make a two-year appointment followed by a special election; and all the elective offices covered by section 43--the elective principle has been superseded by other provisions.<sup>120</sup> As the Court of Appeals explained, “[r]ules of succession are . . . inevitably imperfect and . . . invariably compromise elective principles.”<sup>121</sup>

The elective principle objection is, thus, really a policy argument which must fall given the many constitutional and statutory provisions that accept, or require, other means of filling vacancies.

6. The Fact That No Governor Before Ever Sought to Appoint a Lieutenant Governor Is Irrelevant

Even more than the elective principle, the central concern driving Judge Pigott's dissent, and much of the opposition to the governor's action, is that the appointment of a lieutenant governor is "unprecedented."<sup>122</sup> Judge Pigott stressed that on "at least 10 occasions since the first New York Constitution was adopted in 1777 . . . the position of Lieutenant Governor has been vacant, but no Governor has ever seen fit to assert that he had the power to appoint a Lieutenant Governor to fill the vacancy."<sup>123</sup> For the governor's opponents and the Court of Appeals dissenters, the objection was two-hundred-and-thirty years of non-action.

Judge Pigott's dissent overstates the history of non-action. New York did not adopt a four-year term for governor and lieutenant governor until 1938, so that for more than 160 years the lieutenant governor served for a two-year term (or in some periods a three-year term). With that shorter term, some period of vacancy in office might have been acceptable. Also, for at least two different eras, legislation provided for filling the vacancy by election, and two *695 vacancies--in 1847 and 1943--were filled by election.<sup>124</sup>

As a result, the relevant period for non-action is just the roughly six decades since the post-Ward amendments to the Public Officers Law and the constitution. During that time, there were three vacancies in the office of lieutenant governor prior to the present one--in 1953, 1973, and 1985. When the first two vacancies occurred, the senate was controlled by the same party as the governor, so there was no partisan conflict between the governor and the acting lieutenant governor.<sup>125</sup> The only time in modern New York history when the lieutenant governorship was vacant and the governor and temporary senate president were of opposing political parties was the not-quite two-year period between the resignation of Lieutenant Governor DelBello in February 1985 and the end of the term to which he had been elected in December 1986.<sup>126</sup> That is not an overwhelming negative precedent against the governor's action.

More importantly, "the mere fact that a constitutional power has not been exercised does not prove the power does not exist."<sup>127</sup> A power may exist but lie dormant until circumstances remind us of its existence and justify or require its use. The objection from lack of prior use is like the claim about the elective principle--ultimately not a legal argument at all. Judge Pigott acknowledged this when he observed "the fact that no Governor has previously attempted to appoint a Lieutenant Governor . . . does not resolve the legal issue."<sup>128</sup> It just shows that prior governors--and, in some sense, really just Governor Mario Cuomo in 1985--either did not think they had the authority, or for political reasons, chose not to exercise the authority they had. But that is not much of a reason to discount a statute plainly supplying the necessary authority.

In short, the plain meaning of section 43 of the Public Officers Law, supported by the Ward decision and the legislature's post-Ward exclusion of the lieutenant governor from section 42 but not section 43, provided the authority for the governor's action, which was congruent with article IV's structural commitment to a vision of the governor and the lieutenant governor as political partners. The *696 internal objections to the use of section 43--that the lieutenant governor is not "elective" and that section 43 does not authorize the filling of vacancies--are specious. The constitutional objections--that article IV effectively fills the vacancy with the temporary senate president, and that a gubernatorial appointment of a lieutenant governor is inconsistent with article XIII's "next election" language--are more substantial, but also fail. The text of article IV indicates that the temporary senate president only performs the duties and does not fill the vacancy, while the fact of dual office-holding and the prospect of double voting support the need for someone to actually fill the vacancy. The practice reflected in other vacancy-filling statutes is to treat the "next election" requirement to mean the next election at which the office may be legally filled. The "elective principle" and "unprecedented" arguments were rhetorically the most potent, but were really no more than policy arguments and, as such, inadequate to modify the plain meaning of the statutory text.

IV. Conclusion

This article will conclude with two points, one about state constitutional interpretation, and the other about filling vacancies in state offices.

A. State Constitutional Interpretation

One reason why the governor's action and the Court of Appeals's decision upholding it came as such a surprise to many legal and political observers is that they approached the problem as if it were a question of federal constitutional law, not state constitutional law. It is a longstanding rule of constitutional interpretation that, whereas Congress must justify its actions in terms of one of the specific enumerated powers granted to it by the United States Constitution, the state legislature has plenary authority to make laws unless it is specifically limited by the state constitution. This grant-versus-limitation distinction was most famously articulated by nineteenth century jurist and scholar Thomas McIntyre Cooley in his book, A Treatise on the Constitutional Limitations, which observed:

We look in the Constitution of the United States for grants of legislative power, but in the constitution of the State to ascertain if any limitations have been imposed upon the complete power with which the legislative department of the *697 State was vested in its creation. . . . [T]he State legislature has jurisdiction of all subjects on which its legislation is not prohibited.<sup>129</sup>

This grant-versus-limitation distinction, and its implication that a state legislature may act unless limited by its constitution, continues to be part of state constitutional law today.<sup>130</sup>

From the state constitutional perspective, then, the key question is not the one asked by Judge Pigott: Is there anything in the constitution authorizing the governor's action? That might be the central issue in a federal constitutional dispute. In a state case, the question is whether anything in the constitution barred the legislature's decision to give the governor the power to make an appointment to fill the vacancy. The Court of Appeals's decision is consistent with this approach and reminds us of its significance.

B. Filling Vacancies in State Office

The Ravitch litigation also reminds us just how problematic our laws governing the filling of vacancies in statewide elective office are, and just how much the law has departed from the "elective" principle. As of March 2010, of the six statewide elective offices--governor, lieutenant governor, attorney general, comptroller, and New York's two United States Senators--four are occupied by individuals who were not elected to them. Three--Lieutenant Governor Ravitch, Comptroller DiNapoli, and Senator Gillibrand--were not elected at all, but were appointed to their positions. The case of Comptroller DiNapoli is particularly egregious. He was appointed by the legislature pursuant to Public Officers Law section 41 on February 7, 2007 to complete the term--which started on January 1, 2007--to which Alan Hevesi had been elected in November 2006.<sup>131</sup> DiNapoli's term runs until the end of 2010. In other words, for forty-seven of his forty-eight-month term, we will have an unelected comptroller. Senator Gillibrand, who was appointed on January 26, 2009, will not face the voters until November 2010, so she will have more than twenty-one months in *698 office without an election. Lieutenant Governor Ravitch will actually hold the shortest unelected time in office--just eighteen months from his appointment until the end of 2010.

Nor do these appointments reflect broad support from the institutions of state government. Senator Gillibrand, like Lieutenant Governor Ravitch, was appointed by Governor Paterson unilaterally. While the "teammate" model of governor-lieutenant governor relations adopted by the state constitution provides some support for this, there is no reason for a United States Senator to be the partner of the governor. And while the appointment of the comptroller--like the appointment to fill a vacancy in the office of attorney general--is nominally by the entire legislature, the much greater size of the assembly relative to the senate means that, as a practical matter, these appointments are made by the assembly and, ultimately, determined by the assembly leadership.<sup>132</sup>

Those who were troubled by the departure from the “elective principle” and the unilateral power vested in one state official, reflected by the appointment of Lieutenant Governor Ravitch, should examine the vacancy-filling provisions more broadly. Surely, there is no reason for the office of comptroller to be held by an appointee for four years. Nor was there any reason there could not have been a special election for United States Senator in 2009, rather than 2010. Although an appointment may be a necessary or desirable “stopgap” until an election can be held, there is no need for these stopgap periods to last so long. And, if the law is going to permit an appointee to hold office for two or four years, there is a good case for requiring the participation of more branches of government--the governor and both houses of the legislature--in some of these decisions.

The events following the Court of Appeals's decision have served to underscore both the political benefits of its action and the need for further attention to the question of filling vacancies. As readers of this article know, the political tumult that followed Governor Spitzer's resignation and the June-July 2009 senate stalemate did not end with Lieutenant Governor Ravitch's appointment. On February 9, 2010, the senate, by a 53-8 vote, expelled Senator Monserrate for misconduct growing out of an incident of domestic violence. Until a special election set for mid-March to fill his seat, *699 that left the Democrats with a 31-30 margin in the senate and, thus, without an actual majority. On February 26, 2010, amid an outcry over his participation in an effort to persuade a woman who had brought charges of domestic violence against one of his closest aides to drop her case, Governor Paterson ended his campaign to be elected to a full term and called on the attorney general to investigate the case. On March 3, 2010, the governor's legal difficulties worsened when the Commission on Public Integrity charged him with violating the state's ethics laws for soliciting and securing free tickets to the first game of the 2009 World Series from the New York Yankees, and found that he had given false testimony to the Commission while under oath. The Commission referred these charges to the attorney general and the Albany County District Attorney for further investigation. From the vantage point of early March 2010, with the governor facing calls for his resignation, with the possibility of impeachment not out of the question, and with the senate lacking a clear majority party, the value of having an undisputed full-time lieutenant governor in place and ready to take over as governor should the need arise could not be clearer.

New York's ongoing political turmoil underscores the need for a careful and comprehensive consideration of our laws for filling vacancies in office. One added benefit of the Skelos v. Paterson decision is that we now know that curing the “democracy deficit” in our vacancy-filling laws does not require the extraordinary effort of a constitutional amendment, but can be accomplished by ordinary legislation. Although Governor Paterson's appointment of Richard Ravitch as lieutenant governor was characterized by critics as a gubernatorial power-grab, Paterson relied entirely on authority given to him by the legislature. If the legislature thinks section 43 gives him too much power, it can take it back.

So, too, if the legislature thinks that the better approach to filling the vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor is to follow the model provided by the Twenty-Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution for filling a vacancy in the office of vice president--presidential nomination subject to confirmation by both houses of Congress--the legislature can do so.<sup>133</sup> As we have learned, Judge Pigott was right to worry that an unelected lieutenant governor could become an unelected governor. Requiring a lieutenant governor appointee to secure the approval of the *700 legislature would surely give the appointee enhanced legitimacy, both as lieutenant governor and as a potential future governor. The legislation should give serious consideration to reforming the lieutenant governor appointment process. From that perspective, Skelos v. Paterson should not be read--or not read only--as an endorsement of gubernatorial power. It is an affirmation of legislative authority as well.

- 83 See Ward v. Curran, 291 N.Y. 642, 643, 50 N.E.2d 1023, 1023 (1943). The conclusion that the Public Officers Law applies to the lieutenant governor—unless the office is specifically excluded—is buttressed by section 31, which is part of the same article as section 43. N.Y. Pub. Off. Law § 31 (McKinney 2008). It is article 3 which deals with the creation and filling of vacancies, and expressly provides the procedure for the resignation of the lieutenant governor as part of the article's general treatment of resignations. AUTOMATIC LIEUTENANT GUBERNATORIAL SUCCESSION: PREVENTING LEGISLATIVE GRIDLOCK WITHOUT SACRIFICING THE ELECTIVE PRINCIPLE

I. Introduction

In June of 2009 the government of the State of New York came to a shuddering halt.<sup>1</sup> Two candidates for Temporary President of the Senate, the office that represents party control, commanded equal votes for the position.<sup>2</sup> The tie-breaking vote would ordinarily have been cast by the lieutenant-governor, but due to the resignation of Eliot Spitzer and elevation of David Paterson, that position was vacant.<sup>3</sup> The uncertainty as to who held the position paralyzed Senate operations and left open a very real question as to who would succeed to the governorship should something happen to then-Governor Paterson.<sup>4</sup> The delay caused by the impasse cost state and local governments $2.9 billion.<sup>5</sup> The deadlock prompted Paterson to appoint Richard Ravitch to lieutenant-governor, marking the first time in New York history that any governor had attempted to fill that post despite numerous historical vacancies.<sup>6</sup> *2302 Litigation as to the propriety of the appointment immediately ensued, eventually resulting in the New York Court of Appeals upholding the legitimacy of the appointment.<sup>7</sup> Had the situation not resolved itself politically on the day of the appointment,<sup>8</sup> the deadlock could have continued for more than an additional two months during the pendency of the appeal.<sup>9</sup>

Although the crisis was in no small measure a result of the fact that "New York's [legislature] was, by far, the most dysfunctional legislature in the nation,"<sup>10</sup> the impasse could have been solved in a day had there been an effective constitutional mechanism for succession to the office of lieutenant-governor in the case of a vacancy. The absence of such a mechanism led to unprecedented gubernatorial action and the New York Court of Appeals's authorization, by a slim majority and in a decision that has been heavily criticized,<sup>11</sup> of Ravitch's appointment via a statutory catch-all provision typically used only for minor officials.<sup>12</sup> That decision also left in place many of the structural problems that allowed the crisis to come to a head in the first place, such as when a replacement lieutenant-governor must be appointed.

This article is an attempt to find a solution to the problem of lieutenant gubernatorial succession in New York. Part II will discuss the problems created by allowing appointment pursuant to Public Officers Law section 43 and the structural issues that remain unresolved even with the present judicially approved method of appointment. Part III will consider several alternative methods of gubernatorial succession and to filling a vacancy in the office of lieutenant-governor. It will discuss whether any of those approaches would suffice to meet the policy goals of the lieutenant-governor's office in New York's constitutional structure. Part IV will offer a potential solution, which avoids the risk of legislative gridlock and preserves some electoral input into which candidates may be chosen to succeed to the office of lieutenant-governor.

*2303 II. The Unacceptable Skelos Solution

The Court of Appeals's decision in Skelos v. Paterson removes any electoral check from those selected to fill the position of lieutenant-governor and leaves several structural problems unresolved. Chief Judge Lippman's opinion recognized that the Skelos solution is not necessarily the best solution to the issue of succession, and held only that the present constitutional and statutory scheme permits the governor to appoint a lieutenant-governor in case of a vacancy.<sup>13</sup> Three major flaws with the present structure are discussed below.

A. Appointment Without Limitations Violates the Elective Principle

The present structure permits the possibility that an entirely unelected person could succeed to the office of governor without ever facing any elective check or second-hand elective scrutiny. Appointment through the mechanism of Public Officers Law section 43 does not permit any check, either by ratification or special election, on the authority of the governor to choose whomever he or she likes for the position.<sup>14</sup> Moreover, because Article VI of the New York State Constitution provides that “[n]o election of a lieutenant-governor shall be had in any event except at the time of electing a governor,”<sup>15</sup> it seems as though this appointee would be eligible to serve the remaining balance of the previous, elected lieutenant-governor's term, however long that may be. Accordingly, the office of lieutenant-governor could be occupied by an individual beyond scrutiny by anyone other than the governor himself for nearly a full four-year term.

Occupation of the office of lieutenant-governor by an unelected person runs contrary to the office as viewed through the lens of the other relevant constitutional provisions. The principle that the lieutenant-governor be elected has been with us since New York's first constitution in 1777 and remained unchanged since.<sup>16</sup> In the *2304 two vacancy instances directly addressed by the New York Constitution, the lieutenant-governor is succeeded by someone who has faced election. Where only the lieutenant-governor's office is vacant, “the temporary president of the senate shall perform all the duties of lieutenant-governor during such vacancy or inability.”<sup>17</sup> Prior to the Skelos decision, this section had meant that the Temporary President was lieutenant-governor as far as mattered. No distinction between being a placeholder and permanent occupant of the office was necessary because no governor had ever attempted to appoint a replacement.<sup>18</sup> As Judge Pigott noted in his dissent, this practice ensures that the elective principle is assured by “plac[ing] the duties of Lieutenant Governor in the hands of a duly elected state Senator--one who is elected president of that body by the entire Senate, representing all citizens of this state.”<sup>19</sup> The other instance constitutionally addressed is when both the governor's and lieutenant-governor's offices are vacant, requiring a special election at the next general election if one is not too close in time to be practicable.<sup>20</sup> The appointment, potentially for the majority of a gubernatorial term, of someone never subjected to elective scrutiny runs contrary to this clear principle.

More worrying than the potential occupation of the lieutenant-governor's office by an unelected person is the possibility, created by the Skelos decision, that an unelected person could occupy the office of governor itself.<sup>21</sup> As observed by Attorney General Nathaniel *2305 Goldstein more than sixty years ago, the application of Public Officers Law section 43 to the office of lieutenant-governor “lead[s] to the anomalous result that a Governor by appointing a Lieutenant-Governor and then resigning could impose upon the people his own choice as their Governor.”<sup>22</sup> This section was, as observed by Judge Pigott, written to decry the use of Public Officers Law section 43 to fill Lieutenant Gubernatorial vacancies, rather than endorse it.<sup>23</sup> The Attorney General's opinion made its reason clear as well; it argued that “[t]his special treatment not only maintains uninterrupted functioning of government but seeks to make certain that the State's Chief Executive be chosen only after opportunity for the full and free expression of the people's will.”<sup>24</sup> The people's will would obviously be thwarted in the “anomalous” situation identified above. Moreover, the governor need not make a calculated appointment and then resign to effect the possibility of an unelected governor, the office need only become vacant by whatever means. Had, for example, Governor Paterson died on September 23, 2009 (the day after the Skelos decision was issued), then Richard Ravitch would have succeeded to the office of governor under our constitutional scheme without ever having been subject to elective scrutiny. He could then, entirely permissibly, have appointed an additional lieutenant-governor, creating an entirely unelected executive branch of the New York State Government.<sup>25</sup>

It is difficult to imagine a situation more disconcerting than the second one outlined above. The Skelos majority's nonchalance when faced with this possibility is puzzling.<sup>26</sup> Any system admitting the possibility of an unelected chief executive of a state after only two vacancies is a cause for serious concern.<sup>27</sup> A functional system that *2306 does not pose such grave risks to the elective principle can certainly be devised.

B. The Possibility for Gridlock Still Exists

Because the appointment mechanism now in place does not require the governor to appoint a successor within any particular time frame, the possibility for legislative gridlock still remains. It was not until a crisis of arguably constitutional proportions arose as to who occupied the office of Temporary President that any governor in the history of New York attempted to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant-governor.<sup>28</sup> Moreover, Paterson did not attempt to do so until more than a year after he was elevated to governor and probably would not have done so but for the crisis itself.<sup>29</sup> Legislative leaders, when alerted to the ambiguity of constitutional provisions relating to lieutenant gubernatorial succession, have not considered appointment of a successor or clarification of the method of filling the position to be particularly important.<sup>30</sup> Additionally, given the seeming unimportance of appointing a replacement lieutenant-governor and the potential political ramifications of doing so, it is entirely possible that future governors when faced with a vacancy may delay appointment until after a crisis has begun and the need to have a replacement lieutenant governor in place has already arisen. In fact, the argument that prior vacancies "were [[[potentially] left unfilled [as] the result of political considerations" was among the reasons the Skelos majority rejected the argument that lieutenant gubernatorial vacancies must remain unfilled for the duration of the term.<sup>31</sup>

*2307 The likelihood of a delay in appointment creates the possibility of additional gridlock scenarios. Consider a scenario where Governor Paterson dies during the first few days of the 2009 gridlock. In such a case, "the temporary president of the senate shall act as governor until the inability shall cease or until a governor shall be elected."<sup>32</sup> However, at that time the very question causing the crisis had been just who the Temporary President of the Senate was. It is also not clear whether such a situation would qualify as one in which the office of Temporary President is deemed "vacant," passing governance down to the Speaker. There is also the possibility that a future governor could purposefully choose to delay appointing a successor, and prolong gridlock, for some situational political purpose.<sup>33</sup>

The present appointment power does no more to mitigate these two possibilities than any other procedure that allows the timing of the appointment of a replacement to be discretionary. A proper scheme for filling a vacancy in the office of lieutenant-governor should be able to incorporate mechanisms that prevent the very possibility of 2009 style gridlock reoccurring. As discussed below, several of the systems employed by other states are structured such that gridlock is not possible.<sup>34</sup>

C. Unchecked Appointment Gives Too Much Discretion to the Governor

Allowing a governor to, without any outside input, select a replacement goes too far toward ensuring a unified executive branch. At least as a constitutional matter, New York does not give a gubernatorial candidate the discretion to pick his own running-mate. The constitution requires that a governor and lieutenant-governor "shall be chosen jointly, by the casting by each voter of a single vote applicable to both offices."<sup>35</sup> However, this joint ticket is comprised of the two most successful party candidates for each position, not the most successful gubernatorial candidate and his chosen lieutenant-gubernatorial candidate.<sup>36</sup> Of course, a *2308 particularly strong or influential gubernatorial candidate may, as a matter of practical politics, get to select their running mate.<sup>37</sup> However, that they can do so is by no means constitutionally or legally mandated and “guarantees only compatible political parties but not necessarily personal or political compatibility.”<sup>38</sup> This disjunction serves as an elective check on a governor with a weak mandate.

There are, of course, good reasons to want a unified executive branch of state government. The constitutional provision requiring a joint ticket itself was put into place to help ensure that there would be a unified executive.<sup>39</sup> Prior to a 1953 amendment, New York did not require that the two offices be elected together and “candidates for different parties could be--and were--elected.”<sup>40</sup> But allowing direct appointment of a replacement lieutenant-governor goes farther than our constitutional structure was intended to allow by ensuring that a governor gets exactly who they want, rather than the person considered most qualified by the other members of their political party. A well-designed system of gubernatorial succession should be able to account for the need for political unification of the executive branch without giving the governor the ability to select a candidate as his lieutenant who his party and the electorate would never have approved.

III. Other Approaches

Other states approach the issue of succession and of the position of lieutenant-governor in myriad fashions. While every state has a governor and a plan for gubernatorial succession, five states--Arizona,<sup>41</sup> Maine,<sup>42</sup> New Hampshire,<sup>43</sup> Oregon,<sup>44</sup> and Wyoming<sup>45</sup>-- *2309 do not have a lieutenant-governor at all. Several states are structured similarly to New York and contain the same pre-Skelos ambiguity regarding succession.<sup>46</sup> The most common approaches are discussed below.

A. Statutory or Constitutional Provision?

Of the states that do have succession plans for the office of lieutenant-governor, not all are contained in their constitutions; some are instead delegated to statute.<sup>47</sup> The Skelos decision effectively rendered New York one such state by assigning the appointment of a successor to lieutenant-governor to Public Officers Law section 43 and noting that assignment was “a determination that the Legislature is always free to revisit.”<sup>48</sup>

This raises a question: Why should we correct the problems with succession by constitutional amendment rather than by statute? Peter Galie put the principle underlying why we should constitutionalize the succession provisions well when discussing the purpose of constitutions and constitutional amendments. “Constitutionalism,” he said, “is a struggle to render government immune, as far as possible from human frailties and their political consequence, what the [[r]epublican tradition called, ‘corruption,’ in its larger sense, while simultaneously establishing institutions that will be effective and powerful enough to do the job we have asked them to do.”<sup>49</sup> Whatever else belongs in constitutions, certainly those provisions that lay out its structure and ensure its basic functioning at times of political upheaval are properly constitutional *2310 provisions. The need to invoke succession provisions, in particular those addressing vacancies in the office of a chief executive, seem almost by definition to be accompanied by periods of political division and uncertainty. The death, resignation, or impeachment of a governor or lieutenant-governor is the most likely cause of a vacancy in the lieutenant-governor’s office. However neither of the latter two cases arises so suddenly as to keep the order of succession, if as malleable as a statute, out of the political arena.<sup>50</sup> It is entirely possible that in the face of an impending gubernatorial impeachment an opposition party would seek to amend the governing succession provisions, whatever they may be, as a means to blunt the new governor or as a political chip to be traded away for other gubernatorial concessions.

The structure of New York's amendment process would keep the order of succession away from political gamesmanship during the periods of leadership crisis likely to accompany a vacancy. Neither of the two methods of amendment permitted in New York can happen quickly as both require the action of a legislative body in addition to a referendum.<sup>51</sup> The first method requires that both houses of the state legislature propose the amendment, the Attorney General issue a recommendation, the houses pass the amendment, and then refer it to the next legislative session after an intervening election.<sup>52</sup> Only if in the second session both houses pass the amendment again and the people then approve it by referendum will an amendment become effective.<sup>53</sup> The second method requires a full-blown constitutional convention followed by a referendum.<sup>54</sup> Either way, the order of gubernatorial succession would be safe from the politics of the moment, as it ought to be.

B. Gubernatorial Appointment and Legislative Confirmation

By far the most common and most commonly proposed method of lieutenant gubernatorial succession is that the governor nominates a candidate to fill the vacancy and then the legislature confirms the *2311 nomination. Several states use this approach.<sup>55</sup> The Federal Constitution also follows a similar pattern for filling a vacancy in the office of Vice President.<sup>56</sup> This method has been suggested several times in New York,<sup>57</sup> and there is at the time of writing legislation pending to create such a scheme statutorily.<sup>58</sup> Such a format is not as simple as it appears and, despite its popular appeal, does not actually resolve many of the succession related issues the 2009 crisis brought to light.

As an initial hurdle, there is the question: "Who gets to ratify?" Is it the Senate,<sup>59</sup> the Assembly, both the Assembly and Senate sitting in joint session,<sup>60</sup> or both bodies sitting separately and having to ratify separately?<sup>61</sup> There are proponents of all of these views and each has arguments as to why one structure would be better than another.<sup>62</sup> However, no matter how a confirmation system is set up, the key problems remain the same.

First, a system requiring confirmation is not automatic. As a result, any such system engenders the same potential delayed appointment gridlock identified with appointment under Public Officers Law section 43.<sup>63</sup> It similarly does not avoid the problem of an indeterminate Temporary President. In such a case there is no lieutenant-governor to call the Senate into session and the *2312 Temporary President cannot do so because the cause of the deadlock itself is uncertainty about who the Temporary President is. Without a presiding officer, the Senate could not convene in order to confirm a nomination. Moreover, even if it did convene, it seems unlikely that the deadlock regarding the present Senate leadership would not spill over into the confirmation vote, resulting in an unbroken tie to confirm the nominee and opening the question as to whether an evenly split vote is a confirmation or disconfirmation of the nominee.

Second, New York's structure makes it unlikely that any nominee from the same party as the governor would be confirmed if the opposing party controls either house of the state legislature. If the system is one that requires confirmation of the Senate only or both houses of the legislature separately then the Senate leadership is likely to block opposition party nominees. Under our present constitutional structure, when there is a vacancy in the office of lieutenant-governor "the temporary president of the senate shall perform all the duties of lieutenant-governor during such vacancy or inability."<sup>64</sup> Note that the Temporary President is merely performing the duties of the lieutenant-governor; he does not become lieutenant-governor.<sup>65</sup> Instead he keeps his position as a member of the Senate and serves as acting lieutenant-governor.<sup>66</sup> As a practical matter, this means that the party leader of the dominant party in the Senate gets two votes on any particular piece of legislation: one as a member of the Senate and a casting vote in case of a tie.<sup>67</sup> It is not difficult to see how an opposition party to the governor would not want to give up the tie-breaking vote on key political legislation or important procedural issues.<sup>68</sup> As a *2313 consequence, the confirmation in the Senate of an opposition party lieutenant-governor seems unlikely and at a minimum would be subject to significant political gamesmanship prior to confirmation. The gamesmanship alone would result in considerable delay in the appointment process and may forestall appointment altogether.

Although the specific issue of Senate leadership blocking confirmation might be avoided in a confirmation system that has both houses sitting together as one body or the Assembly sitting alone, that alternative only shifts the problem of gamesmanship to the Assembly. An opposition party Assembly is no more likely to approve of a replacement lieutenant-governor than the Senate would be because the appointment remains a bargaining chip. A joint session is no better because as a practical matter, due to the comparative sizes of the houses of the legislature, when the two bodies sit as one the Assembly essentially rules the day.<sup>69</sup>

Finally, although better than a nominee who is subject to no scrutiny, direct or indirect, the confirmation process still leaves something to be desired when taking the elective principle into account. Admittedly, the houses voting can conceptually act as a "stand in" for direct action by the electorate; but the confirmation process still leaves open the possibility that the replacement lieutenant-governor is someone who has never been directly elected to any office.<sup>70</sup>

C. Legislative Appointment

Another alternative to the present system is legislative appointment. Under this system, the two houses of the state legislature convene as one and jointly elect someone to fill the vacancy. New York is no stranger to this method, as it is how we fill vacancies in two other statewide elected offices: Comptroller and *2314 Attorney General.<sup>71</sup> There are, however, several problems with this approach.

Two concerns are the same as those expressed with the confirmation process in the section above. Election from a joint session of the legislature means in practice that the office will be elected by the Assembly, and the appointee will probably be a member of the Assembly.<sup>72</sup> It also permits the risk, if a distant one, that someone who does not and has never held elective office will be appointed to the position.

A more significant concern is that if the Assembly is not of the same party as the governor, odds are good that the replacement lieutenant-governor will not be politically compatible with the existing executive branch. As noted earlier, the purpose of joint election for governor and lieutenant-governor was to avoid exactly such a scenario.<sup>73</sup> At least one state that uses legislative appointment for lieutenant-governor--Michigan--has attempted to solve this problem by restricting the potential nominees for the vacancy to members "of the same political party as the governor."<sup>74</sup> The provision, however, has never been used.<sup>75</sup> It is also doubtful how much practical effect a limitation of this kind would have on the appointment. In theory, an aspiring nominee of the opposition party could switch parties long enough to be appointed and then switch back thereafter or simply remain in the position and the party despite having had no real change in beliefs. Even without such shenanigans on the part of potential opposition party nominees, an opposing party is likely to appoint whatever member of the opposition they find politically tolerable, rather than someone who may actually be compatible with the sitting governor. When, due to the primary process, governors and lieutenant-governors of the same party but from opposite ends of the political spectrum have been selected, the results were less than ideal.<sup>76</sup> Unlike the *2315 risk of an incompatible lieutenant-governor being selected in a primary, where the lieutenant gubernatorial candidate is selected by members of the governor's own party, here the replacement lieutenant-governor would be selected by the opposition, likely handicapping even a governor with a strong electoral mandate from his party. Finally, it is not impossible that short of some mechanism forcing an opposition legislature to act, they may do nothing rather than appoint a party-opponent, particularly where that opponent could potentially wield considerable influence in a sharply divided Senate.

D. Special Election

Another alternative used by several other states is to hold a special election. The election can be held immediately or as close to immediately as possible,<sup>77</sup> at the next general election, or the next general election in reasonable proximity to the creation of the vacancy.<sup>78</sup> New York uses the latter process when there is a simultaneous vacancy in both the governor and lieutenant-governor's offices.<sup>79</sup> Currently, the New York Constitution expressly prohibits the holding of a special election to fill a lieutenant gubernatorial vacancy.<sup>80</sup> The present forbiddance is a wise policy, despite its close adherence to the elective principle. Holding a special election contains numerous problems and solves none of the other issues identified.

Far from being automatic, a special election can involve significant delay. A special election, whenever held, takes an extended period of time to complete and, if following a similar structure to that already in place for dual vacancy, could take as long as fifteen months depending the timing of the vacancy.<sup>81</sup> Such a mechanism could potentially allow 2009 style gridlock, disastrous when lasting only a month, to extend for over a year.

*2316 There is also no guarantee that a candidate compatible with the sitting governor would be elected. The special election would, by necessity, have to allow candidates from both political parties and all ends of the political spectrum. The chances of an incompatible candidate being elected may actually be higher that they might otherwise be with a completely independently elected governor and lieutenant-governor if the vacancy was created by the impeachment or disgraceful resignation of the office's former occupant.

E. Automatic Succession

Some states have automatic succession provisions. Unlike in New York, where the Temporary President only becomes acting lieutenant-governor, under these provisions the next person in line becomes lieutenant-governor, usually requiring them to forfeit their prior position.<sup>82</sup> This is the mechanism by which New York fills a vacancy in the governor's office with the lieutenant-governor, creating a lieutenant gubernatorial vacancy.<sup>83</sup> Although this method can have severe flaws if inartfully drafted, a well-crafted automatic succession mechanism can solve many of the problems identified above.

An automatic succession mechanism can prevent gridlock. A mechanism of automatic succession has the benefit of immediately moving a party into the vacated position and, if crafted carefully, can avoid problematic ambiguity. By having a successor lieutenant-governor come immediately into place, gridlocks requiring the casting of a tie-breaking vote can be immediately solved. Had someone already been lieutenant-governor in May 2009, there would not have been a month of senatorial inaction.

What offices are chosen to succeed and how specifically they are identified can pose difficulties. The office chosen can potentially run afoul of the elective principle if the party selected is one that has not been elected, directly or indirectly, to some other statewide office. This can happen one of two ways. First, the succeeding party can come from an office not elected in the first place.<sup>84</sup> This *2317 problem is easily avoided by choosing only elective positions for the line of succession, or at least doing so before getting too far down the list for it to be practical any longer.

The second way to run afoul of the elective principle is to identify a succeeding party that is occupying an elected office, but, because of a quirk of timing, was not actually elected to that office. This situation could occur where an office is typically elected, but had already been vacated and a replacement appointed. For example, if the New York Attorney General were chosen to be next in the line of succession, but one had already resigned and a replacement been appointed by the Senate and Assembly pursuant to Public Officers Law section 41, the automatic identification of that person would be discordant with the elective principle. Arizona, an automatic succession state that does not have a Lieutenant-governor, demonstrates how to avoid this pitfall. Its succession provision specifically qualifies that the person succeeding shall only do so “if holding by election.”<sup>85</sup> Otherwise, that office is skipped in the line of succession.<sup>86</sup>

Latent ambiguity in exactly which human being occupies a particular office that is designated to succeed can also be problematic. Identifying an office itself, particularly one that can be in flux, can cause rather than abate succession problems. For example, identifying “Temporary President” or other office that is tied to party control of a particular legislative body can be problematic in several ways. First, automatic succession would be of little help where there is an ongoing leadership dispute, as in 2009. A provision that said that the Temporary President became lieutenant-governor rather than was acting lieutenant-governor would have made little difference in that situation. Additionally, there is some question as to the permanency of those types of positions over periods when the legislature is not in session. Some scholars have argued that leadership positions in the various houses of the legislature expire at the end of each legislative session.<sup>87</sup> That would mean that between sessions, if a vacancy *2318 occurred, there would be no human being clearly identifiable as the holder of that office, particularly if in between the sessions the balance of power in the chamber had shifted.<sup>88</sup> Minnesota’s succession provision provides an example of how to avoid this problem.<sup>89</sup> It provides that “[t]he last elected presiding officer of the senate shall become lieutenant governor in case a vacancy occurs in that office.”<sup>90</sup> By adding that temporal component (“last elected”) any ambiguity as to which human being occupies the office is avoided.

Another objection to automatic succession is that it can also run contrary to having a unified executive branch in a similar manner to holding a special election. There is absolutely no guarantee that whoever occupies a particular elective office in the order of succession at a given period of time will be compatible with the present administration.<sup>91</sup> The potential inflexibility of automatic succession makes this problem virtually unavoidable if there is simply going to be an enumerated list of offices in an order of devolution. However, a set list of offices in a line of succession does not necessarily need to be the mechanism by which automatic succession takes place.

Alaska has a somewhat ingenious automatic succession scheme with a guarantee that the successor will be politically compatible with the sitting governor. Alaska makes no constitutional provision for the replacement of a lieutenant-governor.<sup>92</sup> However, statutorily, they have created a backup appointment system. The governor, who is constitutionally required to be elected at the same time as the lieutenant-governor,<sup>93</sup> “shall appoint . . . [subject to legislative confirmation] a person to succeed to the office of lieutenant governor if the office of lieutenant governor becomes vacant.”<sup>94</sup> The statute has some other problems<sup>95</sup> but this added level of forward planning allows a successor to be identified—as a human being thus avoiding ambiguity—far in advance of any *2319 vacancy while also allowing the sitting governor, presumably with some input from the sitting lieutenant-governor, to identify a successor who is politically aligned. If drafted in a manner that limits gubernatorial choice of backups to elected officials such a system could avoid colliding with the elective principle.

IV. A Proposed Solution

After review of the succession mechanisms above, it seems that a solution avoiding the lion’s share of the potential systemic problems can be devised. A system which requires that a governor, within a short, specific period of time of taking office, to appoint a successor to the lieutenant-governor, drawing only from a pool of those elected directly or indirectly elected to statewide office,<sup>96</sup> avoids a clash with the elective principle, prevents 2009 style senatorial gridlock, and ensures that the governor can select a politically compatible successor without having unfettered discretion as to who that person is. The language of such an amendment, modeled after the Alaska statute with some modifications to avoid problems identified earlier, which could be added to Article IV, Section 6 could read:

Within twenty (20) days of assuming office, either by election or succession to office in case of vacancy, the governor shall appoint, from among the elected attorney general, the elected comptroller, the most recently elected temporary president of the senate, and the most recently elected speaker of the assembly, a person to succeed to the office of lieutenant-governor if the office of lieutenant-governor becomes vacant. The person designated is next in line for succession to the office of lieutenant-governor, subject to the pleasure of the governor. If the person designated is removed from appointment, vacates the appointment, or ceases to meet the qualifications required for appointment, the governor shall appoint a successor subject to the same qualifications as the person initially appointed.

If a vacancy occurs in the office of governor and the lieutenant-governor succeeds to the office of governor or if the office of lieutenant-governor otherwise becomes vacant, *2320 the person designated as next successor to the office of lieutenant-governor as provided in herein succeeds to the office of lieutenant-governor for the remainder of the term vacated. Within twenty (20) days of the appointed successor assuming the office of lieutenant-governor, the governor shall appoint a person to succeed to office of lieutenant-governor in case of subsequent vacancy from among the potential candidates identified in the previous paragraph.

Obviously, this proposal is not perfect and somewhat unorthodox. For example, although a politically compatible lieutenant-governor is likely to be among the four choices, this structure does not guarantee that the successor lieutenant-governor will in fact be politically compatible with or of the same party as the sitting governor. It is possible that between the four choices to succeed to lieutenant-governor, not a single one will be of the same party and politically compatible with the governor. Such a worry is somewhat minor, however, because as a practical matter any governor without a single friend among the other major elected figures in the state is unlikely to be effective regardless of who his lieutenant-governor turns out to be. Moreover, this potential detriment more closely mirrors the possibility that a governor running for office will end up with a politically incompatible lieutenant-governor as a consequence of the primary election and, in that sense, is more compatible with the present structure of the New York Constitution.

The most realistic objection to this format is that it is politically unlikely to happen any way other than through constitutional convention. It would be asking for a lot of statesmanship from the houses of the state legislature to twice pass an amendment that shuts them out of the process for appointing a lieutenant governor.<sup>97</sup> Mixed alternatives that might be more politically palatable, such as providing a disconfirmation procedure whereby the legislature could reject a nominee to be the successor, reintroduce the horse-trading that must be avoided, and again invite the questions as to how disconfirmation procedure would function as are involved in a confirmation procedure.<sup>98</sup> *2321 Politics aside, the proposed provision addresses all of the major concerns identified in the foregoing discussion. The elective principle is satisfied in that all of the potential appointees have been elected, directly or indirectly, to a statewide office. Confirmation and other sources of legislative gamesmanship have been screened out of the appointment process. Succession to the office is automatic in case of a vacancy, preventing any gridlock caused by delay in a new lieutenant-governor taking office. Finally, a short time limit is in place requiring the governor to swiftly appoint a backup, minimizing the risk that a delay in appointment of a backup could translate into delay in the succession of a lieutenant-governor.

V. Conclusion

The foregoing article has been an examination of the problems caused by the decision in Skelos v. Paterson, which permitted the governor of New York to appoint the lieutenant-governor pursuant to a catchall, restrictionless statutory section. It has examined various alternative ways to deal with the problem of vacancy in the office of lieutenant-governor and has proposed language that may solve the problem. If the people of the State of New York adopt the provision outlined in section IV, or something similar, we should be able to avoid disastrous government deadlock like that of 2009 without sacrificing the principle that the highest and second highest offices in the state should always be occupied by those who have been, at some stage of things, elected.

24 1943 N.Y. Op. Att’y Gen. 378, 1943 WL 54210. The notion that governors must be popularly elected is, of course, not a New York specific phenomenon. By 1866 every state in the union had a popularly elected governor and no state admitted since has failed to have one. Thomas Schick, The New York State Constitutional Convention of 1915 and the Modern State, governor 7 (1978).

25 To take the theoretical exercise to its utmost extreme, Ravitch could then have resigned or died, making his appointee governor, allowing the appointment of another lieutenant-governor, and creating an entire executive branch that was neither elected nor even appointed by someone who was elected.

26 See Skelos, 915 N.E.2d at 1146 (Lippman, C.J.) (“Rules of succession are inevitably imperfect and, at some stage of devolution they direct, invariably compromise elective principles.”).

27 It is worth noting that without the appointment of a replacement lieutenant-governor, the devolution of office would have to go through six elected officials prior to reaching an appointee. See N.Y. Unconsol. Law § 9105 (McKinney 2013) (adding “attorney general, comptroller, commissioner of transportation, commissioner of health, commissioner of commerce, industrial commissioner, chairman of the public service commission, secretary [sic] of state” to the line of succession after governor, lieutenant-governor, Temporary President of the Senate, and Speaker of the Assembly.).

- 62 That is, all of these schemas have proponents except, perhaps, for the proposal that Assembly votes alone. I have yet to locate anyone who has proposed this particular approach in a bicameral system. However, there are elective principle and separation of powers arguments that could be made for this structure. For example, having the Assembly only decide would remove a level of self serving bias from asking a senate majority leader and temporary president to get his party to approve a candidate that would effectively oust him from the position of presiding officer over his own chamber.

Galie, supra note 16, at 40. Of course, this would not actually matter in the case of succession, as a confirmation is a procedural or organizational matter and not a bill to become law. See id.; see also N.Y. Const. art. III, § 14 (2011). Moreover, although there might be a legal challenge to a law that is passed with a second vote as lieutenant-governor, it is difficult to see how the use of a casting vote to defeat a law could be challenged as a practical matter. Subject: 1988 Amendment

It occurred to me that we should look at the legislative history for the 1988 amendment to see if the intention was to modernize succession as well as allow for the joint election of the governor and lieutenant governor. I've pulled the online version but will ask the state librarian to pull the complete versions tomorrow. I have a discovery conference in front of Judge Hansen first thing tomorrow morning but am otherwise available.

Since the Lt governor receives the compensation for the governor when performing that offices duties, is the debate focused on the title?

Thanks,
Meghan

Re: Opinion Request on Gubernatorial Succession

*1 Governor Michael O. Leavitt
Governor's Office
210 State Capitol
Salt Lake City, UT 84114-0000

Dear Governor Leavitt:

This letter responds to your request for legal guidance on the question whether the Lieutenant Governor, upon the resignation of the Governor, succeeds to the Office of Governor or whether she becomes an "acting" Governor. Based upon the provisions of Article VII, § 11 of the Utah Constitution, the history of the adoption of that section and its amendment in 1980, case law and actions in other states (there being no Utah case on point), and the efficient operation of government, it is my conclusion that upon resignation of the Governor, the Lieutenant Governor succeeds to that office, and becomes the Governor.

Upon its adoption, the Utah Constitution provided that in the case of the resignation of the Governor the "powers and duties of the Governor shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor." Article VII, § 11. That language followed the provisions in the United States Constitution, Article II, § 1(6), that in the event of the removal of the President, his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office that "the same shall devolve to the Vice President." The federal experience under that language was that the Vice President succeeded to the office of, and became, the President. This succession occurred four times prior to the adoption of Utah's Constitution - John Tyler in 1840, Millard Fillmore in 1850, Andrew Johnson in 1765, and Chester Arthur in 1881. Therefore, at the time of the adoption of the Utah Constitution, it was understood, in theory and in practice, that the Constitutional language "shall devolve" meant "succession" such that the Lieutenant Governor would become the Governor.

Utah's succession provision was revisited in 1980 when the citizens of the State of Utah adopted amendments revising the Executive Article. Among other changes, the revision created the Office of Lieutenant Governor in place of the Secretary of State, required the candidates for Governor and Lieutenant Governor to run on the same ticket, clarified the line of succession of executive authority, and a procedure to determine gubernatorial disability while providing continuity in government. See Senate Joint Resolution 7, passed March 8, 1979 and adopted in November, 1980. Included with the information provided to the electorate in the Voter Information Pamphlet in 1980, when they adopted the amendments, was the impartial analysis by the Legislative Research Director Jon Memmott and arguments in favor of the Executive Article revision by proponent senators Karl N. Snow and Fred W. Finlayson. The impartial analysis noted that candidates for the Office of Lieutenant Governor and Governor run on the same ticket "as in the case with the candidates for the office of President and Vice President of the United States." The arguments in favor of the revision also noted that "the proposed amendment clarifies the present order of succession, making it similar to that of the U.S. Constitution." Thus, the electorate were told that the creation of the Office of Lieutenant Governor and the succession provisions were similar to, and modeled on, the federal system. In addition to the long history of succession to President by Vice Presidents, the U.S. Constitution had been amended by that time that to clarify "in the case of removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice President shall become President." The United States Constitution, Amendment 25, § 1, effective February 23, 1967.

*2 Because the Utah constitutional language that the “powers and duties devolve” came from equivalent federal language where the Vice President succeeded to and became the President, and because the citizens adopted amendments to the Utah Constitution providing for a Lieutenant Governor and a succession “similar to that of the United States Constitution,” the intent of the provisions and the understanding and expectation of the citizens who adopted them, was that succession would be similar to the federal system and that the Lieutenant Governor would succeed to the Office of Governor and become Governor.

This issue has been faced in a number of other states with constitutional language similar to Utah. See Bryant v. English, 843 S.W.2d 308 (Arkansas 1992) and Chadwick v. Earhart, 4 P. 1180 (Oregon 1884), reaffirmed in State v. Alcott, 187 P. 286 (Oregon 1920). In Bryant, a case stemming from the resignation of Governor Clinton to become President, the Court in arriving at its conclusion analyzed the language of the Arkansas Constitution, the history of the provisions and the times when it was adopted, the effect on state government of different interpretations, and how the office had been viewed. Arkansas's constitution, like Utah's, provided that powers and duties “devolve” to the Lieutenant Governor. The Court also looked to the further Arkansas provision, similar to Utah's, that upon the vacancy of the Offices of both Governor and Lieutenant Governor that the President of the Senate (or in his inability, the Speaker of the House) “shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled.” (Emphasis added). The Court stated, at page 312:

The difference in language suggests that the Lieutenant Governor, unlike the President (pro tempore) of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, does not merely act as Governor when the Governor resigns. Rather, it suggests that he becomes Governor.

The Court thus held, under the same language as in the Utah Constitution (i.e., that the powers and duties of the Governor “shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term”), that upon resignation of the Governor, the Lieutenant Governor becomes the Governor and is not an “acting Governor.” The similarity of Arkansas's constitutional provisions and the reasoning of the Arkansas Court is persuasive authority for interpreting the Utah Constitution.

Some other states, under similar (and dissimilar) language have ruled differently - that the successor (either the Lieutenant Governor, Secretary of State or President of the Senate) does not become Governor, but “acts” as Governor. See e.g., State ex rel. De Concini v. Garby, 195 P.2d 153 (Arizona 1940). However, I am not persuaded by that other line of cases. Further, most of those are older cases and in most instances the legislatures and citizens amended their constitution after the court decision to clearly provide that the successor does become the Governor. See e.g. Arizona, California, Montana, and Wisconsin. Thus, case law from other states, and specifically the Bryant case, as well as the people's response to contrary decisions, support my determination that under the Utah Constitution upon resignation of the Governor the Lieutenant Governor becomes the Governor.

*3 The specific language of the Utah Constitution does not lead to a contrary conclusion. As indicated above, the operative language is that upon the resignation “the powers and duties of the Governor shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor.” Article VII § 11, Utah Constitution. That specific language and word “devolve” came from the United States Constitution which had long been interpreted to mean that the Vice President succeeded to and became the President upon resignation or death of the President. The alternative claim would be that the Lieutenant Governor becomes the “acting” Governor, exercising the powers and duties of the office, but not assuming the title, nor the power to appoint a Lieutenant Governor. However, the only provisions in the Utah Constitution providing for someone to “act as Governor” under a succession is in the case of a vacancy in the both the Offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor, where the President of the Senate, or if he/she is unable, the Speaker of the House “shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled.” Article VII § 11, Utah Constitution. As was noted in Bryant v. English above, different language respecting the Lieutenant Governor and the legislative leaders would suggest a different treatment - the Lieutenant Governor, unlike the President of the Senate or Speaker of the House who would “act as Governor,” becomes the Governor.

It is thus my conclusion that upon the resignation of Governor Leavitt, Lieutenant Governor Walker succeeds to and becomes Governor of the State of Utah. Upon her becoming Governor, the Office of Lieutenant Governor becomes vacant and is subject to the Governor's appointment power under Article VII, § 10, of the Utah Constitution.

A separate question and issue has been raised whether the exercise of that appointment power by the Governor requires Senate confirmation. Article VII § 10 provides that the Governor shall "nominate, and by and with the consent of the Senate, appoint all state and district officers whose offices are established by this Constitution and whose appointment is not otherwise provided for." However, the appointment of the Lieutenant Governor by the Governor is "otherwise provided for," as that section further sets forth that if the Office of Lieutenant Governor is vacant "it shall be the duty of the Governor to fill the same by appointment, from the same political party of the removed person; and the appointee shall hold office until a successor shall be elected and qualified, as provided by law." This provides specific appointment authority, with separate appointment requirements, and thus is an appointment that is "otherwise provided for." Therefore, Senate confirmation is not necessary.

The conclusion that Senate confirmation is not necessary was similarly reached by the Utah Supreme Court in Matheson v. Ferry, 641 P.2d 674 (Utah 1982). The Court stated, at page 692:

The construction is also consistent with the policy underlying the language in § 10 that the Governor shall fill unexpired vacancies in the major elective State offices, i.e., Lieutenant Governor, State Auditor, State Treasurer, and Attorney General without senatorial confirmation. In such cases, the sole restriction upon the power of the Governor in making the appointment is that the appointee must be from the same party as the party of the person who previously held that office. (Emphasis added).

*4 Thus, when a Lieutenant Governor succeeds to the Office of Governor, the vacated Lieutenant Governor's Office will need to be filled by the Governor with an appointment in accordance with Article VII, § 10, without the consent of the Senate.

My conclusion that Lieutenant Governor Walker will become Governor Walker upon resignation of Governor Leavitt will hopefully end the current questions surrounding this issue and provide for a clear and complete transition. Opinion

MOUNT, J.

These two cases involve the same questions, and for that reason were consolidated at the argument and heard as one. They are applications for a writ of mandamus to respondent, requiring him to issue his *337 proclamation for the election of a governor, a lieutenant governor, and three justices of the supreme court at the next general election. It appears from the petitions that Hon. John R. Rogers and Hon. Henry McBride were at the general election held in November, 1900, elected to the offices of governor and lieutenant governor, respectively, for the term of four years, beginning on the second Monday of January, 1901; that these officers duly qualified as such, and entered upon the discharge of their respective duties; that on December 26, 1901, the Honorable John R. Rogers died, and respondent thereupon took the oath of office, and is now acting governor; that there is a vacancy in the office of governor, and also in the office of lieutenant governor. It also appears that the legislature of 1901 passed an act increasing the number of judges of this court from five to seven; that appointments were made to fill the vacancies created by the act; that the terms of office of the two judges so appointed will expire on the second Monday of October, 1902; that the governor refuses to issue his proclamation for the election of a governor, lieutenant governor, and two supreme court justices at the next general election, to be held in November of this year. Respondent appeared and filed a demurrer to each of the petitions.

The first question presented is, does the death of the governor cause a vacancy in that office, which may be filled by an election for the unexpired term, and, if not, does the office of lieutenant governor become vacant when the incumbent assumes the duties of governor? The provisions of the constitution relating to this question are as follows: Section 2, art. 3: 'Governor, Term of Office. The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a governor, who shall *338 hold his office for a term of four years, and until his successor is elected and qualified.' Section 3, art. 3, provides that the lieutenant governor shall hold his office for four years, and until his successor is elected and qualified. Section 10, art. 3: 'Vacancy in. In case of the removal, resignation, death or disability of the governor, the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, and in case of a vacancy in both the offices of governor and lieutenant governor, the duties of governor shall devolve upon the secretary of state, who shall act as governor until the disability be removed or a governor be elected.' This last section clearly provides (1) that upon the death of the governor the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor; and (2) in case of a vacancy in the offices of both governor and lieutenant governor the duties of governor devolve upon the secretary of state, who shall act until the disability be removed or a governor elected. This provision of the constitution of this state is in effect the same as the provision of the constitution of the United States with reference to the succession of the vice president to the office of president of the United States. Upon the death or disability of the president, it has uniformly been held that the vice president holds the office of president until a successor to a deceased president comes to assume the office. Merriam v. Clinch, 6 Blatchf. 9, Fed. Cas. No. 9,460. In that case it was said: 'It has never been supposed that, under the provision **26 of the constitution, the vice president, in acting as president, acted as the servant or agent or locum tenens of the deceased president or in any other capacity than as holding the office of president fully, for the time being, by virtue of express authority emanating from the United States.' *339 In the case of Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Or. 389, 4 Pac. 1180, where the court was considering a constitutional provision of the state of Oregon in almost the identical language of section 10, supra, it was said: 'In the first place, it is not shown how an office can be vacant, and yet there be a person, not the deputy or locum tenens of another, empowered by law to discharge the duties of the office, and who does in fact discharge them. It is not explained how in such a case the duties can be separated from the office, so that he who discharges them does not become an incumbent of the office, and, in the second place, how a person can fill the office of governor without being governor.' It is a well-settled rule that an office is not vacant so long as it is supplied, in the manner provided by the constitution or laws, with an incumbent who is legally authorized to exercise the power and perform the duties which pertain to it. Mechem, Pub. Off. § 125; Throop, Pub. Off. § 431. The constitution having provided that in case of the death of the governor the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of governor. It is not necessary to discuss the meaning of the provision, 'who shall act as governor until the disability be removed or a governor be elected,' because that provision, as used here, clearly refers only to the secretary of state, in case that officer should assume the duties of governor under the contingency named. What is said above applies equally to the lieutenant governor. When the lieutenant governor, by virtue of his office and of the command of the constitution, assumed the duties of governor on the death of Gov. Rogers, the office of lieutenant governor did not thereby become vacant, but the officer remained lieutenant governor, intrusted *340 with the powers and duties of governor. People v. Budd, 114 Cal. 168, 45 Pac. 1060, 34 L. R. A. 46; State v. Sadler, 23 Nev. 356, 47 Pac.

450; People v. Hopkins, 55 N. Y. 74; Robertson v. State, 109 Ind. 79, 10 N. E. 582, 643. It is argued, however, that since it is made the duty of the lieutenant governor, under the constitution, to be presiding officer of the state senate (section 16, art. 3), and as such to approve all bills passed by that body, he must, as governor, review and approve or reject bills which as lieutenant governor he has already approved. These duties are, no doubt, inconsistent; but this argument, we think, is fully met by another provision of the constitution, which provides, at section 10, art. 2, in substance, that when the lieutenant governor shall act as governor the senate shall choose a temporary president. The lieutenant governor, therefore, when the duties of governor devolve upon him, is relieved of the duties of presiding officer of the senate.

The legislature of 1901 passed the following act:

'An act increasing the number of judges of the supreme court of the state of Washington, and declaring an emergency.

'Section 1. The supreme court of the state of Washington, from and after the passage of this act, up and to the first Tuesday, after the first Monday in October, 1902, shall consist of seven judges: provided, that after the first Tuesday after the first Monday in October, 1902, said supreme court shall consist only of five judges.

'Sec. 2. The governor is hereby authorized to appoint one from each of the dominant political parties the two additional judges provided for by section 1 of this act, which appointees shall hold office until the first Tuesday *341 after the first Monday in October, 1902, and no longer, and each of the said judges shall receive a salary of four thousand dollars per annum.'

Laws 1901, p. 345.

Section 3 declares an emergency. After this act was passed, the governor, by authority thereof, made two appointments as provided therein. It is conceded in this case that the legislature may increase the number of judges of this court from five to seven; but it is argued (1) that when the increase is once made no decrease can be made, and (2) that the temporary increase made is in conflict with the constitutional term. We are therefore urged to hold that so much of the act as increased the number of judges of this court to seven may be allowed to stand, and the remainder be declared void, thereby making a permanent increase, instead of a temporary one. This reasoning, it seems to us, must fail, because by the very terms of the act the increase of the number of judges from five to seven was temporary. This intention is clearly and definitely expressed as the single purpose of the act, so that if the temporary increase is void the whole act must fail. Cooley, Const. Lim. (6th Ed.) p. 211. The rule of law is well settled in this country that the legislative department is not made a special agency for the exercise of specially defined legislative powers, but is intrusted with general authority to make laws at discretion, except where the constitution has imposed limits upon this legislative power. Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 104, 201. In other words, the constitution of this state is a limitation upon the powers of the legislature, and not a grant of power. Hence, before an act of the legislature may be declared unconstitutional, it must appear that the act is in conflict with some express *342 provision of the constitution which prohibits the act or parts of the act complained of. Bearing this rule in mind, we consider the questions presented:

1. The constitution provides (section 2, art. 4): 'The supreme court shall consist of five **27 judges, a majority of whom shall be necessary to form a quorum and pronounce a decision. * * * The legislature may increase the number of judges of the supreme court from time to time, and may provide for separate departments of said court.' The evident meaning of the first provision is that this court shall never be decreased below five judges. The second provision gives express authority for an increase of the number of judges. There is no express provision for a decrease in the number after the increase has been made unless it be found in the phrase 'from time to time.' If it be conceded, as argued by relators, that the words 'from time to time' mean that the legislature may at one time make one increase, and at another time another increase, these words add nothing to the declaration that 'the legislature may increase the number of judges of the supreme court,' because without the words 'from time to time' that authority rests in the legislature by reason of the fact that no limitation is placed upon the number to which the court may be increased. We must therefore look for some meaning in the words 'from time to time,' or conclude that they were used without purpose. These words are defined by lexicographers to mean 'occasionally.' The word 'occasionally' is defined to mean: 'As occasion demands or requires; as convenience requires; accidentally, or on some special occasion.' But whatever may be the technical meaning of the words, they certainly cannot be held to mean that the legislature may not decrease the number of judges after the increase *343 thereof. If, therefore, the legislature has power to increase the number of judges as occasion or convenience requires, and there is no restriction upon a decrease, except below five, it follows that a decrease may be had to this minimum when necessity or occasion requires, of which necessity or occasion the legislature is the exclusive judge. Again, the fact that the constitution has placed a minimum limit and permitted an increase in the number of judges is a strong inference that the increased number may be reduced to the minimum. Furthermore, the legislative and the executive branches of the state government have placed this construction upon their powers, and, where these co-ordinate branches have construed a constitutional provision and acted upon it, great weight will be given thereto. State v. Rusk, 15 Wash. 403, 46 Pac. 387.

2. Does the act conflict with the provision relating to the terms fixed by the constitution? Section 3, art. 4, of the constitution, provides: "The judges of the supreme court shall be elected by the qualified electors of the state at large, at the general state election, at the times and places at which state officers are elected, unless some other time be provided by the legislature. * * * After the first election the terms of judges elected shall be six years from and after the second Monday in January next succeeding their election. If a vacancy occur in the office of a judge of the supreme court, the governor shall appoint a person to hold the office until the election and qualification of a judge to fill the vacancy, which election shall take place at the next succeeding general election, and the judge so elected shall hold the office for the remainder of the unexpired term." The term fixed by this provision is six years, and applies only to judges elected. This term begins on the second Monday in January next succeeding an election, and *344 cannot be changed by the legislature. Mechem, Pub. Off. § 387; Throop, Pub. Off. § 311; State v. Twichell, 4 Wash. St. 715, 31 Pac. 19. The vacancy here referred to is evidently intended to apply to a vacancy which shall continue beyond an election and for the remainder of the unexpired term. The unexpired term referred to is the remainder of the six-year term. The clear intention of this section of the constitution is (1) to require that the judges of this court shall be elected whenever there is an election at which they may be elected; (2) that the terms of judges elected shall be six years; and (3) that appointive judges shall not serve for a longer time than the next succeeding general election and the qualification of a successor. There is no limitation, either express or implied, upon the legislature to make appointive terms extend to an election. The limitation is that, where a vacancy occurs which extends beyond an election, then an appointee shall hold until the next succeeding general election, and until the qualification of a judge to fill the vacancy. It cannot be said that all vacancies which occur in the membership of this court may be filled by an appointee from the time of the appointment to the next succeeding general election, because a vacancy may occur after the election of a successor to one of the elected judges, and before the expiration of his term, where no election intervenes, which vacancy could be filled by appointment only until the expiration of the term. State v. Black, 22 Minn. 336. For example, the regular elective term of Judge REAVIS expires on the second Monday of January, 1903. His successor will be elected regularly in November of this year. No other general election will be held until November, 1904. If Judge REAVIS should resign on the day *345 following the election in November next, and the governor should appoint a person to fill the vacancy occurring by reason of such resignation, it certainly cannot be held that such an appointee may hold office until the next succeeding election, two years hence, and thus deprive the regularly elected judge from taking office on the second Monday in January next succeeding his election. The term of an appointive judge, therefore, is not fixed, except that it cannot extend beyond an election and the qualification of his successor, or to the end of the term. When the term of judges elected was fixed at six years, it was intended thereby to distinguish elected judges from appointed judges, and to fix the **28 terms of elected judges for a definite time, and to limit the terms of appointed judges to the next election. Within that limit the legislative power is complete. It may provide for a term of any length of time up to the succeeding general election. This term is appointive. But if a vacancy is created which extends beyond an election, the provisions of the constitution apply, and the legislature has no authority to change or modify the 'terms' therein contained. The act in question does not attempt to change or modify the terms of judges elected. It undertakes to create a vacancy, and to terminate the vacancy at a fixed time before an election can take place, and before an elective term may begin; and this, we hold, may be done, because there is no fixed constitutional appointive term. It is certainly not necessary that a general act be passed, increasing the number of judges for an indefinite time, and that subsequently another act be passed, decreasing this number. What may be done by a legislative body indirectly may be done directly. The act in question is not in conflict with any constitutional term, and, in so far as it increased the *346 number of judges of this court temporarily, was not in conflict with any provision of the constitution.

The writs prayed for will be denied.

FULLERTON, HADLEY, DUNBAR, and WHITE, JJ., concur.

REAVIS, C. J.

I concur in the conclusion that no vacancy exists in the office of governor, and that a lieutenant governor ought not to be elected this fall. I am unable, however, to assent to the construction given to the statute entitled 'An act increasing the number of judges of the supreme court of the state of Washington, and declaring an emergency' (Laws 1901, p. 345), in the majority opinion. I feel convinced that sound canons of constitutional interpretation impose the duty of declaring section 2 of this law void. The statute is already set out in the majority opinion. This section adds additional qualifications to the office of judge to those required in the constitution, and defines and limits the duration of terms of the two judges appointed by the governor until the first Tuesday after the first Monday in October, 1902. The legislature has no power to define the term or prescribe the qualification of a judicial officer. This seems clear under the plain provisions of the constitution. If there be one rule set at rest by judicial authority,—including, among other courts that have spoken upon the question, this court,—it is that when the term, qualifications, salary, or method of election of a judicial officer is prescribed in the constitution, the legislature is incompetent to change, modify, or in any manner interfere with such requirements in the organic law. Thus the term cannot be abridged or extended by legislative act. In State v. Twichell, 4 Wash. St. 715, 31 Pac. 19, this court had before it for construction the act of March 3, 1890, *347 entitled 'An act providing for an additional number of superior court judges, and declaring an emergency to exist.' Laws 1889-90, p. 346. This law provided for additional superior court judges in several counties, and their appointment by the governor until the ensuing general election in November of the same year. Section 3 provided for the election of two judges in King county, as follows: 'At the general election in 1890, there shall be elected in the county of Spokane one superior judge, and in the county of Pierce two superior judges, and in the county of King two superior judges, for said counties, in addition to the judges now provided for by law in said counties, who shall hold their offices for the term of four years from and after the second Monday in January, 1891.' It will be observed that the section directs the election of the two judges in King county at the election in November, 1890, and fixed their terms for four years after the second Monday in January, 1891. The proceeding before the court was mandamus to compel the election of the successors of these two additional judges at the November election in 1892, and the complaint of the relator was that the relator was that the legislature had extended the term prescribed for superior court judges in the constitution. The court observed in determining this case: 'On March 3, 1890, the legislature passed an act providing for additional judges in the counties of Spokane, Pierce, and King. Section 3 of said act provides that 'at the general election in 1890 there shall be elected * * * in the county of King, two superior judges * * * in addition to the judge now provided for by law in said county, who shall hold their offices for the term of four years from and after the second Monday in January, 1890.' Before the enactment of that law there had been but one judge elected for said county of King. He was *348 elected at the election for the adoption of the constitution in 1889, and, under the provisions of said constitution, his term of office will expire in January next, and his successor must be elected at the coming November election. And if the provisions of the law of March 3, 1890, above quoted, are of force, it is conceded that said successor to the judge elected in 1889 is the only one to be so elected. The contention on the part of the petitioner, however, is that so much of the law above quoted as assumes to fix the term of office of the judges therein provided for is unconstitutional and void. The appellant contends that such provision is not only not opposed to any express provision of the constitution, but is in entire harmony with the letter and spirit thereof. To determine the right of these respective contentions is to determine the controversy at bar. If the constitution has not provided for the terms of additional judges, which might be provided for the courts of the several counties by the legislature, it follows, as of course, that **29 the legislature has full power to enact in regard thereto. If, on the other hand, the constitution has so provided, such provision must control, and any attempt of the legislature to change or modify the same would be absolutely void and of no effect. * * * Thus construing it, we are forced to the conclusion that the constitution makers intended that the regular term of all superior court judges should be uniform, and that the regular incumbents of said offices should hold for the same term,—not only as to its duration, but also as to the time of its commencing and ending. And we think that the additional judges to be provided by act of the legislature, when so provided, occupied exactly the same relation to the constitution and the term of office therein provided for as did those created by the constitution itself. If the legislature had simply provided for two additional judges for the county of King, and stopped there, the legislation would have been effective. If this is true, it must be because the term of office and other provisions as to salary, etc., were covered by the constitution. The constitution created the office of judge of *349 the superior court. It provided that a certain number of judges should be elected. It also provided that the legislature might authorize and require the election of an additional number of judges. It does not follow, however, as contended for by appellant, that because the election of a portion of the judges was authorized by the constitution itself, and another portion thereof by the legislature, that the respective portions bear any other than a common relation to all the provisions of the constitution relating to such officers. The term of office, then, of all the judges, must be held to have been provided for in the constitution. * * * If this construction of the clause above referred to is to obtain, it follows that a definite term, ending three years from the second Monday of January, 1890, applicable to all superior court judges, whether provided for in the constitution or by legislation, was fixed in the constitution. If the constitution has thus provided definite terms, it would, of course, follow that the legislature could not change or modify the same.' The language of the court has been cited at considerable length here, because I am impressed with the view that its reasoning and authority should be controlling in the construction of the statute of 1901, supra, now before the court. The same care and deliberation was expressed in section 3, art. 4, of the constitution, relating to the terms and qualifications of the supreme judge, as in the section relating to the superior judge; and this is also true of the election of the judges of both courts, and the method of filling vacancies in these offices.

The majority of the court, as I understand, concludes that the legislature cannot alter or modify the terms of the judges elected, and has no power to change the method of filling vacancies in the terms prescribed by the constitution; and the authorities cited in the opinion fully sustain the rule. It is then announced, *350 'If, therefore, the legislature has power to increase the number of judges as occasion or convenience requires, and there is no restriction upon a decrease, except below five, it follows that a decrease may be had to this minimum when necessity or occasion requires, of which necessity or occasion the legislature is the exclusive judge.' If this be the correct rule, the fair deduction therefrom is that the framers of the constitution intended to create five constitutional judges with fixed qualifications, duration of terms, and salaries, who should always sit with the court, and additional judges of occasion or necessity may be designated by the legislature in such numbers and for such times as it may deem expedient. It would seem fairly to follow, also, that the legislature might, so far as any express limitation goes, appoint the additional judges for a month, or, as here, 18 months, or any intervening time between two general elections. Such appointive judges are certainly not filling any vacancies mentioned in the constitution, for it definitely fixed the appointing power of the governor 'to vacancies' until the next general election, or, if to the end of the regular term, then that terminates in the successor who is the judge elected at a general election. The constitution, with much particularity and certainty, provides for the election of all judges, and very minutely fixes the power and procedure for filling vacancies. It says: 'If a vacancy occur in the office of a judge of the supreme court, the governor shall appoint a person to hold the office until the election and qualification of a judge to fill the vacancy, which election shall take place at the next succeeding general election, and the judge so elected shall hold the office for the remainder of the unexpired term.' It may be thus observed that the appointment by the governor of the two additional judges in the present instance *351 was made under the act of 1901, supra, for there was no vacancy filled, ending with the general election. But according to the construction of the court here, the governor's appointment was made for a full term created by the legislature. Then, if the legislature could create a special term in duration, its power is necessarily plenary to appoint judges itself, instead of authorizing appointment by the governor, for they are legislative officers, and there would seem to be no express restriction upon adding qualifications for the judges not mentioned in the constitution; that is, one could be from each dominant party, or any other qualification not expressly inhibited which the legislature might deem expedient,—as that some of the judges should be Socialists, and the other Democrats or Republicans. It is plain that these offices are elective. The vacancy is an emergency,—an unforeseen event,—and must **30 always occur at the time in an office then in existence; and it is only an interval in the incumbency of the existing office, and cannot be a vacancy if it envelops the whole duration of the office. Somewhere in the term,—in the commencement, during its course, or before its ending,—there must be an elected judge. No executive appointment can extend beyond the next general election. Thus Judge WHITE was appointed by Governor Rogers to the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Judge Gordon in June, 1900, but he was thereafter elected to fill the unexpired vacancy in November, 1900. Section 5, art. 4, of the constitution, relating to vacancies in the office of superior court judge, is in identical words with the requirement for filling the vacancies in this court. In State v. Millett, 20 Wash. 221, 54 Pac. 1124, the question of filling the vacancy of superior court judge was determined. It was there said: *352 'The commission of the governor only entitles the holder to retain office until his successor is elected and qualified, and the word 'remainder,' as found in that section, relates to the term existing at the date of the election, not to a term beginning some months later. * * * Counsel for the respondent has urged upon the consideration of the court the importance of having a fixed and certain time at which elected officers shall qualify, and argues that great public inconvenience might follow if it were held that a judge elected to fill a vacancy might qualify any time after the result of the election is declared. * * * However, the constitution plainly limits the right of the appointed judge to hold until the election and qualification of his successor at the next succeeding general election.'

It seems to be suggested that the constitution is a limitation only upon legislative power, and that the express limitation must be found to inhibit the power of the legislature, at its discretion, to create and define the tenure of appointive judges, while admitting that it cannot interfere with the constitutional office of the original five judges. However, there is no express limitation in words on the legislative power to diminish the number of the judges below five. There is in words no such limitation as to the diminution of salaries, but all here concede such limitations exist by implication. It could hardly be successfully maintained that the legislature could increase the court if the power to increase had not be conferred. I understand the correct rule of construction to be that the mandate 'thou shalt,' when used in directing the organization of the court and fixing the number of its members, also implies negatively the inhibition 'thou shalt not' add any other number, and it therefore required power affirmatively given to increase the number after the first organization. The sovereign powers of the state were deliberately *353 distributed in framing the constitution into legislative, executive, and judicial departments. In the supreme and superior courts were reposed the judicial functions, and their organization, powers, qualifications, and terms of the judges, are defined. The independence of the court is guarded in all cases by fixed tenures of office and salaries during the terms. The convention, when vesting such functions in courts, had in view as well the future as the present of the state, and foresaw its large growth and development, and the necessity that would arise for increasing the number of judges for the courts, and it provided for such increase from 'time to time' by the legislature. But it plainly intended to preserve the harmony and the unity of this court in the tenure and qualifications of its judges. I conclude that section 2 of the act of 1901, supra, and the same idea wherever expressed elsewhere in the act, is a departure from that intention, and that the plain mandate of the constitution carries with it the implied prohibition upon the creation of legislative offices such as the act of 1901 does if all its provisions are held valid. However, the void section of this statute may be eliminated, and the law, in its substance, be valid. The title is perfect: 'An act increasing the number of judges of the supreme court, and declaring an emergency.' This is clearly within the authority of the constitution. The first section declares that after the enactment the court shall consist of seven members. Here the limitation imposed upon the terms of the judges and the added qualifications were beyond the power of the legislature. In State v. Twichell, supra,—the case where the legislature had extended the term of superior judges,—the court declared that such interference was beyond the competency *354 of the legislature, but held that portion of the statute within its competency valid, and gave effect to the law; observing that the power of the legislature was limited to providing for the increase of the number of judges. So in this case the legislature was only competent to provide the number of judges to be added to the court. It was unnecessary and was immaterial that the act provided for their appointment by the governor, for the constitution had already designated the method of filling the vacancies by the governor, and so it may be said of the specifications of the salaries. I understand the true rule of construction, approved by the great weight of, if not by unanimous, authority, is that if the valid exercise of legislative power can be separated from the void, and is susceptible of operation, the valid will be enforced. A few of such authorities may be mentioned here: Cooley, Const. Lim. (4th Ed.) pp. 214-216; Commissioners v. George (Ky.) 47 S. W. 779, 84 Am. St. Rep. 454; State v.

Brewster, 44 Ohio St. 589, 9 N. E. 849; State v. Thoman, 10 Kan. 191; Griebel v. State, 111 Ind. 369, 12 N. E. 700. In the case of State v. Blend, 121 Ind. 514, 23 N. E. 511, 16 Am. St. Rep. 411, the rule is admirably stated as follows: 'It is equally well settled **31 that, when a part of a statute is unconstitutional, if by striking from the act all that part which is void, that which is left is complete in itself, sensible, capable of being executed, and wholly independent of that which is rejected, the courts will reject that which is unconstitutional and enforce the remainder.' I conclude that the statute here, with the void features eliminated, is clear and sensible, and should be enforced; that there is a valid increase of this court by the addition of two constitutional judges; that the two members appointed *355 by Gov. Rogers are filling vacancies contemplated by the constitution; and that their successors to fill the unexpired terms ought to be elected at the general election in November, and the writ should issue for that purpose.

LA PRADE, Justice.

This is an action in quo warranto brought by the attorney general in the name of the state, upon his relation, against the Honorable Dan E. Garvey, who is now and at all times since the first Monday of January, 1947, has been the duly elected, qualified, and acting secretary of state. The complaint alleges that the Honorable Sidney P. Osborn, the duly elected and acting governor of Arizona, died on the 28th day of May, 1948. The relator then alleges that, upon the death of Governor Osborn, the respondent, as secretary of state, purportedly under and by virtue of article 5, section 6 of the constitution of the state of Arizona, unlawfully assumed the office of governor of the state of Arizona and has since unlawfully held and exercised the same. The relator further alleges that under and by virtue of said section of the constitution Dan E. Garvey did not in law or in fact become governor of Arizona upon the death of Governor Osborn, but by virtue of the section the powers and duties of the office of governor merely devolved upon Mr. Garvey as said secretary of state.

Respondent by his answer denies that he unlawfully assumed the office of governor of the state of Arizona and unlawfully holds and exercises the rights and duties of that office. He contends the facts to be that upon the death of Governor Osborn he by virtue of the constitutional provision above referred to succeeded to the duties, powers, emoluments, and rights of the office of governor, and lawfully holds such office by virtue of the constitutional provision. *306 He further maintains that he was required to and did assume the duties, powers, and privileges of the office of governor for the remainder of Governor Osborn's term, and that the office became vested in him so that he is governor de jure and de facto.

[I] The public business and tranquility demand a prompt judicial inquiry and final determination of the actions of the respondent **154 in admittedly holding and exercising the office of governor. It is for this reason that we have exercised our original jurisdiction in the premises, as we did in Sullivan v. Moore, 49 Ariz. 51, 64 P.2d 809 and State v. Sullivan, 66 Ariz. 348, 188 P.2d 592, and have promptly determined the issues. Two questions are presented for determination: first, upon the death of Governor Osborn did the respondent become vested with the office of governor for the remainder of the term? second, if he did not become vested with the office of Governor, is he entitled to the emoluments of the office by virtue of the fact that he must perform the duties thereof?

The first question can be answered only by reference to the pertinent constitutional and statutory provisions. Article 5, section 6, of the Arizona constitution provides:

'[Succession to governorship].—In case of the impeachment of the governor, or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the duties of his office, resignation, or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the secretary of state until the disability ceases, or during the remainder of the term.' (Emphasis supplied.)

The following section of the code, relating to the duties of secretary of state and his assistant, we consider to be pertinent and highly illuminating and informative in our search for a correct determination on the questions involved:

'Assistant secretary.—The secretary shall appoint an assistant secretary of state, who, in the absence of the secretary of state, or when the secretary of state is acting governor, shall perform the duties of the secretary.' (Emphasis supplied.) Section 4-204, A.C.A.1939.

The questions presented, though a matter of first impression in this state, are not novel. The question of the effect of the succession of an inferior officer to the duties and powers of the office of governor has been exhaustively treated by courts of last resort in many states. The prevailing view is that in such a case the inferior officer does not vacate his office and become governor de jure and de facto, but that the duties and powers of governor merely devolve on him and he retains his former office and becomes, practically speaking, ex officio governor. 24 Am.Jur., Governor, section 10. Under this view it is held that where the duties of the office of governor devolve on the president of the senate, he does not become governor, or cease to be a senator and president of the senate, and that on his resignation as *307 senator he ceases to be entitled to act as governor. Clifford v. Heller, 63 N.J.L. 105, 42 A. 155, 57 L.R.A. 312. For convenience following each citation will appear the constitutional provision of the state whose decision is referred to.

'In case of the death, resignation, or removal from office of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate.' New Jersey, article 5, par. 12, N.J.S.A.

And where such duties devolve on the lieutenant governor, an election of a lieutenant governor to fill the supposed vacancy is unauthorized. State v. Sadler, 23 Nev. 356, 47 P. 450; State v. McBride, 29 Wash. 335, 70 P. 25.

'In case of the impeachment of the governor, or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the duties of the said office, resignation or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease.' Nevada, article 5, section 18.

'In case of the removal, resignation, death, or disability of the governor, the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor.' Washington, article 3, section 10.

Nor can the lieutenant governor in such an event appoint a successor to himself as lieutenant governor. People v. Budd, 114 Cal. 168, 45 P. 1060, 35 L.R.A. 46.

'In case of the impeachment of the Governor, or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the powers and duties of his office, resignation, or absence from the State, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term, or **155 until the disability shall cease.' California, article 5, section 16.

Likewise under this rule where a vacancy in the office of governor occurs, and the president pro tempore of the senate acts under a provision that he 'shall be lieutenant governor' in such a case, he does not cease to be a senator, but retains his right to vote in that body. State v. Stearns, 72 Minn. 200, 75 N.W. 210.

'The lieutenant governor shall be ex officio president of the Senate; and in case a vacancy should occur, from any cause whatever, in the office of governor, he shall be governor during such vacancy.' Minnesota, article 5, section 6, M.S.A.

And on the election of another as president pro tempore his right to act as lieutenant governor ceases. People v. Cornforth, 34 Colo. 107, 81 P. 871.

'In case of the death, impeachment, or conviction of felony or infamous misdemeanor, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the state or other disability of the governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office, for the residue of the term, or until the disability be removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor.' Colorado, article 4, section 13.

*308 And it has been held that where the powers, duties, and emoluments devolve on the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term there was no vacancy in either the office of governor or lieutenant governor that could be filled at a general election which intervened before the expiration of the term. State v. Mitchell, 97 Mont. 252, 34 P.2d 369.

'In case of the failure to qualify, the impeachment or conviction of felony or infamous crime of the governor, or his death, removal from office, resignation, absence from the state, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office, for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease, shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor.' Montana, section 14, article 7.

[2] A vacancy in the office of governor does not arise by the impeachment of the incumbent, his removal from office, or death in the sense that there is no one left with power to discharge the duties imposed upon the governor. State v. McBride, supra; State v. Mitchell, supra. In State ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, 1938, 228 Wis. 645, 280 N.W. 393, 399, it is said:

'When a vacancy, either permanent or temporary, occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of that office devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term or until the governor, absent or impeached, shall have returned or the disability shall cease. It is clear that the lieutenant governor does not become governor. He remains lieutenant governor, upon whom devolves the powers and duties of governor. In such a contingency no vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor. * * *'

To the same effect see Futrell v. Oldham, 107 Ark. 386, 155 S.W. 502, Ann.Cas.1915A, 571. The Arkansas constitutional provision reads as follows:

'In case of the death conviction or impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the State or other disability of the Governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office for the remainder of the term, or until the disability be removed, or a Governor elected and qualified, shall devolve upon and accrue to the President of the Sentate.' Section 12, article 6.

The same situation exists where the governor is absent from the state or physically unable to discharge the duties of his office. The framers of our constitution never intended that there should be any interim in which the affairs of state were not executed for they said in explicit language that upon the happening of any of the contingencies mentioned in section 6, article 5, supra, the powers and duties of the office of governor were to be immediately transferred to the secretary of state who was then given a mandate to discharge the duties of the office for the residue of the term for which the governor was elected. He, as secretary of state, acts *309 as governor and is empowered to perform all the duties of that office, and his official **156 acts performed as acting governor are valid. McCluskey v. Hunter, 33 Ariz. 513, 266 P. 18.

While a legislative interpretation is not binding upon us, it is nevertheless entitled to respectful consideration. We find that as long as 1922 the legislature, in enacting section 4-204, supra, was aware of the contingencies contained in the constitutional provision under consideration, and considered that there would be occasions when the secretary of state was 'acting governor.' The code section specifically provides that when the secretary of state is 'acting governor' the assistant secretary of state shall perform the duties of the secretary.

We have observed that the prevailing view is that an inferior officer does not vacate his office and become governor de jure and de facto where the several constitutions provide merely that the duties and powers of the office devolve upon him. See Annotation, Ann.Cas.1915A, 577, at page 579. Opposed to the authorities just considered are three cases, all from one jurisdiction, namely, Oregon. In the reported case of Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Or. 389, 4 P. 1180, the court had before it for consideration the constitutional provision reading as follows:

'In case of the removal of the governor from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the duties of the office, the same shall devolve on the secretary of state; and in case of the removal from office, death, resignation, or inability, both of the governor and secretary of state, the president of the senate shall act as governor until the disability be removed or a governor be elected.' (Emphasis supplied.) Section 8, article 5.

The court in analyzing grammatically the section held that the word 'same' related to and qualified the word 'office' and that in legal effect the section should read 'In case of the removal of the governor from office or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the duties of the office, the office itself shall devolve upon the secretary of state.'

In the later case of Olcott v. Hoff, 92 Or. 462, 181 P. 466, 470, the Oregon court again had before it for consideration the same section of the constitution and was asked to review its decision in the Chadwick case. It was called to the attention of the court that many courts had refused to accept its interpretation in the Chadwick case as sound law. The justice who wrote the prevailing opinion was still of the opinion that the grammatical interpretation made in the Chadwick case was correct. He attempted to distinguish the cases from Wyoming, Nevada, New Jersey, California, Colorado, Minnesota, Washington, and Arkansas by stating:

*'It will be noted that in all of the sections quoted it is not the office, but the powers and duties of the office, which *310 devolve upon his successor in the event of the death of the governor. The importance of that distinction is clearly pointed out by the recent decision of the supreme court of Arkansas in construing the constitution of that state in the case of Futrell v. Oldham, supra, where the opinion says: 'If the framers of the constitution had intended to provide for the devolution of the office of governor, in case of vacancy by resignation or otherwise, upon the president of the senate, that intention could easily have been directly expressed in appropriate words. But they chose other terms which clearly observe the distinction between the course of succession of the office itself and a mere devolution of the duties and the emoluments of the office for the time being, and deliberately adopted the latter as the best means of having the government administered until the people themselves can elect a governor.'*

Mr. Justice Harris of that court, in a separate opinion concurring in part, made this observation of the Chadwick decision:

*'* * * If article 5, § 8, of the state constitution, were now for the first time presented for judicial construction I would, for reasons which to me are not only persuasive but convincing, take the view that upon the removal, death, resignation, or inability of the governor to discharge the duties of the office, the secretary of state becomes merely ex officio governor. In other words, it is my opinion that a correct construction of the constitution **157 only empowered Chadwick to act as governor until he ceased to be secretary of state and then the duties of the office of the governor devolved upon Earhart, the succeeding secretary of state, until Thayer qualified as governor; or, applying what I conceive to be the meaning of the constitution to the instant case, because and only because he is secretary of state, Ben W. Olcott would perform the duties of governor until his term as secretary of state expires on the first Monday in January, 1921, when his successor's term as secretary of state shall begin, and such successor would then discharge the duties of governor until the speaker of* the house of representatives at the session to be held in 1921 publishes the vote for governor. * * *

This justice in stating that the doctrine of state decisis should never be resorted to where an opinion was clearly and manifestly erroneous and capable of producing injustice and hardship, nevertheless for other considerations, adhered to the original decision in the Chadwick case.

In State v. Olcott, 94 Or. 633, 187 P. 286, 290, the court was again confronted with a contingency growing out of its previous interpretations. In this case, Mr. Justice Bennett in a specially concurring opinion, made reference to the original decision in the Chadwick case and the observations of Mr. Justice Harris in Olcott v. Hoff, supra:

*311 'After much consideration and some hesitation, I feel compelled to concur in the opinion of Mr. Justice Johns upon the ground of stare decisis only. It seems to me that the case of Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Or. 389, 4 P. 1180, is directly in point and is controlling. If it were not for that case and if the question was here as a matter of first impression, I should be governed by the reasoning of Mr. Justice Harris when the question was under consideration in Olcott v. Hoff, which seems to me to present, as a matter of logic, the stronger considerations.'

[3] [4] We do not consider the decision in Chadwick v. Earhart, supra, as persuasive or authoritative. The interpretation of that case was based on the language of the constitutional provision, and we sincerely believe was not justified. In any event our constitutional provision specifically provides that 'the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the secretary of state * * *.' This section is not susceptible of the interpretation that the office shall devolve upon the secretary of state. Having concluded that the office of governor does not devolve upon the secretary of state and that Dan E. Garvey is still secretary of state and only ex officio or acting governor, it is apparent that he is not legally entitled to any extra compensation for the performance of services or duties which pertain to his office of secretary of state. By law the incumbent of an office is bound to perform all of the duties belonging to it without extra compensation. As was said in United States v. Smith, 27 Fed.Cas. 1139, page 1141, No. 16,321:

'* * * No man is under any necessity to accept an office, but having accepted it, the obligation rests upon him to discharge its duties for the remuneration which the law provides. He accepts it with a knowledge of the pay or salary attached to it, and though its duties may be onerous, and the compensation inadequate, if he chooses to retain the office he must be content with what the law gives.'

The respondent took oath to perform the duties of secretary of state. His duties embrace the responsibility to act as governor in case any of the contingencies provided for in the constitutional provision arise. Walls v. Hall, 202 Ark. 999, 154 S.W.2d 573, 136 A.L.R. 1047.

We, therefore, hold that respondent Garvey is not governor de jure or de facto but merely ex officio or acting governor invested by constitutional mandate with all of the powers and duties of that high office, which devolve upon him by virtue of the fact that he is secretary of state. Respondent, however, is entitled to physical possession of the office space and facilities provided for the chief executive of the state, but as no provision has been made that the emoluments of the office of governor inure to the secretary of state when acting governor he is entitled *312 **158 only to the compensation provided for the secretary of state.

It is the judgment of this court and it is hereby ordered that the Honorable Dan E. Garvey be and he is hereby precluded from holding or exercising the office of governor of the state of Arizona other than as secretary of state and acting governor. Let the mandate of the court issue forthwith.

*470 P. B. Coolidge, for relator.

J. A. Van Orsdel, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

POTTER, J.

The sole question involved in this case is whether the relator is entitled to receive the salary provided and appropriated by law for both the offices of Governor and Secretary of State. From the petition herein, it appears that at the general election held November 4, 1902, De Forest Richards was elected to the office of Governor of the state of Wyoming for the term of four years from the first Monday in January, 1903, and on said first Monday in January, 1903, to wit, January 5th, he duly and regularly qualified as such Governor and entered upon the duties of such office. He died April 28, 1903, thereby causing a vacancy in said office, to be filled in the manner required by law. At the same general election the relator, Fenimore Chatterton, was elected to the office of Secretary of State for the same term of four years; and he duly qualified as such, and entered upon the discharge of the duties of that office, on said first Monday in January, 1903, and continues to occupy said office and to perform the duties thereof. Upon the death of Gov. Richards, and on the date thereof, the relator, as required by statute, issued a proclamation announcing the death of the Governor, and that, as is provided by section 6 of article 4 of the Constitution of said state, and section 50 of the Revised Statutes of 1899, he had assumed and entered upon the duties of Governor of the state; and the allegation of the petition is that on said date said relator did assume and enter upon the duties of Governor, and has continued to fill said office, and act as Governor, in addition to his duties as Secretary of State, exercising all the powers and performing all the duties of that office. It is alleged that the relator is eligible to the office, and not under impeachment, and that, his assumption of the office having occurred more than 20 days before the next general election of county officers, the powers and duties of Governor will devolve upon the relator until the next general election, which will occur November 8, 1904. It is alleged that the salaries of both the Governor and Secretary of State for the year 1903 have been appropriated by the Legislature, and are in the Treasury of the state, except the monthly installments for January, February, March, and April, which have been already disbursed; that on the 1st day of June, 1903, the relator presented to the respondent, the duly elected and qualified Auditor of the State, an itemized account, duly verified as required by law, showing that there was due relator the sum of $208.33, his salary as Acting Governor for the month of May, 1903, and the further sum of $166.66, his salary as Secretary of State for the same month, and he then and there demanded of said auditor that he draw his warrant on the State Treasurer for said amounts. Thereupon the auditor refused to draw a warrant for the payment of said account, and indorsed on the statement thereof his refusal, and the reasons therefor, as *471 follows: "It is understood that this voucher is presented, and that my refusal to pay the same is made, for the purpose of having the Supreme Court of the State of Wyoming decide the question whether or not the Secretary of State is entitled to receive two salaries—the salary of Governor, as Acting Governor, and the salary of Secretary of State. In order that this question may be settled, I hereby refuse payment."

The prayer of the petition is that a writ of mandamus issue, commanding the Auditor to issue and deliver to the relator his two warrants on the Treasurer for the respective amounts claimed. An alternative writ of mandamus was allowed, and the petition is met by a general demurrer, upon which the cause has been heard and must be determined. The demurrer admits all the material allegations that are well pleaded, and doubtless the facts are accurately set forth. The demurrer has been deemed by counsel to raise the only question at issue, viz., the right of relator to the salaries of the two offices. The material constitutional provisions relating to the office of Governor, and the compensation thereof, are as follows:

"The executive power shall be vested in a Governor, who shall hold his office for the term of four (4) years and until his successor is elected and qualified." Article 4, § 1.

"If the Governor be impeached, displaced, resign or die, or from mental or physical disease or otherwise become incapacitated of performing the duties of his office, or be absent from the state, the Secretary of State shall act as Governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed." Section 6.

"Until otherwise provided by law, the Governor shall receive an annual salary of two thousand five hundred dollars, the Secretary of State, State Auditor, State Treasurer, and Superintendent of Public Instruction shall each receive an annual salary of two thousand dollars, and the salaries of any of the said officers shall not be increased or diminished during the period for which they were elected, and all fees and profits arising from any of the said offices shall be covered into the State Treasury.” Section 13.

Sections 4, 5, 7, 8, and 9 of the said article prescribe the duties of the office of Governor. It is unnecessary for the purpose of this opinion to recite those duties in detail; but it may be well to say that the Governor is, by the Constitution, made commander in chief of the military forces of the state, and it is provided that he may call out the same to execute the laws, suppress insurrection, and repel invasion. He may convene the Legislature on extraordinary occasions. He is required to transact all necessary business with the officers of the government, civil and military, and to expedite all such measures as may be resolved upon by the Legislature, and see that the laws are faithfully executed. He is given power to remit fines and forfeitures, and to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons after conviction, for all offenses except treason and cases of impeachment. He is authorized in case of a vacancy in public office to fill the same by appointment, where no other mode of filling the vacancy is provided by law. Every bill passing the Legislature must be presented to him before it becomes a law, and, if approved by him, he is required to sign it. He is given a veto power over legislative measures. After specifically prescribing a number of the duties of the office of Governor, it is provided by section 12 of the same article as follows: “The powers and duties of the Secretary of State, of State Auditor, Treasurer and Superintendent of Public Instruction shall be as prescribed by law.” And the first Legislature of the state proceeded to define the duties of Secretary of State. Rev. St. 1899, §§ 54–69. None of the duties of the office of Governor were thereby imposed upon the Secretary of State, nor was any reference made therein to the duty of such officer to act as Governor; and it is obvious that the duties and powers of the office of Governor do not ordinarily pertain to the office of Secretary of State.

The statutory provisions on the subject of succession in the office of Governor are as follows:

“In case of the removal, death, resignation or inability of the Governor of the State of Wyoming, the Secretary of State, or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation or inability, then the President of the last Senate, or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Speaker of the last

House of Representatives, or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the State Auditor, or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the State Treasurer, shall act as Governor until the disability of the Governor is removed, or a Governor shall be elected.” Rev. St. 1899, § 50.

“Whenever the powers and duties of the office of Governor of the state of Wyoming shall devolve upon any of the persons named in the foregoing section as therein provided, the person upon whom such duties shall devolve, shall issue a proclamation to the effect that the person theretofore an incumbent in said office of Governor, naming him, has ceased to act as such, naming the reason, and stating that such person succeeding to the duties and powers of such office has assumed the duties and powers thereof.” Rev. St. 1899, § 51.

“Whenever the powers and duties of the office of the Governor of the state of Wyoming shall devolve upon a person, as herein before provided, the person acting as Governor shall continue to act as Governor, as aforesaid, until the end of the term of the Governor: provided, such assumption of office is made as aforesaid less than twenty days before the next general election of county officers, preceding the next ensuing general election for state officers; but should such assumption be made as aforesaid previous to twenty days before a general election for county officers, then and in that case, the person acting as Governor as aforesaid, shall issue an additional proclamation calling for the election of a Governor to fill the unexpired term, which election shall take place at the same time as the general election for county officers, and such election, together with the returns and canvass thereof, shall be conducted in all respects as though it was an original election for Governor. When the state canvassing board shall have canvassed the vote of the election as aforesaid, and in the manner provided by law, declared a person at such election to be elected as Governor, such person shall, within thirty days after such canvass, or as soon thereafter as possible, qualify and assume the duties and powers of Governor, and shall be the Governor of the state of Wyoming for the remainder of the unexpired term of Governor.” Rev. St. 1899, § 52.

“The foregoing provisions shall only apply to persons who are eligible to the office of Governor of the state of Wyoming under the Constitution of the state of Wyoming, and who are not under impeachment by the House of Representatives of the state of Wyoming, at the time the powers and duties shall devolve upon them respectively." Rev. St. 1899, § 53.

These provisions were enacted by the first state Legislature under the following title: "An act to provide for an Acting Governor in case of the removal, death, resignation or inability of the Governor, and to provide for the election of his successor."

Outside the constitutional provisions rendering certain officers ineligible to hold another office during the term for which they may respectively have been elected, there is no statute of this state prohibiting a person from holding and exercising the duties of two offices that are not incompatible, nor, if legally holding such offices, from receiving the compensation that is attached to each by law. It certainly cannot be held that the offices of Governor and Secretary of State are incompatible, in the sense that the same person, if Secretary of State, cannot legally act in the dual capacity, and perform the duties of each office, upon the death, disability, or resignation of the Governor, since the Constitution and statutes expressly require it. No question of compatibility is involved. Whether the same person could be lawfully elected to both offices is not before us for consideration. That contingency will hardly occur. The situation that confronts us is that the law designates the Secretary of State in a case like the present to act as Governor; and he will be required to so act until after the next general election, that will not occur until November, 1904. During that period all the powers of the Governor and all the duties of that responsible office will devolve upon him. He cannot escape them any more than one regularly chosen to the office. In the meantime he has all the powers, and is subject to all the responsibilities, attaching to the office of Secretary of State. There is no express provision of the statute entitling him to the salary of the office of Governor, nor, as already indicated, is there any provision expressly forbidding its payment to him. The relator being the regularly elected and qualified Secretary of State, it must be conceded that he is entitled to receive the salary provided by law to be paid to that officer. In the absence of statute expressly or by necessary implication depriving him of the compensation belonging to that office upon assuming the powers and duties of Governor, he would have a right to it, even if permitted to draw the salary of the other office. In view of our statutes, or rather the absence of statutory provision on the subject, we cannot conceive of any principle upon which the salary attaching to the office of Secretary of State can be denied him, whatever may be his right to the compensation provided by law for the office of Governor. It seems clear and reasonable that, if he is found entitled to receive the salary of the executive office, he will necessarily be entitled to the salaries of both offices.

It is a general principle that an officer who holds two or more separate and distinct offices, not incompatible with each other, to each of which compensation is attached, may recover the compensation provided by law for each office. Mechem on Pub. Off. 859. In considering the case of a person seeking the recovery of salary claimed to be due him as clerk of a committee in Congress, who had during part of the period also occupied a position as clerk in the office of the President, and the effect of certain sections of the statute prohibiting double or extra compensation, the Supreme Court of the United States said: "We are of the opinion that, taking these sections all together, the purpose of this legislation was to prevent a person holding an office or appointment for which the law provides a definite compensation, by way of salary or otherwise, which is intended to cover all the services which, as such officer, he may be called upon to render, from receiving extra compensation, additional allowances, or pay for other services which may be required of him either by act of Congress or by order of the head of his department, or in any other mode, added to or connected with the regular duties of the place which he holds, but that they have no application to the case of two distinct offices, places, or employments, each of which has its own duties and its own compensation, which offices may both be held by one person at the same time. In the latter case he is, in the eye of the law, two officers, or holds two places or appointments, the functions of which are separate and distinct; *473 and, according to all the decisions, he is in such case entitled to recover the two compensations. In the former case he performs the added duties under his appointment to a single place, and the statute has provided that he shall receive no additional compensation for that class of duties unless it is so provided by special legislation." United States v. Saunders, 120 U. S. 126, 7 Sup. Ct. 467, 30 L. Ed. 594. In the case of Converse v. United States, 21 How. 463, 16 L. Ed. 192, the court was called upon to construe various provisions of statute limiting the right of certain officers to additional compensation, and with reference to some of them it was said: "But they can by no fair interpretation be held to embrace an employment which has no affinity or connection, either in its character or by law or usage, with the line of his official duty, and where the service to be performed is of a different character and for a different place, and the amount of compensation regulated by law." But it was held that, as the services for which compensation was claimed were foreign to the regular official duties of the officer, he was entitled to recover; the compensation to be paid for such services having been fixed by law, and the money appropriated to pay it. Upon the general principle above stated, compensation for services rendered in the discharge of the duties of both offices were allowed one occupying the position of chief supervisor of elections and also United States commissioner. In re Conrad (C. C.) 15 Fed. 641. And the two duties of crier and messenger, although separate offices, were held not incompatible, and where the same person held both offices he was allowed the compensation of both. Preston v. United States (D. C.) 37 Fed. 417. Where the city treasurer was required by law to act ex officio as school treasurer, giving bond for each office, and taking a separate oath of office for each, he was held to be entitled not only to the salary of his office as city treasurer, but also to the salary or compensation of school treasurer. Scranton Sch. Dist. v. Simpson, 133 Pa. 202, 19 Atl. 359. It appearing in that case that a statute had been enacted providing that the city treasurer should be ex officio school treasurer, it was held that the latter office had not been abolished, but that the statute merely designated the person who should fill it. It was held in Missouri, where an appropriation was made by law for the payment of compensation to members of the State Board of Equalization, that the Secretary of State, who was constituted a member of the board by the Constitution, was entitled to compensation for services rendered by him in that capacity. State ex rel. v. Walker, 97 Mo. 162, 10 S. W. 473. And in South Dakota, where the Secretary of State was, under the law, a member of the brand and mark committee, and the law provided a compensation to be paid each member, said officer was held entitled to such compensation, in addition to his salary as Secretary of State. State v. Roddle, 81 N. W. 980. See, also, State ex rel. v. La Grave (Nev.) 48 Pac. 193; Badeau v. U. S., 130 U. S. 439, 9 Sup. Ct. 579, 32 L. Ed. 997; Love v. Baehr, 47 Cal. 364.

The Attorney General has filed a brief herein in support of the demurrer and he presents an able argument against relator's claim. We do not understand that he disputes the general principle, but his contention is that in acting as Governor the relator is but performing his duty as Secretary of State. The argument is that the duty is one imposed upon the Secretary of State, and is not foreign to the duties of that office; that his situation is not analogous to the case of a Lieutenant Governor who assumes the office of Governor in case of a vacancy in that office through the death or resignation of the regularly chosen incumbent thereof; that the relator does not become the successor of the deceased Governor, and is not, in fact, Governor, but simply acts in that capacity until, in obedience to the mandate of the statute, a successor may be regularly elected by the people. It is even argued that a vacancy continues to exist, and will so continue until some person is chosen at the next election to serve the balance that may remain of the unexpired term, and that in the meantime the state is and will be without a Governor. In this connection it should be remembered that the statute providing for succession in the office of Governor uses precisely the same language in designating the various officers or persons who shall in certain prescribed contingencies act as Governor. No different words are employed in describing the duty of President of the Senate or Speaker of the House upon the occurrence of the event that would require either of them to assume the duties of Governor. It is evident that the powers and rights of either would not be in any way superior to or different from the powers and rights of the relator under like circumstances. If the relator does not occupy the office of Governor, but merely executes the duties of Secretary of State in assuming the responsibilities and powers of Governor, then it would seem that the same thing would be true of the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House, and that, should either of them be required to act as Governor, he would be merely performing certain duties added for the time being to his office. And it would follow that, although the law has provided no compensation to be paid to those officers except during a session of the Legislature, they would not be entitled to the salary of the Governor, or any other compensation, until the Legislature should make further provision. In this case we are not concerned with a mere temporary disability of the Governor, or his temporary absence from the state, and the occasional assumption of his duties by another while he continues to occupy the office and draw the salary thereof; nor are we *474 called upon to consider what the rule would be in such cases. The contention of the Attorney General seems to be supported in some measure by the case of United States v. Smith, 27 Fed. Cas. 1139 (No. 16,321). That was a suit upon the bond of the Secretary of the territory of Minnesota, and the officer set up in defense an account against the government, including an item for salary due him as Acting Governor during the absence of that officer. There had not occurred a vacancy in the office, as we read the case, but the Governor was absent from the territory on certain occasions, and during such absence the Secretary acted. The statute authorizing him to do so provided that he should discharge the duties of the executive "in case of the death, removal, resignation, or necessary absence of the Governor from the territory." Act March 3, 1849, c. 121, § 3, 9 Stat. 404. In charging the jury, the district judge said: "The defendant took the office of Secretary knowing that in any of the emergencies specified the duties of Governor would devolve on him. And the law made no provision for any additional compensation in that event. In assuming the office of Secretary of the territory the defendant became bound to act as Governor, if necessary under the law, as fully as he was obliged to discharge any other duty as Secretary. It pertained to the office of Secretary, though not strictly within the legitimate range of its duties. The salary certainly was less than the labor and responsibility required, but this is an evil which this court and jury cannot remedy without usurping legislative power." The learned court moreover held that the item came within the operation of an act of Congress forbidding the allowance to one individual for the salaries of two different offices on account of his having performed the duties thereof at the same time. Notwithstanding that the general language of the court might be held to be applicable to the situation of relator, we think it is not a necessary implication that upon facts like those in the case at bar the court would have expressed the same opinion respecting the character of the duties of the officer. Again, in State, etc., v. Heller (N. J. Sup.) 42 Atl. 155, 57 L. R. A. 312, it was said, in view of the language of the Constitution, that although the President of the Senate, in case of a vacancy in the office of Governor, exercises the powers and performs the duties of Governor, and receives the emoluments of that office, he does not become Governor, but that he still holds the office of President of the Senate, with the added duties required of the chief executive imposed upon him. He was held to be the "person administering the government," since the Constitution, in various clauses, used the words "the Governor or person administering the Government." The statute there evidently gave the officer the emoluments of the office, and hence his right thereto was not involved in the case.

to the determination of his right to the salary of the office. He is at least the Acting Governor. The expression both of the statute and Constitution is that he "shall act as Governor." And the statute requires him to issue a proclamation to the effect that he has "succeeded" to the duties and powers of the office, and has assumed such duties and powers. Moreover, the statute (section 52) refers to the act of the officer in taking upon himself the powers and duties of governor as an "assumption of office." And in case such "assumption of office" is made less than 20 days before the next general election of county officers, preceding the next ensuing general election for state officers, the "person acting as Governor" is required to "continue to act as Governor" until the end of the term. The significance of this requirement is made more manifest when it is remembered that an election for county officers occurs every two years, whereas a regular election for state officers occurs but once in four years; and hence the person so acting as Governor might be required to serve in that capacity more than one-half of the entire term, and until the end thereof, in which event, also, the vacancy, as such (that is, for the existing term), would not be filled at all by an election, but the Acting Governor would be succeeded by one elected for a new and full term. Whether the relator has succeeded to the title of Governor, or not, it must be conceded, we think, that he may appropriately assume at least the title of Acting Governor. Possibly that is his correct title, in the performance of executive functions. It is unnecessary, however, to decide that question.

We are not convinced that the duties of Acting Governor are attached to the office of Secretary of State. It seems to us that the more reasonable view is that the person occupying the office of Secretary of State is designated to act as Governor. This view is impressed upon us and strengthened whether we consider the nature of the duties of the two offices, or the legislation concerning them. We have already alluded to the fact that the Constitution imposes upon the Legislature the duty of prescribing the duties of Secretary of State, while it enumerates many of the powers and duties of the Governor, and the further fact that in the chapter defining the duties of the former office the Legislature omitted any reference to the requirement that the incumbent should in certain contingencies act as Governor. It appears to us to be incontrovertible that the two offices are separate and distinct, each having its own duties and responsibilities.

*475 The duties and powers of one do not pertain to, nor are they legitimately connected with, the other office.

It is doubtless true that, whenever by law the Secretary is required to attest or countersign any document bearing the signature of the Governor, he continues to do so, and, when necessary, attaches the great seal of the state thereto, notwithstanding that it is the same person who signs in both capacities. It may be conceded, for the purposes of the case, that in a strictly technical sense the relator is not Governor. But it would not necessarily follow, in our judgment, that the salary of the office is not to be paid to him. To all intents and purposes he is the Governor of the state, and in a constitutional sense he is Acting Governor, at least. As such he is required to perform various duties, and is authorized to exercise very great powers, entirely distinct from the duties of his other office—such duties as not only by our written law, but ordinarily, are imposed and conferred solely upon the chief executive officer of a state. It might also be conceded, without seriously impairing the relator's right to the salary in question, that in a limited sense the office of Governor is vacant. But we are not able to subscribe to the proposition that there is an absolute and unqualified vacancy in the office. That would imply either that there is no one lawfully authorized to perform its duties, or that they are temporarily an adjunct of another office. In State ex rel. v. Henderson, 4 Wyo. 555, 35 Pac. 520, 22 L. R. A. 751, Chief Justice Groesbeck, speaking for this court, said: "An office cannot be said to be vacant while any person is authorized to act in it, and does so act." That language was employed in determining a question not involved here, viz., the authority of the Governor in a certain case to appoint to an office. We think—and may have something further to say on that subject—that the duties have not become an adjunct of another office. The statute, as already indicated, seems to indicate quite clearly that the Secretary, in entering upon the discharge of the duties, shall assume an office, and that reference is manifestly to some office other than that of Secretary of State. It is a conceded fact, and must be, that the relator is lawfully authorized to perform the duties of the office of Governor.

We deem it unnecessary to discuss technically the question of vacancy in the office. In the sense that the law contemplates that there shall be an incumbent of the office regularly chosen to that position, it may be admitted that a vacancy has occurred, and continues to exist, which can be filled only through an election by the people. But the office is now supplied in the manner provided by the Constitution and statutes, with an incumbent who is legally qualified to exercise its powers and perform the duties which pertain to it; and, although such incumbent is merely designated as an Acting Governor, he is for all practical purposes in possession of the office and all of its prerogatives.

In this connection it is difficult to perceive much, if any, distinction between the facts in this case, and where, a vacancy occurring in an elective office, the Governor or some other competent authority has appointed some person to fill the office until the next general election, at which time the people are required to choose some one to serve out the remainder of the unexpired term. That is the case in the event of a vacancy in the office of Justice of the Supreme Court, and on three occasions there has occurred such a vacancy, which was filled by appointment of the executive until the following general election, when an incumbent for the balance of the unexpired term was elected. In the case of Governor, instead of an appointment by some other officer until an opportunity regularly arrives for the people to signify their preference, the law itself designates a person who shall act.

Under the Constitution of the state of Oregon, in case of the removal of the Governor, or his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the duties of the office, the same was made to devolve upon the Secretary of State. In the case of Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Or. 389, 4 Pac. 1180, one of the questions, as stated in the opinion, was whether, when the duties of the office of Governor devolve upon the Secretary of State, he has a right to the salary of the office. The court answered the question in the affirmative. It was said in the opinion: "If the office of Governor continue after the Governor ceases to hold the office under this section—if the office be not vacant, but shall be lawfully filled by one acting therein directly as the agent of the state, and not in the character of deputy of a Governor incumbent—it would seem difficult to distinguish such a person from a Governor of right and in fact." And again, in response to the argument that the duties of the office of Governor became annexed to the office of Secretary of State, and were discharged as duties incident to the latter office: "In the first place, it is not shown how an office can be vacant, and yet there be a person, not the deputy or locum tenens of another, empowered by law to discharge the duties of the office, and who does in fact discharge them. It is not explained how in such a case the duties can be separated from the office, so that he who discharges them does not become an incumbent of the office. And, in the second place, how a person can fill the office of Governor without being Governor. It is the function of a public officer to discharge public duties. Such duties constitute his office. Hence, given a public office, and one who, duly empowered, discharges its duties, and we have an incumbent in that office. Such is the case here. The Secretary of State, by force of the function cast upon him, becomes Governor, and *476 consequently entitled to the salary appertaining to the office." Counsel endeavors to distinguish the Oregon case from the case at bar on account of the provision in the Constitution of that state that the office shall "devolve" upon the Secretary of State, while the language of our law is that he shall act as Governor. We fail to observe any material distinction. The same section of the Oregon Constitution, in providing for succession in case of the removal, death, resignation, or disability of both the Governor and Secretary of State, declared that in such case "The President of the Senate shall act as Governor." Const. Or. Art. 5, § 8. And in the case cited, in determining the tenure of office as Governor of the Secretary of State, the court mentioned the possibility of the President of the Senate succeeding to the office, and referred to him in language indicating quite clearly that he would be regarded as Governor, for it was said that he would hold the office of Governor, once incumbent, without reference to his office of President of the Senate, and also that he would cease to be President of the Senate when he became Governor. It is evident that the Oregon court itself perceived no distinction between the declaration that the office should devolve, and one that a certain person should act as Governor.

In the case of People v. Hopkins, 55 N. Y. 74, it was held that a deputy of the Superintendent of Insurance, upon whom the law imposed the duties of the office during a vacancy in the principal office, and during the absence and inability of the incumbent thereof, was entitled to the salary of a superintendent during the time he discharged the duties of the office. The statutory provision was that the deputy should "possess the powers and perform the duties attached by law to the office of the principal, during a vacancy in such office, and during the absence and inability of his principal." Laws 1859, p. 882, c. 366, § 2. There the deputy was only empowered to perform the duties and possess the powers, etc., during a vacancy in the office. The office was not made otherwise to devolve upon him. Yet he was entitled to the salary. And in this connection it might be pertinent to inquire what considerations ordinarily determine whether or not compensation shall be paid an officer, and the amount thereof. Our own Constitution furnishes an answer. It is provided in section 1 of article 14 that "The Legislature shall, from time to time, fix the amount of such salaries as are not already fixed by this Constitution, which shall in all cases be in proportion to the value of the services rendered and the duty performed." And in 23 Ency. L. (2d. Ed.) 387, "salary" is defined as "a fixed annual or periodical payment for services, depending upon the amount of service rendered." In fixing a salary to be paid the executive of the state, it would be difficult, we imagine, to show that it was intended by those who framed the fundamental instrument of our state government to bestow the compensation in consideration of the acceptance of the title of Governor. It will hardly be questioned that the salary was intended as compensation for the rendition of services and the performance of duty. The opinion in the case last above cited possesses further interest in view of the argument made in this case to the effect that the relator should not be allowed the salary because he only acts as Governor, and is not Governor in fact. The court, in its opinion, stated that the statute made the deputy, to all intents and purposes, acting superintendent for the time during which there is no other superintendent, and referred to certain precedents, not judicial, but, as stated, furnished by "able jurists, wise statesmen, and rigid economists." It seems that in February, 1828, the office of governor of New York became vacant by the death of De Witt Clinton, and that its powers and duties devolved upon the then Lieutenant Governor. The learned judge states that the question arose whether the officer aforesaid was to be regarded as Acting Governor, and entitled to the salary of the office; and it was held by the Comptroller that he was to be so regarded, and was entitled to the salary. And the same conclusion was reached on a subsequent occasion. The New York Constitution declared that the "powers and duties of the office" should devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, but the court states that he was regarded as "Acting Governor"; and it is noticeable that not the office, but the "powers and duties" of the office, were made to devolve upon him. It will probably be conceded that the powers and duties of the Governor's office have devolved upon the relator in this case.

The Constitution of Nevada provides, in case of vacancy in the office of Governor, that "the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor." Here, again, we have the "powers and duties," rather than the "office," devolving, if there is any distinction. It was held by the Supreme Court of Nevada that a Lieutenant Governor upon whom the powers and duties of Governor had devolved in consequence of the death of the incumbent of that office was entitled to the salary attached to the office. State ex rel. v. La Grave, 23 Nev. 216, 45 Pac. 243, 35 L. R. A. 233. It seems to have been argued in that case that the relator remained Lieutenant Governor, exercising the powers and duties of Governor. In a concurring opinion, Chief Justice Bigelow expressed a doubt as to whether the Lieutenant Governor became "Governor," in the full sense of the term; but he said that he filled the office, not temporarily, but permanently, and that he became at least permanent Acting Governor for the residue of the term. The learned chief justice referred to the proposition, as a general principle of *477 justice and right, that, where one legally performs the duties of an office, he should be entitled to the emoluments thereof. And he held that any doubt as to the right of the officer to receive the salary should be resolved in his favor. The question whether, upon the assumption of the duties of Governor by the Lieutenant Governor, a vacancy was created in the latter office, subsequently came before the same court; and it was held that a vacancy did not exist, but that the officer remained Lieutenant Governor, but invested with the powers and duties of Governor. State ex rel. v. Sadler (Nev.) 47 Pac. 450. Under similar constitutional provisions, the declaration being that the "powers and duties" of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, the Supreme Court of California, in People ex rel. v. Budd, 45 Pac. 1060, 34 L. R. A. 46, say: "It will be seen that in case of a vacancy in the office of Governor the vacancy is not to be filled, but the powers and duties devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, who does not cease to be Lieutenant Governor." And it was held that he could not appoint a Lieutenant Governor, upon the principle, evidently, that there would not be a vacancy in the office on account of the assumption by the incumbent of the duties of Governor. And so in the case at bar it is not contended on either hand that a vacancy has occurred in the office of Secretary of State. No question of salary was involved in the California case above cited. The language of the court seems, however, to sustain the argument of the Attorney General that the vacancy in the office of Governor is not filled in consequence of the assumption of its duties by the Secretary of State.

Our views as to the fact of vacancy in the office have, in a measure, been stated, although, in our opinion, it is immaterial whether there is a technical vacancy or not. We believe it more reasonable to say that the office is to all practical intents and purposes occupied by the officer upon whom the law has imposed its powers and duties, and that at least he is Acting Governor, and as such comes within the meaning and operation of the law prescribing a salary for the office of Governor. We cannot accept the proposition that the very high and responsible duties of the executive office have been given such a movable character by the law as to be attached in certain contingencies first to the office of Secretary of State, then possibly in succession to the offices of President of the Senate, Speaker of the House of Representatives, Auditor, and State Treasurer. In our judgment, the conclusion more consonant with reason and the rules governing the interpretation of statutes is that the duties and powers remain as incident and attached to the office of Governor continually, and that when exercised and performed by either of the officers authorized by law, in case the regular incumbent has ceased to act, they are exercised and performed as the powers and duties of the office of Governor. Indeed, the language of the law clearly so implies, when it requires the designated officer to act as Governor. He is required to perform all the service that constitutes the consideration for the salary provided by law. In the absence of statute expressly or by necessary implication forbidding the relator from receiving the compensation attached to both offices, we see no reason why the same should not be paid to him upon his proper and lawful demand. There is nothing inequitable in this conclusion. The state has duly appropriated the money to pay the salary, and the money is in the treasury. The services for which the salary is provided are being performed, and have been performed for the period covered by the claim of the relator here in question. He is required to give attention to the duties of two state offices. His responsibilities are largely increased, and every principle of justice requires that he be compensated. This is recognized in many of the states by an express provision of either Constitution or statute allowing the one upon whom the duties of Governor have devolved to be paid the compensation attached by law to the office. The demurrer will be overruled.

TEMPLE, J.

This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the governor to include in his proclamation *169 for the coming election a call to fill the office of lieutenant governor for the unexpired term of Spencer G. Millard, deceased. Respondent has filled the vacancy caused by the death of the lieutenant governor by the appointment of William T. Jeter, who has duly qualified.

In this case both parties concede—as, indeed, the exigencies of each require him to do—that the vacancy caused by the death of Millard was one which the governor had the power to fill. If there can be question of the power of the governor in this respect, therefore, we have not considered it. And no question has been made, nor have we considered, whether a mandate will issue to compel the chief executive to perform an act which, if it be his duty to perform, is enjoined upon him by the constitution as the executive, nor whether he can be compelled to perform any public duty at the instance of one who has no vested right to have it performed, nor any interest special to himself, or other than that which every citizen has in its performance; or, rather, we have not considered whether to issue the mandate asked for would trench upon the province of the executive.

The constitution provides (section 3, art. 4) that members of the assembly shall be elected in 1880 and biennially thereafter. Section 2, art. 5, provides that the governor shall be elected 'at the time and places of voting for members of assembly, and shall hold his office for four years from and after the first day of January subsequent to his election.' Section 15, art. 5, is as follows: 'A lieutenant-governor shall be elected at the same time and places, and in the same manner, as the governor; and his term of office and his qualifications of eligibility shall also be the same. He shall be president of the senate, but shall have only a casting vote therein. If, during a vacancy of the office of governor, the lieutenant-governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or become incapable of performing the duties of his office, or be absent from the state, the president pro *170 tempore of the senate shall act as governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease. The lieutenant-governor shall be disqualified from holding any other office, except as specially provided in this constitution, during the term for which he shall have been elected.' And in the following section it is provided that in case of the death, resignation, impeachment, absence from the state, or inability to act of the governor, 'the powers and duties of his office shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease.' It will be seen that in case of a vacancy in the office of governor the vacancy is not to be filled, but the powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor, who does not cease to be lieutenant governor. Under such circumstances it would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor the latter thereby becomes governor, and can appoint a lieutenant governor. Nor do I think it could be contended that when the president pro tempore of the senate acts as governor he could appoint a person to fill the vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. If he could, he would then appoint himself out of office, and it would be his duty to do so.

But it is conceded by the parties that upon the death of the lieutenant governor the governor may fill the vacancy by appointment. This is unmistakably within the language of section 8, art. 5, which reads as follows: 'When any office shall from any cause become vacant, and no mode is provided by the constitution and law for filling such vacancy, the governor shall have the power to fill such vacancy by granting a commission, which shall expire at the end of the next legislature or at the next election by the people.' An office has become vacant, and there is no other mode provided by the constitution or laws to fill it. 'The next election by the people' does not mean the *171 next general election or the next election held by the people, but it must mean that the appointee shall hold until some one has been elected to fill that office. But there is nothing in this provision which indicates when this election shall be held, but only that until some one has been elected to fill the vacancy the appointee shall hold. This section does not direct that such election shall be at the next general election. It provides simply for filling vacancies by appointment, and that such appointees shall hold until the office is filled in the manner provided by law; but does not itself provide for such election or direct when it shall be. If, however, the phrase 'the next election by **1061 the people' is equivalent to the phrase 'the next election,' and we assume that it was intended thereby to indicate the election at which such vacancy would be filled, we would feel compelled to hold that the next election is that which the constitution has provided for filling that particular office; that is, the next gubernatorial election. Many authorities may be cited in support of this proposition. In Matthews v. Shawnee Co., 34 Kan. 606, 9 Pac. 765, the governor appointed a judge to fill a vacancy. The constitution provided for an appointment to fill the vacancy until the next regular election. Upon a contest the supreme court said: 'The words 'regular election' do not necessarily mean general election, or township election, or any state, county, city, or district election. They simply mean the regular election prescribed by law for the election of the particular officer to be elected.' State v. Philips, 30 Fla. 579, 11 South. 925, involved a municipal office. The court said: 'When it is declared that the city council shall fill vacancies until the next regular election, it means until the next regular election provided by the charter for electing the officer whose term has become vacant.' To the same effect are State v. Gardner, 3 S. D. 553, 54 N. W. 606; Sawyer v. Haydon, 1 Nev. 75; *172 People v. Wilson, 72 N. C. 155; State v. Cobb, 2 Kan. 32; and People v. Mathewson, 47 Cal. 442. The effect of these decisions is that the term 'next election' means the next election for a lieutenant governor, and that the language used in section 8 cannot be understood as itself directing that at the next succeeding general election the vacancy shall be filled.

Is an election at that time authorized by any law? The constitution contains no provision for holding an election for filling this vacancy, and is silent as to whether the appointee shall hold for the residue of the term. And this is more noticeable because as to some other officers there are explicit directions upon the subject. In regard to justices of this court and judges of the superior court, it is expressly provided that in case of a vacancy the appointee shall hold until the election and qualification of a successor, 'Which election shall take place at the next general election.' Sections 3, 5, art. 6. In regard to railroad commissioners, the provision is that the appointee shall hold office for the residue of the unexpired term. The constitution is equally silent in regard to filling vacancies in other executive offices. A similar state of things existed under the constitution of 1849, and the legislature passed a law for filling such vacancies ('An act concerning offices,' April 28, 1851; St. 1851, p. 415). This act did not provide for the election of a lieutenant governor. Like the governor, he was required, in case of resignation, to resign to the legislature if that body was in session; if not in session, to the secretary of state. Such is also the requirement of the present code. Pol. Code, § 995. Like the old statute, the present code contains no provision in regard to an election to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. As to other state officers, the provision is that they shall hold for the balance of the unexpired term. There has never been in the laws a provision for an election to fill a vacancy occasioned by the death or *173 resignation of a lieutenant governor. Perhaps it was not supposed that such vacancy would ever be filled, even by appointment. At all events, there is no law, either constitutional or statutory, for such an election. In such case there can be no election. People v. Weller, 11 Cal. 49; People v. Mathewson, 47 Cal. 442; Kenfield v. Irwin, 52 Cal. 164. In Sawyer v. Haydon, 1 Nev. 75, it was said: 'We think no court or judge has gone so far as to hold that the people might hold an election or vote for any particular officer at a general election, unless some special provision was made for electing such officer for the particular term for which he is seeking to be elected, either in the constitution or some statutory enactment.' This was also said in People v. Mathewson, 47 Cal. 442. The efficacy of an election depends upon the law in pursuance of which it is held, and the fact that an office is elective does not of itself, without some law authorizing and regulating the election, render valid any attempted election. The writ is therefore denied.

GAROUTTE, J.

I concur in the judgment. The constitution provides that the powers and duties of the office of governor, in case of vacancy, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease. The constitution further provides that in case of a vacancy in both the office of governor and lieutenant governor the president pro tempore of the senate shall act as governor until the vacancy be filled. The constitution does not provide that the president pro tempore of the senate shall perform the duties of the office of lieutenant governor in case a vacancy exists in that office. And this omission to so provide is, to my mind, an unintentional lapse on the part of the framers of the constitution. Such appears to be plain when we consider that there is an express *174 provision of that instrument casting upon the president pro tempore of the senate authority to perform the duties of the office of governor if there be no lieutenant governor, taken in connection with the many other provisions of that instrument which all point to that conclusion. But no authority is found in the constitution vesting the president pro tempore of the senate with the duties of the lieutenant governor when a vacancy occurs in that office, and hence any such question is foreclosed.

The foregoing conditions being present, a vacancy **1062 occurred in the office of lieutenant governor upon the death of the incumbent, and the governor had the power to fill such vacancy by virtue of section 8, art. 5, of the constitution. That section reads as follows: 'When any office shall from any cause become vacant, and no mode is provided by the constitution and law for filling such vacancy, the governor shall have the power to fill such vacancy by granting a commission, which shall expire at the end of the next legislature or at the next election by the people.' It follows that the result of this litigation in part rests upon the true construction of the words 'the next election by the people.' It is conceded by the present incumbent of the office that the next election by the people since his appointment will be the coming presidential election to be held in November, but he claims the words should be construed to mean 'the next election by the people at which a lieutenant governor is regularly to be elected.' If the framers of an instrument of the dignity and importance of a state constitution had intended such to be the law, it was easy for them to have said so, and they should have so declared in terms. And, in the absence of a declaration of that kind, I do not consider myself authorized to so interpret a phrase of that instrument; certainly not unless the intent of its authors to that effect is plainly apparent; and we look in vain for such intent. Upon a question of statutory construction it was said in Blythe v. Ayres, 96 Cal. 582, 31 Pac. 924: 'We are not here to construct *175 a statute, but to construe a statute. We can neither interpolate nor eliminate, and we are bound to assume that the legislature enacted the law as it now stands with a due comprehension of the meaning of words, and of the rules of statutory construction, and that they incorporated into the act all that was intended, and that they intended that effect should be given to all that was found therein.' And that principle of construction applies with full force here. If any layman of ordinary intelligence, be he merchant, doctor, or mechanic, should have the question submitted to him as to the proper signification of the words here under consideration, to wit, the officer's commission shall expire 'at the next election by the people,' he would say without hesitation that the commission expired at the next general election. Such is the fair and legitimate construction of the language. There are some decisions of courts of other states which in a measure look in an opposite direction from the views here expressed. But these decisions are largely based upon provisions of law not identical with the one here involved. Many of those provisions use the term 'regular election,' and in such cases stress by the court is laid upon the word 'regular' as a most material element in arriving at the true construction of the language. Notwithstanding the foregoing construction of the constitutional provision is favorable to the petitioner, still the relief he asks must be denied. For, though the appointee's commission expire at 'the next election by the people,' still, in the absence of some law authorizing the election of a lieutenant governor at that time, no election can be held, and I find no such law. A provision of constitution or statute declaring a certain day upon which the commission of an officer shall expire is in no sense a provision that an election shall be held upon that day to fill the office. Under these conditions the present appointee of the governor will hold until his successor is elected and qualified, regardless of the day *176 upon which his commission may expire; and his successor can only be elected at a time fixed by law, which time will be at the regular state election in the year 1898.

Oct. 29, 1996.

Following resignation of governor and succession of lieutenant governor to office of governor, plaintiff brought action challenging constitutionality of statute governing special elections to fill vacancy in office of lieutenant governor. Candidate in special election intervened. The Pulaski County Chancery Court, Collins Kilgore, Chancellor, rejected challenge, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, Jesson, C.J., held that: (1) statute did not violate constitutional provisions for filling vacancy in office of governor, and (2) statute did not conflict with constitutional provision requiring that governor and lieutenant governor be elected at same time in same election.

Affirmed.

JESSON, Chief Justice.

On July 15, 1996, Jim Guy Tucker resigned as Governor of the State of Arkansas. Lieutenant Governor Mike Huckabee became Governor, pursuant to Ark. Const., amend. 6, § 4. His succession left a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor. On July 30, 1996, pursuant to Ark.Code Ann. § 7-7-105 (Repl.1993), Governor Huckabee issued a proclamation calling for a special election to fill the vacancy. The election was called for November 5, 1996, the date already scheduled for the 1996 general election.

On August 26, 1996, the appellant filed a complaint in Pulaski County Chancery Court challenging the constitutionality of Ark.Code Ann. § 7-7-105. On September 9, 1996, he filed an amended complaint, seeking a declaration **322 that the statute was in conflict with the Arkansas Constitution and maintaining that any funds spent on the special election would constitute an illegal exaction. He further prayed that the Secretary of State be enjoined from certifying any candidate for Lieutenant Governor on the November 5 election ballot. One of those candidates is Charlie Cole Chaffin, the intervenor in this case. The chancellor rejected the appellant's challenge and ruled that § 7-7-105 does not conflict with the Arkansas Constitution. We agree and affirm.<sup>1</sup>

[1] The appellant contends that § 7-7-105 offends the "orderly succession in the executive branch" provided for in Ark. Const., art. 6, § 14, and Ark. Const., amend. 6, § 5. Article 6, § 14, is an original provision of our 1874 constitution. It required a special election to fill a vacancy in the office of Governor when the office was vacated with more than twelve months remaining in the Governor's term. No provision was made in the 1874 constitution for the office of Lieutenant Governor. Conflicting interpretations of *471 Section 14 and other sections of Article 6 resulted in a gubernatorial succession crisis in the early part of this century. As a result, Amendment 6 was adopted by a vote of the people in 1914. Amendment 6 created the office of Lieutenant Governor and took up the matter of gubernatorial succession. See Bryant v. English, 311 Ark. 187, 843 S.W.2d 308 (1992), for a detailed rendition of the history of these constitutional provisions.

Section 5 of Amendment 6 is entitled "Qualifications and Duties of Lieutenant Governor—Succession to the Governorship." It reads as follows:

The Lieutenant Governor shall possess the same qualifications of eligibility for the office as the Governor. He shall be President of the Senate, but shall have only a casting vote therein in case of a tie vote. If during a vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or become incapable of performing the duties of his office or be absent from the State, the President of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease; and if the President of the Senate for any of the above causes shall become incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, the Speaker of the Assembly shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease.

The appellant argues that § 5 requires any vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor to be filled by succession, not by election. The appellant misunderstands the purpose and spirit of § 5. It addresses the subject of gubernatorial succession. It answers the question, "In case of a vacancy in the office of Governor, who shall be Governor?" The subject of succession to the office of Lieutenant Governor is not addressed.

[2] Acts of the General Assembly are presumed to be constitutional and will only be struck down where there is a clear incompatibility between the act and the state constitution. Clinton v. Clinton, 305 Ark. 585, 810 S.W.2d 923 (1991). Neither art. 6, § 14, nor amend. 6, § 5, is concerned with filling vacancies in the office of Lieutenant Governor. Therefore, § 7-7-105 does not conflict with those provisions.

The only reference in the Arkansas Constitution to vacancies in the office of Lieutenant Governor is contained in Amendment *472 29. That amendment provides for gubernatorial appointment to fill vacancies in most elected offices. However, it excepts from the Governor's appointment power vacancies in the offices of Lieutenant Governor, member of the General Assembly, and United States Congressional Representative. These are the very offices that are to be filled by special election under § 7-7-105. Thus, the Arkansas Constitution and § 7-7-105 exist in harmony.

[3] The appellant also makes a rather offhand argument that § 7-7-105 is incompatible with § 3 of Amendment 6. He claims that the statute "attempts to nullify the provisions of Amendment 6, § 3, that require **323 the Governor and Lieutenant Governor be elected at the same time in the same election." The appellant probably means to refer to § 2 of Amendment 6, which provides that the Lieutenant Governor "shall be chosen at the same time and for the same term" as the Governor. Section 2 addresses the ordinary situation in which an election is held at the end of the current office-holder's term. It does not contemplate the situation in which a vacancy in office must be filled. Thus, § 7-7-105 and § 2 do not conflict.

In light of our holding, the appellant's request for attorney fees pursuant to Ark.Code Ann. § 26-35-902 (Supp.1995) need not be addressed.

GLAZE, Justice, dissents.

The simple answer to this election case is that the chancery court, deciding it below, did not have subject-matter jurisdiction. Therefore, this appeal should be dismissed. Someday in the not-too-distant future, this court will be forced to resolve the subject-matter-jurisdiction issues its more recent cases (including this case) have caused the bench and bar, when determining where to file election actions—in equity or at law.

First, I emphasize that this is an election case, not an illegal exaction one, and that this court has clearly held that the chancery court has no jurisdiction in matters pertaining to elections. State v. Craighead County Bd. of Election

Comm'rs, 300 Ark. 405, 779 S.W.2d 169 (1989); see also Curry v. Dawson, 238 Ark. 310, 379 S.W.2d 287 (1964). Moreover, in Foster v. Jefferson County Quorum Ct., 321 Ark. 105, 901 S.W.2d 809 (1995), this court, quoting from *Jackson v. *473 Munson*, 288 Ark. 57, 701 S.W.2d 378 (1986), stated the following:

While it is true we have been liberal in permitting illegal exaction suits, we have held that an illegal exaction complaint was not proper where exclusive jurisdiction of the underlying matter was conferred on the circuit rather than the chancery court. (Emphasis added.)

In the present case, the appellant's underlying action seeks declaratory relief holding the Governor's proclamation, calling a special election to fill the existing vacancy in the Office of Lieutenant Governor, to be unconstitutional. Assuming entitlement to such relief, his complaint requests that the Secretary of State be enjoined from certifying the votes cast in the candidates' race for that office.

In Catlett v. Republican Party of Ark., 242 Ark. 283, 413 S.W.2d 651 (1967), this court clearly held that cases like the one before us must be filed in and decided by a court of law. Catlett has never been overruled. The Catlett court clearly enunciated the rule as follows:

[C]ourts of equity have no authority or jurisdiction to interpose for the protection of rights which are merely political, and where no civil or property right is involved. In all such cases, the remedy, if any, must be sought in a court of law. The extraordinary jurisdiction of courts of chancery can not, therefore, be invoked to protect the right of a citizen to vote or to be voted for at an election, or his right to be a candidate for or to be elected to any office. Nor can it be invoked for the purpose of restraining the holding of an election, or of directing or controlling the mode in which, or of determining the rules of law in pursuance of which, an election shall be held. (Emphasis added.)

Here, appellant's suit is an attempt to restrain the holding and certifying of the election results in the Lieutenant Governor's race. As is clearly explained in Catlett, chancery court has no authority to restrain the holding of an election or control the conduct of an election. Consequently, the chancellor should have dismissed the appellant's complaint.

The appellant was well aware of his jurisdiction problem below after appellees filed a motion to dismiss appellant's complaint for want of equity jurisdiction. Consequently, he added language to his complaint, alleging the Secretary of State's certification of election *474 results would be an ultra vires act and **324 therefore result in an illegal exaction of state funds. In adding this language, appellant seems to rely on our recent case of Priest v. Polk, 322 Ark. 673, 912 S.W.2d 902 (1995), a plurality decision, where the court said that the question of subject-matter jurisdiction is determined by the "characterization" of the case.

Appellant's argument simply ignores our Foster decision, which holds that an illegal exaction complaint is not proper where exclusive jurisdiction of the underlying matter is conferred in circuit court. It is important to note that, in State v. Craighead County Bd. of Election Comm'rs, 300 Ark. 405, 779 S.W.2d 169, this court not only emphasized Arkansas's case law establishing chancery court has no jurisdiction in election matters, but also this court sanctioned mandamus and declaratory relief as the proper methods of enforcing our state's election laws. Mandamus, of course, lies only in circuit court. Accordingly, appellant here should have filed his action in circuit court, asked that court to declare Arkansas's election law, Ark.Code Ann. § 7-7-105 (Repl.1995), unconstitutional, and requested the Secretary of State be mandated to remove the Lieutenant Governor's race from the ballot or not certify the votes cast in that race.

In sum, our case law simply does not permit a plaintiff (appellant here) to "characterize" (or re-characterize, if you will) his underlying action to be an illegal exaction action when the core issue is enforcement of Arkansas's election laws, namely, whether § 7-7-105 is constitutional and, therefore, provides the people with the political right to vote for a Lieutenant Governor at a special election.

In a concurring opinion in Polk, I voiced my concern that subject-matter jurisdiction questions would continue to arise in the filing of these election statutory and constitutional matters unless this court clarifies for the bench and bar what is expected of them. In this regard, the court in my view should follow the clear dictates and principles set out in the Curry, Foster, Craighead County, and Catlett cases. The majority decision today simply ignores these cases.

I would dismiss this case for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction.

v.

HELLER, Sheriff.

Jan. 4, 1899.

*105 1. The legality of the proceedings at the trial of a prisoner convicted of a crime by a court of competent jurisdiction cannot be challenged or reviewed by habeas corpus.

2. On a writ of certiorari allowed with the writ of habeas corpus to bring up a warrant for the execution of the prisoner, purporting to be issued by the executive department of the state government under authority of the act of April 16, 1846, the court will adjudge whether such warrant is valid.

3. When the governor of the state resigns, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office devolve, under the constitution, upon the president of the senate, but he does not thereby become the governor of the state in the constitutional sense. The president of the senate retains his office of senator, and as president of the senate he exercises the powers and performs the duties of the executive department.

4. When he resigns his office as senator, he ceases to be president of the senate, and thereupon the powers, duties, and emoluments of the executive office devolve in like manner upon the speaker of the house of assembly.

5. The granting of a reprieve and the fixing of a day for the execution of a convicted criminal is by the common law a judicial power, and cannot be exercised by the governor, or person administering the government, except in so far as it is expressly permitted by the constitution.

6. The constitution bestows upon the executive department the power to reprieve, but limits the exercise of that power to a period of 90 days after conviction, which means 90 days after sentence in the court below. As an incident to this granted power, the executive department may direct the execution to be proceeded with within the 90 days, and in that event the execution takes place not by force of the executive warrant, but in virtue of the judgment of the court.

7. After the lapse of the 90 days, the power of the executive department in this respect ceases.

*106 VAN SYCKEL, J.

Edward Clifford was convicted of murder in the first degree in the court of oyer and terminer of the county of Hudson, and sentenced by the said court on the 15th day of September, 1896. The proceedings at the trial were subsequently taken to the court of errors and appeals for review, and by the judgment of that court the judgment of the oyer and terminer was in all respects affirmed. Thereupon the court of oyer and terminer ordered the said Clifford to be executed on the 16th day of February, 1898. On the 14th day of February, 1898, Foster M. Voorhees, president of the senate of New Jersey, under his hand and the great seal of the state of New Jersey, directed the sheriff of the county of Hudson to suspend the execution of said death sentence until the 16th day of March, 1898. Further proceedings were taken on behalf of Clifford in the federal courts, by which the execution of sentence was stayed until November 25, 1898, when David O. Watkins, speaker of the house of assembly of New Jersey, under his hand and the great seal of the state, suspended the execution of said sentence until the 6th day of January, 1899, and ordered the said Clifford to be executed on that day. Clifford is now before this court on habeas corpus, and at his instance a writ of certiorari was allowed to bring before the court the proceedings upon which the state claims to rest the order of David O. Watkins, the validity of which is controverted in this case.

Our habeas corpus act provides that the following, among other, persons mentioned shall not be entitled to prosecute such writ: "Persons committed or detained by virtue of the final judgment or decree of any competent tribunal of civil or criminal jurisdiction or by virtue of any execution issued upon such judgment or decree, unless such judgment or decree be founded upon contract." It is clear, therefore, that the legality of the proceedings at the trial of Clifford cannot be challenged or reviewed by writ *107 of habeas corpus; and, if the case before us presented no other question, it would be the duty of the court to dismiss the writ as improvidently granted. But the return to the certiorari, and the facts agreed upon, present a question of great importance, in which the validity of the judgment of our courts is in no wise involved. That question is whether David O. Watkins had the power to order the execution of Clifford. If the warrant issued by him was unauthorized, **156 it is the province and the duty of this court to intervene for the purpose of preventing an unlawful execution of the person condemned.

The admitted facts controlling this controversy are as follows: On the 31st day of January, 1898, John W. Griggs, then governor of New Jersey, filed in the office of the secretary of state his resignation as governor, to take effect at the termination of that day. Foster M. Voorhees was then president of the senate of New Jersey, being a senator from the county of Union. He thereupon took the oath, diligently, faithfully, and to the best of his knowledge to administer the government of the state in conformity with the powers delegated to him; which oath was filed in the office of the secretary of state on the 1st of February, 1898. On the 18th of October, 1898, Foster M. Voorhees filed in the office of the secretary of state a paper writing, of which the following is a copy: "State of New Jersey, Executive Department. To the Secretary of State, and to the Governor or Person Administering the Government: I hereby resign my commission as a member of the senate from the county of Union. Foster M. Voorhees." David O. Watkins was then a member of the general assembly of the state of New Jersey from Gloucester county, and speaker of the house of assembly. *108 On the 18th day of October, 1898, he filed in the office of the secretary of state an oath that he would diligently, faithfully, and to the best of his knowledge, administer the government of the state in conformity with the powers delegated to him. It is insisted on behalf of the prosecutor that when Foster M. Voorhees filed in the office of the secretary of state the oath before mentioned, he ceased to be a member of the senate, and became governor of the state for the term fixed by the constitution until another governor should be elected; that his resignation of his seat in the senate was unnecessary, and could not in any wise affect the tenure of his office as governor. To support this contention the well-settled rule laid down by Chief Justice Kirkpatrick in State v. Parkhurst, 9 N. J. Law, 446, is relied upon: "That, if a person holding an office be appointed to and accept another office incompatible therewith, such acceptance of the second is a virtual surrender of and vacates the first." The argument is that Foster M. Voorhees became governor of New Jersey, and ceased thereby to be senator without resigning the latter office; that his subsequent resignation of the senatorship did not operate as a resignation of his office as governor, or in any wise affect his right to hold said office, or his duty to execute its prescribed functions; that under the constitution the office of governor could become again vacant only by the death, resignation, or removal of Foster M. Voorhees, and, as neither of those contingencies has occurred, there was no vacancy in the office of governor by which David O. Watkins could succeed to that office.

Assuming the premises of the prosecutor to be entirely sound, it seems to result, not only that the resignation of the senatorship by Foster M. Voorhees did not vacate the office of governor, but that the resignation of the senatorship was equivalent to a declaration that he resigned that office, and elected to retain the office of governor, which he did not resign. It is well settled, both in England and in this country, that title to an office cannot be challenged on habeas corpus, or in *109 any other collateral proceeding. Where the official is in possession of the office, and is executing its powers under color of title, he will be regarded at least as a de facto officer, and as to the public his official acts will be efficacious. That rule, so absolutely essential to the stability of government and the protection of the governed, should be recognized in its full force. The case sub judice is peculiar and novel. The situation is this: If Foster M. Voorhees, as president of the senate, was transferred by force of the constitutional provision to the office of governor, thereby vacating his office of senator, he is still governor of New Jersey, in full possession of the powers of the office, and under obligation to perform its duties; and if he is governor de jure, in possession of the office, David O. Watkins cannot at the same time be governor de facto, and the warrant signed by him is without the slightest legal value. All that appears in the case before us is that Gov. Griggs resigned; that Foster M. Voorhees, president of the senate, took the oath before stated; that he subsequently resigned his office of senator; that David O. Watkins is speaker of the assembly, and that he took the oath set forth. No act appears on his part to show that he is governor de facto except the oath and the signing of the death warrant. If Foster M. Voorhees was governor, and his resignation of the senatorship was not a vacation of his office as governor, he must still be governor, nothing appearing before us except his resignation as senator to show that he is not still acting and claiming to act as governor. We are constrained, therefore, to resort to an interpretation of the provisions of our state constitution touching this subject, to determine whether David O. Watkins had the right, either de jure or de facto, to do the act which has given rise to this litigation.

The clause of the constitution which provides for the vacancy in the office of governor is as follows: "In case of the death, resignation or removal from office of the governor, *110 the powers, duties and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate, and in case of his death, resignation or removal, then upon the speaker of the house of assembly, for the time being, until another governor shall be elected, and qualified; but in such case another governor shall be chosen at the next election for members of the legislature, unless such death, resignation or removal shall occur within thirty days immediately preceding such next election, in **157 which case a governor shall be chosen at the second succeeding election for members of the legislature. When a vacancy happens, during the recess of the legislature, in any office which is to be filled by the governor and senate or by the legislature in joint meeting, the governor shall fill such vacancy and the commission shall expire at the end of the next session of the legislature unless a successor shall be sooner appointed; when a vacancy happens in the office of clerk or surrogate of any county, the governor shall fill such vacancy, and the commission shall expire when a successor is elected and qualified." Article 5, cl. 12. In construing this clause of the constitution it must be borne in mind that it was carefully drawn by learned jurists, who knew how to express with exactness and precision the purpose they had in view. The provision is that, in case of the resignation of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate, and not that the president of the senate shall thereby become governor, and hold the title and the office until another governor is elected. If the framers of the fundamental law had intended to transfer the president of the senate to the executive chair, and thereby to vacate his office of senator, it is reasonable to believe that they would have said so in no uncertain language. The language used is not ambiguous. It declares that the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve on the president of the senate; it does not confer upon him the title of the office. The president of the senate exercises the powers of the *111 governor; the president of the senate performs the duties of the governor; the president of the senate receives the emoluments of that office. He is still president of the senate, with the added duties required of the chief executive of the state imposed upon him. There is no language in the constitution from which it can reasonably be inferred that his office of president of the senate was to be vacated. He retains his office of senator; and as president of the senate, and not as governor, he exercises the added powers and performs the superimposed duties. That such is not only the ordinary acceptation and the reasonable interpretation of the language employed, but also the intention of those who framed this clause, is evinced in other parts of the organic law. In clauses 9 and 10 of article 5 and clauses 2 and 3 of article 8 this language appears: "The governor or person administering the government." Why is this language so sedulously used throughout the constitution? If the president of the senate becomes governor, and ceases to be senator, he is fitly and accurately described in all those clauses by the word "governor," and therefore the words "person administering the government" are not only unnecessary and superfluous, but misdescriptive. The words "person administering the government" were inserted advisedly to describe the president of the senate who might be called upon to administer the government, but who would not thereby become or be governor; and, in the absence of that language, would not be subject to the clauses referred to. Again, article 3 of the constitution provides as follows: "The powers of the government shall be divided into three distinct departments, the legislative, executive and judicial; and no person or persons belonging to or constituting one of these departments, shall exercise any of the powers properly belonging to either of the others, except as herein expressly provided." *112 What is the significance of the words in this clause, "except as herein expressly provided"? What powers belonging to one department of government were there which it was expressly provided in the constitution might be exercised by one of the other departments? The framers of this article said by this exception, in unmistakable language, there are some powers belonging to one department of the government which it is expressly provided in this constitution shall be exercised by a person or persons belonging to one of the other departments. In the constitution we find such a provision, and it is the only one in the constitution except the power to reprieve. That provision is the one before referred to in clause 12 of article 5, which provides that the president of the senate, or, in case of his death, resignation, or removal, the speaker of the house, shall exercise the powers of the executive department of the government in the contingency therein specified. It must, therefore, have been the understanding and intention of the constitution makers that the executive powers to be exercised by a member of the legislative department were to be exercised in the capacity of a legislator, and that made the exception in article 3 a necessary provision.

But it is argued that the president of the senate is a judge of the court of impeachment, and may try himself if he is impeached, and pardon himself if convicted. This is clearly a misconception of the situation. As president of the senate he performs the duties of the chief executive, and any malfeasance in that respect is as much a violation of his duty as a senator and as president of the senate as malfeasance in his purely legislative action would be. If impeached, it would be as a senator, and not as governor. He would be tried by the senate, which is the trial court in all cases of impeachment. While there is no express provision in the constitution that a member of the senate shall not sit as a judge on his own trial if impeached, he is nevertheless incompetent, and would be excluded. The principle *113 that a man shall not be a judge in his own case is accepted universally by judicial tribunals. It is a rule of such fundamental character that it is deemed essential to the well-being of society, and underlies the organic law itself. If any doubt could arise upon this point, a reference to **158 section 3 of article 6 of the constitution should set it at rest. That section provides that all impeachments shall be tried by the senate, and that the members of the senate, when sitting for that purpose, shall each take an oath "truly and impartially to try and determine the charge in question according to evidence." It would be the sublimity of folly to attempt to bind a senator by such an oath when he was sitting in his own case. If the president of the senate was impeached and convicted, he would cease to be senator, and thereupon the powers of the executive would devolve upon the speaker of the house. The fact that the president of the senate exercises both legislative and executive functions in the view herein taken can have no significance in this discussion, when we advert to the fact that under the first state constitution the governor was not only the chief executive, but he was also president of the legislative council, with a casting vote, and presiding judge of the highest court in the state. The powers of government were more wisely distributed by the constitution of 1844, in which, by article 3, a member of one department could not exercise a power belonging to either of the others, except in the instances where the office of governor became vacant, and the power to reprieve was granted. If anything is needed to establish the correctness of this view, it is found in clause 13 of article 5, which reads as follows: "In case of the impeachment of the governor, his absence from the state or inability to discharge the duties of his office, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate; and in case of his death, resignation or removal, then upon the speaker *114 of the house of assembly for the time being, until the governor absent, or impeached, shall return or be acquitted, or until the disqualification or inability shall cease, or until a new governor be elected and qualified." In case of the absence of the governor from the state, precisely the same language is used as in clause 12 in relation to his resignation of the office, and it must necessarily receive the same interpretation. In case of his absence from the state, "the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate until the governor returns." Will it be seriously contended that, when the governor goes out of the state, the president of the senate becomes governor until the duly-elected governor returns, and thereby vacates and loses his office as senator? That such an interpretation of this language would be adopted could not have been within the contemplation of the able men who incorporated it in this clause relating to a matter of supreme importance. It is true construction, then, when the senate was composed of 10 members of one party and 11 of the other, the governor of the state, by the simple device of passing into an adjoining state, could have vacated the seat of one senator, and thus have deprived the opposing party of a majority in that branch of the legislature. In my judgment, the framers of the constitution meant simply what they said,—that, in case the governor resigned, the president of the senate, as such, should have the powers and perform the duties of the office. Foster M. Voorhees did not become governor upon the resignation of Gov. Griggs. He still continued to be a senator, and president of the senate. He could not resign the office of governor, which he never held. When he resigned and vacated the office of senator, he ceased to be president of the senate, and could no longer exercise the functions pertaining to the executive department. Therefore, upon his resignation as senator, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office devolved upon David O. Watkins, the speaker of the house of assembly. *115 He is de jure the speaker of the house, and of right, as such speaker, exercises the executive powers. He is not governor, either de jure or de facto, in the constitutional sense of that term. The act of 1898 cannot, in any respect, affect this controversy.

The question, therefore, remains to be considered whether the issuing of the warrant for the execution of Clifford was a valid exercise by David O. Watkins of the powers committed to him as speaker of the house of assembly? By the common law, where the judgment was pronounced in the oyer and terminer, a precept for execution was issued to the sheriff in the name and under the hands and seals of the three commissioners before whom judgment was given; but the precepts by justices of the jail delivery need not have been otherwise than by a simple award upon the roll. In later times there was no more done, but, after judgment was entered, the judges subscribed a calendar in paper directing the several judgments of deliverance to the parties acquitted, or the execution of the parties condemned, of which the sheriff was required to take notice openly in court. 2 Hale, P. C. p. 409. It is also quite clear that by the common law the time and place of execution were not named in the sentence; it was left to the judgment and discretion of the sheriff. The execution of the prisoner was directed by the words "sus. per coll." written against his name in a calendar prepared for the purpose. Mr. Chitty says: "The practice of the present day at the assizes is that, when all the other public business of the court is terminated, the clerk makes out in writing four lists of prisoners in the separate columns containing their crimes, verdicts, and sentences, and a blank column, in which the judge writes his pleasure respecting those capitally convicted as to be executed, respited, or transported. If the sheriff receives no special order from the judge, he executes the judgment of the law in the usual manner, according to the directions of the calendar." 1 Chit. Cr. Law, 781. **159 *116 The only instance of a warrant from the crown was in the case of high treason, where a peer of the realm was tried before parliament. Where all the rest of the judgment save the beheading was pardoned, the execution was to be under the great seal. 3 Co. Just. p. 31; 2 Hale, P. C. pp. 409-412. In felonies we think it clear that the direction for the execution of the sentence was a judicial act, for these reasons: First, that the judgment of the court was a sufficient warrant; and, secondly, issues extraneous of those raised at the trial might be raised in suspension of the sentence, which required a judicial determination,—as, for instance, where the convict is a female, she may plead that she is quick with child; and, second, if an allegation be made that since the conviction the accused has become insane. In both of these cases, as well as others, there is to be a judicial investigation. 4 Bl. Comm. 395. At common law, reprieve might be granted either by the king, under his power to pardon, or by the court; and every court which had power to award execution had power to grant a reprieve. This reprieve was simply a suspension of the sentence. In Rex v. Harris, 1 Ld. Raym. 482, "counsel urged that in criminal causes, where execution is deferred, it cannot be awarded without bringing the prisoner to the bar, to which Holt, C. J., agreed, and he cited Knightly's Case, who was indicted for high treason, and, being arraigned at bar in the king's bench, confessed the indictment, and judgment of death was pronounced against him in Easter term, and execution was countermanded, so that Trinity term passed, and then in the long vacation they had designed to execute it, and upon that all the judges of England met to consider what could be done, and it was resolved by all that in regard a term had intervened without execution done it could not be awarded without bringing Knightly to the bar; and, per Holt, C. J., it would be the same thing if Trinity term had not passed, but only begun, so that Knightly was imprisoned *117 until Michaelmas term, and in the meantime he obtained a pardon." In Sir Walter Rawley's Case the question was whether a privy seal was sufficient for execution. It was resolved on a conference between all the judges that the prisoner ought to be brought to the court, and then demanded if he could say anything, etc., and that it was not a legal course that he should be commanded by a privy seal or great seal to be executed without being demanded what he hath to say, etc. Hut. 21. If the governor can intervene and have execution by virtue of his warrant, the prisoner will be deprived of the right of a judicial determination of matters which in law are subjects of judicial cognizance. If the order which shall carry the judgment of the court into effect is one within judicial control,—as we deem it to be,—then the several constitutional provisions are to be considered. By the constitution of 1776 the governor had no power to pardon or to grant reprieve. Whatever power there was in that respect was vested in the governor and council; that is the court of appeals.

Under the power to pardon at common law the power of the king to reprieve was included, and the power of reprieve was not vested in the governor, but in the governor and council. By the act of November 16, 1820, the governor, with the advice of his privy council, had power to suspend execution of the sentence of death until the rising of the next meeting of the governor and council. By the act of 1821, where such a reprieve was granted, and a pardon was not granted at the next meeting, it was made the duty of the governor and council to appoint a time for the execution of the criminal. Elmer's Dig. p. 118. By the constitution of 1844 the executive, with the concurrence of the chancellor and of the six judges of the court of appeals, or a major part of them, may grant pardons after conviction (article 5, cl. 10); and by article 5, cl. 9, the executive was *118 given power to grant reprieve to extend until the expiration of a time not exceeding 90 days after conviction. By the act of April 16, 1846, it is provided that, where a reprieve is granted by the governor, the governor shall issue his warrant to the sheriff of the proper county, commanding him to execute the sentence at such time as shall therein be appointed and expressed. Revision, p. 290, § 123. Power to reprieve is limited to a postponement of the execution for 90 days after the conviction; that is, after the sentence in the court below. By article 3 of the constitution of 1844, before set forth, the governor is prohibited from exercising any legislative or judicial power except as in said constitution is expressly provided. The express provision of the constitution on this subject, so far as concerns the executive, is that he shall have power to suspend the sentence of the court for a period not exceeding 90 days. The term "reprieve," as used both in the constitution and in the statute, is merely the postponement of the sentence for a time. It does not and cannot defeat the ultimate execution of the judgment of the court; it merely delays it. In the exercise of the power to reprieve for 90 days, which is the constitutional limit of that power, the governor has, as an incident to that power, the right to say that at the expiration of that time the sheriff shall no longer be stayed, but shall proceed to execute the judgment of the court. The reprieve, to be in proper form, should fix a day not exceeding 90 days from the sentence, when it shall expire, and direct the execution to be proceeded with at the expiration of that time. The execution takes place then, not by order of the governor, but in virtue of the judgment of the court. The governor simply says: "The prisoner is adjudged to be executed on a certain day. I direct the execution to be postponed until a future day specified, and then the execution is to be proceeded with."

*119 In Ex parte Flemming, 60 Miss. 910, **160 the court said: "The power to respite necessarily carries with it the power to fix another and later day for the execution of the death sentence, since the respite is nothing more than a suspension of the sentence until its own expiration. The subsequent execution takes place, not by virtue of a new sentence, but by reason of the expiration of the temporary suspension of the original sentence which was caused by the respite." Sterling v. Drake, 29 Ohio St. 457, is to the like effect. If there was a doubt in respect to the proper procedure in this respect, the long-continued practice of the executive department to make orders for the execution of sentences where there has been a reprieve will justify the construction that such orders may be issued, provided that the time for execution is not extended beyond the 90 days. That practice, commencing in 1853, has been pursued until the present time. The order certified into this court was made after the expiration of the 90 days, and is without any legal or constitutional warrant, and must be set aside. The order made in the case of Martin by Gov. Ludlow does not conflict with the views herein expressed. The reprieve and order were both within 90 days from the time of conviction, and, that time having elapsed, Martin was executed, not under the governor's warrant, but under an order made by the court of oyer and terminer. The traverse of the sheriff's return to the writ of habeas corpus must be stricken out, and the prisoner remanded. Let rules be entered accordingly.

Syllabus by the Court.

Article 6 of the Constitution defines the executive department of the state, and names certain officers who shall be vested with executive powers.

Section 2 of said article is as follows: "The supreme executive power" of the state "shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled 'the Governor * * * of Oklahoma.'"

Section 4 of said article contains the following provision, to wit: "The Governor, secretary of state, state auditor, and state treasurer shall not be eligible immediately to succeed themselves."

Sections 15 and 16 are in pari materia to the extent that they relate to and form part of, the entire purpose and scheme provided for in article 6, and to such extent only. They are independent of each other to the extent that they deal with, and provide for, the distinctly different conditions which each does provide for.

Said section 15 provides for such vacancies only as may be caused by the elected Governor's temporary absence from his office, and where, though absent from his office, he still retains his right to the office, still possesses his right, upon his return to assume the duties and exercise the powers of his office, and further provides that, during such vacancy, if the Lieutenant Governor becomes incapable of performing the duties of the office, then the President of the Senate may act as Governor, and, in case of his disability, the Speaker of the House may act as Governor during such vacancy, thus making complete and adequate provisions for taking care of the peculiar contingency and condition which it seeks to provide for, viz. vacancies occasioned by a temporary absence or inability of the Governor, where the Governor still has the right to return to his office and assume its duties, and to this extent section 15 is independent of section 16.

Const. art. 6, § 16, is as follows: "In case of impeachment of the Governor, or of his death, failure to qualify, resignation, removal from the state, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term or until the disability shall be removed."

Thus section 16 makes provision for a wholly different contingency and condition to that provided for in section 15. Section 16 provides for occasions where the individual rights of the elected Governor, as distinguished from the public rights, have been terminated, where his rights to return to the office and assume its powers have been foreclosed, and, in order to protect the right of the public to a continuation of the functions of government, in such case, section 16 provides that the office of Governor, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term, thus making complete and adequate provision for the particular contingency and condition *570 which it seeks to provide for, and to this extent section 16 is independent of section 15.

Const. art. 6, § 16, creates no vacancy, contemplates no vacancy, mentions no vacancy. It simply makes provision for an uninterrupted functioning of the office of chief executive with a duly commissioned officer at the head of such department thereby avoiding a vacancy.

When the elected Governor becomes impeached, as is the condition presented here, the office of Governor automatically devolves upon another. The person on whom such office devolves necessarily fills such office, exercising all the powers, discharging all the duties, and enjoying all the emoluments, compensation, honor and prestige which pertain to such office. The person who thus fills the office of chief magistrate is styled "the Governor of Oklahoma." He is the Governor for the simple reason that he governs. He governs officially for the reason that section 16 expressly vests him with authority to do so. Therefore he is the official Governor, and, being the official Governor, he is rendered ineligible to succeed himself by the inhibition contained in section 4, art. 6, of the Constitution.

HARRISON, J.

This proceeding was begun in the district court to test the eligibility of Mr. M. E. Trapp to succeed himself in the office of Governor.

Mr. Trapp had theretofore filed his application with the state election board as a candidate for nomination for Governor, and plaintiff sought to enjoin said board from certifying Mr. Trapp's name to the state board of affairs, and to enjoin the state board of affairs from having Mr. Trapp's name printed as a candidate for Governor on the official ballots to be voted at the forthcoming primary election to be held in August of this year.

The trial court denied the injunction, and plaintiff appealed. Plaintiff contends that, under the provisions of article 6 of the Constitution, Mr. Trapp is not eligible to the office of Governor. Defendants contend that he is eligible. The controversy arose out of the following facts, viz.:

At the November election, 1922, J. C. Walton was elected Governor, and defendant M. E. Trapp was elected Lieutenant Governor, and both went into office in January, 1923. In November, 1923, Mr. Walton was impeached and removed from office by the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment, and thereupon, by virtue of section 16, art. 6, of the Constitution, the office of Governor devolved upon the Lieutenant Governor, who was defendant Mr. M. E. Trapp, who has occupied the office of Governor, and exercised the powers of Governor, from the date of said impeachment until the present date, and is now occupying such office with the powers thus conferred by said section 16, and is seeking the nomination for Governor, and to ultimately succeed himself to the office of Governor at the general election in November of this year.

Plaintiff in error contends that under section 16, art. 6, of the Constitution, the office of Governor devolved upon the Lieutenant Governor immediately upon the impeachment of Governor Walton, and that thereupon Lieutenant Governor Trapp became the Governor in fact and in law, and that, having held and filled the office of Governor, and exercised the powers of Governor, and enjoyed the emoluments of the office of Governor from the time said office devolved upon him until the present time, he is not now eligible to succeed himself to the office of Governor at the ensuing term because of the inhibition contained in section 4, art. 6, of the Constitution, which is as follows:

“The Governor, secretary of state, state auditor, and state treasurer shall not be eligible immediately to succeed themselves.”

*571 On the other hand, it is contended by defendants in error that, upon the impeachment of Mr. Walton, there became a vacancy in the office of Governor, which has never been filled, but which has existed to the present time, and now exists, and that, though the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office of Governor devolved upon Lieutenant Governor Trapp upon the impeachment of Governor Walton, yet Mr. Trapp did not thereby become Governor in every sense of the word, but became merely Acting Governor during a vacancy, and that, not being Governor, but being merely “Acting Governor,” he is therefore not rendered ineligible by the inhibition contained in said section 4, art. 6.

Defendants in error further contend that, by harmonizing the provisions of sections 15 and 16 of said article 6, and construing the two sections together, it will be seen that no vacancy was caused in the office of Lieutenant Governor by the devolution of the office of Governor upon the Lieutenant Governor, and no vacancy now exists in the office of Lieutenant Governor, and that therefore Mr. Trapp is still Lieutenant Governor, but that a vacancy does exist in the office of Governor by reason of Governor

Walton's impeachment and removal from office, and that Mr. Trapp's being merely "Acting Governor" during such vacancy does not fill such vacancy, and therefore the inhibition in said section 4, art. 6, does not apply to him; that said inhibition applies only to an "elected Governor," and does not apply to one upon whom the "office of Governor" has devolved by virtue of said section 16.

From the foregoing may be seen the respective positions of the parties to this controversy, and that the main question to be determined is whether, under the existing conditions, the inhibitive provision in said section 4 applies to Mr. Trapp.

The questions involved have all been briefed and orally argued by the parties hereto, and, in addition to the briefs and oral arguments of parties in the instant case (case No. 17520, J. B. A. Robertson v. State Election Board and M. E. Trapp, 248 P. 583), which involves the identical questions herein presented, and seeks the very same relief herein sought, have also been briefed, and were orally argued and submitted with this case, the briefs in both cases to be used in each.

It is notable that, while numerous authorities have been cited in support of the contentions of the parties, yet no case has been cited where the identical conditions here presented, and the identical questions of law here involved, have ever been passed upon and decided by any court of last resort. We have been unable to find any case ourselves that is at all similar in all of its phases.

Though plaintiff in error is represented by able and diligent counsel, and defendant in error represented by a remarkable array of powerful lawyers, yet no case directly in point has been cited; that is, no case where any candidate has ever aspired to any office in the face of a similar constitutional inhibition against his immediately succeeding himself in office. Hence, in the absence of a controlling decision, it becomes necessary to search the provisions of our Constitution for a solution of the problem presented, guided in so doing by such light as the partially analogous cases cited may afford us. Article 4 of our Constitution distributes the powers of state government into three separate departments, viz. legislative, executive, and judicial.

[1] Article 6 defines the executive department, and names certain state officers who shall be vested with executive power. The provisions of said article 6 pertinent to the questions under consideration are:

Section 1, which says:

"The executive authority of the state shall be vested in a Governor, Lieutenant Governor, secretary of state, state auditor, Attorney General, state treasurer, superintendent of public instruction, state examiner and inspector, chief mine inspector, commissioner of labor, commissioner of charities and corrections, commissioner of insurance, and other officers provided by law and this Constitution, each of whom shall keep his office and public records, books, and papers at the seat of government, and shall perform such duties as may be designated in this Constitution or prescribed by law."

Section 2, which says:

"The supreme executive power shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled 'The Governor of the state of Oklahoma.'"

Section 4, which, after prescribing the length of term of office of certain state officers, including the Governor, says:

"The Governor, secretary of state, state auditor, and state treasurer shall not be eligible immediately to succeed themselves."

Section 15, which says:

"The Lieutenant Governor shall possess the same qualifications of eligibility for office as the Governor. He shall be President of the Senate. but shall have only a casting vote therein, and also in joint vote of both houses. If, during a vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die or be absent from the state, or become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the President, pro tempore, of the Senate, shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease; and if the President, pro tempore, of the Senate, for any of the above enumerated causes, shall become incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease. Further provisions for succession to the office of Governor shall be prescribed by law."

*572 Section 16, which says:

"In case of impeachment of the Governor, or of his death, failure to qualify, resignation, removal from the state, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term or until the disability shall be removed."

These are the sections of said article 6 which bear directly upon the question before us, viz. whether the defendant M. E. Trapp is eligible to succeed himself in the office of Governor. It is observed that in section 1, art. 6, supra, the Lieutenant Governor is named as one of the executive officers of the state, and is vested with executive authority. He is expressly made a part of the executive department. As to what his executive powers are, and when and how he may exercise them, will be seen in the further course of our analysis.

By section 2, supra, it will be seen that the supreme executive power is in reality vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled "the Governor * * * of Oklahoma." The real executive head, therefore, the office in whom the supreme executive power of the state is in intendment and in reality vested, is a chief magistrate. It is in the office of chief magistrate that the supreme executive power is lodged. The person who exercises the supreme executive power of the state does so by virtue of his being the chief magistrate.

The person on whom such office by the Constitution devolves necessarily fills such office, and exercises all powers lodged in such office, and is charged with all the duties pertaining to such office, and enjoys all the emoluments, compensations, honor, and prestige which belong to such office. The person who thus fills the office of chief magistrate is styled "the Governor of Oklahoma." He is the "Governor" for the simple reason that he governs. A Governor is one who governs. He governs officially for the reason that section 16 vests him with authority to do so, and requires him to do. Therefore he is the official Governor. The provision of section 4, supra, speaks for itself. It simply says in simple words:

"The Governor * * * shall not be eligible immediately to succeed himself."

Section 15, supra, prescribes that the Lieutenant Governor shall possess the same qualifications of eligibility for office as the Governor. It also imposes other than executive duties upon the Lieutenant Governor, viz.: He shall be president of the Senate, and shall have a casting vote therein, and a casting vote also in joint session of both houses. These duties are not imposed upon him, nor these powers conferred upon him, because he is one of the executive officers of the state, for they are not executive duties—they are legislative duties. The Constitution does not say why these duties are imposed upon the Lieutenant Governor. It may have prescribed such duties for him because, as a rule in states of the Union, similar duties and powers are generally given to the Lieutenant Governor, and because, under the federal Constitution, the Vice President performs similar duties, such being the general custom and general conception of the proper and harmonious method of running the entire machinery of our government. But, whatever may have been the reason for giving these powers and duties to the Lieutenant Governor, it is a fact that they are given him by our Constitution.

Said section 15 further provides that, if, during a vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall be impeached, or become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the President pro tempore of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled, and, if the President of the Senate, for any reason, becomes incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, then the Speaker of the House shall act as Governor until the disability ceases. Now let it be observed that the words "shall act as Governor" are not applied to the Lieutenant Governor, but are applied only to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House in cases where the Lieutenant Governor is under a disability. The words "shall act as Governor," or, as defendants in error put it, "the Acting Governor," are not anywhere in the Constitution applied to the Lieutenant Governor.

They are applied nowhere else, nor to any one else, except to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House, and to them only in cases where "the Lieutenant Governor becomes incapable of performing the duties of the office." This section nowhere denominates the Lieutenant Governor as a mere "Acting Governor," nor does it imply that he is regarded as only "an Acting Governor." It says, "or become incapable of performing the duties of the office," meaning the office of Governor. Then, in such case, the President of the Senate shall act as Governor, and, if he be disqualified, then the Speaker of the House shall act as Governor. The Lieutenant Governor is nowhere spoken of as "Acting Governor."

[3] But section 16, supra, provides that, in case of impeachment of the Governor, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor. This section does not say, "upon the Lieutenant Governor who shall act as Governor," but it says:

"The said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term or until the disability shall be removed."

It means that all the powers, duties, and responsibilities of the office of Governor shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, and *573 that all the emoluments, compensation, honor, dignity, and prestige of the said office shall be his. He is thereby made the chief magistrate in fact by the plain language of the Constitution. He is vested with all the powers, and charged with all the duties and responsibilities, and is given all compensations, which belong to the chief magistrate, in whom the supreme executive power of the state is vested. "The said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor."

But, it is insisted by defendants in error, persistently and repeatedly, that the two sections (15 and 16) must be construed together, and that, by construing them together, we find a vacancy in the office of Governor, a vacancy which, they claim, we are not at liberty to read out of the Constitution, a vacancy which is not filled by the Lieutenant Governor, as he is a mere "Acting Governor," a vacancy which the law makes no provision for filling except by an election. But, upon examination of the two sections, we find that, by either construing the two sections together, or by construing them separately, we nowhere find the Lieutenant Governor referred to as "Acting Governor." Furthermore, we nowhere find the words "shall act as Governor," except in cases where the Lieutenant Governor is, for some reason, rendered incapable of performing the duties of Governor. Then the President of the Senate or Speaker of the House shall "act as Governor."

[6] The word "devolve" is defined by lexicographers and in law dictionaries as meaning to roll or tumble down or descend; to be transmitted by course of events, or by operation of law; to transfer from one person to another; to pass by transmission to another; to pass from a person dying to a person living; to pass from the possessor to a successor. See Webster's Int. Dict. 1923; Funk & Wagnall's Stand. Dict.; Black's Law Dict.: 14 Cyc. 286; Words and Phrases, both First and Second Series; 18 C. J. 1034, and notes.

Hence, when Governor Walton became impeached, when the judgment of the high court of impeachment was pronounced, the official powers of Mr. Walton ended, his rights of tenure were ended, and the office of chief magistrate of the state, the office in which is lodged the supreme executive powers of the state, automatically, instantaneously with the ending, descended upon, passed down to, devolved upon, Mr. Trapp. There was no interim, no vacancy, no delay in the transmission, no interruption in, no suspension of, the functions of government—they passed right on.

devolved automatically upon Mr. Trapp. There was no vacancy created, none intended, none contemplated. It was never intended that, under the conditions provided for in section 16, there should be an interim during which the state would have no Governor, and the functions of government be suspended, but, on the contrary, it is wisely provided in said section 16, that, when by operation of law, or by reason of other circumstances, the authority of the elected Governor is terminated, his tenure ended, and his individual rights foreclosed, the said office (the Governor's office), with its compensation, shall devolve upon another, in order that the functions of government may continue without interruption, and the public rights be protected.

Section 16 deals with conditions wholly different and distinct in their very nature from the conditions dealt with in section 15, and to this extent the two sections are independent of each other. It is contended by defendants in error that the two sections must be construed together to give effect to either, and the case of Ex parte Crump, 10 Okl. Cr. 133, 135 P. 428, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1036, in which Judge Doyle, who delivered the opinion of the Criminal Court of Appeals, held that the two sections (15 and 16, article 6) are in pari materia.

[2] We concur with the learned judge in the view that said sections 15 and 16 are in pari materia to the extent that they relate to, and form a part of, the entire purpose of article 6 to the extent that they aid in providing for, and constitute, an element of the entire scheme intended to be provided for in article 6, but to such extent only. They are independent of each other to the extent that they deal with, and completely provide for, the distinctly different conditions which each does provide for.

Section 15 anticipates vacancies such as may be caused by the Governor's absence from the state, and other circumstances which may cause a temporary absence of the Governor from his office, and refers to such occasions as vacancies, but these are occasions where, though the Governor may be absent from his office, though he may be sick or out of the state, and temporarily away from his office, yet he still retains his right to the office. His right to the office has not been terminated, his term nor tenure has not been ended, by operation of law by judicial proceedings, nor by other circumstances. He still has, still possesses, his right to the office, and, upon his return, may assume the duties and exercise the powers of his office. Such instances the Constitution treats as vacancies, and provides for the filling of such vacancies, and that, when either the President of the Senate or Speaker of the House fills such vacancies, he merely acts as Governor during such vacancy.

[4] But section 16 deals with a wholly different *574 and distinct condition—a condition which was deemed essential to be separately dealt with, and one which past history has shown to have been necessary to be dealt with, viz. a condition where the chief magistrate, the one who is styled “the Governor of Oklahoma,” has been impeached and removed from office, where his rights have been foreclosed and his term and tenure ended. In such case there is no vacancy; therefore no need to speak of a vacancy. The office immediately devolves upon the Lieutenant Governor. Hence section 16 does not speak of a vacancy.

It is unnecessary to draw a distinction between a “temporary vacancy” and a “permanent vacancy.” It is unnecessary to say whether there is a distinction between the two terms. Section 15 unquestionably has reference to temporary vacancies, and to temporary vacancies only, and deals with, and provides for, temporary vacancies only. Nowhere does article 6 speak of a permanent vacancy. Section 16, in dealing with the conditions which it provides for, does not recognize a vacancy of any kind, but provides that the powers of government may continue right on; that the ship of state, as it were, may continue its course without interruption, and with a duly commissioned chief executive at the helm.

[5] Defendants in error say:

“Section 15 is the sole and only section of the Constitution which authorizes any one to exercise and perform the powers and duties of the office of Governor other than the elected Governor himself.”

This contention has no support from the Constitution. If it were true, then the Lieutenant Governor has no authority under any circumstances to exercise the powers and discharge the duties of Governor and draw a Governor's pay. For it must be clearly seen that section 15 does not in express words give to the Lieutenant Governor any such powers and privileges, but does expressly say that in certain cases the President of the Senate or, in case of his disability, the Speaker of the House may act as Governor, but it nowhere expressly says that the Lieutenant Governor, under any circumstances, may act as Governor. Hence, if section 15 is the only section which authorizes the Lieutenant Governor to act as Governor, and it be true, as defendants contend, that he has no authority except such as is expressly given him, then he has no authority, under any circumstances, to exercise the powers of Governor, for it is only by implication that section 15 authorizes him to exercise such powers. The following language in said section 15, to wit:

“If, during a vacancy of the office of Governor the Lieutenant Governor shall be impeached, * * * or become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the President, pro tempore, of the Senate, shall act as Governor; * * * and if the President, pro tempore, of the Senate, * * * shall become incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled, * * *”

—is the only language in section 15 which even implies that the Lieutenant Governor shall ever, at any time, exercise the powers of Governor, or even “act as Governor.” However, the above language does imply that, in case of a temporary absence of the Governor, that is, such a temporary absence as renders him incapable of discharging his duties, then the Lieutenant Governor may exercise a Governor’s powers and perform a Governor’s duties, unless, for some of the reasons mentioned, he is rendered incapable of doing so, but it is by implication only that he derives such authority from section 15. But, as heretofore pointed out, section 16 expressly says:

“In case of impeachment of the Governor * * * or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor.”

As to the contention of defendants in error that the inhibition in section 4, supra, applies to an elected Governor only, and does not apply to one on whom the office of Governor devolves, we must answer that the Constitution says no such thing. The Constitution says the Governor shall not be eligible immediately to succeed himself. This inhibition is not confined to an elected Governor, at least by any express language, nor is it confined to any particular length of term, nor is its application restricted to a four-year term. It simply says the Governor shall not be eligible immediately to succeed himself. In its literal sense, and its every practical working sense, a Governor is one who governs, and, conversely, one who governs is Governor. The language of section 4 in its literal significance applies to the one who is governing at the time the circumstances arise for an election to succeed himself, and does not except any one from the force of the ineligibility clause merely because he may have been governing for a short period only.

Defendants in error contend that it should apply only to an elected Governor who has served a four-year term, and that it should not apply to a portion of a four-year term; that, if the elected Governor should be impeached one week or one day, before the time for filing as a candidate to succeed himself, under such circumstances it would be absurd to apply the provision of said section 4. As to whether these suggested conditions may ever become possibilities, we are not called upon to decide. The present case does not present such a condition, and it would be mere dictum for us to say what should be done under such remote possibilities. It might suffice to say, however, that, if such *575 conditions should arise, the courts will cross that bridge when it is reached.

Defendants in error argue also that the plaintiff’s contention would bring about a condition wherein the elected Governor, if he saw fit to do so, in order to prevent the Lieutenant Governor from running for Governor, might resign or be removed or impeached a week or a day before the time for announcing as a candidate, and thereby force the Lieutenant Governor to act as Governor during the remaining week or day of the term, and then, by applying section 4, prevent the Lieutenant Governor from running for office. This is another bridge which the courts will cross when it is reached. In this connection, however, it is perceived that such remote possibilities might as easily come from the opposite direction. For example, an elected Governor might fail to qualify; he might die on the day before his time for taking office. In such case the office of Governor would devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for four years, and he might serve until the time arrived for filing as a candidate and resign, and thereby make it the duty of the President of the Senate or Speaker of the House to act as Governor, with an understanding with the President of the Senate or Speaker of the House that no change would be made in governmental policies, nor in the numerous appointive boards and employees, and again announce and run for Lieutenant Governor, with an understanding with some person running for Governor that, if elected, he would not qualify, but would leave the powers and duties of the office of Governor to devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, who, if he should be elected as Lieutenant Governor, would then have another four-year term in the office of Governor, and the same proceeding might possibly be repeated for a number of terms, at the end of which terms he could run for Governor himself, claiming that he had been only "Acting Governor," thus perpetuating himself in the office of Governor, the very condition which section 4 expressly prohibits. So, while it is seen that these theoretic possibilities may work both ways, yet none of such conditions are before us now, and that bridge will be crossed when it is reached.

We now have before us an actual and clearly defined problem with the provisions of the Constitution as our only rule for solution. The authorities cited afford us very little light. None of them deal with conditions anything like similar to the conditions here presented, and none of them have been construed constitutional provisions identical with ours.

It is unnecessary to give space to the constitutional provisions of other states, nor to a discussion of the effect which such provisions have in other states, nor is it proper for us to interpret the decisions from other states to the extent of saying what effect they have on such states, but we may properly say what application the decisions of another state has to the law of our state, and may properly say what degree of persuasiveness they have upon us in construing the laws of our state, and, as no decisions have been cited exactly in point, and no constitutional provisions construed identical with ours, we are forced to construe our own Constitution with the effect it has upon our state in view. Again referring to the Crump Case, supra, and to the case of People v. Wells, 2 Cal. 198, which is quoted from with apparent approval by the Criminal Court of Appeals in the Crump Case, and which is separately cited by defendants, we find that neither of those decisions deal with a condition at all similar to the one here presented. In the Crump Case the court was dealing with an occasion of temporary absence of the Governor from the state; the question being whether during such temporary absence the Lieutenant Governor had authority to issue pardons. The court was dealing with an absence, a vacancy, which was essentially temporary. The facts in the case and the reasoning of the court show that it was essentially temporary, and that the court had such a condition in view; looked at it from that standpoint of a temporary vacancy in reaching its final conclusion. In that case, the absence of the Governor was only a temporary absence, and the vacancy created in his office was only a temporary vacancy. The Governor, though temporarily absent, still had the constitutional right, upon his return, to assume the duties of the office of Governor, but, under the conditions here presented, the impeached Governor has no right to return and oust the present Governor and assume the powers of the office of Governor. Mr. Walton's rights to the office, his tenure of office, his term of office, which as the California case says, belonged to him as an individual, have been terminated and foreclosed by the court of impeachment, but, as was also held in the California case, the people's right to a continuous functioning of the government has not ceased.

These are the conditions which we have here, and section 16 provides for just such conditions. Hence neither the Crump Case nor the California case are controlling in this case further than heretofore indicated. Defendants lay stress upon the concluding words of section 16, to wit, "or until the disability shall be removed." We are dealing with a condition where the disability cannot be removed; the law provides no means for its removal; it has become final; and it is our duty to avoid speculations and deal with the actual condition which confronts us.

Plaintiff in error cites three Oregon cases, viz. Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Or. 389, 4 P. 1180; Olcott, Gov., v. Hoff, Treas., 92 Or. 462, 181 P. 466; State ex rel. Roberts v. Olcott, 94 Or. 633, 187 P. 286, in support of his contentions.

We do not feel at liberty to say what effect the decisions of the court of Oregon have upon *576 the state of Oregon, but it is obvious to us that the conclusions were reached from a different standpoint than the standpoint here presented. The first Oregon case was dealing with the mere sordid question of salary, the question being whether the secretary of state, under certain conditions, was entitled to the Governor's salary, and in the second case also the question of salary appears to have been the bone of contention. In the third case the court followed the previous holding under the doctrine of stare decisis. However, it was held in the Oregon cases that the person on whom the office of Governor devolves becomes Governor.

The case of Futrell v. Oldham, 107 Ark. 386, 155 S. W. 502, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 571, is cited by defendants in error, but that case is not in point here. In the opinion the court said:

“The case turns on the question whether, on the resignation of the Governor, the then incumbent of the office of President of the Senate succeeded to the vacated office, or whether merely as such President of the Senate the powers, duties and emoluments of the office * * *

Section 16, art. 6, Constitution of Oklahoma:

“In case of impeachment of Governor, or of his death, failure to qualify, resignation, removal from the state, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term or until the disability shall be removed.”

It will be seen that the only difference between the two Constitutions, both dealing with the same conditions, is that the federal Constitution says, “the same shall devolve on the Vice President,” while the Oklahoma Constitution says, “the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor.” Defendant in error argues that no court has ever decided that the Vice President became President upon the death of the President, and appears to discount the departmental construction which the various departments of the federal government, including the federal Congress, have placed upon the above provisions of the federal Constitution. This construction has stood since April 4, 1841, when, upon the death of President Wm. H. Harrison, Vice President Tyler became President of the United States. For almost a century this construction of the federal Constitution has stood without question. It has been recognized as correct, and acquiesced in, not only by the departments of state and all the states of the Union, but devolved upon him while he remained President.”

This case is not in point here because it deals with a different condition, and for the further reason that the President of the Senate is not made an executive officer, nor constituted a part of the executive department by the Constitution of Arkansas, as is the Lieutenant Governor constituted by the Oklahoma Constitution. Plaintiff in error also cites section 1, art. 2, of the Constitution of the United States, and the instances, six separate occasions, where, upon the death of the President, the Vice President has succeeded to the office of President and become President of the United States, and has been so recognized. Said section of the federal Constitution is identical with ours, with the exception that ours is the stronger and more definite, as may be seen from the following parallel:

Section 1, art. 2, Constitution of the United States of America:

officially recognized by every civilized government of the world.

On each occasion where the President of the United States has died, the Vice President has immediately succeeded to the office of President as President of the United States, and thereupon the government of the United States has at once, through its consular offices, notified all governments of the world of the change in Presidents.

Defendant suggests that no court has ever pronounced that to be the law. To our mind, it is so clearly correct that no one has ever presumed to test its correctness in the courts. Therefore it should have greater weight than an ordinary departmental construction, not only because it has stood for almost a century, but because it has been recognized as the correct conception of our system of government, and because, for eighty-five years under this construction, there has been no friction in the machinery of government by reason of such construction. While this construction of the federal Constitution is entitled to weight, yet we are not confined to such construction as our sole guide in construing our own. The plain language of our Constitution, under the universally accepted meaning of the language used, is sufficient unto itself.

Defendant contends that every man has a right to run for Governor, and if elected, to become Governor once. This we concede, provided he possesses the constitutional qualifications for the office, but he must be thirty years of age; must have been a resident of the state three years; and must not be immediately succeeding himself in the office of Governor. Possessing these qualifications, he may become Governor as often as the people elect him, but, lacking in either of them, his personal ambitions to become Governor are not to be weighed in the scales with the public interest and welfare.

The framers of the Constitution and the people in adopting the inhibition in section 4, supra, must have had reasons for so doing. The Constitution itself does not say what those reasons were, and we shall not assume *577 to say what they were, but we may say what effect such provision has, and do say that it has a most wholesome and much-needed effect. We judicially know that under the law the Governor of this state has very extensive powers. He is a member of, and ex officio chairman of, several of the most important and powerful boards and commissions of the state. That he has authority to appoint and remove members of many important boards and commissions, and to dictate the employment of every clerk, stenographer, helper, and janitor allowed by law to be employed by such boards. We judicially know that he is ex officio chairman of the state board of equalization, which has power to equalize and fix property values and the rate of taxation; that he has power as chief executive to convoke the Legislature, and to veto acts of the Legislature, to issue pardons to persons who have been duly convicted in the courts, and power to call out the militia and many other far-reaching powers, and we also judicially know that under the law the present incumbent has all of the above-mentioned powers, and as a matter of common knowledge, we know that too long an exercise of such tremendous powers by one man may bring about oppression and detriment to the public welfare, and that too long a tenure of office with the powers which a Governor has may enable him to build up a dangerous, and possibly invincible, political machine with which to perpetuate his powers.

While we do not know, and do not pretend to say, whether the present incumbent or any other Governor has ever used his powers wrongfully or oppressively, yet we do know that section 4 whatever may have been the reason for its adoption, has the effect of preventing these possible dangers, and do know that it is well to guard against them.

Mr. Trapp is just as much a Governor, in every literal and practical sense and effect, as though he had been elected to the office. He has all the powers, emoluments, and immunities which could be conferred upon him by an election, as well as the same individual rights of tenure and occupancy which an elected Governor has, and, except by impeachment for misconduct, there is no provision of law by which he can be divested of such rights until the end of his term. He is now filling the office which, upon the impeachment of Mr. Walton, devolved upon him by section 16, and section 4 says, "The Governor shall not be eligible immediately to succeed himself."

Discerning our system and plan of government, and our constitutional provisions for the operation of same as we do, the reasons herein given become potent and conclusive.

The judgment of the trial court is therefore reversed, with directions to issue the order of injunction herein sought.

Reversed.

MASON, PHELPS, LESTER, HUNT. CLARK, and RILEY, JJ., concur.

NICHOLSON, C. J., dissents.

BRANSON, V. C. J. (dissenting).

In this court the parties bear the same adversary positions as they bore in the district court. They are, therefore, referred to as plaintiff and defendants.

One Kirby Fitzpatrick, as plaintiff, sued the state board of public affairs, the state election board, and the individual members of each. He prayed relief, enjoining the defendants from causing to be printed on the official Democratic primary ballots to be used throughout the state in the primary, to be held, as required by law, the first Tuesday in August, 1926, the name of M. E. Trapp. The said M. E. Trapp had duly filed his application with the said defendant election board to be placed on such ballots as a candidate for nomination for Governor of Oklahoma, and his said application to be placed on said ballots had been by said board accepted.

The question of the propriety of the injunctive remedy sought is by none of the parties drawn in question, and the same will, therefore, not be discussed. Only a part of the substance of the pleadings is necessary to be stated for a clear understanding of the issue.

At the regular November election, 1922, one J. C. Walton was duly elected as Governor of the state of Oklahoma. He was inaugurated by taking the constitutional oath on the 8th day of January, 1923, and thereafter continued to fill the office until the 23d day of October, 1923, when the House of Representatives duly assembled, filed impeachment charges with the state Senate, and the state Senate did, by resolution, on said last-named date, suspend him from office; but on the trial the charges were sustained, and judgment entered removing him from office. Section 168, C. O. S. 1921.

At the same time the said Walton was elected Governor, the said M. E. Trapp was duly elected Lieutenant Governor of the state of Oklahoma for the constitutional term of four years, beginning on the 8th day of January, 1923, and on said date the said M. E. Trapp qualified as Lieutenant Governor by taking the constitutional oath of office, and, as defendants contend, has ever since been Lieutenant Governor by reason of his election to said office and his qualification as such officer.

An extended discussion of the one question presented is unnecessary to make lucid the conclusion we reach. That one question is whether the said M. E. Trapp is eligible to be Governor for the term for which he seeks to be nominated and elected, and which term begins under the Constitution the second Monday in January, 1927. The plaintiff alleges that he is ineligible, and contends that, *578 because of his ineligibility, he should not be placed on the primary ballots as aforesaid; while the defendants, taking the view that he is eligible, have accepted his filing, and intend to place his name, unless prevented from doing so, upon such ballots.

Whether he is eligible depends upon the construction to be placed on certain provisions of the Constitution of the state. The correlation of these said provisions are before this court for the first time, and we must say what they mean, for they are not without ambiguity. We have no exact precedent from the decisions of any other state to ease our task, for, while we find similar provisions in many Constitutions, we find none of them exact as ours in their entirety. The decisions of other courts hereinafter cited are helpful so far as they deal with provisions similar to certain provisions here in question, but from the point at which they stop we must follow a rule of reason all our own. It is admitted that the ineligibility attaches only to the Governor.

Before considering the particular provisions which bear directly on the dispute, consideration of the provisions of the Constitution as to who may be Governor and how he may become Governor we consider important. Bearing thereon we cite, but give only the substance of, the provisions, constitutional and statutory.

Article 6 (Williams' Oklahoma Constitution) creates the executive department of state government, names the officers in whom executive authority is lodged, and, in a measure, the conditions under which such authority is so lodged. Section 3 thereof makes any male person who has been an elector of the state for three years, and is not less than thirty years of age, eligible to be elected either Governor or Lieutenant Governor. Section 1 thereof provides, among other things:

“The executive authority of the state shall be vested in a Governor, Lieutenant Governor,” etc.

It cannot be considered amiss to point out here that the express language of this section vests executive authority in the Lieutenant Governor of the state. Just when he can exercise the same, and what authority he can exercise, depends upon other provisions of the Constitution hereinafter discussed. Before going to them, however, we think it important to call the attention of the reader to the fact that article 3 (Williams' Oklahoma Constitution) provides for mandatory elections for state and other officers. The provisions of said article 3 of the Constitution as to mandatory elections were vitalized by statutory enactments passed by the first state Legislature of the state. This Legislature convened soon after Statehood day, which was November 16, 1907, and the statute so vitalizing the said article 3 as to the mandatory selection of officers by popular elections is now brought down in our statutes as chapters 40 and 41, C. O. S. 1921. Section 6093, C. O. S. 1921, vitalizes that provision of article 3 of the Constitution which provides for a mandatory primary system. Section 6126 provides for the election of persons so nominated at the primary the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November of each even numbered year, beginning in 1908.

Reverting again to the Constitution, we find that section 4 of said article 6 provides that the term of office of Governor, and the term of office of the Lieutenant Governor (which runs concurrently), shall be four years from the second Monday of January next after their election, and that it further provides that the Governor shall not be eligible to immediately succeed himself. We come to the question here at issue: Who is the individual made ineligible to immediately succeed himself? The language of the said section is that the Governor is ineligible to immediately succeed himself. The language of section 1 of the same article makes clear that executive authority is vested in both the Governor and the Lieutenant Governor. These sections contemplate that two individuals shall be elected at the same election for the same term of office, and that executive authority shall be vested in each. They are each required to have the same qualifications, but the latter is not cloaked with the same ineligibility as the former. Each is elected by the electors of the state. We think it is not subject to debate that there is no provision in the Constitution or statute whereby the Governor can be appointed by any individual or collection of individuals. There are ample provisions in the Constitution and statutes under which most of the other numerous officers of the state may fill their respective offices by appointment by the Governor, or other designated appointing power, for section 13 of article 6 provides that the Governor shall commission all officers who are not commissioned by law, and, when any office shall become vacant, he shall, unless otherwise provided by law, appoint a person to fill the vacancy until a successor shall have been elected. Under this provision it is not subject to debate that, if the Lieutenant Governor should die, be removed on impeachment, or remove from the state, or otherwise be taken from the office, the Governor is directed by the said section to appoint a Lieutenant Governor, at least until the succeeding election. If the Governor should die, or be removed from office, there is nothing in the Constitution which authorizes the Lieutenant Governor to appoint a Governor.

We then ask ourselves the question: Can there be, under the Constitution of Oklahoma, a constitutional Governor except as the electorate of the state makes one at an election? We find no provision in the Constitution *579 which says so, nor do we find any which can be fairly so construed. Being the chief officer of the state, the ordinary meaning of the language used as to him expressly reserved to the people the sole power to make a Governor. Said section 1 of article 6 is different from other Constitutions dealing with the same matter. It vests executive power, not as a function to an office whoever may be holder thereof, but in individuals, and so far as is involved here, in individuals referred to as Governor and Lieutenant Governor. Section 2 of article 6 makes a distinction between the executive power vested by section 1 in the Governor and the executive power vested in the Lieutenant Governor, in that it makes the executive power of the Governor supreme. Said section 2 says:

“The supreme executive power shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled ‘the Governor of the state of Oklahoma,’”

—but it cannot be said, with right reason, that, because this section vests supreme executive power in a chief magistrate, styled the Governor of the state of Oklahoma, it thereby robs the Lieutenant Governor of the executive power which the preceding section said should exist in the Lieutenant Governor. We ask ourselves the question: Under what circumstances could executive power be exercised by the Lieutenant Governor, and what power? Unless we desire to read something into said section 4 of article 6, or to read something out of the same, the conclusion is inevitable that a constitutional Governor is a person nominated at a primary, and elected at a general, election for a term of four years. Under said section 2 his right to use the executive power vested in him by section 1 is supreme, and, when it exists at all, it supercedes any executive power vested in the Lieutenant Governor, and such power so vested in the latter is dormant until some condition arises under which he can exercise the same. The Governor exercises supreme executive power from the day of his inauguration for a period of four years, subject to the conditions of sections 15 and 16 of article 6, which are, in substance, to wit, his impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, removal from the state, or inability to exercise the same, or vacancy in his office. When some one of these contingent conditions arises, it operated to strike down, or suspend, the Governor's executive power.

And, under such circumstances, shall we say that the executive power vested in the Lieutenant Governor cannot then be exercised by him? That part of section 1 in referring to the Lieutenant Governor is meaningless, unless the exercise of executive authority by the Lieutenant Governor was intended to be conditioned on the happening of some of the provisions enumerated in sections 15 and 16 of article 6. If some of said conditions exist, then under the said sections the performance of the duties of the supreme executive, whatever those may be made by law, are charged to the Lieutenant Governor, but the performance of these duties by him are not, as Governor for the Constitution does not say so, and he was not so elected. The Constitution does not say when the Lieutenant Governor exercises executive authority so given him by section—he does so as Governor—but said section 1, when read in the light of the other sections of article 6, clearly recognizes that the elected Governor may be unable to exercise the same or to fill the office either because of impeachment, conviction on impeachment charges, death, failure to qualify, removal from the state, or some other inability, such as absence from the state, sickness, etc. The constitutional convention, knowing that some of the above disabilities might exist, or that the office might become vacant, and knowing that the same must be continuously filled in the sense that the duties of the office must be performed in the interest of the public good, in effect says that, if from any of these causes he, the Governor, is suffering from inability to discharge the duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of the term or until the disability shall be removed.

From the oral argument presented by counsel for plaintiff, the writer is unable to escape the conclusion that plaintiff's position is that we must turn the question here in dispute solely upon the language of the said section 16, and that part thereof which provides:

Diligent search can be made of each section of said article 6, creating and dealing with the executive department, and nothing therein can be found of an executive nature to be done by the Lieutenant Governor, except when a contingency arises as contemplated by sections 15 and 16. There is nothing in any section of said article (and no other article) that either expressly or by fair intendment indicates that, on the contingency of said sections arising, the Lieutenant Governor can exercise executive authority in any status other than as Lieutenant Governor. And can any reason be given why it should be exercised by him other than as Lieutenant Governor when the only section vesting such authority in him says that it is vested in a Lieutenant Governor? The Governor being possessed of supreme executive authority until some contingency, as specified supra, arises, no executive authority can be exercised by the Lieutenant Governor, but, when such contingency does arise, *580 he performs the duties of the office merely as the occupant of the office of Lieutenant Governor, to which he was elected.

Suppose we accept the contention of the plaintiff referred to in the foregoing paragraph, to the effect that the question must be decided by the language, “that the said office, with its compensation shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor,” and do not consider other sections dealing with the same matter (to do this, however, would violate all rules of constitutional and statutory construction), we then are faced with a definition of the word “office” as given in the latest authentic edition of Webster's New International Dictionary as “a right to exercise a public function or employment and receive the emoluments thereto belonging.” (Webster gives another: “In its fullest sense, office embraces the elements of tenure, duration, duties, and emoluments.”) Suppose we substitute the said definition of office in the sentence relied on by the plaintiff. It will then read that the right to exercise the public functions (of the Governor—ours), and receive the emoluments thereto belonging, devolves upon the Lieutenant Governor. Would such sentence demote him as Lieutenant Governor and promote him as constitutional Governor? Would that strip him of his character as one official, and make him another official? No such conclusion can be reached by any fair or logical process of reasoning, and there is no provision in the Constitution of the state whereby a person elected as one official may, by operation of law, take on the status of another official. If we even omit Webster's definition set out, supra, we find in sections 15 and 16 of article 6 that the term “office” and “duties and powers of the office” are shown by the context to have been intended to mean that, when the person elected as Governor or Lieutenant Governor dies, or is otherwise incapacitated, it is only the duties and powers which he might have exercised that can be performed by another and distinct officer.

It must be noted that section 16 draws no distinction between his status in exercising executive authority by the Lieutenant Governor where there is a permanent disability, such as death or removal from office, and where there is merely a temporary disability on the part of the supreme executive. This was clearly pointed out in the case of Ex parte Hawkins, 10 Okl. Cr. R. 396, 136 P. 991, and in Ex parte Crump, 10 Okl. Cr. 133, 135 P. 428, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1036, in which the Criminal Court of Appeals of this state construed sections 15 and 16 of article 6, supra. In so construing them, that court cited with approval the logical reasoning of the Supreme Court of California in the case of People v. Wells, 2 Cal. 198. There is no section of the Constitution, unless we read something into it, which undertakes to make the Lieutenant Governor a constitutional Governor merely because he may exercise powers that would be, but for some contingency as set out above, exercised by the supreme executive. But plaintiff argues vigorously that the Constitution never contemplated that a vacancy should ever exist in the office of Governor. The idea plaintiff expresses is only true in the sense that the Constitution never contemplated that there should not be some one within the state who could exercise executive authority ordinarily exercised by the Governor. But there is nothing to be found therein which indicates that it must always be exercised by the officer known as Governor. This is clear from section 15, which, among other things, says:

“If, during a vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die or be absent from the state, or become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the President, pro tempore, of the Senate, shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease.”

We think this section clearly shows that the makers of the Constitution contemplated that a vacancy might exist in the office of Governor, either temporary or permanent. When a permanent vacancy occurs, said section clearly directs that the Lieutenant Governor shall exercise the powers and duties of the office, and, if during that time he (the Lieutenant Governor) should be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or be absent from the the state, section 15 directs that the President pro tempore of the Senate shall perform the duties of the office, and also provides for additional succession to such duties. Should we give the said constitutional provisions the construction contended for by plaintiff, and say, as he desires, that, when the Governor is removed from office, the Lieutenant Governor becomes the constitutional Governor, it would be tantamount to saying that the Lieutenant Governor as such was not given any executive authority, under any contingency, by the language of section 1. Such would lead to confusion, and such confusion, as we believe, the adroit minds of those who framed the Constitution would have prevented had they anticipated this court would read into the Constitution a construction of its provisions that would make a Lieutenant Governor constitutional Governor, though never elected as such. The inability of the Governor to immediately succeed himself is a limitation upon the right given to every citizen of the state to seek this high office who possesses qualifications set out above. Unless clear from the language used, we must not give this restrictive provision a meaning that would so penalize a man, who had been elected only as Lieutenant Governor, when, and if while serving, he should be nominated and elected Governor, he would be disqualified to take the office when inauguration day *581 arrived, if the Governor had died or been removed between election day and inauguration day. Should we give it the construction plaintiff contends for, then the minute the Governor resigns, is removed on impeachment, or dies, the Lieutenant Governor instantly becomes the constitutional Governor by operation of law, and the office of Lieutenant Governor thereby becomes vacant. If this is the law, under section 13 of said article 6, supra, he could immediately appoint a Lieutenant Governor, and, if feeling friendly to the deposed Governor, he could forthwith hand such impeached and removed Governor a commission as the Lieutenant Governor of the state, and then, if the friendship extended that far, out of personal consideration for the Governor so removed, could resign himself as Governor, whereupon the Governor so impeached could forthwith become the constitutional Governor by operation of law. Shall we read these provisions into article 6, which might bring about such conditions when otherwise they would not be possible. If on the removal of the Governor the Lieutenant Governor automatically is removed from the office to which he was elected, and instantly becomes Governor, in the exercise of his appointive power, under section 13, he is directed to appoint some one as Lieutenant Governor, and could do it forthwith, and this would operate to make it impossible that the President pro tempore of the Senate would ever succeed to the performance of the duties of Governor, as was clearly contemplated in the succession line to such duties as set out in section 15 of the Constitution.

The construction we give leaves effective the ineligibility of the elected Governor to be or become Governor for the term immediately succeeding that for which he was elected and served either in part or in whole, and does not extend the said ineligibility to an individual not specifically made ineligible by section 4. Again, should we give the meaning plaintiff contends for, we would make it possible to defeat such intent of section 4 in this, to wit, that the elected Governor, after serving for approximately three and one-half years, could resign before the primary, the Lieutenant Governor would then become automatically the constitutional Governor, and the Governor elected for the term then running, thus, by his own act, making himself eligible to be Governor for the next term, could forthwith enter the race, and, if elected, would be qualified, for that he would not be immediately succeeding himself, a constitutional Governor having served in the interim. Likewise, in the instant case, if M. E. Trapp is Governor in the constitutional sense of the term, he could forthwith appoint a Lieutenant Governor; then resign. His appointee would then be the constitutional Governor, and Trapp could continue his campaign, and, if elected, could qualify as Governor the second Monday in January, 1927, for the reason that he would not be "immediately succeeding himself," but another constitutional Governor would have filled the office in the interim. No such possibility of juggling with this high office was ever intended, but, when all provisions are considered, the Constitution means that, if A. is honored by being elected Governor for a term of four years, he is ineligible to be Governor the next term which begins four years later. That is what the Constitution says, and it means that, and nothing more. That meaning prevents possible and probable unseemly and disconcerting conditions, and we must adhere to it.

We are driven to these conclusions: First, that under the Constitution of Oklahoma, there cannot be a constitutional Governor, except when elected as such by the electors of the state. Second, that under section 1 executive authority is vested in both the Governor and the Lieutenant Governor, but that under section 2 supreme executive authority is vested in the Governor, and the Lieutenant Governor cannot exercise executive authority until a contingency arises, as set forth in sections 15 and 16 of said article. Third, that under said sections a vacancy may occur and exist in the office of Governor, in which event the Lieutenant Governor, as such, exercises the executive authority which the Governor, but for the arising of the contingency, would have exercised. Fourth, that, if while so exercising such authority, the Lieutenant Governor is impeached, displaced, resigns, dies, or is absent from the state, etc., the President pro tempore of the Senate may perform such duties. Fifth, that the Lieutenant Governor, who runs and is elected as such, cannot by operation of law be made a constitutional Governor, but is merely a constitutional Lieutenant Governor, and may exercise executive authority when the Chief Executive, to wit, the Governor, is removed, dies, or cannot otherwise act. Sixth, that this construction gives force to the language of section 1, section 2, section 4, section 13, section 15, and section 16, which are all the sections dealing with the subject, and thereby creates no possibility of a confusion in the performance of the executive functions. Neither does it destroy or strike down the succession provided by section 15 of said article to the duties of the office of the executive, such as might occur otherwise.

We think our reasons and conclusions are borne out by these cases: Sadler State ex rel. v. La Grave, 23 Nev. 216, 45 P. 243, 35 L. R. A. 233; State ex rel. Hardin v. Sadler, 23 Nev. 356, 47 P. 450; People v. Cornforth, 34 Colo. 107, 81 P. 871; Clifford v. Heller, 63 N. J. Law, 105, 42 A. 155, 57 L. R. A. 312; *582 People v. Budd, 114 Cal. 168, 45 P. 1060, 34 L. R. A. 46; State v. McBride, 29 Wash. 335, 70 P. 25; State ex rel. Chatterton v. Grant, 12 Wyo. 1, 73 P. 470, 2 Ann. Cas. 382; Clifford v. Heller, 63 N. J. Law, 105, 42 A. 155, 57 L. R. A. 312; Futrell v. Oldham, 107 Ark. 386, 155 S. W. 502, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 571.

"It will be seen that in case of a vacancy in the office of Governor the vacancy is not to be filled, but the powers and duties devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, who does not cease to be Lieutenant Governor. Under such circumstances it would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the Governor devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor the latter thereby becomes Governor, and can appoint a Lieutenant Governor. Nor do I think it could be contended that when the President pro tempore of the Senate acts as Governor he could appoint a person to fill the vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor. If he could, he would then appoint himself out of office, and it would be his duty to do so."

Again, if we consider sections 15 and 16 separately instead of together, do we find anything in section 16 which authorizes M. E. Trapp to be Governor? Under the facts as they were and are, can we not see by an analysis of that section that, when Trapp began to perform the duties of the office, it was not as Governor? No one contends for a moment that mere inability or disability on the part of the elected Governor would make the Lieutenant Governor Governor in fact. Under this section 16 the first thing mentioned is, "In case of impeachment of the Governor, * * * the office 'devolves,' etc., upon the Lieutenant Governor."

What does impeachment mean? And could impeachment have made Trapp Governor? It certainly could if the word "devolve" means what plaintiff contends, for he says that is the one word which made Trapp Governor. This court has definitely said through Justice Harrison in the case of State ex rel. Trapp v. Chambers, District Judge, 96 Okl. 78, 220 P. 890, 30 A. L. R. 1144, that—

" 'Impeachment' of the Governor, within the meaning of section 16, art. 6, of the Constitution, is the adoption of articles of impeachment by the House of Representatives, and the presentation thereof to the Senate, and the indication by that body that the same are accepted for the purpose of permitting prosecution thereof, and the impeachment of the Governor operates to suspend him; the duties and emoluments of the office automatically devolving upon the Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of the term or until the disability is removed by the acquittal of the Governor of the charges preferred against him."

So the word "devolve" clearly from said opinion did not make Trapp Governor while impeachment charges were pending against Walton, for this court said there: "The duties and emoluments" of the Governor "devolved" upon Trapp.

The second contingency set out in section 16 is, in case of death, the office "devolves." Walton was not then, and is not now, dead, so "devolve" did not make Trapp Governor under that contingency. The third is, in case of his failure to qualify, the office "devolves." Walton did not fail to qualify, and "devolve" could not make Trapp Governor under that contingency. The fourth contingency is in case of resignation, the office "devolves." "Devolve" did not make him Governor for this reason, for Walton did not resign. The fifth contingency is, in case of his removal from the state, the office "devolves." Walton did not remove from the state, so that contingency not having taken place, "devolve" did not make Trapp Governor. The sixth and last contingency of said section 16 is in case of inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the office "devolves" upon the Lieutenant Governor "until the disability is removed." This contingency did not permit "devolve" to make Trapp Governor, for there was no "inability" on the part of Walton to discharge the powers and duties of Governor, for that "inability" is a condition that may be removed or terminated, or, in other words, is temporary. It is defined by lexicographers as "an inherent lack of power to perform the thing in question." An illustration would seem to make it clear. For instance, if Walton had been afflicted with insanity, this would have brought about a lack of power to perform the duties of the office which inhered in him personally, and such inability as might be removed such as acquittal on the impeachment charges would have restored him to the right to perform the duties of the office.

Section 16 was given this meaning as far back as 1913, by Judge Henry Furman, a man of recognized learning, and a judge of eminent ability. In the case of Ex parte Hawkins, 10 Okl. Cr. 396, 136 P. 991, he said:

"This case presents simply a cold question of law, and must be decided as such without reference to any other considerations. Article 6, § 16 (Williams' Constitution, § 165) provides in express terms that all of the powers of the Governor shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor during the inability of the Governor to discharge the powers and duties of said office, and until such disability shall be removed. * * * The Governor may go to other states * * * without forfeiting his office. * * * During his absence, or inability to act, the Lieutenant Governor is vested with all of the powers of Governor. * * * The Constitution provides that there shall always be some one within the State clothed with power to perform the duties of Chief Executive. * * * The powers of the Lieutenant Governor to act, during the inability of the Governor, are not derived from the invitation or request of the *583 Governor; but they rest alone upon the provisions of the Constitution of Oklahoma.”

This comes from the pen of one long since removed from divergent judicial and political views. He was discussing the identical section of the Constitution plaintiff relies on as making a Governor out of a Lieutenant Governor. Judge Furman said in brief that, during an inability of the Governor to act, the Lieutenant Governor came forward, not to say “I am Governor,” but to do the work and perform the duties which the Governor would have done but for the inability. This shows clearly the futility of considering section 16 separate from sections 1 and 15 of the same article.

Plaintiff admitted in oral argument that section 15 should come after section 16; that this mistake was made in enrolling the article by the enrolling clerk. This is only important, if at all, in reading the two sections together. If they are so read in the light of the above authorities, they will in substance be: When the Governor has impeachment charges pending against him, fails to qualify, resigns, removes from the state, or possesses inability to act, or (section 15) if during a vacancy of the office of Governor from any of the above causes which would create a vacancy, or from death, or removal by a judgment of a court of impeachment, the duties and powers of the Governor are held and performed by the Lieutenant Governor, and if during such vacancy the Lieutenant Governor suffers impeachment or removal from office or inability to act, the President pro tempore of the Senate shall perform the duties, then the Speaker of the House, and then such other persons as the Legislature may provide by law.

Section 168, C. O. S. 1921, on impeachments, provides in closing:

“If two-thirds of the Senators present shall vote yea upon any charge or count contained in the article of impeachment, the accused shall be adjudged guilty [by the Senate as a court of impeachment—ours], and the judgment of the court shall be that he be removed from office.”

That is what created the vacancy in the office of Governor in the present term, and was such a vacancy in such office as is referred to in section 15 of article 6 of the Constitution, and during which that section and section 16 requires that the Lieutenant Governor shall have the power and perform the duties of the office and such of them as would otherwise be required of the Governor. It was such contingency actually occurring which was anticipated by the Constitution as the reason for vesting executive authority in the Lieutenant Governor in section 1 of the same article clearly to be exercised on the contingencies set out in sections 15 and 16.

We feel that the usage grown up in departmental construction of the national government that on a vacancy in the office of the elected President the Vice President becomes President is not even persuasive here, for there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States that makes the elected President, or a successor to him, ineligible to succeed himself, and the question here could never arise as to the presidency.

It must be noted in conclusion that not one decided case from all the states is cited to support the opinion of the court on the question here involved, though there are numerous ones, as set out above on similar questions.

The writer believes the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed.

Dec. 4, 1992.

Suit for declaratory judgment was filed requesting interpretation of various provisions of the Constitution of Arkansas regarding succession to the Office of Governor when the Governor resigns with more than 12 months remaining in term of office. The Circuit Court, Pulaski County, John B. Plegge, J., entered judgment declaring that upon resignation of Governor, powers and duties of the Office of Governor, but not office itself devolves upon Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of four-year term. Court also ruled that special election to fill office is not required and that Lieutenant Governor is not authorized to appoint successor to the Office of Governor. Attorney General appealed, and Lieutenant Governor cross-appealed. The Supreme Court, Dudley, J., held that: (1) constitutional amendment provides that the Lieutenant Governor serves as Governor for the residue of the term and not merely until a new Governor is elected at special election, and (2) Office of Governor itself devolves upon Lieutenant Governor.

Affirmed.

Glaze, J., concurred in part and dissented in part with opinion which was joined by Corbin, J.

**309 DUDLEY, Justice.

On November 6, 1990, Governor Bill Clinton was re-elected to the Office of Governor, and Jim Guy Tucker was elected to the Office of Lieutenant Governor. Both were elected and commissioned to four-year terms of office that commenced on January 15, 1991. On November 3, 1992, a little over twenty-one months later, Governor Clinton was elected to the Office of President of the United States of America. It is anticipated that Governor Clinton will resign from the Office of Governor before January 20, 1993, which is the day the oath of the Office of President of the United States will be administered. The result will be that a vacancy will exist in the Office of Governor, and more than twelve months will remain on the four-year term to which Governor Clinton was elected.

This suit for a declaratory judgment was filed requesting an interpretation of the various provisions of the Constitution of Arkansas regarding succession to the Office of Governor when the Governor resigns with more than twelve months remaining in the term of office. The trial court entered a judgment declaring that upon the resignation of Governor Clinton, the powers and duties of the Office of Governor, but not the office itself, will devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of the four-year term. The trial court also ruled that a special election to fill the office is not required and that the Lieutenant Governor is not authorized to appoint a successor to the Office of Governor. Attorney General Winston Bryant appeals from the judgment, *190 and Lieutenant Governor Jim Guy Tucker cross-appeals from that part of the judgment declaring that the Office of Governor does not devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor. On direct appeal, we affirm the trial court's judgment and hold that upon the resignation of a Governor, the powers and duties of the Office of Governor devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of the four-year term, and, on cross-appeal, we reverse and hold that the Office of Governor itself devolves upon the Lieutenant Governor.

I. Procedure

The Declaratory Judgments Act, Ark.Code Ann. §§ 16-111-101—16-111-111 (1987), provides that the purpose of the act is “to afford relief from uncertainty ... with respect to ... status,” and the act is to be liberally construed to that end. The parties stipulated in the trial court that they anticipate that Governor Clinton will resign from the Office of Governor, and the trial court held that a justiciable controversy exists. We have concluded that we should decide the issue because it is a matter of significant public interest and a matter of constitutional law. See Bennett v. N.A.A.C.P., 236 Ark. 750, 370 S.W.2d 79 (1963).

II. Background

Neither the 1836 Constitution of Arkansas nor the 1861 constitution provided for the office of Lieutenant Governor. Those constitutions placed the President of the Senate next in the line of succession for the Office of Governor, and they required a special election if the remaining term of the Governor exceeded a certain period of time. The 1864 constitution, for the first time, created the office of Lieutenant Governor and provided for a statewide election to the office. Ark. Const. of 1864, art. VI, § 19. The 1868 constitution also provided for a Lieutenant Governor and stated that if the Office of Governor became vacant, the Lieutenant Governor served during the "residue of the term." It made no provision for a special election to fill the vacancy. Ark. Const. of 1868, art. VI, § 10.

Unfortunately, the present Constitution of Arkansas, adopted in 1874, did not originally provide for the office of Lieutenant Governor. Article 6, sections 12 and 13 of the present constitution, originally placed the President of the Senate, *191 followed by the Speaker of the House, in the line of gubernatorial succession, but article 6, section 14 required a special election to fill a vacancy in the Office of Governor when the office was vacated more than twelve months before the expiration of the Governor's **310 term. Article 6, section 12 of the present constitution originally provided that in the event of the "death, conviction or impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the State or other disability of the Governor," the powers and duties of the office devolved on the President of the Senate "for the remainder of the term, or until the disability be removed, or a Governor elected and qualified." When construed with the special election procedure of article 6, section 14, the reason for each of these three limitations on the President of the Senate's period of service is obvious. Each limitation on service was tied to a different contingency. If the Governor became disabled, the President of the Senate served as Governor until the disability was removed. If the office became vacant through death, impeachment, or resignation of the Governor less than twelve months before the end of the Governor's term, the President of the Senate served "for the remainder of the term." If the vacancy in office occurred more than twelve months before the end of the Governor's term, the President of the Senate served until "a Governor [was] elected and qualified" at a special election called in accordance with article 6, section 14.

Only days after his inauguration on January 18, 1907, Governor John Sebastian Little suffered a nervous breakdown. Arkansas History Commission, 1 Annals of Arkansas 1947 239 (Dallas T. Herndon ed., 1947) [hereinafter Annals]. On February 11, 1907, Governor Little wrote Senator John I. Moore, the President of the Senate, and asked him to assume the duties of Governor. Senator Moore served as acting Governor until the adjournment of the General Assembly on May 14, 1907. Id. at 239. He was succeeded as acting Governor by Senator X.O. Pindall, who was elected President of the Senate shortly before its adjournment. Senator Pindall served as chief executive for sixteen months from May 15, 1907, until January 11, 1909, when he was replaced by the newly elected President of the Senate, Jesse M. Martin. Id. at 240. Senator Martin was acting Governor for three days until the inauguration of George W. Donaghey, who had been elected Governor at the general election of 1908. *192 Id. at 240. In sum, during the two-year period between January 15, 1907, and January 15, 1909, the affairs of Arkansas were in the hands of no less than six governors: Jeff Davis, John Sebastian Little, John I. Moore, X.O. Pindall, Jesse M. Martin, and George Donaghey. See id. at 233, 239-41.

The first seven months of 1913 were even more trying; they amounted to a gubernatorial succession crisis. The crisis was triggered when Governor Joe T. Robinson resigned from office following his election to the United States Senate. Id. at 247. W.K. Oldham was President of the Senate when Governor Robinson resigned, but because Senator Oldham was prohibited by article 5, section 18 of the constitution from serving past the end of the legislative session, the Senate elected J.M. Futrell as its President prior to adjournment on March 13, 1913. See id. at 251. Oldham argued that pursuant to article 6, section 12, he succeeded to the Office of Governor when Governor Robinson resigned and did not cease to be Governor when a new Senate President was elected. Futrell argued that he became Governor by virtue of his election as President of the Senate two days after Governor Robinson's resignation. In Futrell v. Oldham, 107 Ark. 386, 155 S.W. 502 (1913), this court ruled in Futrell's favor, holding that under article 6, section 12, the powers and duties of Governor devolved upon the office of the President of the Senate and not upon the individual occupying that office. In sum, during the first seven months of 1913, state government was headed by five different individuals: George Donaghey, Joe T.

Robinson, W.K. Oldham, J.M. Futrell, and George W. Hays. See Annals, supra, at 244, 247, 251. This was labeled our “procession” of governors. Dr. David Y. Thomas, 1 Arkansas and Its People; A History, 1541–1930 282 (1930). The newspapers of the time spoke of the confusion. The Arkansas Democrat of January 31, 1913, contained an article that began, “Political complications in Arkansas are as thick as a London Fog.” The February 8, 1913, Arkansas Democrat carried an article that **311 contains the sentence, “Kill off the antiquated method of filling a gubernatorial vacancy.”

III. Amendment 6

In February 1913, Representative Kidder introduced a House Joint Resolution for a constitutional amendment that *193 would create the office of Lieutenant Governor. In part, it was a replication of the provision in the 1868 constitution. The March 5, 1913, Arkansas Democrat wrote: “There is no sound argument against the office proposed. It fixes the status of the governor's successor and does away with a special election to fill a vacancy.” On March 6, 1913, Amendment 6 to the 1874 constitution was proposed by the General Assembly. See 1913 Ark. Acts 1527. Amendment 6 was submitted to, and approved by, the voters at the 1914 general election. See Combs v. Gray, 170 Ark. 956, 281 S.W. 918 (1926), for additional history of the adoption.

[1] [2] [3] Amendment 6, section 4 provides: “In the case of the [resignation] of the Governor, ... the powers and duties of the office, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term....” In interpreting constitutional amendments, we have said that a court, in order to determine the meaning and the extent of coverage of a constitutional amendment, may look to the history of the times and the condition existing at the time of the adoption of the amendment in order to ascertain the mischief to be remedied and the remedy adopted. Huxtable v. State, 181 Ark. 533, 26 S.W.2d 577 (1930). “Amendments to a constitution are not regarded as if they had been parts of the original instrument but are treated as having a force superior to the original to the extent to which they are in conflict.” Grant v. Hardage, 106 Ark. 506, 509, 153 S.W. 826, 827 (1913). Repeal by implication is accomplished when a constitutional amendment takes up a whole subject anew and covers the entire subject matter of the original constitution. McCraw v. Pate, 254

Ark. 357, 494 S.W.2d 94 (1973); Berry v. Gordon, 237 Ark. 547, 376 S.W.2d 279 (1964); Pulaski County v. Downer, 10 Ark. 588 (1850). Further, a constitutional amendment is to be interpreted and understood in its most natural and obvious meaning. Carter v. Cain, 179 Ark. 79, 14 S.W.2d 250 (1929).

[4] Amendment 6 took up a new subject matter of gubernatorial succession. The citizens wanted to prevent any more gubernatorial succession crises and sought to change the procedure previously set out in article 6. It is impossible to reconcile the natural and obvious meaning of the language of the amendment, quoted above, with the special election procedure set out originally in article 6, section 14 in the factual situation before us. If the appellant Attorney General's suggested meaning were *194 adopted, and we construed “residue of the term” to only mean the Lieutenant Governor takes office only until the next special election, the constitutional amendment would, in part, amount to an exercise in futility. For these reasons, we hold that amendment 6, section 4 provides that the Lieutenant Governor serves as Governor for the residue of the term and not merely until a new Governor is elected at a special election.

We do not decide whether the special election process set out in article 6 is still viable if the Lieutenant Governor becomes Governor and then vacates the office. That issue is not before us.

[5] The trial court ruled that the “powers and duties of the Office of Governor, but not the Office of Governor” devolved upon the Lieutenant Governor. The trial court's ruling was undoubtedly based on our decision in Futrell v. Oldham, 107 Ark. 386, 155 S.W. 502 (1913), and certainly that case contains language stating that, under article 6, the President of the Senate exercised the powers of the Office of Governor, but did not actually become Governor. For several reasons, we think the holding of Futrell should be distinguished when the Governor resigns and his place is taken by the Lieutenant Governor under the provisions of amendment 6.

**312 First, the framers of amendment 6 took verbatim from article 6, section 10 of the 1868 constitution the phrase “the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor,” and they did so without having the opportunity to read this court's opinion in Futrell. The House Joint Resolution proposing amendment 6 was adopted on March 6, 1913, eighteen days before this court handed down the decision in Futrell on March 24, 1913.

Second, in deciding Futrell, this court was obviously concerned that the President of the Senate had never been elected by a direct statewide vote—he had been directly elected only by the voters of a local state Senate district. The opinion provides:

The central thought [of article 6, sections 12, 13, and 14] is, that the office of Governor is never to be filled at all except by the direct vote of the people themselves, and provision is made by the Constitution for only a temporary devolution of the duties and emoluments of the office upon *195 some other functionary while a vacancy exists.

107 Ark. at 394, 155 S.W. at 505. Under amendment 6, section 2, the Lieutenant Governor is now an elected by a direct statewide vote of the people at the same time and for the same term as the Governor.

An equally important distinguishing factor is that today, under amendment 6, section 2, the Lieutenant Governor is a member of the executive branch of the government, but under article 6, as interpreted in Futrell v. Oldham, the President of the Senate was a member of the legislative branch and remained such while performing the duties of governor only until an election could be called. The opinion provides:

So, if the person discharging for the time being the duties of Governor is still President of the Senate, he cannot be Governor. He may exercise the powers of the latter office—“exercise the office of Governor,” as it is otherwise expressed in another section, but he does not fill the two offices.

107 Ark. at 391, 155 S.W. at 504.

Under amendment 6 we are not faced with the same problem. In fact, allowing the Lieutenant Governor to succeed to the Office of Governor eliminates the separation of powers and the dual office-holding problems. If the Lieutenant Governor were not to assume the Office of Governor, he would act as Governor and still preside over the Senate and have the power to cast votes in the event of tie votes. This mixing of executive and legislative powers is avoided when the Lieutenant Governor assumes the Office of Governor and sheds the duties of Senate President. For these reasons, Futrell v. Oldham is distinguished.

Amendment 6, section 4 provides that if the Office of Governor becomes vacant, “the powers and duties of the office, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term.” The next section of the amendment, section 5, provides that if the offices of both Governor and Lieutenant Governor become vacant, the President (pro tempore) of the Senate “shall act as Governor until the vacancy [is] filled.” Similarly, the Speaker of the House “shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled” if the President of the Senate becomes unable to act as *196 Governor. The difference in language suggests that the Lieutenant Governor, unlike the President (pro tempore) of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, does not merely act as Governor when the Governor resigns. Rather, it suggests that he becomes the Governor.

It is also of some persuasion that for nearly three-quarters of a century the executive branch has treated a lieutenant governor as governor when he filled a vacant governor's office. The first instance occurred in 1926 when Lieutenant Governor Harvey Parnell succeeded Governor John E. Martineau. Historical Report of the Secretary of State—Arkansas 230 (1978). It also occurred when Governor Dale Bumpers resigned from the Office of Governor and Lieutenant Governor Bob Riley was commissioned governor, as well as **313 when Governor David Pryor resigned and Lieutenant Governor Joe Purcell was commissioned as Governor. See Commissions in Secretary of State's Office. In addition, we are persuaded that the drafters of amendment 6, and the voters who approved it, knew that article 6, section 2 would remain in place. It provides: “The supreme executive power of the State shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled ‘the Governor of the State of Arkansas.’ ”

Accordingly, we hold that amendment 6, section 4 provides that upon the resignation of the Governor, the

Lieutenant Governor becomes “the Governor of the State of Arkansas.”

One of the parties advanced the argument that amendment 29 of the Constitution of Arkansas requires the Lieutenant Governor to appoint a new governor. We summarily reject the argument and hold that amendment 6 specifically provides for filing a vacancy in the Office of Governor.

Affirmed on direct appeal and reversed on cross-appeal.

GLAZE and CORBIN, JJ., dissent in part and concur in part.

GLAZE, Justice, concurring in part and dissenting in part. I concur in part and dissent in part. My disagreement with the majority court has nothing to do with its holding on the merits. In fact, I totally agree with its decision as it pertains to the merits, but disagree that this court procedurally reached the merits.

This lawsuit is a declaratory judgment action and, as such, *197 requires that a present actual controversy must exist. In stating this well-recognized principle, this court stated the following:

The Declaratory Judgment Statute is applicable only where there is a present actual controversy, and all interested persons are made parties, and only where justiciable issues are presented. It does not undertake to decide the legal effect of laws upon a state of facts which is future, contingent or uncertain. A declaratory judgment will not be granted unless the danger or dilemma of the plaintiff is present, not contingent on the happening of hypothetical future events; the prejudice to his position must be actual and genuine and not merely possible, speculative, contingent, or remote. (Emphasis added.)

Andres v. First Ark. Development Finance Corp., 230 Ark. 594, 324 S.W.2d 97 (1959); see also Files v. Hill, 268 Ark.

106, 594 S.W.2d 836 (1980); McFarlin v. Kelly, 246 Ark. 1237, 442 S.W.2d 183 (1969).

Justice John A. Fogelman stated the following reason for the foregoing rule in a concurring opinion where he said:

The declaratory judgment act is not intended to be the vehicle for advisory opinions to persons not having a justiciable controversy with their apparent adversaries by a court having no jurisdiction. It is far better, in my opinion, that important questions, particularly constitutional ones, be pounded out on the anvil of advocacy by persons whose interests are vitally real, not academic, with all interested parties before the court.

Block v. Allen, 241 Ark. 970, 980, 411 S.W.2d 21, 27 (1967).

Let me first point out the obvious—Governor Bill Clinton is not a party to this declaratory judgment action. Second, nowhere in the record before this court is it shown that the Governor has resigned or that he intends to resign his office. In an attempt to circumvent this obvious procedural defect in parties and the record, the parties appear to rely upon the Democratic Party of Arkansas's brief wherein it argues as follows:

The fact that Governor Clinton's exact resignation date may not be known is not a bar to determining the *198 succession issue. Governor Clinton cannot serve both as Governor and President. Article 6, Section 11 of the Arkansas Constitution provides that no “person holding office under the authority of this State, or of the United States, shall exercise the office of Governor, except as herein provided.” Governor Clinton's resignation now that he has been elected President cannot **314 be doubted. Governor Clinton will resign no later than January 20, 1993, in order to assume the Presidency. Thus, it is assured that there will be a vacancy in the Governor's office no later than 58 days after November 23rd. The resulting vacancy in the office of Governor is hardly the hypothetical fact situation feared by the courts.

The parties to this lawsuit cannot stipulate or assume how a person not a party or witness in this case might act in the future; namely, that Governor Clinton will vacate the Governor's office. The majority court is wrong in allowing the parties to make such a stipulation, especially when this factual issue could have been resolved by having made the Governor a party to this action and his resignation could then have been easily confirmed. Nor was the Governor deposed or called as a witness so the resignation issue could be put to rest. Clearly, Governor Clinton has an interest in this cause since this case affects not only his duties and responsibilities as governor, but also involves the emoluments he receives from that office. Until the Governor resigns, the succession issue presented in this cause remains purely hypothetical and contingent upon his vacating the office of Governor.

In an obvious attempt to avoid the Governor's absence in this lawsuit and to cure a record failing to reflect the Governor's resignation, the Democratic Party cites Article 6, Section 11 of the Arkansas Constitution which is captioned "Incompatible Offices" and provides, "No member of Congress, or other person holding office under the authority of this State, or of the United States, shall exercise the office of Governor, except as herein provided." In citing this constitutional language, the Party concludes the Governor's resignation now that he has been elected President cannot be doubted. Of course, this is an assumption or conclusion the parties to this action are unable to make. Clearly, the above constitutional language does not mean Governor Clinton automatically resigns or vacates his office upon *199 being sworn in as President. In addition, such dual officeholder issues are decided in quo warranto or ouster, not declaratory judgment, proceedings.

My natural inclination is much like the majority court's and the parties' to this case—that (1) the Governor likely will resign sometime prior to January 20, 1993, (2) a vacancy will then exist and (3) the succession problem will be a reality. However, to indulge in this assumption on the actual facts of this case is to ignore an entire body of law that provides this court only grants declaratory judgment relief when a present actual controversy exists and all interested persons are made parties. This court's apparent willingness to address the hypothetical facts present here breaks with clear, prior precedent and, in my view, will permit parties henceforth to stipulate to future facts and events in order to obtain declaratory relief and advisory opinions. This court, instead, should require the presence of Governor Clinton in this lawsuit either as a party or a witness, so a finding as to his resignation from or vacating of office can be established. Only then will an actual controversy exist, allowing this court to decide the succession issue.

One last point—the Democratic Party, recognizing justiciability as a problem, asserts this court nevertheless can declare the law concerning the Governor-succession issue because this is a case of extreme public importance. In support of this assertion, it cites Robinson v. Arkansas Game and Fish Commission, 263 Ark. 462, 565 S.W.2d 433 (1978); Moorman v. Taylor, 227 Ark. 180, 297 S.W.2d 103 (1957); and Rockefeller v. Purcell, 245 Ark. 536, 434 S.W.2d 72 (1968). Suffice it to say, each of these cases, unlike the present case, once involved a justiciable controversy, but the actual controversy later became moot for one reason or another. Here, as already discussed, an actual controversy is yet to occur. The cases cited are simply not on point.

For the reasons above, I would reverse.

ADVISORY OPINION TO ACTING GOVERNOR JOHNS.

Sept. 29, 1953.

On request of acting governor of Florida for an advisory opinion. The Supreme Court held that where state warrants were prepared prior to death of governor of state, and such warrants were signed by comptroller and countersigned in usual manner in name of governor, and warrants were for date subsequent to death of governor, president of the senate, upon whom duties of governor devolved under constitution when governor died, had authority to make executive proclamation adopting, confirming and ratifying such countersignatures as acting governor, and upon such proclamation could cause such warrants to be delivered to payees thereof to be accepted and paid by treasurer of state.

Questions answered.

*413 PER CURIAM.

Honorable Charley E. Johns

Acting Governor

Tallahassee, Florida

Sir:

We are in receipt of your request of September 29, 1953, for advisory opinion as follows:

'Honorable B. K. Roberts, Chief Justice, and The Justices of the Supreme Court of Florida

'Tallahassee, Florida

'Re: State Warrants heretofore prepared and signed by former Governor McCarty but not delivered; official signature of President of the Senate when duties of Governor devolve upon him.

'Gentlemen:

'It is my painful duty to advise you that His Excellency Governor Dan McCarty has died, and under the Constitution the duties of Governor devolve upon me as President of the Senate.

'Under Section 6, Article 4 of the State Constitution [F.S.A.] I am directed to take care that the laws of this state are faithfully executed and under Section 13 of Article 4, I am authorized to request the written opinion of the Justices of the Supreme Court as to the interpretation of any portion of the State Constitution about any question affecting my executive duties and powers.

*414 'Under Section 24 of Article 4 of the State Constitution, funds may be disbursed from the state treasury only upon the order of the Comptroller, countersigned by the Governor in such manner as shall be prescribed by law.

'Section 1, Article 4 of the State Constitution, provides that the supreme executive power of the state shall be vested in the chief magistrate who shall be styled the Governor of Florida.

'Prior to the death of Governor McCarty on September 28, 1953, many thousand state warrants, several thousand of them representing the payroll of state employees, were prepared and Governor McCarty's signature placed thereon in the usual manner with his full knowledge and consent, which warrants have not yet been delivered. My problem is whether or not I should require the reissuance of all of said warrants bearing my signature or permit the delivery of the above mentioned warrants by the State Comptroller.

'I therefore propound to you the following questions and request your advice or opinion concerning the same:

'1. May I under the powers and duties of Governor devolved upon me pursuant to Section 19 of Article 4, direct that the State Comptroller issue and deliver the above mentioned warrants to the payees named therein without my signature appearing thereon?

'2. If the above question is answered in the negative, then may I by executive order or proclamation approve and adopt the signature of Governor McCarty appearing thereon and direct the issuance and delivery of said state warrants to the payees therein named?

'3. In signing official documents and acts, should I sign the same as Governor, as Acting Governor, or in some other form? If in some other form, please advise me the form in which I should sign.

'Respectfully submitted,

'Charley E. Johns

'President of the Senate upon whom has devolved the duties of Governor by virtue of Section 19, Article 4 of the State Constitution'

[1] In response to your questions one and two which, for convenience, are answered jointly, you are advised that as to those warrants prepared prior to the death of Governor Dan T. McCarty, but bearing date subsequent thereto and which have been heretofore signed by the Comptroller and countersigned in the usual manner 'Dan McCarty, Governor', you may make an executive proclamation adopting, confirming and ratifying said countersignatures aforementioned as your own, as Acting Governor under Section 19, Article IV, of the Constitution of Florida; and upon your so proclaiming, you are advised that you are authorized to cause to be delivered such warrants to the payees thereof to be accepted and paid by the Treasurer of the State of Florida and the funds disbursed accordingly.

[2] In response to your question three, you are advised that under Section 19, Article IV, of the Constitution of Florida, the powers and duties of Governor have devolved upon you by virtue of the death of Governor Dan T. McCarty and it is our opinion that, when performing such executive duties, you are authorized to designate yourself as Acting Governor, by virtue of Section 19, Article IV of the Constitution.

Respectfully submitted,

MEMORANDUM

---

To: Jeff Thompson
From: David Ranscht
Date: December 7, 2016
Re: Gubernatorial Succession Provisions

---

***The federal 25th Amendment replaces language in original article II, § 1 that used the verb “devolve.”

Arizona

Ariz. Const. art. 5, § 6 uses the verb “succeed:”

In the event of the death of the governor, or his resignation, removal from office, or permanent disability to discharge the duties of the office, the secretary of state, if holding by election, shall succeed to the office of governor until his successor shall be elected and shall qualify. If the secretary of state be holding otherwise than by election, or shall fail to qualify as governor, the attorney general, the state treasurer, or the superintendent of public instruction, if holding by election, shall, in the order named, succeed to the office of governor. . . . Any successor to the office shall become governor in fact and entitled to all of the emoluments, powers and duties of governor upon taking the oath of office.

In the event of the impeachment of the governor, his absence from the state, or other temporary disability to discharge the duties of the office, the powers and duties of the office of governor shall devolve upon the same person as in case of vacancy, but only until the disability ceases.

Westlaw notes that a proposed amendment to this provision is currently pending voter approval. My review of the amendment indicates that the amendment simply replaces “secretary of state” with “lieutenant governor.”

Arkansas

Ark. Const. art. 6, § 4. Section 4 provides, “In case of the impeachment of the Governor, or his or her removal from office, death, inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, or resignation, the powers and duties of the office, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease.”

Notwithstanding this language, the Arkansas Supreme Court concluded in Stratton v. Priest, 932 S.W.2d 321, 321 (Ark. 1996), that the governor’s resignation meant the lieutenant governor “became governor.” The Stratton case involved a challenge to the special election that the lieutenant governor ordered to fill the vacancy he left.

The Stratton case also followed the Arkansas Supreme Court’s decision in Bryant v. English, 843 S.W.2d 308, 309 (Ark. 1992), which followed Bill Clinton’s resignation after his election as President. The court concluded “the Office of Governor itself devolves upon the Lieutenant Governor.” Id. The opinion discusses the need to have the state’s chief executive elected by a statewide vote—and so it differentiates between the lieutenant governor and the President of the Senate, who “had been directly elected only by the voters of a local state Senate district.” Id. at 312. This, of course, does not solve the problem that occurs if the lieutenant governor becomes governor, appoints someone, and then is incapacitated themselves.

Additionally, the Bryant opinion identifies possible “mixing of executive and legislative powers” if the lieutenant governor merely holds the powers of governor, but not the office. Id. at 312. And it identifies historical practice of treating the “lieutenant governor as governor when he filled a vacant governor’s office.” Id. at 312.

California

Cal. Const. art. 5, § 10: “The Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor when a vacancy occurs in the office of Governor.”

California also distinguishes between becoming governor and acting as governor: “The Lieutenant Governor shall act as Governor during the impeachment, absence from the State, or other temporary disability of the Governor . . . .” Id.

Additionally, California gives its supreme court “exclusive jurisdiction to determine all questions arising under this section.” Id.

Delaware

Del. Const. art. 3, § 20:

In case the person elected Governor shall die or become disqualified before the commencement of his or her term of office, or shall refuse to take the same, or in case of the removal of the Governor from office, or of his or her death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Lieutenant-Governor; and in case of removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, the Secretary of State, or if there be none, or in case of his or her removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Attorney-General, or if there be none, or in case of his or her removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the President pro tempore of the Senate or if there be none, or in case of his or her removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall act as Governor until the disability of the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor is removed, or a Governor shall be duly elected and qualified.

Whenever the powers and duties of the office of Governor shall devolve upon the Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of State, or Attorney-General, his or her office shall become vacant; and whenever the powers and duties of the office of Governor shall devolve upon the President pro tempore of the Senate, or the Speaker of the House of Representatives, his or her seat as a member of the General Assembly shall become vacant; and any such vacancy shall be filled as directed by this Constitution; provided, however, that such vacancy shall not be created in case either of the said persons shall be acting as Governor during a temporary disability of the Governor.

Florida

Lieutenant governor “shall become governor” upon a gubernatorial vacancy. However, lieutenant governor “shall act as governor” when the governor is physically or mentally incapacitated. Fla. Const. art. 4, § 3(a)–(b).

A previous version of the Florida Constitution apparently used “devolve” language. See Advisory Opinion to Governor, 217 So. 2d 289, 292 n.* (Fla. 1968) (noting the relevant language is part of the “1968 revision”); Advisory Opinion to Acting Governor Johns, 67 So. 2d 413, 414 (Fla. 1953) (referring to powers devolved upon the lieutenant governor and permitting the lieutenant governor to “designate [him]self as Acting Governor”).

Hawaii

Haw. Const. art. 5, § 4: “When the office of governor is vacant, the lieutenant governor shall become governor. In the event of the absence of the governor from the State, or the governor's inability to exercise and discharge the powers and duties of the governor's office, such powers and duties shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor during such absence or disability.”

Pennsylvania features a similar distinction between vacancy and disability (see below).

Kansas

Distinguishes between resignation and disability; uses “shall become governor.” Kan. Const. art. 1, § 11: “When the office of governor is vacant, the lieutenant governor shall become governor. In the event of the disability of the governor, the lieutenant governor shall assume the powers and duties of governor until the disability is removed.”

Maryland

Md. Const. art. 2, § 6(d): the lieutenant governor “shall succeed to th[e] office” when there is a gubernatorial vacancy. However, “The Lieutenant Governor shall serve as acting Governor” when the governor is disabled or temporarily unable to perform the duties of the office. Id. § 6(b).

Minnesota

Lieutenant governor “shall be governor” if “a vacancy occurs from any cause whatever in the office of governor.” Minn. Const. art. 5, § 5. Powers “devolve” from governor to lieutenant governor if the governor is unable to discharge the duties of the office. Id.

Missouri

Mo. Const. art. 4, § 11(a): “If the governor-elect dies before taking office, the lieutenant governor-elect shall take the term of the governor-elect. On the death, conviction or impeachment, or resignation of the governor, the lieutenant governor shall become governor for the remainder of the term. If there be no lieutenant governor the president pro tempore of the senate, the speaker of the house, the secretary of state, the state auditor, the state treasurer or the attorney general in succession shall become governor. On the failure to qualify, absence from the state or other disability of the governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the governor shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the remainder of the term or until the disability is removed.”

New Hampshire

N.H. Const. pt. 2, art. 49 provides the successor shall “act as” governor and also expressly confers the title of “Acting Governor.” New Hampshire also provides for a special election if the vacancy occurs with more than one year before the end of the term.

New Jersey

N.J. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶ 6: “In the event of a vacancy in the office of Governor resulting from the death, resignation or removal of a Governor in office, or the death of a Governor-elect, or from any other cause, the Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor, until a new Governor is elected and qualifies.”

In a 19th-century case, possibly occurring before New Jersey had provisions establishing the position of lieutenant governor, the New Jersey Supreme Court concluded a gubernatorial vacancy does not bestow the office itself upon the successor:

The provision is that, in case of the resignation of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate, and not that the president of the senate shall thereby become governor, and hold the title and the office until another governor is elected. If the framers of the fundamental law had intended to transfer the president of the senate to the executive chair, and thereby to vacate his office of senator, it is reasonable to believe that they would have said so in no uncertain language. The language used is not ambiguous. It declares that the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve on the president of the senate; it does not confer upon him the title of the office. The president of the senate exercises the powers of the governor; the president of the senate performs the duties of the governor; the president of the senate receives the emoluments of that office. He is still president of the senate, with the added duties required of the chief executive of the state imposed upon him.

New York

N.Y. Const. art. 4, § 5: “In case of the removal of the governor from office or of his or her death or resignation, the lieutenant-governor shall become governor for the remainder of the term.”

North Carolina

Lieutenant governor “shall become Governor” upon governor’s resignation. N.C. Const. art. III, § 3(1). However, upon the governor’s disability, lieutenant governor “shall be Acting Governor.” Id. § 3(3).

North Dakota (another “shall succeed to the office” state)

N.D. Const. art. 5, § 11: “The lieutenant governor shall succeed to the office of governor when a vacancy occurs in the office of governor.”

Oklahoma

Okla. Const. art. 6, § 16: “In case of impeachment of the Governor, or of his death, failure to qualify, resignation, removal from the State, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term or until the disability shall be removed.”

In a 1926 case, the Oklahoma Supreme Court concluded that notwithstanding the “devolve” language, the successor becomes governor. Fitzpatrick v. McAlister, 248 P. 569, 572–73 (Okla. 1926). A dissent in the case suggested that if the lieutenant governor becomes governor and appoints a new lieutenant governor, the clear line of succession could be interrupted, preventing the senate president from ever succeeding to the duties of governor. Id. at 581 (Branson, V.C.J., dissenting).

Oregon

Or. Const. art. V, § 8a: “shall become Governor.”

Pennsylvania

Pa. Const. art. 4, § 13: In the case of the death, conviction on impeachment, failure to qualify or resignation of the Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor for the remainder of the term and in the case of the disability of the Governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor until the disability is removed.”

South Dakota

West Virginia

W. Va. Const. art. 7, § 16: “In case of the death, conviction or impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, or other disability of the governor, the president of the Senate shall act as governor until the vacancy is filled, or the disability removed; and if the president of the Senate, for any of the above named causes, shall become incapable of performing the duties of governor, the same shall devolve upon the speaker of the House of Delegates; and in all other cases where there is no one to act as governor, one shall be chosen by joint vote of the Legislature. Whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of governor before the first three years of the term shall have expired, a new election for governor shall take place to fill the vacancy.”

Interesting provision in the final sentence that provides a special election must take place depending on when in the term the vacancy occurs.

Wisconsin

Lieutenant governor “shall become governor” if the governor dies, resigns, or is removed. Wis. Const. art. 5, § 7(1). Lieutenant governor “shall serve as acting governor” if the governor is absent or disabled. Id. § 7(2).

Good work on the edits. I think the letter is looking pretty good.

Apr 19

Thanks. I think some of the generic case citations (for propositions like "consider the circumstances surrounding enactment) actually really strengthen it.

1. Resignation of the Governor – Must be made in writing to the General Assembly, if in session, if not, to the Secretary of State. Iowa Code § 69.4(1).
2. Upon resignation, the Office of Governor is considered vacant. § 69.2(1)(d).
3. The vacancy is filled by the Lieutenant Governor. Iowa Const. Art. IV, Sec. 17 (“In the case of the death, impeachment, resignation . . . of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, . . . shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.”)
4. Once the Lt. Governor becomes governor, it creates a vacancy in the Lt. Governor’s office because of the prohibition against simultaneously holding more than one elective office. See Iowa Code § 69.2(1)(h).
5. In general, vacancies in state offices are filled by the governor. § 69.8(2).
6. The Code specifically provides, “an appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of the lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term.” § 69.8(2).

Accordingly, a resignation by Gov. Branstad would create a vacancy that would be filled by Lt. Gov. Reynolds. Once she assumed the office of Governor, a vacancy would be created in the Lt. Governor’s office. The governor has the power and authority to appoint a new Lt. Governor who would serve for the balance of the Branstad/ Reynolds term.

We have reviewed for any relevant case law or Attorney General Opinions, and have not found any that would alter the above analysis.

Thanks, Geoff. One more thing, historically, when an Iowa Gov has left office before the end of his term, there has not been a Lt. Gov. appointed. Most of the time, these were very short periods of time, though.

Importance: High

Eric and Geoff:

In Massachusetts, when Governor William Weld resigned in 1997, Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci became "Acting Governor" – not "Governor." When Cellucci resigned to become US Ambassador to Canada during the Bush Administration in 2001, his Lt. Gov. Jane Swift became "Acting Governor."

Massachusetts Constitution has a similar provision to the Iowa Constitution:

III.—Whenever the chair of the Governor shall be vacant, by reason of his death, or absence from the Commonwealth, or otherwise, the Lieutenant-Governor, for the time being, shall, during such vacancy, perform all the duties incumbent upon the Governor, and shall have and exercise all the powers and authorities, which by this Constitution the Governor is vested with, when personally present.

Hope this is helpful.

MEMORANDUM

---

To: Jeff Thompson, Meghan Gavin
From: David Ranscht
Date: December 7, 2016 (updated December 8, 2016)
Re: Gubernatorial Succession Provisions

---

Alabama

Ala. Const. art. V, § 127: “In case of the governor’s removal from office, death or resignation, the lieutenant governor shall become governor.”

Alaska

Alaska Const. art. 3, § 11: “In case of a vacancy in the office of governor for any reason, the lieutenant governor shall succeed to the office for the remainder of the term.”

Arizona

Ariz. Const. art. 5, § 6 uses the verb “succeed:”

In the event of the death of the governor, or his resignation, removal from office, or permanent disability to discharge the duties of the office, the secretary of state, if holding by election, shall succeed to the office of governor until his successor shall be elected and shall qualify. If the secretary of state be holding otherwise than by election, or shall fail to qualify as governor, the attorney general, the state treasurer, or the superintendent of public instruction, if holding by election, shall, in the order named, succeed to the office of governor. . . . Any successor to the office shall become governor in fact and entitled to all of the emoluments, powers and duties of governor upon taking the oath of office.

In the event of the impeachment of the governor, his absence from the state, or other temporary disability to discharge the duties of the office, the powers and duties of the office of governor shall devolve upon the same person as in case of vacancy, but only until the disability ceases.

However, before the current language, Arizona also used “devolve.” Under that language, the Arizona Supreme Court concluded “where the duties of the office of governor devolve on the president of the senate, he does not become governor.” State v. Garvey, 195 P.2d 153, 154 (Ariz. 1948).

Arkansas

Ark. Const. art. 6, § 4. Section 4 provides, “In case of the impeachment of the Governor, or his or her removal from office, death, inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, or resignation, the powers and duties of the office, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease.”

Notwithstanding this language, the Arkansas Supreme Court concluded in Stratton v. Priest, 932 S.W.2d 321, 321 (Ark. 1996), that the governor’s resignation meant the lieutenant governor “became governor.” The Stratton case involved a challenge to the special election that the lieutenant governor ordered to fill the vacancy he left.

The Stratton case also followed the Arkansas Supreme Court’s decision in Bryant v. English, 843 S.W.2d 308, 309 (Ark. 1992), which followed Bill Clinton’s resignation after his election as President. The court concluded “the Office of Governor itself devolves upon the Lieutenant Governor.” Id. The opinion discusses the need to have the state’s chief executive elected by a statewide vote—and so it differentiates between the lieutenant governor and the President of the Senate, who “had been directly elected only by the voters of a local state Senate district.” Id. at 312. This, of course, does not solve the problem that occurs if the lieutenant governor becomes governor, appoints someone, and then is incapacitated themselves.

Additionally, the Bryant opinion identifies possible “mixing of executive and legislative powers” if the lieutenant governor merely holds the powers of governor, but not the office. Id. at 312. And it identifies historical practice of treating the “lieutenant governor as governor when he filled a vacant governor’s office.” Id. at 312.

California

Cal. Const. art. 5, § 10: “The Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor when a vacancy occurs in the office of Governor.”

California also distinguishes between becoming governor and acting as governor: “The Lieutenant Governor shall act as Governor during the impeachment, absence from the State, or other temporary disability of the Governor . . . .” Id.

But before enacting its current language, California used the word “devolve:”

[I]t is provided that in case of the death, resignation, impeachment, absence from the state, or inability to act of the governor, “the powers and duties of his office shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease.” It will be seen that in case of a vacancy in the office of governor the vacancy is not to be filled, but the powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor, who does not cease to be lieutenant governor. Under such circumstances it would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor the latter thereby becomes governor, and can appoint a lieutenant governor.

People v. Budd, 45 P. 1060, 1060 (1896).

Colorado

Colo. Const. art. 4, § 13(1): “In the case of the death, impeachment, conviction of a felony, or resignation of the governor, the office of governor shall be vacant and the lieutenant governor shall take the oath of office and shall become governor.”

Connecticut

Death, resignation, refusal to serve, or removal: lieutenant governor shall be governor. Conn. Const. art. 4, § 18(a).

Impeachment or absence: lieutenant governor “shall exercise the powers and authority and perform the duties appertaining to the office of governor.” Id. § 18(b).

Delaware

Del. Const. art. 3, § 20:

In case the person elected Governor shall die or become disqualified before the commencement of his or her term of office, or shall refuse to take the same, or in case of the removal of the Governor from office, or of his or her death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Lieutenant-Governor; and in case of removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, the Secretary of State, or if there be none, or in case of his or her removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Attorney-General, or if there be none, or in case of his or her removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the President pro tempore of the Senate or if there be none, or in case of his or her removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall act as Governor until the disability of the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor is removed, or a Governor shall be duly elected and qualified.

Whenever the powers and duties of the office of Governor shall devolve upon the Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of State, or Attorney-General, his or her office shall become vacant; and whenever the powers and duties of the office of Governor shall devolve upon the President pro tempore of the Senate, or the Speaker of the House of Representatives, his or her seat as a member of the General Assembly shall become vacant; and any such vacancy shall be filled as directed by this Constitution; provided, however, that such vacancy shall not be created in case either of the said persons shall be acting as Governor during a temporary disability of the Governor.

Florida

Lieutenant governor “shall become governor” upon a gubernatorial vacancy. However, lieutenant governor “shall act as governor” when the governor is physically or mentally incapacitated. Fla. Const. art. 4, § 3(a)–(b).

A previous version of the Florida Constitution apparently used “devolve” language. See Advisory Opinion to Governor, 217 So. 2d 289, 292 n.* (Fla. 1968) (noting the relevant language is part of the “1968 revision”); Advisory Opinion to Acting Governor Johns, 67 So. 2d 413, 414 (Fla. 1953) (referring to powers devolved upon the lieutenant governor and permitting the lieutenant governor to “designate [him]self as Acting Governor”).

Georgia

Temporary disability: lieutenant governor “shall exercise the powers and duties of the Governor.” Ga. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶ V(a).

Death, resignation, or permanent disability: lieutenant governor “shall become the Governor.” Id. § 1, ¶ V(b).

Hawaii

Haw. Const. art. 5, § 4: “When the office of governor is vacant, the lieutenant governor shall become governor. In the event of the absence of the governor from the State, or the governor’s inability to exercise and discharge the powers and duties of the governor’s office, such powers and duties shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor during such absence or disability.”

Idaho

If the governor resigns, the “powers, duties, and emoluments of the office . . . devolve upon the lieutenant governor.” Idaho Const. art. IV, § 12. No distinction is made between permanent vacancies (resignation/death) and temporary ones (absence/disability).

Illinois

Ill. Const. art. 5, § 6(b): “If the Governor is unable to serve because of death, conviction on impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation or other disability, the office of Governor shall be filled by the officer next in line of succession for the remainder of the term or until the disability is removed.”

If the governor “determines that he may be seriously impeded in the exercise of his powers,” the Constitution provides for an Acting Governor. Id. § 6(c).

Indiana

Lieutenant governor “shall become governor” if governor resigns, but “shall discharge the powers and duties of the office as Acting Governor” if governor is incapacitated. Ind. Const. art. 5, § 10(a).

Kansas

Kan. Const. art. 1, § 11: “When the office of governor is vacant, the lieutenant governor shall become governor. In the event of the disability of the governor, the lieutenant governor shall assume the powers and duties of governor until the disability is removed.”

Kentucky

Ky. Const. § 84: “Should the Governor be impeached and removed from office, die, refuse to qualify, resign, certify by entry on his Journal that he is unable to discharge the duties of his office, or be, from any cause, unable to discharge the duties of his office, the Lieutenant Governor shall exercise all the power and authority appertaining to the office of Governor until another be duly elected and qualified, or the Governor shall be able to discharge the duties of his office.”

No distinction between permanent vacancies and temporary ones.

Louisiana

No provision specifically addressing the label attached to gubernatorial succession. The Louisiana Constitution merely provides “the order of succession” when a vacancy occurs. La. Const. art. 4, § 14. However, “When the governor is temporarily absent from the state, the lieutenant governor shall act as governor.” Id. § 19.

Maine

Me. Const. art. 5, pt. 1, § 14: “Whenever the office of Governor shall become vacant because of the death, resignation or removal of a Governor in office, or any other cause, the President of the Senate shall assume the office of Governor until another Governor shall be duly qualified.”

Maryland

Md. Const. art. 2, § 6(d): the lieutenant governor “shall succeed to th[e] office” when there is a gubernatorial vacancy. However, “The Lieutenant Governor shall serve as acting Governor” when the governor is disabled or temporarily unable to perform the duties of the office. Id. § 6(b).

Massachusetts

Mass. Const. pt. 2, ch. II, § II, art. III: “Whenever the chair of the governor shall be vacant, by reason of his death, or absence from the commonwealth, or otherwise, the lieutenant governor, for the time being, shall, during such vacancy, perform all the duties incumbent upon the governor, and shall have and exercise all the powers and authorities, which by this constitution the governor is vested with, when personally present.”

Michigan

Mich. Const. art. 5, § 26: “In case of the conviction of the governor on impeachment, his removal from office, his resignation or his death, the lieutenant governor, the elected secretary of state, the elected attorney general and such other persons designated by law shall in that order be governor for the remainder of the governor’s term.”

Westlaw lists the following “note of decision” for this provision: “In the event of a vacancy in the office of governor, the functions of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor or the next elected official in succession, but the exercise of the functions of the office of governor by the lieutenant governor does not create a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor which can be filled by appointment.” Op.Atty.Gen.1939-40, p. 69.

I will attempt to track this AG opinion down in the near future (the link is not clickable on Westlaw). A quick review of the Michigan AG’s website indicates opinions are only available online if they were issued after 1963.

Minnesota

Lieutenant governor “shall be governor” if “a vacancy occurs from any cause whatever in the office of governor.” Minn. Const. art. 5, § 5. Powers “devolve” from governor to lieutenant governor if the governor is unable to discharge the duties of the office. Id.

Mississippi

Miss. Const. art. 5, § 131: “When the office of Governor shall become vacant, by death or otherwise, the Lieutenant Governor shall possess the powers and discharge the duties of the office. When the Governor shall be absent from the State, or unable, from protracted illness, to perform the duties of the office, the Lieutenant Governor shall discharge the duties of said office until the Governor be able to resume his duties . . . .”

Missouri

Mo. Const. art. 4, § 11(a): “If the governor-elect dies before taking office, the lieutenant governor-elect shall take the term of the governor-elect. On the death, conviction or impeachment, or resignation of the governor, the lieutenant governor shall become governor for the remainder of the term. If there be no lieutenant governor the president pro tempore of the senate, the speaker of the house, the secretary of state, the state auditor, the state treasurer or the attorney general in succession shall become governor. On the failure to qualify, absence from the state or other disability of the governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the governor shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the remainder of the term or until the disability is removed.”

Montana

“If the office of governor becomes vacant by reason of death, resignation, or disqualification, the lieutenant governor shall become governor for the remainder of the term, except as provided in this constitution.” Mont. Const. art. VI, § 14(6).

“When there is a vacancy in the office of governor, the successor shall be the governor. The acting governor shall have the powers and duties of the office of governor only for the period during which he serves.” Id. § 14(8). An “acting governor” only happens when the governor requests it of the lieutenant governor or when the governor is disabled. See id. § 14(2)–(4).

However, at some point in the past Montana had “devolve” language, and concluded under that language that a governor’s resignation does not create a vacancy in either the office of governor or lieutenant governor. See State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d 369, 370–72 (Mont. 1934).

Nebraska

Impeachment, removal, resignation death: “shall . . . be Governor.” Neb. Const. art. IV, § 16.
Absence/disability: “powers and duties of the office . . . shall devolve.” Id.

Nevada

Nevada uses “devolve.” Nev. Const. art. 5, § 18. In a nineteenth-century case, the Nevada Supreme Court stated: “If a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor, but there is no vacancy created thereby in the office of lieutenant governor. The officer remains lieutenant governor, but invested with the powers and duties of governor.” State v. Sadler, 47 P. 450, 450 (1897).

New Hampshire

N.H. Const. pt. 2, art. 49 provides the successor shall “act as” governor and also expressly confers the title of “Acting Governor.” New Hampshire also provides for a special election if the vacancy occurs with more than one year before the end of the term.

New Jersey

N.J. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶ 6: “In the event of a vacancy in the office of Governor resulting from the death, resignation or removal of a Governor in office, or the death of a Governor-elect, or from any other cause, the Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor, until a new Governor is elected and qualifies.”

In a 19th-century case, possibly occurring before New Jersey had provisions establishing the position of lieutenant governor, the New Jersey Supreme Court concluded a gubernatorial vacancy does not bestow the office itself upon the successor:

The provision is that, in case of the resignation of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate, and not that the president of the senate shall thereby become governor, and hold the title and the office until another governor is elected. If the framers of the fundamental law had intended to transfer the president of the senate to the executive chair, and thereby to vacate his office of senator, it is reasonable to believe that they would have said so in no uncertain language. The language used is not ambiguous. It declares that the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve on the president of the senate; it does not confer upon him the title of the office. The president of the senate exercises the powers of the governor; the president of the senate performs the duties of the governor; the president of the senate receives the emoluments of that office. He is still president of the senate, with the added duties required of the chief executive of the state imposed upon him.

New Mexico

Vacancy: “shall succeed to th[e] office.” N.M. Const. art. 5, § 7.

Absence/disability: “shall act as governor.” Id.

New York

N.Y. Const. art. 4, § 5: “In case of the removal of the governor from office or of his or her death or resignation, the lieutenant-governor shall become governor for the remainder of the term.”

North Carolina

Lieutenant governor “shall become Governor” upon governor’s resignation. N.C. Const. art. III, § 3(1). However, upon the governor’s disability, lieutenant governor “shall be Acting Governor.” Id. § 3(3).

North Dakota (another “shall succeed to the office” state)

N.D. Const. art. 5, § 11: “The lieutenant governor shall succeed to the office of governor when a vacancy occurs in the office of governor.”

Ohio

Death, conviction on impeachment, resignation, or removal: "Lieutenant Governor shall succeed to the office of governor." Ohio Const. art. III, § 15(A).

Disability: "shall serve as governor." Id. § 15(B).

"Any person servicing as governor for the duration of the Governor's disability shall have the powers, duties, and compensation of the office of governor. Any person who succeeds to the office of governor shall have the powers, duties, title, and compensation of the office of governor." Id. § 15(D).

Oklahoma

Okla. Const. art. 6, § 16: "In case of impeachment of the Governor, or of his death, failure to qualify, resignation, removal from the State, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term or until the disability shall be removed."

In a 1926 case, the Oklahoma Supreme Court concluded that notwithstanding the "devolve" language, the successor becomes governor. Fitzpatrick v. McAlister, 248 P. 569, 572-73 (Okla. 1926). A dissent in the case suggested that if the lieutenant governor becomes governor and appoints a new lieutenant governor, the clear line of succession could be interrupted, preventing the senate president from ever succeeding to the duties of governor. Id. at 581 (Branson, V.C.J., dissenting).

Oregon

Or. Const. art. V, § 8a: "shall become Governor."

Pennsylvania

Pa. Const. art. 4, § 13: In the case of the death, conviction on impeachment, failure to qualify or resignation of the Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor for the remainder of the term and in the case of the disability of the Governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor until the disability is removed."

Rhode Island

R.I. Const. art. IX, § 9: "If the office of the governor shall be vacant by reason of death, resignation, impeachment or inability to serve, the lieutenant governor shall fill the office of governor, and exercise the powers and authority appertaining thereto, until a governor is qualified to act, or until the office is filled at the next election."

South Carolina

S.C. Const. art. IV, § 11: “In the case of the removal of the Governor from office by impeachment, death, resignation, disqualification, disability, or removal from the State, the Lieutenant Governor shall be Governor. In case the Governor be impeached, the Lieutenant Governor shall act in his stead and have his powers until judgment in the case shall have been pronounced. In the case of the temporary disability of the Governor and in the event of the temporary absence of the Governor from the State, the Lieutenant Governor shall have full authority to act in an emergency.”

South Dakota

Tennessee

Tenn. Const. art. 3, § 12: “In case of the removal of the Governor from office, or of his death, or resignation, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve on the Speaker of the Senate . . . .”

Texas

Temporary inability, disqualification, or absence: “exercise the powers and authority appertaining to the office.” Tex. Const. art. 4, § 16(c).

However, “if the office of Governor becomes vacant, the Lieutenant Governor becomes Governor for the remainder of the term being served by the Governor who refused or became unable to serve or vacated the office. On becoming Governor, the person vacates the office of Lieutenant Governor, and the resulting vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor shall be filled in the manner provided by [the Texas Constitution].” Id. § 16(d).

In a 1951 case, the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals took judicial knowledge of the fact that the governor died in 1949 and the lieutenant governor “succeeded to the office of Governor.” Ex parte Raulie, 237 S.W.2d 998, 999 (Tex. Crim. App. 1951).

Utah

Utah defines vacancy to include resignation. Utah Const. art. 7, § 11(1)(a). If a vacancy occurs, the lieutenant governor “shall become governor.” Id. § 11(2). In turn, the Utah Constitution allows the new governor to select a new lieutenant governor. Id. § 10(3)(c).

However, before 2008, the Utah Constitution, like Iowa, used “devolve.” The Utah Attorney General issued an advisory opinion in 2003 on the exact question of succession we are now confronting. Utah A.G. Opinion No. 03-001, 2003 WL 21996258. The opinion concluded “devolve” means that the lieutenant governor becomes governor.

Vermont

The Vermont Constitution simply instructs the legislature to “provide by general law what officer shall act as Governor whenever there shall be a vacancy in” both the offices of governor and lieutenant governor. Vt. Const. ch. II, § 24. The relevant statute is Vt. Stat. tit. 20, § 183, which simply establishes the order.

Additionally, ch. II, § 19 provides that the lieutenant governor “shall be President of the Senate, except when exercising the office of Governor.”

Virginia

Removal from office, disqualification, death, or resignation: “shall become Governor.” Va. Const. art. 5, § 16.

Disability: “Acting Governor.” Id.

Washington

Wash. Const. art. 3, § 10: “In case of the removal, resignation, death or disability of the governor, the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor . . . .”

Under the provision, the Washington Supreme Court has concluded:

The constitution having provided that in case of the death of the governor the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of governor. . . . When the lieutenant governor, by virtue of his office and of the command of the constitution, assumed the duties of governor on the death of Gov. Rogers, the office of lieutenant governor did not thereby become vacant, but the officer remained lieutenant governor, intrusted with the powers and duties of governor.

State v. McBride, 70 P. 25, 26 (Wash. 1902).

West Virginia

W. Va. Const. art. 7, § 16: “In case of the death, conviction or impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, or other disability of the governor, the president of the Senate shall act as governor until the vacancy is filled, or the disability removed; and if the president of the Senate, for any of the above named causes, shall become incapable of performing the duties of governor, the same shall devolve upon the speaker of the House of Delegates; and in all other cases where there is no one to act as governor, one shall be chosen by joint vote of the Legislature. Whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of governor before the first three years of the term shall have expired, a new election for governor shall take place to fill the vacancy.”

Interesting provision in the final sentence that provides a special election must take place depending on when in the term the vacancy occurs.

Wisconsin

Lieutenant governor “shall become governor” if the governor dies, resigns, or is removed. Wis. Const. art. 5, § 7(1). Lieutenant governor “shall serve as acting governor” if the governor is absent or disabled. Id. § 7(2).

Wyoming

Wyo. Const. art. 4, § 6: “If the governor be impeached, displaced, resign or die, or from mental or physical disease or otherwise become incapable of performing the duties of his office or be absent from the state, the secretary of state shall act as governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed.”

In a case involving the provision the Wyoming Supreme Court concluded that “in a technical sense the [success]or is not Governor” and that “in a limited sense the office of Governor is vacant.” State v. Grant, 73 P. 470, 475 (Wyo. 1903). The court’s discussion of vacancy is also worthwhile, since the entire question we are confronting is about the technicality and the reason for the provision:

We deem it unnecessary to discuss technically the question of vacancy in the office. In the sense that the law contemplates that there shall be an incumbent of the office regularly chosen to that position, it may be admitted that a vacancy has occurred, and continues to exist, which can be filled only through an election by the people. But the office is now supplied in the manner provided by the Constitution and statutes, with an incumbent who is legally qualified to exercise its powers and perform the duties which pertain to it; and, although such incumbent is merely designated as an Acting Governor, he is for all practical purposes in possession of the office and all of its prerogatives.

Rehearing Denied May 24, 2012.

Synopsis

Background: Students brought action against State, alleging that public school system was not adequately serving students in largest or smallest school districts. The District Court, Polk County, Karen A. Romano, J., dismissed action. Students appealed.

Holdings: The Supreme Court, Mansfield, J., held that:

[1] students' allegations that State failed to establish statewide public school educational standards, assessments, and teacher training, recruitment, and retention programs were insufficient to state claim for violation of constitutional education clause;

[2] allegations were insufficient to allege disparate treatment, as required to state claim for violation of equal protection guarantee;

[3] any failure of State to establish statewide educational standards, assessments, and teacher training, recruitment, and retention programs did not amount to deprivation of fundamental right;

[4] State's system for setting educational standards was supported by legitimate government interests;

[5] system was rationally connected to such interests; and

[6] students did not have private right of action for claims against State under statute setting out goals for state educational system.

Affirmed.

MANSFIELD, Justice.

A generation ago, in Johnson v. Charles City Community Schools Board of Education, 368 N.W.2d 74, 79 (Iowa 1985), we observed that the “state has a clear right to set minimum educational standards for all its children and a corresponding responsibility to see to it that those standards are honored.” Yet we also concluded that a “court is without either the resources or the expertise necessary” to draft minimum educational standards for private religious schools. Id. at 80.

This case concerns Iowa’s standards for public schools. It asks us, in effect, to require the state to impose additional public school standards, urging that such action is both constitutionally and statutorily required.

⇔ Statutory rights of action

In determining whether a private right of action may be inferred from a statute, court considers four factors: (1) is the plaintiff a member of the class for whose benefit the statute was enacted; (2) is there any indication of legislative intent, explicit or implicit, to either create or deny such a remedy; (3) would allowing such a cause of action be consistent with the underlying purpose of the legislation; and (4) would the private Adhering to the lessons of the Johnson case, we decline the invitation. We hold that plaintiffs’ specific challenges to the educational policies of this state are properly directed to the plaintiffs’ elected representatives, rather than the courts. We find the plaintiffs have not stated claims for relief under article IX, division 2, section 3, article I, section 6, or article I, section 9 of the Iowa Constitution, or Iowa Code section 256.37 (2007).

Our decision does not foreclose future constitutional challenges to actions taken by state or local officials in the vital field of public education. We decide only that this case, brought by these plaintiffs, should not go forward because the factual allegations, even if proved, do not set forth a potential constitutional or statutory violation under the foregoing provisions.

Accordingly, we affirm the district court's dismissal of the plaintiffs' petition.

I. Facts and Procedural Background.

Because this case was decided on a motion to dismiss, our relevant point of reference is the plaintiffs' petition. The plaintiffs' first amended and substituted petition, which the district court ultimately dismissed, is twenty-three pages long. It includes a two-page summary, entitled "Nature of the Lawsuit," as well as thirteen pages of "Factual Allegations."

The sixteen named plaintiffs are students or parents of students who attended or currently attend public schools in the Davenport, Des Moines, or West Harrison Community School Districts. As explained by plaintiffs' counsel at oral argument, plaintiffs' position is that Iowa's educational system is not adequately serving students in either the largest (e.g., Davenport and Des Moines) or the smallest (e.g., West Harrison) school districts. The case is not brought as a class action.

According to the initial summary contained in the petition, "[t]he quiet, ugly truth is that Iowa's educational system is but a shadow of its glorious past and our leaders are whistling by its graveyard." Plaintiffs allege that there exists a "disparity in educational outcomes [in Iowa] based upon where one goes to school" and there has been a "failure[ ] to provide similar educational opportunities for all of Iowa's students."

Plaintiffs have not named any local school officials as defendants. They have sued, rather, the State of Iowa, the Governor of Iowa, the Iowa Department of Education, and the Director of the Department. In their initial summary, plaintiffs allege that these statewide entities and officials "have failed to establish standards, failed to enforce any standards, failed to *6 adopt effective educator pay systems, and failed to establish and maintain an adequate education delivery system."

In the ensuing factual allegations, plaintiffs allege that Iowa's statewide laws and rules are "broad educational requirements and accreditation standards for schools within the State of Iowa." They do not, in plaintiffs' view, contain "specific, detailed information regarding the courses that schools must provide or offer to [their] students nor do they set forth any details regarding the skills that must be attained by students at each grade level." Repeatedly, plaintiffs criticize Iowa for the lack of "state-mandated standards." They maintain that Iowa is the only state without any statewide academic standards. Plaintiffs also fault Iowa for not "providing specific testing of students at various educational levels and in a variety of subject matters like other states," instead relying on the Iowa Test of Basic Skills (ITBS) and the Iowa Test of Educational Development (ITED).

This part of the petition refers to a number of reports and studies.<sup>1</sup> For example, plaintiffs note that according to Education Week's Quality Counts 2008 report, Iowa received a "C" for educational performance.<sup>2</sup>

Plaintiffs also cite Iowa Department of Education statistics that, in their view, show how students attending the smallest school districts (less than 250 students) are disadvantaged. According to the Department's 2007 Annual Condition of Education report, teachers in those districts have, on average, less experience, fewer advanced degrees, and more teaching assignments than their colleagues at the largest school districts, such as Davenport and Des Moines. Iowa Dep't of Educ., The Annual Condition of Education at 47, 75, 76 (2007) [hereinafter The Annual Condition of Education], available at http://educateiowa.gov/index.php?option=com\_docman&task=cat\_view&gid=646&itemid=1563. Unsurprisingly, according to the petition, students in the smallest districts also have fewer curriculum units available to them.<sup>3</sup> Id. at 112.

Additionally, students from Iowa's smallest school districts receive, on average, lower ACT scores. In 2007, according to the Department of Education report, the average ACT composite score was 21.3 for students at districts in the lowest enrollment category (less than 250 students). Id. at 192. By contrast, the average ACT composite score was 22.5 for students attending districts in the largest enrollment category. Id. The petition notes, however, *7 that the national average ACT composite score was 21.2. Id. at 186. Thus, all categories of school districts in Iowa scored above the national average.<sup>4</sup>

Plaintiffs further allege that Iowa's ranking in science and math is "consistently declining"; that Iowa "has continued to decline in the national rankings for math and reading proficiencies and other measures of student achievement"; that "Iowa ranks well below the national average for students taking gateway courses such as Algebra, Algebra 2 or Geometry"; that "Iowa ranks thirty-eighth in the nation for AP [Advanced Placement] test scores"; and that "[m]any Iowa students are not prepared to enter the workforce or post-secondary education without additional training or remediation when they graduate from high school.”

Some of the factual allegations concern “the circumstances of the plaintiffs.” These allegations do not actually discuss the plaintiffs individually, but rather their school districts. According to the petition, one of the districts, West Harrison, has approximately 500 students. (Thus, it does not fall into the smallest category of school district, i.e., less than 250 students, referenced earlier in the petition.) Among other things, plaintiffs allege that West Harrison had an average ACT composite score of 18.6 in 2006, nearly three and a half points below the average ACT score for all Iowa students; that only ten to twelve percent of West Harrison’s teachers have advanced degrees; that West Harrison does not have anyone on staff to assist high school students with college planning or other career counseling; and that classes at West Harrison do not adequately prepare students for a college level curriculum.

With regard to the Davenport school district, plaintiffs do not find fault with teacher experience, staffing, or class availability, but allege that its average composite ACT score in 2007 was 20.5. No allegations are made as to teacher experience, staffing, class availability, or ACT scores in the Des Moines school district. However, with respect to all three of the school districts, plaintiffs allege that the percentages of students found proficient in math and reading according to ITBS and ITED scores generally have ranged between fifty and seventy percent, a level that plaintiffs appear to believe is unsatisfactory.

The petition has two counts seeking relief. In Count I, plaintiffs request a declaratory judgment. They allege that education is a fundamental right or alternatively that the current education laws (“or lack thereof”) are “irrational, arbitrary, and capricious” and not “rationally related to a legitimate governmental interest.” They also allege that “some students are receiving a more effective education than other students based solely upon where the student resides.” They allege the defendants have “failed to establish and provide access to an effective education” by (1) “failing to establish educational standards,” (2) failing to enforce and utilize such standards, (3) “failing to implement a professional pay system for educators consistent with such standards,” (4) “failing to provide equal access,” and (5) “failing to develop an effective organizational and delivery system and failing to address or abolish the disparities among different school [ ] districts in Iowa.” They allege violations of the due process, equal protection, and education clauses of the Iowa Constitution and Iowa Code section 256.37.

Count II seeks an order of mandamus. It alleges similar failures on the part of the *8 defendants, but goes on to assert that these failures amount to a breach of duty and requests an order directing the defendants to provide an effective education.

Finally, plaintiffs’ prayer for relief seeks a declaration that the defendants have failed to provide an effective education in accordance with the due process, equal protection, and education clauses and Iowa Code section 256.37. It also requests an order of mandamus or permanent injunction directing the defendants to (1) undertake all suitable means to provide an effective education; (2) develop educational content and performance standards for all Iowa school districts which detail required course offerings, instructor capabilities, and testing requirements, among other things; (3) improve or develop state assessments; (4) develop and enforce professional development programs; (5) implement a career ladder to enhance recruitment and retention of quality teachers; (6) enforce the standards by identifying and enforcing consequences for failure to follow and implement such standards; (7) “develop educational management and governance arrangements to mitigate all procedural and structural impediments to an effective education”; and (8) “[c]lose the achievement gaps among the school[ ] districts in Iowa.”

Plaintiffs’ original petition was filed April 3; their first amended and substituted petition on April 30. On June 21, 2008, the defendants filed a motion to dismiss. In their nine-page motion, the defendants argued: (1) all the constitutional claims raised a nonjusticiable political question; (2) the equal protection and due process claims failed to state a claim; (3) there is no private cause of action under section 256.37; (4) mandamus did not lie; (5) the Governor could not be sued; and (6) the Iowa Administrative Procedures Act was the exclusive means of obtaining review of acts or omissions by the Department of Education.

This motion was resisted on all grounds by plaintiffs; a hearing was held; and on November 21, 2008, the district court granted the defendants’ motion.

In a thoughtful sixteen-page ruling, the district court found the plaintiffs had stated claims for relief under the equal protection clause and the due process clause, but all their constitutional claims presented a nonjusticiable political question, and their statutory claim under section 256.37 failed because that provision does not afford a private right of action. The court also found the plaintiffs had not satisfied the prerequisites for seeking mandamus.

The court dismissed the action in its entirety for these reasons, declining to reach the defendants' remaining asserted grounds for dismissal. Plaintiffs appeal.

II. Standard of Review.

Our review of a district court ruling on a motion to dismiss is for correction of errors at law. Kingsway Cathedral v. Iowa Dep't of Transp., 711 N.W.2d 6, 7 (Iowa 2006). "A motion to dismiss should only be granted if the allegations in the petition, taken as true, could not entitle the plaintiff to any relief." Sanchez v. State, 692 N.W.2d 812, 816 (Iowa 2005). "A motion to dismiss admits the well-pleaded facts in the petition, but not the conclusions." Kingsway Cathedral, 711 N.W.2d at 8.

III. Analysis.

A. Introduction. We begin our analysis of this case by discussing, briefly, what it is not. For one thing, this is not a school funding case. Plaintiffs do not allege that Iowa has a funding system that discriminates among school districts or even one that funds schools inadequately.<sup>5</sup> *10 Also, plaintiffs are not questioning any specific law, rule, or policy enacted or promulgated by any of the defendants. This is a case challenging government inaction, not government action. Further, the defendants are not alleged to have engaged in disparate treatment of anyone. Plaintiffs do not claim the defendants have a different policy or standard for different types or categories of schools.

Rather, the entire focus of plaintiffs' lawsuit is on the defendants' alleged "failure" to act on a statewide basis. More specifically, plaintiffs allege that the defendants have failed to establish statewide educational standards, assessments, and teacher training, recruitment, and retention programs. To be sure, plaintiffs claim they have been denied "equal access" as a result of these "failures," but that is an *11 allegation of disparate impact, not disparate treatment. There is no allegation that the defendants, for example, have treated the West Harrison school district any differently from other, larger school districts. Simply stated, plaintiffs charge the defendants with not having affirmatively adopted policies that would eliminate existing discrepancies among districts, for example, as to average student test scores.

<sup>11</sup> <sup>12</sup> B. The Legal Issues Before Us. As we have indicated many times before, "we will uphold a district court ruling on a ground other than the one upon which the district court relied provided the ground was urged in that court." Martinek v. Belmont-Klemme Cmty. Sch.

Dist., 772 N.W.2d 758, 762 (Iowa 2009) (citations omitted); see also Fennelly v. A-1 Mach. & Tool Co., 728 N.W.2d 163, 177 (Iowa 2006); Emmert v. Neiman, 245 Iowa 931, 934, 65 N.W.2d 606, 608 (1954) ("We have held many times that in reviewing a ruling sustaining a motion to strike or dismiss, the same should be sustained if any of the grounds advanced are good, even though the one upon which the trial court based its ruling, is not." (citations omitted)).

Here the defendants urged dismissal of the constitutional claims in the district court on the alternative grounds that they were nonjusticiable and that they failed to state a claim. Both parties had a full opportunity to brief (and did brief) those matters below. Although the defendants' appellate brief does not specifically urge that we affirm on the basis of failure to state a claim if we find one or more of the claims justiciable, the defendants made that request at oral argument. The parties have provided their district court briefing to us, and neither side has suggested that further briefing is needed. In any event, because both grounds were duly raised before the trial court, we could affirm on either ground even if it were not argued to us. See Erickson v. Erickson's Estate, 191 Iowa 1393, 1397, 180 N.W. 664, 665 (1920). The fundamental principle is one of fairness to the parties and the trial court. See DeVoss v. State, 648 N.W.2d 56, 62–63 (Iowa 2002). That fairness is assured so long as the grounds on which we are affirming were presented to the trial court so the trial court had an opportunity to rule on them and the opposing party had an opportunity to counter them if it felt it needed to do so. Cf. Principal Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Charter Barclay Hosp., Inc., 81 F.3d 53, 56 (7th Cir.1996) (noting that it "would not be quite cricket" to decide a case on a ground that had not been raised at all by the appellee before oral argument of the appeal). Also, because the district court has already indicated that it believes the equal protection and due process claims would be sufficient if they were justiciable, a remand for it to rule again on the viability of those claims (assuming their justiciability) seems particularly unnecessary and would only prolong the proceedings.

In State v. Seering, 701 N.W.2d 655, 660–61 (Iowa 2005), we declined to reach several constitutional arguments that were presented to and not ruled upon by the district court, and that were also not presented to us. That was an appropriate exercise of our discretion, but it is a far cry from the present case. Here the parties not only briefed below whether the equal protection and due process claims should be dismissed for failure to state a claim, the district court also decided these questions. A remand for the district court to rule again on whether the plaintiffs have stated a claim therefore would serve no purpose. At oral argument, the plaintiffs did not object to this court's considering whether they stated a claim, nor would such an objection have made sense.

Appellants and appellees stand in different positions because the appellant seeks *12 to overturn the judgment rendered below. See Ritz v. Wapello Cnty. Bd. of Supervisors, 595 N.W.2d 786, 789 (Iowa 1999) (stating that "[w]e have recognized ... a distinction between successful and unsuccessful parties for purposes of error preservation" (citations omitted)). Our rules provide that an appellee need not even file a brief in our court. See Iowa R.App. P. 6.903(3) (indicating that the appellee may waive filing a brief). The appellant, by contrast, must file a brief and is limited to the issues raised in that brief. See id. r. 6.903(2); Dilley v. City of Des Moines, 247 N.W.2d 187, 195 (Iowa 1976) (citing cases). Of course, we may choose to consider only grounds for affirmance raised in the appellee's brief, but we are not required to do so, so long as the ground was raised below. In recent years, we have even on occasion affirmed on grounds not raised below. For example, in State v. Reyes, 744 N.W.2d 95, 99–100 (Iowa 2008), we affirmed on a statutory ground that was not raised either below or in the appellate briefs, until we invited supplemental briefing. In State v. Adams, we granted further review and invited supplemental briefing on an issue that had not been raised by either party either below or on appeal, and then rendered a decision on that issue. See Order for Supplemental Briefing, State v. Adams, 810 N.W.2d 365, 366 (Iowa 2012).

This appeal has been brought to us. The elected branches of our state government are currently engaged in an active debate about state educational policy. They are entitled to know whether this lawsuit may affect their policy choices. It would be an abnegation of our responsibility not to reach a legal question about the sufficiency of the plaintiffs' pleadings that was fully developed and decided by the district court.

Additionally, the political question grounds and the failure to state a claim grounds are interrelated. In either case, we assume the truth of the plaintiffs' factual allegations and determine whether, under those facts, the plaintiffs could be entitled to judicial relief.<sup>6</sup>

Perpetual support fund. Sec. 3. The General Assembly shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement. The proceeds of all lands that have been, or hereafter may be, granted by the United States to *13 this State, for the support of schools, which may have been or shall hereafter be sold, or disposed of, and the five hundred thousand acres of land granted to the new States, under an act of Congress, distributing the proceeds of the public lands among the several States of the Union, approved in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-one, and all estates of deceased persons who may have died without leaving a will or heir, and also such percent as has been or may hereafter be granted by Congress, on the sale of lands in this State, shall be, and remain a perpetual fund, the interest of which, together with all rents of the unsold lands, and such other means as the General Assembly may provide, shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of common schools throughout the state.

Iowa Const. art. IX, div. 2, § 3 (1857 original version) (emphasis added). The present controversy concerns the italicized first sentence above, which both parties refer to as "the education clause."<sup>8</sup>

Plaintiffs contend the education clause imposes judicially enforceable obligations on Iowa's legislature to promote education by "all suitable means." Defendants counter that plaintiffs' claims under the clause present a nonjusticiable political question. Otherwise stated, defendants maintain that the education clause reflects a grant of funding authority to the legislature, not a limit upon legislative policy in the field of education.

<sup>14</sup> Constitutional provisions, like statutes, need to be read in context. See Iowa Elec. Light & Power Co. v. Inc. Town of Grand Junction, 221 Iowa 441, 463, 264 N.W. 84, 95 (1935) (Parsons, J., specially concurring) ("A Constitution should be construed as a whole, just like a statute."). Article IX of the 1857 Constitution of the State of Iowa, entitled, "Education and School Lands," was enacted in two divisions. The first division of article IX, captioned "Education," established a state board of education and conferred on that board powers and duties relating to education policy. In particular, section 1 of that division provided, "The educational interest of the State, including Common Schools and other educational institutions, shall be under the management of a Board of Education...." Iowa Const. art. IX, div. 1, § 1. Section 8 authorized the board of education "to legislate and make all needful rules and regulations in relation to Common Schools," although it also permitted the general assembly to "alter[ ], amend[ ] or repeal[ ]" the board's acts, rules and regulations after they had been adopted. Id. art. IX, div. 1, § 8.

The second division of article IX, captioned “School Funds and School Lands,” sets forth provisions relating to the funding of education, especially through the sale of state-owned lands. Whereas the first division entrusted the “educational interest” to the board of education, the second division made clear that funding would be the legislature’s domain. Hence, the first section of the second division states, “[t]he educational and school funds and lands, shall be under the control and management of the General Assembly of this state.” Id. art. IX, div. 2, § 1.

The third section of the second division, wherein the education clause is found, is entitled “Perpetual support fund.” Id. art. IX, div. 2, § 3. The clause itself then follows. The remaining language of this section, after the education clause, speaks in terms of “a perpetual fund, the interest of which, together with all rents of the unsold lands, and such other means as the General Assembly may provide, shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of Common *14 schools throughout the State.” Id. All this, we believe, supports a construction of the education clause as a funding provision, which allocated to the general assembly the authority to provide money for education, and thereby to “encourage [various forms of improvement] by all suitable means.” Id.

We discussed this dichotomy between education policy (covered by the first division of article IX) and education funding (the subject of the second division) at some length in District Township of the City of Dubuque v. City of Dubuque, 7 Clarke 262 (1858), decided just a year after the adoption of 1857 constitution. There we found unconstitutional a wide-ranging law enacted by the general assembly to provide for “the public instruction of the state of Iowa” on the ground that “[p]ower to legislate upon the subject of education, is conferred upon the board [of education]” and the legislature can only act in the realm of education policy to alter, amend, or repeal the board’s prior acts. Dist. Twp., 7 Clarke at 271–72, 285–86.” We emphasized that laws “which provide a system of education, sometimes known by the name of ‘school laws’ ... are to originate with the board[,]” whereas laws “for the levying of taxes—those making appropriations of money—and those for the control and management of the educational and school funds and lands—are to be passed by the general assembly.” Id. at 286.

A year later, in Clayton County High School v. Clayton County, 9 Iowa 175 (1859), reinforcing the lesson of the Dubuque case, we held the general assembly lacked constitutional authority to establish high schools. We specifically rejected the argument that such schools “may rightfully be provided for by the General Assembly, to whom is committed the duty of encouraging, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral and agricultural improvement.” Clayton Cnty., 9 Iowa at 176. Instead we concluded that these schools were “a component part of the educational system of the State; the original establishment of which, as well as its subsequent management and control, has been committed by the constitution to the Board of Education.” Id. at 177. In short, at a time when the 1857 constitution was quite fresh in people’s minds, we reached the conclusion that no aspect of the Iowa Constitution, including the education clause, authorized the legislature to provide for public schools (as opposed to merely funding them). Since the contemporary view of our court was that the education clause did not even allow the legislature to establish public schools, it seems difficult for us to conceive that the clause could have been seen as a source of enforceable minimum standards for such schools.

This interpretation of the education clause as a grant of funding authority is *15 further confirmed by section 15 of the first division of article IX:

At any time after the year One thousand eight hundred and sixty three, the General Assembly shall have power to abolish or re-organize said Board of Education, and provide for the educational interest of the State in any other manner that to them shall seem best and proper.

Iowa Const. art. IX, div. 1, § 15. In short, section 15 of the first division authorized the general assembly to eliminate the board of education at any time after 1863 and thereafter provide for “the educational interest of the State in any other manner that to them shall seem best and proper.” Id. As it turned out, the legislature abolished the board of education at the earliest possible opportunity in 1864. See 1864 Iowa Acts ch. 52, § 1.<sup>10</sup>

Placed in context, section 15 reaffirms the dividing line between the first division of article IX, which addressed education policy, and the second division, which identified funding sources. Section 15 made clear that the board of education would control education policy (subject to a possible legislative override) until at least 1863, but thereafter the legislature could take over that responsibility “in any other manner that to them shall seem best and proper.” Iowa Const. art. IX, div. 1, § 15.

One episode from the 1857 constitutional convention debates also suggests that our founders did not intend for section 3 of the second division to constrain the general assembly's authority with respect to education policy. On March 3, 1857, George Ells of Davenport proposed amending that section to include a guarantee of a free public education. Specifically, he sought to add a clause at the end of the section so it would read, "shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of common schools throughout the state, in which tuition shall be without charge." See 2 The Debates of the Constitutional Convention; of the State of Iowa 968 (W. Blair Lord reporter, Davenport, Luse, Lane & Co. 1857) [hereinafter Debates] (emphasis added), available at <http://www.state.libraryofiowa.org/services/law-library/iaconst>.

Ells's proposal came under immediate criticism. J.C. Hall of Burlington objected that the issue of free public schools should be left "to be determined in the future, as the public exigencies may require." Id. A.H. Marvin of Monticello observed:

We should not, in my opinion, be bound by a constitutional provision to make our common schools free to all, but should let the several districts regulate this matter for themselves. If we do that, I will warrant you that poor children will never be turned out of our common schools.

Id. at 969. Harvey Skiff of Newton commented, "If we should incorporate the provision of the gentleman from Scott [Mr. Ells] into our constitution, it would become established as organic law, which could not be repealed." Id. Although another delegate (Rufus Clarke of Mt. Pleasant) spoke in favor of the amendment, it was quickly defeated by a vote of twenty-five to eight. Id. at 970–72.

This exchange indicates the delegates to the 1857 convention did not believe that section 3, as it was ultimately approved, contained a right to a free public education. And if section 3 did not assure a right to a free public education, it seems untenable to argue that section 3 contained a judicially enforceable right to a free public education with certain minimum standards of quality. Iowa's constitutional *16 delegates had an opportunity to make a guarantee of free public education part of "organic law," id. at 969, and declined to do so.<sup>11</sup>

Our decision in Kleen v. Porter lends further support to the view that the education clause does not constrain legislative policies in the field of education. 237 Iowa 1160, 23 N.W.2d 904 (1946). Kleen was a declaratory judgment action seeking to have declared unconstitutional two laws that appropriated money from the general fund to school districts on a targeted basis to reimburse certain transportation expenses and bring all districts up to a certain minimum level of per-pupil funding. 237 Iowa at 1161, 23 N.W.2d at 905. The petition asserted that under sections 3 and 7 of the second division of article IX, such appropriations could only be made on a uniform statewide basis in proportion to the numbers of youths between five and twenty-one years old in each district. Id.; see also Iowa Const. art. IX, div. 2, § 7 ("The money subject to the support and maintenance of common schools shall be distributed to the districts in proportion to the number of youths, between the ages of five and twenty-one years, in such manner as may be provided by the General Assembly.")<sup>12</sup> We disagreed. We held that the enumeration requirement applied only to appropriations from the "permanent school fund" established by article IX, division 2, not other funding sources. Kleen, 237 Iowa at 1165–66, 23 N.W.2d at 907. We construed the first sentence of section 3—"The General Assembly shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement"—as designed to give the legislature "broad authority" to augment the income from the permanent school fund without being subject to the enumeration requirement in section 7. Id. at 1166, 23 N.W.2d at 907. Thus, Kleen saw the education clause as a grant of broad funding authority to the general assembly.

In sum, given the wording and location of the education clause in our constitution, and our prior interpretations of that clause, we do not believe plaintiffs have stated a claim thereunder. Plaintiffs' criticisms of state education policy do not amount to a violation of article IX, division 2, section 3.

<sup>151</sup> <sup>161</sup> It is a well-established principle that the courts will not intervene or attempt to adjudicate a challenge to a legislative action involving a "political question." Des Moines Register & Tribune Co. v. Dwyer, 542 N.W.2d 491, 495 (Iowa 1996); see also Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486, 518, 89 S.Ct. 1944, 1962, 23 L.Ed.2d 491, 515 (1969). The nonjusticiability of "political questions" is primarily rooted in the separation of powers doctrine, "which requires we leave intact the respective roles and regions of independence of the coordinate branches of government." Dwyer, 542 N.W.2d at 495 (citations omitted).

The political question doctrine excludes from judicial review those controversies *17 which revolve around policy choices and value determinations constitutionally committed for resolution to the halls of [the General Assembly] or the confines of the Executive Branch. The Judiciary is particularly ill suited to make such decisions, as courts are fundamentally underequipped to formulate [state] policies or develop standards for matters not legal in nature.

Japan Whaling Ass'n v. Am. Cetacean Soc'y, 478 U.S. 221, 230, 106 S.Ct. 2860, 2866, 92 L.Ed.2d 166, 178 (1986) (citations and internal quotations omitted). Nonetheless, the exercise of the judiciary's power to interpret the constitution and to review the constitutionality of the laws and acts of the legislature does not offend these principles. Luse v. Wray, 254 N.W.2d 324, 327–28 (Iowa 1977); see also Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 177–78, 2 L.Ed. 60, 73 (1803).

(1) a textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a coordinate political department; (2) a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving the issue; (3) the impossibility of deciding without an initial policy determination of a kind clearly for nonjudicial discretion; (4) the impossibility of a court's undertaking independent resolution without expressing a lack of the respect due coordinate branches of government; (5) an unusual need for unquestioning adherence to a political decision already made; or (6) the potentiality of embarrassment from multifarious pronouncements by various departments on one question.

Dwyer, 542 N.W.2d at 495 (citing Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 217, 82 S.Ct. 691, 710, 7 L.Ed.2d 663, 686 (1962)). Whether a matter involves a “political question” is determined on a case-by-case basis and requires an examination of the nature of the underlying claim. Id. at 495–96.

A number of these factors might support the conclusion that plaintiffs' claim under the education clause presents a political question. To begin with, the text and history of the clause indicate a commitment of authority to the general assembly, rather than a constraint upon it. The clause says the “General Assembly shall encourage....” Unlike most of the clauses in our bill of rights, it is not worded in the negative as a prohibition (e.g., “the General Assembly shall not ...”). See, e.g., Iowa Const. art. I, §§ 3–4, 6–9, 11–19, 21, 23–24. Moreover, as noted above, the education clause must be read in conjunction with the broad policy-making authority conferred by article IX, division 1, section 15, which states that the general assembly shall have power after 1863 to “provide for the educational interest of the state in any other manner that to them shall seem best and proper.” Kinzer v. Dirs. of Indep. Sch. Dist., 129 Iowa 441, 444, 105 N.W. 686, 687 (1906) (citing this constitutional provision and stating that “the Legislature is expressly authorized to provide for the educational interests of the state, in such manner as shall seem best and proper”); see also Bunger v. Iowa High Sch. Athletic Ass'n, 197 N.W.2d 555, 563 (Iowa 1972) (same).

Second, it is an open question whether the education clause contains “judicially discoverable and manageable standards.” Dwyer, 542 N.W.2d at 495. The clause says that the legislature shall “encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement.” Iowa Const. art. IX., div. 2, § 3. Are courts to become arbiters of “moral improvement?” How are judges to decide that children are deficient in their moral upbringing and what to do about it? Of course, the clause does not *18 even contain the words “schools” or “education.” Does this mean that we as judges can order the state to foster moral improvement in adults?<sup>13</sup>

As we note above, most of the prior challenges to state education systems have been, in whole or in part, about funding. Courts are accustomed to dealing with questions of financial discrimination. See, e.g., State v. Dudley, 766 N.W.2d 606, 621–22 (Iowa 2009) (finding a denial of equal protection when indigent defendants represented by contract attorneys were required to pay more than indigent defendants represented by the public defender's office). But this lawsuit asks the courts to enter into a longstanding debate over the merits of state mandates versus local control in public education. That may require an initial policy determination of a kind clearly for nonjudicial discretion. Dwyer, 542 N.W.2d at 495.

Lastly, we consider how other state courts have treated provisions in their state constitutions similar to Iowa's education clause. Comparable language appears in the constitutions of California, Indiana, and Nevada. Cal. Const. art. IX, § 1 (“[T]he Legislature shall encourage by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement.”); Ind. Const. art. 8, § 1 (“[I]t shall be the duty of the General Assembly to encourage, by all suitable means, moral, intellectual, scientific, and agricultural improvement[.]”); Nev. Const. art. 11, § 1 (“The legislature shall encourage by all suitable means the promotion of intellectual, literary, scientific, mining, mechanical, agricultural, and moral improvements [.]”).<sup>14</sup> Only in Indiana has the state supreme court directly addressed justiciability.

In Bonner ex rel. Bonner v. Daniels, 907 N.E.2d 516, 518 (Ind.2009), a group of Indiana public school students sought a declaratory judgment to establish that the Indiana Constitution imposes an enforceable duty on state government to provide a standard of quality education and that the *19 duty was not being satisfied. Indiana's Constitution provides:

Knowledge and learning, generally diffused throughout a community, being essential to the preservation of a free government; it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to encourage, by all suitable means, moral, intellectual, scientific, and agricultural improvement; and to provide, by law, for a general and uniform system of Common Schools, wherein tuition shall be without charge, and equally open to all.

Ind. Const. art. 8, § 1 (emphasis added). The court noted that the clause “expresses two duties”—the first being “general and aspirational,” i.e., to encourage moral, intellectual, scientific, and agricultural improvement; the second being “more concrete,” i.e., to provide for free public schools open to all. Bonner, 907 N.E.2d at 520. In the court's view “[j]udicial enforceability is more plausible as to the second duty than the first.” Id. Thus, the court found that this section required the legislature to establish free public schools, but “does not impose upon government an affirmative duty to achieve any particular standard of resulting educational quality. This determination is delegated to the sound legislative discretion of the General Assembly.” Id. at 522. Quoting an earlier case, the Indiana Supreme Court concluded that “determining the components of a public education is left within the authority of the legislative branch of government.” Id. at 521–22 (quoting Nagy ex rel. Nagy v. Evansville–Vanderburgh Sch. Corp., 844 N.E.2d 481, 491 (Ind.2006)).

Asked at oral argument to furnish an example where an education clause similar to Iowa's had been found justiciable, plaintiffs' counsel cited Texas. See Edgewood Indep. Sch. Dist. v. Meno, 917 S.W.2d 717, 735–37 (Tex.1995) (holding that the Texas Constitution contains a justiciable standard with respect to education). But the Texas provision is worded quite differently: “[I]t shall be the duty of the Legislature of the State to establish and make suitable provision for the support and maintenance of an efficient system of public free schools.” Tex. Const. art. VII, § 1. Other than the word “suitable,” the two clauses bear little similarity. The Texas Constitution expressly requires the support and maintenance of “an efficient system of public free schools.” Iowa's requires only the “encourage[ment]” of “the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement.” Compare Iowa Const. art. IX, div. 2, § 3, with Tex. Const. art. VII, § 1. Adding the word “suitable” to either clause, or both, does not alter the basic contrast between an amorphous goal (“intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement”) and a more specific one (“the support and maintenance of an efficient system of public free schools”). Id.

It bears emphasis that Iowa's education clause, unlike the constitutions of most other states, does not mandate free public schools.<sup>15</sup> Nor does the education clause *21 require that the state's public education system be “adequate,” “efficient,” “quality,” “thorough,” or “uniform.”<sup>16</sup> Our founders did not make these choices.

In the end, though, we need not decide today whether plaintiffs' claims under the education clause present a nonjusticiable political question.<sup>17</sup> It is sufficient for present purposes to hold that Iowa's education *22 clause does not afford a basis for relief under the allegations in this case.

<sup>19]</sup> D. The Equal Protection Clause. We now turn to plaintiffs' claim that the defendants have violated the equal protection clause of the Iowa Constitution.<sup>18</sup> Article I, section 6 provides:

All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation; the General Assembly shall not grant to any citizen, or class of citizens, privileges or immunities, which, upon the same terms shall not equally belong to all citizens.

Iowa Const. art. I, § 6.

conclusion that plaintiffs' equal protection claim presents a nonjusticiable political question. Typically, we decide claims brought by individuals who allege denial of their constitutional right to equal protection, even when the claim pertains to an area where the legislative branch has been vested with considerable authority. See, e.g., Luse, 254 N.W.2d at 328 (holding that an equal protection challenge to a general assembly election contest was justiciable notwithstanding the authority conferred by article III, section 7 to each house to determine such matters). Equal protection jurisprudence has a set of standards that we have applied in the past. Cf. Dwyer, 542 N.W.2d at 495 (discussing the elements of a nonjusticiable political question and treating a "lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards" as one such element).<sup>19</sup> We therefore turn to the merits of plaintiffs' equal protection claim.

We begin our discussion with Exira Community School District v. State, 512 N.W.2d 787 (Iowa 1994), a case where we *23 previously confronted both an equal protection and a substantive due process challenge relating to education (and reached the merits of the challenge). In that case, the Exira Community School District and Exira parent-taxpayers and students sued to invalidate a provision of the state's open enrollment statute<sup>20</sup> that required the school district of residence to pay tuition to the district into which the student had open enrolled. Exira, 512 N.W.2d at 789–90. About ten percent of students living in the Exira district had open enrolled into another, larger school district (Audubon). Id. at 789. Because the financing mechanism required Exira to transfer funds, this had resulted in a substantial shortfall in available spending for the remaining Exira students and "financial trouble for the district." Id. at 793–94. Although we found the Exira district itself lacked standing, id. at 790, we reached the merits of the equal protection and substantive due process challenges brought by the parent-taxpayers and students under both the U.S. and the Iowa Constitutions. We summarized their complaints as follows:

They believe the financing mechanism in section 282.18(8) is unreasonable because it requires a transfer of locally generated tax revenues without a showing of need. What the appellants want is a financing scheme that would require a showing that the receiving district "needs" the tax dollars more than the sending district. Otherwise—the appellants argue—a significant loss of students could ultimately destroy a sending district.

Appellants' complaint boils down to this. Before open enrollment, the state had achieved through the financing formula educational equality for every student in Iowa. During the first year of open enrollment, Exira experienced a $70,000 loss in tax revenues necessary to educate the students remaining in the Exira school district. This resulted in a substantial disparity in funds available for education between Exira and Audubon. This disparity has disturbed the educational equality previously existing.

Id. at 793–94.

Significantly, the plaintiffs in Exira did not allege that the statute in question infringed upon a fundamental right. Id. at 793. Thus, for both equal protection and substantive due process purposes, we applied the rational basis test. Id. Quoting an earlier case, we held that when a statute bears " 'a definite, rational relationship to a legitimate purpose,' " it must be allowed to stand. Id. (quoting Kent v. Polk Cnty. Bd. of Supervisors, 391 N.W.2d 220, 225 (Iowa 1986)). This is true even if the reasonableness of the nexus to the purported end is only " 'fairly debatable.' " Id. Further, the challenging party must negate every reasonable basis upon which the statute may be sustained. Id.

Applying the rational basis test, we found that the financing mechanism "easily passes constitutional muster" because open enrollment results in greater access to educational opportunities and the legislature's chosen method of financing open enrollment "maintains per pupil equity." Id. at 795. Regarding the parent-taxpayers' "relative need" argument, i.e., that the Exira district needed the money it was transferring to Audubon in order to survive, we commented, "In the final analysis, the appellants' relative need argument is really all about a school district's alleged due process right to exist." Id. We then responded to this argument as follows:

If it chooses to do so, the legislature can—without constitutional impediment—terminate a school district's existence. *24 And when the legislature enacted open enrollment legislation, it knew full well that its ultimate effect might mean the demise of some smaller schools. Despite this knowledge, the legislature made a policy decision—right or wrong—to go with open enrollment. It is not for us to judge the wisdom of such a policy. That was a legislative call.

In yielding the call to the legislative branch of government, we are not insensitive to the feelings and strongly-held views of patrons of smaller schools, such as the Exira school. We recognize that individuals and families sense a way of life is in the balance and vehemently challenge any assumption that centralization of schools improves the quality of education. The proper forum for this debate is however not in the courts, but in the other branches of state government. Our clear duty is to interpret and apply the law given to us, and not to develop or choose among schemes for public education.

Id. at 795–96.

At the end of our opinion, we turned specifically to the due process and equal protection claims of the Exira students. We rejected their substantive due process claim, observing, “We know of no authority that says a student’s desire to be educated in a certain school district [i.e., Exira] rises to the level of a right protected by due process.” Id. at 796. We added that a student has “a due process right to an adequate education,” but noted, “That right—as we have demonstrated [in our previous rational basis analysis]—is furthered, not diminished, by the funding mechanism in section 282.18(8).” Id. We also overruled the students’ equal protection challenge, stating: “Nor do we think such students are treated differently for equal protection purposes. We say this because section 282.18(8) assures every student roughly the same amount of funds for his or her education wherever that student is educated.” Id. In short, we concluded that the statute “does indeed have a rational basis,” which “disposes of” both the equal protection and the substantive due process challenges. Id.

We believe several lessons can be drawn from Exira. First, we recognized that students have a due process right to an adequate education, although we did not characterize it as a fundamental right. Id. at 796. (The plaintiffs did not allege that a fundamental right was at issue in their case, id. at 793, and we accepted that position for purposes of our decision.) Second, we held there is no due process right to be educated in a particular school district. Id. at 796. Third, we found a funding mechanism that assured roughly the same amount of per-pupil funding regardless of the district did not treat students differently or violate equal protection. Id. Finally, we expressed the view that debates over whether “centralization of schools improves the quality of education” belonged in the legislature and not the courts. Id. at 795–96.

[11] [12] As an initial matter, we note that any equal protection claim, whether in the education context or elsewhere, requires an allegation of disparate treatment, not merely disparate impact. Indeed, plaintiffs’ counsel conceded as much at oral argument. To allege a viable equal protection claim, plaintiffs must allege that the defendants are treating similarly situated persons differently. Thus, in State v. Wade, we rejected an argument that a special sentence for both felony and misdemeanor sex offenders violated equal protection. 757 N.W.2d 618, 625 (Iowa 2008). We explained, “Even though Wade has identified two classes that are similarly situated, Wade’s equal protection argument fails because ... offenders who commit serious misdemeanor sex crimes and *25 offenders who commit felony sex crimes are not treated differently.” Id.; see also Ames Rental Prop. Ass’n v. City of Ames, 736 N.W.2d 255, 259 (Iowa 2007) (plaintiffs met this threshold by alleging that tenants who were related and tenants who were unrelated received differential treatment); Montoy v. State, 278 Kan. 769, 120 P.3d 306, 308 (2005) (holding that “disparate impact” of Kansas’s school financing scheme on minorities and other classes could not establish an equal protection violation).

[13] A related way of saying the same thing is to point out that equal protection claims require “state action.” Disparate treatment by someone other than the state (which the state, because of its inaction, failed to prevent) generally does not amount to an equal protection violation. See Principal Cas. Ins. Co. v. Blair, 500 N.W.2d 67, 69–70 (Iowa 1993) (holding that the presence of an allegedly discriminatory family insurance clause in a private insurance policy did not violate either the Federal or the State Equal Protection Clause because this was “not an action of the state”).<sup>21</sup>

But as we have noted above, the petition contains no allegations of disparate treatment. Plaintiffs do not allege that the defendants have allocated fewer funds to students attending school districts like West Harrison, Davenport, and Des Moines, or that they have imposed different rules or requirements with respect to those districts. Plaintiffs’ theory, rather, is that the defendants have not taken sufficient affirmative steps to eliminate perceived differences in outcomes, e.g., gaps in average student achievement, teacher experience level, and the like. One can describe that theory in various ways, but it is not an allegation of disparate treatment by these defendants. See, e.g., City of Coralville v. Iowa Utils. Bd., 750 N.W.2d 523, 530–31 (Iowa 2008) (rejecting an equal protection challenge to a utility law that applied equally to all communities but with different results in different locales on the ground that it was “in substance a misplaced argument for uniformity of consequences rather than uniformity of operation”).<sup>22</sup> For this reason, plaintiffs’ equal protection claim was properly dismissed.

[14] [15] Even if we could discern some allegation of disparate treatment in plaintiffs’ allegations, we would still not be persuaded that they have stated a claim. Unless a suspect class or a fundamental right is at issue, equal protection claims are reviewed under the rational basis test. Sanchez, 692 N.W.2d at 817. Plaintiffs do not allege that a suspect class is involved, but they claim that education is a fundamental right. For purposes of federal constitutional *26 analysis, education is not a fundamental right. San Antonio Indep. Sch. Dist. v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1, 35, 93 S.Ct. 1278, 1297, 36 L.Ed.2d 16, 44 (1973); see also Plyler v. Doe, 457 U.S. 202, 223, 102 S.Ct. 2382, 2398, 72 L.Ed.2d 786, 803 (1982) (“Nor is education a fundamental right; a State need not justify by compelling necessity every variation in the manner in which education is provided to its population.”).

This does not control the analysis under the Iowa Constitution. True, in Exira, we quoted from Rodriguez and relied on its reasoning. Exira, 512 N.W.2d at 794–95. In discussing that decision, we said, “Although important, education is not a fundamental right.” Id. at 794. But as we have noted, the Exira plaintiffs were not maintaining that the challenged law intruded upon a fundamental right. Id. at 793. Thus, we believe it remains an open question whether education is a fundamental right under the Iowa Constitution.

We have recently said,

[N]either this court nor the Supreme Court has created a clear test for determining whether the claimed right is a fundamental right.... [O]nly rights and liberties that are objectively “deeply rooted in this Nation’s history and tradition” and “implicit in the concept of ordered liberty” qualify as fundamental.

Hensler v. City of Davenport, 790 N.W.2d 569, 581 (Iowa 2010) (citation omitted) (quoting Chavez v. Martinez, 538 U.S. 760, 775, 123 S.Ct. 1994, 2005, 155 L.Ed.2d 984, 999 (2003)); accord Seering, 701 N.W.2d at 664 (declining to hold freedom of choice in residence to be a fundamental right even though it is “of keen interest to any individual”). Fundamental rights are generally those explicitly or implicitly contained in the Constitution. Plyler, 457 U.S. at 218 n. 15, 102 S.Ct. at 2395 n. 15, 72 L.Ed.2d at 799 n. 15; Sanchez, 692 N.W.2d at 817. We have traditionally followed the U.S. Supreme Court’s guidance in determining which rights are deemed fundamental. Seering, 701 N.W.2d at 664; In re Det. of Cubbage, 671 N.W.2d 442, 447 (Iowa 2003). “Fundamental right” for purposes of constitutional review is not a synonym for “important.” Many important interests, such as the right to choose one’s residence or the right to drive a vehicle, do not qualify as fundamental rights. See Seering, 701 N.W.2d at 664; Sanchez, 692 N.W.2d at 817.

In Serrano v. Priest, 5 Cal.3d 584, 608–09, 96 Cal.Rptr. 601, 487 P.2d 1241 (1971), the California Supreme Court relied on California’s similarly worded education clause as one—but by no means the only—supporting consideration for its conclusion that education was a fundamental right under the California Constitution. Article IX, section 1 of the California Constitution is entitled “Encouragement of education” and reads in its entirety as follows:

A general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence being essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people, the Legislature shall encourage by all suitable means the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement.

Cal. Const. art. IX, § 1.

While California apparently borrowed some of this wording from the Iowa Constitution, see Crosby v. Lyon, 37 Cal. 242, 245 (1869), its education clause is essentially a stand-alone provision. In Iowa, by contrast, the education clause is the first sentence of a funding section entitled “Perpetual support fund” that, in turn, falls within a series of funding provisions. Iowa Const. art. IX, div. 2, § 3.

Contrasting with the reasoning of the California Supreme Court is that of the Indiana Supreme Court. In Bonner, the court affirmed the dismissal of the plaintiffs’ *27 state equal protection and due process claims, determining that there was no fundamental constitutional right to an adequate public education in Indiana. 907 N.E.2d at 522. The court reached this result despite the presence of an education clause similar to Iowa’s in the Indiana Constitution. The court noted that the clause “does not speak in terms of a right or entitlement to education” and that the Indiana Bill of Rights contains no reference to education. Id. The same is true in Iowa. The “Bill of Rights” and “Right of Suffrage” in the Iowa Constitution make no mention of education. See Iowa Const. arts. I, II.

<sup>16</sup> We defer to another day the question whether education can amount to a fundamental right under the Iowa Constitution, thereby triggering heightened scrutiny. For present purposes, we conclude simply that the matters alleged in plaintiffs’ petition, even if true, do not amount to a deprivation of such a right. In Hensler, we recently acknowledged there is a fundamental parental right to exercise care, custody, and control over children.

790 N.W.2d at 581–82. Yet not all alleged infringements upon this right trigger strict scrutiny. Id. at 582. Rather, we required in Hensler that the challenged governmental action “directly and substantially intrude into [the parent’s] decision-making authority over her child.” Id. at 583. Similarly here, even if we assume there is a fundamental right to a basic education at some level, the plaintiffs’ allegations do not show a denial of that right. No plaintiff alleges anything specific to his or her (or his or her child’s) own actual education. Rather, their allegations are largely a hodgepodge of statistics. Some of these numbers relate to Iowa’s performance as a state and show a deterioration or decline in Iowa’s ranking or a below-average score. Others relate to ACT scores, reading proficiency, and math proficiency ratings in the Davenport, Des Moines, or West Harrison school districts. These data, in the plaintiffs’ view, demonstrate the need for more statewide standards and requirements. But even if all true, they do not amount to a deprivation of a fundamental right as to these plaintiffs.

In Exira, we commented that the proper forum for debate over school centralization is “not in the courts, but in the other branches of state government.” 512 N.W.2d at 796. In a way, this case involves another phase of the same debate. These plaintiffs want greater centralization—“state-mandated standards,” state-mandated “specific testing of students at various educational levels in a variety of subject matters,” and a state-mandated “professional pay system for educators.”

Because in this particular case the allegations do not show a deprivation of a fundamental right, even if we assume there is a fundamental right to education at some level, we apply the rational basis test. In previous discussions of both the Federal and the Iowa Equal Protection Clause, we have found a rational basis review applies when “‘social or economic legislation is at issue.’” Sanchez, 692 N.W.2d at 817 (quoting City of Cleburne v. Cleburne Living Ctr., 473 U.S. 432, 440, 105 S.Ct. 3249, 3254, 87 L.Ed.2d 313, 320 (1985)). This is when “‘the Equal Protection Clause allows the States wide latitude, and the Constitution presumes that even improvident decisions will eventually be rectified by the democratic processes.’” Id.; accord Midwest Check Cashing, Inc. v. Richey, 728 N.W.2d 396, 404–05 (Iowa 2007); Asmus v. Waterloo Cmty. Sch. Dist., 722 N.W.2d 653, 658 (Iowa 2006).

[17] [18] [19] The rational basis test is a “deferential standard.” Ames Rental Prop. Ass’n, 736 N.W.2d at 259. Under this test, we must determine whether the classification is “rationally related to a legitimate governmental interest.” Id. The *28 classification is valid “unless the relationship between the classification and the purpose behind it is so weak the classification must be viewed as arbitrary or capricious.” Id. The government is not required or expected to produce evidence to justify its action. Id. To the contrary, the plaintiff “must negate every reasonable basis upon which the classification may be sustained.” Bierkamp v. Rogers, 293 N.W.2d 577, 579–80 (Iowa 1980); see also State v. Willard, 756 N.W.2d 207, 213 (Iowa 2008); Ames Rental Prop. Ass’n, 736 N.W.2d at 259.

[20] Depending on the circumstances, a rational basis challenge can be resolved on a motion to dismiss. See, e.g., Sanchez, 692 N.W.2d at 817–20 (affirming the dismissal of equal protection and due process claims brought by undocumented aliens challenging the state’s refusal to issue driver’s licenses); Johnston v. Veterans’ Plaza Auth., 535 N.W.2d 131, 131–32 (Iowa 1995) (affirming dismissal of plaintiff’s claim and rejecting plaintiff’s contention that the thirty-day appeal timeframe contained in the statutory right to appeal a condemnation appraisal violated equal protection and due process because plaintiff “does not rebut” the possible basis for the distinction suggested by the defendant, “nor does he attempt to negate any other rational basis for the distinction”); Gard v. Little Sioux Intercounty Drainage Dist., 521 N.W.2d 696, 698–99 (Iowa 1994) (affirming the dismissal of a negligence action against drainage district including claim that immunity for district amounted to a denial of equal protection); Seivert v. Resnick, 342 N.W.2d 484, 485 (Iowa 1984) (affirming the grant of motion to dismiss by applying the rational basis test to reject a claim that an Iowa statute impermissibly distinguished among tortfeasors). Since the State does not have to produce evidence, and only a “plausible” justification is required, see Ames Rental Prop. Ass’n, 736 N.W.2d at 259, there are certainly occasions where a rational basis test can be applied on the pleadings without taking evidence. In this case, unless the well-pleaded facts (if true) would show that Iowa’s educational system is not rationally related to a legitimate state goal, there is no reason for the case to proceed further.

[21] Disregarding plaintiffs’ legal conclusions (for example, that Iowa’s education system is “irrational, arbitrary and capricious” or that the defendants have failed to provide an “effective education”),<sup>23</sup> we are left with the following allegations: (1) Iowa has fewer state standards and requirements than other states (although it has some); (2) Iowa’s schools have a mediocre national ranking on some measures according to some sources; (3) the smaller school districts in Iowa on average have less experienced and credentialed teachers and offer fewer classes; (4) three districts (Davenport, Des Moines, and West Harrison) have substantial percentages of students who are not demonstrating proficiency in reading and math according to certain standardized tests; and (5) one district (West Harrison) does not do a good job of preparing students for college. Plaintiffs attribute the last four points to the first—that is, they blame the lack of state-mandated standards in various areas for the undistinguished rankings on certain national score charts and the concerns noted with respect to smaller and larger school districts. But for purposes of the rational basis test, we need only find a reasonable relationship to a legitimate state purpose. See, e.g., Comm. for Educ. Rights, 220 Ill.Dec. 166, 672 N.E.2d at 1196 (affirming dismissal of complaint on this ground after applying rational basis *29 test and finding Illinois’s system for funding public education rationally related to the legitimate state purpose of local control).

We can conceive of a rational basis for the set of circumstances described by plaintiffs. The Iowa legislature may have decided that local school board autonomy is preferable in certain instances to state mandates. The legislature may also have concluded that it is more equitable to provide an equal or roughly equal amount of resources to each state school district, on a per capita basis, and then give those school districts the primary responsibility for determining how that money will be spent. See Iowa Code § 257.1(2) (providing that “each school district in the state is entitled to receive foundation aid in an amount per pupil equal to the difference between the per pupil foundation tax ... and the combined foundation base per pupil or the combined district cost per pupil, whichever is less”). The legislature may also have decided that it is important to preserve school districts in rural areas, even though the smaller size of those districts may not allow them to offer the same kinds of programs as larger districts. The legislature may have determined that time spent on standardized testing of students—and preparation for such tests—detracts from time spent in other areas of learning. Additionally, the legislature may have decided that school districts in Iowa are aware of their students’ math and reading proficiency rates, but have many other pressing concerns, and that it would be best to defer to the judgment of local administrators regarding the areas that require the most attention.

[22] Local control, equity in per-pupil funding, maintenance of existing rural school districts, and conservation of scarce classroom time and resources are all legitimate governmental interests. As claimed interests, they are “realistically conceivable.” Miller v. Boone Cnty. Hosp., 394 N.W.2d 776, 779 (Iowa 1986). Furthermore, the policies decried by the plaintiffs are at least rationally connected to these goals. While acknowledging the undeniable importance of education, our court has previously characterized it as an area where there is no true consensus and where needs change over time. Thus, we have said that “education is defined as a broad and comprehensive term with a variable and indefinite meaning.” In re Petty, 241 Iowa 506, 511, 41 N.W.2d 672, 675 (1950). We have also observed:

The establishment and the maintenance of an educational system through public schools is an indispensable obligation and function of the State of Iowa. It should be so maintained as to keep abreast with progress generally, and to meet the needs of the times. This applies not only to the courses of study but also to the teaching force. The policy with respect to either should not be an inflexible one.

Talbot v. Indep. Sch. Dist. of Des Moines, 230 Iowa 949, 967, 299 N.W. 556, 565 (1941). We cannot say that any state classification scheme identified by the petition is so arbitrary as to be unconstitutional.<sup>24</sup>

*30 In Racing Association of Central Iowa v. Fitzgerald (RACI), 675 N.W.2d 1, 15–16 (2004), we held that a statute taxing gross gambling receipts from racetracks at a rate nearly twice the rate imposed on gross gambling receipts from riverboats violated the Iowa equal protection clause. We find RACI readily distinguishable here. As noted, the plaintiffs do not point to anything the defendants have allegedly done to treat one group of Iowans different from another. Even if disparate treatment were alleged, RACI still only requires that the purported rational basis be “realistically conceivable” and have a “basis in fact”; it explicitly “does not require ‘proof’ in the traditional sense.” RACI, 675 N.W.2d at 7–8 & n. 4 (quoting Miller, 394 N.W.2d at 779). Providing equal resources to school districts while allowing those districts the independence to determine many aspects of educational policy is not merely “realistically conceivable” as a legislative purpose, it is the same legislative purpose we upheld in Exira.

RACI has not been the death knell for traditional rational basis review. Since RACI was decided, we have continued to uphold legislative classifications based on judgments the legislature could have made, without requiring evidence or “proof” in either a traditional or a nontraditional sense. See Judicial Branch v. Iowa Dist. Ct., 800 N.W.2d 569, 578–79 (Iowa 2011) (holding it was constitutional to remove deferred judgments but not dismissals and acquittals from the public docket and stating that “[t]he legislature could rationally determine that deferred judgments should not be accessible to the public but dismissals and acquittals should be”); State v. Mitchell, 757 N.W.2d 431, 438–39 (Iowa 2008) (upholding a law that distinguished between married and unmarried sex offenders and finding that “[t]he legislature could have reasonably determined its chosen classification scheme, which differentiates between cohabitants who are married and those who are unmarried, would rationally advance the government objective of protecting children from sex offenders”); Ames Rental Prop. Ass’n, 736 N.W.2d at 259 (upholding an ordinance limiting the number of unrelated persons who could live in a house because “[t]he City is not required or expected to produce evidence to justify its legislative action”).

While some members of this court have dissented from some of those decisions, claiming they are inconsistent with RACI, see Mitchell, 757 N.W.2d at 442 (Wiggins, J., dissenting), Ames Rental Property Ass’n, 736 N.W.2d at 264 (Wiggins, J., dissenting), they are precedents of this court. In fact, since RACI was decided, we have considered rational basis equal protection challenges under the Iowa Constitution many times and upheld such a challenge only once. See Dudley, 766 N.W.2d at 620–24 (upholding a rational basis challenge to the state’s reimbursement laws for indigent defense without affording either side an opportunity to present evidence). But see Timberland Partners XXI, LLP v. Iowa Dep’t of Revenue, 757 N.W.2d 172, 175–77 (Iowa 2008) (rejecting an equal protection challenge to an administrative rule providing that apartments would be taxed at a higher commercial rate and condominiums at a lower residential rate even if both were used for the same commercial purposes); State v. Willard, 756 N.W.2d 207, 213–14 (Iowa 2008) (finding residency restrictions for convicted sex offenders do not violate equal protection); City of Coralville, 750 N.W.2d at 530–31 (Iowa 2008) (rejecting equal protection challenge to a tariff system); In re Det. of Hennings, 744 N.W.2d 333, 339–40 (Iowa 2008) (finding no equal protection violation in denying a right to a bench trial in a sexually violent predator proceeding but not a criminal case); *31 Midwest Check Cashing, Inc., 728 N.W.2d at 404–05 (finding a rational basis for different treatment of payday loans); Asmus, 722 N.W.2d at 658 (rejecting an equal protection challenge to a higher standard for legal causation in workers’ compensation mental injury cases); State v. Simmons, 714 N.W.2d 264, 276–78 (Iowa 2006) (holding that making only defendants who plead guilty eligible for a certain reduction in sentence does not violate equal protection);

Sanchez, 692 N.W.2d at 817–19 (holding that denying driver’s licenses to illegal aliens does not violate equal protection); Claude v. Guar. Nat’l Ins. Co., 679 N.W.2d 659, 664–66 (Iowa 2004) (holding the statutory distinction between hit-and-run and miss-and-run vehicles for purposes of mandatory uninsured motorist coverage did not violate equal protection).

[23] E. Substantive Due Process. Plaintiffs also allege the defendants have violated the due process clause of the Iowa Constitution, which provides that “no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.” Iowa Const. art. I, § 9. For the reasons already discussed with respect to equal protection, we believe plaintiffs’ substantive due process claim is justiciable. We have a familiar analytical framework under which to analyze such claims, and we have reached the merits of such a claim in the field of education before. See Exira, 512 N.W.2d at 793–96.

[24] [25] [26] [27] Substantive due process prevents the government “ ‘from engaging in conduct that shocks the conscience or interferes with rights implicit in the concept of ordered liberty.’ ” Zaber v. City of Dubuque, 789 N.W.2d 634, 640 (Iowa 2010) (quoting Atwood v. Vilsack, 725 N.W.2d 641, 647 (Iowa 2006)); State v. Hernandez-Lopez, 639 N.W.2d 226, 237 (Iowa 2002). With a substantive due process claim, we follow a two-stage analysis. Hensler, 790 N.W.2d at 580. First, we determine the nature of the individual right involved, then the appropriate level of scrutiny. Id. If the right at issue is fundamental, strict scrutiny applies; otherwise, the state only has to satisfy the rational basis test. Sanchez, 692 N.W.2d at 819–20. When the rational basis test applies, there need only be a “reasonable fit” between the legislature’s purpose and the means chosen to advance that purpose. Zaber, 789 N.W.2d at 640. We have said that “ ‘[t]he doctrine of judicial self-restraint requires us to exercise the utmost care whenever we are asked to break new ground in th[e] field [of substantive due process].’ ” Sanchez, 692 N.W.2d at 819 (quoting Reno v. Flores, 507 U.S. 292, 302, 113 S.Ct. 1439, 1447, 123 L.Ed.2d 1, 16 (1993)).

As we have already noted, the petition does not allege wrongful acts by the defendants. Instead, it asserts the defendants’ inaction has infringed upon plaintiffs’ rights. Generally, plaintiffs allege the State and its officials have failed to establish sufficient state-wide standards or failed to enforce and utilize such standards. Yet this court has indicated the purpose of substantive due process is to protect citizens when the government engages in actual conduct (i.e., governmental action) that infringes or interferes with rights. In re Det. of Hennings, 744 N.W.2d at 337 (“Governmental action violates principles of substantive due process when....”); Atwood, 725 N.W.2d at 647 (“Substantive due process principles preclude the government ‘from engaging in conduct....’ ” (citation omitted)); Sanchez, 692 N.W.2d at 819 (“Substantive due process ‘provides heightened protection against government interference with certain fundamental rights and liberty interests.’ ” (quoting Troxel v. Granville, 530 U.S. 57, 65, 120 S.Ct. 2054, 2060, 147 L.Ed.2d 49, 56 (2000))); Hernandez-Lopez, 639 N.W.2d at 238 (“We must then determine whether the government action *32 infringing....”). We have previously expressed “serious doubt” about the viability of a substantive due process theory based on the notion that the government failed to act. Midwest Check Cashing, Inc., 728 N.W.2d at 404 n. 6.

Regardless, there is an additional reason why we conclude plaintiffs have not alleged facts that, if true, would amount to a denial of substantive due process. As we have already pointed out, we are not deciding today whether there is a fundamental right to a basic education embraced within the Iowa Constitution. If there is such a right, the plaintiffs have not alleged that they have been deprived of it. Therefore, the rational basis test applies.

Typically, when the rational basis test is involved, we evaluate that basis similarly for equal protection and due process purposes. Midwest Check Cashing, Inc., 728 N.W.2d at 405; Sanchez, 692 N.W.2d at 820 (concluding that “[f]or the reasons discussed in the equal protection analysis,” a statute meets the rational basis test and does not violate substantive due process). For the rational basis test to be met, there need only be a reasonable fit between the governmental interest and the means utilized to advance that interest. The legislature need not employ the best means of achieving that interest. Hensler, 790 N.W.2d at 584. The plaintiff by contrast must negate every reasonable basis upon which the government’s act may be sustained. Zaber, 789 N.W.2d at 640.

Our decision in Exira illustrates how the rational basis test works in practice. Applying that test, we found the financing provision of the open enrollment statute to be constitutional because it gave “access to educational opportunities” even though “its ultimate effect might mean the demise of some smaller schools.” Exira, 512 N.W.2d at 795–96. “It is not for us to judge the wisdom of such a policy. That was a legislative call.” Id. at 795. “Our clear duty is to interpret and apply the law given to us, and not to develop or choose among schemes for public education.” Id. at 796. In other words, the possibility that the financing provision could be counterproductive and lead to fewer educational opportunities (due to “the demise of some smaller schools”) was not relevant to a rational basis analysis.

For the reasons already discussed under equal protection, we believe the plaintiffs have not alleged facts that if true would establish a substantive due process violation. They have alleged certain aspects of Iowa’s K–12 educational performance, by some criteria, are mediocre or even below national averages. They have alleged Iowa has fewer statewide standards than other states. They have alleged some urban (Davenport and Des Moines) and rural (West Harrison) districts offer fewer services or, on average, have less favorable educational outcomes than other districts. These allegations undoubtedly raise important and legitimate concerns for education policymakers to consider. But they do not “shock the conscience” as representing abusive governmental conduct. See State ex rel. Miller v. Smokers Warehouse Corp., 737 N.W.2d 107, 111 (Iowa 2007) (stating that substantive due process “ ‘is reserved for the most egregious governmental abuses against liberty or property rights’ ” (quoting Blumenthal Inv. Trusts v. City of W. Des Moines, 636 N.W.2d 255, 265 (Iowa 2001))). According to the 2007 Department of Education report cited by plaintiffs in their petition, for 2005–06, Iowa ranked 37th nationally in per-pupil spending, rated substantially above the national average in NAEP fourth and eighth grade reading and mathematics achievement, and rated substantially above the national average in SAT and AP test scores. The Annual Condition of Education at 196, 201, 205, 245. Again, these statistics warrant consideration by education *33 policymakers, but they do not rise to the level of a constitutional violation. We conclude that plaintiffs have not stated a claim for deprivation of substantive due process based on the defendants’ alleged failure to do more to advance the cause of public education in this state.<sup>23</sup>

In rejecting the plaintiffs’ constitutional claims, we emphasize again that this is not a case involving alleged disparities in education funding. Rather, the plaintiffs allege the defendants have a constitutional duty—enforceable by Iowa’s judiciary—to improve the quality of the education they are receiving. In the relatively few instances where such quality-based claims have been asserted and have advanced past a motion to dismiss in other states, that has occurred because the state’s founders enshrined a particular educational mandate in the state constitution. Thus, in Connecticut Coalition for Justice in Education Funding v. Rell, the Connecticut Supreme Court relied on a state constitutional provision guaranteeing a right to “free public elementary and secondary schools in the state.” 295 Conn. 240, 990 A.2d 206, 212 n. 1 (2010) (quoting Conn. Const. art. 8, § 1). As we have discussed, Iowa's delegates voted down an analogous provision in 1857. Similarly, in Rose v. Council for Better Education, Inc., the Kentucky Supreme Court noted that Kentucky's constitution included a constitutional mandate to "provide an efficient system of common schools throughout the state." 790 S.W.2d 186, 189 (Ky.1989); see also Ky. Const. § 183. And in Abbeville County School District v. State, the South Carolina Supreme Court invoked a constitutional provision that, like Connecticut's, requires the state's general assembly to "provide for the maintenance and support of a system of free public schools open to all children in the State." 335 S.C. 58, 515 S.E.2d 535, 539 (1999); see also S.C. Const. art. XI, § 3.

Whatever the merits of these other judicial interventions in education, Iowa's constitution is different. As we have already discussed, it does not mandate that the legislature provide either "free public schools" or an "efficient system of common schools." We are confronted with equal protection and due process challenges that should be resolved under a rational basis test. In Abbeville County School District, the South Carolina Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal of the plaintiffs' equal protection cause of action under the South Carolina Constitution for failure to state a claim. 515 S.E.2d at 538-39; see also Comm. for Educ. Rights v. Edgar, 174 Ill.2d 1, 220 Ill.Dec. 166, 672 N.E.2d 1178, 1196 (1996) (affirming dismissal of equal protection claim brought under the Illinois Constitution and observing that "[w]hile the present school funding scheme might be thought unwise, undesirable or unenlightened from the standpoint of contemporary notions of social justice, these objections must be presented to the General Assembly"); Bonner, 907 N.E.2d at 522 (upholding dismissal of equal protection *34 and due process claims based on the Indiana Constitution); Fair Sch. Fin. Council of Okla., Inc. v. State, 746 P.2d 1135, 1150-51 (Okla.1987) (affirming grant of motion for judgment on the pleadings on the plaintiffs' equal protection and due process claims under the Oklahoma Constitution after concluding "there is a rational basis to support the present school finance system").

[28] F. Iowa Code § 256.37. The plaintiffs also assert a statutory claim under Iowa Code section 256.37, which provides:

It is the policy of the state of Iowa to provide an education system that prepares the children of this state to meet and exceed the technological, informational, and communications demands of our society. The general assembly finds that the current education system must be transformed to deliver the enriched educational program that the adults of the future will need to have to compete in tomorrow's world. The general assembly further finds that the education system must strive to reach the following goals:

1. All children in Iowa must start school ready to learn.
2. Iowa's high school graduation rate must increase to at least ninety percent.
3. Students graduating from Iowa's education system must demonstrate competency in challenging subject matter, and must have learned to use their minds well, so they may be prepared for responsible citizenship, further learning, and productive employment in a global economy.
4. Iowa students must be first in the world in science and mathematics achievement.
5. Every adult Iowan must be literate and possess the knowledge and skills necessary to compete in a global economy and exercise the rights and responsibilities of citizenship.
6. Every school in Iowa must be free of drugs and violence and offer a disciplined environment conducive to learning.

[29] This law does not contain an express private right of action, so any cause of action must be implied. Typically, in determining whether a private right of action may be inferred from a statute, we consider four factors:

1. Is the plaintiff a member of the class for whose benefit the statute was enacted?
2. Is there any indication of legislative intent, explicit or implicit, to either create or deny such a remedy?
3. Would allowing such a cause of action be consistent with the underlying purpose of the legislation?
4. Would the private cause of action intrude into an area over which the federal government or a state administrative agency holds exclusive jurisdiction?

Marcus v. Young, 538 N.W.2d 285, 288 (Iowa 1995) (citing Cort v. Ash, 422 U.S. 66, 78, 95 S.Ct. 2080, 2088, 45 L.Ed.2d 26, 36-37 (1975)). All four factors generally must weigh in favor of a private right of action for us to find such a right exists. Stotts v. Eveleth, 688 N.W.2d 803, 808 (Iowa 2004).

Here we agree section 256.37 was enacted for the plaintiffs' benefit, in that many of them are Iowa public school students. But we conclude the second, third, and fourth factors listed above do not support a private right of action, and therefore hold plaintiffs' claim under section 256.37 was properly dismissed.

Regarding the second Marcus/Cort factor, the language of section 256.37 does not indicate legislative intent to create a remedy. Rather, the section merely sets forth *35 a general statement of policy with six "goals" the "education system must strive to reach." Iowa Code § 256.37 (emphasis added). The legislature specifically used the terms "goals" instead of more concrete language such as "standards" or "requirements." Also, the legislature used the aspirational phrase "must strive to reach" instead of a more demanding phrase such as "must reach." Id.

Furthermore, the wording of the goals themselves reflects a legislative purpose to make only a policy pronouncement. Throughout the statute, broad and sweeping language such as "all" and "every" is used. Id. The goals are thus utopian in nature. For example, the final goal states, "Every school in Iowa must be free of drugs and violence..." Id. Did the legislature intend to allow a student to bring suit whenever his or her school is not entirely "free of drugs and violence"? We think not.

The placement of section 37 within Chapter 256 of the Iowa Code also supports the proposition that it is simply a policy statement. Section 256.37 is located within subchapter I, entitled "General Provisions." This subchapter generally describes education policy in Iowa and establishes the Department of Education. Many other sections within the same "General Provisions" subchapter also begin with the language, "It is the policy..." See, e.g., id. §§ 256.18, .38.

The third Marcus/Cort factor is also unmet here because allowing a private cause of action would be inconsistent with section 256.37's purpose of delineating general goals for Iowa's educational system. Permitting a private right of action under section 256.37 would likely unleash a multiplicity of future lawsuits that would transform aspirational goals into a series of specific mandates. Notably, section 256.37 was enacted as part of legislation that allowed the Department of Education to waive compliance with the minimum education standards for accredited schools under certain circumstances. See 1992 Iowa Acts ch. 1159, § 1.

In addition, the fourth factor is not satisfied because the Department of Education has jurisdiction under Iowa Code section 256.1 to act in a policymaking capacity and provide statewide supervision of education in the State of Iowa. Iowa Code § 256.1(1) ("The department of education is established to act in a policymaking and advisory capacity and to exercise general supervision over the state system of education..."). A private cause of action under section 256.37 would intrude into an area in which a state administrative agency, the Department of Education, already has exclusive jurisdiction.

Because neither the second, third, nor fourth elements of a private right of action is present here, we affirm the district court's ruling that section 256.37 does not provide a private remedy.

Given our disposition of plaintiffs' substantive claims, we need not reach defendants' additional arguments that mandamus is not an appropriate remedy or that the Governor of Iowa is not a proper defendant.

IV. Conclusion.

We affirm the dismissal of plaintiffs' first amended and substituted petition. We do not minimize the importance of the issues raised by the plaintiffs. But a respect for precedent and for our constitution requires that we stay out of this dispute. This court in its past decisions, from Kleen to Johnson to Exira, has historically deferred to the policy decisions made by the political branches of government in this area.<sup>26</sup> *36 The sixteen parents and students who brought this suit clearly believe that Iowa's schools would benefit if we had more student testing, more statewide standards, more statewide uniformity, and a performance-based pay system for teachers. These issues are currently being debated throughout our state. The debate participants include legislators, the governor, executive branch officials, school boards, teachers, parents, students, and taxpayers. We believe the democratic process is best suited for resolution of those debates and can best accommodate the competing concerns of the many interested parties.

As we said at the beginning of this opinion, we do not close the door to other actions alleging constitutional violations in the field of education. We uphold only the dismissal of this case.

AFFIRMED.

CADY, C.J., and WATERMAN and ZAGER, JJ., join this opinion. CADY, C.J., and WATERMAN, J., file separate concurring opinions. WIGGINS, J., files a dissenting opinion in which HECHT and APPEL, JJ., join. APPEL, J., files a separate dissenting opinion in which HECHT, J., joins.

CADY, Chief Justice (concurring specially).

I concur in the opinion of the majority. I write separately to explain my unwillingness at this time to more fully explore the constitutional claim of a public education in Iowa and to further explain my position on the issues in this case.

At the outset, I feel compelled to acknowledge that education is a tradition that exists today as strongly as ever. A system of public education is clearly needed to allow the youth of this state to learn the essential aspects of judgment, analysis, communication, and creativity. It is needed to empower each generation to meet the economic, social, scientific, political, governmental, personal, and other challenges of an evolving global world. Education is the core of who we are and who we will become. The dissenting opinion of Justice Appel has captured the rich history of this tradition in Iowa and has provided insight into its constitutional stature.

Yet, in response to the specific claim of a constitutional right under the education clause raised in this case, I am restrained at this time from deciding anything more than that section 3 of the second division of article IX of the Iowa Constitution does not alone create a right to a public education. This conclusion is not to say no such right exists under the Iowa Constitution, but I am content to wait for a different case in which the petition both frames the full constitutional underpinnings and is accompanied by pleadings that would allow the underlying facts of the case to become a helpful aid in shaping the parameters to any such right recognized to exist. Of course, in this case, as pointed out by Justice Wiggins, the more fundamental obstacle presented is whether this extremely *37 important issue should even be addressed by us when the parties chose, at least initially, not to raise it as an issue for appellate review after it was presented and decided by a district court.

The doctrine of judicial restraint expressed by Justice Wiggins is a view I would normally follow. Yet, our rules of judicial restraint are full of nuance and exceptions and ultimately rest on the particular circumstances of each case. As observed in the majority opinion, the principles of judicial restraint also embrace judicial economy, a doctrine particularly applicable to this case. If the allegations of a case would not be sufficient to establish a claim, assuming they were all true, judicial economy would not be served by sending the case back for the parties to go through the time and expense of further proceedings only for the courts to later declare the plaintiff never had a viable claim in the first place.

Judicial restraint is a doctrine composed of many elements, and it strives for outcomes that are both fair and practical. In this case, it is both fair and practical for us to examine the pleadings to determine if the plaintiffs could ever win their lawsuit if we declared the educational experience mandated by the legislature in this state was a constitutional right. It is fair because the parties fully explored this issue before the district court, and it was ultimately raised and urged at rehearing on appeal. It is practical because the case is before us, and it is in the best interests of all concerned for us to decide the merits of the underlying claim now. Thus, under the particular procedural background of this case, I conclude the doctrine of judicial restraint does not instruct us to refrain from deciding the basic question whether or not the plaintiffs have failed to state a claim for relief. Accordingly, it is appropriate to decide if the allegations are sufficient to support a violation of a fundamental right to an adequate education.

Normally, cases are not resolved on the pleadings. U.S. Bank v. Barbour, 770 N.W.2d 350, 353 (Iowa 2009). Moreover, we do not set a high bar for litigants to clear to meet the requirement for a pleading to state a claim for relief. Id. at 354 (noting the “fair notice” requirement is met if a petition informs the defendant of the incident giving rise to the claim and the claim’s general nature). Instead, we follow the liberal rule of notice pleading. This rule, however, does not mean all claims clear the bar. See O’Brien v. DiGrazia, 544 F.2d 543, 546 n. 3 (1st Cir.1976) (noting that, when plaintiff in civil rights action provides facts to support claim, court does not have duty to “conjure up unpleaded facts that might turn a frivolous claim of unconstitutional official action into a substantial one”); see also 5B Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1357, at 548–53 (3d ed.2004) (noting courts “will accept the pleader’s description of what happened to him or her along with any conclusion that can reasonably be drawn therefrom,” but will not accept “conclusory allegations concerning the legal effect of the events the plaintiff has set out if these allegations do not reasonably follow from the pleader’s description of what happened”).

When the viability of a claim for relief is challenged, our pleading rule requires consideration of any conceivable set of facts, but only those facts that relate to and could prove the allegations made in the petition. The allegations of the petition, if proven by the facts, must show entitlement to relief. Reviewing courts do not, however, consider any conceivable allegations, only any conceivable facts that support the allegations made.

*38 In this case, the allegations of the petition, even if true, could not establish that students in Iowa today are being denied a basic or minimally adequate education, wherever that elusive standard might land. The plaintiffs have not made a single allegation that could establish they have been deprived of the basic ability to read, write, or communicate, and they have not alleged they have been deprived of their ability to gain an understanding of mathematics, science, economics, government, computer-based technology, or other vital components of a basic education. While the allegations in the petition are detailed and thoughtful, they simply do not show Iowa students are being deprived of an opportunity for an adequate education. For example, the disparities alleged to exist between school districts across Iowa may show slightly different education experiences and outcomes, but those different outcomes do not establish a deprivation of basic education.

Likewise, Iowa's recent decline of college admissions test scores and other proficiency scores do not establish a deprivation of basic education. They merely show the state may have begun to slip, but the level of decline alleged is not so much that a reasonable person could say the slip means students have been altogether deprived of a basic education. Similarly, the absence of certain assessment mechanisms in Iowa, as alleged by the plaintiffs, does not establish the deprivation of basic education. Even Iowa's decline in the national rankings in various subjects does not mean students are being deprived of basic education. Again, it merely shows we are beginning to slip or perhaps other states are beginning to improve. Finally, the broad allegations that Iowa has failed to establish standards, enforce standards, adopt effective teacher pay systems, and establish a delivery system are insufficient. Accepting all the allegations of the petition to be true, the deprivation of basic education cannot be established. There are simply no allegations that students in Iowa cannot read, write, communicate, or perform the other essential aspects of education. There are no allegations that capable students lack an understanding of mathematics, science, economics, government, or computer-based technology.

The petition does contain some statements generally indicting the public education system. For example, the petition states that "[m]any Iowa students are not prepared to enter the workforce or postsecondary education without additional training or remediation when they graduate from high school." The petition also alleges the educational and accreditation standards of this state "do not ensure that all students" will be able to meet or exceed the future demands of society, be prepared for responsible citizenship, and be prepared for further learning and productive employment in the global economy. The petition also generally declares, "[A]n ineffective education will persist for school children throughout their lifetimes, affecting the rate and extent of their ability to be a responsible citizen, their ability to learn further, and their ability to achieve productive employment in a global economy."

To the extent such claims are actually allegations of a petition, as opposed to hortatory calls to action, they relate to the level of a basic or adequate education. Wherever a basic or adequate education might land within the framework of our constitution, assuming the existence of a right to education, that landing point certainly would not guarantee that "all students" would be able to meet the broad demands of the world in the future. Nor would the right guarantee students would never need to take a remedial course to enter the workforce or postsecondary education.

*39 Of course, my rejection of the pleadings in the case as a basis to support a constitutional right necessarily leads to the question of what allegations would need to be pled to properly support the constitutional claim of a minimally sufficient public education. Assuming Justice Appel has articulated the source of a constitutional claim to a public education, the fighting issue turns to the meaning of a minimally sufficient education. This is an issue that is indeed difficult and one that I am admittedly without a specific answer at this time. We landed on a minimally sufficient standard in the context of the constitutional right to counsel, and this standard has worked well enough in applying the constitutional right. But, public education is a totally different kettle of fish. The point when a state's educational system becomes minimally insufficient would be difficult to ascertain in the context of a constitutional analysis. Nevertheless, the analysis would need to generally center on the performance of the school system and its collective outcomes and be ultimately judged in relationship to other performance models over a period of years. But, for now, I am simply content that the allegations of the petition in this case fall short and that a trial to obtain the supporting evidence would not help.

Additionally, the allegations of the petition, even if true, do not establish a violation of the equal protection clause.
