Even assuming the different educational outcomes alleged in the petition are supported by facts, a rational basis certainly could be articulated to justify the different outcomes. This rational basis is found in the local control given to school districts. Moreover, a rational basis to justify different outcomes does not need to be derived by courts from the record in a case. Importantly, similar to the way facts are assumed to support allegations in a petition to determine if a claim for relief has been stated, courts formulate a rational basis from any information that is "realistically conceivable." Miller v. Boone Cnty. Hosp., 394 N.W.2d 776, 779 (Iowa 1986). Thus, when considering constitutional challenges subject to a rational-basis analysis, courts may consider the existence of any conceivable rational basis. The analysis does not require a factual basis drawn from the record in the case. Racing Ass'n of Cent. Iowa v. Fitzgerald, 675 N.W.2d 1, 7-8 & n. 4 (Iowa 2004). Accordingly, this analysis means courts are not required to needlessly wait for a trial before declaring that a particular different outcome in society does not violate the equal protection guarantee. Different outcomes from governmental actions can be observed throughout society, and they violate the equal protection clause only when government does not have an adequate justification for the different treatment. See Varnum v. Brien, 763 N.W.2d 862, 879 (Iowa 2009).

In the end, the allegations of the petition, while alarming, simply cannot support the constitutional claim that is urged. Consequently, the courts have no role in the resolution of this important social issue at this time. The petition, if true, may be a call to action, but it is a call under our constitutional structure for the legislature, not the courts. The pleadings simply do not convince me that school children today in Iowa, let alone the school children at the center of this lawsuit, are being deprived or have been deprived of any level of education our constitution would be able to mandate.

WATERMAN, J. (concurring specially).

I concur in the majority's well-reasoned decision on all issues. I write separately to emphasize the importance of judicial restraint when litigants ask courts to overstep their bounds.

*40 This case was resubmitted for a second oral argument because three new members were added to this court. Plaintiffs' counsel in his eloquent oral argument urged our court to "do its job." We do exactly that today by affirming the dismissal of a well-intentioned, but legally flawed lawsuit. If these individual plaintiffs were allowed to proceed with this case in the courts, and they somehow won the relief they seek, the end result would be judges running our public schools through structural injunctions that second-guess the educational policy decisions made by the elected branches of government. That is not our role. We do not sit as the supreme school board of the State of Iowa, and we are unwilling in the guise of adjudication to usurp powers the Iowa Constitution cedes to the elected branches to run our public schools. The separation-of-powers doctrine precludes the relief these plaintiffs seek from the courts.

To reinstate this lawsuit would set a dangerous precedent. These plaintiffs ask too much of our court jurisprudentially. It is not for courts to impose particular statewide educational standards by judicial decree. Our limited role as a coequal branch of government requires us to adjudicate cases and in doing so construe the meaning of our constitution; the constitutional power to run our public schools lies with the legislative and executive branches. Courts can and must step in if that power is exercised in a way that infringes on individual rights. See, e.g., Tinker v. Des Moines Indep. Cmty. Sch. Dist., 393 U.S. 503, 514, 89 S.Ct. 733, 740, 21 L.Ed.2d 731, 742 (1969) (holding First Amendment protection for symbolic speech required school officials to allow students to wear black armbands protesting the Vietnam War). Such cases involving individual rights are well within the institutional competence of courts to decide. No such claim is stated in this case. Nor is this case another Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686, 98 L.Ed. 873 (1954), challenging racial segregation or discrimination. No claim of disparate treatment or any illegal classification such as race is made here. Rather, these plaintiffs seek broad educational reform. Our courts are not institutionally competent to make educational policy judgments. The Department of Education is in the executive branch.

It is worth repeating here Justice Scalia's recent warning against the use of structural injunctions in institutional reform litigation:

Structural injunctions ... turn[ ] judges into long-term administrators of complex social institutions such as schools, prisons, and police departments. Indeed, they require judges to play a role essentially indistinguishable from the role ordinarily played by executive officials....

The drawbacks of structural injunctions have been described at great length elsewhere. This case illustrates one of their most pernicious aspects: that they force judges to engage in a form of factfinding-as-policymaking that is outside the traditional judicial role. The factfinding judges traditionally engage in involves the determination of past or present facts based (except for a limited set of materials of which courts may take “judicial notice”) exclusively upon a closed trial record. That is one reason why a district judge’s factual findings are entitled to plain-error review: because having viewed the trial first hand he is in a better position to evaluate the evidence than a judge reviewing a cold record. In a very limited category of cases, judges have also traditionally been called upon to make some predictive judgments: which custody will best serve the interests of the child, for example, or whether a particular one-shot injunction will remedy the plaintiff’s grievance. When a judge *41 manages a structural injunction, however, he will inevitably be required to make very broad empirical predictions necessarily based in large part upon policy views—the sort of predictions regularly made by legislators and executive officials, but inappropriate for the Third Branch.

It is important to recognize that the dressing-up of policy judgments as factual findings is not an error peculiar to this case. It is an unavoidable concomitant of institutional-reform litigation. When a district court issues an injunction, it must make a factual assessment of the anticipated consequences of the injunction. And when the injunction undertakes to restructure a social institution, assessing the factual consequences of the injunction is necessarily the sort of predictive judgment that our system of government allocates to other government officials.

But structural injunctions do not simply invite judges to indulge policy preferences. They invite judges to indulge incompetent policy preferences. Three years of law school and familiarity with pertinent Supreme Court precedents give no insight whatsoever into the management of social institutions.

These admonitions apply with equal force here. A law degree and some court room experience do not qualify judges to restructure Iowa schools or impose new statewide educational standards. If we reinstate this case, one can easily imagine more lawsuits will be filed by other families with different ideas on how to run the schools. Whatever evidence the King plaintiffs might offer at a trial in this case presumably would make a record very different from the evidentiary trial record to be made by other plaintiffs with conflicting educational policy goals such as vouchers or greater local control. All such trials would be a waste of time and scarce resources in the absence of a cognizable claim upon which judicial relief may be granted.

We are affirming the dismissal of this case based on the plain meaning of our constitution and our own precedent. Sixteen years ago our court unanimously recognized that it is not our role to “develop or choose among schemes for public education” and that the proper forum for such debates is “in the other branches of state government.” Exira Cmty. Sch. Dist. v. State, 512 N.W.2d 787, 796 (Iowa 1994). This view is echoed by many other voices of restraint on the supreme courts of our sister states.<sup>27</sup>

*42 By contrast, instead of focusing on our own precedent, the dissent embarks on a wide-ranging survey of authorities. For example, the dissent cites several times to the United Nations’ 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights, a document that includes a right to leisure time and health care as well as a right to education. The dissent acknowledges this UN Declaration is not binding in United States courts. See Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain, 542 U.S. 692, 734–35, 124 S.Ct. 2739, 2767, 159 L.Ed.2d 718, 754–55 (2004). The only education case citing the UN Declaration was accompanied by a vigorous and well-reasoned dissent. Pauley v. Kelly, 162 W.Va. 672, 255 S.E.2d 859, 897–900 (1979) (Neely, J., dissenting). No party to this litigation cited the UN Declaration at any point in the proceedings or argued it had any relevance. I fail to see how a 1948 UN Declaration helps our court ascertain the intent of the framers of the Iowa Constitution ratified ninety years earlier. Our court has not previously relied on UN declarations or international law to interpret our 1857 constitution, and I would not start now.

The dissent also discusses numerous historical figures and famous educators. Yet none of them is quoted for the proposition that courts should be running schools. I imagine all of them would be surprised by that notion. The divergence of views of education surveyed by the dissent is another reason why policymaking should be left to the elected branches. How should an Iowa judge or jury in a contested case select from among the disparate academic viewpoints and standards? We all agree public education is vitally important. But that does not warrant courts interfering in how our public schools are run. The lengthy dissent cites no case from any jurisdiction where court-ordered imposition of statewide educational standards improved student outcomes.

The dissent argues we should not decide whether the amended petition states a claim upon which relief may be granted because the appellee who won dismissal below did not brief that alternative ground for dismissal on appeal. That issue was fully briefed by both sides in the district court and decided by the district court and is appropriately decided by our court today for the reasons set forth in the majority opinion and Chief Justice Cady's special concurrence. The dissenters' position today is at odds with their zeal a mere eighteen months ago to decide an issue the parties in another case failed to brief in district court or on appeal and that the district court never decided. See Feld v. Borkowski, 790 N.W.2d 72, 81–82 (Iowa 2010) (Wiggins, J., concurring specially); *43 id. at 82–85 (Appel, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). The dissenters argue it was appropriate to reach the issue omitted from the briefs in Feld because it was inextricably intertwined with the issue briefed on appeal. The same is true in this case—whether these plaintiffs allege claims upon which judicial relief may be granted or rather nonjusticiable political questions is simply two sides of the same coin. Notably, in Feld, Justice Wiggins posed several questions that are better asked in this case:

Why should we leave the question unanswered when the district court will be confronted with it on remand? Why are we creating a potential appeal on this issue ... when we can answer the question now? It seems to me, for us not to address the issue creates extra expense for the parties and the court. Accordingly, I would address the issue head on and give the contact sports exception a proper burial.

Id. at 82. So too should we give plaintiffs' case "a proper burial" now, instead of remanding for a costly trial to prove allegations that, if true, provide no grounds for judicial relief.<sup>26</sup>

Many generations of Iowans have been justifiably proud of the quality of our state's public school system. The allegations in this lawsuit shine a light on shortcomings, disturbing downward trends, and outcomes that vary from district to district. But notably absent in the voluminous filings in this appeal is any convincing argument judicial intervention will make Iowa schools better. Plaintiffs filed no Brandeis brief providing empirical data that their requested judicial intervention would improve educational outcomes. The plaintiffs in this case are no doubt optimistic and sincere in their beliefs that the educational reforms they seek to impose statewide by judicial fiat will raise ACT scores in many districts. Our courts, however, are not competent to determine whether a structural injunction imposing a new set of priorities and standards will accomplish those worthy goals or instead lower composite average ACT scores in districts that currently must be doing many things right.

Voters elect our governor, legislators, and school board members. If these plaintiffs do not like how Iowa schools are run, they should turn to the ballot box, not the courts.

WIGGINS, Justice (dissenting).

I would find the plaintiffs' constitutional claims justiciable and remand the case for further proceedings on the merits of those *44 claims. Therefore, I dissent from Justice Mansfield's opinion<sup>29</sup> and Chief Justice Cady's concurring opinion because they reach the merits of the plaintiffs' claims under the education clause, the due process clause, and the privileges and immunities clause of the Iowa Constitution even though the State did not raise the merits of these issues on appeal. I also dissent from these opinions because they reach the issue that plaintiffs' petition failed to state a claim. Further, I dissent from Justice Waterman's concurring opinion because he finds the constitutional claims nonjusticiable.

A supreme court is "a court of final review and not first view." Zivotofsky ex rel. Zivotofsky v. Clinton, 566 U.S. —, —, 132 S.Ct. 1421, 1430, 182 L.Ed.2d 423, — (2012). Our cases stand for the proposition that we may affirm the district court on any basis appearing in the record and urged on appeal by the appellee. See, e.g., In re Estate of Voss, 553 N.W.2d 878, 879 n. 1 (Iowa 1996); Johnston Equip. Corp. v. Indus. Indem., 489 N.W.2d 13, 17 (Iowa 1992); see also Chauffeurs, Teamsters & Helpers, Local Union No. 238 v. Iowa Civil Rights Comm'n, 394 N.W.2d 375, 378 (Iowa 1986) (stating we may decide issues on appeal not reached by the district court where they have been raised in the district court and fully briefed and argued by the parties on appeal). This rule is rooted in the principle of fairness, and we have consistently applied it in our cases.

For example, in State v. Seering, 701 N.W.2d 655 (Iowa 2005), we held the appellee waived certain arguments on appeal even though the issues were raised in and decided by the district court because the appellee failed to present the arguments in his appellate briefs. 701 N.W.2d at 661–62. In Parkhurst v. White, 254 Iowa 477, 118 N.W.2d 47 (1962), we held the appellee waived an issue presented to the district court but not briefed on appeal. 254 Iowa at 480–81, 118 N.W.2d at 49. Similarly, in American Mutual Liability Insurance Co. v. State Auto. Insurance Association, 246 Iowa 1294, 72 N.W.2d 88 (1955), we concluded an alternative constitutional claim was not before us because the appellee failed to assert the claim on appeal. 246 Iowa at 1303, 72 N.W.2d at 93.

This case provides further support for the reasons underlying our rule of error preservation. Here, the district court determined the plaintiffs' amended petition alleged facts sufficient to meet our notice pleading standard. See Hawkeye Foodservice Distribution, Inc. v. Iowa Educators Corp., 812 N.W.2d 600, 608 (Iowa 2012) (declining to adopt a heightened pleading standard). The district court then dismissed the plaintiffs' claims as nonjusticiable political questions. On appeal, the plaintiffs' argued in their appellate brief that its claims were not nonjusticiable political questions. The plaintiffs did not argue the merits of their constitutional claims or argue that their petition met our pleading standard. Indeed, because the district court did not address the merits of the constitutional claims and ruled in the plaintiffs' favor on the pleading issue, it would have been unnecessary and strategically unwise to do so unless the defendants raised these issues on appeal. However, the defendants, the prevailing parties below, only argued in their appellate briefs that the plaintiffs' constitutional claims presented nonjusticiable political questions. *45 The defendants did not argue the plaintiffs' petition failed to meet our pleading standard. Therefore, under our rule of error preservation, the only issue briefed by the parties on appeal, and thus subject to consideration by this court, is the issue of whether the plaintiffs' constitutional claims present nonjusticiable political questions.

In order to reach the merits of the plaintiffs' claims and to determine the plaintiffs' petition failed to state a claim, Justice Mansfield's opinion and Chief Justice Cady's concurring opinion rely on the proposition that we can uphold a district court decision on a ground different from the one upon which the district court based its decision as long as the ground was urged in the district court. See DeVoss v. State, 648 N.W.2d 56, 63 (Iowa 2002). As already noted, this proposition stands for only half of our rule regarding error preservation. These opinions ignore the other half of the rule requiring the parties to brief the issues in this court. In fact, the cases upon which Justice Mansfield's opinion relies to support its proposition support the two-part rule. Granted, we examined issues in Martinek v. Belmond-Klemme Community School District, 772 N.W.2d 758 (Iowa 2009), Fennelly v. A-I Machine & Tool Co., 728 N.W.2d 163 (Iowa 2006), and Emmert v. Neiman, 245 Iowa 931, 65 N.W.2d 606 (1954), that the district court did not address. However, a review of the appellate briefs in these cases, which are on file at the state law library, reveals that the parties on appeal briefed the alternate or additional grounds upon which we relied.

Justice Mansfield's opinion also relies on Erickson v. Erickson's Estate, 191 Iowa 1393, 180 N.W. 664 (1920), for its proposition that we can affirm on a ground raised in the trial court but not argued in this court. However, Erickson is but a relic of an earlier time. Although we have never expressly overruled Erickson, it seems nearly a century of case law has destroyed its precedential value. Surely Johnston Equipment Corporation and Voss articulate rules of error preservation that have at the very least impliedly overruled Erickson. In reaching these issues, Justice Mansfield's opinion has effectively overruled the ninety years of case law since Erickson and returned us to its archaic principle. After this decision, if an appellant wants to further inform the court as to its argument, it seems the appellant must expand upon every argument raised at the district court in its appellate brief, regardless of whether the district court ruled in its favor on a particular issue and unprompted by any action by the appellee. Otherwise, the appellant risks this court deciding an issue no party expected this court to decide. In other words, every issue presented to the district court, no matter how irrelevant to its decision it may seem, becomes relevant on appeal.

Further, neither the merits of the plaintiffs' constitutional arguments nor the sufficiency of the pleadings are inextricably intertwined with the issue of whether the plaintiffs' claim sets forth a political question.<sup>30</sup> The district court decided the political *46 question issue without reference to the other issues concerning the education, due process, and privileges and immunities clauses of the Iowa Constitution. We can and should do the same.

Justice Mansfield's opinion may argue the parties raised these issues on appeal because they discussed them during oral argument. However, the opinion's rationale that the parties preserved these issues for our consideration on appeal fails for two reasons. First, on resubmission Justice Mansfield precipitated the references to these unbriefed issues by asking questions on these issues not raised in this appeal.<sup>31</sup> Justice Mansfield's opinion cannot claim the parties preserved these issues by raising them through questioning by the court. Second, our case law is unwavering in the proposition that we will not decide or consider issues raised for the first time during oral argument. See Dilley v. City of Des Moines, 247 N.W.2d 187, 195 (Iowa 1976) (citing cases for this proposition dating back to 1959).

There is a sound reason for this latter proposition. Chief Judge Posner noted, “[I]t would not be quite cricket of us to place [our] decision on the ground” that was not raised until the oral argument on appeal because the other party may have been lulled into thinking its opponent was fighting the case on another issue. Principal Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Charter Barclay Hosp., Inc., 81 F.3d 53, 56 (7th Cir.1996).

Justice Mansfield’s opinion and Chief Justice Cady’s concurring opinion are perfect examples of this principle. Their analysis regarding the education clause, due process clause, and privileges and immunities clause of the Iowa Constitution are entirely their own. For example, when discussing the merits of the plaintiffs’ claim under the education clause, Justice Mansfield’s opinion provides its own analysis of article IX, division 2, section 3 of the Iowa Constitution. This section provides, in relevant part, “The General Assembly shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement.” Iowa Const. art. IX, div. 2, § 3 (1857 original version).

Justice Mansfield’s opinion and the concurring opinion of Chief Justice Cady fail to consider article IX, division 1, section 12, which states:

The Board of Education shall provide for the education of all the youths of the State, through a system of Common Schools and such school shall be organized and kept in each school district at least three months in each year. Any district failing, for two consecutive years, to organize and keep up a school as aforesaid may be deprived of their portion of the school fund.

Id. art. IX, div. 1, § 12.

Although the legislature abolished the board of education referred to in section 12 in 1864 and replaced it with the superintendent of education, the predecessor to the present department of education, the citizens of this state never repealed the substance of 1857 article IX, division 1, *47 section 12. See 1864 Iowa Acts ch. 52 §§ 1–15. In fact, this court used the substantive provisions of article IX, division 1, section 12 to integrate Iowa schools four years after the legislature abolished the board of education. See Clark v. Bd. of Dir., 24 Iowa 266, 274 (1868) (quoting article IX, division 1, section 12 by stating “that provision shall be made ‘for the education of all the youths of the State through a system of common schools,’ which constitutional declaration has been effectuated by enactments providing for the ‘instruction of youth between the ages of five and twenty-one years’”). In Clark, the court recognized the Iowa constitutional rights of all children to obtain an education and that the education provided by the state must be provided equally to all children. Id. at 272–77. The analyses in Justice Mansfield’s opinion and the concurring opinion of Chief Justice Cady of this important issue without allowing the parties to properly brief and argue it deprives the plaintiffs of their day in court.<sup>32</sup> As Justice Stevens of the Supreme Court noted, “[T]he adversary process functions most effectively when we rely on the initiative of lawyers, rather than the activism of judges, to fashion the questions for review.” New Jersey v. T.L.O., 468 U.S. 1214, 1216, 104 S.Ct. 3583, 3585, 82 L.Ed.2d 881, 883 (1984) (Stevens, J., dissenting) (emphasis added).

Justice Mansfield’s opinion and the concurring opinion of Chief Justice Cady perfectly illustrate the reasons for Justice Stevens’ warning. These opinions address the merits of the plaintiffs’ claims in order to dismiss the case. In doing so, these opinions fail to fully explore the parameters of the right to an education guaranteed by the Iowa Constitution. These opinions pick article IX, division 2, section 3 of the Iowa Constitution to evaluate the merits of the case even though the parties did not brief or raise this section on appeal. To compound their mistake, these opinions fail to address the education clause found in article IX, division 1, section 12 of the Iowa Constitution on the grounds the parties did not raise it in the district court. In other words, to reach a desired result, these opinions pick and choose which arguments to make and which arguments not to make under their own error preservation rule. To me, it is inconsistent to decide the case on appeal on issues and arguments the parties did not raise below, but to deny the plaintiffs their day in court to develop all of their arguments fully, including those arguments they could have made under article IX, division 1, section 12 of the Iowa Constitution.

These opinions also frame their own arguments regarding equal protection and due process without the input of the attorneys on appeal and subsequently knock those arguments down to reach a desired result in this case. The fairest way to resolve these issues is not for the court to pick and choose sua sponte which issues and arguments to decide and which to ignore, but rather to remand the case to the district court for the parties to frame *48 and fully brief all arguments relevant to this important issue.

An additional reason we do not decide issues raised for the first time during oral argument is that it would be unfair to second-guess the strategy of the State. It may have made a conscious decision not to raise the alternative ground on appeal. See Fencl v. City of Harpers Ferry, 620 N.W.2d 808, 811–12 (Iowa 2000) (stating that “we may still affirm if there is an alternative ground, raised in the district court and urged on appeal, that can support the court’s decision”). Maybe the State wanted to focus the appeal on what it thought was its best chance for affirmance. By not urging an alternative ground on appeal, the State may have conceded that it would not win on its motion to dismiss for failure to state a cause of action under our liberal notice pleading rules. It is possible the State decided it wanted to win on a summary judgment instead of procedural grounds. It also may have decided it would have had a better chance of prevailing on a motion for summary judgment after better developing a record. See, e.g., Fitzgerald v. Racing Ass’n of Cent. Iowa, 539 U.S. 103, 110, 123 S.Ct. 2156, 2161, 156 L.Ed.2d 97, 105 (2003) (deciding a constitutional claim in favor of the State after a motion for summary judgment); Varnum v. Brien, 763 N.W.2d 862, 907 (Iowa 2009) (deciding a statute was unconstitutional after developing the record in a summary judgment proceeding); Ames Rental Prop. Ass’n v. City of Ames, 736 N.W.2d 255, 263 (Iowa 2007) (deciding an ordinance was constitutional after developing the record in a summary judgment proceeding); City of Waterloo v. Selden, 251 N.W.2d 506, 510 (Iowa 1977) (finding the summary judgment record affirmatively established at least one rational basis, and therefore, the statute was constitutional).

Finally, an appeal is between the attorneys and the parties they represent. Our law clerks and judges should not be doing the work of counsel or making strategic decisions on which issues to appeal. See United States v. Wagner, 103 F.3d 551, 552 (7th Cir.1996). We are not advocates and should not usurp a party’s strategy.

The public has criticized this court for reaching out and deciding issues not raised or briefed on appeal. This is another case for the critics to add to their list. We cannot have a rule of law that we reach out and decide an issue not briefed or pressed by the parties on appeal in order to achieve a desired result. Only time will tell if the court will apply this rule in a principled fashion or if the court will use it to achieve results favored by the shifting majorities of the court. In particular, it would be a most unfortunate development to see a liberal approach to preservation to deny individual rights, and a “gotcha” or cramped approach to preservation in order to avoid consideration of issues that would tend to vindicate individual rights. See, e.g., Mulhern v. Catholic Health Initiatives, 799 N.W.2d 104, 123 (Iowa 2011) (Wiggins, J., dissenting) (explaining the majority decided the case on an issue not tried in the district court or argued on appeal).

I do not see how we can continue to assert in criminal cases that error not preserved on appeal is “waived,” or how we can say the failure to cite authority in a criminal case leads to waiver when, in this case, we have no briefing whatsoever on issues other than on the political question issue.

Further, because Justice Mansfield’s opinion and concurring opinion of Chief Justice Cady reach the merits of the constitutional issues, they appear to overrule our decision in *49 Racing Association of Central Iowa v. Fitzgerald (RACI), 675 N.W.2d 1 (Iowa 2004), without the benefits of an appellate brief by the parties. In those cases, we said, in deciding a state constitutional equal protection challenge, we first determine whether the legislature had a valid reason to treat similarly situated persons differently. RACI, 675 N.W.2d at 7. Next, we decide if this reason has a basis in fact. Id. at 8.

There is no way we can do a proper analysis under our existing law as to whether the reason for the disparity has a basis in fact without the plaintiffs’ evidence and arguments on the issue. It appears members of the court want to overrule RACI. It is their prerogative to do so. However, without the plaintiffs briefing the issue, members of the court are promoting their own agenda. It would have been nice if the plaintiffs had weighed in on these issues.

There will be time enough to sort through the complicated issues in this case. We do a disservice to the ordinary judicial process by deciding this case without briefing in this court and without a fuller development in the district court. As noted by the Missouri Supreme Court in the context of an education case, “It is unwise for courts to shortcut procedural requirements necessary to fully and fairly address the substantive issues in cases of great public significance, when those same procedures would be required without pause in cases of lesser magnitude.” Comm. for Educ. Equal. v. State, 878 S.W.2d 446, 454 (Mo.1994). In fact, I was unable to find any case dealing with a state’s education clause that reached this important issue when the parties did not brief it on appeal.

Justice Mansfield’s opinion also cites the political activity of the other branches of government as a reason to address the issues that were not appealed. I would answer the justification given by Justice Mansfield’s opinion by noting the judicial branch is different from the other branches of government. The legislative and executive branches set their own agenda and decide what issues they want to address. The judicial branch is different. We do not decide issues unless a party in a legal action has raised the issues in the district court, has fully briefed the issues on appeal, and has asked us to reach the issues on appeal. In short, we do not set our own agenda.

We only decide issues raised and briefed by the parties. To do otherwise is nothing more than Justice Mansfield's opinion and the concurring opinion of Chief Justice Cady setting their own error preservation rules to reach issues not urged on appeal. Here, the State did not brief the issues reached by Justice Mansfield's opinion and the concurring opinion of Chief Justice Cady in this appeal. Moreover, the State did not ask us to reach those issues. The mere fact the legislative and executive branches are dealing with education issues does not give this court the license to weigh in on those issues.

This important case calls for judicial restraint. Members of the court should not be espousing their own views on issues not raised or briefed in this court. Accordingly, I would remand the case to the district court for further proceedings on the constitutional claims.

HECHT and APPEL, JJ., join this dissent.

APPEL, Justice (dissenting).

I respectfully dissent.

I concur with Justice Wiggins's opinion. In light of the virtually unprecedented determination of Justice Mansfield's opinion to reach out to uphold the district court on grounds other than those decided by the district court and that the parties chose not to present on appeal, I proceed to state *50 my views on why these alternative grounds do not provide a basis for dismissal in this case at the very inception of the lawsuit.

In my view, education is a fundamental interest or right under the Iowa Constitution. Deprivations of a basic or adequate education should be subject to heightened judicial review, and other material differences in education should be subject to judicial review under a meaningful rational basis test. I further believe the pleading, though not very clear, is sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss at this stage of the proceedings under our well-established liberal pleading rules. I would therefore reverse the district court and remand the case for further proceedings.

I. Overview of Plaintiffs' Petition.

The plaintiffs in this case are from both rural and urban school districts alleging shortcomings in the education provided by the State. They allege, among other things, that the State has failed to provide them with "equal access to an effective education" and that the State has failed "to establish and maintain an adequate education delivery system."

The plaintiffs' petition in this case alleges the State's educational requirements and accreditation standards do not ensure that students "will be able to meet and exceed the technological, informational and communication demands of society so that they can be prepared for responsible citizenship, further learning and productive employment in a global economy." They claim that many Iowa students "are not prepared to enter the workforce or post-secondary education without additional training or remediation."

The plaintiffs support their adequacy claim with various statistics. They allege, for instance, that under the National Assessment of Academic Progress standards, only thirty-three percent of Iowa fourth grade students are proficient in math, and only thirty-seven percent of students are proficient in reading. It is alleged that similar proficiency levels are achieved for eighth graders.

The plaintiffs also allege that the smallest school districts in Iowa are disadvantaged in that they have teachers with less experience and that the teachers have nearly double the teaching assignments compared with teachers in larger school districts. They also claim rural students have far fewer curriculum units available to students. They allege that there is a disparity in educational outcomes based upon where one lives.

The plaintiffs assert that the lack of adequate education violates the education provisions of article IX of the Iowa Constitution; the privileges and immunities clause of the Iowa Constitution; the due process clause of the Iowa Constitution; and statutory standards established in Iowa Code section 256.37, which declares that it is the policy of the state "to provide an education system that prepares the children of this state to meet and exceed the technological, informational, and communications demands of our society." The plaintiffs seek declaratory relief as well as a writ of mandamus, and the district court was urged to retain continuing jurisdiction for the purpose of enforcing its orders and judgments.

II. Historical Roles of National and State Government in Educating Children.

A. Introduction. In order to provide the necessary context for consideration of the constitutional issues raised in Justice Mansfield's opinion (but not in the appellate briefs), I review the contrasting roles of the state and national governments in the provision of education to children. As will be seen below, although the national government traditionally has supported *51 education of children through land grants and financial assistance, the responsibility for providing education to children has been the duty of state and local governments.

B. The Limited Role of the National Government in the Education of Children. The education of children had little to do with the American Revolution. The grievances against King George III in the Declaration of Independence had nothing to do with the education of children. The education of children was not mentioned in the Articles of Confederation or in the United States Constitution. The only mention of education in the debates at the constitutional convention was a suggestion by Madison and Pickney that Congress be expressly authorized to establish a university, a proposal that was rejected. James Madison, Notes of Debates in the Federal Convention of 1787, at 477–78, 639 (Bicentennial ed., W.W. Norton & Co., Inc. 1987); see Lawrence A. Cremin, American Education: The National Experience 1783–1876, at 127 (1980) [hereinafter Cremin].

The lack of discussion of education of children in revolutionary and constitutional contexts does not mean that the founders were unconcerned about education. The contrary is true. From the very beginning, the founders were advocates of expanding children's education.

For example, Thomas Jefferson, while serving in the Virginia legislature, was a fierce advocate of a Bill for the More General Diffusion of Knowledge, which would have established a system of free schools supported by tuition and scholarships for poor boys. Ian C. Friedman, Education Reform 8 (2004). In a letter to George Washington, Jefferson explained it was axiomatic that liberty could never be safe but “in the hands of the people themselves, and that too of the people with a certain degree of instruction.” Gordon C. Lee, Learning and Liberty: The Jeffersonian Tradition in Education, in Crusade Against Ignorance: Thomas Jefferson on Education 19 (1961). “This,” Jefferson wrote, “is the business of the state to effect, and on a general plan.” Id.

John Adams was the principal author of the Massachusetts Constitution of 1780. As adopted, the Massachusetts Constitution of 1780 provided, “Wisdom and knowledge, as well as virtue, diffused generally among the body of the people, being necessary for the preservation of their rights and liberties,” the legislature has a duty to “cherish” the interests of science and literature. Mass. Const. of 1780, pt. II, ch. 5, § 2.

Benjamin Rush, a signer of the Declaration of Independence and member of the Continental Congress, addressed the Pennsylvania legislature with his essays, “A Plan for the Establishment of Public Schools and the Diffusion of Knowledge in Pennsylvania” and “Thoughts upon the Mode of Education Proper in a Republic.” Frederick M. Hess, The Same Thing Over and Over: How School Reformers Get Stuck in Yesterday's Ideas 44 (2010). Rush called for a free school in every township and universal education at public expense, reasoning that all citizens, rich and poor, would have a role in selecting the nation's leaders and that, as a result, everyone was entitled to at least a minimal amount of education in reading, writing, and arithmetic. Id. at 44–45.

Jefferson, Adams, and Rush had at least three things in common. First, they were advocates of education of children. Second, they saw education of children as linked to the successful operation of democratic government. But for my purposes, the most important point is that they viewed the states as the governmental structure to deliver education to citizens.

*52 During the formative years of our country, the federal government supported the education of children by providing resources to assist state and local governments in providing education to citizens. First, the federal government provided public land for school uses in the states through the Land Ordinance of 1785, which required land to be set aside for school uses. 28 Journals of the Continental Congress 378 (May 20, 1785). Second, in its organizations of the territories and admission of states, Congress demanded educational progress. In the Northwest Ordinance of 1787, Congress required public education to be “forever encouraged” in the covered territories. Northwest Ordinance, 32 Journals of the Continental Congress 340 (July 13, 1787). The federal government itself, however, had no direct role in the education of children, but simply provided important financial support through land grants to states and local governments who bore the responsibility of providing education.

The encouragement of public education took on added meaning when a territory applied to become a state. Under Article IV, Section 4 of the United States Constitution, Congress was empowered to admit states only if they had a "Republican Form of Government." U.S. Const. art. IV, § 4. As states were admitted to the Union, it became "a working assumption that public education was an essential feature of a republican government based upon the will of the people." David Tyack, Thomas James & Aaron Benavot, Law and the Shaping of Public Education, 1785–1954, at 20 (1987).

Prominent antebellum education leaders such as Horace Mann of Massachusetts, Calvin Wiley of North Carolina, Caleb Mills of Indiana, Samuel Lewis of Ohio, John D. Pierce of Michigan, Robert Breckinridge of Kentucky, Ninian Edwards of Illinois, Henry Barnard of Connecticut and Rhode Island, and John Swett of California all recognized the role of the states in providing education to children and youth. See David B. Tyack, Turning Points in American Educational History 125 (1967). These prominent advocates of universal education sought to advance their cause not through pontifications in the halls of Congress, but in the local lyceum and through mechanisms of state and local government.

C. The Duty of State Government to Provide Education to Children. In contrast to the limited role of the federal government, the states had direct responsibility of providing education. The difference in involvement between the federal government and the state governments on educational matters was a night and day contrast until very recently. Further, education traditionally has been one of the most important functions of state government. A brief survey of Iowa history demonstrates these points.

While revolutionary leaders tended to emphasize education of the elite, the movement for universal education through common schools emphasizing republican virtues began in the early nineteenth century and was in full bloom during the 1830s as the movement for expanded suffrage advanced. The focus of the common school movement was on state and local governments. See generally Frederick M. Binder, The Age of the Common School, 1830–1865 (1974); Cremin; Carl F. Kaestle, Pillars of the Republic: Common Schools and American Society, 1780–1860 (1983).

Even in the territorial days, the importance of education as a responsibility of territorial government was recognized in Iowa. Governor Henry Dodge of the Wisconsin Territory (which included Iowa at the time) recognized the relation between education and democratic government. In *53 his first inaugural address, Governor Dodge, in urging the territorial assembly to provide for the establishment of local academies for the education of youth, spoke in obligatory terms:

It is a duty we owe to the rising generation to endeavor to devise means to improve the condition of those that are to succeed us; the permanence of our institutions, must depend upon the intelligence of the great mass of the people.

1 Benjamin F. Shambaugh, The Messages and Proclamations of the Governors of Iowa 9 (1903) [hereinafter Shambaugh].

Once Iowa became a territory of its own apart from Wisconsin, Robert Lucas, the first Iowa territorial governor and a delegate of the 1844 constitutional convention, was a strong advocate of education. In his first message to the legislature of the Territory of Iowa, Lucas addressed education and particularly the need for a system of free common schools. John C. Parish, Iowa Biographical Series: Robert Lucas 286 (1907) [hereinafter Parish]. Lucas stated: "There is no subject to which I wish to call your attention more emphatically, than the subject of establishing, at the commencement of our political existence, a well digested system of common schools." 1 Shambaugh at 78; John Purcell Street, Iowa Department of Public Instruction: Its Origins and Development, 30 Annals of Iowa 397, 398 (1950) [hereinafter Street]. Lucas called on the territorial assembly to "build up a good system as fast as the population and wealth of the territory would warrant." 1 Clarence Ray Aurner, History of Education in Iowa 368 (1914) [hereinafter Aurner]. The first territorial assembly responded to his call by enacting legislation calling for the establishment of common schools in school districts in the respective counties. 1 Edgar R. Harlan, A Narrative History of the People of Iowa 133 (1931) [hereinafter Harlan].

Yet, territorial government did not provide the ideal framework for development of a system of local education. Advocates of statehood appealed to the parents of children, noting that lands reserved by the federal government for education purposes could not be obtained without statehood. James Alton James, Constitution and Admission of Iowa into the Union 15 (1900). Once Iowa was admitted to statehood, Iowa received a grant of five hundred thousand acres of land from the United States for school purposes. George Chandler, Iowa and the Nation 17 (Chicago, A. Flanagan 1895).

It is thus not surprising that education was emphasized in the first Iowa Constitutions. Article X of the constitutions of 1844 and 1846 dealt with education. The 1844 and 1846 constitutions provided that the general assembly “shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement” through “a system of common schools.” Iowa Const. art. X, §§ 2–3 (1846); Iowa Const. art. X, §§ 2–3 (1844). According to a contemporaneous account of the 1846 constitutional convention:

Most ample provision is made for educating the rising generation. This is a feature which cannot be too highly prized.—It speaks volumes for the character of our population, and argues well for the prosperity of the people and the success of the great enterprise in which they are about to embark. Let the moral and mental culture [unintelligible in original] and the free institutions of our country will be safe in their hands.

Fragments of the Debates of the Iowa Constitutional Conventions of 1844 and 1846, at 339 (Benjamin F. Shambaugh ed., 1900) (internal quotation marks omitted).

The inclusion of provisions in the early Iowa Constitutions related to education was not surplusage or cosmetic features. *54 One of the advantages of statehood was the establishment of machinery to develop a coherent educational system. Beginning with the admission of Ohio as a state in 1803, Congress required that all subsequent states provide for education in their state constitutions as a condition of admission to statehood. Gerald Unks, The Illusion of Intrusion: A Chronicle of Federal Aid to Public Education, 49 Educ. F. 133, 136 (1985). After 1815, only New Mexico attempted to gain admission into the Union without an education clause, and Congress refused to go along. New Mexico then added an education clause and was subsequently admitted into the Union. See Inst. for Educ. Equity & Opportunity, Education in the 50 States: A Deskbook of the History of State Constitutions and Laws about Education 29 (2008).

The very first act of the First General Assembly of Iowa was a measure related to school funds, demonstrating the importance of education to the fledgling state. 1 Aurner at 16–17. The importance of the educational function of government is reflected by the fact that the Chief Justice of the Iowa Supreme Court, Charles Mason, was a member of the first Iowa Board of Education. 2 Aurner at 415 n. 105.

The state’s first Superintendent of Education, Thomas Hart Benton, Jr., a nephew of the famous Senator from Missouri, was a national leader in the education movement, serving on the executive committee of the American Association for the Advancement of Education. Street, 30 Annals of Iowa at 400; Proceedings of the Fifth Session of the American Association for the Advancement of Education 3 (New York, Hartford Press 1856). Benton served as president of the Education Convention of Iowa, which met in 1848 in the old stone capitol at Iowa City, “to promote by every laudable means the diffusion of knowledge in regard to education and especially to aid in establishing and perpetuating a system of common school instruction.” Parish at 286–87. Benton later remarked in an 1861 report to the board of education that “[a] wagon can better dispense with one wheel than a neighborhood with the school house.” R.A. Harkness, Notes on Iowa Educational Work from 1860 to 1888, 12 Iowa Normal Monthly No. 7, at 298 (1889). One of Benton’s successors, Oran Fanville, remarked in 1865 that “universal education is the central idea of republicanism.” Id. at 299.

Iowa’s early state governors, like Robert Lucas, were advocates for education. In 1848, Governor Ansel Briggs recognized the constitutional significance of education, stating:

The people of Iowa have ever manifested an earnest and commendable zeal in the spread of education, and, especially, in the establishment of an efficient and permanent system of Common Schools. Of such prominent importance is this subject in their estimation, that they have made the most ample provisions in the Constitution for the spread of education and the support of common schools....

1 Shambaugh at 370.

In 1852, Governor Hempstead, who was also a delegate of the 1844 constitutional convention, addressed education in his first biennial message to the Iowa legislature. He noted that “no subject can claim a more pressing interest than that of public instruction.” Id. at 430. He further declared:

The first great object should be to place within the reach of every child in the state, the opportunity of acquiring those indispensable elements of education, which shall fit him for the enlightened discharge of civil and social duties to which he may be called.

Id. at 431. Governor Hempstead further emphasized the constitutional obligations *55 of the state, noting that the Iowa Constitution required that the general assembly encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement. Id.

In 1856, Governor James Grimes emphasized education in his inaugural address. Governor Grimes stated that “[t]o accomplish these high aims of government, the first requisite is ample provision for the education of the youth of this State.” 2 Shambaugh at 7. He further declared that “[t]he State should see to it that the elements of education, like the elements of universal nature, are above, around, and beneath all.” Id. Governor Grimes noted that “[i]t is agreed that the safety and perpetuity of our republican institutions depends upon the diffusion of intelligence among the masses of the people.” Id.

In 1856, the general assembly authorized the governor to appoint a commission of three persons to revise and improve the school laws of Iowa and to report to the general assembly. Street, 30 Annals of Iowa at 402. The commission was headed by Horace Mann, the President of Antioch College in Ohio and one of the most noted educators in the United States. Id. Mann strongly believed in the “[a]bsolute right to an education of every human being that comes into the world, and which, of course, proves the correlative duty of every government to see that the means of that education are provided for all.” Serrano v. Priest, 5 Cal.3d 584, 96 Cal.Rptr. 601, 487 P.2d 1241, 1266 (1971) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). The commission investigated the state of education in other states and ultimately issued a report containing its findings and recommendations. I Aurner at 31.

The report of the Mann Commission declared that every youth was entitled to an education “in the elements of knowledge.” Id. at 32. Further, anyone desirous of further progress should be offered necessary opportunities. Id. The report called for provision of common schools, high schools, and the university. Id. at 33. It called for supervision to be provided by a state superintendent of public instruction, subject to the advice of a state board of education. Id. at 35. Perhaps because of Mann’s association with the state, a commentator two decades later declared that “Iowa may be called the Massachusetts of the West.... [T]he cause nearest the hearts of her people is ‘universal education.’ ” Editorial Preface, 12 Iowa Normal Monthly No. 7, at 1 (1889).

At the constitutional convention of 1857, considerable emphasis was placed on education. Discussing education, James Wilson declared:

We know that after all the intelligence of the people is the great bulwark to the stability and permanency of our institutions, and looking upon it in that light, it is our duty, our absolute and imperative duty, to provide the best method and the best means for carrying into effect the common school system of the state.

2 The Debates of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Iowa 750 (W. Blair Lord reporter, Davenport, Luse, Lane & Co. 1857) [hereinafter Debates], available at <http://www.statelibraryofiowa.org/services/collections/law-library/iaconst/>. Similarly, J.C. Hall asserted that “[t]he educational department of our State is a very important one. It embraces one-half of the inhabitants of the State, and for good or for evil it is productive of the most important effects upon our population.” Id. at 725. Further, George W. Ells urged:

[I]n laying the foundation for an educational system, we must discard all narrow views and prejudices, and not only provide for the wants of the present generation, but for all future generations. I desire to see the common *56 schools of this State so constituted that a thorough knowledge of all the natural sciences will be taught in the most practical manner. Should this point be attained they will contrast most favorably with the superficial education that characterizes a vast number of graduates of chartered colleges of these United States.

1 Debates at 602.

In light of the emphasis the Iowa framers placed on education, two divisions were adopted that dealt with the subject. The first division dealt primarily with the responsibilities of a state board of education, which was vested with authority to oversee the development of public education in the state. Iowa Const. art. IX, div. 1 (1857 original version). The second division related to financing of public education. Id. art. IX, div. 2. With respect to the constitutional provision that “the General Assembly shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement,” id. art. IX, div. 2, § 3, one scholar has noted that “[a]s a positive provision no clause has had a wider application in popular benefits,” Harlan at 185. It is observed that “[a]n educational system, based upon common schools ... was one of the cornerstones of the new commonwealth” and that Iowa was taking a stand that at the time was distinctively “progressive.” Harlan at 185.

From 1857 to 1864, the state board of education performed its constitutional duties. In 1864, however, the newly elected governor, William Stone, recommended abolition of the state board of education. Governor Stone stated the purpose of creating the board of education was to establish a permanent and satisfactory system of public education in Iowa. 3 Shambaugh at 7. Governor Stone urged the discontinuation of the board because the purpose had been accomplished. Id. In 1864, the general assembly abolished the board of education and established a superintendent of public instruction. See 1864 Iowa Acts ch. 52, § 1.

Nothing in the historical record suggests that the abolition of the board of education reflected a lessened constitutional commitment to education. Experience under the 1857 constitution demonstrated that vesting legislative power over educational matters with the board, but the power of the purse with the general assembly, proved awkward at best. But the commitment to education remained. According to a leading Iowa historian:

There was a belief so widespread as to be almost universal that, narrow as were the powers of the State, instruction so differed from all things else that every child in the community was entitled to a chance at the public cost to obtain the essentials of the thing called education.

I George F. Parker, Iowa Pioneer Foundations 455 (1940).

Governors subsequently continued to be strong advocates for education after the state board was abolished. Governor Cyrus Clay Carpenter in his first inaugural address on January 11, 1872, stated in connection with education that “[n]ext to political freedom, the most important element of a good government is an intelligent people.” 4 Shambaugh at 8. While recognizing the progress that had been made, he called for the establishment of a Normal School, or teachers college, to train teachers for their important task. Id. at 8–9.

The relationship between education and freedom was repeated by Governor Buren Robinson Sherman in his January 12, 1882 inaugural address. Governor Sherman declared:

The education of the masses is the surest reliance of the State, and everywhere free schools exist. Through their *57 powerful enlightening influences and strong progression the integrity of our political fabric, the security to the enterprise of the citizen, and the equality and happiness of the people are solidly assured. Popular education has become firmly entrenched in the confidence of the nation, and there is no feature of our whole system so near to the general heart, nor regarded with such affectionate anxiety as the free public schools of the country.

5 Shambaugh at 241.

Further, Governor Sherman observed “our educational system” through all time “will prove the very sheet-anchor to our liberties, as the free-ballot is the corner-stone to our political structure.” Id. at 242.

Governor William Larrabee took up education in his first inaugural address on January 14, 1886. He declared, “If it is true, as I hold it to be, that ignorance, poverty and crime are intimately related, it is the duty of every state to educate.” 6 Shambaugh at 14. He noted that “[a] republic can survive war, famine and pestilence, but it cannot survive the intelligence of its people.” Id. at 15.

In the Progressive Era, many educational reformers emphasized the need to eliminate politics from education, develop a regime of experts, and offer highly differentiated education to youth based upon their ability and future role in society. It was an era of the “Education Commission.” Iowa had three of them. A school commission in 1907 recommended, among other things, approval of curriculum by the superintendent of public instruction. Street, 30 Annals of Iowa at 445. In 1911, the “Better Iowa Schools Commission” met and recommended increased power and efficiency in the department of public instruction, the employment of a “rural school inspector” under the department of public instruction, and that the office of superintendent of public instruction be converted into a nonpartisan electoral post. Id. at 446. In 1939, a school code commission reviewed the laws of Iowa and produced a report; a second school code commission was convened in 1941 and produced another report. Id. at 447–48. The latter code commissions called for strengthening the county administration of schools, that the cost of transporting pupils be paid in whole or in part by the state, that one quarter of the cost of public school education should be paid from state funds to relieve property taxes and “equalize educational opportunity,” and “[t]hat teachers be given greater security of tenure.” Id. at 448–49.

While the philosophy of the progressive movement emphasized different themes than the common school movement, the emphasis on education as being critical to democratic values was a constant. As noted by Iowa Superintendent of Public Instruction P.E. McClenahan, “[e]ducation is a function of the state, and popular education is the only means of attaining social, political, and individual freedom.” P.E. McClenahan, Report of the Department of Public Instruction 9 (June 30, 1922).

The emphasis on the need for quality education surfaced again in the post WWII years. In September of 1954, President Eisenhower sent a letter to all state governors calling for statewide conferences on the status of education, and Iowa responded with a statewide conference in Des Moines in December 1954. Letter from Dwight D. Eisenhower to Governors (September 20, 1954) in Program from the Iowa State Conference on Education (Dec. 9–10, 1954). In the 1960s, Iowa’s Department of Public Instruction called for an “educational revolution,” noting that education is no longer “a purely local concern” but “a state responsibility.” Iowa Dep’t of Public Instruction, 63d Biennial Report 16 *58 (1966) (emphasis added). Governor Robert Ray in 1981–1982 served as chair of the Education Commission of the States, an organization dedicated to help states develop effective policies and practices in public education. See Education Commission of the States (Mar. 21, 2012), <http://www.ecs.org>.

In recent years, there has been what has been labeled a standards and accountability movement in education. In 1983, President Reagan’s Department of Education issued a report entitled, “A Nation at Risk: The Imperative for Educational Reform,” which called for higher standards and more accountability in education generally. In 1989, President George Bush convened a meeting of the nation’s governors in Charlottesville, Virginia to address the perceived shortcomings in education. Recently, a summit on education was held attended by national educational leaders and Iowa educators and administrators. Governor Branstad, who has found inspiration in Robert Lucas’s traditional commitment to education,<sup>33</sup> has proposed important changes to the Iowa education system, which will be the subject of public discussion and potential legislative action in the coming years.

This brief and nonexhaustive overview demonstrates that, in contrast to the federal government, education has played a central role in Iowa state government. While the federal government from time to time has shown an interest in education and has been indirectly involved in fostering it, the states have performed the fundamentally different role of primary provider of education.

From a historical perspective, the provision of education by Iowa state government has been seen as one of its primary and most celebrated functions. Recognition of the centrality and importance of the role of state government in providing education has transcended our political parties and has been passed on from one generation of Iowa political leaders to another up to and including our present political leadership.

III. Relationship of Education to Democratic Government, Personal Liberty, and Human Dignity.

The historical centrality of education to our state cannot be underestimated. In order to fully understand the importance of education, however, a review of the three important functions of education provides additional perspective. First, education is vital to democratic government. Second, education is a prerequisite for meaningful enjoyment of fundamental constitutional rights, including enjoyment of “life, liberty, and property.” Third, it is an essential part of the development of an autonomous personality that is a prerequisite for human dignity.

At the dawn of our nation, de Tocqueville recognized that “the instruction of the people powerfully contributes to the support of a democratic process.” 1 Alexis de Tocqueville, Democracy in America 342 (D. Appleton & Co.1904). Thomas Mann emphasized that education can never be less than such

“as is indispensable for the civil functions of a witness or a juror; as is necessary for the voter in municipal and national affairs; and finally, as is requisite for the faithful and conscientious discharge of all those duties which devolve *59 upon the inheritor of a portion of the sovereignty of this great republic.”

McDuffy v. Sec’y of Exec. Office of Educ., 415 Mass. 545, 615 N.E.2d 516, 555 (1993) (quoting The Massachusetts System of Common Schools: Tenth Annual Report of the Massachusetts Board of Education 17 (1849)). President Grant drove the point home when speaking in Des Moines on September 25, 1875, when he declared that “the free school is the promoter of that intelligence which is to preserve us as a free nation.” Jacob Armstrong Swisher, Iowa Biographical Series: Leonard Fletcher Parker 69 (1927). Grant further noted that if another contest of national existence were to arrive in the future, it would be “between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition and ignorance on the other.” Id. at 69–70.

The relationship of education to democratic government was recognized by John W. Studebaker, a distinguished Iowan who served as Des Moines School Superintendent before being appointed United States Commissioner of Education. Studebaker observed that “good government through democratic processes can be preserved ... only by definitely planned development of the means of public enlightenment.” John W. Studebaker, The American Way: Democracy at Work in the Des Moines Forums 15–16 (1935).

The United States Supreme Court recognized the linkage between education and democracy in San Antonio Independent School District v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1, 36, 93 S.Ct. 1278, 1298, 36 L.Ed.2d 16, 44 (1973), when it noted that democracy depends upon “an informed electorate: a voter cannot cast his ballot intelligently unless his reading skills and thought processes have been adequately developed.” A corollary of the right to vote is the right to be educated so as to exercise that right in an effective manner. See Susan H. Bitensky, Theoretical Foundations for a Right to Education Under the U.S. Constitution: A Beginning to the End of the National Education Crisis, 86 Nw. U.L.Rev. 550, 606 (1992)

[hereinafter Bitensky].

Certainly the parade of Iowa’s governors cited earlier would wholeheartedly endorse the concept that education is critically important to the functioning of democratic government. Today, without an educated people, spectacle, celebrity culture, escalating emotional outburst, and demand for instant gratification will replace rationality, tolerance, and mutual respect in the voting booths and in the public square.

In addition, education is now critical to meaningful enjoyment of life in Iowa and the United States. The prospects of a person who is uneducated are now marginal at best. Farming is increasingly industrialized and requires knowledge of markets, fertilizers, hybrids, and planning techniques. Manufacturing jobs are no longer unskilled, but require sophisticated knowledge, training, and skills. Ditches are no longer dug by hand. If a citizen is to have a meaningful right to enjoy the constitutionally protected interests in life, liberty, and property, the citizen must have an adequate education. Justice Cardozo captured the idea in his typically lyrical prose:

“We are free only if we know, and so in proportion to our knowledge. There is no freedom without choice, and there is no choice without knowledge—or none that is not illusory. Implicit, therefore, in the very notion of liberty is the liberty of the mind to absorb and to beget.”

Bitensky, 86 Nw. U.L.Rev. at 550 (quoting Benjamin N. Cardozo, The Paradoxes of Legal Science 104 (photo reprint 1982) (1928)).

The importance of education in empowering individuals to participate meaningfully in life did not escape school officials in *60 Iowa small towns. For instance, the bold statement “Knowledge is Power” was emblazoned on the third story of a school house in Persia, Iowa in 1885. See Camilla Dieber and Peggy Beedle, Country Schools for Iowa 9 (2002).

Finally, education is essential to the development of an autonomous individual that is the essence of human dignity. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which has been ratified by the United States, declares that the right to education is a human right and that the purpose of the human right is to provide for the “full development of the human personality.” Universal Declaration of Human Rights, G.A. Res. 217(III) A, art. 26, § 2, U.N. Doc. A/RES/217(III) (Dec. 10, 1948).<sup>34</sup> As one commentator has noted, education “takes on the status of a human right because it is integral to and enhances human dignity through its fruits of knowledge, wisdom, and understanding” and “a prerequisite for individuals to function as fully human beings in modern society.” Richard Pierre Claude, The Right to Education and Human Rights Education, in Human Rights in the World Community: Issues and Actions 211 (Richard Pierre Claude & Burns H. Veston eds., 3d ed.2006). A lack of education severely undermines the capacity of the individual to make meaningful life choices with respect to marriage and family, self-expression, political voice, religious observance, and economic role and ambition.<sup>35</sup>

*61 I am firmly convinced that education is not just an important interest. It is a one-of-a-kind interest. It goes to the very heart of democratic government, to the essence of enjoyment of life itself, and to the core of human dignity. Without education, *62 our democratic government will be undermined, the quality of life will deteriorate beyond recognition, and the realization of autonomous personality required for human dignity will become virtually impossible.

IV. Overview of Iowa Constitutional Provisions.

A. Positive Educational Provisions of the Iowa Constitution. As indicated above, the United States Constitution says nothing about education. This is not surprising since it was universally assumed by the founders that the education of children and youth was the obligation of the state and local government.

Article IX of the Iowa Constitution of 1857 dealing with education contains two divisions. The first division provides, among other things, that “[t]he educational interest of the State, including Common Schools ... shall be under the management of a Board of Education.” Iowa Const. art. IX, div. 1, § 1. The board was required to “provide for the education of all the youths of the State, through a system of Common Schools.” Id. art. IX, div. 1, § 12.

Article IX of the 1857 Iowa Constitution also contains a second division. The first sentence of section three of the second division parallels the substantive provisions of the 1846 constitution by providing that “[t]he General Assembly shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement.” Id. art. IX, div. 2, § 3.

The second sentence of section three is more complicated than the first sentence. It provides, in relevant part, that the federal funds, funds from estates with no heirs, and funds that the general assembly may provide, “shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of Common schools throughout the State.” Id.

During the debates surrounding the education articles in the 1857 constitution, the convention rejected a proposal that schools should be “free of charge and equally open to all.” 2 Debates at 825. The reason for this rejection, however, was not based on a view that education was not fundamentally important, but instead to ensure that schools in Iowa could be racially segregated. Mr. Gillaspy, an opponent to the provision, declared that “[i]f the people of this state are disposed to appropriate money for the education of the blacks, let them do it in separate and distinct schools...” Id. In response, William Penn Clark declared that “our duty goes for providing every child in the State with an education.” Id. at 826. Eventually, a substitute amendment was offered that provided “for the education of all the youths of the state, through a system of common schools.” Id. at 935. Thus, while the rejection of the proposed provision that schools be “free of charge and equally open to all” demonstrates the racial prejudices held by some members of the constitutional convention, it does not in any way undercut the importance the Iowa framers placed on accessible public education generally.

Article IX, division one, section fifteen provided the general assembly with an escape from vesting responsibility for education in the hands of an independent board of education. Under section fifteen, the general assembly was vested with the power after 1863 “to abolish or reorganize said Board of Education, and provide for the educational interest of the State in any other manner that to them shall seem best and proper.” Iowa Const. art. IX, div. 1, § 15. In 1864, the general assembly did just that. As a result, the constitutional provisions of article IX, division one, section *63 one, vesting the power to provide education in the board of education have no current effect.

The question arises what we should make of the action of the general assembly abolishing the board of education. It is clear that the action renders inoperative the constitutional provisions vesting power over education with the board of education, including the provision that “[t]he Board of Education shall provide for the education of all the youths ... through a system of Common Schools.” See id. art IX., div. 1, § 12 (emphasis added). While the board’s constitutional duty to maintain common schools was clearly repealed, the duty of the state to “provide for the educational interest,” which by definition included “Common Schools,” was not affected. See id. art. IX, div. 1, §§ 1, 15.

That the only effect of the legislative abolition of the board of education was to shift responsibilities for the provision of education as required by article IX is demonstrated by the case of Clark v. Board of Directors, 24 Iowa 266 (1868). Clark, which was decided four years after the abolition of the board, addressed the validity of racial segregation in Iowa public schools. Clark, 24 Iowa at 269–70. In concluding that racial segregation in public schools was unlawful, we cited and relied upon article IX, division 1, section 12, which provides that the board of education shall provide “for the education of all the youths of the State, through a system of common schools.” Id. at 274 (quoting Iowa Const. art. IX, div. 1, § 12). Clearly, the 1864 abolition of the board of education did not affect the substantive requirements contained in article IX, but merely shifted authority by abolishing the board and creating a Superintendent of Public Instruction. See id.; 1864 Iowa Acts ch. 52, §§ 1–2, 5 (declaring that “the Board of Education of the State of Iowa is hereby abolished,” providing for a Superintendent of Public Instruction, and charging the Superintendent with the general supervision of “all the Common Schools of the State”); see also Hume v. Indep. Sch. Dist., 180 Iowa 1233, 1241, 164 N.W. 188, 191 (1917) (citing but not relying on article IX, division 1, section 12); Burdick v. Babcock, 31 Iowa 562, 571 (1871) (Cole, J., concurring) (stating “[o]ur constitution has clothed the legislature with the power, and has expressly devolved upon it the duty of ‘providing for the education of all the youths of the State through a system of common schools’” (quoting Iowa Const. art. IX, div. 1, § 12)).

The ongoing obligation of the state is also reflected in the language of article IX, sections one and fifteen, but also demonstrated by the provisions of article IX, division two, section three, which provides for a “perpetual fund” that is “inviolably appropriated to the support of Common schools throughout the State.” Iowa Const. art. IX, div. 2, § 3. It would make no sense to have a “perpetual fund” that is “inviolably appropriated to the support of Common schools throughout the State” if the state, in its discretion, could abolish common schools. See id. (emphasis added).

Thus, the Iowa Constitution requires a system of common schools to educate all youths throughout the state, but in terms of the management of such common schools, it allows the general assembly to “provide for the educational interest of the State” in a manner other than through the board of education. See id. art. IX, div. 1, § 15. After 1863, the legislature was free to choose to manage its common schools through a superintendent of public instruction, a department of education, a committee of scholars, or in “any other manner that to them shall seem best and proper.” See id.

*64 The explicit Iowa constitutional provisions related to “provid[ing] for the education of all the youths of the State, through a system of Common Schools” and advancing “the educational interest of the State, including Common Schools,” stand in stark contrast to the complete lack of explicit provisions in the United States Constitution related to education and reflect the fundamentally different traditional roles of state and federal governments when it comes to the education of children and youth. The Federal Constitution is generally a limited constitution with the federal government only granted powers specifically authorized. In contrast, the states have plenary legislative authority and have positive commitments in the constitutional frameworks. In Iowa, one of the positive commitments in the Iowa Constitution is to the educational mission. Scholars have suggested that the positive rights tradition of state constitutions differs markedly from the negative rights tradition of federal constitutional analysis. See Helen Hershkoff, Positive Rights and State Constitutions: The Limits of Federal Rationality Review, 112 Harv. L.Rev. 1131, 1134–37 (1999) [hereinafter Hershkoff]. While the enforcement of negative rights contained in the United States Constitution generally has not required affirmative action by government, DeShaney v. Winnebago Cnty. Dep’t of Soc. Servs., 489 U.S. 189, 199, 109 S.Ct. 998, 1006, 103 L.Ed.2d 249, 261 (1989), quite the opposite is true with respect to positive obligations of state governments that, by definition, require the state to take affirmative action to meet its constitutional responsibilities.

B. Privileges and Immunities Clause of the Iowa Constitution. The Iowa Constitution has a privileges and immunities clause. The provision is found in article I, section 6. This section provides:

All laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation; the General Assembly shall not grant to any citizen, or class of citizens, privileges or immunities, which, upon the same terms shall not equally belong to all citizens.

Iowa Const. art. I, § 6. The Iowa privileges and immunities clause predates the Federal Privileges and Immunities and Equal Protection Clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment.

There has been much written about the relationship between state privileges and immunities clauses and the Federal Equal Protection Clause.<sup>36</sup> While the privileges and immunities clauses have generally not been construed narrowly, there is the notion that privileges and immunities clauses were designed, in part, to prevent narrow classes of people from getting special advantages from government, what might be in today's popular parlance be called crony capitalism.

To Iowa's first Territorial Governor Robert Lucas, however, the privileges and immunities clause of the Northwest Ordinance was linked to the right of citizens to obtain an education. In his first inaugural speech, Lucas juxtaposed the privileges and immunities clause with his comments upon the need to develop education in the territory. 1 Shambaugh at 78. Lucas saw *65 the right to education as among the "privileges" of citizens of the Iowa territory.

In the nineteenth century, the United States Supreme Court was inhospitable to claims brought under the Privileges and Immunities Clause and the related Equal Protection Clause in the Federal Constitution. In The Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U.S. (16 Wall.) 36, 21 L.Ed. 394 (1872), the Court gave the Federal Privileges and Immunities Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment an extraordinarily narrow interpretation. In Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537, 16 S.Ct. 1138, 41 L.Ed. 256 (1896), the United States Supreme Court announced the separate but equal doctrine, which stood as law for over fifty years until it was finally overturned in Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686, 98 L.Ed. 873 (1954). While the United States Supreme Court was minimizing the Federal Privileges and Immunities Clause and narrowly interpreting equal protection, however, the Iowa Supreme Court was breathing life and meaning into state constitutional provisions related to equality.

The dramatic story begins prior to statehood. In its first reported case, In re Ralph, 1 Morris 1 (Iowa 1839), the Supreme Court of the Territory of Iowa held that a slave who was voluntarily permitted to leave Missouri and travel to Iowa was a free man as the law should "extend equal protection to men of all colors and conditions." In re Ralph, 1 Morris at 6. This holding, of course, was the precise opposite of the approach taken by the United States Supreme Court in Dred Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. (19 How.) 393, 15 L.Ed. 691 (1856), twenty years later.

After statehood, the tradition of In re Ralph was extended in Clark. As discussed above, Clark held that a person cannot be denied admission to a public school on account of race. Clark, 24 Iowa at 274. Although Clark was based on statutory grounds, the decision included sweeping language with constitutional overtones. Id. at 277. In Coger v. Northwestern Union Packet Co., 37 Iowa 145, 153–55 (1873), this court, relying upon article I, section 1 of the Iowa Constitution, refused to endorse the separate but equal doctrine and instead held that persons of color were entitled to be admitted as a steamboat passenger on equal terms to white patrons. See Iowa Const. art. I, § 1 (1857) ("All men are, by nature, free and equal").

Since the very beginning, we have interpreted Iowa's privileges and immunities clause in a fashion dramatically different than the interpretation offered by the United States Supreme Court in The Slaughter-House Cases. In more recent years, we have often looked to federal equal protection precedent for its persuasive power in interpreting our privileges and immunities provision. Callender v. Skiles, 591 N.W.2d 182, 187 (Iowa 1999). We have, however, jealously guarded our right to engage in analysis under the Iowa Constitution that is independent from the interpretations of the United States Supreme Court under the Federal Equal Protection Clause. Chi. Title Ins. Co. v. Huff, 256 N.W.2d 17, 23 (Iowa 1977); Davenport Water Co. v. Iowa State Commerce Comm'n, 190 N.W.2d 583, 593 (Iowa 1971), superseded by statute, Iowa Code § 17A.19(7) (1975), as recognized in Interstate Power Co. v. Iowa State Commerce Comm'n, 463 N.W.2d 699, 702 (Iowa 1990). On a number of occasions, we have departed from directly applicable federal precedent and engaged in independent analysis. See, e.g., Racing Ass'n of Cent. Iowa v. Fitzgerald (RACI), 675 N.W.2d 1, 7 (Iowa 2004); Bierkamp v. Rogers, 293 N.W.2d 577, 581–82 (Iowa 1980). When federal precedent was lacking, we have relied on state constitutional grounds to decide important *66 issues. See Varnum v. Brien, 763 N.W.2d 862, 906 (Iowa 2009).

Our independent role in our application of equal protection concepts pursuant to the privileges and immunities clause of the Iowa Constitution is a firmly established feature of our legal tradition from the very first days of statehood, is consistent with the evolving law in other states, and is part of a celebrated tradition in Iowa.

C. Substantive Due Process of the Iowa Constitution. The plaintiffs make a substantive due process claim under article I, section 9 of the Iowa Constitution. Article I, section 9 states, in relevant part, that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." Iowa Const. art. I, § 9.

The Iowa constitutional provision is parallel to a similar provision of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution. As with other state constitutional provisions, we zealously guard our ability to interpret the Iowa Constitution differently than the interpretations of the United States Supreme Court under the federal due process provision. State v. Feregrino, 756 N.W.2d 700, 704 n. 1 (Iowa 2008).

In Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 403, 43 S.Ct. 625, 628, 67 L.Ed. 1042, 1046–47 (1923), the United States Supreme Court overturned a conviction of a school teacher who taught foreign languages in public schools. In passing, the Court identified the right to acquire useful knowledge as a liberty interest protected by the Fourteenth Amendment. Meyer, 262 U.S. at 399–400, 43 S.Ct. at 626–27, 67 L.Ed. at 1045. While not overruled, the outcome in Meyer was based on due process methodology of the Lochner era and may not be reliable precedent.

The United States Supreme Court, however, has employed substantive due process in a number of contexts in more recent years that may be instructive in the present case. For instance, in Youngberg v. Romeo, 457 U.S. 307, 324, 102 S.Ct. 2452, 2462, 73 L.Ed.2d 28, 42–43 (1982), the Supreme Court declared that persons subject to civil commitment “enjoy[ ] constitutionally protected interests in conditions of reasonable care and safety, reasonably nonrestrictive confinement conditions, and such training as may be required by those interests.” Justice Blackmun’s opinion in Jackson v. Indiana, 406 U.S. 715, 738, 92 S.Ct. 1845, 1858, 32 L.Ed.2d 435, 450–51 (1972), suggested that due process requires that the nature and duration of commitment must have a reasonable relationship to the reasons for commitment.

A case of potential significance is Wyatt v. Aderholt, 503 F.2d 1305 (5th Cir.1974). Aderholt involved a class action alleging that a state school designed to habilitate the mentally handicapped was not providing meaningful care. Aderholt, 503 F.2d at 1306. Judge Wisdom characterized the issue as whether “federal district courts have the power to order state mental institutions to provide minimum levels of psychiatric care and treatment to persons civilly committed to the institutions.” Id. The Aderholt court unanimously decided the question in the affirmative. Id. at 1319. It rejected the claims of Governor George Wallace that providing adequate treatment for persons civilly confined was a question of available funds. Id. at 1317–19.

In light of these analogies, it can be asserted that, because education is compulsory, it involves liberty and its deprivation triggers a due process right that the infringement of liberty be reasonably related to the intended purpose, namely, education. See Bitensky, 86 Nw. U.L.Rev. at 596 n. 277; Gershon M. Ratner, *67 A New Legal Duty For Urban Public Schools: Effective Education in Basic Skills, 63 Tex. L.Rev. 777, 823–28 (1985) [hereinafter Ratner]; Note, A Right to Learn? Improving Educational Outcomes Through Substantive Due Process, 120 Harv. L.Rev. 1323, 1328–32 (2007).

Our prior precedents recognize a due process interest in adequate education. In Exira Community School District v. State, 512 N.W.2d 787, 796 (Iowa 1994), we noted that a student has a due process right to an “adequate education.” Thus, a finding in this case that there is a due process right under the Iowa Constitution would not be breaking new theoretical ground, but simply applying the tools present in existing precedent.

V. Overview of Education Cases.

A. Introduction. In this section, I provide an overview of two important cases related to education, Serrano v. Priest, 5 Cal.3d 584, 96 Cal.Rptr. 601, 487 P.2d 1241 (1971) (Serrano I), and San Antonio Independent School District v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1, 93 S.Ct. 1278, 36 L.Ed.2d 16 (1973). These cases set the stage for a more detailed analysis of the rich sources of state constitutional law regarding educational issues.

The survey will show that, even if this court were to apply the San Antonio framework for determining whether an interest is “fundamental” for equal protection purposes, such a fundamental interest would be present in light of the explicit Iowa constitutional provisions related to education. Further, the survey will show that, while the cases are divided, many state supreme courts have found a fundamental interest in education because of the strong historical role of state government in providing education to children and because of the critical functional role of education in a democratic government.

B. The California State Supreme Court Decision in Serrano I.

1. Introduction. The first major case to consider a challenge to a state system of education on equal protection grounds was Serrano I. In Serrano I, school children and their parents challenged the constitutionality of public school financing in the State of California. Serrano I, 96 Cal.Rptr. 601, 487 P.2d at 1244. The plaintiffs claimed that reliance on property taxes to fund public schools caused substantial disparities in the quality and nature of educational opportunities available to them. Id. The district court granted the defendants' demurrer (motion to dismiss) and the plaintiffs appealed. Id. at 1245.

2. California's education clause. The Serrano I court rejected the claim that California's funding of public schools violated the education clause of the California Constitution. Id. at 1249; see Cal. Const. art. IX, § 5. The court held that while California was required to maintain a "system" of common schools, a "system" of common schools meant only a prescribed course of study and educational progression from grade to grade. Serrano I, 96 Cal.Rptr. 601, 487 P.2d at 1248–49. The Serrano I court reasoned that the education clause, standing alone, did not require equality of spending. Id.

3. Equal protection under the Fourteenth Amendment. The Serrano I court next turned to the claim that California's education system violated the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution. Citing the poll tax case of Harper v. Virginia State Board of Elections, 383 U.S. 663, 86 S.Ct. 1079, 16 L.Ed.2d 169 (1966), the court concluded that the reliance on property taxes that produced financial disparities available to school districts amounted to a classification based upon wealth of the district. *68 Serrano I, 96 Cal.Rptr. 601, 487 P.2d at 1250. The court rejected the state's argument that because the discrimination was based on district wealth, no equal protection claim could be brought. Id. at 1251–52. The court further concluded that when a classification was based on wealth, no allegation of purposeful or intentional discrimination was required. Id. at 1253–55. The court noted that in Harper, the poll tax was neutral on its face but was clearly discriminatory in effect. Id. at 1254. The court further noted that while the United States Supreme Court had not yet weighed in on the issue, the California Supreme Court had previously held that de facto racial segregation violated the Fourteenth Amendment. Id. at 1255 (citing S.F. Unified Sch. Dist. v. Johnson, 3 Cal.3d 937, 92 Cal.Rptr. 309, 479 P.2d 669 (1971), and Jackson v. Pasadena City Sch. Dist., 59 Cal.2d 876, 31 Cal.Rptr. 606, 382 P.2d 878 (1963)).

The Serrano I court also addressed the question of whether the asserted educational interest of the plaintiffs amounted to a fundamental interest for purposes of equal protection analysis. Serrano I, 96 Cal.Rptr. 601, 487 P.2d at 1255–59. The court noted that education plays an indispensable role in modern industrial society in two respects. Education, according to the court, "is a major determinant of an individual's chances for economic and social success." Id. at 1255–56. Second, education has "a unique influence on a child's development as a citizen and his participation in political and community life." Id. at 1256. The court compared education with other fundamental rights such as the right to have a free transcript or a court appointed lawyer. Id. at 1257–58. The court concluded that education compared favorably in importance. Id. According to the court, education, aside from reducing the crime rate, supports "each and every other value of a democratic society—participation, communication, and social mobility, to name but a few." Id. at 1258 (citing the seminal work of John E. Coons, William H. Clune III & Stephen D. Sugarman, Educational Opportunity: A Workable Constitutional Test for State Financial Structures, 57 Cal. L.Rev. 305 (1969)).

Having determined that the financing scheme in California discriminated against school districts on the basis of wealth and affected fundamental interests, the Serrano I court proceeded to apply a compelling state interest standard to determine its validity. Serrano I, 96 Cal.Rptr. 601, 487 P.2d at 1259–63. Not surprisingly, the court found the scheme invalid under the demanding test. Id. at 1263. The court rejected the asserted state interest of local control, noting that local control could be preserved regardless of the method of financing public education. Id. at 1260. With respect to the claim that the system encouraged decentralized decision making at the local level, the court found that "such fiscal freewill is a cruel illusion for the poor school districts." Id. According to the court, so long as the assessed valuation within a district's boundaries is a major determinant of how much it can spend for its schools, only a district with a large tax base will be truly able to decide how much it really cares about education.

Id. A poor district, according to the court, cannot tax itself into an excellence that its tax rolls cannot provide. Id.

4. Privileges and immunities and uniformity clauses of the California Constitution. While the Serrano I court focused primarily on the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, footnote eleven of the opinion indicated that a violation of the California Constitution article I, sections 11 and 21 were also present. Id. at 1249 n. 11. Section 11 provided that "[a]ll laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation," *69 while section 21 provided that "[n]o special privileges or immunities shall ever be granted ... nor shall any citizen, or class of citizens, be granted privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not be granted to all citizens.' ” Id. (quoting article I, sections 11 and 21 of the California Constitution). The Serrano I court observed in the footnote that ordinarily the court construed these state provisions as “ ‘substantially the equivalent’ of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.” Id. (quoting Dep’t of Mental Hygiene v. Kirchner, 62 Cal.2d 586, 43 Cal.Rptr. 329, 400 P.2d 321, 322 (1965)).

5. Summary. As a result, the Serrano I court reversed the dismissal of the action by the trial court primarily on federal constitutional grounds. On remand, the court stated that the district court should engage in further proceedings, and if it entered judgment against the defendants, it could do so “in such a way as to permit an orderly transition from an unconstitutional to a constitutional system of school financing.” Id. at 1266.

C. Federal Developments: San Antonio.

1. Introduction. The United States Supreme Court took up the issue of disparities of education in San Antonio. In this case, school children and their parents brought a class action on behalf of all children who live in school districts with low property valuations attacking the Texas method of financing public education. Rodriguez v. San Antonio Indep. Sch. Dist., 337 F.Supp. 280, 281 (W.D.Tex.1971).

After a trial in which testimony and documentary evidence was presented, a three judge panel of district court judges, relying in part on Serrano I, concluded that the plaintiffs had demonstrated that the Texas scheme of financing public education violated the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Id. Noting that wealthy school districts had more educational options than poorer ones, the district court concluded that “the quality of public education may not be a function of wealth, other than the wealth of the state as a whole.” Id. at 284. By a narrow 5–4 margin, the United States Supreme Court reversed the district court. San Antonio, 411 U.S. at 6, 93 S.Ct. at 1282, 36 L.Ed.2d at 27.

2. Focus of San Antonio: Does strict scrutiny apply to parity claims under the Equal Protection Clause? In an opinion by Justice Powell, the San Antonio majority first concluded that the plaintiffs failed to make a showing of wealth discrimination sufficient to trigger strict scrutiny. Id. at 22–23, 93 S.Ct. at 1291, 36 L.Ed.2d at 36–37. The San Antonio majority concluded that the class of persons in the school districts attended by plaintiffs was ill defined. Id. Although the school districts generally had less wealth, students within the school districts were not uniformly poor. Id. According to the San Antonio majority, there was no basis in the record to conclude that the poorest people were concentrated in the poorest districts. Id. at 23, 93 S.Ct. at 1291, 36 L.Ed.2d at 37 (emphasis added). As a result, the class of plaintiffs was not sufficiently related to wealth to trigger strict scrutiny.

In reaching its conclusion, the San Antonio majority noted that no claim had been made that the plaintiffs suffered “an absolute deprivation of the desired benefit.” Id. The San Antonio majority emphasized that “the Equal Protection Clause does not require absolute equality or precisely equal advantages.” Id. at 24, 93 S.Ct. at 1291, 36 L.Ed.2d at 37. The San Antonio majority further observed that Texas authorities asserted the plaintiffs were receiving an “adequate” education *70 and that “[n]o proof was offered at trial persuasively discrediting or refuting the State’s assertion.”<sup>37</sup> Id. at 24, 93 S.Ct. at 1292, 36 L.Ed.2d at 38.

In contrast to the California Supreme Court in Serrano I, the San Antonio majority also determined that while education was an important interest, it did not amount to a fundamental interest under the Federal Constitution. Citing Brown, the San Antonio majority recognized “the vital role of education in a free society.” Id. at 30, 93 S.Ct. at 1295, 36 L.Ed.2d at 41. Yet, the Court noted the power of the dissent in Shapiro v. Thompson, 394 U.S. 618, 89 S.Ct. 1322, 22 L.Ed.2d 600 (1969), in which Justice Harlan cautioned that fundamental rights doctrine should not extend to “ ‘[v]irtually every state statute’ ” that affects important rights. Id. at 31, 93 S.Ct. at 1295, 36 L.Ed.2d at 41 (quoting Shapiro, 394 U.S. at 661, 89 S.Ct. at 1345, 22 L.Ed.2d at 631 (Harlan, J., dissenting), overruled in part on other grounds by Edelman v. Jordan, 415 U.S. 651, 671, 94 S.Ct. 1347, 1359–60, 39 L.Ed.2d 662, 677 (1974)).

In order to cabin the fundamental rights doctrine, the San Antonio majority held that a fundamental right under the Federal Equal Protection Clause is one that is explicitly or implicitly afforded protection in the United States Constitution. Id. at 33, 93 S.Ct. at 1297, 36 L.Ed.2d at 43. Fundamental rights under the Federal Constitution thus do not arise from an “ad hoc determination as to the social or economic importance of that right.” Id. at 32, 93 S.Ct. at 1296, 36 L.Ed.2d at 42.

The San Antonio majority’s test of what amounts to a fundamental interest is noteworthy because it highlights the difference between Federal and State Constitutions. Under the test of the San Antonio majority, it is clear that education is not a fundamental interest under the Federal Constitution because nowhere is education explicitly or implicitly mentioned in the text. The opposite, of course, is true of state constitutions, which routinely contain explicit constitutional provisions relating to education that invariably include a duty to provide education to its citizens. A state court desiring to follow the San Antonio formulation for determining whether an interest is fundamental would be compelled to find such an interest in light of the prominent and explicit role of education in the state constitution.

As in its discussion regarding the question of whether the plaintiffs demonstrated discrimination on the basis of wealth, the San Antonio majority emphasized in its discussion of fundamental interests that “[e]ven if it were conceded that some identifiable quantum of education is a constitutionally protected prerequisite to the meaningful exercise of either right” there was no indication in the record that the present level of expenditures in the schools which the plaintiffs attended fell short. Id. at 36–37, 93 S.Ct. at 1298–99, 36 L.Ed.2d at 45. The San Antonio majority noted that “no charge fairly could be made that the system fails to provide each child with an opportunity to acquire the basic minimum skills necessary for the enjoyment of the rights of speech and of full *71 participation in the political process.” Id. at 37, 93 S.Ct. at 1299, 36 L.Ed.2d at 45.

3. Impact of federalism and deference to states. The San Antonio majority noted that “a century of Supreme Court adjudication under the Equal Protection Clause affirmatively supports” the application of a rational basis test to the Texas educational finance structure. Id. at 40, 93 S.Ct. at 1300, 36 L.Ed.2d at 47. The San Antonio majority stressed that the field of taxation had been a traditional area of deference. Id. Further, the San Antonio majority recognized that the field of education involved a number of complex issues that ordinarily should be left to the legislative process. Id. at 42–43, 93 S.Ct. at 1301–02, 36 L.Ed.2d at 48–49.

Any Supreme Court review of legislation involves deference issues, and many constitutional questions before the Court can be quite complex. What made the case especially troubling to the San Antonio majority was the strong federalism concerns underlying its conclusion that strict scrutiny of state school finance laws was inappropriate. The San Antonio majority noted the implications of the case for the relationship between national and state power under the federal system. Id. at 44, 93 S.Ct. at 1302, 36 L.Ed.2d at 49. The San Antonio majority declared “it would be difficult to imagine” a case with greater impact on the federal system than the case before the Court in which the Court is urged to “abrogate systems of financing public education presently in existence in virtually every State.” Id.

4. Application of rational basis test. After determining that the proper standard of review was the traditional rational basis standard, the San Antonio majority proceeded to consider the merits of the plaintiffs’ claim. The three judge district court had concluded based on a substantial record that the Texas system failed even “to establish a reasonable basis” for a system that results in different levels of per pupil expenditure. Rodriguez, 337 F.Supp. at 284.

The San Antonio majority disagreed with the district court, concluding that local control provided a sufficient rational basis for the funding scheme. The San Antonio majority emphasized that the Texas system of school finance assured “a basic education” for every child in the state. San Antonio, 411 U.S. at 49, 93 S.Ct. at 1305, 36 L.Ed.2d at 52. Local control, according to the San Antonio majority, is vital to continued public support for education, and it means the freedom to devote more funds to education through local taxes. Id. at 49–50, 93 S.Ct. at 1305, 36 L.Ed.2d at 52. The San Antonio majority noted that while poor school districts had reduced ability to make free decisions regarding how much they spend on education, they still “retain under the present system a large measure of authority as to how available funds will be allocated.” Id. at 51, 93 S.Ct. at 1306, 36 L.Ed.2d at 53. The state’s interest in maintenance of local control in education thus satisfied the rational basis test under the Federal Equal Protection Clause.

5. Dissents. The majority opinion in San Antonio drew dissents from Justices Brennan, White, and Marshall. Justice Brennan challenged the holding of the majority that education did not amount to a fundamental interest. He noted that education was inextricably linked to constitutional rights of voting and free speech and that, as a result, education amounted to a fundamental interest for purposes of equal protection. Id. at 62–63, 93 S.Ct. at 1312, 36 L.Ed.2d at 60 (Brennan, J., dissenting).

Justice White attacked the majority’s conclusion that local control justified the Texas finance scheme. Id. at 64–65, 93 S.Ct. at 1312–13, 36 L.Ed.2d at 61–62 (White, J., dissenting). He asserted that *72 while local control might be a valid state interest, the means chosen by Texas did not advance it. Specifically, Justice White noted that districts with a low tax base did not have an effective local option choice of increasing funds available for education. Id. He further concluded that a class was obviously present for equal protection purposes, namely, the persons who find themselves in a low property value

Justice Marshall, joined by Justice Douglas, provided the lengthiest dissent. He found it an inescapable fact that if one school district has more funds available per pupil than another, the former will have a greater choice in educational planning than the latter. Id. at 83–84, 93 S.Ct. at 1322, 36 L.Ed.2d at 72 (Marshall, J., dissenting). He attacked the majority's notion that Texas provided an "adequate" education, noting that the Court had never before suggested that because some "adequate" level of benefits is provided to all, discrimination in the provision of services is acceptable. Id. at 88–89, 93 S.Ct. at 1325, 36 L.Ed.2d at 74–75. He rejected the rigidified tiered approach to equal protection, calling instead for the adoption of a more flexible test that balanced the interests of the party challenging the classification against the state's purported interest in sustaining the statute. Id. at 98–110, 93 S.Ct. at 1330–36, 36 L.Ed.2d at 81–88. In any event, Justice Marshall concluded that education certainly was a "fundamental" interest in light of its unique status in society and its nexus with other protected constitutional rights. Id. at 111, 93 S.Ct. at 1336–37, 36 L.Ed.2d at 88.

6. Summary. The San Antonio majority rejected a federal equal protection claim when the plaintiff sought parity in educational expenditures. The San Antonio majority was particularly concerned that if strict scrutiny would apply to such sweeping claims, thousands of state statutes would be invalidated. The Court expressly reserved the question, however, of whether strict scrutiny would apply where a state deprived children of an adequate education.

Further, the San Antonio Court adopted a standard for determining whether an asserted interest or right is fundamental. While not binding on a state court, the methodology, if followed, would lead to the conclusion that education, which is the subject of explicit state constitutional provisions, is a fundamental interest for equal protection purposes.

D. The California State Court Response: Serrano II. After San Antonio, the California Supreme Court in Serrano v. Priest, 18 Cal.3d 728, 135 Cal.Rptr. 345, 557 P.2d 929 (1976) (Serrano II), was asked to reconsider its decision that the California system of financing education was constitutionally infirm. During the trial proceedings resulting from Serrano I, San Antonio was decided. The trial court, however, concluded that the financing scheme violated the privileges and immunities and uniform laws clauses of the California Constitution. Serrano II, 135 Cal.Rptr. 345, 557 P.2d at 931. The defendants appealed. Id.

In Serrano II, the California Supreme Court declined to follow San Antonio in its interpretation of the state constitution. Id., 135 Cal.Rptr. 345, 557 P.2d at 951. The Serrano II court emphasized that while the state equal protection provisions were "substantially the equivalent" of the guarantees of the Fourteenth Amendment, they possessed "an independent vitality which, in a given case, may demand an analysis different from that which would obtain if only the federal standard were applicable." Id., 135 Cal.Rptr. 345, 557 P.2d at 950. The Serrano II court noted that considerations of federalism, which played an important part in San Antonio, *73 had no application to the judgment of a state supreme court. Id., 135 Cal.Rptr. 345, 557 P.2d at 948–49. Further, while the Serrano II court did not claim expertise on school financing, it noted it had the benefit of 4000 pages of testimonial transcript, replete with the opinions of experts, and exhaustive findings of the district court. Id., 135 Cal.Rptr. 345, 557 P.2d at 952. In determining whether a right is "fundamental" for purposes of the California equal protection clause, the Serrano II court rejected the San Antonio test. Id. Instead, the Serrano II court declared that it would determine which legislative classifications were subject to strict scrutiny based upon the impact on those rights and liberties which "lie at the core of our free and representative form of government." Id.

E. Subsequent Education Cases Based on State Constitutions.

1. Overview of state court cases subsequent to San Antonio. After Serrano I, San Antonio, and Serrano II, a significant number of states considered challenges to state schemes of providing education. Plaintiffs challenging state educational frameworks in state courts generally launched double-barreled attacks.<sup>38</sup> First, plaintiffs claimed that the educational structures violated the state education clauses in the state constitutions. Second, the plaintiffs asserted that the state education schemes violated equal protection under the state constitutions. These theories, while pled separately, often operated in tandem with one another. In a few states, plaintiffs have also included challenges to educational structures based on substantive due process.<sup>39</sup>

While the cases often turn upon the specific language of statutes and the nature of the factual records that are developed, the post-San Antonio state supreme court cases in which plaintiffs challenging state educational frameworks prevail are in the majority,<sup>40</sup> while those denying relief *74 constitute a substantial minority.<sup>41</sup>

Interestingly, the jurisdictions where state supreme courts have departed from San Antonio include Texas, where the state supreme court invalidated the same school financing arrangements that the United States Supreme Court approved in San Antonio. See Edgewood Indep. Sch. Dist. v. Kirby, 777 S.W.2d 391, 392 (Tex.1989). In the minority of cases lost by plaintiffs, some may be characterized as providing mixed results, such as where the courts recognized or at least reserved the possibility of a successful claim but found the facts insufficient to support them.<sup>42</sup> Many of the cases also triggered strong dissents.<sup>43</sup>

Many of the decisions are also based upon extensive records developed by trial courts.<sup>44</sup> In some cases where the trial courts dismissed education claims without developing an evidentiary record, reversal has occurred. See, e.g., Idaho Sch. for Equal Educ. Opportunity v. Evans, 850 P.2d 724, 734–35 (Idaho 1993).

2. Obstacles to judicial review: Political question and justiciability doctrines. The post-San Antonio state court cases have considered a number of obstacles to judicial review. The main obstacles are the political question doctrine and the related doctrine of justiciability.

With respect to the political question doctrine, state courts receptive to education *75 claims have generally found that courts have a duty to decide cases brought before them by the parties. The duty of courts to declare what the law is has sometimes been expressed in forceful terms. For example, the Kentucky Supreme Court in Rose declared that “[t]o avoid deciding the case because of ‘legislative discretion’ ... would be a denigration of our own constitutional duty. To allow the General Assembly ... to decide whether its actions are constitutional is literally unthinkable.” Rose v. Council for Better Educ., Inc., 790 S.W.2d 186, 209 (Ky.1989). Similarly, in DeRolph v. State, the Ohio Supreme Court declared:

We will not dodge our responsibility by asserting that this case involves a nonjusticiable political question. To do so is unthinkable. We refuse to undermine our role as judicial arbiters and to pass our responsibilities onto the lap of the General Assembly.

78 Ohio St.3d 193, 677 N.E.2d 733, 737 (1997); see also Conn. Coal. for Justice in Educ. Funding, Inc. v. Rell, 295 Conn. 240, 990 A.2d 206, 223 (2010) (noting “‘it is well within the province of the judiciary to determine whether a coordinate branch of government has conducted itself in accordance with ‘the authority conferred upon it by the constitution’ ” (quoting Office of the Governor v. Select Comm. of Inquiry, 271 Conn. 540, 858 A.2d 709, 730 (2004))); Evans, 850 P.2d at 734 (“[W]e decline to accept the respondents’ argument that the other branches of government be allowed to interpret the constitution for us. That would be an abject abdication of our role in the American system of government.”); McDaniel v. Thomas, 248 Ga. 632, 285 S.E.2d 156, 157 (1981) (noting court was not called to decide which policy was “better,” but only if existing method of financing public education met state constitutional requirements); Columbia Falls Elementary Sch. Dist. No. 6 v. State, 326 Mont. 304, 109 P.3d 257, 261 (2005) (“As the final guardian and protector of the right to education, it is incumbent upon the court to assure that the system enacted by the Legislature enforces, protects and fulfills the right.”); Leandro v. State, 346 N.C. 336, 488 S.E.2d 249, 253 (1997) (“When a government action is challenged as unconstitutional, the courts have a duty to determine whether that action exceeds constitutional limits.”). A minority of state courts, however, view education clause and equal protection clause challenges as raising political questions.<sup>45</sup>

3. Analysis of education clauses in state constitutions. As indicated above, nearly all of the state constitutions contain provisions related to education. The clauses come in a number of shapes and sizes that have been categorized by commentators. Some of the clauses are characterized as “weak,” while others are thought to be more robust.<sup>46</sup>

A significant number of constitutions that require the legislature to provide for a “thorough and efficient,” “liberal,” “general and uniform,” “general, suitable, and efficient,” “a system of free common schools,” or an “efficient” system of schools, have been held to provide the basis for a judicially enforceable mandatory obligation to provide children with a certain level or quality of education.<sup>47</sup> One *76 court, however, has found that a requirement that “there shall always be free public elementary and secondary schools” is sufficient to establish a minimum qualitative requirement. See Rell, 990 A.2d at 227, 281–82.

On the other hand, there are cases declining to find an enforceable mandatory duty to provide an adequate education based on constitutional provisions that provide for “a system of common schools,”<sup>48</sup> a requirement that schools be “thorough and uniform,”<sup>49</sup> a requirement to make “adequate provision ... for a uniform system of free public schools,"<sup>50</sup> a provision establishing a "a primary obligation" for "the provision of an adequate education,"<sup>51</sup> a provision requiring the state to "establish and maintain a ... thorough system of public, free common schools,"<sup>52</sup> and a provision requiring a "general and uniform system of Common Schools."<sup>53</sup>

4. Overview of state education cases considering challenges based on substantive due process. At least one court has considered challenges to state educational frameworks based on substantive due process under state constitutions. In Alabama, for instance, the Alabama Supreme Court has adopted a more rigorous standard of substantive due process than employed by the United States Supreme Court. See Mount Royal Towers, Inc. v. Ala. State Bd. of Health, 388 So.2d 1209, 1213–15 (Ala.1980). In the lower court opinion attached as an appendix in Opinion of the Justices, 624 So.2d 107 (Ala.1993), the Alabama circuit court declared that "it is well-settled in this state that when the state deprives citizens of liberty for the purposes of benefiting them with a service, due process requires that the service be provided to them in an adequate form." Op. of the Justices, 624 So.2d at 161. This approach, however, was later overruled by the Alabama Supreme Court in Ex parte James, 836 So.2d 813, 819 (Ala.2002).

5. Issues arising in state education cases based on state equal protection clauses. In state education cases arising under state privileges and immunities or state equal protection challenges, several issues repetitively appear in the cases. They include the standard of review, whether a party attacking an education scheme must show intentional discrimination, and whether the plaintiffs have identified a class sufficient to support an equal protection claim.

A critical issue is the standard of review. A significant number of state supreme court cases have found that education gives rise to a fundamental interest under state constitutions. These cases reach this result in a number of ways. Some of them explicitly adopt the fundamental interest framework advanced in San Antonio and find that because education *77 is expressly or impliedly rooted in their state constitutions, it arises to a fundamental interest for equal protection purposes. See Washakie Cnty. Sch. Dist. No. One v. Herschler, 606 P.2d 310, 333 (Wyo.1980). Others depart from the San Antonio framework and either apply a more generous test, finding a fundamental interest based on the underlying importance of education generally,<sup>54</sup> or a narrower test than in San Antonio in order to avoid a finding of fundamental interest.<sup>55</sup>

In contrast to these cases, some state supreme courts have followed San Antonio and applied a rational basis standard to education challenges. In most of these cases, the state frameworks have been upheld.<sup>56</sup> But not in every case. In several cases, state supreme courts have applied a rational basis "with teeth" test and have invalidated state education structures on that basis.<sup>57</sup>

A second issue is whether the plaintiff has the burden of showing disparate treatment. With respect to disparate treatment, the state courts that address the issue generally build on the dissent in San Antonio, which notes that the class consists of persons residing in low property tax jurisdictions who are treated differently than those in tax rich geographic locations. See San Antonio, 411 U.S. at 69–70, 93 S.Ct. at 1315, 36 L.Ed.2d at 64 (White, J., dissenting); Serrano I, 96 Cal.Rptr. 601, 487 P.2d at 1261 (state's general freedom to discriminate based on geographical basis will be significantly curtailed by the Equal Protection Clause); Tenn. Small Sch. Sys. v. McWherter, 851 S.W.2d 139, 154 (Tenn.1993) (citing substantial disparity based on school districts).

A final issue frequently arising in equal protection analysis is the power of the state's asserted interest in local control in the education arena. As noted in Serrano I and subsequent cases, local control is a "cruel illusion" if disparities are imposed on poor districts due to the limitations placed on them by the system itself. Serrano I, 96 Cal.Rptr. 601, 487 P.2d at 1260; see also DuPree v. Alma Sch. Dist. No. 30, 279 Ark. 340, 651 S.W.2d 90, 93 (1983). If there are disparities in educational opportunity, a factual question arises: Are the disparities due to local decisions, or are they caused by the state system of financing and providing of education? See Roosevelt Elementary Sch. Dist. No. 66 v. Bishop, 179 Ariz. 233, 877 P.2d 806, 815 (1994) (holding question of whether disparities caused by local decision making or by public school system raises factual question for trial court).

6. Issues related to the type and scope of relief. A critical issue in education cases is the type of relief sought by the plaintiffs. Some plaintiffs seek what some commentators have identified as parity in educational opportunity.<sup>58</sup> Others seek only an "adequate" or a "sound, basic" education. The choice of relief can have dramatic implications for the litigation.

*78 Plaintiffs who seek parity do not require precisely the same educational opportunities, but substantially the same opportunities, as others. The strength of parity theory is that it is perfectly understandable and judicially manageable, namely, that the educational program in school districts needs to be substantially the same. The problems, however, are multiple. Parity theory often requires that the state abandon traditional reliance on local property taxes to fund education. Plaintiffs seeking parity thus raise a specter of “Robin Hood” remedies whereby wealthier school districts are required to transfer educational funds to poorer districts, with the result that the quality of education in more fortunate school districts suffers.

In part because of the difficulties of parity theory, plaintiffs have developed an alternate theory that does not seek parity but instead adequacy. The advantage of adequacy theory is obvious: it does not require that any wealthy school district transfer funds or sacrifice its program, but merely requires the state to ensure that it provides an adequate education to all students. The adequacy approach does not require the complete abandonment of local property taxes.

The major challenge with adequacy theory is the development of a proper standard. For example, in Abbeville County School District v. State, 335 S.C. 58, 515 S.E.2d 535, 540 (1999), the South Carolina Supreme Court found a right to a “minimally adequate education.” According to the South Carolina Supreme Court, a minimally adequate education included:

- 1) the ability to read, write, and speak the English language, and knowledge of mathematics and physical science;
- 2) a fundamental knowledge of economic, social, and political systems, and of history and governmental processes; and
- 3) academic and vocational skills.

Abbeville Cnty. Sch. Dist., 515 S.E.2d at 540.

The Kentucky Supreme Court in Rose developed a more detailed seven-factor test. The Kentucky Supreme Court has stated that in order to provide an adequate education, the state must establish a system of education with the ultimate goal of providing to each and every child seven capabilities:

- (i) sufficient oral and written communication skills to enable students to function in a complex and rapidly changing civilization;
- (ii) sufficient knowledge of economic, social, and political systems to enable the student to make informed choices;
- (iii) sufficient understanding of governmental processes to enable the student to understand the issues that affect his or her community, state, and nation; (iv) sufficient self-knowledge and knowledge of his or her mental and physical wellness; (v) sufficient grounding in the arts to enable each student to appreciate his or her cultural and historical heritage; (vi) sufficient training or preparation for advanced training in either academic or vocational fields so as to enable each child to choose and pursue life work intelligently; and (vii) sufficient levels of academic or vocational skills to enable public school students to compete favorably with their counterparts in surrounding states, in academics or in the job market.

Rose, 790 S.W.2d at 212; Leandro, 488 S.E.2d at 255 (adopting an adaptation of the Rose standards); see also Campaign for Fiscal Equity, Inc. v. State, 100 N.Y.2d 893, 769 N.Y.S.2d 106, 801 N.E.2d 326, 330 (2003) (adopting standard of adequacy).

A third approach to adequacy was taken by the Arkansas Supreme Court in Lake View School District No. 25 v. Huckabee, 351 Ark. 31, 91 S.W.3d 472 (2002). In Lake View, the Arkansas Supreme Court *79 declared in order to provide an “adequate” education, the state must provide standards, develop a system to determine whether the goals are being met, and establish a system of accountability to determine whether funds that are being spent are providing educational opportunity. Lake View, 91 S.W.3d at 500.

In addition to type of relief, a second issue arises regarding the scope of relief. Many courts in the first instance after finding constitutional violations merely provide declaratory relief and exercise continuing jurisdiction to review legislative responses to court rulings. For example, in Lake View, the court stressed that it had no intention “to monitor or superintend the public schools of this state.” Id. at 511. The court instead affirmed a lower court order granting declaratory relief and indicated that it would not hesitate to review the state’s school funding system once again in an appropriate case. Id.; see also Horton v. Meskill, 172 Conn. 615, 376 A.2d 359, 375 (1977) (noting that while it is emphatically the duty of the court to declare what the law is, remedies could be limited to declaratory relief out of respect for other branches of government); Rose, 790 S.W.2d at 214 (declining to direct specific action); Campaign for Fiscal Equity, Inc., 769 N.Y.S.2d 106, 801 N.E.2d at 344–45 (discussing dialogue with legislature). Initially, at least, the remedies of these courts do not intrude deeply on the legislative process other than to declare legal requirement. Over time, however, courts have become more involved in crafting specific legislative remedies in the face of legislative inaction or intransigence. See, e.g., Abbott ex rel. Abbott v. Burke, 199 N.J. 140, 971 A.2d 989, 994–96 (2009).

VI. Application of State Constitutional Principles in Iowa.

A. Threshold Question. The district court determined that the issues raised in this case were nonjusticiable political questions. I disagree. We are called upon, in this case, to decide what the law means. This is the heart of judicial review. We are not called upon to exercise the authority expressly delegated to another branch of government. See, e.g., Rell, 990 A.2d at 217–25. We are called upon to do our job. See Martin H. Redish, Judicial Review and the “Political Question,” 79 Nw. U.L.Rev. 1031, 1059–60 (1984); see generally Louis Henkin, Is There a “Political Question” Doctrine?, 85 Yale L.J. 597 (1976). Notwithstanding some contrary dicta dusted about in Justice Mansfield’s opinion, there is clearly no “political question” posed in this case.

B. State Education Clause. The Iowa education clause is categorized by some scholars as a fairly strong education clause.<sup>39</sup> Regardless of this characterization, it seems clear that education in Iowa is a highly valued constitutional interest. Iowa would not have gained admission to the Union as a state without an education clause. An article of the 1857 constitution was devoted exclusively to education. Although the Iowa Constitution authorized *80 the general assembly to repeal provisions vesting authority over school matters in a board of education, this constitutional option related solely to the manner in which the state’s constitutional interest in education would be implemented. The Iowa Constitution, read in context, requires a system of “Common schools throughout the State.” See Iowa Const. art. IX, div. 2, § 3. We said as much in Clark, where we emphasized that the State had an obligation under article IX, division 1, section 12 to provide “for the education of all the youths of the State, through a system of common schools.” Clark, 24 Iowa at 274 (quoting Iowa Const. art. IX, div. 1, § 12).

Our constitutional provisions without question are as strong as others in which a constitutional right to an adequate education has been found. See, e.g., Rell, 990 A.2d at 210–12 (simply stating there shall be “free public elementary and secondary schools” in the state); McDuffy, 615 N.E.2d at 517, 526 (stating that it shall be the duty of legislators “to cherish” public schools and grammar schools); Campaign for Fiscal Equity, Inc., 769 N.Y.S.2d 106, 801 N.E.2d at 328 (“a system of free common schools”). The strong emphasis on education in the text (establishing “Common schools throughout the State”) and in our state government tradition cannot be doubted. For these reasons, the State at oral argument conceded that it could not constitutionally refuse to provide public education to children and youth.

The State’s concession was not a blunder but the product of inescapable logic and a desire to avoid looking foolish. The Iowa constitutional provisions in article IX cannot be read to suggest that the legislature has the discretion to withdraw from public education and close the public schools. But, if there is a requirement that the State provide a public education for children and youth through “Common schools throughout the State,” it certainly must be implied that the education provided in the common schools must be a meaningful education and not just some empty formalism. There must be some substance to the mandatory duty, some concrete reality, some meat on the bones. Just as the “right to counsel” under the Federal and State Constitutions means the right to “effective” assistance of counsel, McMann v. Richardson, 397 U.S. 759, 771 & n. 14, 90 S.Ct. 1441, 1449 & n. 14, 25 L.Ed.2d 763, 773 & n. 14 (1970), the duty of the state to provide common schools throughout the state requires that the education in the schools meet minimum standards of adequacy.

Nothing in Kleen v. Porter, 237 Iowa 1160, 23 N.W.2d 904 (1946), is to the contrary. Kleen involved a question of providing additional funds for public schools, but did not address in any way the duty of the state to maintain common schools throughout the state. Kleen, 237 Iowa at 1167–69, 23 N.W.2d at 908–09. In fact, by citing article IX, division 1, section 12, Kleen supports the view of an ongoing obligation to provide a system of common schools to all youth. See id. at 1162, 23 N.W.2d at 905.

Further, while Justice Mansfield’s opinion makes much of the fact that the framers did not include the word “free” in the education clause, this is hardly dispositive of whether there is a mandatory duty to make meaningful public education available in the common schools to everyone who desires an education. Charges that prevented a person from obtaining a public education in common schools would surely go the way of the poll tax. See Harper, 383 U.S. at 666–68, 86 S.Ct. at 1081–82, 16 L.Ed.2d at 172–73.

Justice Mansfield's opinion states that because the plaintiffs did not cite article IX, division 1, section 12 of the Iowa Constitution in their trial brief, it can ignore *81 the provision by regarding the argument as waived. Article IX, division 2, section 3, however, cannot be torn away from the previous constitutional provision. To begin with, the language of article IX, division 2, section 3 requiring the legislature to "encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement" in my view incorporates within its scope the obligation to establish "a system of Common Schools" as required by article IX, division 1, section 12. My incorporation theory is strongly supported by reference in article IX, division 2, section 3 to a perpetual fund for "Common schools throughout the State," namely, the "system of Common Schools" referred to in article IX, division 1, section 12. In my view, Justice Mansfield's opinion seeks to separate the twins that were joined at birth in a way that elevates form over substance. See Office of Consumer Advocate v. Iowa State Commerce Comm'n, 465 N.W.2d 280, 283–84 (Iowa 1991) (holding error is preserved under Due Process Clause even though the party merely cited to the Fourteenth Amendment, stating to rule otherwise would "elevate[ ] form over substance"). In addition, it is difficult to understand how Justice Mansfield's opinion finds that the education, due process, and privileges and immunities issues, though not briefed on appeal, are properly before the court as "interrelated" with the issue of justiciability, while the substantive obligations of article IX, division 1, section 12 and article IX, division 2, section 3 are not.

In any event, there is no question that the issue of whether education is a fundamental interest under the privileges and immunities clause of the Iowa Constitution was preserved in the trial court, and according to Justice Mansfield's opinion, may be considered on appeal even though the matter has not been briefed before this court. Therefore, even assuming the claim under article IX, division 1, section 12 is "waived," the issue of applicability of the privileges and immunities clause remains very much alive under the issue preservation reasoning of Justice Mansfield's opinion. Any right to an education under article IX is coextensive to the fundamental right to an education under the privileges and immunities clause, the only difference being the right to an education under article IX does not require a classification.

C. Privileges and Immunities Clause. The first issue for consideration under Iowa's privileges and immunities clause is whether education may be characterized as a fundamental interest under the traditional framework. If one utilizes the test enunciated in San Antonio, the answer is plainly yes. According to San Antonio, a fundamental interest is present when an interest is explicitly or implicitly protected by constitutional provisions. See San Antonio, 411 U.S. at 33, 93 S.Ct. at 1297, 36 L.Ed.2d at 43. Plainly, the Iowa education articles meet the test. Further, under San Antonio, the question of whether there is a fundamental interest in a minimally adequate education was expressly reserved. Id. at 36–37, 93 S.Ct. at 1298–99, 36 L.Ed.2d at 44–45. Thus, even applying the federal constitutional test, a student's interest in an adequate education would be a fundamental interest under the Iowa Constitution in light of the explicit provisions for education.

Further, aside from the San Antonio test, I conclude education is a fundamental interest under other tests fashioned by state supreme courts. The express Iowa constitutional provisions; the centrality of education to our state's history; the strong and unqualified traditional support for education of Iowa's political leaders; the inextricable relationship between education and other key constitutional rights, namely, the right to vote, the right to serve on juries, the right to petition government, *82 and the undeniable proposition that an individual has little prospect of enjoying life, liberty, and property without an education in the postmodern world; and the centrality of education to human dignity; all convince me that education must be considered a fundamental interest under Iowa's privileges and immunities clause. See Serrano I, 96 Cal.Rptr. 601, 487 P.2d at 1255–59; Robinson v. Cahill, 69 N.J. 133, 351 A.2d 713, 720 (1975). To characterize the interest in education as something other than fundamental seems like a play on words.<sup>60</sup> I would thus join the supreme courts of Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Kentucky, Minnesota, New Jersey, Tennessee, Washington, West Virginia, Virginia, and Wisconsin in finding that education is an interest that may trigger heightened scrutiny under state privileges and immunities or equal protection clauses.<sup>61</sup>

In fact, the motivating reasons for not finding education "fundamental" has nothing to do with its importance or essential character. Instead, courts are sometimes reluctant to characterize education as "fundamental" because they fear the consequences of strict scrutiny, which has been described as strict in theory but fatal in fact. See, e.g., McDaniel, 285 S.E.2d at 167 (citing need to avoid inflexible constitutional restraints that result from strict scrutiny); Norman Dorsen, Equal Protection of the Laws, 74 Colum. L.Rev. 357, 362 (1974) (noting that the “sharp dichotomy between the rational basis and strict scrutiny tests produces back-door evasions of the two-tiered formula”); Gerald Gunther, Foreword: In Search of Evolving Doctrine on a Changing Court: A Model for a Newer Equal Protection, 86 Harv. L.Rev. 1, 8 (1972) [hereinafter Gunther] (first suggesting strict in theory, fatal in fact formulation); Martha M. McCarthy, Is The Equal Protection Clause Still A Viable Tool for Effecting Educational Reform?, 6 J.L. & Educ. 159, 178 (1977) (noting rigor of strict scrutiny test has caused courts to limit rights identified as suspect or fundamental so as not to unduly invade legislative power). The fatal-in-fact feature of strict scrutiny is thought to be inappropriate in situations involving complex matters such as education.

I find merit in the argument that strict scrutiny as traditionally applied by the United States Supreme Court and by this court should not be used to evaluate all educational differences between school districts. For instance, a marginal or insubstantial difference between school districts—such as the failure to offer a handful of noncore courses, or the lack of certain helpful but hardly essential extracurricular activities—should not trigger a strict scrutiny analysis. This concern over the consequences of strict scrutiny, however, can be addressed by limiting heightened review only to asserted violations of a right to an adequate or basic education.

*83 The concept of heightened protection for an adequate or basic education but not for all educational differences has support in the caselaw of other states. For example, both the Minnesota and Wisconsin Supreme Courts have adopted such an approach in their efforts to sort through the constitutional issues related to education. See Skeen v. State, 505 N.W.2d 299, 315 (Minn.1993); Kukor v. Grover, 148 Wis.2d 469, 436 N.W.2d 568, 579 (1989).

By limiting heightened scrutiny to the deprivation of an adequate or basic education and by employing a lesser degree of scrutiny to legislative classifications that do not impinge on an adequate education, state officials would have ample breathing room for their important policy-making role, yet still require that the state provide all students with a meaningful educational opportunity.

The next question which arises is the content of a basic or adequate education that triggers heightened scrutiny. Based on the reasoning of the adequacy cases cited above, I conclude that a basic or adequate education must be sufficient to allow a person to participate meaningfully in democracy through the right to vote, the right to petition government, and jury duty, and to have meaningful prospects of enjoying “life, liberty, and property.” In order to achieve these ends, education must be sufficient to allow an individual a meaningful opportunity to participate in economic life in the postmodern world. See Campaign for Fiscal Equity, Inc., 769 N.Y.S.2d 106, 801 N.E.2d at 330–32; Hoke Cnty. Bd. of Educ. v. State, 358 N.C. 605, 599 S.E.2d 365, 379–81 (2004); Abbeville Cnty. Sch. Dist., 515 S.E.2d at 540; Rose, 790 S.W.2d at 211–13. In order to satisfy these demands, I would adopt a variant of the factors in Rose and other adequacy cases: An educational program must, among other things, include effectively teaching the ability to read and write, to communicate effectively, to perform in mathematical computations, to have exposure to scientific principles, to have a basic understanding of economics and government, and to learn how to use computer-based technology that is so indispensable in the postmodern world. An education program need not guarantee results to meet the constitutional test, but it must provide a meaningful educational opportunity to participate in the political, social, and economic life.

I would not, however, adopt the approach of the Arkansas Supreme Court in Lake View. While the adoption of standards, systems of monitoring, and systems of accountability might help ensure compliance with the substantive constitutional requirements outlined in this opinion, I would not mandate the precise manner in which the State performs its constitutional obligation. I would decline to enter the fray of educational philosophy other than as required to ensure that children have a reasonable opportunity to a basic education and that all other material differences in educational opportunity be justified by a rational basis as described below.

The defense to privileges-and-immunities-type claims is, of course, invariably “local control.” But local control is not an automatic trump card that applies as a matter of law in all cases involving educational interests as Justice Mansfield’s opinion seems to believe. Instead, whether “local control” will be sufficient to carry the day will depend upon a number of determinations. First, the court must determine, as a matter of fact, whether the alleged shortcomings in education are present. Second, the court must determine if the plaintiff can prove that state action has caused the deprivations. Third, assuming that deprivations are present and they are caused by the state, the question arises whether the deprivation is sufficient to undermine the right to an *84 adequate or basic education. If the shortcomings deprive the plaintiffs of a basic education, then heightened scrutiny will apply to the classification. To the extent “local control” is asserted as the legitimate basis for a classification, the decision to provide different services must be a discretionary choice of local administrators and not the result of state law or legal structure that forces local decision makers into Hobson's choices. See Tenn. Small School Sys., 851 S.W.2d at 154–55 (the issue is not whether local control is a good thing, but whether the statutory framework actually promotes it or undercuts it). Local control, however, must not be a “euphemism masking gross inequalities in the abilities of school districts to meet their needs.” Lujan v. Colo. State Bd. of Educ., 649 P.2d 1005, 1040 (Colo.1982) (Lohr, J., dissenting).<sup>62</sup>

My approach to Iowa's privileges and immunities clause is not necessarily a departure from federal precedent. As noted in San Antonio and Papasan, the question of whether there is a fundamental right to a minimally adequate education is still open under the Federal Equal Protection Clause. See Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 285, 106 S.Ct. 2932, 2944, 92 L.Ed.2d 209, 232 (1986); San Antonio, 411 U.S. at 36–37, 93 S.Ct. at 1298–99, 36 L.Ed.2d at 44–45. Moreover, applying the San Antonio test of what amounts to a fundamental interest (explicit or implicit protection in the constitution itself), my conclusion seems inescapable. In any event, even if my approach affords greater protection to education under our privileges and immunities clause than is available under the Federal Equal Protection Clause, this is not unusual. State courts in at least twenty-one states have interpreted their equality clauses more expansively than the United States Supreme Court's interpretation of equal protection. See Jeffrey M. Shaman, The Evolution of Equality in State Constitutional Law, 34 Rutgers L.J. 1013, 1031 (2003).

To the extent plaintiffs show a classification affecting education that does not impinge upon their fundamental right to an adequate education, I conclude that a type of rational basis test should apply. A simple declaration that such nonfundamental classifications are subject to rational basis review is not the end of the matter. As has been repeatedly and widely recognized, there are many variations and permutations of the rational basis test.<sup>63</sup>

*85 For example, the United States Supreme Court has clearly applied a number of materially different rational basis tests. A first type of rational basis test employed by the Supreme Court is the one utilized by Justice Mansfield's opinion, where a statute is examined to determine if there is “any conceivable basis” to support it. The Supreme Court also sometimes engages in what has been called “a second order” rational basis review where there is inquiry into whether, as a matter of fact, the claimed purposes of the statute have adequate factual support. See Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620, 626–35, 116 S.Ct. 1620, 1624–28, 134 L.Ed.2d 855, 862–68 (1996)

(applying more substantial rational basis test in invalidating Colorado constitutional amendment to prohibit government from enacting antidiscrimination ordinances by calling asserted purposes “implausible”); City of Cleburne v. Cleburne Living Ctr., 473 U.S. 432, 448, 105 S.Ct. 3249, 3258, 87 L.Ed.2d 313, 325 (1985) (citing lack of evidence in “the record” to justify denying occupants use of site); U.S. Dep't of Agric. v. Moreno, 413 U.S. 528, 535–36, 93 S.Ct. 2821, 2826, 37 L.Ed.2d 782, 788–89 (1973) (invalidating antifraud regulation excluding households with unrelated individuals from receiving food stamps based on “unsubstantiated” assumptions); Robert C. Farrell, Successful Rational Basis Claims in the Supreme Court from the 1971 Term Through Romer v. Evans, 32 Ind. L.Rev. 357, 358 (1999) (identifying two sets of rationality cases decided by United States Supreme Court with no connection between them); Robert C. Farrell, The Two Versions of Rational-Basis Review and Same-Sex Relationships, 86 Wash. L.Rev. 281, 282 (2011) (characterizing Supreme Court rational basis review cases as Jekyll and Hyde- or Janus-like); R. Randall Kelso, Standards of Review Under the Equal Protection Clause and Related Constitutional Doctrines Protecting Individual Rights: The “Base Plus Six” Model and Modern Supreme Court Practice, 4 U. Pa. J. Const. L. 225, 227–37 (2002) (describing three types of rational basis tests).

There have long been calls for the United States Supreme Court to abandon its approach to “any conceivable basis” rational basis scrutiny. In a seminal law review article published in 1972, Gerald Gunther urged the Court to develop a more meaningful approach to equal protection that included more stringent rational basis review. See Gunther, 86 Harv. L.Rev. at 20–24. In a series of opinions, Justice Marshall and Justice Stevens have pointed out the inconsistencies in the Court's cases and advocated an honest reevaluation of the doctrine. See City of Cleburne, 473 U.S. at 451–55, 105 S.Ct. at 3260–63, 87 L.Ed.2d at 327–30 (1985) (Stevens, J., concurring); Mass. Bd. of Ret. v. Murgia, 427 U.S. 307, 321–22, 96 S.Ct. 2562, 2571–72, 49 L.Ed.2d 520, 529–30 (1976) (Marshall, J., dissenting). So far, the United States Supreme Court has not explicitly resolved the tensions in its cases.

*86 Aside from inconsistency, there is another reason for state supreme courts to depart from federal precedent when analyzing equal protection-type claims. A major factor in the highly deferential rational basis standard developed by the United States Supreme Court is the desire to honor federalism and to avoid imposing national solutions onto the states. Justice Harlan warned long ago that national application of federal standards to the states in order to give the states elbow room in their criminal processes would lead to a dilution of substantive constitutional protections. Baldwin v. New York, 399 U.S. 117, 118, 90 S.Ct. 1914, 1915, 26 L.Ed.2d 446, 447 (1970) (Harlan, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). Indeed, federalism constraints were a motivating factor in the Supreme Court's refusal to impose strict scrutiny in San Antonio. Because of the federalism concerns, the Federal Equal Protection Clause tends to be among the most underenforced of constitutional provisions. See Hershkoff, 112 Harv. L.Rev. at 1134–38; Lawrence Gene Sager, Fair Measure: The Legal Status of Underenforced Constitutional Norms, 91 Harv. L.Rev. 1212, 1218 (1978). The federalism concern, of course, is wholly absent when state courts consider claims under the state constitutions.

As a result, it is not surprising that a number of state supreme courts have declined to follow the federal model and have developed their own approach to equal protection or privileges and immunities review.<sup>64</sup> Many of the more than a dozen states that have privileges and immunities type language rely to some extent on the tiered federal model, but there are many variations. Several states have rejected the “any conceivable basis” rationality standard for more exacting judicial review of some legislative classifications. See, e.g., Trujillo v. City of Albuquerque, 125 N.M. 721, 965 P.2d 305, 314 (1998); MacCallum v. Seymour, 165 Vt. 452, 686 A.2d 935, 938–39 (1996). Other states, for instance, have adopted a unitary test that balances the nature of the right, the extent to which the government intrudes upon the right, and the need for the restriction. See, e.g., Dep't of Revenue v. Cosio, 858 P.2d 621, 629 (Alaska 1993); Planned Parenthood of Cent. N.J. v. Farmer, 165 N.J. 609, 762 A.2d 620, 632–43 (2000). Other states have adopted a system of means-focused scrutiny that appears more intensive than the most lenient standard sometimes applied by the United States Supreme Court. See, e.g., State v. Mowrey, 134 Idaho 751, 9 P.3d 1217, 1221 (2000).

The variability in “rational basis” tests is demonstrated in the state education cases. Some courts, like Indiana, have declared over a strong dissent that, as a matter of law, local control is an adequate rational basis to justify a state framework for providing education. Other states, however, like Arkansas, have found after the development of substantial factual records that their system of state funding fails to meet even the rational basis test. See, e.g., DuPree, 651 S.W.2d at 95.

There is much to be said for a more searching rational basis review. The “any conceivable basis” test tends to be no review at all. The cases show some striking examples, like Louisiana legislation where only licensed florists may arrange flowers, defended as a health measure, and an *87 Oklahoma statute preventing anyone other than a person with a license in mortuary science from selling caskets. See Clark Neily, No Such Thing: Litigating Under the Rational Basis Test, 1 N.Y.U. J.L. & Liberty 898, 906 (2005).

The suggestion that the incantation of the phrase “local control” is sufficient to decide this case at this stage as a matter of law cannot stand scrutiny. When an allegation of a violation of our privileges and immunities clause in the field of education is alleged, we should turn a cocked ear, not a blind eye. When local control is asserted as a justification for differences in educational quality, we should consider whether local educational leaders are, in fact, making local choices entitled to deference, or whether they are forced into Hobson's choices because of an educational structure that prevents them from delivering a quality education. The concept was well expressed by one observer, who noted that “[e]verywhere, local autonomy is compromised by centralized authority.... Practically, the rhetoric of local autonomy is difficult to take seriously given overwhelming evidence of the fiscal, political, and judicial domination of local governments by higher tiers of the state.” Gordon L. Clark, Judges and the Cities: Interpreting Local Autonomy 113–14 (1985) (citation omitted). In other words, the question we should ask is this: Is local control really at work, or is it a euphemism masking inequalities in the ability of school districts to provide educational opportunities to its students? See Lujan, 649 P.2d at 1040 (Lohr, J., dissenting).

Justice Mansfield's opinion employs the label “local control” without analysis of exactly what that means. In San Antonio, local control was favored because it encouraged citizen participation in decision making, permitted the structuring of school programs to fit local needs, and encouraged “experimentation, innovation, and a healthy competition for educational excellence.” San Antonio, 411 U.S. at 50, 93 S.Ct. at 1305, 36 L.Ed.2d at 52–53. Should we declare, as a matter of law, that the distinctions between the various school districts in this case were the result of these factors? Is it not possible that, in this case, the state regulatory framework in actuality deprives local school boards of local control in the sense that they do not have the practical ability to make considered policy choices? Would the responsible school officials in the districts where the plaintiffs reside claim that the alleged dramatic differences in teacher experience, course loads per teacher, and curriculum offerings were the result of a local, discretionary choice or would they cite systemic limitations? Does the way education is structured in Iowa promote local control or restrict it? We will, of course, never know the answer to these questions in light of the summary dismissal of the case without the development of a factual record.

In RACI, we conducted a meaningful rational basis review. Fitzgerald, 675 N.W.2d at 7–8. We were not content to rest solely on the pleadings, but conducted a factual inquiry to see whether the purported justifications, while conceivable, were in fact sufficient to support a statutory distinction. Specifically, we noted that the conceivable state interest must have “a basis in fact.” Id.

In my view, we should apply a meaningful rational basis test in this case with respect to classifications which adversely affect the plaintiffs but do not arise to deprivations of an adequate education. It allows substantial deference to decisions of other branches of government, but imposes a reality check to prevent arbitrary and irrational distinctions from creeping into educational structures in the name of “local control.”<sup>65</sup>

*88 D. Due Process Clause. I have no doubt that there is a potential due process claim in light of the compulsory nature of school attending. We said as much in Exira. The notion is uncontroversial that where a liberty interest is impaired—and surely it is impaired by mandatory school attendance—the deprivation of liberty must be rationally related to a legitimate state objective. Youngberg, 457 U.S. at 324, 102 S.Ct. at 2462, 73 L.Ed.2d at 42–43. There is also no doubt that education is a legitimate state objective. The question under due process is whether the education received by the person whose liberty is impaired is rationally related to the state’s legitimate interest in educating citizens. Any application of the due process clause, however, would give the state a wide range of permissible action in providing education to its charges. There is no due process right to a specific kind of education, but only a sufficiently reasonable educational effort to justify the intrusion on the liberty interest.

E. Application of Law to Facts Alleged in the Petition. Having established the necessary legal framework, the question remains whether the petition alleges sufficient facts to survive a motion to dismiss. Our pleading caselaw requires a general notice of the nature of the claim, but does not require pleading of detailed facts. Davis v. Ottumwa YMCA, 438 N.W.2d 10, 13 (Iowa 1989). We have stated that pleading is sufficient if it apprises the opposing party of the nature of the incident out of which the claim arose and the general nature of the action. Haugland v. Schmidt, 349 N.W.2d 121, 123 (Iowa 1984). We have stated that “[i]n Iowa, very little is required by way of pleading to provide notice.” Wilker v. Wilker, 630 N.W.2d 590, 595 (Iowa 2001). Notice pleading in Iowa does not require pleading of ultimate facts that support the elements of the cause of action but only facts sufficient to apprise the defendant of fair notice of the claim. Schmidt v. Wilkinson, 340 N.W.2d 282, 283–84 (Iowa 1983).

Our principles of pleading were well stated in U.S. Bank v. Barbour, 770 N.W.2d 350, 353–54 (Iowa 2009), in which we stated that “[n]early every case will survive a motion to dismiss” and that the “fair notice” requirement is met if the petition “informs the defendant of the incident giving rise to the claim and of the claim’s general nature.” We recently affirmed our approach in Hawkeye Foodservice Distribution, Inc. v. Iowa Educators Corp., 812 N.W.2d 600, 609 (Iowa 2012), in which we rejected an effort to institute a heightened pleading requirement sometimes used by the United States Supreme Court, see, e.g., Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678–79, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1949–50, 173 L.Ed.2d 868, 883–84 (2009), and Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 1973–74, 167 L.Ed.2d 929, 949 (2007), and reaffirmed our traditional generous pleading approach.

*89 I conclude that the plaintiffs’ claim should not be dismissed at this stage. The plaintiffs claim they are being deprived of an “effective education” and an “adequate education.” They claim their education is so deficient that students “are not prepared to enter the workforce or post-secondary education” and are not “prepared for responsible citizenship, further learning and productive employment in a global economy.” They have also pled differences in the quality of education in their school districts in terms of teacher experience, course loads, and course offerings. In light of our pleading rules, which have been held to provide that “very little is required by way of pleading to provide notice,” these allegations are sufficient to raise a claim of adequacy that cannot be precluded as a matter of law at this stage of the proceedings. See Wilker, 630 N.W.2d at 595; Herschler, 606 P.2d at 316 (attack on “system” is sufficient to survive motion to dismiss); see also Lujan, 649 P.2d at 1010 (appellees did not plead or prove denial of educational opportunity); Hornbeck v. Somerset Cnty. Bd. of Educ., 295 Md. 597, 458 A.2d 758, 780 (1983) (no allegation of deprivation of a right to adequate education).

In any event, there is no question that the plaintiffs state a claim reviewable under a rational basis test, which in my view requires factual development of the relationship between the purported purposes of the policies that cause the differences between school districts and whether the means chosen rationally advance them. Preexisting commitment to the ideology of “Our Localism” does not form a legally sufficient basis for rejecting a more nuanced inquiry when an interest as important as education is involved.<sup>66</sup>

It may well be, of course, that the plaintiffs may fail, in whole or in part, to prove their case. But they are entitled to attempt to prove it. A motion to dismiss is not a vehicle to dismiss claims that some on an appellate court may perceive as weak. The only issue when considering a motion to dismiss is the “petitioner’s right of access to the district court, not the merits of his allegations.” Rieff v. Evans, 630 N.W.2d 278, 284 (Iowa 2001) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). The approach taken in Justice Mansfield’s opinion to the pleading in this case is a marked departure from our pleading requirements generally and has no precedential value except to dispose of this case.

F. Remedies. It is sometimes suggested that remedial difficulties require the judiciary to abandon the field of enforcing state constitutional commands related to education. Ordinarily, respect for the coordinate branches of government requires a court not to unduly intrude onto the workings of the other branches. As a result, in a case such as this one, there is little to be gained, and much to be lost, by premature entry of detailed mandatory orders. If a constitutional violation is found, there will be a number of different possibilities that the legislature may wish to consider to solve the problem. As long as the ultimate action complies with the constitutional commands, this court has no interest in invading the discretion of the legislature. As Justice Jackson stated years ago, a holding of invalidity under the Equal Protection Clause “does not disable any governmental body from dealing with the subject at hand.” Ry. Express Agency v. New York, 336 U.S. 106, 112, 69 S.Ct. 463, 466, 93 L.Ed. 533, 540 (1949) (Jackson, J., concurring).

*90 The case against “The Structural Injunction” in the education context was made by Chief Justice Roy Moore, formerly of the Alabama Supreme Court, in Ex parte James. In that case, Chief Justice Moore went to great lengths to undermine the power of judicial review and to suggest that the courts must generally defer to political branches of government. Ex parte James, 836 So.2d at 856 (Moore, C.J., concurring in the result in part and dissenting in part).

I do not find, however, that problems related to remedies should oust this court’s ability to consider the substantive merits of this case. Such an approach would establish an unwise precedent. Broadside statements regarding “The Structural Injunction,” for instance, threaten to undermine not only the result in this case, but bedrock cases such as Brown, Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 83 S.Ct. 792, 9 L.Ed.2d 799 (1963), the courageous holding in Aderholt, and countless less celebrated cases dealing with the nitty gritty of obtaining constitutional compliance with respect to overcrowded prison systems and grossly inadequate mental health facilities. Sweeping declarations regarding remedies also ignore the highly nuanced approaches of many state courts to remedial issues related to the provision of adequate education that emphasize collaboration over confrontation. See, e.g., Reli, 990 A.2d at 221–23 (discussing need for flexible, graduate remedies); Campaign for Fiscal Equity, Inc., 769 N.Y.S.2d 106, 801 N.E.2d at 344–49 (N.Y.2003) (discussing flexible remedies in education context).

While a prudent and respectful approach to potential remedies makes sense, this case should not be a springboard for this court to adopt a radical doctrine that threatens many decades of jurisprudence. A disabling doctrine of sharply curtailed remedies would reduce the guarantees of the State and Federal Constitutions that protect individual liberties and establish affirmative duties to hollow platitudes. This indirect substantive evisceration of our State and Federal Constitutions is a project that may appeal to others, but not to me.

VII. Conclusion.

In my view, regardless of whether the plaintiffs have pled and/or preserved a claim under article IX of the Iowa Constitution or stated a claim under the Due Process Clauses of the Iowa and Federal Constitutions. I believe it is inescapable that education is a fundamental interest under the state constitutional guarantee of equal protection. Because of the sensitive nature of educational decision making, however, I would differentiate between a basic or adequate education and other elements of education that fall outside that category. I would apply heightened scrutiny with respect to claims of deprivation of adequate education and only a rational basis type scrutiny to other claims.

Having determined these legal issues, I would apply our traditionally liberal pleading standards to the plaintiffs’ petition. The petition is not very precise and does not clearly outline what government action is causing what deprivation. Nevertheless, I am not prepared to say at this stage that there is no possibility that the plaintiffs will be able to show an entitlement to relief. Rather than rush to judgment in this case without the development of an adequate factual record, I would deny the motion to dismiss and remand the case to the district court for further proceedings.

However, a few state supreme courts have favorably considered (at least for motion to dismiss purposes) claims that focus upon the quality of education, as opposed to funding. See Conn. Coal. for Justice in Educ. Funding, Inc. v. Reil, 295 Conn. 240, 990 A.2d 206, 210–11, 271 (2010) (holding the plaintiffs' allegations that they had not received suitable educational opportunities stated cognizable claims in light of Connecticut's constitutional mandate for "free public elementary and secondary schools"); Rose v. State, 335 S.C. 58, 515 S.E.2d 535, 539–40 (1999) (holding that plaintiffs had stated a claim under the South Carolina Constitution's education clause requiring that "the General Assembly shall provide for the maintenance and support of a system of free public education").

6 This case was originally argued in March 2010, before three current members joined this court. It was then reargued in June 2011. Even at the first oral argument, some of the questioning related to the merits of plaintiffs' claims, including the following questions taken from the recording:

I take it this is a bit of an attack on local control, correct me if I'm wrong?

Aren't you in essence saying that a local school board then would not have the authority to say: well we want to set our tax rates at a certain level; we are concerned about economic development in this rural setting, we don't want to get the taxes up high; we choose not to promote advanced placement courses and instead we want to have a broad based athletic program.

Supposing there were a uniform standard, number one wouldn't that pose a risk of a lower standard as the legislature considers what's uniform across the board that they want to bring the rural districts up and maybe the urban districts down?

Secondly, supposing that standard were established could a wealthier district then elect to apply a richer environment?
(Emphasis added.)

7 Plaintiffs do not argue, either here or below, that they have claims under division 1 of article IX of the Iowa Constitution.

8 We have not used that term previously in any case.

9 Among the provisions which this court declared unconstitutional was a provision for schools segregated on the basis of race. See 1858 Iowa Acts ch. 52, § 30(4). Later, in Clark v. Board of Directors, 24 Iowa 266 (1868), we struck down the segregated schools of a particular school district. Our decision there was based on interpretation of language originally passed by the board of education in 1860 in the wake of the Dubuque decision and subsequently reaffirmed on several occasions by the legislature. Clark, 24 Iowa at 271–73. The language in question required “the instruction of youth between the ages of five and twenty-one years.” Id. at 271. We reasoned that this language prohibited the exclusion of persons of color from the common schools. Id. at 276. Our opinion cited section 12 of the first division of article IX—one of the original constitutional provisions relating to the board—as providing authority for the board’s 1860 enactment. Id. at 271. In this case, plaintiffs have not cited or relied upon section 12 or any of the other original constitutional provisions in the first division relating to the board of education.

10 We are not called upon to decide in this case whether the abolition of the board of education gave the legislature plenary authority to address education policy or whether that authority is subject to any limits that previously applied to the board of education.

11 Earlier in the convention, Marvin had proposed an amendment that would have provided, “And the legislature shall provide for raising funds sufficient so that schools shall be kept in each district at least six months in each year, which schools shall be free of charge and equally open to all.” 2 Debates, at 825. That amendment also was rejected, following a debate that had unfortunate racial overtones. Id. at 825–30.

Unlike the earlier Marvin amendment, the later Ells amendment was directed to section 3 of the second division. There is no indication in the debates that the Ells amendment was rejected for racial reasons. Id. at 968–72.

12 This section was repealed by constitutional amendment in 1984.

13 In Dickinson v. Porter, we rejected an equal protection challenge to a state law that funded a tax credit for certain agricultural lands. 240 Iowa 393, 35 N.W.2d 66 (1949). In finding that the law’s classification rested on a reasonable basis, i.e., to “benefit and encourage agriculture,” we cited the education clause as an example of a state public policy to promote agriculture. Id. at 408–09, 35 N.W.2d at 76. The Dickinson case had nothing to do with education.

14 The education clauses of the constitutions of Connecticut, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire are not similar to Iowa’s. They employ language that is both more forceful and more specific. Connecticut’s clause provides, “There shall always be free public elementary and secondary schools in the state. The general assembly shall implement this principle by appropriate legislation.” Conn. Const. art. 8, § 1. Massachusetts’ clause states:

Wisdom, and knowledge, as well as virtue, diffused generally among the body of the people, being necessary for the preservation of their rights and liberties; and as these depend on spreading the opportunities and advantages of education in the various parts of the country, and among the different orders of the people, it shall be the duty of legislatures and magistrates, in all future periods of this commonwealth, to cherish the interests of literature and the sciences, and all seminaries of them; especially the university at Cambridge, public schools and grammar schools in the towns....

Mass. Const. pt. 2 ch. V, § 2 (emphasis added). New Hampshire’s provides:

Knowledge and learning, generally diffused through a community, being essential to the preservation of a free government; and spreading the opportunities and advantages of education through the various parts of the country, being highly conducive to promote this end; it shall be the duty of the legislators and magistrates, in all future periods of this government, to cherish the interest of literature and the sciences, and all seminaries and public schools ...

17 Although we interpreted the meaning of the education clause in Kleen, that does not foreclose the possibility that the claims now before us raise a political question. Kleen involved a question of legislative spending authority. 237 Iowa at 1161, 23 N.W.2d at 905. We interpreted the education clause as a grant of “broad authority” to the legislature. Id. at 1166, 23 N.W.2d at 907. This case involves the question whether the education clause provides justiciable rights and thus limits the legislature.

There is a political question doctrine in Iowa as elsewhere. See, e.g., Dwyer, 542 N.W.2d at 495–96; State ex rel. Turner v. Scott, 269 N.W.2d 828, 831–32 (Iowa 1978). Sometimes, “doing our job” involves recognizing that the clause in question delegates authority to another branch of government. But we defer to another day whether claims by public school students and parents under the education clause relating to the quality of their education present a nonjusticiable political question.

18 We have regularly referred to article I, section 6 as the “equal protection clause” of the Iowa Constitution. See, e.g., Rojas v. Pine Ridge Farms, L.L.C., 779 N.W.2d 223, 229 (Iowa 2010); War Eagle Vill. Apartments v. Plummer, 775 N.W.2d 714, 723 (Iowa 2009); Varnum v. Brien, 763 N.W.2d 862, 872 (Iowa 2009); State v. Wade, 757 N.W.2d 618, 621 (Iowa 2008); State v. Mitchell, 757 N.W.2d 431, 435 (Iowa 2008); Timberland Partners XXI, LLP v. Iowa Dep’t of Revenue, 757 N.W.2d 172, 173–74 (Iowa 2008); Houck v. Iowa Bd. of Pharmacy Exam’rs, 752 N.W.2d 14, 21 (Iowa 2008); In re Det. of Hennings, 744 N.W.2d 333, 338–39 (Iowa 2008); Ames Rental Prop. Ass’n v. City of Ames, 736 N.W.2d 255, 261 (Iowa 2007); In re S.A.J.B., 679 N.W.2d 645, 648 (Iowa 2004). On a few occasions, none more recent than 2001, we have referred to it as the “privileges and immunities clause.” See Perkins v. Bd. of Supervisors, 636 N.W.2d 58, 71 (Iowa 2001); Utilicorp United Inc. v. Iowa Utils. Bd., 570 N.W.2d 451, 455 (Iowa 1997); Bennett v. City of Redfield, 446 N.W.2d 467, 474 (Iowa 1989); Koch v. Kostichek, 409 N.W.2d 680, 683 (Iowa 1987).

While labels should not affect the underlying analysis, it is important to recognize that article I, section 6, like the Federal Equal Protection Clause, deals with equality and uniformity—i.e., laws “of a general nature” having “a uniform operation” and the legislature not granting privileges to a citizen or class of citizens that “upon the same terms [do] not equally belong to all citizens.” In this respect, it resembles the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. By the same token, it differs dramatically from the Privileges and Immunities Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution which by its terms protects certain privileges and immunities of “citizens of the United States” from being abridged by the states. U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1. The Fourteenth Amendment Privileges and Immunities Clause shields certain rights of national citizenship from state interference. Saenz v. Roe, 526 U.S. 489, 501–504, 119 S.Ct. 1518, 1525–27, 143 L.Ed.2d 689, 704–05 (1999).

19 We are not holding that a claim under the equal protection clause can never present a nonjusticiable political question. See, e.g., Vieth v. Jubelirer, 541 U.S. 267, 281–306, 124 S.Ct. 1769, 1778–92, 158 L.Ed.2d 546, 560–76 (2004) (stating the view of four Justices that partisan gerrymandering claims under the Federal Equal Protection Clause and other U.S. constitutional provisions constitute a nonjusticiable political question).

20 The provision is now found at Iowa Code section 282.18(7).

21 This is not imposing an “intent” requirement. We are not saying the State needs to have intentionally discriminated against students from West Harrison, or Davenport, or Des Moines, for example. But the State must have done something that treats these students differently from other students, as opposed to merely having failed to enact statewide standards and requirements favored by the plaintiffs. In a disparate funding case, the unequal funding can itself constitute the denial of equal protection, but plaintiffs do not allege there are any discrepancies of funding in Iowa.

- 22 Plaintiffs allege that they are being denied “equal access” to education, but these catchwords obscure a critical point. Nothing in the petition alleges that the defendants (i.e., the state government and state officials of Iowa) have passed any law, adopted any regulation, or undertaken any measure that treats students differently from one district to another. To the contrary, plaintiffs fault the defendants for not implementing statewide standards that would affirmatively eradicate district-to-district differences—e.g., in average student performance or average teacher qualification. “Failure to equalize differences” is not the same as treating people differently.
- 23 If there is a constitutional right to an “effective education,” then alleging that the defendants have failed to provide such an education amounts to a mere legal conclusion.
- 24 In Midwest Check Cashing, Inc., the plaintiff brought an equal protection challenge to a state law that limited payday loans but allegedly did not limit them enough. 728 N.W.2d at 403 (“these limitations are not as protective as Richey would like”). We expressed “serious[ ] doubt” that the plaintiff had shown sufficient state action for equal protection or substantive due process purposes or that she had been sufficiently classified for equal protection purposes. Id. at 404 n. 6. In any event, we found the law met the rational basis test. Id. at 404–05. This case is somewhat similar, in that plaintiffs are complaining about the state’s failure to act, not state action itself. As we have already discussed, we do not believe the petition alleges actual disparate treatment by the state government as is necessary for an equal protection claim, but even if it did, the facts alleged do not demonstrate the absence of a rational basis.
- 25 We believe the only relevant due process concept here is one of substantive due process, not procedural due process. Procedural due process requires that certain procedures be afforded (e.g., notice and an opportunity to be heard) before the government deprives a citizen of a liberty or property interest. Smokers Warehouse Corp., 737 N.W.2d at 111. The plaintiffs are not complaining about the procedures by which educational laws and requirements have been enacted in Iowa or applied to themselves. They do not dispute that those policy choices have been made democratically by the people’s elected representatives in the legislative and executive branches. Their quarrel is with the substance of Iowa’s educational policies. Id. (holding that where the plaintiffs do not clearly identify the nature of their due process claim, “we assume it is a substantive due process argument because they do not discuss any notice or hearing deficiencies”).
- 26 We do not think a resolution of this case requires us to review the history of education generally or what past Iowa governors have said on the subject. We are judges, not historians. For judges, some history, such as our own precedent, is highly relevant. But there are risks when we draw on political history as source material for judicial decisionmaking. One risk is that we may unwittingly diminish the importance of more relevant historical events, such as the ratification debates on the Iowa Constitution, by submerging them in other political history that has only background importance. Another risk is that political trends might then be used to justify the outcome in a particular case. It is not surprising to us that Iowa’s governors have believed education to be a critical responsibility of government. But demonstrating that education has been a vital concern of the political branches of government does not answer the present question whether this particular case ought to proceed through the judicial branch.
- 27 See, e.g., Comm. for Educ. Rights v. Edgar, 174 Ill.2d 1, 220 Ill.Dec. 166, 672 N.E.2d 1178, 1189 (1996) (“[Q]uestions relating to the quality of education are solely for the legislative branch to answer.”); Hornbeck v. Somerset Cnty. Bd. of Educ., 295 Md. 597, 458 A.2d 758, 790 (1983) (“The quantity and quality of educational opportunities to be made available to the State’s public school children is a determination committed to the legislature or to the people....”); Neb. Sundlun, 662 A.2d 40, 62 (R.I.1995) (“[T]he level of state educational funding is largely a matter for the Legislature, which possesses the ‘expertise and familiarity with local problems implicated in the raising and disposition of public revenues associated with public education.’” (quoting Hornbeck, 458 A.2d at 786)); Abbeville Cnty. Sch. Dist. v. State, 335 S.C. 58, 515 S.E.2d 535, 541 (1999) (“We do not intend the courts of this State to become super-legislatures or super-school boards.”); Kukor v. Grover, 148 Wis.2d 469, 436 N.W.2d 568, 583 (1989) (“Because issues such as equality in education are peppered with political perceptions and emotionally laden views, we have carefully restrained our consideration of the constitutional issues before us...."); see also San Antonio Indep. Sch. Dist. v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1, 42, 93 S.Ct. 1278, 1301, 36 L.Ed.2d 16, 48 (1973) ("In addition to matters of fiscal policy, this case also involves the most persistent and difficult questions of educational policy, another area in which this Court's lack of specialized knowledge and experience counsels against premature interference with the informed judgments made at the state and local levels.").

- 28 Justice Wiggins' dissent asserts our majority decision "appears to overrule" Racing Ass'n of Central Iowa v. Fitzgerald (RACI II), 675 N.W.2d 1 (Iowa 2004). RACI II as a practical matter has been limited to its facts. I would expressly overrule RACI II as plainly erroneous. The RACI II majority, purporting to apply the federal rational-basis test, held that a tax differential for casino slot machine revenue violated the equal protection clause of the Iowa Constitution on remand after the unanimous United States Supreme Court had held the differential did not violate federal equal protection. 675 N.W.2d at 3. The RACI II majority thereby essentially took the position that the nine justices of the United States Supreme Court were irrational in applying the same rational-basis test in the same case, despite the well-settled and long-standing tradition of judicial deference to legislative economic regulation and tax classifications. RACI II was wrongly decided for the reasons set forth in the eloquent separate dissents by Justices Cady and Carter. See id. at 16–17 (Carter, J., dissenting); id. at 17–28 (Iowa 2002) (Cady, J., dissenting); see also Racing Ass'n of Cent. Iowa v. Fitzgerald (RACI I), 648 N.W.2d 555, 563–64 (Iowa 2002) (Neuman, J., dissenting, joined by Carter and Cady, JJ.); Fitzgerald v. Racing Ass'n of Cent. Iowa, 539 U.S. 103, 123 S.Ct. 2156, 156 L.Ed.2d 97 (2003) (reversing RACI I on federal equal protection grounds).
- 29 Justice Mansfield's opinion appears to be a plurality opinion because it reaches the merits of the plaintiffs' claims under the education clause, due process clause, and privileges and immunities clause of the Iowa Constitution. Although Justice Waterman concurs in the opinion, he does so by finding the plaintiffs' claims to be nonjusticiable political questions just as the district court did.
- 30 In special concurrences, members of this court urged the majority to abandon the contact-sports exception when neither party so urged in their briefs. See Feld v. Borkowski, 790 N.W.2d 72, 81 (Iowa 2010) (Wiggins, J., specially concurring); id. at 82 (Appel, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). The specially concurring members argued the issue of abandonment of the contact-sports exception was inextricably intertwined with the case because, under the particular circumstances of the case, resolution of the contact-sports-exception-issue was necessary for the proper disposition of the case on retrial. Feld, 790 N.W.2d at 85 (Appel, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part); see also Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno, 454 U.S. 235, 246–47 n. 12, 102 S.Ct. 252, 261 n. 12, 70 L.Ed.2d 419, 430 n. 12 (1981) (courts may consider questions outside the scope of the issues of the order granting review when resolution of those issues is necessary to properly dispose of the case). However, the majority rejected the arguments made in the special concurrences in Feld, and thus, the law of this State required a party to brief and argue an issue in this court before we would consider it on appeal. Even if the special concurrences in Feld were applicable in this case, the merits of the issues reached by Justice Mansfield's opinion and the concurring opinion of Chief Justice Cady were not inextricably intertwined with the political question issues raised by this appeal. The majority and special concurrences seem to signal a shift in our error preservation rules.
- 31 Within the first three minutes of the plaintiffs' oral argument, Justice Mansfield began asking questions about the equal protection clause.
- 32 Justice Mansfield's opinion and the concurring opinion of Chief Justice Cady ignore this constitutional argument because it was not raised in the district court. To me, it is inconsistent to decide the case on appeal on issues and arguments that were not raised below, but to deny the plaintiffs their day in court to develop all of their arguments fully, including those arguments they could have made under article IX, division 1, section 12 of the Iowa Constitution. After all, the State did not appeal the merits of this case. If these opinions had not reached beyond the arguments presented by the parties on appeal and we had decided this appeal in favor of the plaintiffs solely on the issue of political question, it is logical to conclude the plaintiffs would have had the opportunity to develop more fully their arguments in the district court on remand.
- 33 In his inaugural address in 1987, Governor Branstad, in calling for educational reform, stated that "our commitment to education is not new" and cited "our first territorial Governor, Robert Lucas." 1987 S.J. 94. Governor Branstad further made reference to the state's "historic commitment to education." Id. at 95.
- 34 My citation to the education provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights has drawn criticism today. The criticism might more appropriately be aimed at Eleanor Roosevelt, who chaired the drafting committee that produced the Declaration, or to the members of the United States Senate, which ratified it. I recognize that the Declaration was designed to be nonbinding—indeed, the decision to use the term "Declaration" was modeled on the United States

Declaration of Independence. Of course, I do not suggest that the participants in the Iowa constitutional conventions relied on the Declaration, which was approved a hundred years later. I do suggest, however, that the Declaration reinforces the widely accepted view that education is broadly regarded as a basic human right and that it is integrally related to the development of the individual. That point, it seems, has not been assailed.

35 In looking at legal questions from a broad perspective for nonbinding but instructive lessons, I am in good company. The leaders of the American Revolution and the founding fathers certainly did. See, e.g., Bernard Bailyn, The Ideological Origins of the American Revolution 23–44 (Enlarged ed. 1992) (citing extensive use of foreign authorities in publications associated with the American Revolution); James Madison, Notes of the Debates in the Federal Convention of 1787, at 54, 59, 63, 76, 83, 100, 126, 132, 136–37, 141, 143, 145, 161, 205, 207, 214–15, 223, 241, 255–56, 307, 334, 359, 364, 418, 463 (Bicentennial ed., W.W. Norton & Co. 1987) (discussing French judiciary; pluralistic military command in Holland; Roman tribunals; the union of England and Scotland; Dutch seduction into the views of France; lessons of Dutch, Swiss, Helvetic, Germanic, Lycian, and Belgic confederacies; dangers of corruption, as illustrated by leadership in Sweden, France, and England; Polish and German elections; analogy to the law of nations in fashioning relationship between the state and federal governments; experience in Persia, Austria, France, Switzerland, and Russia; commerce involving France, England, and Spain; means of defense against a foreign danger in Rome and Europe as examples of instruments of tyranny; importance of an efficient government, as illustrated by German and Grecian experiences; Polish elections; military cooperation between France and Holland; Athenians and foreign affairs; the Kingdom of France as governing by force; separation of powers and the Ephori at Sparta; structures in preexisting state constitutions; England and Great Britain); see also The Federalist No. 18 (Alexander Hamilton & James Madison) (stating the “Achaean league ... was another society of Grecian republics, which supplies us with valuable instruction”), No. 19 (Alexander Hamilton & James Madison) (referencing the governments of Greece, Sweden, Germany, and the United Netherlands), No. 39 (James Madison) (discussing the characteristics of a republican form of government and comparing the governments of Holland, Venice, Poland, and England), No. 43 (James Madison) (discussing Sparta, Greece, and Crete), No. 52 (James Madison) (referencing Irish elections), No. 75 (Alexander Hamilton) (citing examples of the Roman Tribuneship, the Polish Diet, and the States-General of the Netherlands). In addition, the founders were all familiar with international authorities such as Vattel, Grotius, Montesquieu, Burlamaqui, and Pufendorf. See generally Donald S. Lutz, The Relative Influence of European Writers on Late Eighteenth-Century American Political Thought, 78 Am. Pol. Sci. Rev. 189, 193–94 (1984).

References to international law and experience have been made by distinguished Justices of the United States Supreme Court, including, but not limited to, Justices Marshall, Story, Holmes, Frankfurter, Jackson, Rehnquist, Breyer, Ginsberg, and Kennedy. See, e.g., Roper v. Simmons, 543 U.S. 551, 577–78, 125 S.Ct. 1183, 1199–1200, 161 L.Ed.2d 1, 26–27 (2005) (Kennedy, J.); Grutter v. Bollinger, 539 U.S. 306, 344, 123 S.Ct. 2325, 2347, 156 L.Ed.2d 304, 342 (2003) (Ginsburg, J., concurring); Printz v. United States, 521 U.S. 898, 976–77, 117 S.Ct. 2365, 2405, 138 L.Ed.2d 914, 970–71 (1997) (Breyer, J., dissenting); *Washington v. Similarly, state court cases have often cited international norms in a wide variety of cases. See, e.g., Sterling v. Cupp, 290 Or. 611, 625 P.2d 123, 131 & n. 21 (1981) (citing the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in reviewing constitutionality of state law allowing female officers to perform body searches of male inmates); Egert v. Kelly, 162 W.Va. 672, 255 S.E.2d 859, 864 n. 5 (1979) (citing the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in support for state constitutional right to education).

The framers of the Iowa Constitution applied a broad perspective to their task as well, specifically in the field of education. George W. Ells, in debating the importance of education during the 1857 constitutional convention, observed:

[I]n those countries of Europe where education has taken the deepest root, and been the most generally diffused among the masses, that the people are correspondingly steady, firm and abiding in their attachment to free and liberal institutions of all kinds. The Germans are a striking illustration of the truth of this assertion. With them, education is the rule, and ignorance the exception; while with the volatile Frenchman, the reverse is true.

1 Debates at 602. It is not surprising that our caselaw has on occasion cited maxims or norms of international law. See Langlas v. Iowa Life Ins. Co., 245 Iowa 713, 718, 63 N.W.2d 885, 888 (1954) (citing international law treatise in case involving insurance claim arising out of Korean war); Case v. Olson, 234 Iowa 869, 874, 14 N.W.2d 717, 720 (1944) (citing international law of war in case involving application of soldiers' preference clause in civil service statute); Hill v. Baker, 32 Iowa 302, 310 (1871) (execution of deed held invalid as contrary to international law); Morrison v. Springer, 15 Iowa 304, 316 (1863) (citing maxims of international law in jurisdictional matter).

Consistent with the legal traditions exemplified by the framers of both the Iowa and Federal Constitutions, the University of Iowa College of Law has a program in international and comparative law. Its website states that international and comparative law "provides an essential theoretical foundation for all lawyers by affording unique insight into the nature of law and legal process." L.Rev. 1639, 1666 & n. 118 (1989) (characterizing Iowa's education provisions as a Category III provision that provides a “stronger and more specific” mandate than Categories I and II, but less specific than Category IV). On the other hand, another commentator has noted that other states, such as Virginia, Montana, Louisiana, and Washington, have education clauses that seem to demand a higher quality of education than the Iowa provisions and suggests that the Iowa provision is among state constitutional provisions "[s]etting [l]ower [s]tandards." See Molly McUsic, The Use of Education Clauses in School Finance Reform Litigation, 28 Harv. J. on Legis. 307, 334–37 (1991).

61 See, e.g., DuPree, 651 S.W.2d at 93; Serrano II, 135 Cal.Rptr. 345, 557 P.2d at 952; Horton, 376 A.2d at 373; Rose, 790 S.W.2d at 206; Skeen, 505 N.W.2d at 313–14; Robinson, 351 A.2d at 720; *Tenn. 62 There is a suggestion that to find any meaningful judicial role in the field of education under a state constitution would set a "dangerous" precedent. Such an extreme characterization is belied by court decisions in rulings in many states, including Texas, New York, California, South Carolina, New Jersey, Arkansas, West Virginia, Kentucky, and Washington. The suggestion of dangerousness would likely be surprising to the four sober dissenting Justices of the United States Supreme Court in San Antonio. While the decisions of the various state supreme courts and the opinions of the four dissenting Justices in San Antonio are not, of course, "dangerous," they may be controversial. Of course, judicial decisions are driven by applicable legal principles and underlying facts, not by public approval or disapproval.

63 See, e.g., Robert C. Farrell, Successful Rational Basis Claims in the Supreme Court from the 1971 Term Through Romer v. Evans, 32 Ind. L.Rev. 357, 382 (1999) (noting different rational basis tests); Jennifer L. Greenblatt, Putting the Government to the (Heightened, Intermediate, or Strict) Scrutiny Test: Disparate Application Shows Not All Rights and Powers Are Created Equal, 10 Fla. Coastal L.Rev. 421, 477 (2009) (United States Supreme Court has plainly strayed from three-tiered approach); Gunther, 86 Harv. L.Rev. at 17–24 (noting dissatisfaction with tiers and tendency to intervene without strict scrutiny); R. Randall Kelso, Standards of Review Under the Equal Protection Clause and Related Constitutional Doctrines Protecting Individual Rights: The "Base Plus Six" Model and Modern Supreme Court Practice, 4 U. Pa. J. Const. L. 225, 230–33 (2002) (identifying three different types of rational basis review in United States Supreme Court cases); Raffi S. Baroutjian, Note, The Advent of the Multifactor, Sliding-Scale Standard of Equal Protection Review: Out with the Traditional Three-Tier Method of Analysis, in with Romer v. Evans, 30 Loy. L.A. L.Rev. 1277, 1301–05 (1997) (citing Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620, 116 S.Ct. 1620, 134 L.Ed.2d 855 (1996), as example of stricter rational basis review under Federal Equal Protection Clause); Peter S. Smith, Note, The Demise of Three-Tier Review: Has the United States Supreme Court Adopted A "Sliding Scale" Approach Toward Equal Protection Jurisprudence?, 23 J. Contemp. L. 475, 480–88 (1997) (citing Justice Marshall dissents advocating sliding scale approach); Neelum J. Wadhvani, Note, Rational Reviews, Irrational Results, 84 Tex. L.Rev. 801, 803 (2006) (noting waffling between rational basis test—where any conceivable government interests is sufficient—and more stringent test, which includes inquiry regarding whether the actual government action taken is justifiable).

64 For a rich description of state constitutional provisions related to equal treatment under the law and the power of state courts to interpret them independently of federal law, see 1 Jennifer Friesen, State Constitutional Law: Litigating Individual Rights, Claims, and Defenses § 3:01, at 3–2 through 3–15 (4th ed.2006). See also Schuman, 13 Vt. L.Rev. at 221–22; Shaman, 34 Rutgers L.J. at 1029–56.

65 The claim that this court should not function as an elected school board creates a straw person. No one advocated interference with the daily administration of school boards in this case or in the dozens of other state court cases that have found a fundamental right to a basic education. While we must maintain a healthy respect for the other branches of government, we must fearlessly perform our role as judges to ensure that the other branches of government perform their duties in a manner consistent with the Iowa Constitution. Indeed, the very purpose of the privileges and immunities clause in the Iowa Constitution is to restrain elected officials from treating citizens differently in ways that do not make sense. Bromides about elections and ballot boxes do not assist the court in its performance of the difficult but essential role of judicial review established by Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 177, 2 L.Ed. 60, 73 (1803). To suggest that elected bodies always have the last word in educational matters is, of course, the argument raised in opposition to Brown.

66 The term "Our Localism" was coined by Richard Briffault in two important scholarly articles, Richard Briffault, Our Localism: Part I—The Structure of Local Government Law, 90 Colum. L.Rev. 1 (1990), and Richard Briffault, Our Localism: Part II—Localism and Legal Theory, 90 Colum. L.Rev. 346 (1990).

The language in 69.8 that specifies a vacancy in LG is filled by appointment was enacted in 2009—session law is attached. The amendment is section 73 of the session law. Interestingly, the same bill also amended section 43.77, which discusses what constitutes a ballot vacancy. The amendment removed lieutenant governor from section 43.77. Most of the bill was about changes in administration of elections, so this provision appears to squeeze barely within the one-subject rule. The bill passed unanimously in both houses.

I added to the stack of papers on Jeff's chair the relevant pages from the constitutional debates preceding the 1857 Constitution.

Also attached are two older Iowa cases (in one PDF) that seem to address how we would determine whether a person who holds two offices holds incompatible offices. They may apply to 69.2(1)(h), which says a vacancy occurs if an incumbent holds more than one elective office at the same level of government. Or, they may not apply at all if we determine the gov/LG are really one office.

A summary of the proposed charter shall be published in a newspaper of general circulation in each city participating in the charter commission process at least ten but not more than twenty days before the date of the election. The proposed charter shall be effective in regard to a city only if a majority of the electors of the city voting approves the proposed charter.

SHERWIN, J.

This is an action in quo warranto to test the right of the defendant to hold the office of mayor of Forest City, Iowa. The facts upon which the action is based are briefly these: Defendant was elected mayor in March, 1910. He duly qualified for and discharged the duties of the office. In November, 1910, he was elected to the office of justice of the peace in and for Forest township, and qualified and entered upon the duties of said office. The incorporated town of Forest City lies within the territorial limits of Forest township, but is not coextensive therewith. In his answer the defendant admitted the facts *129 stated, and further admitted that at that time he was acting as mayor and justice of the peace and discharging the duties of both offices. A demurrer to the answer was overruled, and, the state electing to stand upon its demurrer, the petition was dismissed, and the state appeals.

It is conceded by appellant that there are no constitutional or statutory provisions violated in holding both of these offices at the same time. But it is contended that the two offices are incompatible, and that it is contrary to public policy to permit one person to exercise the functions of both.

[1] In Bryan v. Cattell, 15 Iowa, 538, this court held that, in determining whether a vacancy exists in an office, we are not confined to statutory causes, but may declare it vacant if it is incompatible with the office held. It is a well-settled rule of common law that if a person, while occupying one office, accept another incompatible with the first, he ipso facto vacates the first office, "and his title thereto is thereby terminated without any other act or proceeding." Magie v. Stoddard, 25 Conn. 565, 68 Am. Dec. 375; People v. Hanifan, 96 Ill. 420; Bishop v. State, 149 Ind. 223, 48 N. E. 1038, 39 L. R. A. 278, 63 Am. St. Rep. 270; Stubbs v. Lee, 64 Me. 195, 18 Am. Rep. 251; Attorney General v. Common Council of Detroit, 112 Mich. 145, 70 N. W.

450, 37 L. R. A. 211; Bryan v. Cattell, supra, and many other cases.

[2] The principal difficulty that has confronted the courts in cases of this kind has been to determine what constitutes incompatibility of offices, and the consensus of judicial opinion seems to be that the question must be determined largely from a consideration of the duties of each, having, in so doing, a due regard for the public interest. It is generally said that incompatibility does not depend upon the incidents of the office, as upon physical inability to be engaged in the duties of both at the same time. Bryan v. Cattell, supra. But that the test of incompatibility is whether there is an inconsistency in the functions of the two, as where one is subordinate to the other "and subject in some degree to its revisory power," or where the duties of the two offices "are inherently inconsistent and repugnant." State v. Bus, 135 Mo. 338, 36 S. W. 639, 33 L. R. A. 616; Attorney General v. Common Council of Detroit, supra; State v. Goff, 15 R. I. 505, 9 Atl. 226, 2 Am. St. Rep. 921. A still different definition has been adopted by several courts. It is held that incompatibility in office exists "where the nature and duties of the two offices are such as to render it improper, from considerations of public policy, for an incumbent to retain both." Bryan v. Cattell, supra; Stubbs v. Lee, supra; State v. Feibleman, 28 Ark. 424; People v. Green, 58 N. Y. 304; State v. Jones, 130 Wis. 572, 110 N. W. 431, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1107, 118 Am. St. Rep. 1042, 10 Ann. Cas. 696; Mechem, Public Officers, § 420. In State v. Jones, supra, the offices of county judge and justice of the peace were held to be incompatible, upon the ground that preliminary examinations in criminal prosecutions might be held before either, and the occupancy of both offices by one person would reduce the number of judicial officers having such jurisdiction. This decision was based on State ex rel. Knox v. Hadley, 7 Wis. 700, in which the decision was evidently based upon the ground of public policy. In 2 Ann. Cas., in the note on page 380, will be found a long list of cases in which offices have been held incompatible.

[3] The statute (Code § 1073) provides that two justices of the peace shall be elected for each township in the county. Section 691 gives the mayor of an incorporated town or city, in criminal matters, the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, coextensive with the county, and in civil cases, the same jurisdiction within the city or town as a justice of the peace has within the township. The statute therefore provides for three magistrates within every township which embraces an incorporated town or city, giving them concurrent jurisdiction in all criminal matters, except for the violation of an ordinance of such town, or city, and in civil cases, concurrent jurisdiction in the city or town. Section 692 provides that the proceedings before a mayor, as far as applicable, shall be in accordance with the law regulating similar proceedings before a justice of the peace, except in prosecutions under ordinances. Under Code, §§ 5097 and 5098, a mayor of a town, or city, is a magistrate with power to hear complaints, or preliminary information, issue warrants, and discharge other duties therein enumerated. It is apparent from these several provisions of the law that the law-making power considered it for the public good and convenience to have three judicial officers in every township containing within its geographical limits an incorporated city, or town, and that in criminal prosecutions under the statute, these officers should have the same jurisdiction. And if this be true, can this plain purpose be thwarted by permitting one man to hold two of these offices? We think not, because the two offices are, in our judgment, incompatible when viewed in the light of the public policy expressed in the statutes creating them and defining their powers and duties. To hold otherwise would be to say that, in certain instances, there should be but two magistrates in the township, and it would then follow that other provisions of the statute would become wholly without force or effect. Thus, in both civil and criminal cases, with the exception already noted, a change of venue may be taken from the mayor (sections 692, 5217, 5585), and in criminal *130 cases, where a preliminary examination is being had, section 5217 provides that the case must be sent to the nearest magistrate in the township if there be one. There is no qualification to this provision, and if the other justice of the peace lived outside of the incorporated town, the statute could not be complied with, because the nearest justice would be the magistrate from whom it was sought to take the change. The same result would, or at least might, be necessary under the provisions of section 5586, which says that, in case of change of place of trial, the case shall be sent to the next nearest justice in the township, unless he has been an attorney in the action, or is a relative of one of the parties, or a party to the action. Denial of these legal rights should not be made possible by permitting one man to hold these two offices at one and the same time.

The judgment of the district court is therefore reversed, and the case remanded for proceedings in harmony with this opinion.

MANDAMUS. It appears from the pleadings and the agreed statement of facts, that the plaintiff was elected to *539 the office of District Attorney for the 5th judicial district for four years from the first day of January, 1859. He was duly commissioned, qualified, and entered upon the discharge of his duties. In July, 1861, he was commissioned captain of company D, 1st Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, for three years or during the war; was mustered into the service, and so continued until after the commencement of these proceedings,— his legal residence remaining, however, in Warren county, in said district. His salary was paid him regularly until the 1st of January, 1862. After accepting his commission as captain, or at least prior to said 1st of January, 1862, and until after making this application, he was absent from the State in the military service of the United States, and did not during that time discharge any of the duties of the office to which he was elected. On the 1st of April, 1862, John Leonard was appointed by the Governor to fill the vacancy declared by the executive to exist in said office of District Attorney, who qualified, entered upon and actually discharged the duties thereof, receiving each quarter thereafter the salary as appropriated by law.

This proceeding was instituted in January, 1863, to compel the Auditor of State to issue warrants on the State Treasurer for the salary due and owing, as is claimed, the said plaintiff for the quarters ending the first days of April, July and October, 1862. The defendant, by the Attorney-General, denied the jurisdiction of the Court, and upon this and several other grounds resisted the allowance of the writ. On the hearing, the peremptory writ was ordered, and respondent appeals.

I. The District Court has no jurisdiction over the Auditor and Treasurer of State. The Constitution makes it the duty of the Auditor to settle all claims against the State *540 Treasury, and to draw warrants for money directed by law to be paid out of the Treasury. The law provides for no appeal from the decision of the Auditor, and he is not a person or tribunal inferior to the District Court.

WRIGHT, Ch. J.

By the Attorney-General it is claimed: First, that the District Court of Polk county had no jurisdiction to award this writ for the purpose, and under the circumstances disclosed in the record. Second. If the court had jurisdiction, then that the Auditor decided correctly in refusing to draw the warrants on the plaintiff's demand, and the writ should, therefore, have been denied.

In obedience to what we understand to be the nature and character of this writ, the power of the judiciary, and the adjudications upon the subject, we are clearly of the opinion that the jurisdictional objection is not well taken. This writ issues upon the order of a court of competent jurisdiction, and when from the District Court, it commands an inferior tribunal, corporation, board or person, to do or not to do an act, the performance or omission of which the law specially enjoins as a duty, resulting from an office, trust or station. The Supreme Court may also issue it when necessary to the District Court, or in any *542 other case where it is necessary to enable it to exercise its legitimate power. The law also declares that the writ may be granted on the petition of any private party aggrieved, without the concurrence of the prosecutor for the State. Rev., §§ 3761-3764. The objection made is, that the District Court of the county where the Auditor of State resides, has no power to order this writ; that he is not an inferior tribunal, board or person, within the meaning of the statute. It is obvious that the Supreme Court could not order the writ, for it would not go to the District Court, nor would it be necessary to enable it to exercise any legitimate power. If the jurisdiction exists anywhere, therefore, it must be in the tribunal selected in this instance.

**3 The powers of the State government are divided into three separate departments (the executive, legislative and judicial), and no person charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one department shall exercise functions appertaining to either of the others, except as in the Constitution is expressly directed or permitted. Const., § 1, art. 3. The Auditor of State belongs to the executive department. § 22, art. 4. And from these provisions the argument is that in ordering this writ, the District Court assumed that the executive department was inferior to the judicial, or that the Auditor, who is the general accountant of the State, was an inferior officer or person. The argument, however, mistakes the meaning of the constitutional provisions quoted, and as a consequence reaches a wrong conclusion.

No one now doubts the power of the judicial department to declare void an act of the Legislature, if in conflict with the Constitution, though the act may have been passed with all the required formalities, and received the executive sanction. And yet we have never heard it suggested that in this, the judicial was exercising functions appertaining to the legislative department. Nor has it to our knowledge *543 ever been supposed that in exercising such power, the courts assumed that the legislative and executive were inferior to the judicial power. The Constitution, by the inhibition in question, designed (we state the proposition by way of illustration), to prevent the executive of the State from being at the same time a judge of the Supreme Court; a member of this Court from being, during his term of service, Secretary of State, or Treasurer; a member of the Senate or House from being Governor; the judicial department from discharging duties or exercising the functions devolving upon or appertaining to the executive. Thus, the Governor cannot adjudicate cases pending in this Court, nor can this Court grant pardons and reprieves. So neither can this Court make the law, nor can the Legislature assess fines, or render judgments. To some tribunal, however, must be entrusted the power of passing upon the legality of the acts of those filling these several departments, and especially the executive and legislative. And to assume that if this power is exercised, there is an interference with the functions of such other departments, awards conclusiveness to their action. For such action either is or is not conclusive. No one pretends that it is always free from examination or correction. If claimed to be illegal, what tribunal, under our form of government, determines it? Most clearly the judicial. And yet such examination cannot be had, according to the argument now under consideration, without improperly interfering with the functions of another co-ordinate department, without infringing upon the Constitution.

MARSHALL, Ch. J., in Page v. Hardin, 8 B. Monr., 648 (in an opinion, we may remark, very ably, and quite applicable to many of the questions made in this case), referring to the very point now under consideration, uses this language: "But his (the Auditor's) determination against the claim cannot be conclusive, because the right, if it exists, *544 is a legal right; founded in the law, and therefore to be ascertained and maintained by the law; whence it follows that there must be some legal remedy above, and independent of the Auditor's will or judgment for the enforcement of the right, and the redress of the wrong by its being withheld. The remedy is, in our system, to be found in the resort, by the ordinary modes, to the judicial power as administered in courts of justice. This, as between individuals, is the final test of legal right and wrong, and not the less so because in any case the right claimed or wrong alleged may be of such a character as to bring in question the efficacy of official acts done by the jurisdiction of other departments of the government. Not that the judicial power, or the judicial department, is superior to others, or that the depositaries of that power are necessarily more enlightend than all others, but because it has been found essential to the preservation of individual rights, and to the regular and equal operation of free government, that the three great departments should be entrusted to different bodies of magistrates, and that one of them should be a judicial department, having for its peculiar province or duty the administration and exposition of the laws in their application to individuals, and especially in the ascertainment and enforcement of rights, and the repression and redress of wrongs. * * * The executive department, and all of its officers are as much bound by the constitution and laws as the legislative, and have no more power to violate the rights of individuals secured by law. The power, obviously judicial, of ascertaining and expressing the legal rights of individuals, is in effect the power of protecting those rights from violation by the act or authority, either of individuals or of the legislative departments; and it necessarily involves the function of deciding in every case properly before it what are the legal rights of the parties, and how far in point of law, that is under the constitution and laws, those rights have been effected *545 by any and every act, relied on for their support or destruction. * * * The judiciary pretends to no direct control over the action of the Legislature, or of the supreme executive. But it may decide upon the validity of the acts of either, affecting private rights. And by the writ of mandamus it may coerce a ministerial officer, though of the executive department, to the performance of a legal duty for the effectuation of a legal right." And we may remark that those thoughts have peculiar pertinency under our law. For it will be remembered that the writ may issue on the petition of the party aggrieved. The proceeding is not here, as in England, and in most of the States, in the name of the Government. In the King's Bench, where the King is deemed to be potentially present (and where, only, in England, it can be enforced), the proceeding "stands on the foot of contempt, and is intended to reform official delinquency." 13 Pet., 607. Here the proceeding may be in the name of the party aggrieved, and while the substance of the law governing the writ and the practice under it, except where expressly modified by statute, is to be found in the common law, individuals may invoke the order to enforce a legal duty, or to secure their legal rights.

**4 In Kendall v. The United States, 12 Pet., 526 (see p. 609), which was a proceeding by mandamus to compel appellant, as Postmaster-General, to carry to the credit of the parties applying for the writ a credit found due them under the law, according to the decision of the Solicitor of the Treasury, Mr. Justice THOMPSON says: "We do not think the proceedings in this case interfere, in any respect whatever, with the rights or duties of the executive, or that it involves any conflict of powers between the executive and judicial departments of the government. The mandamus does not seek to direct or control the Postmaster-General in the discharge of an official duty partaking in any respect of an executive character, but to *546 enforce the performance of a mere ministerial act, which neither he nor the President had any authority to deny or control." And though the Chief Justice, and Justices BALDWIN and CATRON, differed with the majority in that case, we do not understand them to advance any position in the least conflicting with the doctrine just quoted. Indeed, Justice BALDWIN expressly says, that "the act was one which might properly be enforced by mandamus;" but denied that the Circuit Court of the District of Columbia had authority by law to issue the writ. It is nowhere suggested that the exercise of the power by the judicial department would interfere with any function properly appertaining to the executive. And in this connection we remark that the case of Brashear v. Mason, 6 How., 92, differs from that just cited as well as the present, in the important fact that there, as the Court held, the writ was asked "to guide and control the judgment or discretion of the Secretary of the Navy in matters committed to his care in the ordinary discharge of his official duties;" and the writ was denied in Decatur v. Paulding, 16 Pet., 497, upon substantially the same ground. In the latter case, the point above quoted, as ruled in 12 Pet., 524, is expressly affirmed.

In United States v. Guthrie, 17 How., 284, much relied upon by the Attorney-General, Justice DANIEL, who prepared the majority opinion, expressly held, that the point now under consideration did not arise, though discussed by counsel, but that the only legitimate inquiry was whether a person could be arrested in the Court below to command the withdrawal of a sum of money from the federal treasury, to be applied in satisfaction of disputed or controverted claims against the United States.

Dismissing this part of the case with the suggestion that the word inferior, as used in the statute, has reference to or qualifies tribunal, and not person--that the word officer is not used, and that within the purview of the *547 law there can be no such thing as an inferior or superior person--we pass to the consideration of the second proposition. And briefly stated, it is, that the Auditor, in rejecting this claim, did not act ministerially, merely; that he had many questions to determine; that he had a discretion, and that this discretion could not be controlled or reviewed by mandamus. If the premises are correct, the conclusion is manifestly correct. Rev., § 3763.

**5 The law declares that the salary of the District Attorney shall be audited and paid like that of other State officers. Rev., § 380. These salaries were formerly to be paid quarterly (now monthly), upon warrants to be drawn therefor by the Auditor of State upon the Treasurer. The Auditor's duty is to draw such warrants, as it is money "directed by law to be paid, as the same may become payable." §§ 41, 70. His duty, then, is a plain and simple one. He has no discretion. If the Governor, Secretary of State, or any other State officer, applies for such warrant, his duty is plainly and clearly marked out. True, he might, out of abundant caution, in case of doubt (as in this instance), withhold the same. And we go even further, and say that he not only might do so, but in some cases duty and the interest of the State would dictate this course. But this not because he has really any legal discretion in the premises, but to avoid prejudice to the State, by first taking the opinion of a legal tribunal. But because he does decline is no reason for claiming that, as he has exercised what is styled his discretion, he cannot afterwards be compelled to do the act. If so, then as before stated, his decision would amount to a finality, and mandamus could not reach him in any case. Such a determination cannot be construed as affecting the legal rights or duties of the parties. The Auditor's duties are legal, and may in some manner, sooner or later, be brought to the legal test. A warrant legally due and demanded, he should issue. True, he *548 has the physical power to refuse, and might, as in this case, without being chargeable with the least moral delinquency, or the slightest imputation of want of capacity, do so. But in all this he is but the agent of the law, and is subject to its ultimate coercion for such refusal. In the language of the Kentucky case (Page v. Hardin, supra), "If the right claimed is sustained by the law, the writ of mandamus is the interposition of a tribunal appointed by the law for the ascertainment and enforcement of such rights, by the application of a remedy essential in a general point of view to the regular operation of the laws, and rendered necessary in the particular instance for the effectuation of a right."

The case above cited, in 12 Pet., 524, fully accords with these views. All the cases, as well as the statute, recognize a distinction between those acts resting in discretion, and such as are plainly, clearly, definitely prescribed by law. Thus the Auditor is required to settle all claims against the treasury, and when the law recognizes a claim but no appropriation has been made, he is nevertheless to settle it, and to give the claimant a certificate, and report the same to the next general assembly. (§ 71, ch. 5.) Now, his judgment or discretion as to the amount he should allow on such settlement, could not be controlled by mandamus but he could be compelled to act, or after he had thus settled the amount due the claimant, he could be compelled to grant the required certificate. Or, take a case where the law makes an appropriation, and the settlement of the claim is referred to the Auditor, he cannot be compelled to allow a particular sum, but may be compelled to issue his warrant for the sum which he does audit or allow. And whether there is a discretion is, of course, to be determined by the courts, in each case, where the process of mandamus is invoked. If there is, then, though ever so unwisely exercised, there can be no interference. If not, then the omission or performance of an *549 act, specially enjoined by law, as resulting from the office, may be compelled. It seems to us, that the duty in this case did not rest in discretion, and that the Court had jurisdiction.

**6 We are then to inquire, in the second place, whether plaintiff was entitled to the salary claimed. And notwithstanding several questions are discussed in this connection by counsel, the space already occupied demands that we should dispose of them briefly.

The Revision, § 662, declares that every civil office shall be vacant upon the happening of the following events: 1. Resignation. 2. Death. 3. Removal. 4. Refusal or neglect to qualify. 5. The decision of a competent tribunal declaring the same. 6. Ceasing to be a resident of the State, District, &c., in which the duties are to be exercised, or for which the incumbent may have been elected. 7. Failure to elect.

8. Forfeiture as declared by any law of the State. 9. Conviction of an infamous crime. By chapter 54, Laws of 1862, this section was amended by adding as a tenth or further clause: "The acceptance of a commission to any military office, either in the militia of this State, or in the volunteer service of the United States, which requires the incumbent in the civil office to exercise his military duties out of the State for a period not less than sixty days." This latter act, by its terms, took effect April 2, 1862.

Appellant claims that the acceptance of another office, incompatible with that held, creates a vacancy; that this is true upon general principles and the genius and character of our form of government, if not included in any express provision of the statute; that the office of captain in the volunteer service is incompatible with the office of district attorney, and that when plaintiff accepted the captaincy in July, 1861, he surrendered the other office, and had no longer any right to the salary. By the appellee, it is maintained that the office of captain is not, within the *550 meaning of the law, incompatible with that of district attorney, but that if it is, then as incompatibility is not named in the statute as one of the methods in which a vacancy may arise, it cannot be so regarded by the Courts.

Our opinion is, that we are not confined to the statutory causes or events in determining whether a vacancy exists. If a party accepts another office, which, within the meaning of the law and the cases, is incompatible with that which he holds, we have no doubt but that the first one would become vacant. Thus, as is well said by appellant, if a Judge of the District Court should accept a seat upon this bench, a vacancy would be created in the first office, and yet the statute certainly does not in terms cover such a case. So, if the Auditor of State should take the office of Treasurer; and many other cases that might be stated.

But what is meant by incompatible? Does it cover every case where the incumbent places himself in such a position that he cannot, for the time being, discharge the duties of the first office? Or does it embrace those cases where the nature of the duties of the two offices are such as to render it improper, from considerations of public policy, for him to retain both? We have no statutory declaration, in general language, prescribing what offices, from their nature, are incompatible. Looking to the common law, we are of the opinion that the incompatibility must be such as arises from the nature of the offices, or their relation to each other. Or, as Mr. BOUVIER has it: "They are such as are subordinate to, or interfering with, each other; for example, a man cannot be at once judge and clerk of the same court." BAILEY, J., in Rex v. Tizzard (17 Eng. C. L., 193), says: "The two offices are incompatible, where the holder cannot, in every instance, discharge the duties of each. And that incompatibility, as here used, must be such as arises from the nature of the duties, in view of the relation of the two offices to each *551 other, seems to have its foundation in reason. If appellant's proposition is correct, then plaintiff would have surrendered his office, if he had volunteered and gone into the service as a private. The acceptance of a captaincy would not change it, for his obligation to continue in the service would be no greater in the one case than the other. The effect of such a rule would be to have the vacancy depend not upon the acceptance of an office, but upon a particular employment. And yet this will scarcely be claimed. Not only so, but it by no means necessarily follows that a person in the military service might not discharge all the substantial duties of the attorneyship. It is scarcely probable that he could or would, and yet he might. Suppose the plaintiff in this case had been permitted by his superior officers to return, and attend all the courts of his district, would it have been claimed that because he was captain, he was disqualified from discharging such duties? Or suppose he had been so connected with the service that his regiment had been retained in the State, or stationed in the county of his residence, would his right to discharge the duties of the former office have been disputed? It seems to us clearly not. And if not, it is plain that there is nothing in the nature of the two offices incompatible with each other. The objection rests more upon how and where the duties of the second office are to be exercised, than upon any necessary conflict between such offices. The argument carried out would declare a vacancy, if the officer accepted an agency, the duties of which took him beyond the State for an indefinite time.

**7 But it is suggested that plaintiff, during the whole time for which this entry is claimed, was absent from the State, and failed and neglected to discharge any of the duties of his office. And this has presented the greatest obstacle to the allowance of plaintiff's claim for the time covered by the months of January, February and March, *552 1862. It seems to us, the dictate of reason and good conscience, that the State should not be required to pay for services never rendered; that public officers should be paid their salaries when and only when they discharged the duties imposed upon them by law; that the same rule should apply to the State as to individuals, and that no Court ought to consent to the auditing of a demand against the State where it was admitted that the claimant made no pretense of having rendered the services for which he claims. It must be remembered, however, that we are dealing with a practical, and not an abstract, question. And practically, the difficulty in the view suggested is, that it would be impossible to tell where the true line should be drawn. That is to say, how long an absence from official duties—how great delinquency shall work a forfeiture of salary. In the absence of statute, shall it be one day, or one week, or one month, or one year? Where shall faithfulness end, and delinquency begin? Add to these considerations the fact that it is frequently impossible to tell to what extent the services of the officers were necessary, at the time covered by the supposed delinquency, and the propriety of the rule which entitles the officer to his salary so long as he remains in office, becomes reasonably manifest. The better and safer rule doubtless is, that if he is in point of law actually in office, he has a legal right to the salary pertaining to it. His conduct may be such as to render him liable to removal, but when the statute makes no deduction for absence or neglect of duty, and the State takes no step as a consequence of such absence or delinquency, we suppose it is the legal right of the officer to demand the full salary allowed him by law. Different questions might and would of course arise when it was claimed that there had been a relinquishment of the office, or that the party, by removal from the State, or by resignation or the like, had abandoned it. Such questions *553 do not arise, however, in this case, and for the three months named, therefore, we hold that plaintiff was entitled to his salary.

As to the subsequent time, still other questions arise. The right of the Governor to fill vacancies occurring in this office is conceded. But it is also claimed and conceded, that he has no power to create a vacancy; that there must be a vacancy before the right or power to fill it arises. The question then is, whether, after the taking effect of chapter 54, Laws of 1862, there was a vacancy in this office, and whether, at the time, the Governor had the power to fill the same.

This argument is advanced: The citizens of the State, including those holding the civil offices, of certain ages, are liable to perform military duty, and may be drafted; that they must answer the call, or be held liable as deserters; that if they respond, then, under this law, they forfeit all right to any offices held by them, and that a statute presenting such an alternative is of doubtful constitutional validity. As to this position, we need only say that plaintiff's service was voluntary, not compulsory, and the rights of an officer when drafted, it will be time enough to consider when the question arises.

**8 That it is competent for the Legislature to abolish an office, increase or decrease the duties devolving upon the incumbent, add to or take from his salary, when not inhibited by the Constitution, we entertain no doubt. We are equally clear that it is within the legislative power to add to or change the methods in which vacancies may occur, and make such changes applicable to existing offices, and those holding them. And it was doubtless upon this theory, and this construction of the Act of 1862, that the Governor appointed Leonard on the 1st of April of that year. If he had the power to do this, then the person so appointed, and not the plaintiff, was entitled *554 to the salary. If not, then plaintiff's right would not be affected, for the payment of the salary to one not legally entitled to it, could not interfere with the rights of the legal incumbent. And not without some doubt, our opinion is, that the Governor had the power to make the appointment, and that after the 1st of April, or the quarter ending at that time, the Auditor properly denied plaintiff's claim.

If, within a reasonable time after the passage of this law, plaintiff had relinquished his position of captain in the military service, and returned to the actual discharge of his civil office, and claimed its emoluments, the case would have presented a question of more difficulty. We cannot believe, however, that the act was intended to apply solely to those who might subsequently accept the commission named. It is known as a part of the history of the State, that several instances of this kind had occurred, and were then existing. The consequence was, that the administration of the laws was being seriously interfered with, and the design was to afford a remedy. Persons holding these offices and military commissions at the same time, had no vested right in them. In view of the public welfare, and the correct administration of the laws, the Legislature could provide for filling the civil offices. And when those in the military service continued in the discharge of the duties thus devolving, making no claim for months afterwards to hold the civil position, we think they should be and are estopped from demanding the State salary, and that they cannot gainsay the right of the Executive to fill the office, as in case of a vacancy.

Plaintiff's claim should have been allowed up to April 1, 1862, and after that it was properly disallowed. With this modification, the order below is affirmed, appellee paying costs of appeal.

Although there is not a specific paragraph to this effect in the memo as it stands now, I also realized that article IV, section 19 states the people further down the line "act as" governor, while "devolve" applies only to the lieutenant. That provision was amended to its current form as part of the 1988 amendments. Several other states noted that the difference in language suggests the lieutenant governor is not merely acting governor.

Re: Draft Answers to Gubernatorial Succession Questions

On February 1, 2017, the Attorney General's Office received a request from state Senator David Johnson for a formal legal opinion regarding several provisions of the Iowa Constitution. Senator Johnson requested the opinion because President Donald Trump announced he intends to nominate Iowa Governor Terry Branstad as a United States Ambassador. To serve as an ambassador, Governor Branstad would have to resign his position as Governor of Iowa. Senator Johnson requests an expedited attorney general opinion exploring the succession provisions of the Iowa Constitution. Essentially, Senator Johnson asks the Attorney General's Office to opine on what happens if and when Governor Branstad submits his resignation. Although some past Iowa governors have resigned, these specific questions have not arisen in Iowa before.

I. OPERATIVE CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS

The relevant provision of the Iowa Constitution is article IV, section 17, which is entitled "Lieutenant governor to act as governor." It provides:

In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17. This provision has never been amended.

Several other state constitutions contain similar language that centers around the verb "devolve." See, e.g., Ark. Const. art. 6, § 4; Idaho Const. art. IV, § 12; Nev. Const. art. 5, § 18; Okla. Const. art. 6, § 16; Tenn. Const. art. 3, § 12; Wash. Const. art. 3, § 10. Additionally, although they do not contain the verb "devolve," some state constitutions provide—like article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution—that if a governor resigns, the lieutenant governor shall have the powers, authorities, and duties of governor. See, e.g., Ky. Const. § 84; Mass. Const. pt. 2, ch. II, § II, art. III; Miss. Const. art. 5, § 131.

In contrast, many state constitutions distinguish between permanent disabilities and temporary disabilities. Permanent disabilities occur when a governor dies or resigns, whereas temporary disabilities could include physical or mental incapacity, or absence from the state. In those states, generally the lieutenant governor becomes governor when a permanent disability occurs but gubernatorial powers devolve (or the lieutenant governor acts as governor) during any period of temporary disability. See, e.g., Ala. Const. art. V, § 127; Alaska Const. art. 3, §§ 9, 11; Ariz. Const. art. 5, § 6; Cal. Const. art. 5, § 10; Colo. Const. art. 4, § 13 (1), (5); Conn. Const. art. 4, § 18(a)–(b); Fla. Const. art. 4, § 3(a)–(b); Ga. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶ V(a)–(b); Haw. Const. art. 5, § 4; Ind. Const. art. 5, § 10(a); Kan. Const. art. 1, § 11; Me. Const. art. 5, pt. 1, §§ 14–15; Md. Const. art. 2, § 6(b), (d); Mich. Const. art. 5, § 26; Minn. Const. art. 5, § 5; Mo. Const. art. 4, § 11(a); Neb. Const. art. IV, § 16; N.J. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶¶ 6–7; N.M. Const. art. 5, § 7; N.Y. Const. art. 4, § 5; N.C. Const. art. III, § 3(1), (3); Ohio Const. art. III, § 15(A)–(B); Pa. Const. art. 4, § 13; S.D. Const. art. 4, § 6; Tex. Const. art. 4, § 16(c)–(d); Utah Const. art. 7, § 11(2), (5); Va. Const. art. 5, § 16; Wis. Const. art. 5, § 7(1)–(2). Article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution does not make a similar distinction; its provisions apply to all disabilities, whether temporary or permanent. See Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17.

Several other provisions of article IV of the Iowa Constitution bear upon the question of gubernatorial succession. Article IV, section 1 provides that “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.” Article IV, section 10 grants the governor authority to fill any office that becomes vacant if the constitution and laws do not provide a mode for filling such vacancy. Article IV, section 18 provides that the lieutenant governor “shall have the duties provided by law and those duties of the governor assigned to the lieutenant governor by the governor.” Finally, the Iowa Constitution contemplates a contingency that becomes active when multiple state officers are incapable of performing gubernatorial duties:

If there be a vacancy in the office of the governor and the lieutenant governor shall by reason of death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability become incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor, the president of the senate shall act as governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability is removed; and if the president of the senate, for any of the above causes, shall be incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor the same shall devolve upon the speaker of the house of representatives; and if the speaker of the house of representatives, for any of the above causes, shall be incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor, the justices of the supreme court shall convene the general assembly by proclamation and the general assembly shall organize by the election of a president by the senate and a speaker by the house of representatives. The general assembly shall thereupon immediately proceed to the election of a governor and lieutenant governor in joint convention.

Iowa Const. art. IV, § 19.

In 1844, when Iowa first offered a state constitution for ratification by the people, a newspaper editorial expressed disappointment that much of it was written “in very confused and bungling language” that rendered the drafters’ intent “almost or quite doubtful.” Its Style, The Iowa Standard, Vol. IV, No. 46 (Nov. 14, 1844), reprinted in Press Comments and Other Materials on the Constitutions of 1844 and 1846, at 214 (Benjamin F. Shambaugh ed., 1900). Though modern readers might feel similarly about the current Iowa Constitution, constitutional history illuminates the framework the drafters established—and why they established it.

II. CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY

A. Iowa History

1. The 1857 Convention

Iowa enacted its current constitution in 1857. As the constitutional convention began, one delegate proposed that an Executive Committee dedicated to formulating the executive branch of government consider “providing for the election of a Lieutenant Governor who, by virtue of his office, shall . . . exercise all the powers and have the title of Governor in case of the death, removal, or other disability of the Governor.” 1 The Debates of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Iowa, at 39 (W. Blair Lord rep., 1857) [hereinafter The Debates]. The previous Iowa Constitution of 1846 made no provision for a lieutenant governor. The 1857 convention agreed to the resolution. Id.

When it came time to debate provisions of article IV, a representative from the Committee read the proposed provisions to the convention. Id. at 76–78. The provisions did not include section descriptions or titles. See id. In other words, the convention did not understand article IV, section 17 to provide that the lieutenant governor “acts as” governor. That descriptive heading came later. Instead, by the words of the resolution at the outset of the convention, the drafters understood that the lieutenant governor would “have the title of Governor” if the Governor left office. Id. at 39.

When considering statutes, the Iowa Supreme Court has stated that a section heading “cannot limit the plain meaning of the text.” Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Bair, 338 N.W.2d 338, 344 (Iowa 1983). That important limitation, which prevents a code editor’s choice of language from frustrating the intent of a statute, is even more significant when considering a constitutional provision. But even if the heading of article IV, section 17—which does not use operative language from article IV, section 17 itself—sheds some light on the framers’ intent in drafting the provision, see T & K Roofing Co. v. Iowa Dep’t of Educ., 593 N.W.2d 159, 163 (Iowa 1999), other available materials better establish what the Iowa Constitution’s framers really understood “devolve” to mean and what they intended the gubernatorial succession framework to look like.

Notably, despite the resolution at the outset of the 1857 convention, Iowa considered having no lieutenant governor at all. During debate on article IV, delegate Warren proposed an amendment to article IV, section 17 that replaced the words “Lieutenant Governor” with “Secretary of State.” 1 The Debates, at 587. Delegate Clarke of Johnson County<sup>1</sup> proposed instead “that the duties of the office of Governor, in case of a vacancy, shall devolve upon the president of the Senate.” Id. The convention passed the amendment as Clarke proposed it, inserting the words “president of the Senate” in place of “Lieutenant Governor.” Id. Accordingly, the convention also deleted other provisions referring to the lieutenant governor’s duties and place in the line of succession. See id. at 587–88.

But not every delegate was convinced the convention had made the right decision. The next morning, delegate Gray asked his colleagues “to consider well the importance of the matter before striking” the provisions for a lieutenant governor. Id. at 591. He noted many other states’ constitution provided for the office of lieutenant governor and indicated “there are some advantages connected with the office.” Id.

Among those advantages was the fact that the lieutenant governor “will be elected directly by the people, instead of by the Legislature.” Id. Gray found that important because “We all seem to agree in placing elections, as far as possible, directly in the power of the people.” Id. Delegate Clarke of Henry County agreed:

Gentlemen [of the convention] do not reflect that they may be taking from the people the power of selecting their own chief magistrate. When a man is a candidate for the office of Lieutenant Governor, the people always vote for him with the understanding that circumstances may arise which will make him their Governor. But if you give to the Senate the power of selecting the man who may be the Governor of the people, you take from the people this power and put it into the hands of the Senate.

Delegate Gray's remarks sparked renewed debate on the subject, and some delegates changed their minds. For example, delegate Wilson offered that although he had originally voted to eliminate the position of lieutenant governor, "upon reflection . . . the advantages in favor of [having a lieutenant governor] are far superior to the disadvantages." Id. at 593. Most significant, however, were Mr. Clark's remarks:

I voted yesterday to strike out the office of Lieutenant-Governor. I had not reflected upon it well, and I am inclined to the opinion that I did not vote right. Upon hearing the argument thus far upon the question, and upon reflection, I am disposed to favor the office of Lieut.-Governor, for one reason, if there were no other: I believe that an executive officer, whoever he may be that shall perform the duties of that office, whether Governor or Lieutenant-Governor, ought to be elected directly by the people, in all cases, at least so far as it is possible to provide for it. We elect the Governor by the direct votes of the people—by the popular will—by the popular voice. In case of his removal or disability, I see no reason why the person filling his place should not be elected directly by the whole people as much as the Governor himself.

Id. at 594. Mr. Clark's clear concern was ensuring that the person exercising the state's executive power, "whether Governor or Lieutenant-Governor," has a majority of the citizenry's blessing to do so. See id.

After some further debate, the convention voted 19–14 against the amendment that would have struck the office of lieutenant governor. Id. at 595. Accordingly, the convention also restored other provisions relating to the office of lieutenant governor. See id. at 596.

2. Iowa Governors Who Resigned

Governor Kirkwood resigned in 1877 to become a United States Senator. Then-Lieutenant Governor Newbold "entered on the discharge of the duties of the executive" for the remainder of the term (just under a year) but did not appoint a new lieutenant governor "because the lieutenant-governorship was not vacant." William H. Fleming, The Second Officer in the Government, reprinted in Annals of Iowa: A Historical Quarterly, Vol. XIII, No. 1, at 533 (1921) [hereinafter Annals of Iowa]. A later history of Iowa referred to Newbold as the "ninth Governor of Iowa" and stated he "became Governor" when Kirkwood resigned. 4 Benjamin F. Gue, History of Iowa: From the Earliest Times to the Beginning of the Twentieth Century 199–200 (1903).

Governor Cummins resigned in 1908 to become a United States Senator. Then-Lieutenant Governor Garst "entered on the performance of executive duties" for the remainder of the term (just under two months) but did not appoint a new lieutenant governor. Annals of Iowa, at 534.

Governor Hughes resigned in 1969 to become a United States Senator. Then-Lieutenant Governor Fulton assumed the duties of governor for the remainder of the term (just over two weeks) but did not appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Additionally, in 1954, Governor Beardsley died in office. Although Governor Beardsley did not resign, his death—like a resignation—was a permanent “disability” under the Iowa Constitution. Then-Lieutenant Governor Elthon assumed the duties of governor for the remainder of the term (just under two months). However, Elthon did not appoint a new lieutenant governor.

3. Interpretation and Subsequent Amendments

In 1923, Governor Kendall requested an opinion from the Attorney General’s Office because he received medical advice recommending he take an extended vacation and abstain from performing his official duties. 1923 Att’y Gen. Ann. Rep. 349, 349 (Iowa Att’y Gen. Aug. 23, 1923). The length of his expected absence was indefinite but would likely be two to three months. Id. He asked the Attorney General’s Office to opine on “whether or not the Lieutenant Governor can, during [the] temporary absence, perform the duties of Governor.” Id.

The Attorney General concluded “that during the temporary disability of the governor, that the lieutenant governor may act as governor.” Id. at 348. The opinion differentiates between the governor permanently leaving office and the governor stepping aside temporarily:

From a consideration of [article IV of the Iowa Constitution] it will be observed that in case of death, resignation, or removal from office of the governor, that the lieutenant-governor succeeds him as governor of the state for the residue of the term. It will further appear that when there is a temporary disability of the governor, the lieutenant-governor acts in his stead during the period of time such disability continues. In the first instance, the lieutenant-governor becomes governor. In the second instance he simply acts as governor during the temporary disability of his chief.

Id. The opinion makes that distinction in part because “terms of a constitution, like those of a statute, are always to be given their natural and obvious meaning. That is, the meaning in which they are commonly and ordinarily understood.” Id. at 347–46.<sup>2</sup> The Attorney General further advised Governor Kendall that, when stepping aside, he should make clear “there is no resignation or permanent abandonment of the office of governor.” Id. at 343–42.

The 1923 opinion has not been rescinded or disavowed. Neither the legislature nor the people of Iowa sought to amend the Iowa Constitution to establish that the Attorney General’s interpretation was incorrect.

However, the people later amended article IV of the Iowa Constitution. Originally, article IV, section 19 established a succession order if, while acting as governor, the lieutenant governor died, resigned, was impeached or displaced, or otherwise became incapable of performing the duties of the office. The 1952 amendment to article IV, section 19 established the current language, with one exception: it referred not just to the president of the Senate, but the president pro tempore. Accordingly, the 1952 amendment removed the reference to the lieutenant governor “acting as” governor—and that language remains today. However, the 1952 amendment did not remove language in article IV, section 15—which establishes the lieutenant governor’s compensation—that referred to the lieutenant governor acting as governor.

In 1972, several provisions of article IV were changed, but they did not affect gubernatorial succession. Originally, article IV, sections 2 and 3 provided the governor and lieutenant governor served two-year terms. The 1972 amendment increased both terms to four years. It also amended article IV, section 15 to reflect the four-year terms.

The most significant constitutional amendments occurred in 1988. Those amendments, which remain in force today, provided for the first time that the governor and lieutenant governor are elected together, on one ticket, “as if these two offices were one and the same.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 3. Before 1988, it was possible for the governor and lieutenant governor to represent different political parties. The amendment brought to fruition a constitutional delegate’s statement at the 1857 convention: “The governor and lieutenant-governor will always, I presume, be the same in politics, and why not have the successor of the governor of the same politics, instead of bringing in one of the antagonistic party?” 1 The Debates, at 593.

The 1988 amendments also recast the lieutenant governor’s duties. Under original article IV, section 18, the lieutenant governor was president of the senate and possessed a tiebreaking vote. If the lieutenant governor was absent, impeached, or exercising the office of Governor, the Senate was instructed to choose a president pro tempore to preside and break ties.

However, the 1988 amendments revised article IV, section 18 to provide that the lieutenant governor “shall have the duties provided by law and those duties of the governor assigned to the lieutenant governor by the governor.” In other words, the 1988 amendments removed the lieutenant governor’s status as president of the Senate. Accordingly, the 1988 amendments also altered article IV, section 19 to establish that if there is a gubernatorial vacancy and the lieutenant governor is incapable of performing the duties of the office, those duties devolve on the president of the Senate—not the president pro tempore.

Finally, although it is not a constitutional amendment, the Iowa legislature amended section 69.8 of the Iowa Code in 2009. 2009 Iowa Acts ch. 57, § 73. The amendment added a sentence to section 69.8 providing that “[a]n appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term.” The provision was the only substantive amendment to chapter 69 in a bill that predominantly altered the logistics and administration of ballots and elections.

B. Federal History

The original language of article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution matched language existing in the United States Constitution at the time. In 1857, when the Iowa Constitution was ratified, article II, section 1, clause 6 of the United States Constitution read: “In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President . . . .”

Under that language, numerous presidential vacancies occurred. Each time, the Vice President became President despite the word “devolve.” Two of these instances occurred before 1857: John Tyler in 1841 and Millard Fillmore in 1850. Thus, because of this history, the delegates to the 1857 Iowa constitutional convention likely understood the word “devolve” to mean that the successor became president—or on the state level, became governor.

A federal court decision from 1867 confirms this understanding:

Three times, since the adoption of the constitution, the president has died, and, under [article II, section 1, clause 6], the powers and duties of the office of president have devolved upon the vice president. All branches of the government have, under such circumstances, recognized the vice president as holding the office of president, as authorized to assume its title . . . . It has never been supposed that, under the provision of the constitution, the vice president, in acting as president, acted as the servant, or agent, or locum tenens of the deceased president, or in any other capacity than as holding the office of president fully, for the time being, by virtue of express authority emanating from the United States.

Merriam v. Clinch, 17 F. Cas. 68, 70 (C.C.S.D.N.Y. 1867).

However, neither Tyler nor Fillmore appointed a new vice president. Nor did any of the other vice presidents who succeeded to the presidency before 1967: Andrew Johnson in 1865, Chester Arthur in 1881, Theodore Roosevelt in 1901, Calvin Coolidge in 1923, Harry Truman in 1945, and Lyndon Johnson in 1963.

In 1967, the 25th Amendment superseded the original language from article II, section 1. Now, if the President dies, resigns, or is removed, “the Vice President shall become President.” U.S. Const. art. 25, § 1. Furthermore, when the vice president becomes president, a vacancy occurs in the office of vice president, and the new “President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority of both Houses of Congress.” Id. § 2. The 25th Amendment also established that the vice president acts as president when the president is temporarily unable to discharge the duties of the office. Id. § 3. Although the Iowa Constitution originally mirrored the United States Constitution and has been amended since 1967, the succession provisions have not changed to match the 25th Amendment.

C. Other States’ Histories

While other states’ constitutions and experiences do not alone determine conclusively what the Iowa Constitution means, the language used and any decisions involving that language can be valuable to a linguistic analysis. Indeed, some members of the 1857 constitutional convention expressly advocated that the convention should consider other states’ provisions and experiences. For example, delegate Gray noted in support of keeping the position of lieutenant governor that many other states had such an office. 1 The Debates, at 591. Likewise, delegate Clarke of Henry County indicated other states’ experiences lent to the convention a wisdom the individual members would not otherwise have:

We may certainly look to the experience of other States. This matter has been somewhat scoffed at here. Gentlemen pretend to have within them a light superior to any they can borrow. I am willing to look to the experience and wisdom of other States; and, as [Mr. Gray] has observed, I find that, in a majority of the free States, this system prevails; and if this office [of lieutenant governor] is found beneficial elsewhere, . . . why should we not introduce this provision into our Constitution?

Id. at 592. Although the existence of a lieutenant governor is now well established, these delegates’ comments support the general notion that other states’ constitutional provisions and history can illuminate, influence, or suggest what Iowa’s language means.

As detailed above, several other state constitutions contain the word “devolve”—but that number used to be higher. See Olcott v. Hoff, 181 P. 466, 468 (Or. 1919) (collecting states that, as of 1919, provided “the powers and duties of [governor] devolve upon the lieutenant governor”). In several instances, the state constitution was amended after a judicial decision interpreting the previous language. And in one instance, the state constitution was amended to crystallize an attorney general’s opinion—even though the amendment accomplished only what the attorney general opined the previous language already did.

1. Arizona

Arizona distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. If the governor dies, resigns, or is removed from office, “the secretary of state . . . shall succeed to the office of governor.” Ariz. Const. art. 5, § 6. If the governor is temporarily disabled, the powers and duties “devolve upon the same person as in case of vacancy, but only until the disability ceases.” Id.

Before the current language, Arizona used language materially similar to the Iowa Constitution, which utilized the word “devolve” for both permanent and temporary disabilities. See State ex rel. De Concini v. Garvey, 195 P.2d 153, 154 (Ariz. 1948) (quoting the relevant provision of the Arizona Constitution as it existed at the time). While that language was in force, the governor of Arizona died. Id. at 153. The attorney general filed a lawsuit asserting that the successor (the secretary of state) “did not in law or in fact become governor of Arizona . . . , but by virtue of the section the powers and duties of the office of governor merely devolved upon” him. Id. The secretary of state asserted he was “governor de jure and de facto.” Id.

The Arizona Supreme Court acknowledged that “public business and tranquility demand a prompt judicial inquiry.” Id. It noted the “prevailing view” at the time that “the inferior officer does not vacate his office and become governor de jure and de facto, but that the duties and powers of governor merely devolve on him and he retains his former office.” Id. at 154. It ultimately followed that path, concluding that the secretary state was “acting governor.” Id. at 158.

The court’s decision contains two other important conclusions. First, even though the successor was acting governor, he was “entitled to physical possession of the office space and facilities provided” for the governor. Id. at 157–58. Second, the court concluded the successor’s duties in his current position “embrace the responsibility to act as governor in case any of the contingencies provided for in the constitutional provision arise.” Id. at 157.

After 1948, the Arizona Constitution was amended to its current language. The fact that the people amended the constitution suggests they believed the court’s interpretation of the word “devolve” was incorrect.

2. Arkansas

The Arkansas Constitution's succession provision is materially identical to article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution. That provision became significant when then-Governor Bill Clinton was elected President of the United States and indicated his intention to resign as Governor of Arkansas. See Bryant v. English, 843 S.W.2d 308, 309 (Ark. 1992). In Bryant, the Arkansas Supreme Court concluded that when Clinton resigned, the office of governor would devolve upon the lieutenant governor such that the lieutenant governor became governor. See id. at 311. The court found support for its conclusion from several circumstances.

First, a previous Arkansas decision (under a previous constitutional provision when the position of lieutenant governor did not exist) expressed concern that the person tasked with exercising the powers and duties of governors might not be elected by a statewide vote. Id. at 312. That concern was alleviated with a constitutional amendment that created the position of lieutenant governor, so there was no issue with allowing the lieutenant governor to become governor, not just acting governor. See id.

Second, the court pointed out that if the lieutenant governor was only acting governor, he could continue presiding over the Senate, and that raised separation-of-powers concerns. See id. However, if the lieutenant governor became governor, those concerns would be avoided. See id. In Iowa, the lieutenant governor has no legislative powers; the 1988 amendment removed "presiding over the Senate" from the lieutenant governor's duties.

Third, the court noted the chain of succession provided the powers would "devolve" upon the lieutenant governor, but if they were unable to exercise the powers and duties of the office, the president of the senate would "act as" governor. Id. The difference in language suggested "devolve" did not mean the lieutenant governor would merely act as governor. See id.

Finally, in Arkansas, historical practice had treated the lieutenant governor as governor (not acting governor) after the governor resigned. Id. at 312–13. That practice comported with the Arkansas Constitution's command that the supreme executive power vests in a chief magistrate styled the Governor of the State of Arkansas. Id. at 313. In other words, the person who has the powers is Governor. See id. Iowa has a similar provision and a similar historical practice. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1.

3. California

California distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. Cal. Const. art. 5, § 10. When a permanent disability occurs, "The Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor." Id. However, like Iowa, California formerly used the word "devolve." Under that language, the California Supreme Court concluded that the lieutenant governor (1) did not actually become governor and (2) could not appoint a new lieutenant governor:

[I]t is provided that in case of the death, resignation, impeachment, absence from the state, or inability to act of the governor, “the powers and duties of his office shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease.” It will be seen that in case of a vacancy in the office of governor the vacancy is not to be filled, but the powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor, who does not cease to be lieutenant governor. Under such circumstances it would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor the latter thereby becomes governor, and can appoint a lieutenant governor.

People ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 45 P. 1060, 1060 (Cal. 1896). The people have since amended the constitution to include its current language.

4. Colorado

Colorado distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. Colo. Const. art. 4, § 13. The Colorado Constitution also provides that a lieutenant governor who “accedes to the office of governor” may select a new lieutenant governor subject to “confirmation by a majority vote of both houses of the general assembly.” Id. § 13(4).

However, the Colorado Constitution formerly contained provisions matching the Iowa Constitution. See People ex rel. Parks v. Cornforth, 81 P. 871, 872 (Colo. 1905) (quoting the relevant provisions of the state constitution as they existed at the time). While that language was in force, a succession controversy arose. See id.

The governor resigned in 1905, and the lieutenant governor “qualified as governor.” Id. The president pro tempore of the senate then “qualified as lieutenant governor.” Id. However, at the end of the legislative session, the senate elected a new president pro tempore. Id. The question that reached the Colorado Supreme Court asked whether the previous president pro tempore remained lieutenant governor, or whether he only held that office because of his position as president pro tempore. See id.

The court concluded “the president pro tem. does not become the lieutenant governor” and that “[i]f the framers of [the] Constitution had intended that the president pro tem. of the Senate should become lieutenant governor de jure in the contingency under consideration, they could easily have said so.” Id. at 872–73. Accordingly, the court concluded only the new president pro tempore was empowered to perform the lieutenant governor’s duties. Id. at 875.

In 1974—after the federal 25th Amendment—Colorado repealed and reenacted its succession provisions, changing them to the current language.

5. Michigan

If the governor resigns, the lieutenant governor shall be governor for the remainder of the term. However, for temporary disabilities, “the powers and duties of the office of the governor shall devolve . . . .” Mich. Const. art. V, § 26. That language differs from the Iowa Constitution, but in 1939, the relevant provision of the Michigan Constitution (then article VI, section 16) was materially similar to current article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution. See 1939 Att’y Gen. Ann. Rep. 69, 71 (Mich. Att’y Gen. Mar. 28, 1939) (quoting the provision in force at the time).

That year, after the governor of Michigan died, the attorney general’s office issued an attorney general opinion regarding succession “[b]ecause of serious consequences which might follow a prolonged silence on the subject.” Id. at 69. The opinion sought to clarify whether there was “now a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor.” Id.

The attorney general answered that question “no,” adhering to the “most approved view” that when a governor dies or resigns, “no vacancy is created in the minor office by operation of law.” Id. No vacancy occurs because it was never intended that the line of succession should be broken, or that any person, who has not received the sanction of the electors by direct vote, should be appointed to a position which would entitle him, in certain eventualities, to the high office of governor.

Id. In other words, “plain rules of common sense” made it clear “that the people never intended to intrust the responsibilities of the governorship to one who has not been elected to state office.” Id. at 72.

The attorney general also noted the Michigan Constitution’s similarity to the United States Constitution and recognized that “when the Vice President has succeeded to the office of President, it has never been claimed that he thereby vacated the office of Vice President.” Id. at 73. Based on the core of democracy—election by the people—and historical practice, the opinion ultimately concluded that, upon death of the governor of the State of Michigan, his powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor; that the office of lieutenant governor is not thereby vacated; that the Constitution, by plain and unambiguous language, provides for a line of succession, from the governor, to the lieutenant governor, and to the secretary of state, a line of succession which cannot be broken by the appointment of a lieutenant governor to fill a supposed vacancy. No vacancy exists.

6. Montana

“If the office of governor becomes vacant by reason of death, resignation, or disqualification, the lieutenant governor shall become governor for the remainder of the term, except as provided in this constitution.” Mont. Const. art. VI, § 14(6).

“When there is a vacancy in the office of governor, the successor shall be the governor. The acting governor shall have the powers and duties of the office of governor only for the period during which he serves.” Id. § 14(8). An “acting governor” only happens when the governor requests it of the lieutenant governor or when the governor is disabled. See id. § 14(2)–(4).

However, before the current language, Montana (like Iowa) used the word “devolve.” See State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d 369, 370 (Mont. 1934) (quoting the provision in force at the time). After an election in 1932, the governor resigned in 1933. Id. The Montana Supreme Court concluded “when the Governor resigns or is permanently removed from office, there is no vacancy in the office of Governor in the sense that there is no one left with power to discharge the duties.” Id. The court further explained the state’s constitutional structure:

When the framers of the Constitution provided for the election of a Governor and a Lieutenant Governor as members of the executive department of the state, but conferred upon the latter no executive power or authority other than in the contingencies mentioned in [the succession provision], they manifested the intention that the people elect two qualified heads of that department—the one active, the other his lieutenant, ready at a moment’s notice to assume the duties of the office, should his superior officer, for any reason, either temporarily or permanently, become unable to perform them.

Id. at 371–72 (citation omitted).

The court also concluded that when a governor resigns or dies, there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. Id. at 372. The court explained,

When the duties, powers, and emoluments of the office of Governor devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, it cannot be said that he vacates his office of Lieutenant Governor, and, unless he does so, there is no vacancy in his office. His assumption of the duties of Governor does not create, and neither can he make, a vacancy, as he is discharging the functions of Governor by the mandate of the Constitution, and that by reason of being Lieutenant Governor. If the framers of the Constitution had intended that there should be a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor upon the resignation, death, or permanent removal of the Governor, they could have easily said so.

Id.

Two aspects of the succession structure cemented the court's conclusion. First, if there were a lieutenant governor vacancy, the lieutenant governor / new governor could appoint a lieutenant governor, which would interrupt the line of successors chosen by the voters. This "was never contemplated and never intended by the framers of the Constitution, or the people who adopted it." Id. Second, because the provision covered both permanent and temporary disabilities, if the lieutenant governor's office always became vacant, another conundrum would arise. Specifically, if the governor suffered a temporary disability and the lieutenant governor took over, any person subsequently appointed to the post of lieutenant governor would essentially be squeezed out once the temporary disability ended. See id.

7. Nevada

Nevada's succession provision is materially identical to Iowa's. Compare Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17, with Nev. Const. art. 5, § 18. The Nevada Supreme Court considered the provision after the governor died in 1896. State ex rel. Hardin v. Sadler, 47 P. 450, 450 (Nev. 1897). The court concluded there was no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor:

If a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor, but there is no vacancy created thereby in the office of lieutenant governor. The officer remains lieutenant governor, but invested with the powers and duties of governor.

Id. The Nevada Constitution has not changed since 1897.

8. New Jersey

New Jersey distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities; for permanent disabilities, "the Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor," while for temporary ones, the powers of the office devolve. N.J. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶¶ 6–7. However, the New Jersey Constitution previously contained a provision like Iowa's—although there was no such thing as a lieutenant governor at the time. See State v. Heller, 42 A. 155, 156 (N.J. 1899) (quoting the provision in force at the time, which established that the governor's powers and duties devolved upon the president of the senate). Under that language, a succession dispute arose.

In 1898, the governor of New Jersey resigned. Id. The president of the senate took an oath assuming gubernatorial powers and duties but later resigned "as a member of the senate." Id. The speaker of the house, who was next in the succession order, then asserted he was now entitled to exercise the powers and duties of governor. See id. However, the president of the senate asserted he remained governor and his resignation only affected his senate seat. See id. The New Jersey Supreme Court concluded the president of the senate was only governor through his position as senate president:

In construing [the succession] clause of the constitution it must be borne in mind that it was carefully drawn by learned jurists, who knew how to express with exactness and precision the purpose they had in view. The provision is that, in case of the resignation of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate, and not that the president of the senate shall thereby become governor . . . . If the framers of the fundamental law had intended to transfer the president of the senate to the executive chair, and thereby to vacate his office of senator, it is reasonable to believe that they would have said so in no uncertain language. The language used is not ambiguous. It declares that the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve on the president of the senate; it does not confer upon him the title of the office. The president of the senate exercises the powers of the governor; the president of the senate performs the duties of the governor; the president of the senate receives the emoluments of that office. He is still president of the senate, with the added duties required of the chief executive of the state imposed upon him. There is no language in the constitution from which it can reasonably be inferred that his office of president of the senate was to be vacated. He retains his office of senator; and as president of the senate, and not as governor, he exercises the added powers and performs the superimposed duties.

Id. at 156–57. Accordingly, when he resigned his senate position, he also resigned his ability to exercise the powers and duties of the governor and the speaker of the house became entitled to exercise those powers and duties. Id. at 158.

There are two other important aspects of the New Jersey court's decision. First, it concluded the successor did not actually become governor because other provisions in the state constitution referred to the governor "or person administering the government." Id. at 157. Therefore, if the successor actually became governor, those words would be superfluous. Id.

The Iowa Constitution does not contain similar language that would become superfluous if the lieutenant governor is governor following the governor's resignation.

Second, the court highlighted the constitutional provision's flexible nature, applying to both permanent and temporary disabilities. If the successor's previous position automatically became vacant, even during a temporary disability, they would lose it when the temporary disability ended. Id. at 158. The court concluded that meaning of the language "could not have been within the contemplation of the able men who incorporated it in this clause relating to a matter of supreme importance." Id.

9. New York

New York distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. When a permanent disability occurs, the lieutenant governor becomes governor, but when a temporary disability occurs, the lieutenant governor acts as governor. N.Y. Const. art. IV, § 5. In 1943, the state's attorney general opined that a statute allowing some appointments could not be applied to a lieutenant governor vacancy because it "would lead to the anomalous result that a Governor by appointing a Lieutenant-Governor and then resigning could impose upon the people his own choice as their Governor." 1943 N.Y. Op. Att'y Gen. No. 378, 1943 WL 54210, at *4 (N.Y. Att'y Gen. Aug. 2, 1943).

In 2008, the governor resigned, and in accordance with the constitution, the lieutenant governor became governor. See Skelos v. Paterson, 915 N.E.2d 1141, 1142 (N.Y. 2009). Although the state constitution provides that if both the office of governor and the office of lieutenant governor are vacant, the president of the senate shall act as governor, N.Y. Const. art. IV, § 6, the senate deadlocked and could not elect a temporary president, see Skelos, 915 N.E.2d at 1142. Accordingly, each political party recognized a different temporary president, which made it unclear "which one of the rival temporary presidents stood next in the line of gubernatorial succession." Skelos, 915 N.E.2d at 1142. The governor attempted to break the deadlock by simply appointing a new lieutenant governor. Id. However, a state legislator filed a lawsuit seeking (1) a declaration that the appointment was unconstitutional and (2) an injunction preventing the governor from appointing anyone to the office of lieutenant governor. Id.

When the case reached the New York Court of Appeals, the court recognized it was undisputed that the lieutenant governor became governor and thereby left a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. Id. at 1144. It then rejected the contention "that the Constitution requires that a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor be preserved until the next . . . election" and applied a state statute—the one the attorney general had opined 60 years earlier could not apply—to fill a gap left by the constitution. Id. The court reasoned it made little sense to have “an extended vacancy running the balance of an elective term” when the constitution contained a provision intending to assure vacancies were filled. Id. at 1144–45.

The court also concluded what it called “the elective principle” could not control the result of the case:

While there can be no quarrel with the proposition that, generally, election must be the preferred means of filling vacancies in elective office, it does not follow that the elective principle is preeminent when it comes to filling a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor.

Id. at 1145. It concluded that a constitutional amendment placing the governor and lieutenant governor on the same ticket subordinated the elective principle “to assure the structural integrity and efficacy of the executive branch.” Id. It acknowledged that subordinating the elective principle created the possibility an unelected individual could occupy the state’s highest office, but it concluded that was a permissible result because all rules of succession are “inevitably imperfect” and “invariably compromise elective principles” at some stage. Id. at 1146. In other words, it deferred to the legislature’s judgment in passing a statute that applied. See id. (“For now, the Legislature . . . has specified that the vacancy is to be filled not by election but by gubernatorial appointment alone—a determination that the Legislature is always free to revisit.”).

The decision was not unanimous. The dissenting opinion principally highlighted the possibility “that the citizens . . . will one day find themselves governed by a person who has never been subjected to scrutiny by the electorate, and who could in turn appoint his or her own unelected Lieutenant Governor.” Id. at 1147 (Pigott, J., dissenting). Justice Pigott asserted that was “contrary to the text of the New York Constitution and affords Governors unprecedented power.” Id.

Justice Pigott relied on historical practice, noting “no one gave a thought or harbored a suggestion” that the new governor could appoint a replacement lieutenant governor because “no Governor in the history of the State had done so.” Id.; see also id. at 1152 & n.3 (collecting 10 occasions since New York’s founding “when the position of Lieutenant Governor has become vacant” but noting none of the vacancies were filled by appointment). He also noted the constitution did not expressly provide an appointment power—but it did “provide a clear line of succession,” which could not be circumvented. See id. at 1150. He asserted the majority erred by grouping the position of lieutenant governor—one of the state’s highest offices—into what was effectively a catchall statute addressing other minor state officials. Id. In Justice Pigott’s view, the lieutenant governor was not addressed in the statute because the constitution already provided a method of succession. See id.

Finally, Justice Pigott explored constitutional amendments that affected the lieutenant governor. First, in 1945, the constitution was amended to indicate “precisely what was to occur when there was a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor alone;” it indicated the temporary senate president was to perform all the duties of lieutenant governor during the vacancy. See id. at 1154–55. Second, in 1953, the constitution was amended to require that the governor and lieutenant governor be elected together, on one ticket—just as Iowa did in 1988. See id. at 1155. Accommodating those changes, Justice Pigott suggested it was improper “that a Lieutenant Governor could be appointed by a Governor with no input from the electorate and no vetting by the legislative branch of government.” Id.

There has been some academic criticism of the Skelos decision. See Patrick A. Woods, Comment, Automatic Lieutenant Gubernatorial Succession: Preventing Legislative Gridlock Without Sacrificing the Elective Principle, 76 Alb. L. Rev. 2301, 2303 (2013) (asserting Skelos “removes any electoral check from those selected to fill the position of lieutenant-governor and leaves structural problems unresolved”). But it is not universally panned. See Richard Briffault, Skelos v. Paterson: The Surprisingly Strong Case for the Governor’s Surprising Power to Appoint a Lieutenant Governor, 73 Alb. L. Rev. 675, 676–77 (2010) (asserting that the Skelos majority was right despite disagreement from the sitting attorney general, “a former chief judge, a former lieutenant governor, a former attorney general, and a leading academic expert on the state constitution”).

10. Oklahoma

Oklahoma’s succession provision is similar to Iowa’s, using the word “devolve”—although one difference is that in Oklahoma, “the office” devolves, while in Iowa, the powers and duties do. Compare Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17, with Okla. Const. art. 6, § 16. In a 1926 case, the Oklahoma Supreme Court concluded the office of Governor automatically devolves upon another, who by virtue of filling that office becomes the chief magistrate styled the governor of Oklahoma. Fitzpatrick v. McAlister, 248 P. 569, 572 (Okla. 1926). In other words, the person who has the powers is governor. In particular, the court noted the difference between the word “devolve,” which applied only to the lieutenant governor, and “act as Governor,” which applied only to those further down the line of succession. See id. Because of that difference in language, the court concluded the word “devolve” actually conferred the title and office.

The court found support for its conclusion in federal history:

[U]pon the death of President Wm. H. Harrison, Vice President Tyler became President of the United States. For almost a century this construction of the federal Constitution has stood without question. It has been recognized as correct, and acquiesced in, not only by the departments of state and all the states of the Union, but officially recognized by every civilized government in the world.

On each occasion where the President of the United States has died, the Vice President has immediately succeeded to the office of President as President of the United States, and thereupon the government of the United States has at once, through its consular offices, notified all governments of the world of the change in Presidents.

Defendant suggests that no court has ever pronounced that to be the law. To our mind, it is so clearly correct that no one has ever presumed to test its correctness in the courts. Therefore it should have greater weight than an ordinary departmental construction, not only because it has stood for almost a century, but because it has been recognized as the correct conception of our system of government, and because, for eighty-five years under this construction, there has been no friction in the machinery of government by reason of such construction.

The decision was not unanimous. A dissenting opinion suggested the lieutenant governor would perform gubernatorial duties “merely as the occupant of the office of Lieutenant Governor, to which he was elected.” Id. at 580 (Branson, V.C.J., dissenting). The dissent also highlighted the possibility that if the lieutenant governor became governor and thereby vacated the office of lieutenant governor, he could appoint a replacement. See id. at 581. That was problematic, the dissent asserted, because it would “make it impossible that the President pro tempore of the Senate would ever succeed to the performance of the duties of Governor, as was clearly contemplated in the succession line to such duties as set out in . . . the Constitution.” Id.

11. Oregon

In Oregon, the successor “shall become Governor.” Or. Const. art. V, § 8a. However, the Oregon Constitution formerly provided that the duties of governor would “devolve on the secretary of state” and if the secretary of state was disabled, “the president of the senate shall act as governor.” See Chadwick v. Earhart, 4 P. 1180, 1180 (Or. 1884) (quoting the provision as it existed at the time). In other words, the Oregon Constitution distinguished between devolution and an acting governor.

In Chadwick, one party contended that the duties of the office of governor became annexed to the office of secretary of state, and are discharged as duties incident to the latter office; in other words, that the duties of the office, but not the office itself, devolve upon the secretary of state.

Id. The court was skeptical, noting that argument seemed to require “either that the office of governor should continue vacant . . . ; or, second, that the office be filled, and yet he who fills it be in nowise governor, but continue to be merely secretary of state.” Id.

Accordingly, the court concluded the successor became governor:

In the first place, it is not shown how an office can be vacant, and yet there be a person, not the deputy or locum tenens of another, empowered by law to discharge the duties of the office, and who does, in fact, discharge them. It is not explained how, in such a case, the duties can be separated from the office so that he who discharges them does not become an incumbent of the office. And, in the second place, how a person can fill the office of governor without being governor. It is the function of a public officer to discharge public duties. Such duties constitute his office.

Id. at 1181. A later decision adhered to Chadwick and concluded that upon the governor’s death, “by reason of the fact that Mr. Olcott was secretary of state he automatically became governor.” Olcott, 181 P. at 482. The court concluded “when the people elected Mr. Olcott secretary of state, by the very terms of the constitution they elected him to become governor” if the incumbent died. Id. at 483.

12. Utah

Utah defines vacancy to include resignation and disability that extends for the remainder of the term. Utah Const. art. VII, § 11(1)(a). If a vacancy occurs, the lieutenant governor “shall become governor.” Id. § 11(2). The Utah Constitution also provides that if a disability is only temporary, the lieutenant governor shall discharge the powers and duties. Id. § 11(5)(a). And, it establishes that when the lieutenant governor becomes governor, a vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor. Id. § 10(3)(a)(i).

However, before 2008, the Utah Constitution, like Iowa, used only “devolve.” The Utah Attorney General issued an advisory opinion in 2003 on the question of succession. Utah A.G. Opinion No. 03-001, 2003 WL 21996258 (Aug. 18, 2003). The opinion concluded (1) “devolve” means that the lieutenant governor becomes governor, and (2) a vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor that the governor is entitled to fill by appointment. Id. at *1, 3. The attorney general relied in part on the federal history involving the word “devolve.” Because four vice presidents had become president before Utah adopted a constitution, at the time the state adopted one, “it was understood, in theory and in practice, that the Constitutional language ‘shall devolve’ meant ‘succession’ such that the Lieutenant Governor would become the Governor.” Id. at *1.

The attorney general also noted that in 1980, the citizens of Utah adopted constitutional amendments that required the governor and lieutenant governor to run on the same ticket and clarified the line of succession of executive authority. Id. Those amendments were presented to the voters as mirroring the succession of the federal government—which by this time had adopted the 25th Amendment providing the vice president becomes president. Id.

Despite the attorney general’s conclusions about the existing language, the Utah Constitution was later amended to its current language to cement the attorney general’s understanding of the constitutional structure.

13. Washington

Washington’s succession provision is similar to Iowa’s, using the word “devolve.” Compare Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17, with Wash. Const. art. 3, § 10. The Washington Supreme Court confronted the provision in a 1902 case presenting the question whether the death of the governor creates a vacancy in either the office of governor or lieutenant governor. State ex rel. Murphy v. McBride, 70 P. 25, 25 (Wash. 1902). The court concluded,

The constitution having provided that in case of the death of the governor the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of governor. . . . When the lieutenant governor, by virtue of his office and of the command of the constitution, assumed the duties of governor on the death of Gov. Rogers, the office of lieutenant governor did not thereby become vacant, but the officer remained lieutenant governor, intrusted with the powers and duties of governor.

14. Wisconsin

In Wisconsin, the lieutenant governor “shall become governor” if the governor dies, resigns, or is removed. Wis. Const. art. 5, § 7(1). The lieutenant governor “shall serve as acting governor” if the governor is absent or disabled. Id. § 7(2). But the language was not always what it is today. In 1938, it matched article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution. See State ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, 280 N.W. 393, 398 (Wis. 1938) (quoting the provision in force at the time).

Under that provision, the Wisconsin Supreme Court acknowledged that the question of succession was “most important and of great public concern and interest” because the people of the state were “vitaly interested in seeing that no important office, such as that of lieutenant governor, be intruded into by any person who has not lawful authority to hold the office or to perform the duties thereof.” Id. at 394. It ultimately concluded that when a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, “the lieutenant governor does not become governor. He remains lieutenant governor, upon whom devolves the powers and duties of governor. In such a contingency no vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor.” Id. at 399.

15. Wyoming

Wyoming does not use either the word “devolve” or the phrase “become Governor.” Instead, it provides that the secretary of state “shall act as governor.” Wyo. Const. art. 4, § 6. In 1903, the governor died, and a dispute arose about the secretary of state’s compensation while fulfilling his constitutional duty to act as governor. State ex rel. Chatterton v. Grant, 73 P. 470, 470 (Wyo. 1903). The court concluded the secretary of state performed duties both in that role and as governor, and accordingly was entitled to compensation for both positions. See id. at 472. However, the court also noted it did not observe a material distinction between “devolve” and “act as.” Id. at 476.

III. SYNTHESIS

Several themes pervade the historical accounts. One major recurring theme is what the New York court referred to as the elective principle—the notion that the people should not be subject to the rule of a person none of them elected. Iowa’s constitutional delegates voiced this principle during the debates in 1857, and it has repeatedly surfaced when other states’ provisions came before courts in those states.

Another theme is historical understanding. The notion that “it’s always been this way” is assuredly not reason, standing alone, to continue a particular practice; something can be legally incorrect even if it’s longstanding. See Griffin v. Pate, 884 N.W.2d 182, 208 (Iowa 2016) (Hecht, J., dissenting) (rejecting the notion that a practice should continue just “because ‘that’s the way it’s always been in Iowa’ or because ‘that’s the way it’s done elsewhere’ ”). But it can illuminate the understanding Iowa’s framers had at the time they were drafting the Iowa Constitution; it can shed light on the words’ original intent even though original intent is not the end of the analysis. See id. at 198–202 (majority opinion) (beginning analysis of a constitutional provision by determining what it was understood to mean at the time of enactment before tracing its interpretation over time). In that respect, the history of presidential succession before 1857, and the language in the United States Constitution at the time, provides a worthy indication of what Iowa’s framers likely meant by the word “devolve.”

A final theme is the importance of linguistic difference. Many states have changed their respective succession provisions, either because a court determined succession did not work in the way the people actually intended or perhaps just to update language. Additionally, some states differentiate between permanent and temporary disabilities—but Iowa’s provision applies to both and must carry an interpretation commensurate with that flexibility. Of particular importance here is the fact that the 25th Amendment was adopted in 1967, and the Iowa Constitution has seen multiple amendments since then—yet the Iowa Constitution was not changed to mirror it.

To be sure, reasonable minds can debate the meaning of the constitution. The histories discussed above in some instances contain competing answers; some say the successor becomes governor, while others say the successor is merely acting governor. Some grant a successor the power to appoint a new lieutenant governor; others don’t. There is room to disagree. However, there are several factors that carry the most persuasive weight in determining what Iowa’s answers are.

First, the elective principle was clearly important to the Iowa drafters. It has remained important, because even though Iowans have amended article IV of the Iowa Constitution, in doing so they retained the principle that both the governor and lieutenant governor “shall be elected.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 2. Accordingly, the elective principle deserves paramount consideration. As several courts determined, it would frustrate the elective principle and the constitutional succession order if a governor could always appoint a new lieutenant.

Second, the series of amendments to the Iowa Constitution delineate the contours of the lieutenant governor’s duties. By placing the governor and lieutenant governor together on one ticket and removing the lieutenant governor’s duty to preside over the senate, the people displayed their intent that the lieutenant governor be ready as a standby—just in case. The lieutenant governor’s duties are as provided by law, and one of those duties flows from the constitution: the duty to become governor in the event of a vacancy. The duty is already encompassed in the office of lieutenant governor.

Finally, history carries significant weight in two respects. It illustrates that at the time article IV, section 17 was enacted, “devolve” meant that the successor becomes governor. It also suggests that the 1988 amendments consciously avoided duplicating the language of the 25th Amendment because the people of Iowa wished to uphold the elective principle.

In light of the resources and documents discussed in this memo, the answers to Senator Johnson’s questions about gubernatorial succession in the event of Governor Branstad’s resignation are as follows.

1. If Governor Branstad resigns, Lieutenant Governor Reynolds becomes Governor. She succeeds to the office, title, position, and powers of Governor because the person possessing the powers is styled the Governor of Iowa. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1.
2. Article IV, section 17 itself does not contain the phrase “act as governor.” That section heading was added later and, like a statutory heading, cannot circumvent the plain meaning of the actual language. The framers' intent in selecting the word "devolve" was to match the United States Constitution, and under the United States Constitution, the government experienced two presidential successions before 1857 in which the vice president became president. Thus, the framers understood "devolve" to mean "become."

3. If Governor Branstad resigns, no vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor. Essentially, the offices of governor and lieutenant governor merge. The voters elected Governor Branstad and Lieutenant Governor Reynolds with the understanding that Lieutenant Governor Reynolds would step in if a particular contingency—specified in article IV, section 17—occurred. One of the lieutenant governor's duties is to become Governor if that contingency occurs. Accordingly, Lieutenant Governor Reynolds becomes Governor because she is already Lieutenant Governor. Because there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor, Iowa Code section 69.8 does not apply.
4. Because there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor, there is nothing to fill. Accordingly, Governor Reynolds could not appoint a successor lieutenant governor.

Appeal from district court, Polk county; W. F. Conrad, Judge.

Action to oust the defendant Parsons from the office of secretary of the senate of the 24th general assembly of Iowa, to adjudge the plaintiff entitled thereto, and to reinstate him therein. Also to enjoin the defendant Mitchell, speaker of the house of representatives, from certifying that defendant Parsons has been elected or is secretary of said senate, and the defendant J. A. Lyon, auditor of state, from issuing warrants to said Parsons for any part of the compensation arising from said office. The defendant Parsons having answered, plaintiff filed a demurrer to the second and fourth counts thereof, and, the demurrer being overruled, plaintiff elected to stand on said demurrer, and appeals.

1. The petition shows that the plaintiff was authorized, by an order of one of the judges of the district court in and for Polk county, to bring this action; the county attorney of said county refusing to do so. The relator states his cause of action follows: "That on or about the ____ day of Jan., A. D. 1892, the relator, J. W. Cliff, was by the senate of the 24th general assembly of the state of Iowa duly elected to the office of secretary of said senate, as a permanent officer thereof, to hold said office during the regular session of said senate and 24th general assembly. That on or about the ____ day of January, A. D. 1892, the said relator duly qualified, and entered upon the discharge of his duties, and has ever since discharged faithfully the duties of said office, except when prevented by the defendant Parsons and those in conspiracy and collusion with him; and said relator has at all times been ready and willing, and is now ready and willing, to discharge the duties of said office during the term for which he was elected, and is entitled to receive as compensation the sum of seven dollars per day during said regular session, and whatever sum shall be appropriated by said general assembly for work in transcribing and indexing the journal of said senate. That on or about the ____ day of January, A. D. 1892, the defendant Parsons entered into a conspiracy with L. R. Bolter, S. L. Bestow, ____ Yeomans, and others, for the purpose of illegally and forcibly despoiling said relator of his rights to said office and the emoluments pertaining thereto, and on the ____ day of January, 1892, in pursuance of said conspiracy the said parties did wrongfully, illegally, and by force seize and cause to be seized the person of the said relator, and by force and Const. art. 3, § 7, provides that "each house shall choose its own officers and judge of the qualifications, election and return of its own members." That the defendant Mitchell is the speaker of the house of representatives of the said 24th general assembly, and he is about to certify, jointly with the lieutenant governor of Iowa, that the said Parsons has been duly elected to the office of secretary of said senate, and the defendant J. The defendant Parsons filed his answer in four counts. In the first he denies every allegation not expressly admitted. The second count is as follows: "Count 2. Defendant Parsons, further answering, states the facts herein to be as follows: That at the organization of the house of the twenty-fourth general assembly of Iowa his codefendant W. O. Mitchell was elected speaker of the house of representatives, and at said time one Poyneer was lieutenant governor of the state of Iowa; that the relator herein, J. W. Cliff, was a candidate for secretary of the senate of Iowa, and on the 14th day of January, 1892, subsequent to the permanent organization, the said Poyneer, on a vote of 24 senators, declared the said relator elected secretary of the senate; that at said time 25 of the senators voted on the call of the roll for secretary of the senate, there being absent or not voting 25 members of the senate; that subsequently, upon the canvass of the vote of the electors of the state of Iowa, the Hon. S. L. Bestow was declared elected lieutenant governor of Iowa, and was duly inaugurated, and entered upon the discharge of his duties as such on the 20th day of January, 1892; that on the 21st day of January 1892, at two o'clock P. M., the senate met, and the Hon. S. L. Bestow presiding; that at said time the following proceedings were had in relation to the office of secretary of the senate, and the same were as shown by the journal of the senate, which is as follows, to wit: 'Senator Bolter offered the following resolution:

"Resolved by the senate, that J. W. Cliff, now acting as chief secretary of this body, be, and is hereby, relieved from any further duty as such acting secretary, and that he is required and ordered to turn over and deliver to such person as the senate may elect to such office of chief clerk all bills, resolutions, books, and records now in said Cliff's possession pertaining to said office of chief clerk of the senate." ' And the question being on the adoption of the resolution, 24 senators and president of the senate voted in the affirmative, and 24 senators voted in the negative, and so the resolution was adopted and declared carried by the lieutenant governor presiding as president of the senate; whereupon the following resolution was introduced by Sen. Bolter: 'Resolved, that Samuel N. Parsons, of Linn county, be, and is hereby, elected to the office of permanent and chief secretary of the Iowa senate during the 24th general assembly of this state.' The roll being called on the adoption of this resolution, there were 24 senators voted in the affirmative, and the roll of the senate being called showed 38 senators present, so the resolution was adopted, and the same was declared adopted by the president of the senate, and Samuel N. Parsons was declared elected permanent secretary of the senate, and immediately appeared at the bar of the senate, and took the oath of office of secretary of the senate, and was duly installed in such office, and entered upon the discharge of his duties as such, and has ever since been, and at present is, engaged in the discharge of his duties as such officer." In the third count he denies the alleged conspiracy, and alleges that by reason of the passage of the resolution set out in the second count the relator became divested of all rights to said office, and to any emoluments thereof. The fourth count of the answer is as follows: "Count 4. The defendant, further answering, says that this court has no jurisdiction to hear, try, and determine this cause, involving as it does the office of the secretary of the senate of Iowa; that by the constitution of Iowa the senate has the right to determine who are its officers, and it has determined that the defendant herein was and is secretary of the Iowa state senate of the 24th general assembly from and since the 21st day of January, 1892; that this suit is brought for the purpose of harassing the defendant, who has performed all the duties pertaining to the said office of secretary of the senate; and that in defending against the injunction issued in this case the defendant has been compelled to go to great expense in employing counsel and making preparations to dissolve the injunction, to wit, in the sum of one hundred dollars, ($100.00.)" The relator filed a demurrer to the answer as follows: "The plaintiff demurs to the second count of the defendant Parsons' answer, because the facts therein stated do not constitute a defense to the plaintiff's claim, in this: (1) The said count shows that relator was duly elected to the office of secretary of the senate as a part of its permanent organization, and fails to show that he was lawfully removed from said office, or that there was any vacancy which the senate had power to fill. (2) The plaintiff demurs to the fourth count of defendant Parsons' answer, because the facts therein stated do not constitute a defense to plaintiff's claim, in that it is a claim for damages, which has no foundation in law, and cannot properly be made in this action."

2. Section 7 of article 3 of the constitution of Iowa is as follows: "Each house shall choose its own officers and judge of the qualifications, election and return of its own members. A contested election shall be determined in such manner as shall be directed by law." Here we have undoubted authority in the senate to choose, in such way as it pleases, its own officers. The law with *601 respect to the removal of subordinate officers is well stated in 19 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 562f*, as follows: "In the absence of constitutional provisions or statutory regulations, where the tenure is not fixed by law, and where the office is held at the pleasure of the appointing power, the power of removal is incident to the power of appointment; and it is well settled in such case that an officer may be removed without notice of hearing. This doctrine applies, however, where the office is held at the pleasure of the appointing power only. Where the tenure of the office is fixed by law, or where the concurrence or consent of a different body or officer is required to the removal, or where the right to removal can be exercised only for specified cause or for cause generally, the appointing power cannot arbitrarily remove the officer. And, where the removal is to be had for cause, the power cannot be exercised until the officer has been duly notified, and opportunity given him to be heard in his own defense." This statement of the law is well supported in the cases cited in the footnotes, and is not questioned in this case; therefore we deem it unnecessary to make further citations. If nothing further appeared, it would hardly be questioned but that the senate can choose and remove its own officers at pleasure.

Appellant cites and relies upon section 13 of the Code, which is as follows: "The speaker of the house of representatives shall hold his office until the first day of the meeting of a regular session next after that at which he was elected. All other officers elected by either house shall hold their offices only during the session at which they were elected." Appellant contends that by this section the term of office of the secretary of the senate is fixed by law to continue during the session at which he was elected, and therefore that he cannot be removed without cause, notice, and hearing. It will be observed that the language employed as to these "other officers" is different from that with respect to the speaker, and different from that usually employed in fixing the term of an office. This statute says the speaker "shall hold his office until the first day of the meeting of the regular session next after that of which he was elected," while as to the other officers it is said they "shall hold their offices only during the session at which they were elected." The one fixes a time to which the office shall be held, and that time is the term or tenure of that office; the other does not fix a time to which the office shall be held, but a time beyond which it shall not be held. The employment of this unusual language in this connection is quite significant in arriving at legislative intention. The word "only" seems to have been purposely used by the two houses in enacting this section in harmony with the constitutional provision that each house shall choose its own officers. Neither house has power to control the other in choosing its officers, nor in fixing their tenure of office, nor has any general assembly power to control the right of either house of any subsequent general assembly in this respect. To say that this section 13 fixes the term of the secretary of the senate to continue during the session is to abridge, by statute, the constitutional powers of the senate to choose its own officers in such manner, and for such time, as it pleases. To say, however, that this statute does not fix a term during which the secretary shall hold his office leaves it in harmony with the powers conferred on the senate by the constitution. Whether either house might extend the term of officers other than the speaker beyond the session at which they were elected, so as to cover any succeeding session of the same general assembly, we do not determine, as that question is not before us. Our conclusions are that no term is fixed by law during which the secretary of the senate shall hold his office, that the power to appoint is exclusively in each senate, that the office is held during the pleasure of the senate appointing, and therefore the senate has power to remove without notice or hearing. Affirmed.

On February 1, 2017, the Attorney General's Office received a request from state Senator David Johnson for a formal legal opinion regarding several provisions of the Iowa Constitution and the Iowa Code. Senator Johnson requested the opinion because President Donald Trump announced he intends to nominate Iowa Governor Terry Branstad as a United States Ambassador. To serve as an ambassador, Governor Branstad would have to resign his position as Governor of Iowa.

Senator Johnson requests an ~~expedited~~-attorney general opinion exploring the succession provisions of the Iowa Constitution. See Iowa Code § 13.2(e) (setting forth the attorney general's authority to give written opinions when requested by a state officer); Iowa Admin. Code r. 61—1.5 (providing additional standards for requesting attorney general opinions). Essentially, Senator Johnson asks the Attorney General's Office to opine on what happens if and when Governor Branstad submits his resignation. Although some past Iowa governors have resigned, these specific questions have not arisen in Iowa before.

I. OPERATIVE CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS

The relevant provision of the Iowa Constitution is article IV, section 17, which is currently entitled "Lieutenant governor to act as governor." It provides:

In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17. This provision has never been amended. "[T]he purpose of art. IV, § 17 is to ensure that the citizens of Iowa are not without a person capable of performing the constitutional and statutory duties imposed upon a governor." 1980 Op. Att'y Gen. 550, 1980 WL 25903, at *3 (Iowa Att'y Gen. Jan. 2, 1980).

Several other state constitutions contain similar language that centers around the verb “devolve.” See, e.g., Ark. Const. art. 6, § 4; Idaho Const. art. IV, § 12; Nev. Const. art. 5, § 18; Okla. Const. art. 6, § 16; Tenn. Const. art. 3, § 12; Wash. Const. art. 3, § 10. Additionally, although they do not contain the verb “devolve,” some state constitutions provide—like article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution—that if a governor resigns, the lieutenant governor shall have the powers, authorities, and duties of governor. See, e.g., Ky. Const. § 84; Mass. Const. pt. 2, ch. II, § II, art. III; Miss. Const. art. 5, § 131.

In contrast, many state constitutions distinguish between permanent disabilities and temporary disabilities. Permanent disabilities occur when a governor dies or resigns, whereas temporary disabilities could include physical or mental incapacity, or absence from the state. In those states, generally the lieutenant governor becomes governor when a permanent disability occurs but gubernatorial powers devolve (or the lieutenant governor acts as governor) during any period of temporary disability. See, e.g., Ala. Const. art. V, § 127; Alaska Const. art. 3, §§ 9, 11; Ariz. Const. art. 5, § 6; Cal. Const. art. 5, § 10; Colo. Const. art. 4, § 13 (1), (5); Conn. Const. art. 4, § 18(a)–(b); Fla. Const. art. 4, § 3(a)–(b); Ga. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶ V(a)–(b); Haw. Const. art. 5, § 4; Ind. Const. art. 5, § 10(a); Kan. Const. art. 1, § 11; Me. Const. art. 5, pt. 1, §§ 14–15; Md. Const. art. 2, § 6(b), (d); Mich. Const. art. 5, § 26; Minn. Const. art. 5, § 5; Mo. Const. art. 4, § 11(a); Neb. Const. art. IV, § 16; N.J. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶¶ 6–7; N.M. Const. art. 5, § 7; N.Y. Const. art. 4, § 5; N.C. Const. art. III, § 3(1), (3); Ohio Const. art. III, § 15(A)–(B); Pa. Const. art. 4, § 13; S.D. Const. art. 4, § 6; Tex. Const. art. 4, § 16(c)–(d); Utah Const. art. 7, § 11(2), (5); Va. Const. art. 5, § 16; Wis. Const. art. 5, § 7(1)–(2). Article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution does not make a similar distinction; its provisions apply to all disabilities, whether temporary or permanent. See Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17.

Several other provisions of article IV of the Iowa Constitution bear upon the question of gubernatorial succession. Article IV, section 1 provides that “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.” See also 1980 Op. Att’y Gen. 550, 1980 WL 25903, at *3 (“The term ‘governor’ refers to an office and not merely to a particular person.”). Article IV, section 10 grants the governor authority to fill any office that becomes vacant if the constitution and laws do not provide a mode for filling such vacancy. Article IV, section 18 provides that the lieutenant governor “shall have the duties provided by law and those duties of the governor assigned to the lieutenant governor by the governor.” Finally, the Iowa Constitution contemplates a contingency that becomes active when multiple state officers are incapable of performing gubernatorial duties:

If there be a vacancy in the office of the governor and the lieutenant governor shall by reason of death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability become incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor, the president of the senate shall act as governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability is removed; and if the president of the senate, for any of the above causes, shall be incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor the same shall devolve upon the speaker of the house of representatives; and if the speaker of the house of representatives, for any of the above causes, shall be incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of governor, the justices of the supreme court shall convene the general assembly by proclamation and the general assembly shall organize by the election of a president by the senate and a speaker by the house of representatives. The general assembly shall thereupon immediately proceed to the election of a governor and lieutenant governor in joint convention.

Iowa Const. art. IV, § 19.

In 1844, when Iowa first offered a state constitution for ratification by the people, a newspaper editorial expressed disappointment that much of it was written “in very confused and bungling language” that rendered the drafters’ intent “almost or quite doubtful.” Its Style, The Iowa Standard, Vol. IV, No. 46 (Nov. 14, 1844), reprinted in Press Comments and Other Materials on the Constitutions of 1844 and 1846, at 214 (Benjamin F. Shambaugh ed., 1900). Though modern readers might feel similarly about the current Iowa Constitution, constitutional history illuminates the framework the drafters established—and why they established it.

II. CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY

A. Iowa History

1. The 1857 Convention

Iowa enacted its current constitution in 1857. As the constitutional convention began, one delegate proposed that an Executive Committee dedicated to formulating the executive branch of government consider “providing for the election of a Lieutenant Governor who, by virtue of his office, shall . . . exercise all the powers and have the title of Governor in case of the death, removal, or other disability of the Governor.” 1 The Debates of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Iowa, at 39 (W. Blair Lord rep., 1857) [hereinafter The Debates]. The previous Iowa Constitution of 1846 made no provision for a lieutenant governor. The 1857 convention agreed to the resolution. Id.

When it came time to debate provisions of article IV, a representative from the Committee read the proposed provisions to the convention. Id. at 76–78. The provisions did not include section descriptions or titles. See id. In other words, the convention did not understand article IV, section 17 to provide that the lieutenant governor “acts as” governor. That descriptive heading came later. Instead, by the words of the resolution at the outset of the convention, the drafters understood that the lieutenant governor would “have the title of Governor” if the Governor left office. Id. at 39.

When considering statutes, the Iowa Supreme Court has stated that a section heading “cannot limit the plain meaning of the text.” Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Bair, 338 N.W.2d 338, 344 (Iowa 1983). That important limitation, which prevents a code editor’s choice of language from frustrating the intent of a statute, is even more significant when considering a constitutional provision. But even if the heading of article IV, section 17—which does not use operative language from article IV, section 17 itself—sheds some light on the framers’ intent in drafting the provision, see T & K Roofing Co. v. Iowa Dep’t of Educ., 593 N.W.2d 159, 163 (Iowa 1999), other available materials better establish what the Iowa Constitution’s framers really understood “devolve” to mean and what they intended the gubernatorial succession framework to look like.

Notably, despite the resolution at the outset of the 1857 convention, Iowa considered having no lieutenant governor at all. During debate on article IV, delegate Warren proposed an amendment to article IV, section 17 that replaced the words “Lieutenant Governor” with “Secretary of State.” 1 The Debates, at 587. Delegate Clarke of Johnson County<sup>1</sup> proposed instead “that the duties of the office of Governor, in case of a vacancy, shall devolve upon the president of the Senate.” Id. The convention passed the amendment as Clarke proposed it, inserting the words “president of the Senate” in place of “Lieutenant Governor.” Id. Accordingly, the convention also deleted other provisions referring to the lieutenant governor’s duties and place in the line of succession. See id. at 587–88.

But not every delegate was convinced the convention had made the right decision. The next morning, delegate Gray asked his colleagues “to consider well the importance of the matter before striking” the provisions for a lieutenant governor. Id. at 591. He noted many other states’ constitution provided for the office of lieutenant governor and indicated “there are some advantages connected with the office.” Id. Among those advantages was the fact that the lieutenant governor “will be elected directly by the people, instead of by the Legislature.” Id. Gray found that important because “We all seem to agree in placing elections, as far as possible, directly in the power of the people.” Id. Delegate Clarke of Henry County agreed:

Gentlemen [of the convention] do not reflect that they may be taking from the people the power of selecting their own chief magistrate. When a man is a candidate for the office of Lieutenant Governor, the people always vote for him with the understanding that circumstances may arise which will make him their Governor. But if you give to the Senate the power of selecting the man who may be the Governor of the people, you take from the people this power and put it into the hands of the Senate.

Delegate Gray’s remarks sparked renewed debate on the subject, and some delegates changed their minds. For example, delegate Wilson offered that although he had originally voted to eliminate the position of lieutenant governor, “upon reflection . . . the advantages in favor of [having a lieutenant governor] are far superior to the disadvantages.” Id. at 593. Most significant, however, were Mr. Clark’s remarks:

I voted yesterday to strike out the office of Lieutenant-Governor. I had not reflected upon it well, and I am inclined to the opinion that I did not vote right. Upon hearing the argument thus far upon the question, and upon reflection, I am disposed to favor the office of Lieut.-Governor, for one reason, if there were no other: I believe that an executive officer, whoever he may be that shall perform the duties of that office, whether Governor or Lieutenant-Governor, ought to be elected directly by the people, in all cases, at least so far as it is possible to provide for it. We elect the Governor by the direct votes of the people—by the popular will—by the popular voice. In case of his removal or disability, I see no reason why the person filling his place should not be elected directly by the whole people as much as the Governor himself.

Id. at 594. Mr. Clark’s clear concern was ensuring that the person exercising the state’s executive power, “whether Governor or Lieutenant-Governor,” has a majority of the citizenry’s blessing to do so. See id.

After some further debate, the convention voted 19–14 against the amendment that would have struck the office of lieutenant governor. Id. at 595. Accordingly, the convention also restored other provisions relating to the office of lieutenant governor. See id. at 596.

2. Iowa Governors Who Resigned

Governor Kirkwood resigned in 1877 to become a United States Senator. Then-Lieutenant Governor Newbold “entered on the discharge of the duties of the executive” for the remainder of the term (just under a year) but did not appoint a new lieutenant governor “because the lieutenant-governorship was not vacant.” William H. Fleming, The Second Officer in the Government, reprinted in Annals of Iowa: A Historical Quarterly, Vol. XIII, No. 1, at 533

(1921) [hereinafter Annals of Iowa]. A later history of Iowa referred to Newbold as the “ninth Governor of Iowa” and stated he “became Governor” when Kirkwood resigned. 4 Benjamin F. Gue, History of Iowa: From the Earliest Times to the Beginning of the Twentieth Century 199–200 (1903).

Governor Cummins resigned in 1908 to become a United States Senator. Then-Lieutenant Governor Garst “entered on the performance of executive duties” for the remainder of the term (just under two months) but did not appoint a new lieutenant governor. Annals of Iowa, at 534.

Governor Hughes resigned in 1969 to become a United States Senator. Then-Lieutenant Governor Fulton assumed the duties of governor for the remainder of the term (just over two weeks) but did not appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Additionally, in 1954, Governor Beardsley died in office. Although Governor Beardsley did not resign, his death—like a resignation—was a permanent “disability” under the Iowa Constitution. Then-Lieutenant Governor Elthon assumed the duties of governor for the remainder of the term (just under two months). However, Elthon did not appoint a new lieutenant governor.

3. Interpretation and Subsequent Amendments

In 1923, Governor Kendall requested an opinion from the Attorney General’s Office because he received medical advice recommending he take an extended vacation and abstain from performing his official duties. 1923 Att’y Gen. Ann. Rep. 349, 349 (Iowa Att’y Gen. Aug. 23, 1923). The length of his expected absence was indefinite but would likely be two to three months. Id. He asked the Attorney General’s Office to opine on “whether or not the Lieutenant Governor can, during [the] temporary absence, perform the duties of Governor.” Id.

The Attorney General concluded “that during the temporary disability of the governor, that the lieutenant governor may act as governor.” Id. at 348. The opinion differentiates between the governor permanently leaving office and the governor stepping aside temporarily:

From a consideration of [article IV of the Iowa Constitution] it will be observed that in case of death, resignation, or removal from office of the governor, that the lieutenant-governor succeeds him as governor of the state for the residue of the term. It will further appear that when there is a temporary disability of the governor, the lieutenant-governor acts in his stead during the period of time such disability continues. In the first instance, the lieutenant-governor becomes governor. In the second instance he simply acts as governor during the temporary disability of his chief.

Id. The opinion makes that distinction in part because “terms of a constitution, like those of a statute, are always to be given their natural and obvious meaning. That is, the meaning in which they are commonly and ordinarily understood.” Id. at 347–46.<sup>2</sup> The Attorney General further advised Governor Kendall that, when stepping aside, he should make clear “there is no resignation or permanent abandonment of the office of governor.” Id. at 343–42.

The 1923 opinion has not been rescinded or disavowed. Neither the legislature nor the people of Iowa sought to amend the Iowa Constitution to establish that the Attorney General’s interpretation was incorrect.

However, the people later amended article IV of the Iowa Constitution. Originally, article IV, section 19 established a succession order if, while acting as governor, the lieutenant governor died, resigned, was impeached or displaced, or otherwise became incapable of performing the duties of the office. The 1952 amendment to article IV, section 19 established the current language, with one exception: it referred not just to the president of the Senate, but the president pro tempore. Accordingly, the 1952 amendment removed the reference to the lieutenant governor “acting as” governor—and that language remains today. However, the 1952 amendment did not remove language in article IV, section 15—which establishes the lieutenant governor’s compensation—that referred to the lieutenant governor acting as governor.

In 1972, several provisions of article IV were changed, but they did not affect gubernatorial succession. Originally, article IV, sections 2 and 3 provided the governor and lieutenant governor served two-year terms. The 1972 amendment increased both terms to four years. It also amended article IV, section 15 to reflect the four-year terms.

The most significant constitutional amendments occurred in 1988. Those amendments, which remain in force today, provided for the first time that the governor and lieutenant governor are elected together, on one ticket, “as if these two offices were one and the same.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 3. Before 1988, it was possible for the governor and lieutenant governor to represent different political parties. The amendment brought to fruition a constitutional delegate’s statement at the 1857 convention: “The governor and lieutenant-governor will always, I presume, be the same in politics, and why not have the successor of the governor of the same politics, instead of bringing in one of the antagonistic party?” 1 The Debates, at 593.

The 1988 amendments also recast the lieutenant governor’s duties. Under original article IV, section 18, the lieutenant governor was president of the senate and possessed a tiebreaking vote. If the lieutenant governor was absent, impeached, or exercising the office of Governor, the Senate was instructed to choose a president pro tempore to preside and break ties.

However, the 1988 amendments revised article IV, section 18 to provide that the lieutenant governor “shall have the duties provided by law and those duties of the governor assigned to the lieutenant governor by the governor.” In other words, the 1988 amendments removed the lieutenant governor’s status as president of the Senate. Accordingly, the 1988 amendments also altered article IV, section 19 to establish that if there is a gubernatorial vacancy and the lieutenant governor is incapable of performing the duties of the office, those duties devolve on the president of the Senate—not the president pro tempore.

Finally, although it is not a constitutional amendment, the Iowa legislature amended section 69.8 of the Iowa Code in 2009. 2009 Iowa Acts ch. 57, § 73. The amendment added a sentence to section 69.8 providing that “[a]n appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term.” The provision was the only substantive amendment to chapter 69 in a bill that predominantly altered other chapters delineating the logistics and administration of ballots and elections.

B. Federal History

The original language of article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution matched language existing in the United States Constitution at the time. In 1857, when the Iowa Constitution was ratified, article II, section 1, clause 6 of the United States Constitution read: “In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President . . . .”

Under that language, numerous presidential vacancies occurred. Each time, the Vice President became President despite the word “devolve.” Two of these instances occurred before 1857: John Tyler in 1841 and Millard Fillmore in 1850. Thus, because of this history, the delegates to the 1857 Iowa constitutional convention likely understood the word “devolve” to mean that the successor became president—or on the state level, became governor.

A federal court decision from 1867 confirms this understanding:

Three times, since the adoption of the constitution, the president has died, and, under [article II, section 1, clause 6], the powers and duties of the office of president have devolved upon the vice president. All branches of the government have, under such circumstances, recognized the vice president as holding the office of president, as authorized to assume its title . . . . It has never been supposed that, under the provision of the constitution, the vice president, in acting as president, acted as the servant, or agent, or locum tenens of the deceased president, or in any other capacity than as holding the office of president fully, for the time being, by virtue of express authority emanating from the United States.

Merriam v. Clinch, 17 F. Cas. 68, 70 (C.C.S.D.N.Y. 1867).

However, neither Tyler nor Fillmore appointed a new vice president. Nor did any of the other vice presidents who succeeded to the presidency before 1967: Andrew Johnson in 1865, Chester Arthur in 1881, Theodore Roosevelt in 1901, Calvin Coolidge in 1923, Harry Truman in 1945, and Lyndon Johnson in 1963.

In 1967, the 25th Amendment superseded the original language from article II, section 1. Now, if the President dies, resigns, or is removed, “the Vice President shall become President.” U.S. Const. art. 2, § 1. Furthermore, when the vice president becomes president, a vacancy occurs in the office of vice president, and the new “President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority of both Houses of Congress.” Id. § 2. The 25th Amendment also established that the vice president acts as president when the president is temporarily unable to discharge the duties of the office. Id. § 3. Although the Iowa Constitution originally mirrored the United States Constitution and has been amended since 1967, the succession provisions have not changed to match the 25th Amendment.

C. Other States’ Histories

While other states’ constitutions and experiences do not alone determine conclusively what the Iowa Constitution means, the language used and any decisions involving that language can be valuable to a linguistic analysis. Indeed, some members of the 1857 constitutional convention expressly advocated that the convention should consider other states’ provisions and experiences. For example, delegate Gray noted in support of keeping the position of lieutenant governor that many other states had such an office. 1 The Debates, at 591. Likewise, delegate Clarke of Henry County indicated other states’ experiences lent to the convention a wisdom the individual members would not otherwise have:

We may certainly look to the experience of other States. This matter has been somewhat scoffed at here. Gentlemen pretend to have within them a light superior to any they can borrow. I am willing to look to the experience and wisdom of other States; and, as [Mr. Gray] has observed, I find that, in a majority of the free States, this system prevails; and if this office [of lieutenant governor] is found beneficial elsewhere, . . . why should we not introduce this provision into our Constitution?

Id. at 592. Although the existence of a lieutenant governor is now well established, these delegates' comments support the general notion that other states' constitutional provisions and history can illuminate, influence, or suggest what Iowa's language means.

As detailed above, several other state constitutions contain the word “devolve”—but that number used to be higher. See Olcott v. Hoff, 181 P. 466, 468 (Or. 1919) (collecting states that, as of 1919, provided “the powers and duties of [governor] devolve upon the lieutenant governor”). In several instances, the state constitution was amended after a judicial decision interpreting the previous language. And in one instance, the state constitution was amended to crystallize an attorney general's opinion—even though the amendment accomplished only what the attorney general opined the previous language already did.

1. Arizona

Arizona distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. If the governor dies, resigns, or is removed from office, “the secretary of state . . . shall succeed to the office of governor.” Ariz. Const. art. 5, § 6. If the governor is temporarily disabled, the powers and duties “devolve upon the same person as in case of vacancy, but only until the disability ceases.” Id.

Before the current language, Arizona used language materially similar to the Iowa Constitution, which utilized the word “devolve” for both permanent and temporary disabilities. See State ex rel. De Concini v. Garvey, 195 P.2d 153, 154 (Ariz. 1948) (quoting the relevant provision of the Arizona Constitution as it existed at the time). While that language was in force, the governor of Arizona died. Id. at 153. The attorney general filed a lawsuit asserting that the successor (the secretary of state) “did not in law or in fact become governor of Arizona . . . , but by virtue of the section the powers and duties of the office of governor merely devolved upon” him. Id. The secretary of state asserted he was “governor de jure and de facto.” Id.

The Arizona Supreme Court acknowledged that “public business and tranquility demand a prompt judicial inquiry.” Id. It noted the “prevailing view” at the time that “the inferior officer does not vacate his office and become governor de jure and de facto, but that the duties and powers of governor merely devolve on him and he retains his former office.” Id. at 154. It ultimately followed that path, concluding that the secretary state was “acting governor.” Id. at 158.

The court's decision contains two other important conclusions. First, even though the successor was acting governor, he was "entitled to physical possession of the office space and facilities provided" for the governor. Id. at 157–58. Second, the court concluded the successor's duties in his current position "embrace the responsibility to act as governor in case any of the contingencies provided for in the constitutional provision arise." Id. at 157.

After 1948, the Arizona Constitution was amended to its current language. The fact that the people amended the constitution suggests they believed the court's interpretation of the word "devolve" was incorrect.

2. Arkansas

The Arkansas Constitution's succession provision is materially identical to article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution. That provision became significant when then-Governor Bill Clinton was elected President of the United States and indicated his intention to resign as Governor of Arkansas. See Bryant v. English, 843 S.W.2d 308, 309 (Ark. 1992). In Bryant, the Arkansas Supreme Court concluded that when Clinton resigned, the office of governor would devolve upon the lieutenant governor such that the lieutenant governor became governor. See id. at 311. The court found support for its conclusion from several circumstances.

First, a previous Arkansas decision (under a previous constitutional provision when the position of lieutenant governor did not exist) expressed concern that the person tasked with exercising the powers and duties of governors might not be elected by a statewide vote. Id. at 312. That concern was alleviated with a constitutional amendment that created the position of lieutenant governor, so there was no issue with allowing the lieutenant governor to become governor, not just acting governor. See id.

Second, the court pointed out that if the lieutenant governor was only acting governor, he could continue presiding over the Senate, and that raised separation-of-powers concerns. See id.; see also Ark. Const. art. VI, § 5. However, if the lieutenant governor became governor, those concerns would be avoided. See Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 312~~id.~~ In Iowa, the lieutenant governor has no legislative powers; the 1988 amendment removed "presiding over the Senate" from the lieutenant governor's duties.

Third, the court noted the chain of succession provided the powers would "devolve" upon the lieutenant governor, but if they were unable to exercise the powers and duties of the office, the president of the senate would "act as" governor. Id. The difference in language suggested "devolve" did not mean the lieutenant governor would merely act as governor. See id.

Finally, in Arkansas, historical practice had treated the lieutenant governor as governor (not acting governor) after the governor resigned. Id. at 312–13. That practice comported with the Arkansas Constitution’s command that the supreme executive power vests in a chief magistrate styled the Governor of the State of Arkansas. Id. at 313. In other words, the person who has the powers is Governor. See id. Iowa has a similar provision and a similar historical practice. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1.

In Arkansas, when the lieutenant governor becomes governor, a vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor that is filled by a special election. Ark. Code § 7-7-105; see Stratton v. Priest, 932 S.W.2d 321 (Ark. 1996) (addressing a constitutional challenge to section 7-7-105). Furthermore, the position of lieutenant governor is specifically exempted from the governor’s general appointment power. In other words, Arkansas’s procedure upholds the elective principle. Although the drafters of the Iowa Constitution clearly subscribed to the elective principle, there is no statute analogous to Arkansas Code section 7-7-105 in the Iowa Code.

3. California

California distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. Cal. Const. art. 5, § 10. When a permanent disability occurs, “The Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor.” Id. However, like Iowa, California formerly used the word “devolve.” Under that language, the California Supreme Court concluded that the lieutenant governor (1) did not actually become governor and (2) could not appoint a new lieutenant governor:

[I]t is provided that in case of the death, resignation, impeachment, absence from the state, or inability to act of the governor, “the powers and duties of his office shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease.” It will be seen that in case of a vacancy in the office of governor the vacancy is not to be filled, but the powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor, who does not cease to be lieutenant governor. Under such circumstances it would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor the latter thereby becomes governor, and can appoint a lieutenant governor.

People ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 45 P. 1060, 1060 (Cal. 1896). The people have since amended the constitution to include its current language.

4. Colorado

Colorado distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. Colo. Const. art. 4, § 13. The Colorado Constitution also provides that a lieutenant governor who “accedes to the office of governor” may select a new lieutenant governor subject to “confirmation by a majority vote of both houses of the general assembly.” Id. § 13(4). However, the Colorado Constitution formerly contained provisions matching the Iowa Constitution. See People ex rel. Parks v. Cornforth, 81 P. 871, 872 (Colo. 1905) (quoting the relevant provisions of the state constitution as they existed at the time). While that language was in force, a succession controversy arose. See id.

The governor resigned in 1905, and the lieutenant governor “qualified as governor.” Id. The president pro tempore of the senate then “qualified as lieutenant governor.” Id. However, at the end of the legislative session, the senate elected a new president pro tempore. Id. The question that reached the Colorado Supreme Court asked whether the previous president pro tempore remained lieutenant governor, or whether he only held that office because of his position as president pro tempore. See id.

The court concluded “the president pro tem. does not become the lieutenant governor” and that “[i]f the framers of [the] Constitution had intended that the president pro tem. of the Senate should become lieutenant governor de jure in the contingency under consideration, they could easily have said so.” Id. at 872–73. Accordingly, the court concluded only the new president pro tempore was empowered to perform the lieutenant governor’s duties. Id. at 875.

In 1974—after the federal 25th Amendment—Colorado repealed and reenacted its succession provisions, changing them to the current language.

5. Michigan

If the governor resigns, the lieutenant governor shall be governor for the remainder of the term. However, for temporary disabilities, “the powers and duties of the office of the governor shall devolve—.” Mich. Const. art. V, § 26. That language differs from the Iowa Constitution, but in 1939, the relevant provision of the Michigan Constitution (then article VI, section 16) was materially similar to current article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution. See 1939 Op. Att’y Gen. Ann.-Rep.-69, 71 (Mich. Att’y Gen. Mar. 28, 1939) (quoting the provision in force at the time).

That year, after the governor of Michigan died, the attorney general’s office issued an attorney general opinion regarding succession “[b]ecause of serious consequences which might follow a prolonged silence on the subject.” Id. at 69. The opinion sought to clarify whether there was “now a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor.” Id.

The attorney general answered that question “no,” adhering to the “most approved view” that when a governor dies or resigns, “no vacancy is created in the minor office by operation of law.” Id. No vacancy occurs because it was never intended that the line of succession should be broken, or that any person, who has not received the sanction of the electors by direct vote, should be appointed to a position which would entitle him, in certain eventualities, to the high office of governor.

Id. In other words, “plain rules of common sense” made it clear “that the people never intended to intrust the responsibilities of the governorship to one who has not been elected to state office.” Id. at 72.

The attorney general also noted the Michigan Constitution’s similarity to the United States Constitution and recognized that, as of 1939, “when the Vice President has succeeded to the office of President, it has never been claimed that he thereby vacated the office of Vice President.” Id. at 73. Based on the elective principle at the core of democracy—election by the people—and historical practice, the opinion ultimately concluded that, upon death of the governor of the State of Michigan, his powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor; that the office of lieutenant governor is not thereby vacated; that the Constitution, by plain and unambiguous language, provides for a line of succession, from the governor, to the lieutenant governor, and to the secretary of state, a line of succession which cannot be broken by the appointment of a lieutenant governor to fill a supposed vacancy. No vacancy exists.

6. Montana

“If the office of governor becomes vacant by reason of death, resignation, or disqualification, the lieutenant governor shall become governor for the remainder of the term, except as provided in this constitution.” Mont. Const. art. VI, § 14(6).

“When there is a vacancy in the office of governor, the successor shall be the governor. The acting governor shall have the powers and duties of the office of governor only for the period during which he serves.” Id. § 14(8). An “acting governor” only happens when the governor requests it of the lieutenant governor or when the governor is disabled. See id. § 14(2)–(4).

However, before the current language, Montana (like Iowa) used the word “devolve.” See State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d 369, 370 (Mont. 1934) (quoting the provision in force at the time). After an election in 1932, the governor resigned in 1933. Id. The Montana Supreme Court concluded “when the Governor resigns or is permanently removed from office, there is no vacancy in the office of Governor in the sense that there is no one left with power to discharge the duties.” Id. The court further explained the state’s constitutional structure:

When the framers of the Constitution provided for the election of a Governor and a Lieutenant Governor as members of the executive department of the state, but conferred upon the latter no executive power or authority other than in the contingencies mentioned in [the succession provision], they manifested the intention that the people elect two qualified heads of that department—the one active, the other his lieutenant, ready at a moment’s notice to assume the duties of the office, should his superior officer, for any reason, either temporarily or permanently, become unable to perform them.

The court also concluded that when a governor resigns or dies, there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. Id. at 372. The court explained,

When the duties, powers, and emoluments of the office of Governor devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, it cannot be said that he vacates his office of Lieutenant Governor, and, unless he does so, there is no vacancy in his office. His assumption of the duties of Governor does not create, and neither can he make, a vacancy, as he is discharging the functions of Governor by the mandate of the Constitution, and that by reason of being Lieutenant Governor. If the framers of the Constitution had intended that there should be a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor upon the resignation, death, or permanent removal of the Governor, they could have easily said so.

Id.

Two aspects of the succession structure cemented the court’s conclusion. First, if there were a lieutenant governor vacancy, the lieutenant governor / new governor could appoint a lieutenant governor, which would interrupt the line of successors chosen by the voters. This “was never contemplated and never intended by the framers of the Constitution, or the people who adopted it.” Id. Second, because the provision covered both permanent and temporary disabilities, if the lieutenant governor’s office always became vacant, another conundrum would arise. Specifically, if the governor suffered a temporary disability and the lieutenant governor took over, any person subsequently appointed to the post of lieutenant governor would essentially be squeezed out once the temporary disability ended. See id.

7. Nevada

Nevada's succession provision is materially identical to Iowa's. Compare Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17, with Nev. Const. art. 5, § 18. The Nevada Supreme Court considered the provision after the governor died in 1896. State ex rel. Hardin v. Sadler, 47 P. 450, 450 (Nev. 1897). The court concluded there was no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor:

If a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor, but there is no vacancy created thereby in the office of lieutenant governor. The officer remains lieutenant governor, but invested with the powers and duties of governor.

Id. The Nevada Constitution has not changed since 1897.

8. New Jersey

New Jersey distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities; for permanent disabilities, “the Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor,” while for temporary ones, the powers of the office devolve. N.J. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶¶ 6–7. However, the New Jersey Constitution previously contained a provision like Iowa's—although there was no such thing as a lieutenant governor at the time. See State v. Heller, 42 A. 155, 156 (N.J. 1899) (quoting the provision in force at the time, which established that the governor's powers and duties devolved upon the president of the senate). Under that language, a succession dispute arose.

In 1898, the governor of New Jersey resigned. Id. The president of the senate took an oath assuming gubernatorial powers and duties but later resigned “as a member of the senate.” Id. The speaker of the house, who was next in the succession order, then asserted he was now ~~entitled to exercise the powers and duties of governor.~~ See id. However, the president of the senate asserted he remained governor and his resignation only affected his senate seat. See id. The New Jersey Supreme Court concluded the president of the senate was only governor through his position as senate president:

In construing [the succession] clause of the constitution it must be borne in mind that it was carefully drawn by learned jurists, who knew how to express with exactness and precision the purpose they had in view. The provision is that, in case of the resignation of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate, and not that the president of the senate shall thereby become governor . . . . If the framers of the fundamental law had intended to transfer the president of the senate to the executive chair, and thereby to vacate his office of senator, it is reasonable to believe that they would have said so in no uncertain language. The language used is not ambiguous. It declares that the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve on the president of the senate; it does not confer upon him the title of the office. The president of the senate exercises the powers of the governor; the president of the senate performs the duties of the governor; the president of the senate receives the emoluments of that office. He is still president of the senate, with the added duties required of the chief executive of the state imposed upon him. There is no language in the constitution from which it can reasonably be inferred that his office of president of the senate was to be vacated. He retains his office of senator; and as president of the senate, and not as governor, he exercises the added powers and performs the superimposed duties.

Id. at 156–57. Accordingly, when he resigned his senate position, he also resigned his ability to exercise the powers and duties of the governor and the speaker of the house became entitled to exercise those powers and duties. Id. at 158.

There are two other important aspects of the New Jersey court’s decision. First, it concluded the successor did not actually become governor because other provisions in the state constitution referred to the governor “or person administering the government.” Id. at 157. Therefore, if the successor actually became governor, those words would be superfluous. Id. The Iowa Constitution does not contain similar language that would become superfluous if the lieutenant governor is governor following the governor’s resignation.

Second, the court highlighted the constitutional provision’s flexible nature, applying to both permanent and temporary disabilities. If the successor’s previous position automatically became vacant, even during a temporary disability, they would lose it when the temporary disability ended. Id. at 158. The court concluded that meaning of the language “could not have been within the contemplation of the able men who incorporated it in this clause relating to a matter of supreme importance.” Id.

9. New York

New York distinguishes between permanent and temporary disabilities. When a permanent disability occurs, the lieutenant governor becomes governor, but when a temporary disability occurs, the lieutenant governor acts as governor. N.Y. Const. art. IV, § 5. In 1943, the state’s attorney general opined that a statute allowing some appointments could not be applied to a lieutenant governor vacancy because it “would lead to the anomalous result that a Governor by appointing a Lieutenant-Governor and then resigning could impose upon the people his own

In 2008, the governor resigned, and in accordance with the constitution, the lieutenant governor became governor. See Skelos v. Paterson, 915 N.E.2d 1141, 1142 (N.Y. 2009). Although the state constitution provides that if both the office of governor and the office of lieutenant governor are vacant, the president of the senate shall act as governor, N.Y. Const. art. IV, § 6, the senate deadlocked and could not elect a temporary president, see Skelos, 915 N.E.2d at 1142. Accordingly, each political party recognized a different temporary president, which made it unclear “which one of the rival temporary presidents stood next in the line of gubernatorial succession.” Skelos, 915 N.E.2d at 1142. The governor attempted to break the deadlock by simply appointing a new lieutenant governor. Id. However, a state legislator filed a lawsuit seeking (1) a declaration that the appointment was unconstitutional and (2) an injunction preventing the governor from appointing anyone to the office of lieutenant governor. Id.

When the case reached the New York Court of Appeals, the court ~~recognized it was undisputed~~ stated there could be no dispute that the lieutenant governor became governor and thereby left a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. Id. at 1144. It then rejected the contention “that the Constitution requires that a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor be preserved until the next . . . election” and applied a state statute—the one the attorney general had opined 60 years earlier could not apply—to fill a gap left by the constitution. Id. The court reasoned it made little sense to have “an extended vacancy running the balance of an elective term” when the constitution contained a provision intending to assure vacancies were filled. Id. at 1144–45.

The court also concluded ~~what it called~~ “the elective principle”<sup>22</sup> could not control the result of the case:

While there can be no quarrel with the proposition that, generally, election must be the preferred means of filling vacancies in elective office, it does not follow that the elective principle is preeminent when it comes to filling a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor.

Id. at 1145. It concluded that a constitutional amendment placing the governor and lieutenant governor on the same ticket subordinated the elective principle “to assure the structural integrity and efficacy of the executive branch.” Id. It acknowledged that subordinating the elective principle created the possibility an unelected individual could occupy the state’s highest office, but it concluded that was a permissible result because all rules of succession are “inevitably imperfect” and “invariably compromise elective principles” at some stage. Id. at 1146. In other words, it deferred to the legislature’s judgment in passing a statute that applied. See id. (“For now, the Legislature . . . has specified that the vacancy is to be filled not by election but by gubernatorial appointment alone—a determination that the Legislature is always free to revisit.”).

The decision was not unanimous. The dissenting opinion principally highlighted the possibility “that the citizens . . . will one day find themselves governed by a person who has never been subjected to scrutiny by the electorate, and who could in turn appoint his or her own unelected Lieutenant Governor.” Id. at 1147 (Pigott, J., dissenting). Justice Pigott asserted that was “contrary to the text of the New York Constitution and affords Governors unprecedented power.” Id.

Justice Pigott relied on historical practice, noting “no one gave a thought or . . . harbored a suggestion” that the new governor could appoint a replacement lieutenant governor because “no Governor in the history of the State had done so.” Id.; see also id. at 1152 & n.3 (collecting 10 occasions since New York’s founding “when the position of Lieutenant Governor has become vacant” but noting none of the vacancies were filled by appointment). He also noted the constitution did not expressly provide an appointment power—but it did “provide a clear line of succession,” which could not be circumvented. See id. at 1150. He asserted the majority erred by grouping the position of lieutenant governor—one of the state’s highest offices—into what was effectively a catchall statute addressing other minor state officials. Id.; cf. Whitman v. Am. Trucking Ass’n, 531 U.S. 457, 468 (2001) (noting Congress does not “hide elephants in mouseholes”). In Justice Pigott’s view, the lieutenant governor was not addressed in the statute because the constitution already provided a method of succession. See id. Skelos, 915 N.E.2d at 1150.

Finally, Justice Pigott explored constitutional amendments that affected the lieutenant governor. First, in 1945, the constitution was amended to indicate “precisely what was to occur when there was a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor alone;” it indicated the temporary senate president was to perform all the duties of lieutenant governor during the vacancy. See id. at 1154–55. Second, in 1953, the constitution was amended to require that the governor and lieutenant governor be elected together, on one ticket—just as Iowa did in 1988. See id. at 1155. Accommodating those changes, Justice Pigott suggested it was improper “that a Lieutenant Governor could be appointed by a Governor with no input from the electorate and no vetting by the legislative branch of government.” Id.

There has been some academic criticism of the Skelos decision. See Patrick A. Woods, Comment, Automatic Lieutenant Gubernatorial Succession: Preventing Legislative Gridlock Without Sacrificing the Elective Principle, 76 Alb. L. Rev. 2301, 2303 (2013) (asserting Skelos “removes any electoral check from those selected to fill the position of lieutenant-governor and leaves structural problems unresolved”). But it is not universally panned. See Richard Briffault, Skelos v. Paterson: The Surprisingly Strong Case for the Governor's Surprising Power to Appoint a Lieutenant Governor, 73 Alb. L. Rev. 675, 676–77 (2010) (asserting that the Skelos majority was right despite disagreement from the sitting attorney general, “a former chief judge, a former lieutenant governor, a former attorney general, and a leading academic expert on the state constitution”).

In any event, the decision appeared to assume that there was a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor despite earlier caselaw from other states holding almost unanimously that the lieutenant governor's ascension does not leave a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. That assumption may leave the decision on shaky analytical ground.

There are a few other differences between New York's framework and Iowa's. First, the lieutenant governor's duties include presiding over the senate in New York, but not in Iowa. Second, the New York Constitution provides for vacancies in the lieutenant governor's office alone, with no vacancy in the governor's office. N.Y. Const. art. IV, § 6. The Iowa Constitution is not as specific. Finally, the New York Constitution directs the legislature to provide for filling vacancies. N.Y. Const. art. XIII, § 3. By contrast, the Iowa Constitution contains no similar instructions for the legislature.

10. Oklahoma

Oklahoma's succession provision is similar to Iowa's, using the word “devolve”—although one difference is that in Oklahoma, “the office” devolves, while in Iowa, the powers and duties do. Compare Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17, with Okla. Const. art. 6, § 16. In a 1926 case, the Oklahoma Supreme Court concluded the office of Governor automatically devolves upon another, who by virtue of filling that office becomes the chief magistrate styled the governor of Oklahoma. Fitzpatrick v. McAlister, 248 P. 569, 572 (Okla. 1926). In other words, the person who has the powers is governor. In particular, the court noted the difference between the word “devolve,” which applied only to the lieutenant governor, and “act as Governor,” which applied only to those further down the line of succession. See id. Because of that difference in language, the court concluded the word “devolve” actually conferred the title and office.

The court found support for its conclusion in federal history:

[U]pon the death of President Wm. H. Harrison, Vice President Tyler became President of the United States. For almost a century this construction of the federal Constitution has stood without question. It has been recognized as correct, and acquiesced in, not only by the departments of state and all the states of the Union, but officially recognized by every civilized government in the world.

On each occasion where the President of the United States has died, the Vice President has immediately succeeded to the office of President as President of the United States, and thereupon the government of the United States has at once, through its consular offices, notified all governments of the world of the change in Presidents.

Defendant suggests that no court has ever pronounced that to be the law. To our mind, it is so clearly correct that no one has ever presumed to test its correctness in the courts. Therefore it should have greater weight than an ordinary departmental construction, not only because it has stood for almost a century, but because it has been recognized as the correct conception of our system of government, and because, for eighty-five years under this construction, there has been no friction in the machinery of government by reason of such construction.

The decision was not unanimous. A dissenting opinion suggested the lieutenant governor would perform gubernatorial duties “merely as the occupant of the office of Lieutenant Governor, to which he was elected.” Id. at 580 (Branson, V.C.J., dissenting). The dissent also highlighted the possibility that if the lieutenant governor became governor and thereby vacated the office of lieutenant governor, he could appoint a replacement. See id. at 581. That was problematic, the dissent asserted, because it would “make it impossible that the President pro tempore of the Senate would ever succeed to the performance of the duties of Governor, as was clearly contemplated in the succession line to such duties as set out in . . . the Constitution.” Id.

11. Oregon

In Oregon, the successor “shall become Governor.” Or. Const. art. V, § 8a. However, the Oregon Constitution formerly provided that the duties of governor would “devolve on the secretary of state” and if the secretary of state was disabled, “the president of the senate shall act as governor.” See Chadwick v. Earhart, 4 P. 1180, 1180 (Or. 1884) (quoting the provision as it existed at the time). In other words, the Oregon Constitution distinguished between devolution and an acting governor.

In Chadwick, one party contended that the duties of the office of governor became annexed to the office of secretary of state, and are discharged as duties incident to the latter office; in other words, that the duties of the office, but not the office itself, devolve upon the secretary of state.

Id. The court was skeptical, noting that argument seemed to require “either that the office of governor should continue vacant . . . ; or, second, that the office be filled, and yet he who fills it be in nowise governor, but continue to be merely secretary of state.” Id.

Accordingly, the court concluded the successor became governor:

In the first place, it is not shown how an office can be vacant, and yet there be a person, not the deputy or locum tenens of another, empowered by law to discharge the duties of the office, and who does, in fact, discharge them. It is not explained how, in such a case, the duties can be separated from the office so that he who discharges them does not become an incumbent of the office. And, in the second place, how a person can fill the office of governor without being governor. It is the function of a public officer to discharge public duties. Such duties constitute his office.

Id. at 1181. A later decision adhered to Chadwick and concluded that upon the governor’s death, “by reason of the fact that Mr. Olcott was secretary of state he automatically became governor.” Olcott, 181 P. at 482. The court concluded “when the people elected Mr. Olcott secretary of state, by the very terms of the constitution they elected him to become governor” if the incumbent died. Id. at 483.

12. Utah

Utah defines vacancy to include resignation and disability that extends for the remainder of the term. Utah Const. art. VII, § 11(1)(a). If a vacancy occurs, the lieutenant governor “shall become governor.” Id. § 11(2). The Utah Constitution also provides that if a disability is only temporary, the lieutenant governor shall discharge the powers and duties. Id. § 11(5)(a). And, it establishes that when the lieutenant governor becomes governor, a vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor. Id. § 10(3)(a)(i).

However, before 2008, the Utah Constitution, like Iowa, used only “devolve.” The Utah Attorney General issued an advisory opinion in 2003 on the question of succession. Utah A.G. Opinion No. 03-001, 2003 WL 21996258 (Aug. 18, 2003). The opinion concluded (1) “devolve” means that the lieutenant governor becomes governor, and (2) a vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor that the governor is entitled to fill by appointment. Id. at *1, 3. The attorney general relied in part on the federal history involving the word “devolve.” Because four vice presidents had become president before Utah adopted a constitution, at the time the state adopted one, “it was understood, in theory and in practice, that the Constitutional language ‘shall devolve’ meant ‘succession’ such that the Lieutenant Governor would become the Governor.” Id. at *1.

The attorney general also noted that in 1980, the citizens of Utah adopted constitutional amendments that required the governor and lieutenant governor to run on the same ticket and clarified the line of succession of executive authority. Id. Those amendments were presented to the voters as mirroring the succession of the federal government—which by this time had adopted the 25th Amendment providing the vice president becomes president. Id.

Despite the attorney general’s conclusions about the existing language, the Utah Constitution was later amended to its current language to cement the attorney general’s understanding of the constitutional structure. Furthermore, the attorney general may have reached his opinion about a lieutenant governor vacancy because (1) the legislature codified its finding that the lieutenant governor is a significant position, Utah Code § 67-1a-1; and (2) the lieutenant governor is the state’s chief election officer, so it would be important to have someone in the position, see Utah Code § 67-1a-2. The Iowa Code does not contain a similar emphasis on the lieutenant governor’s importance, and here, the secretary of state is the chief election officer. Those differences may provide a basis on which to distinguish Utah’s conclusions.

13. Washington

Washington’s succession provision is similar to Iowa’s, using the word “devolve.” Compare Iowa Const. art. IV, § 17, with Wash. Const. art. 3, § 10. The Washington Supreme Court confronted the provision in a 1902 case presenting the question whether the death of the governor creates a vacancy in either the office of governor or lieutenant governor. State ex rel. Murphy v. McBride, 70 P. 25, 25 (Wash. 1902). The court concluded,

The constitution having provided that in case of the death of the governor the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of governor. . . . When the lieutenant governor, by virtue of his office and of the command of the constitution, assumed the duties of governor on the death of Gov. Rogers, the office of lieutenant governor did not thereby become vacant, but the officer remained lieutenant governor, intrusted with the powers and duties of governor.

14. Wisconsin

In Wisconsin, the lieutenant governor “shall become governor” if the governor dies, resigns, or is removed. Wis. Const. art. 5, § 7(1). The lieutenant governor “shall serve as acting governor” if the governor is absent or disabled. Id. § 7(2). But the language was not always what it is today. In 1938, it matched article IV, section 17 of the Iowa Constitution. See State ex rel. Martin v. Ekern, 280 N.W. 393, 398 (Wis. 1938) (quoting the provision in force at the time).

Under that provision, the Wisconsin Supreme Court acknowledged that the question of succession was “most important and of great public concern and interest” because the people of the state were “vitaly interested in seeing that no important office, such as that of lieutenant governor, be intruded into by any person who has not lawful authority to hold the office or to perform the duties thereof.” Id. at 394. It ultimately concluded that when a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, “the lieutenant governor does not become governor. He remains lieutenant governor, upon whom devolves the powers and duties of governor. In such a contingency no vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor.” Id. at 399.

15. Wyoming

Wyoming does not use either the word “devolve” or the phrase “become Governor.” Instead, it provides that the secretary of state “shall act as governor.” Wyo. Const. art. 4, § 6. In 1903, the governor died, and a dispute arose about the secretary of state’s compensation while fulfilling his constitutional duty to act as governor. State ex rel. Chatterton v. Grant, 73 P. 470, 470 (Wyo. 1903). The court concluded the secretary of state performed duties both in that role and as governor, and accordingly was entitled to compensation for both positions. See id. at 472. However, the court also noted it did not observe a material distinction between “devolve” and “act as.” Id. at 476.

III. SYNTHESIS

Several themes pervade the historical accounts. One major recurring theme is ~~what the New York court referred to as the~~ elective principle—the notion that the people should not be subject to the rule of a person none of them elected. Iowa’s constitutional delegates voiced this principle during the debates in 1857, and it has repeatedly surfaced when other states’ provisions came before courts in those states. See, e.g., Bryant, 843 S.W.2d at 312; State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 372; Skelos, 915 N.E.2d at 1145.

Another theme is historical understanding. The notion that “it’s always been this way” is assuredly not reason, standing alone, to continue a particular practice; something can be legally incorrect even if it’s longstanding. See Griffin v. Pate, 884 N.W.2d 182, 208 (Iowa 2016) (Hecht, J., dissenting) (rejecting the notion that a practice should continue just “because ‘that’s the way it’s always been in Iowa’ or because ‘that’s the way it’s done elsewhere’ ”). But it can illuminate the understanding Iowa's framers had at the time they were drafting the Iowa Constitution; it can shed light on the words' original intent even though original intent is not the end of the analysis. See id. at 198–202 (majority opinion) (beginning analysis of a constitutional provision by determining what it was understood to mean at the time of enactment before tracing its interpretation over time). In that respect, the history of presidential succession before 1857, and the language in the United States Constitution at the time, provides a worthy indication of what Iowa's framers likely meant by the word “devolve.”

A final theme is the importance of linguistic difference. Many states have changed their respective succession provisions, either because a court determined succession did not work in the way the people actually intended or perhaps just to update language. Additionally, some states differentiate between permanent and temporary disabilities—but Iowa's provision applies to both and must carry an interpretation commensurate with that flexibility. See State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 372; Heller, 42 A. at 158. Of particular importance here is the fact that the 25th Amendment was adopted in 1967, and the Iowa Constitution has seen multiple amendments since then—yet the Iowa Constitution was not changed to mirror it.

First, the elective principle was clearly important to the Iowa drafters. See 1 The Debates, at 591–94. And it has remained important, because even though Iowans have amended article IV of the Iowa Constitution, in doing so they retained the principle that both the governor and lieutenant governor “shall be elected.” Iowa Const. art. IV, § 2. Accordingly, the elective principle deserves paramount consideration. As several courts determined, it would frustrate the elective principle and the constitutional succession order if a governor could always appoint a new lieutenant.

Second, the series of amendments to the Iowa Constitution delineate the contours of the lieutenant governor's duties. By placing the governor and lieutenant governor together on one ticket and removing the lieutenant governor's duty to preside over the senate, the people displayed their intent that the lieutenant governor be ready as a standby—just in case. See State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d at 371–72. The lieutenant governor's duties are as provided by law, and one of those duties flows from the constitution: the duty to become governor in the event of a vacancy. The duty is already encompassed in the office of lieutenant governor.

Finally, history carries significant weight in two respects. It illustrates that at the time article IV, section 17 was enacted, “devolve” meant that the successor becomes governor. It also suggests that the 1988 amendments consciously avoided duplicating the language of the 25th Amendment because the people of Iowa wished to uphold the elective principle.

In light of the resources and documents discussed in this memo, the answers to Senator Johnson’s questions about gubernatorial succession in the event of Governor Branstad’s resignation are as follows.

1. If Governor Branstad resigns, Lieutenant Governor Reynolds becomes Governor. She succeeds to the office, title, position, and powers of Governor because the person possessing the powers is styled the Governor of Iowa. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1.
2. Article IV, section 17 itself does not contain the phrase “act as governor.” That section heading was added later and, ~~like a statutory heading,~~ cannot circumvent the plain meaning of the actual language. The framers’ intent in selecting the word “devolve” was to match the United States Constitution, and under the United States Constitution, the government experienced two presidential successions before 1857 in which the vice president became president. Thus, the framers understood “devolve” to mean “become.”
3. If Governor Branstad resigns, no vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor. Essentially, the offices of governor and lieutenant governor merge. The voters elected Governor Branstad and Lieutenant Governor Reynolds with the understanding that Lieutenant Governor Reynolds would step in if a particular contingency—specified in article IV, section 17—occurred. One of the lieutenant governor’s duties is to become Governor if that contingency occurs. Accordingly, Lieutenant Governor Reynolds becomes Governor because she is already Lieutenant Governor. Because there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor, Iowa Code section 69.8 does not apply.
4. Because there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor, there is nothing to fill. Accordingly, Governor Reynolds could not appoint a successor lieutenant governor.

South Carolina just went through the succession issues with Nicki Haley leaving. Could one of you find the S.C. constitution and any pertinent cases? Thanks.

The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa. Iowa Const. art. IV, § 1.

Do other states have similar provisions?

Yes, materially identical ("a chief magistrate")	No provision	No—power vested in the governor	No—power vested in a governor
Alabama	Arizona	Alaska	Delaware
Arkansas	Minnesota	California	Florida
Kentucky	Vermont (enumerates governor's powers and expressly says Lt. Gov. is empowered to perform them "in the governor's absence")	Colorado	Hawaii
Massachusetts: "There shall be a supreme executive magistrate, who shall be styled, the governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts . . . ."		Connecticut	Indiana
Nevada		Georgia	Kansas
Oklahoma		Idaho	Maine
South Carolina		Illinois	Maryland
		Louisiana: "The governor shall be the chief executive officer of the state."	Mississippi
		Michigan	Missouri
		Montana	New Jersey

		Nebraska	Oregon
		New Mexico	Rhode Island
		New York	Tennessee
		North Carolina	Virginia
		North Dakota	Washington
		Ohio	Wisconsin
		Pennsylvania	Wyoming
		South Dakota
		Texas (just provides that governor shall be chief executive officer of the state)
		West Virginia

New Hampshire is not included in the table above because it has a hybrid provision: "There shall be a supreme executive magistrate, who shall be styled the Governor of the State of New Hampshire, and whose title shall be His Excellency. The executive power of the state is vested in the governor." N.H. Const. pt. 2, art. 41. Perhaps it fits in the "vested in the governor" category. Massachusetts might fall along the same lines.

Couple interesting things from making the charts today:

1. In Oklahoma, the provision says "the office" devolves, not just the "powers and duties." That may explain the holding in the 1926 case.
2. I double checked some provisions and discovered a few I had categorized as "shall become" actually make the distinction between permanent vacancy and temporary disability.

My count as of now is:

- 13 "devolve" or "act as governor" (including Iowa)
- 3 that use a phrase like "shall become governor" either without making a distinction between permanent vacancy and temporary disability, or that don't really have a provision covering temporary disability
- 34 that distinguish between permanent vacancy and temporary disability, and use different language for the two situations

The charts are attached along with an updated memo.

Thanks, Geoff. One more thing, historically, when an Iowa Gov has left office before the end of his term, there has not been a Lt. Gov. appointed. Most of the time, these were very short periods of time, though.

Subject: Constitutional issue re: Lt. Gov assuming Gov's powers

Importance: High

Eric and Geoff:

In Massachusetts, when Governor William Weld resigned in 1997, Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci became "Acting Governor" – not "Governor." When Cellucci resigned to become US Ambassador to Canada during the Bush Administration in 2001, his Lt. Gov. Jane Swift became "Acting Governor."

Massachusetts Constitution has a similar provision to the Iowa Constitution:

III.--Whenever the chair of the Governor shall be vacant, by reason of his death, or absence from the Commonwealth, or otherwise, the Lieutenant-Governor, for the time being, shall, during such vacancy, perform all the duties incumbent upon the Governor, and shall have and exercise all the powers and authorities, which by this Constitution the Governor is vested with, when personally present.

Hope this is helpful.

MEMORANDUM

To: Jeff Thompson, Meghan Gavin
From: David Ranscht
Date: December 7, 2016 (updated December 8, 2016)
Re: Gubernatorial Succession Provisions

Alabama

Ala. Const. art. V, § 127: “In case of the governor's removal from office, death or resignation, the lieutenant governor shall become governor.” However, powers devolve in times of disability.

Alaska

Alaska Const. art. 3, § 11: “In case of a vacancy in the office of governor for any reason, the lieutenant governor shall succeed to the office for the remainder of the term.” However, under Alaska Const. art. 3, § 9, the lieutenant governor “serve[s] as acting governor” during times the governor is temporarily absent from office.

Arizona

Ariz. Const. art. 5, § 6:

In the event of the death of the governor, or his resignation, removal from office, or permanent disability to discharge the duties of the office, the secretary of state, if holding by election, shall succeed to the office of governor until his successor shall be elected and shall qualify. . . . Any successor to the office shall become governor in fact and entitled to all of the emoluments, powers and duties of governor upon taking the oath of office.

In the event of the impeachment of the governor, his absence from the state, or other temporary disability to discharge the duties of the office, the powers and duties of the office of governor shall devolve upon the same person as in case of vacancy, but only until the disability ceases.

Before the current language, Arizona also used “devolve.” Under that language, the Arizona Supreme Court concluded “where the duties of the office of governor devolve on the president of the senate, he does not become governor.” State v. Garvey, 195 P.2d 153, 154 (Ariz. 1948).

Arkansas

Ark. Const. art. 6, § 4. Section 4 provides, “In case of the impeachment of the Governor, or his or her removal from office, death, inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, or resignation, the powers and duties of the office, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease.”

Notwithstanding this language, the Arkansas Supreme Court concluded in Stratton v. Priest, 932 S.W.2d 321, 321 (Ark. 1996), that the governor’s resignation meant the lieutenant governor “became governor.” The Stratton case involved a challenge to the special election that the lieutenant governor ordered to fill the vacancy he left.

The Stratton case also followed the Arkansas Supreme Court’s decision in Bryant v. English, 843 S.W.2d 308, 309 (Ark. 1992), which followed Bill Clinton’s resignation after his election as President. The court concluded “the Office of Governor itself devolves upon the Lieutenant Governor.” Id. The opinion discusses the need to have the state’s chief executive elected by a statewide vote—and so it differentiates between the lieutenant governor and the President of the Senate, who “had been directly elected only by the voters of a local state Senate district.” Id. at 312. This, of course, does not solve the problem that occurs if the lieutenant governor becomes governor, appoints someone, and then is incapacitated themselves.

Additionally, the Bryant opinion identifies possible “mixing of executive and legislative powers” if the lieutenant governor merely holds the powers of governor, but not the office. Id. at 312. And it identifies historical practice of treating the “lieutenant governor as governor when he filled a vacant governor’s office.” Id. at 312.

California

Cal. Const. art. 5, § 10: “The Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor when a vacancy occurs in the office of Governor.”

California also distinguishes between becoming governor and acting as governor: “The Lieutenant Governor shall act as Governor during the impeachment, absence from the State, or other temporary disability of the Governor . . . .” Id.

But before enacting its current language, California used the word “devolve:”

upon the lieutenant governor, who does not cease to be lieutenant governor. Under such circumstances it would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the governor devolve upon the lieutenant governor the latter thereby becomes governor, and can appoint a lieutenant governor.

Colorado

Colo. Const. art. 4, § 13(1): “In the case of the death, impeachment, conviction of a felony, or resignation of the governor, the office of governor shall be vacant and the lieutenant governor shall take the oath of office and shall become governor.” However, for absence or disability, the powers devolve. Id. § 13(5). A lieutenant governor who “accedes to the office of governor” may select a new lieutenant governor. Id. § 13(4).

Connecticut

Death, resignation, refusal to serve, or removal: lieutenant governor shall be governor. Conn. Const. art. 4, § 18(a).

Impeachment or absence: lieutenant governor “shall exercise the powers and authority and perform the duties appertaining to the office of governor.” Id. § 18(b).

Delaware

Del. Const. art. 3, § 20:

In case the person elected Governor shall die or become disqualified before the commencement of his or her term of office, or shall refuse to take the same, or in case of the removal of the Governor from office, or of his or her death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Lieutenant-Governor; and in case of removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, the Secretary of State, or if there be none, or in case of his or her removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Attorney-General, or if there be none, or in case of his or her removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the President pro tempore of the Senate or if there be none, or in case of his or her removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall act as Governor until the disability of the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor is removed, or a Governor shall be duly elected and qualified.

Whenever the powers and duties of the office of Governor shall devolve upon the Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of State, or Attorney-General, his or her office shall become vacant; and whenever the powers and duties of the office of Governor shall devolve upon the President pro tempore of the Senate, or the Speaker of the House of Representatives, his or her seat as a member of the General Assembly shall become vacant; and any such vacancy shall be filled as directed by this Constitution; provided, however, that such vacancy shall not be created in case either of the said persons shall be acting as Governor during a temporary disability of the Governor.

Florida

Lieutenant governor “shall become governor” upon a gubernatorial vacancy. However, lieutenant governor “shall act as governor” when the governor is physically or mentally incapacitated. Fla. Const. art. 4, § 3(a)–(b).

A previous version of the Florida Constitution apparently used “devolve” language. See Advisory Opinion to Governor, 217 So. 2d 289, 292 n.* (Fla. 1968) (noting the relevant language is part of the “1968 revision”); Advisory Opinion to Acting Governor Johns, 67 So. 2d 413, 414 (Fla. 1953) (referring to powers devolved upon the lieutenant governor and permitting the lieutenant governor to “designate [him]self as Acting Governor”).

Georgia

Temporary disability: lieutenant governor “shall exercise the powers and duties of the Governor.” Ga. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶ V(a).

Death, resignation, or permanent disability: lieutenant governor “shall become the Governor.” Id. § 1, ¶ V(b).

Hawaii

Haw. Const. art. 5, § 4: “When the office of governor is vacant, the lieutenant governor shall become governor. In the event of the absence of the governor from the State, or the governor’s inability to exercise and discharge the powers and duties of the governor’s office, such powers and duties shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor during such absence or disability.”

Idaho

If the governor resigns, the “powers, duties, and emoluments of the office . . . devolve upon the lieutenant governor.” Idaho Const. art. IV, § 12. No distinction is made between permanent vacancies (resignation/death) and temporary ones (absence/disability).

Illinois

Ill. Const. art. 5, § 6(b): “If the Governor is unable to serve because of death, conviction on impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation or other disability, the office of Governor shall be filled by the officer next in line of succession for the remainder of the term or until the disability is removed.”

If the governor “determines that he may be seriously impeded in the exercise of his powers,” the Constitution provides for an Acting Governor. Id. § 6(c).

Indiana

Lieutenant governor “shall become governor” if governor resigns, but “shall discharge the powers and duties of the office as Acting Governor” if governor is incapacitated. Ind. Const. art. 5, § 10(a).

Kansas

Kan. Const. art. 1, § 11: “When the office of governor is vacant, the lieutenant governor shall become governor. In the event of the disability of the governor, the lieutenant governor shall assume the powers and duties of governor until the disability is removed.”

Kentucky

Ky. Const. § 84: “Should the Governor be impeached and removed from office, die, refuse to qualify, resign, certify by entry on his Journal that he is unable to discharge the duties of his office, or be, from any cause, unable to discharge the duties of his office, the Lieutenant Governor shall exercise all the power and authority appertaining to the office of Governor until another be duly elected and qualified, or the Governor shall be able to discharge the duties of his office.”

No distinction between permanent vacancies and temporary ones.

Louisiana

No provision specifically addressing the label attached to gubernatorial succession. The Louisiana Constitution merely provides “the order of succession” when a vacancy occurs. La. Const. art. 4, § 14. However, “When the governor is temporarily absent from the state, the lieutenant governor shall act as governor.” Id. § 19.

Maine

Me. Const. art. 5, pt. 1, § 14: “Whenever the office of Governor shall become vacant because of the death, resignation or removal of a Governor in office, or any other cause, the President of the Senate shall assume the office of Governor until another Governor shall be duly qualified.”

However, if the governor is mentally or physical disabled, the President of the Senate “shall exercise the powers and duties” of Governor. Id. § 15.

Maryland

Md. Const. art. 2, § 6(d): the lieutenant governor “shall succeed to th[e] office” when there is a gubernatorial vacancy. However, “The Lieutenant Governor shall serve as acting Governor” when the governor is temporarily disabled. Id. § 6(b).

Massachusetts

Mass. Const. pt. 2, ch. II, § II, art. III: “Whenever the chair of the governor shall be vacant, by reason of his death, or absence from the commonwealth, or otherwise, the lieutenant governor, for the time being, shall, during such vacancy, perform all the duties incumbent upon the governor, and shall have and exercise all the powers and authorities, which by this constitution the governor is vested with, when personally present.”

Michigan

Mich. Const. art. 5, § 26: “In case of the conviction of the governor on impeachment, his removal from office, his resignation or his death, the lieutenant governor, the elected secretary of state, the elected attorney general and such other persons designated by law shall in that order be governor for the remainder of the governor’s term.”

However, “If the governor or the person in line of succession to serve as governor is absent from the state, or suffering under an inability, the powers and duties of the office of the governor shall devolve . . . .” Id.

Westlaw lists the following “note of decision” for this provision: “In the event of a vacancy in the office of governor, the functions of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor or the next elected official in succession, but the exercise of the functions of the office of governor by the lieutenant governor does not create a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor which can be filled by appointment.” Op.Atty.Gen.1939-40, p. 69.

Minnesota

Lieutenant governor “shall be governor” if “a vacancy occurs from any cause whatever in the office of governor.” Minn. Const. art. 5, § 5. Powers “devolve” from governor to lieutenant governor if the governor is unable to discharge the duties of the office. Id.

Mississippi

Miss. Const. art. 5, § 131: “When the office of Governor shall become vacant, by death or otherwise, the Lieutenant Governor shall possess the powers and discharge the duties of the office. When the Governor shall be absent from the State, or unable, from protracted illness, to perform the duties of the office, the Lieutenant Governor shall discharge the duties of said office until the Governor be able to resume his duties . . . .”

Missouri

Mo. Const. art. 4, § 11(a): “If the governor-elect dies before taking office, the lieutenant governor-elect shall take the term of the governor-elect. On the death, conviction or impeachment, or resignation of the governor, the lieutenant governor shall become governor for the remainder of the term. If there be no lieutenant governor the president pro tempore of the senate, the speaker of the house, the secretary of state, the state auditor, the state treasurer or the attorney general in succession shall become governor. On the failure to qualify, absence from the state or other disability of the governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the governor shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the remainder of the term or until the disability is removed.”

Montana

“If the office of governor becomes vacant by reason of death, resignation, or disqualification, the lieutenant governor shall become governor for the remainder of the term, except as provided in this constitution.” Mont. Const. art. VI, § 14(6).

“When there is a vacancy in the office of governor, the successor shall be the governor. The acting governor shall have the powers and duties of the office of governor only for the period during which he serves.” Id. § 14(8). An “acting governor” only happens when the governor requests it of the lieutenant governor or when the governor is disabled. See id. § 14(2)–(4).

However, at some point in the past Montana had “devolve” language, and concluded under that language that a governor’s resignation does not create a vacancy in either the office of governor or lieutenant governor. See State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 34 P.2d 369, 370–72 (Mont. 1934).

Nebraska

Impeachment, removal, resignation death: “shall . . . be Governor.” Neb. Const. art. IV, § 16.
Absence/disability: “powers and duties of the office . . . shall devolve.” Id.

Nevada

Nevada uses “devolve.” Nev. Const. art. 5, § 18. In a nineteenth-century case, the Nevada Supreme Court stated: “If a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant governor, but there is no vacancy created thereby in the office of lieutenant governor. The officer remains lieutenant governor, but invested with the powers and duties of governor.” State v. Sadler, 47 P. 450, 450 (Nev. 1897).

New Hampshire

N.H. Const. pt. 2, art. 49 provides the successor shall “act as” governor and also expressly confers the title of “Acting Governor.” New Hampshire also provides for a special election if the vacancy occurs with more than one year before the end of the term.

New Jersey

N.J. Const. art. 5, § 1, ¶ 6: “In the event of a vacancy in the office of Governor resulting from the death, resignation or removal of a Governor in office, or the death of a Governor-elect, or from any other cause, the Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor, until a new Governor is elected and qualifies.”

However, a temporary disability means the powers devolve. See id. ¶ 7.

In a 19th-century case, possibly occurring before New Jersey had provisions establishing the position of lieutenant governor, the New Jersey Supreme Court concluded a gubernatorial vacancy does not bestow the office itself upon the successor:

The provision is that, in case of the resignation of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate, and not that the president of the senate shall thereby become governor, and hold the title and the office until another governor is elected. If the framers of the fundamental law had intended to transfer the president of the senate to the executive chair, and thereby to vacate his office of senator, it is reasonable to believe that they would have said so in no uncertain language. The language used is not ambiguous. It declares that the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve on the president of the senate; it does not confer upon him the title of the office. The president of the senate exercises the powers of the governor; the president of the senate performs the duties of the governor; the president of the senate receives the emoluments of that office. He is still president of the senate, with the added duties required of the chief executive of the state imposed upon him.

New Mexico

Vacancy: “shall succeed to th[e] office.” N.M. Const. art. 5, § 7.

Absence/disability: “shall act as governor.” Id.

New York

N.Y. Const. art. 4, § 5: “In case of the removal of the governor from office or of his or her death or resignation, the lieutenant-governor shall become governor for the remainder of the term.”

However, in the same provision, inability to discharge duties means the lieutenant governor “shall act as governor.”

North Carolina

Lieutenant governor “shall become Governor” upon governor’s resignation. N.C. Const. art. III, § 3(1). However, upon the governor’s disability, lieutenant governor “shall be Acting Governor.” Id. § 3(3).

North Dakota

N.D. Const. art. 5, § 11: “The lieutenant governor shall succeed to the office of governor when a vacancy occurs in the office of governor.”

Ohio

Death, conviction on impeachment, resignation, or removal: “Lieutenant Governor shall succeed to the office of governor.” Ohio Const. art. III, § 15(A).

Disability: “shall serve as governor.” Id. § 15(B).

“Any person servicing as governor for the duration of the Governor’s disability shall have the powers, duties, and compensation of the office of governor. Any person who succeeds to the office of governor shall have the powers, duties, title, and compensation of the office of governor.” Id. § 15(D).

Oklahoma

Okla. Const. art. 6, § 16: “In case of impeachment of the Governor, or of his death, failure to qualify, resignation, removal from the State, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term or until the disability shall be removed.”

In a 1926 case, the Oklahoma Supreme Court concluded that notwithstanding the “devolve” language, the successor becomes governor. Fitzpatrick v. McAlister, 248 P. 569, 572–73 (Okla. 1926). A dissent in the case suggested that if the lieutenant governor becomes governor and appoints a new lieutenant governor, the clear line of succession could be interrupted, preventing the senate president from ever succeeding to the duties of governor. Id. at 581 (Branson, V.C.J., dissenting).

Perhaps an explanation here is that “the office” devolves, not just the powers and duties.

Oregon

Or. Const. art. V, § 8a: “shall become Governor.”

Pennsylvania

Pa. Const. art. 4, § 13: In the case of the death, conviction on impeachment, failure to qualify or resignation of the Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall become Governor for the remainder of the term and in the case of the disability of the Governor, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor until the disability is removed.”

Rhode Island

R.I. Const. art. IX, § 9: “If the office of the governor shall be vacant by reason of death, resignation, impeachment or inability to serve, the lieutenant governor shall fill the office of governor, and exercise the powers and authority appertaining thereto, until a governor is qualified to act, or until the office is filled at the next election.”

South Carolina

S.C. Const. art. IV, § 11: “In the case of the removal of the Governor from office by impeachment, death, resignation, disqualification, disability, or removal from the State, the Lieutenant Governor shall be Governor. In case the Governor be impeached, the Lieutenant Governor shall act in his stead and have his powers until judgment in the case shall have been pronounced. In the case of the temporary disability of the Governor and in the event of the temporary absence of the Governor from the State, the Lieutenant Governor shall have full authority to act in an emergency.”

South Dakota

S.D. Const. art. 4, § 6: “When the office of Governor shall become vacant through death, resignation, failure to qualify, conviction after impeachment or permanent disability of the Governor, the lieutenant governor shall succeed to the office and powers of the Governor. When the Governor is unable to serve by reason of continuous absence from the state, or other temporary disability, the executive power shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term or until the disability is removed.”

Tennessee

Tenn. Const. art. 3, § 12: “In case of the removal of the Governor from office, or of his death, or resignation, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve on the Speaker of the Senate . . . .”

Texas

Temporary inability, disqualification, or absence: “exercise the powers and authority appertaining to the office.” Tex. Const. art. 4, § 16(c).

However, “if the office of Governor becomes vacant, the Lieutenant Governor becomes Governor for the remainder of the term being served by the Governor who refused or became unable to serve or vacated the office. On becoming Governor, the person vacates the office of Lieutenant Governor, and the resulting vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor shall be filled in the manner provided by [the Texas Constitution].” Id. § 16(d).

In a 1951 case, the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals took judicial knowledge of the fact that the governor died in 1949 and the lieutenant governor “succeeded to the office of Governor.” Ex parte Raulie, 237 S.W.2d 998, 999 (Tex. Crim. App. 1951).

Utah

Utah defines vacancy to include resignation and disability that extends for the remainder of the term. Utah Const. art. 7, § 11(1)(a). If a vacancy occurs, the lieutenant governor “shall become governor.” Id. § 11(2). The Utah Constitution also provides that if a disability is only temporary, the lieutenant governor shall discharge the powers and duties. Id. § 11(5)(a).

Before 2008, the Utah Constitution, like Iowa, used only “devolve.” The Utah Attorney General issued an advisory opinion in 2003 on the exact question of succession. Utah A.G. Opinion No. 03-001, 2003 WL 21996258. The opinion concluded “devolve” means that the lieutenant governor becomes governor. Nonetheless, the Utah Constitution was later amended.

Vermont

The Vermont Constitution instructs the legislature to “provide by general law what officer shall act as Governor whenever there shall be a vacancy in” both the offices of governor and lieutenant governor. Vt. Const. ch. II, § 24. The relevant statute is Vt. Stat. tit. 20, § 183, which simply establishes the order.

Additionally, ch. II, § 19 provides that the lieutenant governor “shall be President of the Senate, except when exercising the office of Governor.”

Virginia

Removal from office, disqualification, death, or resignation: “shall become Governor.” Va. Const. art. 5, § 16. Disability: “Acting Governor.” Id.

Washington

Wash. Const. art. 3, § 10: “In case of the removal, resignation, death or disability of the governor, the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor . . . .”

Under the provision, the Washington Supreme Court has concluded:

The constitution having provided that in case of the death of the governor the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of governor. . . . . When the lieutenant governor, by virtue of his office and of the command of the constitution, assumed the duties of governor on the death of Gov. Rogers, the office of lieutenant governor did not thereby become vacant, but the officer remained lieutenant governor, intrusted with the powers and duties of governor.

West Virginia

W. Va. Const. art. 7, § 16: “In case of the death, conviction or impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, or other disability of the governor, the president of the Senate shall act as governor until the vacancy is filled, or the disability removed; and if the president of the Senate, for any of the above named causes, shall become incapable of performing the duties of governor, the same shall devolve upon the speaker of the House of Delegates; and in all other cases where there is no one to act as governor, one shall be chosen by joint vote of the Legislature. Whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of governor before the first three years of the term shall have expired, a new election for governor shall take place to fill the vacancy.”

Interesting provision in the final sentence that provides a special election must take place depending on when in the term the vacancy occurs.

Wisconsin

Lieutenant governor “shall become governor” if the governor dies, resigns, or is removed. Wis. Const. art. 5, § 7(1). Lieutenant governor “shall serve as acting governor” if the governor is absent or disabled. Id. § 7(2).

Wyoming

Wyo. Const. art. 4, § 6: “If the governor be impeached, displaced, resign or die, or from mental or physical disease or otherwise become incapable of performing the duties of his office or be absent from the state, the secretary of state shall act as governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed.”

In a case involving the provision the Wyoming Supreme Court concluded that “in a technical sense the [success]or is not Governor” and that “in a limited sense the office of Governor is vacant.” State v. Grant, 73 P. 470, 475 (Wyo. 1903). The court’s discussion of vacancy is also worthwhile, since the entire question we are confronting is about the technicality and the reason for the provision:

We deem it unnecessary to discuss technically the question of vacancy in the office. In the sense that the law contemplates that there shall be an incumbent of the office regularly chosen to that position, it may be admitted that a vacancy has occurred, and continues to exist, which can be filled only through an election by the people. But the office is now supplied in the manner provided by the Constitution and statutes, with an incumbent who is legally qualified to exercise its powers and perform the duties which pertain to it; and, although such incumbent is merely designated as an Acting Governor, he is for all practical purposes in possession of the office and all of its prerogatives.

Eric and Geoff:

In Massachusetts, when Governor William Weld resigned in 1997, Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci became “Acting Governor” – not “Governor.” When Cellucci resigned to become US Ambassador to Canada during the Bush Administration in 2001, his Lt. Gov. Jane Swift became “Acting Governor.”

Massachusetts Constitution has a similar provision to the Iowa Constitution:

III.--Whenever the chair of the Governor shall be vacant, by reason of his death, or absence from the Commonwealth, or otherwise, the Lieutenant-Governor, for the time being, shall, during such vacancy, perform all the duties incumbent upon the Governor, and shall have and exercise all the powers and authorities, which by this Constitution the Governor is vested with, when personally present.

Hope this is helpful.

Charlie Cole Chaffin, Intervenor.

No. 96-1150.
Oct. 29, 1996.

Following resignation of governor and succession of lieutenant governor to office of governor, plaintiff brought action challenging constitutionality of statute governing special elections to fill vacancy in office of lieutenant governor. Candidate in special election intervened. The Pulaski County Chancery Court, Collins Kilgore, Chancellor, rejected challenge, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, Jesson, C.J., held that: (1) statute did not violate constitutional provisions for filling vacancy in office of governor, and (2) statute did not conflict with constitutional provision requiring that governor and lieutenant governor be elected at same time in same election.

JESSON, Chief Justice.

On July 15, 1996, Jim Guy Tucker resigned as Governor of the State of Arkansas. Lieutenant Governor Mike Huckabee became Governor, pursuant to Ark. Const., amend. 6, § 4. His succession left a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor. On July 30, 1996, pursuant to Ark.Code Ann. § 7-7-105 (Repl.1993), Governor Huckabee issued a proclamation calling for a special election to fill the vacancy. The election was called for November 5, 1996, the date already scheduled for the 1996 general election.

On August 26, 1996, the appellant filed a complaint in Pulaski County Chancery Court challenging the constitutionality of Ark.Code Ann. § 7-7-105. On September 9, 1996, he filed an amended complaint, seeking a declaration **322 that the statute was in conflict with the Arkansas Constitution and maintaining that any funds spent on the special election would constitute an illegal exaction. He further prayed that the Secretary of State be enjoined from certifying any candidate for Lieutenant Governor on the November 5 election ballot. One of those candidates is Charlie Cole Chaffin, the intervenor in this case. The chancellor rejected the appellant's challenge and ruled that § 7-7-105 does not conflict with the Arkansas Constitution. We agree and affirm.<sup>1</sup>

[1] The appellant contends that § 7-7-105 offends the "orderly succession in the executive branch" provided for in Ark. Const., art. 6, § 14, and Ark. Const., amend. 6, § 5. Article 6, § 14, is an original provision of our 1874 constitution. It required a special election to fill a vacancy in the office of Governor when the office was vacated with more than twelve months remaining in the Governor's term. No provision was made in the 1874 constitution for the office of Lieutenant Governor. Conflicting interpretations of *471 Section 14 and other sections of Article 6 resulted in a gubernatorial succession crisis in the early part of this century. As a result, Amendment 6 was adopted by a vote of the people in 1914. Amendment 6 created the office of Lieutenant Governor and took up the matter of gubernatorial succession. See Bryant v. English, 311 Ark. 187, 843 S.W.2d 308 (1992), for a detailed rendition of the history of these constitutional provisions.

Section 5 of Amendment 6 is entitled "Qualifications and Duties of Lieutenant Governor—Succession to the Governorship." It reads as follows:

The Lieutenant Governor shall possess the same qualifications of eligibility for the office as the Governor. He shall be President of the Senate, but shall have only a casting vote therein in case of a tie vote. If during a vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or become incapable of performing the duties of his office or be absent from the State, the President of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease; and if the President of the Senate for any of the above causes shall become incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, the Speaker of the Assembly shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease.

The appellant argues that § 5 requires any vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor to be filled by succession, not by election. The appellant misunderstands the purpose and spirit of § 5. It addresses the subject of gubernatorial succession. It answers the question, "In case of a vacancy in the office of Governor, who shall be Governor?" The subject of succession to the office of Lieutenant Governor is not addressed.

[2] Acts of the General Assembly are presumed to be constitutional and will only be struck down where there is a clear incompatibility between the act and the state constitution. Clinton v. Clinton, 305 Ark. 585, 810 S.W.2d 923 (1991). Neither art. 6, § 14, nor amend. 6, § 5, is concerned with filling vacancies in the office of Lieutenant Governor. Therefore, § 7-7-105 does not conflict with those provisions.

The only reference in the Arkansas Constitution to vacancies in the office of Lieutenant Governor is contained in Amendment *472 29. That amendment provides for gubernatorial appointment to fill vacancies in most elected offices. However, it excepts from the Governor's appointment power vacancies in the offices of Lieutenant Governor, member of the General Assembly, and United States Congressional Representative. These are the very offices that are to be filled by special election under § 7-7-105. Thus, the Arkansas Constitution and § 7-7-105 exist in harmony.

[3] The appellant also makes a rather offhand argument that § 7-7-105 is incompatible with § 3 of Amendment 6. He claims that the statute "attempts to nullify the provisions of Amendment 6, § 3, that require **323 the Governor and Lieutenant Governor be elected at the same time in the same election." The appellant probably means to refer to § 2 of Amendment 6, which provides that the Lieutenant Governor "shall be chosen at the same time and for the same term" as the Governor. Section 2 addresses the ordinary situation in which an election is held at the end of the current office-holder's term. It does not contemplate the situation in which a vacancy in office must be filled. Thus, § 7-7-105 and § 2 do not conflict.

In light of our holding, the appellant's request for attorney fees pursuant to Ark.Code Ann. § 26-35-902 (Supp.1995) need not be addressed.

Affirmed.

DUDLEY and GLAZE, JJ., dissent.

GLAZE, Justice, dissents.

The simple answer to this election case is that the chancery court, deciding it below, did not have subject-matter jurisdiction. Therefore, this appeal should be dismissed. Someday in the not-too-distant future, this court will be forced to resolve the subject-matter-jurisdiction issues its more recent cases (including this case) have caused the bench and bar, when determining where to file election actions—in equity or at law.

First, I emphasize that this is an election case, not an illegal exaction one, and that this court has clearly held that the chancery court has no jurisdiction in matters pertaining to elections. State v. Craighead County Bd. of Election

Comm'rs, 300 Ark. 405, 779 S.W.2d 169 (1989); see also Curry v. Dawson, 238 Ark. 310, 379 S.W.2d 287 (1964). Moreover, in Foster v. Jefferson County Quorum Ct., 321 Ark. 105, 901 S.W.2d 809 (1995), this court, quoting from *Jackson v. *473 Munson*, 288 Ark. 57, 701 S.W.2d 378 (1986), stated the following:

While it is true we have been liberal in permitting illegal exaction suits, we have held that an illegal exaction complaint was not proper where exclusive jurisdiction of the underlying matter was conferred on the circuit rather than the chancery court. (Emphasis added.)

In the present case, the appellant's underlying action seeks declaratory relief holding the Governor's proclamation, calling a special election to fill the existing vacancy in the Office of Lieutenant Governor, to be unconstitutional. Assuming entitlement to such relief, his complaint requests that the Secretary of State be enjoined from certifying the votes cast in the candidates' race for that office.

In Catlett v. Republican Party of Ark., 242 Ark. 283, 413 S.W.2d 651 (1967), this court clearly held that cases like the one before us must be filed in and decided by a court of law. Catlett has never been overruled. The Catlett court clearly enunciated the rule as follows:

[C]ourts of equity have no authority or jurisdiction to interpose for the protection of rights which are merely political, and where no civil or property right is involved. In all such cases, the remedy, if any, must be sought in a court of law. The extraordinary jurisdiction of courts of chancery can not, therefore, be invoked to protect the right of a citizen to vote or to be voted for at an election, or his right to be a candidate for or to be elected to any office. Nor can it be invoked for the purpose of restraining the holding of an election, or of directing or controlling the mode in which, or of determining the rules of law in pursuance of which, an election shall be held. (Emphasis added.)

Here, appellant's suit is an attempt to restrain the holding and certifying of the election results in the Lieutenant Governor's race. As is clearly explained in Catlett, chancery court has no authority to restrain the holding of an election or control the conduct of an election. Consequently, the chancellor should have dismissed the appellant's complaint.

The appellant was well aware of his jurisdiction problem below after appellees filed a motion to dismiss appellant's complaint for want of equity jurisdiction. Consequently, he added language to his complaint, alleging the Secretary of State's certification of election *474 results would be an ultra vires act and **324 therefore result in an illegal exaction of state funds. In adding this language, appellant seems to rely on our recent case of Priest v. Polk, 322 Ark. 673, 912 S.W.2d 902 (1995), a plurality decision, where the court said that the question of subject-matter jurisdiction is determined by the "characterization" of the case.

Appellant's argument simply ignores our Foster decision, which holds that an illegal exaction complaint is not proper where exclusive jurisdiction of the underlying matter is conferred in circuit court. It is important to note that, in State v. Craighead County Bd. of Election Comm'rs, 300 Ark. 405, 779 S.W.2d 169, this court not only emphasized Arkansas's case law establishing chancery court has no jurisdiction in election matters, but also this court sanctioned mandamus and declaratory relief as the proper methods of enforcing our state's election laws. Mandamus, of course, lies only in circuit court. Accordingly, appellant here should have filed his action in circuit court, asked that court to declare Arkansas's election law, Ark.Code Ann. § 7-7-105 (Repl.1995), unconstitutional, and requested the Secretary of State be mandated to remove the Lieutenant Governor's race from the ballot or not certify the votes cast in that race.

In sum, our case law simply does not permit a plaintiff (appellant here) to "characterize" (or re-characterize, if you will) his underlying action to be an illegal exaction action when the core issue is enforcement of Arkansas's election laws, namely, whether § 7-7-105 is constitutional and, therefore, provides the people with the political right to vote for a Lieutenant Governor at a special election.

In a concurring opinion in Polk, I voiced my concern that subject-matter jurisdiction questions would continue to arise in the filing of these election statutory and constitutional matters unless this court clarifies for the bench and bar what is expected of them. In this regard, the court in my view should follow the clear dictates and principles set out in the Curry, Foster, Craighead County, and Catlett cases. The majority decision today simply ignores these cases.

I would dismiss this case for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction.

STATE (CLIFFORD, Prosecutor)

v.

HELLER, Sheriff.

Jan. 4, 1899.

*105 1. The legality of the proceedings at the trial of a prisoner convicted of a crime by a court of competent jurisdiction cannot be challenged or reviewed by habeas corpus.

2. On a writ of certiorari allowed with the writ of habeas corpus to bring up a warrant for the execution of the prisoner, purporting to be issued by the executive department of the state government under authority of the act of April 16, 1846, the court will adjudge whether such warrant is valid.

3. When the governor of the state resigns, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office devolve, under the constitution, upon the president of the senate, but he does not thereby become the governor of the state in the constitutional sense. The president of the senate retains his office of senator, and as president of the senate he exercises the powers and performs the duties of the executive department.

4. When he resigns his office as senator, he ceases to be president of the senate, and thereupon the powers, duties, and emoluments of the executive office devolve in like manner upon the speaker of the house of assembly.

5. The granting of a reprieve and the fixing of a day for the execution of a convicted criminal is by the common law a judicial power, and cannot be exercised by the governor, or person administering the government, except in so far as it is expressly permitted by the constitution.

6. The constitution bestows upon the executive department the power to reprieve, but limits the exercise of that power to a period of 90 days after conviction, which means 90 days after sentence in the court below. As an incident to this granted power, the executive department may direct the execution to be proceeded with within the 90 days, and in that event the execution takes place not by force of the executive warrant, but in virtue of the judgment of the court.

7. After the lapse of the 90 days, the power of the executive department in this respect ceases.

*106 VAN SYCKEL, J.

Edward Clifford was convicted of murder in the first degree in the court of oyer and terminer of the county of Hudson, and sentenced by the said court on the 15th day of September, 1896. The proceedings at the trial were subsequently taken to the court of errors and appeals for review, and by the judgment of that court the judgment of the oyer and terminer was in all respects affirmed. Thereupon the court of oyer and terminer ordered the said Clifford to be executed on the 16th day of February, 1898. On the 14th day of February, 1898, Foster M. Voorhees, president of the senate of New Jersey, under his hand and the great seal of the state of New Jersey, directed the sheriff of the county of Hudson to suspend the execution of said death sentence until the 16th day of March, 1898. Further proceedings were taken on behalf of Clifford in the federal courts, by which the execution of sentence was stayed until November 25, 1898, when David O. Watkins, speaker of the house of assembly of New Jersey, under his hand and the great seal of the state, suspended the execution of said sentence until the 6th day of January, 1899, and ordered the said Clifford to be executed on that day. Clifford is now before this court on habeas corpus, and at his instance a writ of certiorari was allowed to bring before the court the proceedings upon which the state claims to rest the order of David O. Watkins, the validity of which is controverted in this case.

Our habeas corpus act provides that the following, among other, persons mentioned shall not be entitled to prosecute such writ: "Persons committed or detained by virtue of the final judgment or decree of any competent tribunal of civil or criminal jurisdiction or by virtue of any execution issued upon such judgment or decree, unless such judgment or decree be founded upon contract." It is clear, therefore, that the legality of the proceedings at the trial of Clifford cannot be challenged or reviewed by writ *107 of habeas corpus; and, if the case before us presented no other question, it would be the duty of the court to dismiss the writ as improvidently granted. But the return to the certiorari, and the facts agreed upon, present a question of great importance, in which the validity of the judgment of our courts is in no wise involved. That question is whether David O. Watkins had the power to order the execution of Clifford. If the warrant issued by him was unauthorized, **156 it is the province and the duty of this court to intervene for the purpose of preventing an unlawful execution of the person condemned.

The admitted facts controlling this controversy are as follows: On the 31st day of January, 1898, John W. Griggs, then governor of New Jersey, filed in the office of the secretary of state his resignation as governor, to take effect at the termination of that day. Foster M. Voorhees was then president of the senate of New Jersey, being a senator from the county of Union. He thereupon took the oath, diligently, faithfully, and to the best of his knowledge to administer the government of the state in conformity with the powers delegated to him; which oath was filed in the office of the secretary of state on the 1st of February, 1898. On the 18th of October, 1898, Foster M. Voorhees filed in the office of the secretary of state a paper writing, of which the following is a copy: "State of New Jersey, Executive Department. To the Secretary of State, and to the Governor or Person Administering the Government: I hereby resign my commission as a member of the senate from the county of Union. Foster M. Voorhees." David O. Watkins was then a member of the general assembly of the state of New Jersey from Gloucester county, and speaker of the house of assembly. *108 On the 18th day of October, 1898, he filed in the office of the secretary of state an oath that he would diligently, faithfully, and to the best of his knowledge, administer the government of the state in conformity with the powers delegated to him. It is insisted on behalf of the prosecutor that when Foster M. Voorhees filed in the office of the secretary of state the oath before mentioned, he ceased to be a member of the senate, and became governor of the state for the term fixed by the constitution until another governor should be elected; that his resignation of his seat in the senate was unnecessary, and could not in any wise affect the tenure of his office as governor. To support this contention the well-settled rule laid down by Chief Justice Kirkpatrick in State v. Parkhurst, 9 N. J. Law, 446, is relied upon: "That, if a person holding an office be appointed to and accept another office incompatible therewith, such acceptance of the second is a virtual surrender of and vacates the first." The argument is that Foster M. Voorhees became governor of New Jersey, and ceased thereby to be senator without resigning the latter office; that his subsequent resignation of the senatorship did not operate as a resignation of his office as governor, or in any wise affect his right to hold said office, or his duty to execute its prescribed functions; that under the constitution the office of governor could become again vacant only by the death, resignation, or removal of Foster M. Voorhees, and, as neither of those contingencies has occurred, there was no vacancy in the office of governor by which David O. Watkins could succeed to that office.

Assuming the premises of the prosecutor to be entirely sound, it seems to result, not only that the resignation of the senatorship by Foster M. Voorhees did not vacate the office of governor, but that the resignation of the senatorship was equivalent to a declaration that he resigned that office, and elected to retain the office of governor, which he did not resign. It is well settled, both in England and in this country, that title to an office cannot be challenged on habeas corpus, or in *109 any other collateral proceeding. Where the official is in possession of the office, and is executing its powers under color of title, he will be regarded at least as a de facto officer, and as to the public his official acts will be efficacious. That rule, so absolutely essential to the stability of government and the protection of the governed, should be recognized in its full force. The case sub judice is peculiar and novel. The situation is this: If Foster M. Voorhees, as president of the senate, was transferred by force of the constitutional provision to the office of governor, thereby vacating his office of senator, he is still governor of New Jersey, in full possession of the powers of the office, and under obligation to perform its duties; and if he is governor de jure, in possession of the office, David O. Watkins cannot at the same time be governor de facto, and the warrant signed by him is without the slightest legal value. All that appears in the case before us is that Gov. Griggs resigned; that Foster M. Voorhees, president of the senate, took the oath before stated; that he subsequently resigned his office of senator; that David O. Watkins is speaker of the assembly, and that he took the oath set forth. No act appears on his part to show that he is governor de facto except the oath and the signing of the death warrant. If Foster M. Voorhees was governor, and his resignation of the senatorship was not a vacation of his office as governor, he must still be governor, nothing appearing before us except his resignation as senator to show that he is not still acting and claiming to act as governor. We are constrained, therefore, to resort to an interpretation of the provisions of our state constitution touching this subject, to determine whether David O. Watkins had the right, either de jure or de facto, to do the act which has given rise to this litigation.

The clause of the constitution which provides for the vacancy in the office of governor is as follows: "In case of the death, resignation or removal from office of the governor, *110 the powers, duties and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate, and in case of his death, resignation or removal, then upon the speaker of the house of assembly, for the time being, until another governor shall be elected, and qualified; but in such case another governor shall be chosen at the next election for members of the legislature, unless such death, resignation or removal shall occur within thirty days immediately preceding such next election, in **157 which case a governor shall be chosen at the second succeeding election for members of the legislature. When a vacancy happens, during the recess of the legislature, in any office which is to be filled by the governor and senate or by the legislature in joint meeting, the governor shall fill such vacancy and the commission shall expire at the end of the next session of the legislature unless a successor shall be sooner appointed; when a vacancy happens in the office of clerk or surrogate of any county, the governor shall fill such vacancy, and the commission shall expire when a successor is elected and qualified." Article 5, cl. 12. In construing this clause of the constitution it must be borne in mind that it was carefully drawn by learned jurists, who knew how to express with exactness and precision the purpose they had in view. The provision is that, in case of the resignation of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate, and not that the president of the senate shall thereby become governor, and hold the title and the office until another governor is elected. If the framers of the fundamental law had intended to transfer the president of the senate to the executive chair, and thereby to vacate his office of senator, it is reasonable to believe that they would have said so in no uncertain language. The language used is not ambiguous. It declares that the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve on the president of the senate; it does not confer upon him the title of the office. The president of the senate exercises the powers of the *111 governor; the president of the senate performs the duties of the governor; the president of the senate receives the emoluments of that office. He is still president of the senate, with the added duties required of the chief executive of the state imposed upon him. There is no language in the constitution from which it can reasonably be inferred that his office of president of the senate was to be vacated. He retains his office of senator; and as president of the senate, and not as governor, he exercises the added powers and performs the superimposed duties. That such is not only the ordinary acceptation and the reasonable interpretation of the language employed, but also the intention of those who framed this clause, is evinced in other parts of the organic law. In clauses 9 and 10 of article 5 and clauses 2 and 3 of article 8 this language appears: "The governor or person administering the government." Why is this language so sedulously used throughout the constitution? If the president of the senate becomes governor, and ceases to be senator, he is fitly and accurately described in all those clauses by the word "governor," and therefore the words "person administering the government" are not only unnecessary and superfluous, but misdescriptive. The words "person administering the government" were inserted advisedly to describe the president of the senate who might be called upon to administer the government, but who would not thereby become or be governor; and, in the absence of that language, would not be subject to the clauses referred to. Again, article 3 of the constitution provides as follows: "The powers of the government shall be divided into three distinct departments, the legislative, executive and judicial; and no person or persons belonging to or constituting one of these departments, shall exercise any of the powers properly belonging to either of the others, except as herein expressly provided." *112 What is the significance of the words in this clause, "except as herein expressly provided"? What powers belonging to one department of government were there which it was expressly provided in the constitution might be exercised by one of the other departments? The framers of this article said by this exception, in unmistakable language, there are some powers belonging to one department of the government which it is expressly provided in this constitution shall be exercised by a person or persons belonging to one of the other departments. In the constitution we find such a provision, and it is the only one in the constitution except the power to reprieve. That provision is the one before referred to in clause 12 of article 5, which provides that the president of the senate, or, in case of his death, resignation, or removal, the speaker of the house, shall exercise the powers of the executive department of the government in the contingency therein specified. It must, therefore, have been the understanding and intention of the constitution makers that the executive powers to be exercised by a member of the legislative department were to be exercised in the capacity of a legislator, and that made the exception in article 3 a necessary provision.

But it is argued that the president of the senate is a judge of the court of impeachment, and may try himself if he is impeached, and pardon himself if convicted. This is clearly a misconception of the situation. As president of the senate he performs the duties of the chief executive, and any malfeasance in that respect is as much a violation of his duty as a senator and as president of the senate as malfeasance in his purely legislative action would be. If impeached, it would be as a senator, and not as governor. He would be tried by the senate, which is the trial court in all cases of impeachment. While there is no express provision in the constitution that a member of the senate shall not sit as a judge on his own trial if impeached, he is nevertheless incompetent, and would be excluded. The principle *113 that a man shall not be a judge in his own case is accepted universally by judicial tribunals. It is a rule of such fundamental character that it is deemed essential to the well-being of society, and underlies the organic law itself. If any doubt could arise upon this point, a reference to **158 section 3 of article 6 of the constitution should set it at rest. That section provides that all impeachments shall be tried by the senate, and that the members of the senate, when sitting for that purpose, shall each take an oath "truly and impartially to try and determine the charge in question according to evidence." It would be the sublimity of folly to attempt to bind a senator by such an oath when he was sitting in his own case. If the president of the senate was impeached and convicted, he would cease to be senator, and thereupon the powers of the executive would devolve upon the speaker of the house. The fact that the president of the senate exercises both legislative and executive functions in the view herein taken can have no significance in this discussion, when we advert to the fact that under the first state constitution the governor was not only the chief executive, but he was also president of the legislative council, with a casting vote, and presiding judge of the highest court in the state. The powers of government were more wisely distributed by the constitution of 1844, in which, by article 3, a member of one department could not exercise a power belonging to either of the others, except in the instances where the office of governor became vacant, and the power to reprieve was granted. If anything is needed to establish the correctness of this view, it is found in clause 13 of article 5, which reads as follows: "In case of the impeachment of the governor, his absence from the state or inability to discharge the duties of his office, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate; and in case of his death, resignation or removal, then upon the speaker *114 of the house of assembly for the time being, until the governor absent, or impeached, shall return or be acquitted, or until the disqualification or inability shall cease, or until a new governor be elected and qualified." In case of the absence of the governor from the state, precisely the same language is used as in clause 12 in relation to his resignation of the office, and it must necessarily receive the same interpretation. In case of his absence from the state, "the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office shall devolve upon the president of the senate until the governor returns." Will it be seriously contended that, when the governor goes out of the state, the president of the senate becomes governor until the duly-elected governor returns, and thereby vacates and loses his office as senator? That such an interpretation of this language would be adopted could not have been within the contemplation of the able men who incorporated it in this clause relating to a matter of supreme importance. It is true construction, then, when the senate was composed of 10 members of one party and 11 of the other, the governor of the state, by the simple device of passing into an adjoining state, could have vacated the seat of one senator, and thus have deprived the opposing party of a majority in that branch of the legislature. In my judgment, the framers of the constitution meant simply what they said,—that, in case the governor resigned, the president of the senate, as such, should have the powers and perform the duties of the office. Foster M. Voorhees did not become governor upon the resignation of Gov. Griggs. He still continued to be a senator, and president of the senate. He could not resign the office of governor, which he never held. When he resigned and vacated the office of senator, he ceased to be president of the senate, and could no longer exercise the functions pertaining to the executive department. Therefore, upon his resignation as senator, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office devolved upon David O. Watkins, the speaker of the house of assembly. *115 He is de jure the speaker of the house, and of right, as such speaker, exercises the executive powers. He is not governor, either de jure or de facto, in the constitutional sense of that term. The act of 1898 cannot, in any respect, affect this controversy.

The question, therefore, remains to be considered whether the issuing of the warrant for the execution of Clifford was a valid exercise by David O. Watkins of the powers committed to him as speaker of the house of assembly? By the common law, where the judgment was pronounced in the oyer and terminer, a precept for execution was issued to the sheriff in the name and under the hands and seals of the three commissioners before whom judgment was given; but the precepts by justices of the jail delivery need not have been otherwise than by a simple award upon the roll. In later times there was no more done, but, after judgment was entered, the judges subscribed a calendar in paper directing the several judgments of deliverance to the parties acquitted, or the execution of the parties condemned, of which the sheriff was required to take notice openly in court. 2 Hale, P. C. p. 409. It is also quite clear that by the common law the time and place of execution were not named in the sentence; it was left to the judgment and discretion of the sheriff. The execution of the prisoner was directed by the words "sus. per coll." written against his name in a calendar prepared for the purpose. Mr. Chitty says: "The practice of the present day at the assizes is that, when all the other public business of the court is terminated, the clerk makes out in writing four lists of prisoners in the separate columns containing their crimes, verdicts, and sentences, and a blank column, in which the judge writes his pleasure respecting those capitally convicted as to be executed, respited, or transported. If the sheriff receives no special order from the judge, he executes the judgment of the law in the usual manner, according to the directions of the calendar." 1 Chit. Cr. Law, 781. **159 *116 The only instance of a warrant from the crown was in the case of high treason, where a peer of the realm was tried before parliament. Where all the rest of the judgment save the beheading was pardoned, the execution was to be under the great seal. 3 Co. Just. p. 31; 2 Hale, P. C. pp. 409-412. In felonies we think it clear that the direction for the execution of the sentence was a judicial act, for these reasons: First, that the judgment of the court was a sufficient warrant; and, secondly, issues extraneous of those raised at the trial might be raised in suspension of the sentence, which required a judicial determination,—as, for instance, where the convict is a female, she may plead that she is quick with child; and, second, if an allegation be made that since the conviction the accused has become insane. In both of these cases, as well as others, there is to be a judicial investigation. 4 Bl. Comm. 395. At common law, reprieve might be granted either by the king, under his power to pardon, or by the court; and every court which had power to award execution had power to grant a reprieve. This reprieve was simply a suspension of the sentence. In Rex v. Harris, 1 Ld. Raym. 482, "counsel urged that in criminal causes, where execution is deferred, it cannot be awarded without bringing the prisoner to the bar, to which Holt, C. J., agreed, and he cited Knightly's Case, who was indicted for high treason, and, being arraigned at bar in the king's bench, confessed the indictment, and judgment of death was pronounced against him in Easter term, and execution was countermanded, so that Trinity term passed, and then in the long vacation they had designed to execute it, and upon that all the judges of England met to consider what could be done, and it was resolved by all that in regard a term had intervened without execution done it could not be awarded without bringing Knightly to the bar; and, per Holt, C. J., it would be the same thing if Trinity term had not passed, but only begun, so that Knightly was imprisoned *117 until Michaelmas term, and in the meantime he obtained a pardon." In Sir Walter Rawley's Case the question was whether a privy seal was sufficient for execution. It was resolved on a conference between all the judges that the prisoner ought to be brought to the court, and then demanded if he could say anything, etc., and that it was not a legal course that he should be commanded by a privy seal or great seal to be executed without being demanded what he hath to say, etc. Hut. 21. If the governor can intervene and have execution by virtue of his warrant, the prisoner will be deprived of the right of a judicial determination of matters which in law are subjects of judicial cognizance. If the order which shall carry the judgment of the court into effect is one within judicial control,—as we deem it to be,—then the several constitutional provisions are to be considered. By the constitution of 1776 the governor had no power to pardon or to grant reprieve. Whatever power there was in that respect was vested in the governor and council; that is the court of appeals.

Under the power to pardon at common law the power of the king to reprieve was included, and the power of reprieve was not vested in the governor, but in the governor and council. By the act of November 16, 1820, the governor, with the advice of his privy council, had power to suspend execution of the sentence of death until the rising of the next meeting of the governor and council. By the act of 1821, where such a reprieve was granted, and a pardon was not granted at the next meeting, it was made the duty of the governor and council to appoint a time for the execution of the criminal. Elmer's Dig. p. 118. By the constitution of 1844 the executive, with the concurrence of the chancellor and of the six judges of the court of appeals, or a major part of them, may grant pardons after conviction (article 5, cl. 10); and by article 5, cl. 9, the executive was *118 given power to grant reprieve to extend until the expiration of a time not exceeding 90 days after conviction. By the act of April 16, 1846, it is provided that, where a reprieve is granted by the governor, the governor shall issue his warrant to the sheriff of the proper county, commanding him to execute the sentence at such time as shall therein be appointed and expressed. Revision, p. 290, § 123. Power to reprieve is limited to a postponement of the execution for 90 days after the conviction; that is, after the sentence in the court below. By article 3 of the constitution of 1844, before set forth, the governor is prohibited from exercising any legislative or judicial power except as in said constitution is expressly provided. The express provision of the constitution on this subject, so far as concerns the executive, is that he shall have power to suspend the sentence of the court for a period not exceeding 90 days. The term "reprieve," as used both in the constitution and in the statute, is merely the postponement of the sentence for a time. It does not and cannot defeat the ultimate execution of the judgment of the court; it merely delays it. In the exercise of the power to reprieve for 90 days, which is the constitutional limit of that power, the governor has, as an incident to that power, the right to say that at the expiration of that time the sheriff shall no longer be stayed, but shall proceed to execute the judgment of the court. The reprieve, to be in proper form, should fix a day not exceeding 90 days from the sentence, when it shall expire, and direct the execution to be proceeded with at the expiration of that time. The execution takes place then, not by order of the governor, but in virtue of the judgment of the court. The governor simply says: "The prisoner is adjudged to be executed on a certain day. I direct the execution to be postponed until a future day specified, and then the execution is to be proceeded with."

*119 In Ex parte Flemming, 60 Miss. 910, **160 the court said: "The power to respite necessarily carries with it the power to fix another and later day for the execution of the death sentence, since the respite is nothing more than a suspension of the sentence until its own expiration. The subsequent execution takes place, not by virtue of a new sentence, but by reason of the expiration of the temporary suspension of the original sentence which was caused by the respite." Sterling v. Drake, 29 Ohio St. 457, is to the like effect. If there was a doubt in respect to the proper procedure in this respect, the long-continued practice of the executive department to make orders for the execution of sentences where there has been a reprieve will justify the construction that such orders may be issued, provided that the time for execution is not extended beyond the 90 days. That practice, commencing in 1853, has been pursued until the present time. The order certified into this court was made after the expiration of the 90 days, and is without any legal or constitutional warrant, and must be set aside. The order made in the case of Martin by Gov. Ludlow does not conflict with the views herein expressed. The reprieve and order were both within 90 days from the time of conviction, and, that time having elapsed, Martin was executed, not under the governor's warrant, but under an order made by the court of oyer and terminer. The traverse of the sheriff's return to the writ of habeas corpus must be stricken out, and the prisoner remanded. Let rules be entered accordingly.

No. 17513.

Syllabus by the Court.

Article 6 of the Constitution defines the executive department of the state, and names certain officers who shall be vested with executive powers.

Section 2 of said article is as follows: "The supreme executive power" of the estate "shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled 'the Governor * * * of Oklahoma.'"

Section 4 of said article contains the following provision, to wit: "The Governor, secretary of state, state auditor, and state treasurer shall not be eligible immediately to succeed themselves."

Sections 15 and 16 are in pari materia to the extent that they relate to and form part of, the entire purpose and scheme provided for in article 6, and to such extent only. They are independent of each other to the extent that they deal with, and provide for, the distinctly different conditions which each does provide for.

Said section 15 provides for such vacancies only as may be caused by the elected Governor's temporary absence from his office, and where, though absent from his office, he still retains his right to the office, still possesses his right, upon his return to assume the duties and exercise the powers of his office, and further provides that, during such vacancy, if the Lieutenant Governor becomes incapable of performing the duties of the office, then the President of the Senate may act as Governor, and, in case of his disability, the Speaker of the House may act as Governor during such vacancy, thus making complete and adequate provisions for taking care of the peculiar contingency and condition which it seeks to provide for, viz. vacancies occasioned by a temporary absence or inability of the Governor, where the Governor still has the right to return to his office and assume its duties, and to this extent section 15 is independent of section 16.

Const. art. 6, § 16, is as follows: "In case of impeachment of the Governor, or of his death, failure to qualify, resignation, removal from the state, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term or until the disability shall be removed."

Thus section 16 makes provision for a wholly different contingency and condition to that provided for in section 15. Section 16 provides for occasions where the individual rights of the elected Governor, as distinguished from the public rights, have been terminated, where his rights to return to the office and assume its powers have been foreclosed, and, in order to protect the right of the public to a continuation of the functions of government, in such case, section 16 provides that the office of Governor, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term, thus making complete and adequate provision for the particular contingency and condition *570 which it seeks to provide for, and to this extent section 16 is independent of section 15.

Const. art. 6, § 16, creates no vacancy, contemplates no vacancy, mentions no vacancy. It simply makes provision for an uninterrupted functioning of the office of chief executive with a duly commissioned officer at the head of such department thereby avoiding a vacancy.

When the elected Governor becomes impeached, as is the condition presented here, the office of Governor automatically devolves upon another. The person on whom such office devolves necessarily fills such office, exercising all the powers, discharging all the duties, and enjoying all the emoluments, compensation, honor and prestige which pertain to such office. The person who thus fills the office of chief magistrate is styled "the Governor of Oklahoma." He is the Governor for the simple reason that he governs. He governs officially for the reason that section 16 expressly vests him with authority to do so. Therefore he is the official Governor, and, being the official Governor, he is rendered ineligible to succeed himself by the inhibition contained in section 4, art. 6, of the Constitution.

Opinion

HARRISON, J.

This proceeding was begun in the district court to test the eligibility of Mr. M. E. Trapp to succeed himself in the office of Governor.

Mr. Trapp had theretofore filed his application with the state election board as a candidate for nomination for Governor, and plaintiff sought to enjoin said board from certifying Mr. Trapp's name to the state board of affairs, and to enjoin the state board of affairs from having Mr. Trapp's name printed as a candidate for Governor on the official ballots to be voted at the forthcoming primary election to be held in August of this year.

The trial court denied the injunction, and plaintiff appealed. Plaintiff contends that, under the provisions of article 6 of the Constitution, Mr. Trapp is not eligible to the office of Governor. Defendants contend that he is eligible. The controversy arose out of the following facts, viz.:

At the November election, 1922, J. C. Walton was elected Governor, and defendant M. E. Trapp was elected Lieutenant Governor, and both went into office in January, 1923. In November, 1923, Mr. Walton was impeached and removed from office by the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment, and thereupon, by virtue of section 16, art. 6, of the Constitution, the office of Governor devolved upon the Lieutenant Governor, who was defendant Mr. M. E. Trapp, who has occupied the office of Governor, and exercised the powers of Governor, from the date of said impeachment until the present date, and is now occupying such office with the powers thus conferred by said section 16, and is seeking the nomination for Governor, and to ultimately succeed himself to the office of Governor at the general election in November of this year.

Plaintiff in error contends that under section 16, art. 6, of the Constitution, the office of Governor devolved upon the Lieutenant Governor immediately upon the impeachment of Governor Walton, and that thereupon Lieutenant Governor Trapp became the Governor in fact and in law, and that, having held and filled the office of Governor, and exercised the powers of Governor, and enjoyed the emoluments of the office of Governor from the time said office devolved upon him until the present time, he is not now eligible to succeed himself to the office of Governor at the ensuing term because of the inhibition contained in section 4, art. 6, of the Constitution, which is as follows:

“The Governor, secretary of state, state auditor, and state treasurer shall not be eligible immediately to succeed themselves.”

*571 On the other hand, it is contended by defendants in error that, upon the impeachment of Mr. Walton, there became a vacancy in the office of Governor, which has never been filled, but which has existed to the present time, and now exists, and that, though the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office of Governor devolved upon Lieutenant Governor Trapp upon the impeachment of Governor Walton, yet Mr. Trapp did not thereby become Governor in every sense of the word, but became merely Acting Governor during a vacancy, and that, not being Governor, but being merely “Acting Governor,” he is therefore not rendered ineligible by the inhibition contained in said section 4, art. 6.

Defendants in error further contend that, by harmonizing the provisions of sections 15 and 16 of said article 6, and construing the two sections together, it will be seen that no vacancy was caused in the office of Lieutenant Governor by the devolution of the office of Governor upon the Lieutenant Governor, and no vacancy now exists in the office of Lieutenant Governor, and that therefore Mr. Trapp is still Lieutenant Governor, but that a vacancy does exist in the office of Governor by reason of Governor Walton's impeachment and removal from office, and that Mr. Trapp's being merely "Acting Governor" during such vacancy does not fill such vacancy, and therefore the inhibition in said section 4, art. 6, does not apply to him; that said inhibition applies only to an "elected Governor," and does not apply to one upon whom the "office of Governor" has devolved by virtue of said section 16.

From the foregoing may be seen the respective positions of the parties to this controversy, and that the main question to be determined is whether, under the existing conditions, the inhibitive provision in said section 4 applies to Mr. Trapp.

The questions involved have all been briefed and orally argued by the parties hereto, and, in addition to the briefs and oral arguments of parties in the instant case (case No. 17520, J. B. A. Robertson v. State Election Board and M. E. Trapp, 248 P. 583), which involves the identical questions herein presented, and seeks the very same relief herein sought, have also been briefed, and were orally argued and submitted with this case, the briefs in both cases to be used in each.

It is notable that, while numerous authorities have been cited in support of the contentions of the parties, yet no case has been cited where the identical conditions here presented, and the identical questions of law here involved, have ever been passed upon and decided by any court of last resort. We have been unable to find any case ourselves that is at all similar in all of its phases.

Though plaintiff in error is represented by able and diligent counsel, and defendant in error represented by a remarkable array of powerful lawyers, yet no case directly in point has been cited; that is, no case where any candidate has ever aspired to any office in the face of a similar constitutional inhibition against his immediately succeeding himself in office. Hence, in the absence of a controlling decision, it becomes necessary to search the provisions of our Constitution for a solution of the problem presented, guided in so doing by such light as the partially analogous cases cited may afford us. Article 4 of our Constitution distributes the powers of state government into three separate departments, viz. legislative, executive, and judicial.

[1] Article 6 defines the executive department, and names certain state officers who shall be vested with executive power. The provisions of said article 6 pertinent to the questions under consideration are:

Section 1, which says:

"The executive authority of the state shall be vested in a Governor, Lieutenant Governor, secretary of state, state auditor, Attorney General, state treasurer, superintendent of public instruction, state examiner and inspector, chief mine inspector, commissioner of labor, commissioner of charities and corrections, commissioner of insurance, and other officers provided by law and this Constitution, each of whom shall keep his office and public records, books, and papers at the seat of government, and shall perform such duties as may be designated in this Constitution or prescribed by law."

Section 2, which says:

"The supreme executive power shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled 'The Governor of the state of Oklahoma.'"

Section 4, which, after prescribing the length of term of office of certain state officers, including the Governor, says:

"The Governor, secretary of state, state auditor, and state treasurer shall not be eligible immediately to succeed themselves."

Section 15, which says:

"The Lieutenant Governor shall possess the same qualifications of eligibility for office as the Governor. He shall be President of the Senate. but shall have only a casting vote therein, and also in joint vote of both houses. If, during a vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die or be absent from the state, or become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the President, pro tempore, of the Senate, shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease; and if the President, pro tempore, of the Senate, for any of the above enumerated causes, shall become incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease. Further provisions for succession to the office of Governor shall be prescribed by law."

*572 Section 16, which says:

"In case of impeachment of the Governor, or of his death, failure to qualify, resignation, removal from the state, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term or until the disability shall be removed."

These are the sections of said article 6 which bear directly upon the question before us, viz. whether the defendant M. E. Trapp is eligible to succeed himself in the office of Governor. It is observed that in section 1, art. 6, supra, the Lieutenant Governor is named as one of the executive officers of the state, and is vested with executive authority. He is expressly made a part of the executive department. As to what his executive powers are, and when and how he may exercise them, will be seen in the further course of our analysis.

By section 2, supra, it will be seen that the supreme executive power is in reality vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled "the Governor * * * of Oklahoma." The real executive head, therefore, the office in whom the supreme executive power of the state is in intendment and in reality vested, is a chief magistrate. It is in the office of chief magistrate that the supreme executive power is lodged. The person who exercises the supreme executive power of the state does so by virtue of his being the chief magistrate.

The person on whom such office by the Constitution devolves necessarily fills such office, and exercises all powers lodged in such office, and is charged with all the duties pertaining to such office, and enjoys all the emoluments, compensations, honor, and prestige which belong to such office. The person who thus fills the office of chief magistrate is styled "the Governor of Oklahoma." He is the "Governor" for the simple reason that he governs. A Governor is one who governs. He governs officially for the reason that section 16 vests him with authority to do so, and requires him to do. Therefore he is the official Governor. The provision of section 4, supra, speaks for itself. It simply says in simple words:

"The Governor * * * shall not be eligible immediately to succeed himself."

Section 15, supra, prescribes that the Lieutenant Governor shall possess the same qualifications of eligibility for office as the Governor. It also imposes other than executive duties upon the Lieutenant Governor, viz.: He shall be president of the Senate, and shall have a casting vote therein, and a casting vote also in joint session of both houses. These duties are not imposed upon him, nor these powers conferred upon him, because he is one of the executive officers of the state, for they are not executive duties—they are legislative duties. The Constitution does not say why these duties are imposed upon the Lieutenant Governor. It may have prescribed such duties for him because, as a rule in states of the Union, similar duties and powers are generally given to the Lieutenant Governor, and because, under the federal Constitution, the Vice President performs similar duties, such being the general custom and general conception of the proper and harmonious method of running the entire machinery of our government. But, whatever may have been the reason for giving these powers and duties to the Lieutenant Governor, it is a fact that they are given him by our Constitution.

Said section 15 further provides that, if, during a vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall be impeached, or become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the President pro tempore of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled, and, if the President of the Senate, for any reason, becomes incapable of performing the duties pertaining to the office of Governor, then the Speaker of the House shall act as Governor until the disability ceases. Now let it be observed that the words "shall act as Governor" are not applied to the Lieutenant Governor, but are applied only to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House in cases where the Lieutenant Governor is under a disability. The words "shall act as Governor," or, as defendants in error put it, "the Acting Governor," are not anywhere in the Constitution applied to the Lieutenant Governor.

They are applied nowhere else, nor to any one else, except to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House, and to them only in cases where "the Lieutenant Governor becomes incapable of performing the duties of the office." This section nowhere denominates the Lieutenant Governor as a mere "Acting Governor," nor does it imply that he is regarded as only "an Acting Governor." It says, "or become incapable of performing the duties of the office," meaning the office of Governor. Then, in such case, the President of the Senate shall act as Governor, and, if he be disqualified, then the Speaker of the House shall act as Governor. The Lieutenant Governor is nowhere spoken of as "Acting Governor."

[3] But section 16, supra, provides that, in case of impeachment of the Governor, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor. This section does not say, "upon the Lieutenant Governor who shall act as Governor," but it says:

"The said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term or until the disability shall be removed."

It means that all the powers, duties, and responsibilities of the office of Governor shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, and *573 that all the emoluments, compensation, honor, dignity, and prestige of the said office shall be his. He is thereby made the chief magistrate in fact by the plain language of the Constitution. He is vested with all the powers, and charged with all the duties and responsibilities, and is given all compensations, which belong to the chief magistrate, in whom the supreme executive power of the state is vested. "The said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor."

But, it is insisted by defendants in error, persistently and repeatedly, that the two sections (15 and 16) must be construed together, and that, by construing them together, we find a vacancy in the office of Governor, a vacancy which, they claim, we are not at liberty to read out of the Constitution, a vacancy which is not filled by the Lieutenant Governor, as he is a mere "Acting Governor," a vacancy which the law makes no provision for filling except by an election. But, upon examination of the two sections, we find that, by either construing the two sections together, or by construing them separately, we nowhere find the Lieutenant Governor referred to as "Acting Governor." Furthermore, we nowhere find the words "shall act as Governor," except in cases where the Lieutenant Governor is, for some reason, rendered incapable of performing the duties of Governor. Then the President of the Senate or Speaker of the House shall "act as Governor."

Under section 16, when the Governor is impeached, and his rights become foreclosed, the office devolves upon the Lieutenant Governor.

[6] The word "devolve" is defined by lexicographers and in law dictionaries as meaning to roll or tumble down or descend; to be transmitted by course of events, or by operation of law; to transfer from one person to another; to pass by transmission to another; to pass from a person dying to a person living; to pass from the possessor to a successor. See Webster's Int. Dict. 1923; Funk & Wagnall's Stand. Dict.; Black's Law Dict.: 14 Cyc. 286; Words and Phrases, both First and Second Series; 18 C. J. 1034, and notes.

Hence, when Governor Walton became impeached, when the judgment of the high court of impeachment was pronounced, the official powers of Mr. Walton ended, his rights of tenure were ended, and the office of chief magistrate of the state, the office in which is lodged the supreme executive powers of the state, automatically, instantaneously with the ending, descended upon, passed down to, devolved upon, Mr. Trapp. There was no interim, no vacancy, no delay in the transmission, no interruption in, no suspension of, the functions of government—they passed right on.

By the judgment of impeachment, Mr. Walton's authority ceased; his term and tenure ended; his individual rights were foreclosed; "the said office, with its compensation," devolved automatically upon Mr. Trapp. There was no vacancy created, none intended, none contemplated. It was never intended that, under the conditions provided for in section 16, there should be an interim during which the state would have no Governor, and the functions of government be suspended, but, on the contrary, it is wisely provided in said section 16, that, when by operation of law, or by reason of other circumstances, the authority of the elected Governor is terminated, his tenure ended, and his individual rights foreclosed, the said office (the Governor's office), with its compensation, shall devolve upon another, in order that the functions of government may continue without interruption, and the public rights be protected.

Section 16 deals with conditions wholly different and distinct in their very nature from the conditions dealt with in section 15, and to this extent the two sections are independent of each other. It is contended by defendants in error that the two sections must be construed together to give effect to either, and the case of Ex parte Crump, 10 Okl. Cr. 133, 135 P. 428, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1036, in which Judge Doyle, who delivered the opinion of the Criminal Court of Appeals, held that the two sections (15 and 16, article 6) are in pari materia.

[2] We concur with the learned judge in the view that said sections 15 and 16 are in pari materia to the extent that they relate to, and form a part of, the entire purpose of article 6 to the extent that they aid in providing for, and constitute, an element of the entire scheme intended to be provided for in article 6, but to such extent only. They are independent of each other to the extent that they deal with, and completely provide for, the distinctly different conditions which each does provide for.

Section 15 anticipates vacancies such as may be caused by the Governor's absence from the state, and other circumstances which may cause a temporary absence of the Governor from his office, and refers to such occasions as vacancies, but these are occasions where, though the Governor may be absent from his office, though he may be sick or out of the state, and temporarily away from his office, yet he still retains his right to the office. His right to the office has not been terminated, his term nor tenure has not been ended, by operation of law by judicial proceedings, nor by other circumstances. He still has, still possesses, his right to the office, and, upon his return, may assume the duties and exercise the powers of his office. Such instances the Constitution treats as vacancies, and provides for the filling of such vacancies, and that, when either the President of the Senate or Speaker of the House fills such vacancies, he merely acts as Governor during such vacancy.

[4] But section 16 deals with a wholly different *574 and distinct condition—a condition which was deemed essential to be separately dealt with, and one which past history has shown to have been necessary to be dealt with, viz. a condition where the chief magistrate, the one who is styled “the Governor of Oklahoma,” has been impeached and removed from office, where his rights have been foreclosed and his term and tenure ended. In such case there is no vacancy; therefore no need to speak of a vacancy. The office immediately devolves upon the Lieutenant Governor. Hence section 16 does not speak of a vacancy.

It is unnecessary to draw a distinction between a “temporary vacancy” and a “permanent vacancy.” It is unnecessary to say whether there is a distinction between the two terms. Section 15 unquestionably has reference to temporary vacancies, and to temporary vacancies only, and deals with, and provides for, temporary vacancies only. Nowhere does article 6 speak of a permanent vacancy. Section 16, in dealing with the conditions which it provides for, does not recognize a vacancy of any kind, but provides that the powers of government may continue right on; that the ship of state, as it were, may continue its course without interruption, and with a duly commissioned chief executive at the helm.

[5] Defendants in error say:

“Section 15 is the sole and only section of the Constitution which authorizes any one to exercise and perform the powers and duties of the office of Governor other than the elected Governor himself.”

This contention has no support from the Constitution. If it were true, then the Lieutenant Governor has no authority under any circumstances to exercise the powers and discharge the duties of Governor and draw a Governor's pay. For it must be clearly seen that section 15 does not in express words give to the Lieutenant Governor any such powers and privileges, but does expressly say that in certain cases the President of the Senate or, in case of his disability, the Speaker of the House may act as Governor, but it nowhere expressly says that the Lieutenant Governor, under any circumstances, may act as Governor. Hence, if section 15 is the only section which authorizes the Lieutenant Governor to act as Governor, and it be true, as defendants contend, that he has no authority except such as is expressly given him, then he has no authority, under any circumstances, to exercise the powers of Governor, for it is only by implication that section 15 authorizes him to exercise such powers. The following language in said section 15, to wit:

—is the only language in section 15 which even implies that the Lieutenant Governor shall ever, at any time, exercise the powers of Governor, or even “act as Governor.” However, the above language does imply that, in case of a temporary absence of the Governor, that is, such a temporary absence as renders him incapable of discharging his duties, then the Lieutenant Governor may exercise a Governor’s powers and perform a Governor’s duties, unless, for some of the reasons mentioned, he is rendered incapable of doing so, but it is by implication only that he derives such authority from section 15. But, as heretofore pointed out, section 16 expressly says:

“In case of impeachment of the Governor * * * or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor.”

As to the contention of defendants in error that the inhibition in section 4, supra, applies to an elected Governor only, and does not apply to one on whom the office of Governor devolves, we must answer that the Constitution says no such thing. The Constitution says the Governor shall not be eligible immediately to succeed himself. This inhibition is not confined to an elected Governor, at least by any express language, nor is it confined to any particular length of term, nor is its application restricted to a four-year term. It simply says the Governor shall not be eligible immediately to succeed himself. In its literal sense, and its every practical working sense, a Governor is one who governs, and, conversely, one who governs is Governor. The language of section 4 in its literal significance applies to the one who is governing at the time the circumstances arise for an election to succeed himself, and does not except any one from the force of the ineligibility clause merely because he may have been governing for a short period only.

Defendants in error contend that it should apply only to an elected Governor who has served a four-year term, and that it should not apply to a portion of a four-year term; that, if the elected Governor should be impeached one week or one day, before the time for filing as a candidate to succeed himself, under such circumstances it would be absurd to apply the provision of said section 4. As to whether these suggested conditions may ever become possibilities, we are not called upon to decide. The present case does not present such a condition, and it would be mere dictum for us to say what should be done under such remote possibilities. It might suffice to say, however, that, if such *575 conditions should arise, the courts will cross that bridge when it is reached.

Defendants in error argue also that the plaintiff’s contention would bring about a condition wherein the elected Governor, if he saw fit to do so, in order to prevent the Lieutenant Governor from running for Governor, might resign or be removed or impeached a week or a day before the time for announcing as a candidate, and thereby force the Lieutenant Governor to act as Governor during the remaining week or day of the term, and then, by applying section 4, prevent the Lieutenant Governor from running for office. This is another bridge which the courts will cross when it is reached. In this connection, however, it is perceived that such remote possibilities might as easily come from the opposite direction. For example, an elected Governor might fail to qualify; he might die on the day before his time for taking office. In such case the office of Governor would devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for four years, and he might serve until the time arrived for filing as a candidate and resign, and thereby make it the duty of the President of the Senate or Speaker of the House to act as Governor, with an understanding with the President of the Senate or Speaker of the House that no change would be made in governmental policies, nor in the numerous appointive boards and employees, and again announce and run for Lieutenant Governor, with an understanding with some person running for Governor that, if elected, he would not qualify, but would leave the powers and duties of the office of Governor to devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, who, if he should be elected as Lieutenant Governor, would then have another four-year term in the office of Governor, and the same proceeding might possibly be repeated for a number of terms, at the end of which terms he could run for Governor himself, claiming that he had been only "Acting Governor," thus perpetuating himself in the office of Governor, the very condition which section 4 expressly prohibits. So, while it is seen that these theoretic possibilities may work both ways, yet none of such conditions are before us now, and that bridge will be crossed when it is reached.

We now have before us an actual and clearly defined problem with the provisions of the Constitution as our only rule for solution. The authorities cited afford us very little light. None of them deal with conditions anything like similar to the conditions here presented, and none of them have been construed constitutional provisions identical with ours.

It is unnecessary to give space to the constitutional provisions of other states, nor to a discussion of the effect which such provisions have in other states, nor is it proper for us to interpret the decisions from other states to the extent of saying what effect they have on such states, but we may properly say what application the decisions of another state has to the law of our state, and may properly say what degree of persuasiveness they have upon us in construing the laws of our state, and, as no decisions have been cited exactly in point, and no constitutional provisions construed identical with ours, we are forced to construe our own Constitution with the effect it has upon our state in view. Again referring to the Crump Case, supra, and to the case of People v. Wells, 2 Cal. 198, which is quoted from with apparent approval by the Criminal Court of Appeals in the Crump Case, and which is separately cited by defendants, we find that neither of those decisions deal with a condition at all similar to the one here presented. In the Crump Case the court was dealing with an occasion of temporary absence of the Governor from the state; the question being whether during such temporary absence the Lieutenant Governor had authority to issue pardons. The court was dealing with an absence, a vacancy, which was essentially temporary. The facts in the case and the reasoning of the court show that it was essentially temporary, and that the court had such a condition in view; looked at it from that standpoint of a temporary vacancy in reaching its final conclusion. In that case, the absence of the Governor was only a temporary absence, and the vacancy created in his office was only a temporary vacancy. The Governor, though temporarily absent, still had the constitutional right, upon his return, to assume the duties of the office of Governor, but, under the conditions here presented, the impeached Governor has no right to return and oust the present Governor and assume the powers of the office of Governor. Mr. Walton's rights to the office, his tenure of office, his term of office, which as the California case says, belonged to him as an individual, have been terminated and foreclosed by the court of impeachment, but, as was also held in the California case, the people's right to a continuous functioning of the government has not ceased.

These are the conditions which we have here, and section 16 provides for just such conditions. Hence neither the Crump Case nor the California case are controlling in this case further than heretofore indicated. Defendants lay stress upon the concluding words of section 16, to wit, "or until the disability shall be removed." We are dealing with a condition where the disability cannot be removed; the law provides no means for its removal; it has become final; and it is our duty to avoid speculations and deal with the actual condition which confronts us.

Plaintiff in error cites three Oregon cases, viz. Chadwick v. Earhart, 11 Or. 389, 4 P. 1180; Olcott, Gov., v. Hoff, Treas., 92 Or. 462, 181 P. 466; State ex rel. Roberts v. Olcott, 94 Or. 633, 187 P. 286, in support of his contentions.

We do not feel at liberty to say what effect the decisions of the court of Oregon have upon *576 the state of Oregon, but it is obvious to us that the conclusions were reached from a different standpoint than the standpoint here presented. The first Oregon case was dealing with the mere sordid question of salary, the question being whether the secretary of state, under certain conditions, was entitled to the Governor's salary, and in the second case also the question of salary appears to have been the bone of contention. In the third case the court followed the previous holding under the doctrine of stare decisis. However, it was held in the Oregon cases that the person on whom the office of Governor devolves becomes Governor.

The case of Futrell v. Oldham, 107 Ark. 386, 155 S. W. 502, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 571, is cited by defendants in error, but that case is not in point here. In the opinion the court said:

“The case turns on the question whether, on the resignation of the Governor, the then incumbent of the office of President of the Senate succeeded to the vacated office, or whether merely as such President of the Senate the powers, duties and emoluments of the office * * *

Section 16, art. 6, Constitution of Oklahoma:

“In case of impeachment of Governor, or of his death, failure to qualify, resignation, removal from the state, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term or until the disability shall be removed.”

It will be seen that the only difference between the two Constitutions, both dealing with the same conditions, is that the federal Constitution says, “the same shall devolve on the Vice President,” while the Oklahoma Constitution says, “the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor.” Defendant in error argues that no court has ever decided that the Vice President became President upon the death of the President, and appears to discount the departmental construction which the various departments of the federal government, including the federal Congress, have placed upon the above provisions of the federal Constitution. This construction has stood since April 4, 1841, when, upon the death of President Wm. H. Harrison, Vice President Tyler became President of the United States. For almost a century this construction of the federal Constitution has stood without question. It has been recognized as correct, and acquiesced in, not only by the departments of state and all the states of the Union, but devolved upon him while he remained President.”

This case is not in point here because it deals with a different condition, and for the further reason that the President of the Senate is not made an executive officer, nor constituted a part of the executive department by the Constitution of Arkansas, as is the Lieutenant Governor constituted by the Oklahoma Constitution. Plaintiff in error also cites section 1, art. 2, of the Constitution of the United States, and the instances, six separate occasions, where, upon the death of the President, the Vice President has succeeded to the office of President and became President of the United States, and has been so recognized. Said section of the federal Constitution is identical with ours, with the exception that ours is the stronger and more definite, as may be seen from the following parallel:

Section 1, art. 2, Constitution of the United States of America:

“In case of the removal of the President from office, or of his death, resignation or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice President.”

officially recognized by every civilized government of the world.

On each occasion where the President of the United States has died, the Vice President has immediately succeeded to the office of President as President of the United States, and thereupon the government of the United States has at once, through its consular offices, notified all governments of the world of the change in Presidents.

Defendant suggests that no court has ever pronounced that to be the law. To our mind, it is so clearly correct that no one has ever presumed to test its correctness in the courts. Therefore it should have greater weight than an ordinary departmental construction, not only because it has stood for almost a century, but because it has been recognized as the correct conception of our system of government, and because, for eighty-five years under this construction, there has been no friction in the machinery of government by reason of such construction. While this construction of the federal Constitution is entitled to weight, yet we are not confined to such construction as our sole guide in construing our own. The plain language of our Constitution, under the universally accepted meaning of the language used, is sufficient unto itself.

Defendant contends that every man has a right to run for Governor, and if elected, to become Governor once. This we concede, provided he possesses the constitutional qualifications for the office, but he must be thirty years of age; must have been a resident of the state three years; and must not be immediately succeeding himself in the office of Governor. Possessing these qualifications, he may become Governor as often as the people elect him, but, lacking in either of them, his personal ambitions to become Governor are not to be weighed in the scales with the public interest and welfare.

The framers of the Constitution and the people in adopting the inhibition in section 4, supra, must have had reasons for so doing. The Constitution itself does not say what those reasons were, and we shall not assume *577 to say what they were, but we may say what effect such provision has, and do say that it has a most wholesome and much-needed effect. We judicially know that under the law the Governor of this state has very extensive powers. He is a member of, and ex officio chairman of, several of the most important and powerful boards and commissions of the state. That he has authority to appoint and remove members of many important boards and commissions, and to dictate the employment of every clerk, stenographer, helper, and janitor allowed by law to be employed by such boards. We judicially know that he is ex officio chairman of the state board of equalization, which has power to equalize and fix property values and the rate of taxation; that he has power as chief executive to convoke the Legislature, and to veto acts of the Legislature, to issue pardons to persons who have been duly convicted in the courts, and power to call out the militia and many other far-reaching powers, and we also judicially know that under the law the present incumbent has all of the above-mentioned powers, and as a matter of common knowledge, we know that too long an exercise of such tremendous powers by one man may bring about oppression and detriment to the public welfare, and that too long a tenure of office with the powers which a Governor has may enable him to build up a dangerous, and possibly invincible, political machine with which to perpetuate his powers.

While we do not know, and do not pretend to say, whether the present incumbent or any other Governor has ever used his powers wrongfully or oppressively, yet we do know that section 4 whatever may have been the reason for its adoption, has the effect of preventing these possible dangers, and do know that it is well to guard against them.

Mr. Trapp is just as much a Governor, in every literal and practical sense and effect, as though he had been elected to the office. He has all the powers, emoluments, and immunities which could be conferred upon him by an election, as well as the same individual rights of tenure and occupancy which an elected Governor has, and, except by impeachment for misconduct, there is no provision of law by which he can be divested of such rights until the end of his term. He is now filling the office which, upon the impeachment of Mr. Walton, devolved upon him by section 16, and section 4 says, "The Governor shall not be eligible immediately to succeed himself."

Discerning our system and plan of government, and our constitutional provisions for the operation of same as we do, the reasons herein given become potent and conclusive.

The judgment of the trial court is therefore reversed, with directions to issue the order of injunction herein sought.

Reversed.

MASON, PHELPS, LESTER, HUNT. CLARK, and RILEY, JJ., concur.

NICHOLSON, C. J., dissents.

BRANSON, V. C. J. (dissenting).

In this court the parties bear the same adversary positions as they bore in the district court. They are, therefore, referred to as plaintiff and defendants.

One Kirby Fitzpatrick, as plaintiff, sued the state board of public affairs, the state election board, and the individual members of each. He prayed relief, enjoining the defendants from causing to be printed on the official Democratic primary ballots to be used throughout the state in the primary, to be held, as required by law, the first Tuesday in August, 1926, the name of M. E. Trapp. The said M. E. Trapp had duly filed his application with the said defendant election board to be placed on such ballots as a candidate for nomination for Governor of Oklahoma, and his said application to be placed on said ballots had been by said board accepted.

The question of the propriety of the injunctive remedy sought is by none of the parties drawn in question, and the same will, therefore, not be discussed. Only a part of the substance of the pleadings is necessary to be stated for a clear understanding of the issue.

At the regular November election, 1922, one J. C. Walton was duly elected as Governor of the state of Oklahoma. He was inaugurated by taking the constitutional oath on the 8th day of January, 1923, and thereafter continued to fill the office until the 23d day of October, 1923, when the House of Representatives duly assembled, filed impeachment charges with the state Senate, and the state Senate did, by resolution, on said last-named date, suspend him from office; but on the trial the charges were sustained, and judgment entered removing him from office. Section 168, C. O. S. 1921.

At the same time the said Walton was elected Governor, the said M. E. Trapp was duly elected Lieutenant Governor of the state of Oklahoma for the constitutional term of four years, beginning on the 8th day of January, 1923, and on said date the said M. E. Trapp qualified as Lieutenant Governor by taking the constitutional oath of office, and, as defendants contend, has ever since been Lieutenant Governor by reason of his election to said office and his qualification as such officer.

An extended discussion of the one question presented is unnecessary to make lucid the conclusion we reach. That one question is whether the said M. E. Trapp is eligible to be Governor for the term for which he seeks to be nominated and elected, and which term begins under the Constitution the second Monday in January, 1927. The plaintiff alleges that he is ineligible, and contends that, *578 because of his ineligibility, he should not be placed on the primary ballots as aforesaid; while the defendants, taking the view that he is eligible, have accepted his filing, and intend to place his name, unless prevented from doing so, upon such ballots.

Whether he is eligible depends upon the construction to be placed on certain provisions of the Constitution of the state. The correlation of these said provisions are before this court for the first time, and we must say what they mean, for they are not without ambiguity. We have no exact precedent from the decisions of any other state to ease our task, for, while we find similar provisions in many Constitutions, we find none of them exact as ours in their entirety. The decisions of other courts hereinafter cited are helpful so far as they deal with provisions similar to certain provisions here in question, but from the point at which they stop we must follow a rule of reason all our own. It is admitted that the ineligibility attaches only to the Governor.

Before considering the particular provisions which bear directly on the dispute, consideration of the provisions of the Constitution as to who may be Governor and how he may become Governor we consider important. Bearing thereon we cite, but give only the substance of, the provisions, constitutional and statutory.

Article 6 (Williams' Oklahoma Constitution) creates the executive department of state government, names the officers in whom executive authority is lodged, and, in a measure, the conditions under which such authority is so lodged. Section 3 thereof makes any male person who has been an elector of the state for three years, and is not less than thirty years of age, eligible to be elected either Governor or Lieutenant Governor. Section 1 thereof provides, among other things:

"The executive authority of the state shall be vested in a Governor, Lieutenant Governor," etc.

It cannot be considered amiss to point out here that the express language of this section vests executive authority in the Lieutenant Governor of the state. Just when he can exercise the same, and what authority he can exercise, depends upon other provisions of the Constitution hereinafter discussed. Before going to them, however, we think it important to call the attention of the reader to the fact that article 3 (Williams' Oklahoma Constitution) provides for mandatory elections for state and other officers. The provisions of said article 3 of the Constitution as to mandatory elections were vitalized by statutory enactments passed by the first state Legislature of the state. This Legislature convened soon after Statehood day, which was November 16, 1907, and the statute so vitalizing the said article 3 as to the mandatory selection of officers by popular elections is now brought down in our statutes as chapters 40 and 41, C. O. S. 1921. Section 6093, C. O. S. 1921, vitalizes that provision of article 3 of the Constitution which provides for a mandatory primary system. Section 6126 provides for the election of persons so nominated at the primary the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November of each even numbered year, beginning in 1908.

Reverting again to the Constitution, we find that section 4 of said article 6 provides that the term of office of Governor, and the term of office of the Lieutenant Governor (which runs concurrently), shall be four years from the second Monday of January next after their election, and that it further provides that the Governor shall not be eligible to immediately succeed himself. We come to the question here at issue: Who is the individual made ineligible to immediately succeed himself? The language of the said section is that the Governor is ineligible to immediately succeed himself. The language of section 1 of the same article makes clear that executive authority is vested in both the Governor and the Lieutenant Governor. These sections contemplate that two individuals shall be elected at the same election for the same term of office, and that executive authority shall be vested in each. They are each required to have the same qualifications, but the latter is not cloaked with the same ineligibility as the former. Each is elected by the electors of the state. We think it is not subject to debate that there is no provision in the Constitution or statute whereby the Governor can be appointed by any individual or collection of individuals. There are ample provisions in the Constitution and statutes under which most of the other numerous officers of the state may fill their respective offices by appointment by the Governor, or other designated appointing power, for section 13 of article 6 provides that the Governor shall commission all officers who are not commissioned by law, and, when any office shall become vacant, he shall, unless otherwise provided by law, appoint a person to fill the vacancy until a successor shall have been elected. Under this provision it is not subject to debate that, if the Lieutenant Governor should die, be removed on impeachment, or remove from the state, or otherwise be taken from the office, the Governor is directed by the said section to appoint a Lieutenant Governor, at least until the succeeding election. If the Governor should die, or be removed from office, there is nothing in the Constitution which authorizes the Lieutenant Governor to appoint a Governor.

We then ask ourselves the question: Can there be, under the Constitution of Oklahoma, a constitutional Governor except as the electorate of the state makes one at an election? We find no provision in the Constitution *579 which says so, nor do we find any which can be fairly so construed. Being the chief officer of the state, the ordinary meaning of the language used as to him expressly reserved to the people the sole power to make a Governor. Said section 1 of article 6 is different from other Constitutions dealing with the same matter. It vests executive power, not as a function to an office whoever may be holder thereof, but in individuals, and so far as is involved here, in individuals referred to as Governor and Lieutenant Governor. Section 2 of article 6 makes a distinction between the executive power vested by section 1 in the Governor and the executive power vested in the Lieutenant Governor, in that it makes the executive power of the Governor supreme. Said section 2 says:

“The supreme executive power shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled ‘the Governor of the state of Oklahoma,’”

—but it cannot be said, with right reason, that, because this section vests supreme executive power in a chief magistrate, styled the Governor of the state of Oklahoma, it thereby robs the Lieutenant Governor of the executive power which the preceding section said should exist in the Lieutenant Governor. We ask ourselves the question: Under what circumstances could executive power be exercised by the Lieutenant Governor, and what power? Unless we desire to read something into said section 4 of article 6, or to read something out of the same, the conclusion is inevitable that a constitutional Governor is a person nominated at a primary, and elected at a general, election for a term of four years. Under said section 2 his right to use the executive power vested in him by section 1 is supreme, and, when it exists at all, it supercedes any executive power vested in the Lieutenant Governor, and such power so vested in the latter is dormant until some condition arises under which he can exercise the same. The Governor exercises supreme executive power from the day of his inauguration for a period of four years, subject to the conditions of sections 15 and 16 of article 6, which are, in substance, to wit, his impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, removal from the state, or inability to exercise the same, or vacancy in his office. When some one of these contingent conditions arises, it operated to strike down, or suspend, the Governor's executive power.

And, under such circumstances, shall we say that the executive power vested in the Lieutenant Governor cannot then be exercised by him? That part of section 1 in referring to the Lieutenant Governor is meaningless, unless the exercise of executive authority by the Lieutenant Governor was intended to be conditioned on the happening of some of the provisions enumerated in sections 15 and 16 of article 6. If some of said conditions exist, then under the said sections the performance of the duties of the supreme executive, whatever those may be made by law, are charged to the Lieutenant Governor, but the performance of these duties by him are not, as Governor for the Constitution does not say so, and he was not so elected. The Constitution does not say when the Lieutenant Governor exercises executive authority so given him by section—he does so as Governor—but said section 1, when read in the light of the other sections of article 6, clearly recognizes that the elected Governor may be unable to exercise the same or to fill the office either because of impeachment, conviction on impeachment charges, death, failure to qualify, removal from the state, or some other inability, such as absence from the state, sickness, etc. The constitutional convention, knowing that some of the above disabilities might exist, or that the office might become vacant, and knowing that the same must be continuously filled in the sense that the duties of the office must be performed in the interest of the public good, in effect says that, if from any of these causes he, the Governor, is suffering from inability to discharge the duties of the office, the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of the term or until the disability shall be removed.

From the oral argument presented by counsel for plaintiff, the writer is unable to escape the conclusion that plaintiff's position is that we must turn the question here in dispute solely upon the language of the said section 16, and that part thereof which provides:

“That the said office, with its compensation, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term or until the disability shall be removed.”

Diligent search can be made of each section of said article 6, creating and dealing with the executive department, and nothing therein can be found of an executive nature to be done by the Lieutenant Governor, except when a contingency arises as contemplated by sections 15 and 16. There is nothing in any section of said article (and no other article) that either expressly or by fair intendment indicates that, on the contingency of said sections arising, the Lieutenant Governor can exercise executive authority in any status other than as Lieutenant Governor. And can any reason be given why it should be exercised by him other than as Lieutenant Governor when the only section vesting such authority in him says that it is vested in a Lieutenant Governor? The Governor being possessed of supreme executive authority until some contingency, as specified supra, arises, no executive authority can be exercised by the Lieutenant Governor, but, when such contingency does arise, *580 he performs the duties of the office merely as the occupant of the office of Lieutenant Governor, to which he was elected.

Suppose we accept the contention of the plaintiff referred to in the foregoing paragraph, to the effect that the question must be decided by the language, “that the said office, with its compensation shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor,” and do not consider other sections dealing with the same matter (to do this, however, would violate all rules of constitutional and statutory construction), we then are faced with a definition of the word “office” as given in the latest authentic edition of Webster's New International Dictionary as “a right to exercise a public function or employment and receive the emoluments thereto belonging.” (Webster gives another: “In its fullest sense, office embraces the elements of tenure, duration, duties, and emoluments.”) Suppose we substitute the said definition of office in the sentence relied on by the plaintiff. It will then read that the right to exercise the public functions (of the Governor—ours), and receive the emoluments thereto belonging, devolves upon the Lieutenant Governor. Would such sentence demote him as Lieutenant Governor and promote him as constitutional Governor? Would that strip him of his character as one official, and make him another official? No such conclusion can be reached by any fair or logical process of reasoning, and there is no provision in the Constitution of the state whereby a person elected as one official may, by operation of law, take on the status of another official. If we even omit Webster's definition set out, supra, we find in sections 15 and 16 of article 6 that the term “office” and “duties and powers of the office” are shown by the context to have been intended to mean that, when the person elected as Governor or Lieutenant Governor dies, or is otherwise incapacitated, it is only the duties and powers which he might have exercised that can be performed by another and distinct officer.

It must be noted that section 16 draws no distinction between his status in exercising executive authority by the Lieutenant Governor where there is a permanent disability, such as death or removal from office, and where there is merely a temporary disability on the part of the supreme executive. This was clearly pointed out in the case of Ex parte Hawkins, 10 Okl. Cr. R. 396, 136 P. 991, and in Ex parte Crump, 10 Okl. Cr. 133, 135 P. 428, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1036, in which the Criminal Court of Appeals of this state construed sections 15 and 16 of article 6, supra. In so construing them, that court cited with approval the logical reasoning of the Supreme Court of California in the case of People v. Wells, 2 Cal. 198. There is no section of the Constitution, unless we read something into it, which undertakes to make the Lieutenant Governor a constitutional Governor merely because he may exercise powers that would be, but for some contingency as set out above, exercised by the supreme executive. But plaintiff argues vigorously that the Constitution never contemplated that a vacancy should ever exist in the office of Governor. The idea plaintiff expresses is only true in the sense that the Constitution never contemplated that there should not be some one within the state who could exercise executive authority ordinarily exercised by the Governor. But there is nothing to be found therein which indicates that it must always be exercised by the officer known as Governor. This is clear from section 15, which, among other things, says:

“If, during a vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die or be absent from the state, or become incapable of performing the duties of the office, the President, pro tempore, of the Senate, shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease.”

We think this section clearly shows that the makers of the Constitution contemplated that a vacancy might exist in the office of Governor, either temporary or permanent. When a permanent vacancy occurs, said section clearly directs that the Lieutenant Governor shall exercise the powers and duties of the office, and, if during that time he (the Lieutenant Governor) should be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or be absent from the the state, section 15 directs that the President pro tempore of the Senate shall perform the duties of the office, and also provides for additional succession to such duties. Should we give the said constitutional provisions the construction contended for by plaintiff, and say, as he desires, that, when the Governor is removed from office, the Lieutenant Governor becomes the constitutional Governor, it would be tantamount to saying that the Lieutenant Governor as such was not given any executive authority, under any contingency, by the language of section 1. Such would lead to confusion, and such confusion, as we believe, the adroit minds of those who framed the Constitution would have prevented had they anticipated this court would read into the Constitution a construction of its provisions that would make a Lieutenant Governor constitutional Governor, though never elected as such. The inability of the Governor to immediately succeed himself is a limitation upon the right given to every citizen of the state to seek this high office who possesses qualifications set out above. Unless clear from the language used, we must not give this restrictive provision a meaning that would so penalize a man, who had been elected only as Lieutenant Governor, when, and if while serving, he should be nominated and elected Governor, he would be disqualified to take the office when inauguration day *581 arrived, if the Governor had died or been removed between election day and inauguration day. Should we give it the construction plaintiff contends for, then the minute the Governor resigns, is removed on impeachment, or dies, the Lieutenant Governor instantly becomes the constitutional Governor by operation of law, and the office of Lieutenant Governor thereby becomes vacant. If this is the law, under section 13 of said article 6, supra, he could immediately appoint a Lieutenant Governor, and, if feeling friendly to the deposed Governor, he could forthwith hand such impeached and removed Governor a commission as the Lieutenant Governor of the state, and then, if the friendship extended that far, out of personal consideration for the Governor so removed, could resign himself as Governor, whereupon the Governor so impeached could forthwith become the constitutional Governor by operation of law. Shall we read these provisions into article 6, which might bring about such conditions when otherwise they would not be possible. If on the removal of the Governor the Lieutenant Governor automatically is removed from the office to which he was elected, and instantly becomes Governor, in the exercise of his appointive power, under section 13, he is directed to appoint some one as Lieutenant Governor, and could do it forthwith, and this would operate to make it impossible that the President pro tempore of the Senate would ever succeed to the performance of the duties of Governor, as was clearly contemplated in the succession line to such duties as set out in section 15 of the Constitution.

The construction we give leaves effective the ineligibility of the elected Governor to be or become Governor for the term immediately succeeding that for which he was elected and served either in part or in whole, and does not extend the said ineligibility to an individual not specifically made ineligible by section 4. Again, should we give the meaning plaintiff contends for, we would make it possible to defeat such intent of section 4 in this, to wit, that the elected Governor, after serving for approximately three and one-half years, could resign before the primary, the Lieutenant Governor would then become automatically the constitutional Governor, and the Governor elected for the term then running, thus, by his own act, making himself eligible to be Governor for the next term, could forthwith enter the race, and, if elected, would be qualified, for that he would not be immediately succeeding himself, a constitutional Governor having served in the interim. Likewise, in the instant case, if M. E. Trapp is Governor in the constitutional sense of the term, he could forthwith appoint a Lieutenant Governor; then resign. His appointee would then be the constitutional Governor, and Trapp could continue his campaign, and, if elected, could qualify as Governor the second Monday in January, 1927, for the reason that he would not be "immediately succeeding himself," but another constitutional Governor would have filled the office in the interim. No such possibility of juggling with this high office was ever intended, but, when all provisions are considered, the Constitution means that, if A. is honored by being elected Governor for a term of four years, he is ineligible to be Governor the next term which begins four years later. That is what the Constitution says, and it means that, and nothing more. That meaning prevents possible and probable unseemly and disconcerting conditions, and we must adhere to it.

We are driven to these conclusions: First, that under the Constitution of Oklahoma, there cannot be a constitutional Governor, except when elected as such by the electors of the state. Second, that under section 1 executive authority is vested in both the Governor and the Lieutenant Governor, but that under section 2 supreme executive authority is vested in the Governor, and the Lieutenant Governor cannot exercise executive authority until a contingency arises, as set forth in sections 15 and 16 of said article. Third, that under said sections a vacancy may occur and exist in the office of Governor, in which event the Lieutenant Governor, as such, exercises the executive authority which the Governor, but for the arising of the contingency, would have exercised. Fourth, that, if while so exercising such authority, the Lieutenant Governor is impeached, displaced, resigns, dies, or is absent from the state, etc., the President pro tempore of the Senate may perform such duties. Fifth, that the Lieutenant Governor, who runs and is elected as such, cannot by operation of law be made a constitutional Governor, but is merely a constitutional Lieutenant Governor, and may exercise executive authority when the Chief Executive, to wit, the Governor, is removed, dies, or cannot otherwise act. Sixth, that this construction gives force to the language of section 1, section 2, section 4, section 13, section 15, and section 16, which are all the sections dealing with the subject, and thereby creates no possibility of a confusion in the performance of the executive functions. Neither does it destroy or strike down the succession provided by section 15 of said article to the duties of the office of the executive, such as might occur otherwise.

We think our reasons and conclusions are borne out by these cases: Sadler State ex rel. v. La Grave, 23 Nev. 216, 45 P. 243, 35 L. R. A. 233; State ex rel. Hardin v. Sadler, 23 Nev. 356, 47 P. 450; People v. Cornforth, 34 Colo. 107, 81 P. 871; Clifford v. Heller, 63 N. J. Law, 105, 42 A. 155, 57 L. R. A. 312; *582 People v. Budd, 114 Cal. 168, 45 P. 1060, 34 L. R. A. 46; State v. McBride, 29 Wash. 335, 70 P. 25; State ex rel. Chatterton v. Grant, 12 Wyo. 1, 73 P. 470, 2 Ann. Cas. 382; Clifford v. Heller, 63 N. J. Law, 105, 42 A. 155, 57 L. R. A. 312; Futrell v. Oldham, 107 Ark. 386, 155 S. W. 502, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 571.

In the above cited case of People v. Budd, 114 Cal. 168, 45 P. 1060, 34 L. R. A. 46, the court, in part, says:

"It will be seen that in case of a vacancy in the office of Governor the vacancy is not to be filled, but the powers and duties devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, who does not cease to be Lieutenant Governor. Under such circumstances it would hardly be contended that when the powers and duties of the Governor devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor the latter thereby becomes Governor, and can appoint a Lieutenant Governor. Nor do I think it could be contended that when the President pro tempore of the Senate acts as Governor he could appoint a person to fill the vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor. If he could, he would then appoint himself out of office, and it would be his duty to do so."

Again, if we consider sections 15 and 16 separately instead of together, do we find anything in section 16 which authorizes M. E. Trapp to be Governor? Under the facts as they were and are, can we not see by an analysis of that section that, when Trapp began to perform the duties of the office, it was not as Governor? No one contends for a moment that mere inability or disability on the part of the elected Governor would make the Lieutenant Governor Governor in fact. Under this section 16 the first thing mentioned is, "In case of impeachment of the Governor, * * * the office 'devolves,' etc., upon the Lieutenant Governor."

What does impeachment mean? And could impeachment have made Trapp Governor? It certainly could if the word "devolve" means what plaintiff contends, for he says that is the one word which made Trapp Governor. This court has definitely said through Justice Harrison in the case of State ex rel. Trapp v. Chambers, District Judge, 96 Okl. 78, 220 P. 890, 30 A. L. R. 1144, that—

" 'Impeachment' of the Governor, within the meaning of section 16, art. 6, of the Constitution, is the adoption of articles of impeachment by the House of Representatives, and the presentation thereof to the Senate, and the indication by that body that the same are accepted for the purpose of permitting prosecution thereof, and the impeachment of the Governor operates to suspend him; the duties and emoluments of the office automatically devolving upon the Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of the term or until the disability is removed by the acquittal of the Governor of the charges preferred against him."

So the word "devolve" clearly from said opinion did not make Trapp Governor while impeachment charges were pending against Walton, for this court said there: "The duties and emoluments" of the Governor "devolved" upon Trapp.

The second contingency set out in section 16 is, in case of death, the office "devolves." Walton was not then, and is not now, dead, so "devolve" did not make Trapp Governor under that contingency. The third is, in case of his failure to qualify, the office "devolves." Walton did not fail to qualify, and "devolve" could not make Trapp Governor under that contingency. The fourth contingency is in case of resignation, the office "devolves." "Devolve" did not make him Governor for this reason, for Walton did not resign. The fifth contingency is, in case of his removal from the state, the office "devolves." Walton did not remove from the state, so that contingency not having taken place, "devolve" did not make Trapp Governor. The sixth and last contingency of said section 16 is in case of inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office, the office "devolves" upon the Lieutenant Governor "until the disability is removed." This contingency did not permit "devolve" to make Trapp Governor, for there was no "inability" on the part of Walton to discharge the powers and duties of Governor, for that "inability" is a condition that may be removed or terminated, or, in other words, is temporary. It is defined by lexicographers as "an inherent lack of power to perform the thing in question." An illustration would seem to make it clear. For instance, if Walton had been afflicted with insanity, this would have brought about a lack of power to perform the duties of the office which inhered in him personally, and such inability as might be removed such as acquittal on the impeachment charges would have restored him to the right to perform the duties of the office.

Section 16 was given this meaning as far back as 1913, by Judge Henry Furman, a man of recognized learning, and a judge of eminent ability. In the case of Ex parte Hawkins, 10 Okl. Cr. 396, 136 P. 991, he said:

"This case presents simply a cold question of law, and must be decided as such without reference to any other considerations. Article 6, § 16 (Williams' Constitution, § 165) provides in express terms that all of the powers of the Governor shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor during the inability of the Governor to discharge the powers and duties of said office, and until such disability shall be removed. * * * The Governor may go to other states * * * without forfeiting his office. * * * During his absence, or inability to act, the Lieutenant Governor is vested with all of the powers of Governor. * * * The Constitution provides that there shall always be some one within the State clothed with power to perform the duties of Chief Executive. * * * The powers of the Lieutenant Governor to act, during the inability of the Governor, are not derived from the invitation or request of the *583 Governor; but they rest alone upon the provisions of the Constitution of Oklahoma.”

This comes from the pen of one long since removed from divergent judicial and political views. He was discussing the identical section of the Constitution plaintiff relies on as making a Governor out of a Lieutenant Governor. Judge Furman said in brief that, during an inability of the Governor to act, the Lieutenant Governor came forward, not to say “I am Governor,” but to do the work and perform the duties which the Governor would have done but for the inability. This shows clearly the futility of considering section 16 separate from sections 1 and 15 of the same article.

Plaintiff admitted in oral argument that section 15 should come after section 16; that this mistake was made in enrolling the article by the enrolling clerk. This is only important, if at all, in reading the two sections together. If they are so read in the light of the above authorities, they will in substance be: When the Governor has impeachment charges pending against him, fails to qualify, resigns, removes from the state, or possesses inability to act, or (section 15) if during a vacancy of the office of Governor from any of the above causes which would create a vacancy, or from death, or removal by a judgment of a court of impeachment, the duties and powers of the Governor are held and performed by the Lieutenant Governor, and if during such vacancy the Lieutenant Governor suffers impeachment or removal from office or inability to act, the President pro tempore of the Senate shall perform the duties, then the Speaker of the House, and then such other persons as the Legislature may provide by law.

Section 168, C. O. S. 1921, on impeachments, provides in closing:

“If two-thirds of the Senators present shall vote yea upon any charge or count contained in the article of impeachment, the accused shall be adjudged guilty [by the Senate as a court of impeachment—ours], and the judgment of the court shall be that he be removed from office.”

That is what created the vacancy in the office of Governor in the present term, and was such a vacancy in such office as is referred to in section 15 of article 6 of the Constitution, and during which that section and section 16 requires that the Lieutenant Governor shall have the power and perform the duties of the office and such of them as would otherwise be required of the Governor. It was such contingency actually occurring which was anticipated by the Constitution as the reason for vesting executive authority in the Lieutenant Governor in section 1 of the same article clearly to be exercised on the contingencies set out in sections 15 and 16.

We feel that the usage grown up in departmental construction of the national government that on a vacancy in the office of the elected President the Vice President becomes President is not even persuasive here, for there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States that makes the elected President, or a successor to him, ineligible to succeed himself, and the question here could never arise as to the presidency.

It must be noted in conclusion that not one decided case from all the states is cited to support the opinion of the court on the question here involved, though there are numerous ones, as set out above on similar questions.

The writer believes the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed.

Dec. 4, 1992.

Suit for declaratory judgment was filed requesting interpretation of various provisions of the Constitution of Arkansas regarding succession to the Office of Governor when the Governor resigns with more than 12 months remaining in term of office. The Circuit Court, Pulaski County, John B. Plegge, J., entered judgment declaring that upon resignation of Governor, powers and duties of the Office of Governor, but not office itself devolves upon Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of four-year term. Court also ruled that special election to fill office is not required and that Lieutenant Governor is not authorized to appoint successor to the Office of Governor. Attorney General appealed, and Lieutenant Governor cross-appealed. The Supreme Court, Dudley, J., held that: (1) constitutional amendment provides that the Lieutenant Governor serves as Governor for the residue of the term and not merely until a new Governor is elected at special election, and (2) Office of Governor itself devolves upon Lieutenant-Governor.

Opinion

**309 DUDLEY, Justice.

On November 6, 1990, Governor Bill Clinton was re-elected to the Office of Governor, and Jim Guy Tucker was elected to the Office of Lieutenant Governor. Both were elected and commissioned to four-year terms of office that commenced on January 15, 1991. On November 3, 1992, a little over twenty-one months later, Governor Clinton was elected to the Office of President of the United States of America. It is anticipated that Governor Clinton will resign from the Office of Governor before January 20, 1993, which is the day the oath of the Office of President of the United States will be administered. The result will be that a vacancy will exist in the Office of Governor, and more than twelve months will remain on the four-year term to which Governor Clinton was elected.

This suit for a declaratory judgment was filed requesting an interpretation of the various provisions of the Constitution of Arkansas regarding succession to the Office of Governor when the Governor resigns with more than twelve months remaining in the term of office. The trial court entered a judgment declaring that upon the resignation of Governor Clinton, the powers and duties of the Office of Governor, but not the office itself, will devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of the four-year term. The trial court also ruled that a special election to fill the office is not required and that the Lieutenant Governor is not authorized to appoint a successor to the Office of Governor. Attorney General Winston Bryant appeals from the judgment, *190 and Lieutenant Governor Jim Guy Tucker cross-appeals from that part of the judgment declaring that the Office of Governor does not devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor. On direct appeal, we affirm the trial court's judgment and hold that upon the resignation of a Governor, the powers and duties of the Office of Governor devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of the four-year term, and, on cross-appeal, we reverse and hold that the Office of Governor itself devolves upon the Lieutenant Governor.

I. Procedure

The Declaratory Judgments Act, Ark. Code Ann. §§ 16-111-101—16-111-111 (1987), provides that the purpose of the act is “to afford relief from uncertainty ... with respect to ... status,” and the act is to be liberally construed to that end. The parties stipulated in the trial court that they anticipate that Governor Clinton will resign from the Office of Governor, and the trial court held that a justiciable controversy exists. We have concluded that we should decide the issue because it is a matter of significant public interest and a matter of constitutional law. See Bennett v. N.A.A.C.P., 236 Ark. 750, 370 S.W.2d 79 (1963).

II. Background

Neither the 1836 Constitution of Arkansas nor the 1861 constitution provided for the office of Lieutenant Governor. Those constitutions placed the President of the Senate next in the line of succession for the Office of Governor, and they required a special election if the remaining term of the Governor exceeded a certain period of time. The 1864 constitution, for the first time, created the office of Lieutenant Governor and provided for a statewide election to the office. Ark. Const. of 1864, art. VI, § 19. The 1868 constitution also provided for a Lieutenant Governor and stated that if the Office of Governor became vacant, the Lieutenant Governor served during the "residue of the term." It made no provision for a special election to fill the vacancy. Ark. Const. of 1868, art. VI, § 10.

Unfortunately, the present Constitution of Arkansas, adopted in 1874, did not originally provide for the office of Lieutenant Governor. Article 6, sections 12 and 13 of the present constitution, originally placed the President of the Senate, *191 followed by the Speaker of the House, in the line of gubernatorial succession, but article 6, section 14 required a special election to fill a vacancy in the Office of Governor when the office was vacated more than twelve months before the expiration of the Governor's **310 term. Article 6, section 12 of the present constitution originally provided that in the event of the "death, conviction or impeachment, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the State or other disability of the Governor," the powers and duties of the office devolved on the President of the Senate "for the remainder of the term, or until the disability be removed, or a Governor elected and qualified." When construed with the special election procedure of article 6, section 14, the reason for each of these three limitations on the President of the Senate's period of service is obvious. Each limitation on service was tied to a different contingency. If the Governor became disabled, the President of the Senate served as Governor until the disability was removed. If the office became vacant through death, impeachment, or resignation of the Governor less than twelve months before the end of the Governor's term, the President of the Senate served "for the remainder of the term." If the vacancy in office occurred more than twelve months before the end of the Governor's term, the President of the Senate served until "a Governor [was] elected and qualified" at a special election called in accordance with article 6, section 14.

Only days after his inauguration on January 18, 1907, Governor John Sebastian Little suffered a nervous breakdown. Arkansas History Commission, 1 Annals of Arkansas 1947 239 (Dallas T. Herndon ed., 1947) [hereinafter Annals]. On February 11, 1907, Governor Little wrote Senator John I. Moore, the President of the Senate, and asked him to assume the duties of Governor. Senator Moore served as acting Governor until the adjournment of the General Assembly on May 14, 1907. Id. at 239. He was succeeded as acting Governor by Senator X.O. Pindall, who was elected President of the Senate shortly before its adjournment. Senator Pindall served as chief executive for sixteen months from May 15, 1907, until January 11, 1909, when he was replaced by the newly elected President of the Senate, Jesse M. Martin. Id. at 240. Senator Martin was acting Governor for three days until the inauguration of George W. Donaghey, who had been elected Governor at the general election of 1908. *192 Id. at 240. In sum, during the two-year period between January 15, 1907, and January 15, 1909, the affairs of Arkansas were in the hands of no less than six governors: Jeff Davis, John Sebastian Little, John I. Moore, X.O. Pindall, Jesse M. Martin, and George Donaghey. See id. at 233, 239-41.

The first seven months of 1913 were even more trying; they amounted to a gubernatorial succession crisis. The crisis was triggered when Governor Joe T. Robinson resigned from office following his election to the United States Senate. Id. at 247. W.K. Oldham was President of the Senate when Governor Robinson resigned, but because Senator Oldham was prohibited by article 5, section 18 of the constitution from serving past the end of the legislative session, the Senate elected J.M. Futrell as its President prior to adjournment on March 13, 1913. See id. at 251. Oldham argued that pursuant to article 6, section 12, he succeeded to the Office of Governor when Governor Robinson resigned and did not cease to be Governor when a new Senate President was elected. Futrell argued that he became Governor by virtue of his election as President of the Senate two days after Governor Robinson's resignation. In Futrell v. Oldham, 107 Ark. 386, 155 S.W. 502 (1913), this court ruled in Futrell's favor, holding that under article 6, section 12, the powers and duties of Governor devolved upon the office of the President of the Senate and not upon the individual occupying that office. In sum, during the first seven months of 1913, state government was headed by five different individuals: George Donaghey, Joe T.

Robinson, W.K. Oldham, J.M. Futrell, and George W. Hays. See Annals, supra, at 244, 247, 251. This was labeled our “procession” of governors. Dr. David Y. Thomas, 1 Arkansas and Its People; A History, 1541–1930 282 (1930). The newspapers of the time spoke of the confusion. The Arkansas Democrat of January 31, 1913, contained an article that began, “Political complications in Arkansas are as thick as a London Fog.” The February 8, 1913, Arkansas Democrat carried an article that **311 contains the sentence, “Kill off the antiquated method of filling a gubernatorial vacancy.”

III. Amendment 6

In February 1913, Representative Kidder introduced a House Joint Resolution for a constitutional amendment that *193 would create the office of Lieutenant Governor. In part, it was a replication of the provision in the 1868 constitution. The March 5, 1913, Arkansas Democrat wrote: “There is no sound argument against the office proposed. It fixes the status of the governor’s successor and does away with a special election to fill a vacancy.” On March 6, 1913, Amendment 6 to the 1874 constitution was proposed by the General Assembly. See 1913 Ark. Acts 1527. Amendment 6 was submitted to, and approved by, the voters at the 1914 general election. See Combs v. Gray, 170 Ark. 956, 281 S.W. 918 (1926), for additional history of the adoption.

[1] [2] [3] Amendment 6, section 4 provides: “In the case of the [resignation] of the Governor, ... the powers and duties of the office, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term....” In interpreting constitutional amendments, we have said that a court, in order to determine the meaning and the extent of coverage of a constitutional amendment, may look to the history of the times and the condition existing at the time of the adoption of the amendment in order to ascertain the mischief to be remedied and the remedy adopted. Huxtable v. State, 181 Ark. 533, 26 S.W.2d 577 (1930). “Amendments to a constitution are not regarded as if they had been parts of the original instrument but are treated as having a force superior to the original to the extent to which they are in conflict.” Grant v. Hardage, 106 Ark. 506, 509, 153 S.W. 826, 827 (1913). Repeal by implication is accomplished when a constitutional amendment takes up a whole subject anew and covers the entire subject matter of the original constitution. McCraw v. Pate, 254

Ark. 357, 494 S.W.2d 94 (1973); Berry v. Gordon, 237 Ark. 547, 376 S.W.2d 279 (1964); Pulaski County v. Downer, 10 Ark. 588 (1850). Further, a constitutional amendment is to be interpreted and understood in its most natural and obvious meaning. Carter v. Cain, 179 Ark. 79, 14 S.W.2d 250 (1929).

[4] Amendment 6 took up a new subject matter of gubernatorial succession. The citizens wanted to prevent any more gubernatorial succession crises and sought to change the procedure previously set out in article 6. It is impossible to reconcile the natural and obvious meaning of the language of the amendment, quoted above, with the special election procedure set out originally in article 6, section 14 in the factual situation before us. If the appellant Attorney General’s suggested meaning were *194 adopted, and we construed “residue of the term” to only mean the Lieutenant Governor takes office only until the next special election, the constitutional amendment would, in part, amount to an exercise in futility. For these reasons, we hold that amendment 6, section 4 provides that the Lieutenant Governor serves as Governor for the residue of the term and not merely until a new Governor is elected at a special election.

We do not decide whether the special election process set out in article 6 is still viable if the Lieutenant Governor becomes Governor and then vacates the office. That issue is not before us.

[5] The trial court ruled that the “powers and duties of the Office of Governor, but not the Office of Governor” devolved upon the Lieutenant Governor. The trial court’s ruling was undoubtedly based on our decision in Futrell v. Oldham, 107 Ark. 386, 155 S.W. 502 (1913), and certainly that case contains language stating that, under article 6, the President of the Senate exercised the powers of the Office of Governor, but did not actually become Governor. For several reasons, we think the holding of Futrell should be distinguished when the Governor resigns and his place is taken by the Lieutenant Governor under the provisions of amendment 6.

**312 First, the framers of amendment 6 took verbatim from article 6, section 10 of the 1868 constitution the phrase “the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor,” and they did so without having the opportunity to read this court’s opinion in Futrell. The House Joint Resolution proposing amendment 6 was adopted on March 6, 1913, eighteen days before this court handed down the decision in Futrell on March 24, 1913.

Second, in deciding Futrell, this court was obviously concerned that the President of the Senate had never been elected by a direct statewide vote—he had been directly elected only by the voters of a local state Senate district. The opinion provides:

The central thought [of article 6, sections 12, 13, and 14] is, that the office of Governor is never to be filled at all except by the direct vote of the people themselves, and provision is made by the Constitution for only a temporary devolution of the duties and emoluments of the office upon *195 some other functionary while a vacancy exists.

107 Ark. at 394, 155 S.W. at 505. Under amendment 6, section 2, the Lieutenant Governor is now an elected by a direct statewide vote of the people at the same time and for the same term as the Governor.

An equally important distinguishing factor is that today, under amendment 6, section 2, the Lieutenant Governor is a member of the executive branch of the government, but under article 6, as interpreted in Futrell v. Oldham, the President of the Senate was a member of the legislative branch and remained such while performing the duties of governor only until an election could be called. The opinion provides:

So, if the person discharging for the time being the duties of Governor is still President of the Senate, he cannot be Governor. He may exercise the powers of the latter office—“exercise the office of Governor,” as it is otherwise expressed in another section, but he does not fill the two offices.

Under amendment 6 we are not faced with the same problem. In fact, allowing the Lieutenant Governor to succeed to the Office of Governor eliminates the separation of powers and the dual office-holding problems. If the Lieutenant Governor were not to assume the Office of Governor, he would act as Governor and still preside over the Senate and have the power to cast votes in the event of tie votes. This mixing of executive and legislative powers is avoided when the Lieutenant Governor assumes the Office of Governor and sheds the duties of Senate President. For these reasons, Futrell v. Oldham is distinguished.

Amendment 6, section 4 provides that if the Office of Governor becomes vacant, “the powers and duties of the office, shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term.” The next section of the amendment, section 5, provides that if the offices of both Governor and Lieutenant Governor become vacant, the President (pro tempore) of the Senate “shall act as Governor until the vacancy [is] filled.” Similarly, the Speaker of the House “shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled” if the President of the Senate becomes unable to act as *196 Governor. The difference in language suggests that the Lieutenant Governor, unlike the President (pro tempore) of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, does not merely act as Governor when the Governor resigns. Rather, it suggests that he becomes the Governor.

It is also of some persuasion that for nearly three-quarters of a century the executive branch has treated a lieutenant governor as governor when he filled a vacant governor's office. The first instance occurred in 1926 when Lieutenant Governor Harvey Parnell succeeded Governor John E. Martineau. Historical Report of the Secretary of State—Arkansas 230 (1978). It also occurred when Governor Dale Bumpers resigned from the Office of Governor and Lieutenant Governor Bob Riley was commissioned governor, as well as **313 when Governor David Pryor resigned and Lieutenant Governor Joe Purcell was commissioned as Governor. See Commissions in Secretary of State's Office. In addition, we are persuaded that the drafters of amendment 6, and the voters who approved it, knew that article 6, section 2 would remain in place. It provides: “The supreme executive power of the State shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled ‘the Governor of the State of Arkansas.’”

Accordingly, we hold that amendment 6, section 4 provides that upon the resignation of the Governor, the

One of the parties advanced the argument that amendment 29 of the Constitution of Arkansas requires the Lieutenant Governor to appoint a new governor. We summarily reject the argument and hold that amendment 6 specifically provides for filing a vacancy in the Office of Governor.

Affirmed on direct appeal and reversed on cross-appeal.

GLAZE and CORBIN, JJ., dissent in part and concur in part.

GLAZE, Justice, concurring in part and dissenting in part. I concur in part and dissent in part. My disagreement with the majority court has nothing to do with its holding on the merits. In fact, I totally agree with its decision as it pertains to the merits, but disagree that this court procedurally reached the merits.

This lawsuit is a declaratory judgment action and, as such, *197 requires that a present actual controversy must exist. In stating this well-recognized principle, this court stated the following:

The Declaratory Judgment Statute is applicable only where there is a present actual controversy, and all interested persons are made parties, and only where justiciable issues are presented. It does not undertake to decide the legal effect of laws upon a state of facts which is future, contingent or uncertain. A declaratory judgment will not be granted unless the danger or dilemma of the plaintiff is present, not contingent on the happening of hypothetical future events; the prejudice to his position must be actual and genuine and not merely possible, speculative, contingent, or remote. (Emphasis added.)

Andres v. First Ark. Development Finance Corp., 230 Ark. 594, 324 S.W.2d 97 (1959); see also Files v. Hill, 268 Ark.

106, 594 S.W.2d 836 (1980); McFarlin v. Kelly, 246 Ark. 1237, 442 S.W.2d 183 (1969).

Justice John A. Fogelman stated the following reason for the foregoing rule in a concurring opinion where he said:

The declaratory judgment act is not intended to be the vehicle for advisory opinions to persons not having a justiciable controversy with their apparent adversaries by a court having no jurisdiction. It is far better, in my opinion, that important questions, particularly constitutional ones, be pounded out on the anvil of advocacy by persons whose interests are vitally real, not academic, with all interested parties before the court.

Block v. Allen, 241 Ark. 970, 980, 411 S.W.2d 21, 27 (1967).

Let me first point out the obvious—Governor Bill Clinton is not a party to this declaratory judgment action. Second, nowhere in the record before this court is it shown that the Governor has resigned or that he intends to resign his office. In an attempt to circumvent this obvious procedural defect in parties and the record, the parties appear to rely upon the Democratic Party of Arkansas's brief wherein it argues as follows:

The fact that Governor Clinton's exact resignation date may not be known is not a bar to determining the *198 succession issue. Governor Clinton cannot serve both as Governor and President. Article 6, Section 11 of the Arkansas Constitution provides that no “person holding office under the authority of this State, or of the United States, shall exercise the office of Governor, except as herein provided.” Governor Clinton's resignation now that he has been elected President cannot **314 be doubted. Governor Clinton will resign no later than January 20, 1993, in order to assume the Presidency. Thus, it is assured that there will be a vacancy in the Governor's office no later than 58 days after November 23rd. The resulting vacancy in the office of Governor is hardly the hypothetical fact situation feared by the courts.

The parties to this lawsuit cannot stipulate or assume how a person not a party or witness in this case might act in the future; namely, that Governor Clinton will vacate the Governor's office. The majority court is wrong in allowing the parties to make such a stipulation, especially when this factual issue could have been resolved by having made the Governor a party to this action and his resignation could then have been easily confirmed. Nor was the Governor deposed or called as a witness so the resignation issue could be put to rest. Clearly, Governor Clinton has an interest in this cause since this case affects not only his duties and responsibilities as governor, but also involves the emoluments he receives from that office. Until the Governor resigns, the succession issue presented in this cause remains purely hypothetical and contingent upon his vacating the office of Governor.

In an obvious attempt to avoid the Governor's absence in this lawsuit and to cure a record failing to reflect the Governor's resignation, the Democratic Party cites Article 6, Section 11 of the Arkansas Constitution which is captioned "Incompatible Offices" and provides, "No member of Congress, or other person holding office under the authority of this State, or of the United States, shall exercise the office of Governor, except as herein provided." In citing this constitutional language, the Party concludes the Governor's resignation now that he has been elected President cannot be doubted. Of course, this is an assumption or conclusion the parties to this action are unable to make. Clearly, the above constitutional language does not mean Governor Clinton automatically resigns or vacates his office upon *199 being sworn in as President. In addition, such dual officeholder issues are decided in quo warranto or ouster, not declaratory judgment, proceedings.

My natural inclination is much like the majority court's and the parties' to this case—that (1) the Governor likely will resign sometime prior to January 20, 1993, (2) a vacancy will then exist and (3) the succession problem will be a reality. However, to indulge in this assumption on the actual facts of this case is to ignore an entire body of law that provides this court only grants declaratory judgment relief when a present actual controversy exists and all interested persons are made parties. This court's apparent willingness to address the hypothetical facts present here breaks with clear, prior precedent and, in my view, will permit parties henceforth to stipulate to future facts and events in order to obtain declaratory relief and advisory opinions. This court, instead, should require the presence of Governor Clinton in this lawsuit either as a party or a witness, so a finding as to his resignation from or vacating of office can be established. Only then will an actual controversy exist, allowing this court to decide the succession issue.

One last point—the Democratic Party, recognizing justiciability as a problem, asserts this court nevertheless can declare the law concerning the Governor-succession issue because this is a case of extreme public importance. In support of this assertion, it cites Robinson v. Arkansas Game and Fish Commission, 263 Ark. 462, 565 S.W.2d 433 (1978); Moorman v. Taylor, 227 Ark. 180, 297 S.W.2d 103 (1957); and Rockefeller v. Purcell, 245 Ark. 536, 434 S.W.2d 72 (1968). Suffice it to say, each of these cases, unlike the present case, once involved a justiciable controversy, but the actual controversy later became moot for one reason or another. Here, as already discussed, an actual controversy is yet to occur. The cases cited are simply not on point.

Honorable Charley E. Johns
Acting Governor
Tallahassee, Florida

Sir:

We are in receipt of your request of September 29, 1953, for advisory opinion as follows:

'Honorable B. K. Roberts, Chief Justice, and The Justices of the Supreme Court of Florida

'Tallahassee, Florida

'Re: State Warrants heretofore prepared and signed by former Governor McCarty but not delivered; official signature of President of the Senate when duties of Governor devolve upon him.

'Gentlemen:

'It is my painful duty to advise you that His Excellency Governor Dan McCarty has died, and under the Constitution the duties of Governor devolve upon me as President of the Senate.

'Under Section 6, Article 4 of the State Constitution [F.S.A.] I am directed to take care that the laws of this state are faithfully executed and under Section 13 of Article 4, I am authorized to request the written opinion of the Justices of the Supreme Court as to the interpretation of any portion of the State Constitution about any question affecting my executive duties and powers.

*414 'Under Section 24 of Article 4 of the State Constitution, funds may be disbursed from the state treasury only upon the order of the Comptroller, countersigned by the Governor in such manner as shall be prescribed by law.

'Section 1, Article 4 of the State Constitution, provides that the supreme executive power of the state shall be vested in the chief magistrate who shall be styled the Governor of Florida.

'Prior to the death of Governor McCarty on September 28, 1953, many thousand state warrants, several thousand of them representing the payroll of state employees, were prepared and Governor McCarty's signature placed thereon in the usual manner with his full knowledge and consent, which warrants have not yet been delivered. My problem is whether or not I should require the reissuance of all of said warrants bearing my signature or permit the delivery of the above mentioned warrants by the State Comptroller.

'I therefore propound to you the following questions and request your advice or opinion concerning the same:

'1. May I under the powers and duties of Governor devolved upon me pursuant to Section 19 of Article 4, direct that the State Comptroller issue and deliver the above mentioned warrants to the payees named therein without my signature appearing thereon?

'2. If the above question is answered in the negative, then may I by executive order or proclamation approve and adopt the signature of Governor McCarty appearing thereon and direct the issuance and delivery of said state warrants to the payees therein named?

'3. In signing official documents and acts, should I sign the same as Governor, as Acting Governor, or in some other form? If in some other form, please advise me the form in which I should sign.

'Respectfully submitted,

'Charley E. Johns

'President of the Senate upon whom has devolved the duties of Governor by virtue of Section 19, Article 4 of the State Constitution'

[1] In response to your questions one and two which, for convenience, are answered jointly, you are advised that as to those warrants prepared prior to the death of Governor Dan T. McCarty, but bearing date subsequent thereto and which have been heretofore signed by the Comptroller and countersigned in the usual manner 'Dan McCarty, Governor', you may make an executive proclamation adopting, confirming and ratifying said countersignatures aforementioned as your own, as Acting Governor under Section 19, Article IV, of the Constitution of Florida; and upon your so proclaiming, you are advised that you are authorized to cause to be delivered such warrants to the payees thereof to be accepted and paid by the Treasurer of the State of Florida and the funds disbursed accordingly.

[2] In response to your question three, you are advised that under Section 19, Article IV, of the Constitution of Florida, the powers and duties of Governor have devolved upon you by virtue of the death of Governor Dan T. McCarty and it is our opinion that, when performing such executive duties, you are authorized to designate yourself as Acting Governor, by virtue of Section 19, Article IV of the Constitution.

Thanks, Geoff. One more thing, historically, when an Iowa Gov has left office before the end of his term, there has not been a Lt. Gov. appointed. Most of the time, these were very short periods of time, though.

Eric and Geoff:

In Massachusetts, when Governor William Weld resigned in 1997, Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci became "Acting Governor" – not "Governor." When Celluci resigned to become US Ambassador to Canada during the Bush Administration in 2001, his Lt. Gov. Jane Swift became "Acting Governor."

Massachusetts Constitution has a similar provision to the Iowa Constitution:

III.--Whenever the chair of the Governor shall be vacant, by reason of his death, or absence from the Commonwealth, or otherwise, the Lieutenant-Governor, for the time being, shall, during such vacancy, perform all the duties incumbent upon the Governor, and shall have and exercise all the powers and authorities, which by this Constitution the Governor is vested with, when personally present.

Hope this is helpful.

Demurrer to the petition, considered as a complaint, is sustained.

On May 19, 1938, James W. Martin of Ozaukee county, pursuant to the procedural rules laid down in In re Exercise of Original Jurisdiction of Supreme Court, 201 Wis. 123, 229 N.W. 643, petitioned this court for leave to bring, in the name of the state of Wisconsin, an original action of quo warranto, for the purpose of having determined by what authority Herman L. Ekern holds the office of lieutenant governor of this state, and if it be found that he holds that office without lawful authority, to oust and exclude him therefrom. Upon the filing of the petition an order *394 was made by Mr. Chief Justice ROSENBERY requiring Mr. Ekern to show cause why the petitioner should not be given leave to bring, in the name of the state, an original action in this court. Pursuant to that order, the petition was heard on May 31, 1938. The question whether leave to commence the action should be granted was argued by the attorneys for the petitioner and for Mr. Ekern. The court thereupon took a recess and conferred on the question of granting the prayer of the petition. After a brief conference, the court was of the view that the question presented required studious and painstaking consideration. Upon reconvening, the court stated that it would take the matter under advisement. It was then suggested, that if the petitioner and the respondent would stipulate, that in the event the court granted leave to commence the action, the petition should be considered as a complaint, to which the respondent demurred, the court would then hear arguments on the merits. The parties so stipulated and the merits were argued.

The petition in substance alleges: That the petitioner is a citizen, resident, taxpayer and elector of Ozaukee county; that prior to the making of his petition he demanded in writing of Orland S. Loomis, the attorney general of this state, that he bring the action in the name of the state, but that the attorney general refused so to do, and therefore the petitioner asks leave to bring the action as a private person in the name of the state; that on November 3, 1936, Philip F. LaFollette, was elected governor of the state of Wisconsin and Henry A. Gunderson was elected lieutenant governor thereof; that Philip F. LaFollette took the oath of office as governor on January 4, 1937, and ever since has been the governor of this state; that on the same day Henry A. Gunderson took the oath as lieutenant governor and continued to act as such officer until October 18, 1937, when he resigned; that by reason of the resignation of Henry A. Gunderson as lieutenant governor, a vacancy occurred in that office, without the right, authority or warrant in law to have the same filled by appointment; that on May 16, 1938, Philip F. LaFollette, as governor of this state, appointed Herman L. Ekern to the office of lieutenant governor of this state; that Mr. Ekern accepted said appointment and on May 17, 1938, took the oath of office, assumed the duties thereof and ever since then has held the office and exercised the duties thereof; that the act of Philip F. LaFollette in appointing Herman L. Ekern to the office of lieutenant governor, was without warrant in law and therefore a clear usurpation and abuse of power; and that Mr. Ekern, in taking said office and in acting as lieutenant governor usurped and intruded into said office without warrant in law. The petition, considered as a complaint, demands judgment that the appointment of Herman L. Ekern to the office of lieutenant governor be declared void; that he be adjudged guilty of usurping and intruding into and unlawfully holding said office; that he be ousted and excluded therefrom and that the office of lieutenant governor be declared vacant.

NELSON, Justice.

The first question for determination is whether this court should grant leave to the petitioner to bring an original action in the name of the state of Wisconsin. Such leave is asked because the attorney general has refused to bring the action. The question which the petitioner seeks to have determined is most important and of great public concern and interest. Obviously the people of this state are vitally interested in seeing that no important office, such as that of lieutenant governor, be intruded into by any person who has not lawful authority to hold the office or to perform the duties thereof.

[1] [2] [3] The office of governor is one of high dignity in which the people have a paramount interest, Attorney General ex rel. Bashford v. Barstow, 4 Wis. 567. The office of lieutenant governor is likewise of great importance because upon the incumbent thereof may at any time devolve the powers and duties of the governor. Sec. 7, art. 5, Const. That the question sought to be determined is publici juris and is one which relates to "the sovereignty of the state, its franchises or prerogatives, or the liberties of its people," cannot be gainsaid. Attorney General v. Railroad Cos., 35 Wis. 425; Attorney General v. Eau Claire, 37 Wis. 400; In re Income Tax Cases, 148 Wis. 456, 134 N.W. 673, 135 N.W. 164; In *395 re Exercise of Original Jurisdiction of Supreme Court, supra.

[4] Assuming for the moment that under the circumstances alleged, the petitioner is a proper person to bring the action in the name of the state, we think it clear, that under the rules stated in the four cases just cited, the petitioner properly invokes the original jurisdiction of this court. In a very early case the question: Why was original jurisdiction of these high prerogative writs given to the supreme court? was propounded and answered thus:

"Because these are the very armor of sovereignty. Because they are designed for the very purpose of protecting the sovereignty and its ordained officers from invasion or intrusion, and also to nerve its arm to protect its citizens in their liberties, and to guard its prerogatives and franchises against usurpation. The convention might well apprehend that it would never do to dissipate and scatter these elements of the State sovereignty among five, ten, twenty or forty inferior tribunals, and wait their tardy progress through them to the supreme tribunal, upon whose decision must finally depend their efficacy!" Attorney General v. Blossom, 1 Wis. 277 (*317) at page 287 (*330).

The petitioner asks leave to bring this action in behalf of the state, by virtue of the provisions of sec. 294.04, Stats., which so far as here material provides:

"(1) An action may be brought by the attorney-general in the name of the state, upon his own information or upon the complaint of any private party, against the parties offending in the following cases:

“(a) When any person shall usurp, intrude into or unlawfully hold or exercise any public office, civil or military. ***

“(2) Such action may be brought in the name of the state by a private person on his own complaint when the attorney-general refuses to act or when the office usurped pertains to a county, town, city, village or school district.” [5] [6] Sec. 294.04 was enacted by the legislature as sec. 336, of ch. 120, Laws of 1856, and as a part of our code. Ever since its enactment it has continued in force without amendment except that the word “school” was inserted before the word “district” in the last line thereof. Giving to the words and phrases of that statute a construction according to their common and approved usage, sec. 370.01 (1), it would seem that their meaning is so clear and unambiguous as not to require construction. That statute was construed by this court in 1875. In State ex rel. Wood v. Baker, 38 Wis. 71, 81, Mr. Chief Justice Ryan, speaking for the court said:

“Sec. 6, ch. 160, R.S., relates to proceedings in the nature of quo warranto for usurpation of office; and authorizes the attorney general to bring an action in the name of the state ‘upon his own information or upon the complaint of any private person.’ Interpreted by the constitution and translated into legal phraseology, we take this to mean that, in such cases, the attorney general may file an information in the nature of quo warranto, ex officio or upon the relation of a private person. The word ‘complaint’ cannot mean a pleading so called in the code, but seems to be used in a general sense, as a substitute for relation; and the attorney general certainly proceeds ex officio when he acts on his own information only. So far, therefore, we see no material change of the law. The section, however, goes on to provide that such an action may be brought ‘in the name of the state, by a private person, on his own complaint, when the attorney general refused to act, or when the office usurped pertains to a county, town, city or district.’ Before such a statute, the courts of the state might perhaps, in proper cases, have authorized proceedings in the name of the attorney general, if that officer wrongfully refused to act, and it was necessary to proceed in his name. Att’y. Gen’l. ex rel. Bashford v. Barstow, 4 Wis., 567. Be that as it may, this branch of the section gives a new proceeding by private parties, in the name of the state, without use of the attorney general’s name or office, in cases of local office, and in all cases in which that officer may refuse to act. This proceeding is plainly in the nature of a civil action, although in the name of state. 3 Black. Com., 263.”

That the construction given to that statute at the time was the only one that reasonably could be given to it seems clear. However, the respondent contends that the words “a private citizen” do not mean any private citizen but only a private person who is entitled to the office. That contention is based upon the holding of this court in State ex rel. Heim v. Williams, 114 Wis. 402, 405, 90 N.W. 452. *396 Mr. Justice Dodge, speaking for the court in that case, in respect to the right of the relator there to maintain the action, and in respect to sec. 3466, Stats. 1898 (now sec. 297.04) said (page 453):

“But our statute has recognized or created an additional province for such a suit by providing (section 3466, Rev.St. 1898): ‘Such action may be brought in the name of the state by a private person on his own complaint when the attorney general refuses to act.’ Under that statute it has provided (section 3463) that the proceeding is by ‘civil action,’ thus making it subject to section 2605: ‘Every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest;’ or, to transpose the idea, that a party, in order to prosecute, must have a real interest in the object to be accomplished. State ex rel. Peacock v. Orvis, 20 Wis. 235; State ex rel. Chase v. McKinney, 25 Wis. 416; State ex rel. Wood v. Baker, 38 Wis. 71, 81; State ex rel. Att’y. Gen’l. v. Cunningham, 81 Wis. 440, 471, 487, 51 N.W. 724, 15 L.R.A. 561; State ex rel. Glenn v. Stein, 13 Neb. 529, 14 N.W. 481; Att’y. Gen. ex rel. Lawrence v. Trombly, 89 Mich. 50, 58, 50 N.W. 744. The relator, though using the name of the state to sue, neither alleges nor claims any but a private interest. He does not assume to champion the rights of the public, which would be presented were the attorney general here present on behalf of the state, but predicates his right to such wholly upon his title to the office. If he has not such title, then he has no interest in a judgment ousting the respondent from the office, save such as is common to all citizens or members of the community. That title is denied, and therefore becomes the first subject for inquiry and decision.”

That language apparently has remained unchallenged up to the present time, probably for the reason that no similar action has been brought. Only twice has that case been referred to. State ex rel. Harley v. Lindemann, 132 Wis. 47, 111 N.W. 214; and State ex rel. Kleist v. Donald, 164 Wis. 545, 160 N.W. 1067. In the first case mentioned, it was cited to the proposition that (page 215) "there can be no question but what the offices alleged to have been usurped are public offices and pertain to the city of Milwaukee and the public schools therein, within the meaning of the statute quoted. Upon the facts thus admitted it is well settled that the relator may rightfully maintain this action in the name of the state." In the second case mentioned, it was cited in connection with a contention of the relator which was not considered sound.

In State ex rel. Heim v. Williams, supra, the cause of action which the relator asserted was so obviously without merit that the court may have failed to consider the full implications of the language used. The court no doubt intended by the following language: "The relator, though using the name of the state to sue, neither alleges nor claims any but a private interest. He does not assume to champion the rights of the public, which would be presented were the attorney general here present on behalf of the state, but predicates his right to sue wholly upon his title to the office," strictly to base its holding on the allegations of the complaint. An examination of the complaints, original and amended, (Vol. 695, Cases and Briefs) reveals that the relator there in bringing the action had only one purpose in mind and that was to obtain the office for himself. This court gave no thought or consideration in that case to the proposition that a vindication of a public right was also involved. In Re Income Tax Cases, supra, this court, in speaking of the original jurisdiction of this court, said: (page 500, 134 N.W. page 686)

"This transcendent jurisdiction is a jurisdiction reserved for the use of the state itself when it appears to be necessary to vindicate or protect its prerogatives or franchises or the liberties of its people. The state uses it to punish or prevent wrongs to itself or to the whole people. The state is always the plaintiff, and the only plaintiff, whether the action be brought by the Attorney General, or, against his consent, on the relation of a private individual under the permission and direction of the court. It is never the private relator's suit. He is a mere incident. He brings the public injury to the attention of the court, and the court, by virtue of the power granted by the Constitution, commands that the suit be brought by and for the state. The private relator may have a private interest which may be extinguished (if it be severable from the public interest), yet still the state's action proceeds to vindicate the public right. The fact that in many cases, as, for example, cases of unlawful imprisonment, the private wrong and the *397 public wrong are so closely identified that the ending of the private wrong necessarily puts an end to the public wrong, makes no difference with the principle."

What the court there said is, in our view, clearly correct and is particularly applicable here where the petitioner seeks to vindicate no private right but only the public right to have its offices filled and held only by those who are legally elected or appointed thereto, and to have the powers and duties thereof exercised and performed only by those entitled to such offices. While it is not specifically stated in the petition that leave is asked to bring the action for the purpose of vindicating a public right, that is obviously the primary and only purpose of the action which the petitioner asks leave to bring. So construing the petition, as we think it clearly must be construed, we have a petition in which a private person, a citizen, elector and taxpayer of this state asks leave to bring an action in the name of the state for the purpose of vindicating a public, not a private right, upon the refusal of the attorney general to bring it. In a situation like this, where an appointment has been made to fill a vacancy in office, there never can be a petitioner or relator who has any claim or title to such office. Unless a citizen, upon the refusal of the attorney general to bring the action, can obtain leave to bring an action in the name of the state to determine whether such appointment is lawful, then the lawfulness of the appointment will never be determined and the alleged wrongful usurpation or unlawful intrusion into the office cannot be questioned. Let us assume that a lieutenant governor tenders his resignation to the legislature, as he is required to do if the legislature is in session, sec. 17.01 (1), Stats.; that the legislature then proceeds by joint resolution, without authority of law, to make an appointment to fill the vacancy; and that the attorney general, upon request of a private person, refuses to bring an action to determine whether such appointee is the lieutenant governor of this state, or a usurper and intruder into such office. Could it be argued that leave should not be granted to a private person to bring an action in the name of the state for the purpose of determining whether such lieutenant governor so elected or appointed is a de jure officer or a mere usurper? We think not. Similar examples readily suggest themselves. Without further discussion, we are of the opinion that the prayer of the petition for leave to bring the action should be granted.

[7] The conclusion of the court that leave to bring the action should be granted renders the stipulation made at our bar, and heretofore mentioned, effective. The petition, from now on, will be considered as a complaint to which the respondent has demurred. The petitioner will now be referred to as the relator and the respondents as the defendant.

So many of the allegations of the complaint as are material, may be summarized as follows: Philip F. LaFollette was elected governor of the state of Wisconsin on November 3, 1936, and Henry A. Gunderson was elected lieutenant governor of this state at the same time. Both Philip F. LaFollette and Henry A. Gunderson, on January 4, 1937, took their oaths of office as governor and lieutenant governor respectively. Philip F. LaFollette, at all times since January 4, 1937, has been the governor of this state. On October 16, 1937, Henry A. Gunderson resigned as lieutenant governor. On May 16, 1938, Philip F. LaFollette, as governor, appointed the defendant, Herman L. Ekern, to the office of lieutenant governor. Herman L. Ekern, on May 17, 1938, took the prescribed oath of office, assumed the duties of the office and ever since has exercised the functions thereof.

The relator asserts that Philip F. LaFollette, as governor of this state, was without legal authority to appoint the defendant to the office of lieutenant governor and that the defendant has ever since his appointment and qualification usurped and intruded into the office of lieutenant governor.

The sole question for decision is whether the governor of this state, under the constitution and laws passed in pursuance thereof, has the authority to appoint one having the required qualifications to the office of lieutenant governor. The controversy which has arisen requires a reference to and a construction of the following provisions of our constitution and laws which concededly are applicable.

Sec. 1, art. 5. "The executive power shall be vested in a governor, who shall hold his office for two years; a lieutenant governor shall be elected at the same time, and for the same term."

Sec. 2, art. 5. "No person except a citizen of the United States and a qualified *398 elector of the state shall be eligible to the office of governor or lieutenant governor."

Sec. 7, art. 5. "In case of the impeachment of the governor, or his removal from office, death, inability from mental or physical disease, resignation, or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term or until the governor, absent or impeached, shall have returned, or the disability shall cease. ***"

Sec. 8, art. 5. "The lieutenant governor shall be president of the senate, but shall have only a casting vote therein. If, during a vacancy in the office of governor, the lieutenant governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or from mental or physical disease become incapable of performing the duties of his office, or be absent from the state, the secretary of state shall act as governor until the vacancy shall be filled or the disability shall cease."

Sec. 9, art. 13. "All county officers whose election or appointment is not provided for by this constitution shall be elected by the electors of the respective counties, or appointed by the boards of supervisors, or other county authorities, as the legislature shall direct. All city, town and village officers whose election or appointment is not provided for by this constitution shall be elected by the electors of such cities, towns and villages, or of some division thereof, or appointed by such authorities thereof as the legislature shall designate for that purpose. All other officers whose election or appointment is not provided for by this constitution, and all officers whose offices may hereafter be created by law, shall be elected by the people or appointed, as the legislature may direct."

Sec. 10, art. 13. "The legislature may declare the cases in which any office shall be deemed vacant, and also the manner of filling the vacancy, where no provision is made for that purpose in this constitution."

Sec. 17.27(4), Stats. "Any other vacancy. In case of a vacancy in any office in the state where no other provision is made for filling the same, it shall be filled by appointment by the governor."

It is conceded that there is no provision in our constitution or laws which specifically provides for the filling of a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor.

[8] The relator contends that under our constitution there can never be a vacancy in the office of the lieutenant governor because sec. 8, art. 5, provides that "if, during a vacancy in the office of governor, the lieutenant governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or from mental or physical disease become incapable of performing the duties of his office, or be absent from the state, the secretary of state shall act as governor until the vacancy shall be filled or the disability shall cease" and because that provision of the constitution prevents a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. The contention, in our opinion, is not sound. That Henry A. Gunderson resigned as lieutenant governor is alleged in the complaint. That since he resigned he has not been lieutenant governor is conceded. That there was a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor is conceded. That there was a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor from October 18, 1937, to May 16, 1938, seems so clear as to require no discussion. The term "vacancy" as applied to an office has no technical meaning. In State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, 97 Mont. 252, 34 P.2d 369, 371, it was said:

"The word 'vacancy' as applied to an office, has no technical meaning. An office is not vacant so long as it is supplied, in the manner provided by the Constitution or law, with an incumbent who is legally qualified to exercise the powers and perform the duties which pertain to it; and, conversely, it is vacant, in the eye of the law, whenever it is unoccupied by a legally qualified incumbent, who has a lawful right to continue therein until the happening of some future event." See, also, State ex rel. Murphy v. McBride, 29 Wash. 335, 70 P. 25.

But it is argued that there can be no vacancy in an office when there is a person who is qualified and authorized to perform the duties thereof. Citing State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, supra, a case in which alleged vacancies in the offices of governor and lieutenant governor were considered.

The provision: "if, during a vacancy in the office of governor, the lieutenant governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or from mental or physical disease become incapable of performing the duties of his office, or be absent from the state, the secretary of state shall act as governor until the vacancy shall be filled or the disability shall cease," clearly recognizes (1) that there may be a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor as the result of impeachment, displacement, resignation, death or mental or physical disease, which renders *399 him incapable of performing the duties of his office, or as a result of his absence from the state, but not as a result of the powers and duties of the office of governor devolving upon him, and (2) that upon the happening of any of those contingencies, during a vacancy in the office of governor, the secretary of state shall act as governor until the vacancy shall be filled or the disability shall cease. The phrase, "or the disability shall cease," may be referable either to the disability of the governor or the lieutenant governor, and the phrase "until the vacancy shall be filled" may likewise be referable to a vacancy in the office of governor or to a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor, which occurs "during a vacancy in the office of governor."

[9] When a vacancy, either permanent or temporary, occurs in the office of governor, the powers and duties of that office devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the residue of the term or until the governor, absent or impeached, shall have returned or the disability shall cease. It is clear that the lieutenant governor does not become governor. He remains lieutenant governor, upon whom devolves the powers and duties of governor. In such a contingency no vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor. State ex rel. Lamey v. Mitchell, supra; State ex rel. Hardin v. Sadler, 23 Nev. 356, 47 P. 450; People ex rel. Lynch v. Budd, 114 Cal. 168, 45 P. 1060, 34 L.R.A. 46. It is likewise clear that if, during a vacancy in the office of governor, a vacancy occurs in the office of lieutenant governor, the secretary of state shall act as governor. He does not become either governor or lieutenant governor. He does not perform the duties of lieutenant governor except as he acts as governor. He does not cease to be secretary of state. Under our constitution the secretary of state can act as governor only when there occurs, during a vacancy in the office of governor, a vacancy also in the office of lieutenant governor. To hold otherwise would amount to judicially changing the language of our constitution. It is our opinion that the office of lieutenant governor unquestionably became vacant upon the resignation of Mr. Gunderson which vacancy could be filled, if there be authority under the constitution and laws to fill it by appointment. Sec. 10, art. 13, provides that "the legislature may declare the cases in which any office shall be deemed vacant, and also the manner of filling the vacancy, where no provision is made for that purpose in this constitution." As hereinbefore stated, no provision is made in our constitution for the filling of a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. It is conceded that prior to the enactment of ch. 422, Laws of 1921, there was no law which authorized the filling of a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. Sec. 17.27 (4) was enacted in 1921, upon the advice of the revisor of statutes. In submitting the bill which contained the following language which the legislature subsequently enacted into law:

"A new subsection is added to section 17.27 of the statutes to read:

“(17.27) (4) Any other vacancy. In case of a vacancy in any office in the state where no other provision is made for filling the same, it shall be filled by appointment by the governor,” the revisor appended the following:

“Note: This is a blanket provision to take care of any omission in the laws for filling vacancies.”

It is contended by the relator that in construing sec. 17.27 (4), the court should apply the rule that specific provisions of a statute should prevail over general provisions upon the same subject. Degutes v. State, 189 Wis. 435, 207 N.W. 948; Wisconsin Gas & Electric Co. v. City of Ft. Atkinson, 193 Wis. 232, 213 N.W. 873, 52 A.L.R. 1033. The rule in our opinion is not applicable because there is no specific provision in our constitution or laws relating to the filling of a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor, and consequently there is no conflict between a specific law and a general law.

[10] The relator further contends that in construing this statute we should apply, as an aid to construction, the doctrine of noscitur a sociis. It is pointed out that while the statute was enacted by the legislature as a new subsection it was numbered sec. 17.27 (4) and that its application should therefore be restricted to the vacancies mentioned in paragraph (1), (2) and (3), of sec. 17.27. See Boardman v. State, 203 Wis. 173, 233 N.W. 556; City of Milwaukee v. Kassen, 203 Wis. 383, 234 N.W. 352; Fox v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co., 210 Wis. 213, 246 N.W. 511. The contention might have some merit had paragraph (4) been adopted at the same time that paragraphs (1), (2) and

(3), were enacted. Paragraph (4), clearly, was denominated by the revisor as “a blanket provision to take care of any omission in the laws for filling vacancies.” That is quite significant. Paragraph (4) is clear and unambiguous. It is *400 all-inclusive. It authorizes the governor to fill a vacancy in any office in the state where no other provision is made for filling the same. Its plain provisions are broad enough to include an appointment to the office of lieutenant governor when a vacancy exists in that office. We cannot give to it a construction which would except from its provisions a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor.

Nor can we say that the construction, which in our opinion must be given to paragraph (4), is so violative of the spirit of our constitution and the fundamental concepts therein expressed, as to impel a holding that the legislature never intended to authorize the governor to appoint a lieutenant governor when a vacancy occurs in that office. It is therefore our conclusion that the governor was authorized to appoint Herman L. Ekern to the office of lieutenant governor, which became vacant upon the resignation of Henry A. Gunderson and that therefore the complaint does not state a cause of action.

The demurrer to the complaint is sustained.

Lieutenant Governor upon happening of contingencies removing Governor from office is entitled to act as Governor, as against contention that, while also acting as Lieutenant Governor, he is holding two offices, since in absence of Lieutenant Governor, president pro tempore of senate performs duties of Lieutenant Governor until vacancy is filled or disability removed (Const. art. 7, §§ 1, 14-16).

Lieutenant Governor's acting as Governor upon Governor's resignation does not violate constitutional provision that all political power is vested in and derived from people, in that it deprives them of right to elect Governor, since people are presumed to know law and must be presumed to have chosen Lieutenant Governor with knowledge that during term for which he and Governor were elected, Lieutenant Governor might be called upon to exercise powers of Governor for residue of term (Const. art. 3, § 1; art. 7, §§ 1, 14).

McKINNON, District Judge (sitting in place of ANGSTMAN, Justice).

Relators ask for writs of mandate to compel the Secretary of State to file their primary nominating petitions and to print their names on the ballot for the primary election to be held July, 1934.

At the general election in 1932, Hon. J. E. Erickson and Hon. Frank H. Cooney were elected Governor and Lieutenant Governor, respectively, of the state of Montana. On the 13th day of March, 1933, Erickson resigned. On the 6th day of June, 1934, the relators tendered to the Secretary of State their primary nominating petitions for the primary election to be held July 17, 1934, for the following offices, namely, for Governor, J. W. Speer, as Republican candidate; A. F. Lamey, as Democratic candidate. For Lieutenant Governor on the Republican ticket, Frank A. Hazelbaker and Howard A. Johnson; and on the Democratic ticket, Hugh R. Adair, W. Ray Church, and H. Eickemeyer. All these petitions were refused by the Secretary of State, and each candidate has asked that the Secretary of State be compelled to file his petition, and that his name appear on the ballot at the primary nominating election for the particular office above mentioned.

These six applications for writs of mandate were consolidated for the purpose of argument, and will be so treated in this opinion. One question is presented for decision, namely: Is there a vacancy in either the office of Governor or Lieutenant Governor?

Section 1 of article 7 of the Constitution provides: "The executive department shall consist of a governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, attorney general, state treasurer, state auditor and superintendent of public instruction, each of whom shall hold his office for four years, or until his successor is elected and qualified. *** They shall perform such duties as are prescribed in this constitution and by the laws of the state. ***"

[1] It will be noted by the foregoing provision that the term of the Governor and the Lieutenant Governor is four years, or until their successor is elected and qualified. The word "term" applies to the office and not to the person. State ex rel. Kuhl v. Kaiser, 95 Mont. 550, 27 P.(2d) 1113; State ex rel. Morgan v. Knight, 76 Mont. 71, 245 P. 267.

Section 14 of article 7 reads: "In case of the failure to qualify, the impeachment or conviction of felony or infamous crime of the governor, or his death, removal from office, resignation, absence from the state, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the powers, duties and emoluments of the office, for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease, shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor."

[2] It will thus be seen that when the Governor resigns or is permanently removed from office, there is no vacancy in the office of Governor in the sense that there is no one left with power to discharge the duties imposed upon the Governor. The same situation exists where the Governor is absent from the state or physically unable to discharge the duties of his office. The framers of the Constitution never intended that there should be any interim in which the affairs of the state should not be executed, for they said in explicit language that on the happening of any of the contingencies mentioned in section 14, supra, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office were to be immediately transferred to the Lieutenant Governor, who is then given a mandate to discharge the duties of the office for the residue of the term for which the Governor was elected. He, as Lieutenant Governor, acts as Governor and is empowered to perform the duties of that office.

[3] While the legislative interpretation is not binding on us, it is nevertheless entitled to respectful consideration. We find that as early as 1895 the Legislature of this state treated the Lieutenant Governor, when he performed the duties of Governor, as acting Governor. This is disclosed in section 132, Revised Codes of 1921, as follows: "When the lieutenant-governor acts as governor, he is entitled to receive during the time he so acts, the compensation which the governor, if acting, would be entitled to receive for such time; but during such time he is not entitled, as lieutenant-governor, to any other compensation or mileage."

[4] There can be no vacancy in an office when there is a person clothed with authority to perform its duties. In State ex rel. Chenoweth v. Acton, 31 Mont. 37, 77 P. 299, 300, the *371 court, speaking through Mr. Commissioner Callaway, said: "The word 'vacancy,' as applied to an office, has no technical meaning. An office is not vacant so long as it is supplied, in the manner provided by the Constitution or law, with an incumbent who is legally qualified to exercise the powers and perform the duties which pertain to it; and, conversely, it is vacant, in the eye of the law, whenever it is unoccupied by a legally qualified incumbent, who has a lawful right to continue therein until the happening of some future event."

In State ex rel. Murphy v. McBride, 29 Wash. 335, 70 P. 25, 26, a Governor and a Lieutenant Governor were elected at the general election in November, 1900, for the term of four years. On December 26, 1901, the Governor died, and it was urged that there was a vacancy in the office of Governor and also in the office of Lieutenant Governor. The constitutional provision (art. 3, § 10) which was under consideration read as follows: "In case of the removal, resignation, death, or disability of the governor, the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor, and in case of a vacancy in both the offices of governor and lieutenant-governor, the duties of governor shall devolve upon the secretary of state, who shall act as governor until the disability be removed or a governor be elected." It will be noted that this constitutional provision does not provide that upon the resignation of the Governor, the Lieutenant Governor shall serve for the residue of the term. The court, in discussing the question of vacancy, said: "It is a well-settled rule that an office is not vacant so long as it is supplied, in the manner provided by the constitution or laws, with an incumbent who is legally authorized to exercise the power and perform the duties which pertain to it. *** The constitution having provided that in case of the death of the governor the duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor, there is no vacancy in the office of governor. It is not necessary to discuss the meaning of the provision 'who shall act as governor until the disability be removed or a governor be elected,' because that provision, as used here, clearly refers only to the secretary of state, in case that officer should assume the duties of governor under the contingency named. What is said above applies equally to the lieutenant governor. When the lieutenant governor, by virtue of his office and of the command of the constitution, assumed the duties of governor on the death of Gov. Rogers, the office of lieutenant governor did not thereby become vacant, but the officer remained lieutenant governor, intrusted with the powers and duties of governor."

Our attention has been called to the language of this court in State ex rel. McGowan v. Sedgwick, 46 Mont. 187, 127 P. 94, in which it is stated that upon the resignation of the Governor, there is a vacancy in that office, but we do not consider it binding, for the reason that that was not the question under consideration in that case.

[5] It is urged that upon the happening of any of the contingencies mentioned in section 14, supra, the Lieutenant Governor by exercising the powers and duties of the Governor acts also as Lieutenant Governor, and that he cannot hold two offices. This argument is answered by section 15 of article 7 of the Constitution, as follows: "The lieutenant-governor shall be president of the senate, but shall vote only when the senate is equally divided. In case of the absence or disqualification of the lieutenant-governor, from any cause which applies to the governor, or when he shall hold the office of governor, then the president pro tempore of the senate shall perform the duties of the lieutenant-governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability removed."

The argument is also answered in the case of State ex rel. Murphy v. McBride, supra, in which the court says: "It is argued, however, that since it is made the duty of the lieutenant governor, under the constitution, to be presiding officer of the state senate (section 16, art. 3), and as such to approve all bills passed by that body, he must, as governor, review and approve or reject bills which as lieutenant governor he has already approved. These duties are, no doubt, inconsistent; but this argument, we think, is fully met by another provision of the constitution, which provides, at section 10, art. 2, in substance, that when the lieutenant governor shall act as governor the senate shall choose a temporary president. The lieutenant governor, therefore, when the duties of governor devolve upon him, is relieved of the duties of presiding officer of the senate." See, also, Clifford v. Heller, 63 N. J. Law, 105, 111, 42 A. 155, 57 L. R. A. 312; Futrell v. Oldham, 107 Ark. 386, 392, 155 S. W. 502, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 571.

When the framers of the Constitution provided for the election of a Governor and a Lieutenant Governor as members of the executive department of the state (section 1, art. 7), but conferred upon the latter no executive power or authority other than in the *372 contingencies mentioned in section 14, supra, they manifested the intention that the people elect two qualified heads of that department—the one active, the other his lieutenant, ready at a moment's notice to assume the duties of the office, should his superior officer, for any reason, either temporarily or permanently, become unable to perform them. This to the end that the important functions of state government should not falter or halt for an instant.

[6] It cannot be said that this arrangement violates section 1 of article 3, to the effect that all political power is vested in and derived from the people, in that it deprives them of the right of electing a Governor; as the people are presumed to know the law and are certainly conversant with human frailty, they must be presumed to have chosen a Lieutenant Governor with the knowledge that, at any time during the term for which he and the Governor were elected, he might be called upon to exercise the powers and discharge the duties of governor "for the residue of the term."

[7] Neither do we think that upon resignation, death, or permanent removal of the Governor there is a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor. In any such event he, as Lieutenant Governor, shoulders immediately the duties of Governor, and while "he holds the office of governor," the president pro tempore of the senate performs the duties which theretofore devolved upon the Lieutenant Governor. When the duties, powers, and emoluments of the office of Governor devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor, it cannot be said that he vacates his office of Lieutenant Governor, and, unless he does so, there is no vacancy in his office. Section 511, Rev. Codes 1921. His assumption of the duties of the office of Governor does not create, and neither can he make, a vacancy, as he is discharging the functions of Governor by the mandate of the Constitution, and that by reason of being Lieutenant Governor. If the framers of the Constitution had intended that there should be a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor upon the resignation, death, or permanent removal of the Governor, they could have easily said so. They chose, however, to say that upon the happening of either of those contingencies the Lieutenant Governor should assume the duties of the office and discharge them for the residue of the term.

It would be idle to say that upon the resignation of the Governor there was thereby created a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor, in view of the specific language of sections 14 and 15, supra. If that be true, then the Lieutenant Governor, upon assuming the powers and duties of the Governor, would be entitled to appoint a Lieutenant Governor. In this manner he could divest the people of their representative chosen by the Legislature, namely, the president pro tempore, to preside during the absence of the Lieutenant Governor. In our opinion this was never contemplated and never intended by the framers of the Constitution, or the people who adopted it.

Then, again, if the Governor were absent from the state or unable temporarily to perform the duties of his office, it could hardly be argued that while the Lieutenant Governor was discharging the duties of the office of Governor, he could appoint a Lieutenant Governor. In such a case the "disability" of the Governor may cease at any time, and he thereupon assumes the duties of his office.

[8] In view of the fact that it is our opinion that there is neither a vacancy in the office of Governor nor the office of Lieutenant Governor, other questions presented in these cases need not be considered.

The writs are denied, and the several proceedings dismissed.

Argued and Submitted Nov. 5, 2012.

Filed May 21, 2013.

Synopsis

Background: Physicians brought action challenging constitutionality of Arizona statute prohibiting abortions where the probable gestational age was at least 20 weeks. The United States District Court for the District of Arizona, James A. Teilborg, J., denied physicians’ request for declaratory and injunctive relief and entered judgment in favor of the State, 884 F.Supp.2d 961, and the physicians appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Berzon, Circuit Judge, held that:

[1] physicians alleged a sufficiently concrete injury to give them Article III standing to challenge the statute on their own behalf and on behalf of their patients;

[2] statute violated right of women to make ultimate decision to terminate a pregnancy prior to fetal viability; and

[3] statute’s medical emergency exception did not transform the statute from an impermissible prohibition on abortion into a permissible regulation of abortion procedure.

Reversed.

Kleinfeld, Senior Circuit Judge, filed concurring opinion.

*1217 OPINION

BERZON, Circuit Judge:

Our question is whether the Constitution permits the Arizona legislature to prohibit abortion beginning at twenty weeks gestation, before the fetus is viable. We hold that it does not.

Arizona House Bill 2036 (“H.B.2036” or “the Act”), enacted in April 2012, forbids, except in a medical emergency, abortion of a fetus determined to be of a gestational age of at least twenty weeks. Arizona law separately prohibits abortions after fetal viability unless necessary to preserve the pregnant woman’s life or health. See Ariz.Rev.Stat. § 36–2301.01(A)(1). The challenged provision in Section 7 of H.B.2036 (“Section 7” or “the twenty-week law”)<sup>1</sup> extends the abortion ban earlier in pregnancy, to the period between twenty weeks gestation and fetal viability. Because Section 7 deprives the women to whom it applies of the ultimate decision to terminate their pregnancies prior to fetal viability, it is unconstitutional under a long line of invariant Supreme Court precedents.

<sup>1</sup> Section 7 of H.B.2036 encompasses provisions to be codified at Arizona Revised Statutes § 36–2158 and § 36–2159. As this lawsuit challenges only the provision to be codified at § 36–2159, all references to Section 7 in this opinion denote only the challenged portion thereof.

Since Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 93 S.Ct. 705, 35 L.Ed.2d 147 (1973), the Supreme Court case law concerning the constitutional protection accorded women with respect to the decision whether to undergo an abortion has been unalterably clear regarding one basic point, although it has varied in other respects: a woman has a constitutional right to choose to terminate her pregnancy before the fetus is viable. A prohibition on the exercise of that right is per se unconstitutional. While the state may regulate the mode and manner of abortion prior to fetal viability, it may not proscribe a woman from electing abortion, nor may it impose an undue burden on her choice through regulation.

The challenged Arizona statute’s medical emergency exception does not transform the law from a prohibition on abortion into a regulation of abortion procedure. Allowing a physician to decide if abortion is medically necessary is not the same as allowing a woman to decide whether to carry her own pregnancy to term. Moreover, regulations involve limitations as to the mode and manner of abortion, not preclusion of the choice to terminate a pregnancy altogether. Arizona’s twenty-week law is a preclusion prior to fetal viability and is thus invalid under binding Supreme Court precedent.

The district court erred in denying declaratory and injunctive relief and entering judgment in favor of the State. We therefore reverse.

Background

I.

On April 12, 2012, Arizona Governor Jan Brewer signed H.B.2036 into law, amending title 36, chapter 20, article 1 of the Arizona Revised Statutes, which governs the availability and performance of abortions in the state. The Act was to go into effect on August 2, 2012, but we granted an emergency injunction on August 1, 2012, staying enforcement of the challenged provision pending this appeal.

The challenged portion of Section 7, codified at Arizona Revised Statutes § 36–2159, reads:

A. Except in a medical emergency, a person shall not perform, induce or attempt to perform or induce an abortion unless the physician or the referring physician has first made a determination of the probable gestational age of the *1218 unborn child. In making that determination, the physician or referring physician shall make any inquiries of the pregnant woman and perform or cause to be performed all medical examinations, imaging studies and tests as a reasonably prudent physician in the community, knowledgeable about the medical facts and conditions of both the woman and the unborn child involved, would consider necessary to perform and consider in making an accurate diagnosis with respect to gestational age.

B. Except in a medical emergency, a person shall not knowingly perform, induce or attempt to perform or induce an abortion on a pregnant woman if the probable gestational age of her unborn child has been determined to be at least twenty weeks.

Ariz.Rev.Stat. § 36–2159. Arizona law defines “medical emergency” as:

a condition that, on the basis of the physician’s good faith clinical judgment, so complicates the medical condition of a pregnant woman as to necessitate the immediate abortion of her pregnancy to avert her death or for which a delay will create serious risk of substantial and irreversible impairment of a major bodily function.

Ariz.Rev.Stat. § 36-2151(6). The stated purpose of the Act is to “[p]rohibit abortions at or after twenty weeks of gestation, except in cases of a medical emergency, based on the documented risks to women’s health and the strong medical evidence that unborn children feel pain during an abortion at that gestational age.” H.B.2036, sec. 9(B)(1).<sup>2</sup> The Act lists a number of legislative findings in support of the assertions in the purpose provision, with citations to medical research articles. See H.B.2036, sec. 9(A)(1)-(7).

II.

The plaintiffs in this action are three board-certified obstetrician-gynecologists who practice in Arizona (“the Physicians”). In July 2012, they filed suit in the United States District Court for the District of Arizona, seeking declaratory and injunctive relief against enforcement of Section 7 on behalf of themselves and of their patients wishing to terminate pre-viability<sup>3</sup> pregnancies at or after twenty weeks.<sup>4</sup> Their complaint named three state defendants and two county defendants: the Attorney General of Arizona, Tom Horne; the Arizona Medical Board; and the Executive Director of the Arizona Medical Board, Lisa Wynn (collectively “State Defendants”); the County Attorney for Pima County, Barbara LaWall; and the County Attorney for Maricopa County, William Montgomery.

weeks, at the earliest.

In their respective practices, each of the Physicians performs abortions before fetal viability and at and after twenty weeks gestational age. They assert that their patients seek pre-viability abortions “for a variety of reasons, including that continuation of the pregnancy poses a threat to their health, that the fetus has been diagnosed with a medical condition or anomaly, or that they are losing the pregnancy *1219 (‘miscarrying’).” Under Arizona’s twenty-week law, the complaint alleges, these women will be unable to terminate their pregnancies before fetal viability unless they have a medical emergency falling within the Act’s narrow exception. Therefore, the Physicians assert, the law violates their patients’ Fourteenth Amendment substantive due process rights.

The Physicians moved for a preliminary injunction, which the State Defendants and Defendant Montgomery opposed. Defendant Montgomery also filed a motion to dismiss the action. After Defendant LaWall expressed support for the preliminary injunction, Defendant Montgomery sought her dismissal as a party defendant.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>5</sup> Because Defendant LaWall neither opposed the Physicians’ motion for a preliminary injunction nor argued in favor of Section 7 before this court, references in this opinion to Defendants’ arguments refer only to the State Defendants and/or to Defendant Montgomery.

On July 25, 2012, the district court held a hearing on the Physicians’ motion for a preliminary injunction and the motions to dismiss. Following the hearing, and without any prior notice to the parties, the court sua sponte and retroactively consolidated the preliminary injunction hearing with a trial on the merits and issued a final decision denying all relief. The order denied the Physicians’ requests for both preliminary and permanent injunctions and for a declaratory judgment. The court simultaneously denied Defendants’ motion to dismiss the action and denied as moot the motion to dismiss Defendant LaWall.

The district court’s decision was premised on three central conclusions: First, although the Physicians characterized their suit as an as-applied challenge because limited to those post-twenty-week abortions that occur before viability, the court held that the suit is properly considered a facial challenge. The court recognized that the application of Section 7 challenged by the Physicians is the law's only effective application: to prohibit pre-viability abortions from twenty weeks gestation.<sup>6</sup>

Second, the court held that Section 7 regulates, rather than prohibits, abortion at and after twenty weeks gestational age, principally because it contains a medical emergency exception permitting some abortions after twenty weeks gestation. The law "is not a ban on previability abortions," the court stated, "but is rather a limit on some previability abortions between 20 weeks gestational age and viability."

Finally, the court determined that, considered as a regulation rather than a prohibition, the challenged provision of H.B.2036 may "prompt a few women, who are considering abortion as an option, to make the ultimate decision earlier than they might otherwise have made it," but the law does not impose a substantial obstacle to abortions, because it does not strip women of the ability to choose to terminate their pregnancies before twenty weeks. This "time limitation" on the right to obtain a pre-viability abortion, the district court concluded, is justified by legitimate state interests in fetal life and the health of pregnant women.

For the reasons summarized above, the district court concluded that the Physicians' facial challenge to Section 7 fails. *1220 In the district court's view, an as-applied challenge by an affected pregnant woman would be the proper vehicle for determining whether the law unconstitutionally deprives a woman of "the right to make the abortion choice previability."

The Physicians timely appealed.

Discussion

I.

We begin by addressing two preliminary issues.

First, the district court presumed the parties "agree that the facts at issue in this case are not materially in dispute, and agree that the Court needs no additional evidence or legal argument to reach its decision." On that basis, the court invoked Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 65(a)(2) and consolidated the preliminary injunction hearing with a trial on the merits when it issued its opinion.

[1] "A district court may consolidate a preliminary injunction hearing with a trial on the merits," but only when it provides the parties with "clear and unambiguous notice [of the intended consolidation] either before the hearing commences or at a time which will afford the parties a full opportunity to present their respective cases." Air Line Pilots Ass'n Int'l v. Alaska Airlines, Inc., 898 F.2d 1393, 1397 (9th Cir.1990) (alteration in original) (quoting Univ. of Tex. v. Camenisch, 451 U.S. 390, 395, 101 S.Ct. 1830, 68 L.Ed.2d 175 (1981)) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Fed.R.Civ.P. 65(a)(2). No such notice occurred here, nor is there any indication that the parties requested or favored consolidation. In fact, Defendant Montgomery specifically registered in advance his objection to "the hearing being turned into a hearing on a permanent injunction under Rule 65," citing time pressures that would prevent assembly of necessary data in support of his arguments.

Were the factual record or the district court's factual findings of pertinence to our decision, we would be troubled by the procedure followed. But neither party has challenged the district court's approach. And because we ultimately agree with the Physicians that this case is fully controlled by binding precedent, the truncated nature of the record does not matter to our decision. We therefore do not consider this procedural matter further. For the same reason, we do not address whether the district court's "findings" are supported by the record or discuss the degree of deference owed to the legislative findings recited in the Act.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>7</sup> We note, however, that the sort of "legislative facts" addressed by the parties and by the district court are often considered by appellate courts from publicly available primary sources even if not developed in the record. See, e.g., McCormack v. Hiedeman, 694 F.3d 1004, 1016-18 & nn. 8-9, 1022 n. 12 (9th Cir.2012) (citing medical studies regarding the health effects of abortion and statistics on the availability and performance of abortions in Idaho and nationally); Roe, 410 U.S. at 149 n. 44, 93 S.Ct. 705 (citing medical research regarding morbidity and mortality rates for abortions and childbirth); Gonzales v. Carhart, 550 U.S. 124, 173 n. 3, 127 S.Ct. 1610, 167 L.Ed.2d 480

(2007) (Ginsburg, J., dissenting) (citing numerous medical articles regarding obstacles to abortion and associated risks); see also Allison Orr Larsen, Confronting Supreme Court Fact Finding, 98 Va. L. Rev. 1255, 1262 (2012) (presenting research documenting “over one hundred examples of Supreme Court opinions from the last fifteen years that make assertions of legislative fact supported by an authority never mentioned in any of the briefs”).

[2] [3] Second, the district court did not address the Physicians’ standing to bring a challenge on their own behalf and that of their patients. “We nonetheless recognize our independent obligation to examine our own jurisdiction,” Indep. Living Ctr. of S. Cal. v. Shewry, 543 F.3d 1050, 1064 (9th Cir.2008) (internal quotation marks omitted), *1221 and therefore, as the issue came up at oral argument, briefly address the Physicians’ Article III standing.

[4] To satisfy Article III standing, the Physicians must demonstrate that they suffer concrete injury that is actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical; that there is a causal connection between this injury and the challenged statute; and that the injury will likely be redressed by a favorable decision. See Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560–61, 112 S.Ct. 2130, 119 L.Ed.2d 351 (1992).

[5] In their complaint and accompanying affidavits, the Physicians allege that they have performed and will continue to perform pre-viability abortions on patients at or after twenty weeks gestation, for which they would face criminal penalties should the twenty-week law go into effect. “A physician has standing to challenge an abortion law that poses for him a threat of criminal prosecution.” Diamond v. Charles, 476 U.S. 54, 65, 106 S.Ct. 1697, 90 L.Ed.2d 48 (1986). Whether the Physicians continue to perform pre-viability abortions past twenty weeks and risk prosecution under the statute or desist from performing them to avoid penalties, their liberty is concretely affected. See Planned Parenthood of Idaho, Inc. v. Wasden, 376 F.3d 908, 916–17 (9th Cir.2004). Therefore, the Physicians have alleged a sufficiently concrete injury to challenge the provision banning providers from performing abortions on women whose pregnancies have reached twenty weeks gestation.

[6] The Physicians do not seek relief on the basis of their own right to perform abortions, however, but on the basis of the constitutional right of their patients. Courts ordinarily do not allow third parties to litigate the rights of others. “Since at least Singleton v. Wulff, however, it has been held repeatedly that physicians may acquire ius tertii standing to assert their patients’ due process rights in facial challenges to abortion laws.” Id. at 917 (citing Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106, 117–18, 96 S.Ct. 2868, 49 L.Ed.2d 826 (1976) (plurality opinion)). Recognizing the confidential nature of the physician-patient relationship and the difficulty for patients of directly vindicating their rights without compromising their privacy, the Supreme Court has entertained both broad facial challenges and pre-enforcement as-applied challenges to abortion laws brought by physicians on behalf of their patients. See, e.g., Stenberg v. Carhart, 530 U.S. 914, 922–23, 120 S.Ct. 2597, 147 L.Ed.2d 743 (2000); Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 845, 112 S.Ct. 2791, 120 L.Ed.2d 674 (1992); City of Akron v. Akron Ctr. for Reprod. Health, 462 U.S. 416, 440 n. 30, 103 S.Ct. 2481, 76 L.Ed.2d 687 (1983), overruled on other grounds by Casey, 505 U.S. at 882, 112 S.Ct. 2791 (plurality opinion); Planned Parenthood of Cent. Mo. v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 62 & n. 2, 96 S.Ct. 2831, 49 L.Ed.2d 788 (1976).

There is no dispute that the injury of which the Physicians complain is traceable to the challenged statute. Nor is there any doubt that a favorable decision, enjoining enforcement of the twenty-week law, would redress the injury. As the Physicians who bring this challenge to Section 7 therefore have standing to sue, we may consider the constitutional arguments they raise on behalf of their patients seeking pre-viability abortions at or after twenty weeks gestation. See Wasden, 376 F.3d at 918.

State's interests are not strong enough to support a prohibition of abortion or the imposition of a substantial obstacle to the woman's effective right to elect the procedure." Casey, 505 U.S. at 846, 112 S.Ct. 2791; Gonzales, 550 U.S. at 145, 127 S.Ct. 1610. That principle is binding upon us and decides this case.

B.

Defendants contend otherwise, characterizing the viability line first drawn in Roe, reaffirmed in Casey, and recognized again in Gonzales, as dicta rather than *1223 controlling Supreme Court precedent. That characterization is most certainly incorrect.

Roe identified fetal viability as the earliest point in pregnancy when the state's interest becomes sufficiently compelling to justify not just regulation of the abortion procedure, but proscription of abortion unless necessary to preserve the life or health of the mother. Roe, 410 U.S. at 163–65, 93 S.Ct. 705. Since Roe, the Supreme Court and lower federal courts have repeated over and over again that viability remains the fulcrum of the balance between a pregnant woman's right to control her body and the state's interest in preventing her from undergoing an abortion.

Colautti v. Franklin, for example, emphasized: "Viability is the critical point. And [the Court has] recognized no attempt to stretch the point of viability one way or the other." 439 U.S. 379, 389, 99 S.Ct. 675, 58 L.Ed.2d 596 (1979). City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health echoed Roe's holding that viability marks the point after which the state may proscribe abortion; before then, only regulation is permissible. 462 U.S. at 419–20 & n. 1, 428, 103 S.Ct. 2481. And while Webster v. Reproductive Health Services upheld a law requiring doctors to test for viability from twenty weeks gestational age on, 492 U.S. 490, 519–20, 109 S.Ct. 3040, 106 L.Ed.2d 410 (1989), it did not alter the principle that viability—not gestational age—remains the "critical point," id. at 529, 109 S.Ct. 3040 (O'Connor, J., concurring).<sup>9</sup> abortion on the physician's assessment of fetal viability, not gestational age. See Webster, 492 U.S. at 500-01, 109 S.Ct. 3040.

Although the plurality opinion in Casey abandoned Roe's trimester framework, 505 U.S. at 873, 112 S.Ct. 2791, the Court yet again affirmed "Roe's central holding, that viability marks the earliest point at which the State's interest in fetal life is constitutionally adequate to justify a legislative ban on nontherapeutic abortions," id. at 860, 112 S.Ct. 2791 (joint opinion) (emphasis added). The plurality opinion explained that the Court was again drawing the line at viability "so that before that time the woman has a right to choose to terminate her pregnancy," emphasizing that "there is no line other than viability which is more workable." Id. at 870, 112 S.Ct. 2791 (plurality opinion).

Echoing the joint opinion in Casey, Stenberg took as the starting point of its analysis the "established principle[ ]" that, "before 'viability ... the woman has a right to choose to terminate her pregnancy.'" 530 U.S. at 921, 120 S.Ct. 2597 (quoting Casey, 505 U.S. at 870, 112 S.Ct. 2791 (plurality opinion)) (emphasis added).<sup>10</sup>

Finally, the Supreme Court's most recent abortion decision, Gonzales, preserved the viability line as the limit on prohibitions of abortion, applying Casey rather than overturning it. Gonzales left in place the earlier rulings that,

*1224 [b]efore viability, a State 'may not prohibit any woman from making the ultimate decision to terminate her pregnancy.' It also may not impose upon this right an undue burden, which exists if a regulation's 'purpose or effect is to place a substantial obstacle in the path of a woman seeking an abortion before the fetus attains viability.'

Gonzales, 550 U.S. at 146, 156, 127 S.Ct. 1610 (emphasis added) (citation omitted) (quoting Casey, 505 U.S. at 878-79, 112 S.Ct. 2791 (plurality opinion)). From those premises, Gonzales went on to consider the constitutionality of the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act of 2003, 18 U.S.C. § 1531, framing the question before it as "whether the Act, measured by its text in this facial attack, imposes a substantial obstacle to late-term, but previability, abortions." Id. at 156, 127 S.Ct. 1610.

This court, similarly, has reaffirmed and applied the viability line in abortion cases. In Guam Society of Obstetricians & Gynecologists v. Ada, 962 F.2d 1366 (9th Cir.1992), we acknowledged that the core of Roe, including its holding that the state may not proscribe abortion before fetal viability, survived Webster. See id. at 1372-74. Because the challenged statute at issue in Guam criminalized abortions prior to viability, we held it unconstitutional. Id. Both Wasden and McCormack v. Hiedeman, 694 F.3d 1004 (9th Cir.2012), took as their starting points a woman's "Fourteenth Amendment right to terminate a pre-viability pregnancy." Wasden, 376 F.3d at 921; accord McCormack, 694 F.3d at 1015, 1018 (enjoining enforcement of a statute that imposed a substantial obstacle to abortion of a nonviable fetus).<sup>11</sup>

<sup>11</sup> In addition to the enjoined statute, the plaintiff in McCormack also challenged another Idaho law, the Pain-Capable Unborn Child Protection Act ("the PUCPA"). Like the Arizona statute at issue here, the PUCPA bans abortions from twenty weeks gestational age. See McCormack, 694 F.3d at 1009; Idaho Code §§ 18-505-18-507. We did not reach the constitutionality of the ban, however, because the plaintiff lacked standing to challenge it. McCormack, 694 F.3d at 1024-25.

Other federal courts have also emphasized the importance of the viability line when evaluating the constitutionality of state abortion laws. For example, the Tenth Circuit struck down a ban on abortions after twenty weeks gestation because, by irrebuttably presuming viability at twenty weeks, the law prohibited the abortion of fetuses that may not be viable. See Jane L. v. Bangerter, 102 F.3d 1112, 1115-18 (10th Cir.1996). The Sixth Circuit determined a state abortion law unconstitutional because it prohibited several of the most common pre-viability abortion methods, effectively precluding women from terminating their pregnancies before fetal viability. See Northland Family Planning Clinic, Inc. v. Cox, 487 F.3d 323, 337 (6th Cir.2007).

As Roe and its many progeny make clear, viability, although not a fixed point, is the critical point. The Supreme Court has recognized that viability varies among pregnancies and that improvements in medical technology will both push later in pregnancy the point at which abortion is safer than childbirth and advance earlier in gestation the point of fetal viability. See Casey, 505 U.S. at 860, 112 S.Ct. 2791. Indeed, such trends led Justice O'Connor to remark, prior to Casey, that "the Roe framework ... is on a collision course with itself." Akron, 462 U.S. at 458, 103 S.Ct. 2481 (O'Connor, J., dissenting). But while "time has overtaken some of Roe's factual assumptions," prompting the abandonment of the trimester framework, "no changes of fact have rendered viability more or less appropriate as the point at which the balance of interests tips." Casey, 505 U.S. at 860–61, 112 S.Ct. 2791. Evolving medical *1225 realities have not eroded Roe's central legal holding—that "viability marks the earliest point at which the State's interest in fetal life is constitutionally adequate to justify a legislative ban on nontherapeutic abortions." Id. at 860, 112 S.Ct. 2791. Casey could not have been clearer when it stated:

The soundness or unsoundness of that constitutional judgment in no sense turns on whether viability occurs at approximately 28 weeks, as was usual at the time of Roe, at 23 to 24 weeks, as it sometimes does today, or at some moment even slightly earlier in pregnancy, as it may if fetal respiratory capacity can somehow be enhanced in the future. Whenever it may occur, the attainment of viability may continue to serve as the critical fact, just as it has done since Roe was decided.

<sup>111</sup> While viability is a "flexible" point, see Danforth, 428 U.S. at 61, 96 S.Ct. 2831, it is medically determinable, id. at 64–65, 96 S.Ct. 2831. Precisely because viability varies from pregnancy to pregnancy, the Supreme Court has held repeatedly that "the determination of whether a particular fetus is viable is, and must be, a matter for the judgment of the responsible attending physician." Colautti, 439 U.S. at 396, 99 S.Ct. 675 (citing Danforth, 428 U.S. at 64, 96 S.Ct. 2831). That is why a state may not fix viability at a specific point in pregnancy. See Colautti, 439 U.S. at 388–89, 99 S.Ct. 675; Danforth, 428 U.S. at 64–65, 96 S.Ct. 2831. "[N]either the legislature nor the courts may proclaim one of the elements entering into the ascertainment of viability—be it weeks of gestation or fetal weight or any other single factor—as the determinant of when the State has a compelling interest in the life or health of the fetus." Colautti, 439 U.S. at 388–89, 99 S.Ct. 675; see also McCormack, 694 F.3d at 1014 n. 5.

<sup>112</sup> The parties here agree that no fetus is viable at twenty weeks gestational age. The district court so recognized, declaring it undisputed that viability usually occurs between twenty-three and twenty-four weeks gestation. Accordingly, Arizona's ban on abortion from twenty weeks necessarily prohibits pre-viability abortions. Section 7 is therefore, without more, invalid.

A.

<sup>113</sup> The district court justified its contrary conclusion by characterizing the challenged Arizona law as a regulation, rather than a prohibition, of pre-viability abortions. The court then reasoned that the statute does not impose an "undue burden," under the standard enunciated in Casey for determining the validity of rules regarding the manner in which pre-viability abortions are to be provided. Casey specified that a law imposes an undue burden on a woman's right to choose to terminate her pregnancy if it "has the purpose or effect of placing a substantial obstacle in the path of a woman seeking an abortion of a nonviable fetus." Casey, 505 U.S. at 877, 112 S.Ct. 2791 (plurality opinion) (emphasis added); see also Gonzales, 550 U.S. at 156, 127 S.Ct. 1610. Where it does so, the "power of the State reach[es] into the heart of the liberty protected by the Due Process Clause." Casey, 505 U.S. at 874, 112 S.Ct. 2791 (plurality opinion). But this "undue burden"/"substantial obstacle" mode of analysis has no place where, as here, the state is forbidding certain women from choosing pre-viability abortions rather than specifying the conditions under which such abortions are to be allowed.

Arizona's twenty-week law deprives women of the right to choose abortion at all after twenty weeks gestation. Given *1226 inaccuracies in calculating actual gestational age, the period between twenty weeks from the first day of a woman's last menstrual cycle and the point of fetal viability may be a month or more. See Amicus Brief of the Am. Coll. of Obstetricians & Gynecologists & Am. Cong. of Obstetricians & Gynecologists in Support of Plaintiffs–Appellants and Reversal at 4 n.4, Isaacson v. Horne, No. 12–16670 (9th Cir. Sept. 13, 2012) ("ACOG Amicus Brief"). There is therefore no doubt that the twenty-week law operates as a ban on pre-viability abortion and that it cannot stand under the viability rule enunciated repeatedly by the Supreme Court, this circuit, and other circuits: “Before viability, a State may not prohibit any woman from making the ultimate decision to terminate her pregnancy.” Gonzales, 550 U.S. at 146, 127 S.Ct. 1610 (internal quotation marks omitted); accord Casey, 505 U.S. at 846, 112 S.Ct. 2791.

Defendants and the district court rely most heavily on Gonzales for their contrary characterization of the Arizona law. But unlike the statute at issue in Gonzales, Section 7 does not just restrict a woman’s right to choose a particular method of terminating her pregnancy before viability; it eliminates a woman’s “right to choose abortion itself.” Stenberg, 530 U.S. at 930, 120 S.Ct. 2597. Even though the fetus is not yet viable at twenty weeks, only a physician can elect to perform an abortion from that point, and only in the case of a medical emergency as narrowly defined under the Arizona statute. During the period between the twenty-week mark and viability, the pregnant woman “lacks all choice in the matter” of whether to carry her pregnancy to term. Casey, 505 U.S. at 850, 112 S.Ct. 2791. Under the Supreme Court’s consistent holdings, that distinction makes all the difference to the validity of the Arizona statute.

This consequence—the elimination of a woman’s choice as to post-twenty-week, pre-viability abortions—is not merely collateral to the Arizona law’s purpose. Section 7 does not have only the “incidental effect of making it more difficult or more expensive to procure an abortion.” Id. at 874, 112 S.Ct. 2791 (plurality opinion). Nor does it merely “create a structural mechanism by which the State, or the parent or guardian of a minor, may express profound respect for the life of the unborn.” Id. at 877, 112 S.Ct. 2791. Instead, the stated purpose of H.B.2036 is to “[p]rohibit” a woman from electing abortion once the fetus reaches twenty weeks gestational age. H.B.2036, sec. 9(B)(1). Given that Arizona law already forbids post-viability abortions, see Ariz.Rev.Stat. § 36–2301.01, the principal effect, and, necessarily, the primary intent, of the challenged statute is to prohibit pre-viability abortions at and after twenty weeks.

B.

The district court nonetheless—again, erroneously, given the binding precedent we have surveyed—applied not the bright-line rule that the state may not proscribe abortion before viability, but instead the “undue burden” standard elaborated in Casey for quite different sorts of statutes. None of the factors on which the court rested its undue burden analysis—the continued availability of abortion prior to twenty weeks, the medical emergency exception in H.B.2036, the rarity of abortion after twenty weeks, or the state’s asserted interests in the law—can save a pre-viability ban, such as Arizona’s twenty-week law, from constitutional infirmity.

First, the district court held that, because a woman can obtain a pre-viability abortion prior to twenty weeks, the challenged *1227 law does not deprive her of the “ultimate decision” to terminate her pregnancy, but merely places a “time limitation” on that choice. The availability of abortions earlier in pregnancy does not, however, alter the nature of the burden that Section 7 imposes on a woman once her pregnancy is at or after twenty weeks but prior to viability. And a prohibition on abortion at and after twenty weeks does not merely “encourage” women to make a decision regarding abortion earlier than Supreme Court cases require; it forces them to do so.

Moreover, to be constitutional, even laws that proscribe post-viability abortions, such as Arizona Revised Statutes § 36-2301.01, must contain a health exception. See Roe, 410 U.S. at 164-65, 93 S.Ct. 705; Stenberg, 530 U.S. at 930, 120 S.Ct. 2597. "An adequate health exception ... is a per se constitutional requirement.... To preclude a woman from receiving a medically necessary abortion is to impose an unconstitutional burden." Wasden, 376 F.3d at 922-23. As Casey put it, "the essential holding of Roe forbids a State to interfere with a woman's choice to undergo an abortion procedure if continuing her pregnancy would constitute a threat to her health." 505 U.S. at 880, 112 S.Ct. 2791. Accordingly, the absence of an adequate medical exception may make an otherwise permissible prohibition on post-viability abortion unconstitutional. See, e.g., Stenberg, 530 U.S. at 930, 120 S.Ct. 2597. But the converse is not true: The presence of a medical exception does not make an otherwise impermissible prohibition constitutional. The adequacy of the medical exception has no bearing on whether the prohibition is permissible in the first place. The twenty-week law is unconstitutional because it bans abortion at a pre-viability stage of pregnancy; no health exception, no matter how broad, could save it.<sup>12</sup>

Because the medical emergency exception will not cover all women who seek pre-viability abortions at or after twenty weeks, the challenged provision continues to operate as a complete bar to the rights of some women to choose to terminate their pregnancies before the fetus is viable. Significantly, the emergency exception does not authorize abortions in cases of fetal anomaly or pregnancy failure, which do not pose an immediate threat to the woman's health. See Ariz.Rev.Stat. § 36-2151(6).

4.

To the litany of justifications given by the district court for failing to follow the Supreme Court's clear rule that no woman may be entirely precluded from choosing to terminate her pregnancy at any time prior to viability, Defendants add one more: They argue that the twenty-week law "might be constitutional based solely on the state's compelling interest in maternal health." Current medical knowledge, Defendants contend, indicates "abortion by 20 weeks has higher rates of mortality and health complications for the mother than carrying the unborn child to term." Consequently, they reason, the state may proscribe abortions from twenty weeks because "there is no right to unsafe abortion" (emphasis added).

Once more, this suggestion runs squarely up against Roe and its progeny, including Casey. Recognizing an important state interest in maternal health, Roe held that “a State may regulate the abortion procedure to the extent that the regulation reasonably relates to the preservation and protection of maternal health.” 410 U.S. at 163, 93 S.Ct. 705 (emphasis added). Toward this end, the Supreme Court has repeatedly countenanced informed consent requirements directed at protecting the health of pregnant women without precluding a woman’s ability to balance the risk to her own health, once known, against other considerations.<sup>13</sup> See, e.g., *1229 Casey, 505 U.S. at 881–84, 112 S.Ct. 2791 (plurality opinion); Danforth, 428 U.S. at 67, 96 S.Ct. 2831. Casey, for example, upheld a requirement that doctors inform their patients of the consequences of abortion to their own health (as well as to the fetus). See 505 U.S. at 882–83, 112 S.Ct. 2791 (plurality opinion). Just as for other medical procedures that carry risks of morbidity or mortality, the requirement upheld in Casey left women to decide, in consultation with their medical providers, whether they wish to undertake known risks.<sup>14</sup> Under the challenged Arizona law, however, if a pregnant woman is at or after twenty weeks gestation, she no longer can decide whether she is willing to undertake the risks to her own health posed by abortion; the State has made that choice for her.

<sup>14</sup> Notably, the Arizona Supreme Court has emphasized that, in the context of informed consent, “the decision to undergo an operation belongs to the patient.” Hales v. Pittman, 118 Ariz. 305, 314, 576 P.2d 493 (1978). A more recent case, Simat Corp. v. Arizona Health Care Cost Containment System, recognized that the privacy clause of the Arizona Constitution guarantees Arizonans the right “to care for their health and to choose or refuse the treatment they deem best for themselves.” 203 Ariz. 454, 458 n. 2, 56 P.3d 28 (2002) (citing Rasmussen v. Fleming, 154 Ariz. 207, 215, 741 P.2d 674 (1987)).

Defendants correctly point out that the existence of medical or scientific uncertainty regarding either the safety of abortion after twenty weeks gestational age or fetal capacity to feel pain does not preclude the Arizona legislature from setting standards for the manner and means through which abortions are to be provided. See Gonzales, 550 U.S. at 163–64, 127 S.Ct. 1610. Such uncertainty “does not foreclose the exercise of legislative power in the abortion context any more than it does in other contexts.” Id. at 164, 127 S.Ct. 1610. But neither does it expand legislative power beyond constitutional bounds.

The short of the matter is that, because Arizona’s twenty-week law acts as a prohibition of, and not merely a limitation on the manner and means of, pre-viability abortions, under long-established Supreme Court law no state interest is strong enough to support it. See Casey, 505 U.S. at 846, 112 S.Ct. 2791. Section 7 effectively shifts from viability to twenty weeks gestation the point at which the state’s asserted interests override a woman’s right to choose whether to carry a pregnancy to term. Supreme Court precedent does not countenance such a shift.

IV.

Finally, we turn to a question to which the district court devoted considerable attention but which we conclude ultimately has no bearing on the outcome of the legal issue before us: whether the Physicians’ suit is properly construed as a facial or as-applied challenge to the Arizona statute.

<sup>[20]</sup> The Physicians maintain that they challenge the twenty-week law only as it applies to pre-viability abortions at or after twenty weeks gestation; they do not allege Section 7 is unconstitutional as applied to later-term abortions of viable fetuses, *1230 which none of the Physicians performs. Described in this fashion, the complaint appears to be “a paradigmatic as-applied attack [that] challenges only one of the rules in a statute, a subset of the statute’s applications, or the application of the statute to a specific factual circumstance.” Hoye v. City of Oakland, 653 F.3d 835, 857 (9th Cir.2011).<sup>15</sup> But as the district court observed, the twenty-week law only has practical significance under Arizona law until viability, because Arizona separately bans post-viability abortion under § 36–2301.01. This lawsuit is not challenging the independent ban on post-viability abortions, and so, realistically, challenges Section 7 on its face—that is, in all the situations in which it would actually be determinative.

<sup>15</sup> That the statute has not yet been applied to any of the plaintiffs does not preclude them from bringing a pre-enforcement, as-applied challenge. Many such challenges have been entertained in the past. See, e.g., Casey, 505 U.S. at 845, 112 S.Ct. 2791; Wasden, 376 F.3d at 914; Planned Parenthood of S. Ariz. v. Lawall, 180 F.3d 1022, 1024–27 (9th Cir.1999) (applying Casey's “undue burden standard” in evaluating a facial challenge to an abortion regulation). Nor do the plaintiffs have an obligation, as the district court implied, to argue that the statute would be constitutional under some set of facts, but was “only unconstitutional as-applied to Plaintiffs.” If they can show that it is unconstitutional as to the patients on whose behalf they sue, then plaintiffs have met their burden for an as-applied challenge.

<sup>121</sup> The precise characterization of the Physicians' complaint, however, has little bearing on the resolution of the legal question before us. “[T]he distinction between facial and as-applied challenges is not so well defined that it has some automatic effect or that it must always control the pleadings and disposition in every case involving a constitutional challenge.” Citizens United v. Fed. Election Comm'n, 558 U.S. 310, 331, 130 S.Ct. 876, 175 L.Ed.2d 753 (2010). Instead, the distinction matters primarily as to the remedy appropriate if a constitutional violation is found. Id. The substantive legal tests used in facial and as-applied challenges are “invariant,” Hoye, 653 F.3d at 857, and so our question remains whether the statute deprives a woman of the right to choose to terminate her pregnancy before viability. That it does so in all cases, or only in some cases to which it applies, may affect the breadth of the relief to which plaintiffs are entitled, but not our jurisdiction to entertain the suit or the constitutional standard we apply.

<sup>122</sup> The posture of the challenge also can bear on the showing that plaintiffs must make to prevail. “Facial and as-applied challenges differ in the extent to which the invalidity of a statute need be demonstrated.” Legal Aid Servs. of Or. v. Legal Servs. Corp., 608 F.3d 1084, 1096 (9th Cir.2010) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). Here, however, there is no practical difference between the two approaches.

As we have discussed, given the controlling, substantive legal standards, Section 7 is invalid as applied to every woman affected by its prohibition on abortions. In other words, there is a one hundred percent correlation between those whom the statute affects and its constitutional invalidity as applied to them. That universal correlation is sufficient to require declaring the statute entirely invalid, even under the strict standard enunciated in United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 107 S.Ct. 2095, 95 L.Ed.2d 697 (1987), and applicable except in First Amendment and abortion cases, as there is “no set of circumstances” to which the statute applies under which it would be valid. Id. at 745, 107 S.Ct. 2095. And, given the one hundred percent correlation, there is no doubt the special rule that applies to facial challenges in abortion *1231 cases—that plaintiffs need only show the law challenged is invalid “in a large fraction of the cases in which [the statute] is relevant,” Casey, 505 U.S. at 895, 112 S.Ct. 2791—is also met. See also Lawall, 180 F.3d at 1027.

<sup>123</sup> In contrast, the facial versus as-applied distinction is relevant when a claimed statutory defect applies to a sub-category of the people affected by the law, and the court must determine whether that particular sub-category may challenge the statute as a whole, including its application to people who are not similarly situated. Here, because of the one hundred percent correlation, that usual concern with invalidating an abortion statute on its face—that the injunctive relief goes beyond the circumstances in which the statute is invalid to include situations in which it may not be—does not arise.

In Gonzales, for example, the Court considered whether the impact of the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act on people for whom the banned abortion method may be medically necessary was grounds to hold not only that the ban was unconstitutional as applied to those individuals, but that it was entirely unconstitutional and could not be applied at all because it lacked a medical exception. See Gonzales, 550 U.S. at 161–63, 127 S.Ct. 1610. The Court concluded that an as-applied challenge was the proper vehicle through which to seek relief for the very small subgroup of affected women as to whom the absence of a medical exception might render the statute invalid. See id. at 167–68, 127 S.Ct. 1610. Here, however, the substantive constitutional law renders the twenty-week law invalid as to every woman who would choose to have an abortion but is precluded from doing so by Section 7.

The Physicians are therefore entitled to the relief they seek, enjoining the challenged provision of Section 7 in its entirety.

Conclusion

Under controlling Supreme Court precedent, Arizona may not deprive a woman of the choice to terminate her pregnancy at any point prior to viability. Section 7 effects such a deprivation, by prohibiting abortion from twenty weeks gestational age through fetal viability. The twenty-week law is therefore unconstitutional under an unbroken stream of Supreme Court authority, beginning with Roe and ending with Gonzales. Arizona simply cannot proscribe a woman from choosing to obtain an abortion before the fetus is viable.

We therefore REVERSE the district court's denial of declaratory and injunctive relief.

KLEINFELD, Senior Circuit Judge, concurring:

The current state of the law compels me to concur.

Arizona defends the statute on two grounds: that the risk to pregnant women is considerably greater after 20 weeks gestation, and that fetuses feel pain at least by 20 weeks. The State has presented substantial medical evidence to support its legislative findings on both points. The very undeveloped record affords no basis for rejecting these propositions. But they do not suffice to justify the statute in the current state of constitutional law. Were the statute limited to protecting fetuses from unnecessary infliction of excruciating pain before their death, Arizona might regulate abortions at or after 20 weeks by requiring anesthetization of the fetuses about to be killed, much as it requires anesthetization of prisoners prior to killing them when the death penalty is carried out.<sup>1</sup> Gonzales v. Carhart similarly suggested *1232 that if a particularly inhumane abortion procedure, removing the child from the uterus intact and then killing it after it had left the uterus and entered the vaginal canal, were "truly necessary in some circumstances, it appears likely an injection that kills the fetus is an alternative."<sup>2</sup>

The plaintiffs argue that some extremely serious birth defects cannot be detected until after 20 weeks. If that were all that were problematic about the statute, we could apply the doctrine of constitutional avoidance, and read the statutory phrasing to permit post-20 week abortions for serious fetal anomalies. "The elementary rule is that every reasonable construction must be resorted to, in order to save a statute from unconstitutionality."<sup>3</sup> The statutory phrase "serious risk of substantial and irreversible impairment of a major bodily function"<sup>4</sup> could, albeit with some strain, be read to mean impairment of the fetus's bodily functions. Even if not, birth of a severely deformed child is highly likely to impair all of a mother's bodily and mental functions for the rest of her life, because of the extraordinary burdens the child's disabilities and illnesses will likely cause a loving mother to suffer. A hellish life of pain may be likely for both mother and child, in the case of the birth defects described in plaintiffs' affidavits. A prohibition on abortion "would be unconstitutional ... if it subjected women to significant health risks."<sup>5</sup>

But plaintiffs do not limit their challenge to such cases, they just use them as emotionally appealing anecdotes for why abortions may be desirable after 20 weeks. Because their challenge is facial, not an as-applied challenge involving specific birth defects, our decision cannot be based only on cases involving severe birth defects undetectable until the 20 to 23 week period.

The State argues that we ought to reject this facial challenge and await an as-applied challenge. The State correctly argues that the challengers, in a facial challenge, must show that there can be "no set of circumstances ... under which the Act would be valid."<sup>6</sup> This is why plaintiffs are not entitled to prevail in this facial challenge case by showing that in some cases, such as the gross fetal deformity not detectable until after 20 weeks, the statute poses an "undue burden."

Center for Reproductive Health, 497 U.S. 502, 514, 110 S.Ct. 2972, 111 L.Ed.2d 405 (1990)). The Court in Gonzales notes, but does not resolve, the tension between the “no set of facts” standard in Akron and the “large fraction of the cases” standard in Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 112 S.Ct. 2791, 120 L.Ed.2d 674 (1992).

Because this is a facial challenge, we have to consider the opposite question, whether there can be any case in which the burden is not “undue.” To do so, we must hypothesize cases in which the statutory “burden” on abortion might be less obviously troubling. So let us suppose that the statute allows abortions on fetuses that are perfectly normal, as most are, and that the reason for the mother’s decision to obtain a late abortion is that her partner, upon noticing her previously undisclosed *1233 pregnancy, pressures her to do so. The question we must answer in this facial challenge case is whether a state may prohibit a post-20 week but pre-viability abortion where the mother’s choice results not from detection of a likely birth defect, not from health risks to the fetus or the mother, but from her decision made in the context of the ordinary pressures of life. Such cases probably occur in substantial numbers, because ambivalence, moral strain, economic strain, and relationship strain may sometimes accompany pregnancy.

What controls this case is that the parties do not dispute that the 20-week line Arizona has drawn is three or four weeks prior to viability. Defendants do not argue that the 20 to 23 or 24 week fetuses protected by the statute are viable, and offer no evidence to that effect. We are bound, in this particular case, by the absence of any factual dispute as to whether the fetuses to be killed between gestational ages 20 and 23 or 24 weeks are viable. The decision in this case cannot, of course, establish the factual medical question of whether they are viable, because non-viability is the underlying factual assumption of both parties in today’s case. For this case, Arizona concedes non-viability.

Viability is the “critical fact” that controls constitutionality.<sup>7</sup> That is an odd rule, because viability changes as medicine changes. As Planned Parenthood v. Casey noted, between Roe v. Wade<sup>8</sup> in 1973 and the time Casey was decided in 1992, viability dropped from 28 weeks to 23 or 24 weeks, because medical science became more effective at preserving the lives of premature babies.<sup>9</sup> The briefs make good arguments for why viability should not have the constitutional significance it does, but under controlling Supreme Court decisions, it does indeed have that significance. And even though medical science for premature babies may advance to where they are viable three or four weeks earlier, Arizona does not claim that science has done so.

Thus this case has to be decided on the assumption that the statute applies to non-viable fetuses, and that the statute before us prohibits abortions of non-viable fetuses past 20 weeks of gestation except for medical emergencies. We evaluate whether that prohibition is, under Casey, an “undue burden.” The woman who does not have a “medical emergency” cannot obtain an abortion after 20 weeks from an Arizona physician. The question for us is whether the current state of constitutional law prohibits the states from imposing that restriction. It does.

Though Casey was a plurality opinion leaving some room for interpretation,<sup>10</sup> a majority of the Supreme Court in Gonzales spoke clearly, albeit partially in dicta,<sup>11</sup> as to the current state of the law. Here are several propositions of law by which, under Casey and Gonzales, we are bound:

<sup>11</sup> U.S. v. Montero-Camargo, 208 F.3d 1122, 1132 n. 17 (9th Cir.2000) (“We do not treat considered dicta from the Supreme Court lightly. Rather, we accord it appropriate deference.... Supreme Court dicta have a weight that is greater than ordinary judicial dicta as prophecy of what that Court might hold; accordingly, we do not blandly shrug them off because they were not a holding.”) (quotations omitted).

8. Arizona has unquestionably put a “substantial obstacle” in the path of a woman seeking to abort a previability fetus. Unless she has a “medical emergency,” no one can perform it on her. True, she might be able to go to another state for it, but I am unaware of any case in which one state may deprive someone of a constitutional right because the individual could exercise it in another state. And aborting previability fetuses is, under the current state of the law, a constitutional right. True, the state has a legitimate interest in protecting the fetus from pain. Although plaintiffs’ amici claim that a previability fetus feels no pain, the state’s experts’ affidavits claim that it does, and legislatures have “wide discretion to pass legislation in areas where there is medical and scientific uncertainty.”<sup>22</sup> But protection of the fetus from pain, even the pain of having a doctor stick scissors in the back of its head and then having the doctor “open[ ] up the scissors [and stick in] a high-powered suction tube into the opening, and suck[ ] the baby’s brains out” was not enough in Gonzales to justify a complete prohibition.<sup>23</sup>

*1235 As for Arizona’s claimed interest in the mother’s health, people are free to do many things risky to their health, such as surgery to improve their quality of life but unnecessary to preserve life. There appears to be no authority for making an exception to this general liberty regarding one’s own health for abortion.

I have alluded to administration of the death penalty to convicts because in one respect it is analogous. Many people have very substantial moral, philosophical, practical, and religious objections to one or both. Of course the analogy is limited, because convicts sentenced to death have committed horrendous crimes, but fetuses have committed no crimes. But the analogy applies to the extent that regardless of the objections we may have, a lower court is bound to apply Supreme Court authority, which allows executions and requires states to permit abortions. And under the authority by which we, and the state legislatures, are bound, the Arizona prohibition is unconstitutional.

Prosecuting Attorney, Defendant-Appellant.

No. 13-35401.

Argued and Submitted July 18, 2014.

Filed May 29, 2015.

Synopsis

Background: Woman who, after successfully terminating her pregnancy by taking drug purchased over Internet, was charged with felony misconduct under Idaho law, brought putative class action challenging constitutionally of Idaho abortion laws, and she moved for preliminary injunctive relief. Physician intervened as a plaintiff to assert his own challenge to those laws, as well as challenge on behalf of his patients. The United States District Court for the District of Idaho, B. Lynn Winmill, Chief Judge, 2011 WL 4436548 and 417 Fed.Appx. 270, entered order enjoining prosecuting attorney from enforcing one statutory subsection against woman, but finding that woman did not have standing to challenge other provisions, and parties appealed. The Court of Appeals, Pregerson, Circuit Judge, 694 F.3d 1004, affirmed in part and reversed and remanded in part. On remand, the District Court, Winmill, Chief Judge, 900 F.Supp.2d 1128, granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, and appeal was taken.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Pregerson, Circuit Judge, held that:

in question;

<sup>[4]</sup> provision of Idaho's Pain-Capable Unborn Child Protection Act (PUCPA) that prohibited abortion of fetuses 20 or more weeks postfertilization, regardless of whether fetus had attained viability, was unconstitutional on its face;

<sup>[5]</sup> provision which required that all second-trimester abortions occur in hospital, and which subjected licensed medical providers to civil and criminal penalties if they failed to abide by this provision, was also unconstitutional on its face; and

* The Honorable Donald E. Walter, Senior District Judge for the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Louisiana, sitting by designation.

PREGERSON, Circuit Judge:

In this 42 U.S.C. § 1983 action, Stephen Herzog, the Prosecuting Attorney of Bannock County, Idaho, appeals the district court's order denying his motion for partial summary judgment and granting the joint motion for partial summary judgment in favor of appellees Jennie McCormack ("McCormack") and Dr. Richard Hearn ("Dr. Hearn").

Before the district court, Jennie McCormack claimed that Idaho Code Title 18, Chapters 5—the Pain–Capable Unborn Child Protection Act ("PUCPA")—and 6, which regulate the performance of abortions, violate various provisions of the United States Constitution. McCormack's *1022 attorney is Dr. Hearn, who is also an Idaho licensed physician who intends to provide his patients with pre-viability medical abortions. Dr. Hearn, as a third party-intervenor, also challenged the constitutionality of §§ 18–505 and 18–608, which fall within Chapters 5 and 6 of Idaho Code Title 18.

We have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291. For the reasons set forth below, we affirm.

BACKGROUND

This case had its genesis in an Idaho state criminal prosecution when, on May 18, 2011, the then Prosecuting Attorney for Bannock County, Idaho, Mark Hiedeman,<sup>1</sup> filed a criminal complaint against Jennie McCormack. The complaint charged McCormack with violating Idaho Code § 18–606,<sup>2</sup> for knowingly submitting to an abortion not authorized under the statute, or purposely self-terminating a pregnancy. McCormack admitted to the police that she self-induced an abortion after ingesting a pack of five pills.<sup>3</sup> A physician examined the fetus and estimated its gestational age to have been between nineteen and twenty-three weeks, "but with difficult certainty."

<sup>2</sup> Section 18–606 provides that a woman who submits to an abortion in a manner not authorized by statute, or acts as an accomplice to such an abortion, will be guilty of a felony, fined, and/or imprisoned for not less than one year, and not more than five.

<sup>3</sup> McCormack knew that abortions are not available in southeast Idaho, where she lived. McCormack was aware that abortions are available in Salt Lake City, Utah, and cost between $400 and $2,000, depending on the stage of the pregnancy. McCormack learned that medications could be used to perform abortions and that the medications were significantly less expensive than surgical abortions. McCormack's sister allegedly found unspecified abortion pills online, paid $200 for them, and had them shipped to McCormack in Idaho.

Then on September 7, 2011, an Idaho state judge dismissed the criminal complaint without prejudice for lack of probable cause.

On September 16, 2011, McCormack filed a class action in the United States District Court for the District of Idaho against the then Prosecuting Attorney Hiedeman, "seeking a determination that section 18-606, as well as other provisions of Title 18, Chapters 5 and 6 of the Idaho Code, which also regulate abortion[s], violate various provisions of the United States Constitution."

On November 14, 2011, Chief United States District Judge for the District of Idaho, B. Lynn Winmill, granted McCormack's motion for preliminary injunctive relief and enjoined then Prosecuting Attorney Hiedeman from enforcing § 18-606 (criminalizing submitting to an abortion), as interpreted together with § 18-608(1).<sup>4</sup> The district court, however, held that McCormack did not have standing to challenge § 18-608(2)<sup>5</sup> or § 18-505.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>4</sup> Section 18-608(1) requires a physician to perform all first trimester abortions in a "properly staffed and equipped" hospital, medical office, or clinic. The physician must also make "satisfactory arrangements with one or more acute care hospitals within reasonable proximity," in case of complications or emergencies related to the abortion.

*1023 On August 22, 2012, Prosecuting Attorney Hiedeman determined that he would not re-file a criminal complaint against McCormack for allegedly violating §

18-606 because he felt that it was unlikely that his office would develop additional evidence. About two months later, the Prosecuting Attorney offered McCormack transactional immunity from prosecution for the alleged December 2010 abortion. McCormack declined to sign the agreement.

On February 23, 2012, McCormack's attorney, Dr. Hearn, moved to intervene "on his own behalf and on the behalf of his patients." Dr. Hearn is a licensed physician as well as an attorney in Idaho, and has stated his intent to provide medical abortions by "prescrib[ing] FDA approved medications to women in Bannock County, Idaho such as McCormack who ... seek to medically (non-surgically) terminate their pregnancies prior to fetal viability in violation of the restrictions contained in Idaho Code Title 18, Chapters 5 and 6." Medical abortions induced by pills are distinct from surgical or therapeutic abortions which usually take place in a medical clinic or a hospital. Since 1997, Dr. Hearn has continuously registered with the Federal Drug Enforcement Agency and the Idaho State Board of Pharmacy, which allows him to legally prescribe medication in Bannock County. Dr. Hearn has not provided medical abortions in the past, does not have a medical office in which to treat patients, and has practiced as a full-time attorney since 1997.

The district court granted Dr. Hearn's motion to intervene. Dr. Hearn filed an amended complaint-in-intervention that similarly challenged the constitutionality of certain provisions of Idaho Code Title 18, Chapters 5 and 6. Pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983, Dr. Hearn sought to enjoin the Prosecuting Attorney from criminally prosecuting or threatening to prosecute any woman who seeks an abortion or any health provider for violating Idaho Code Title 18, Chapters 5 and 6. Dr. Hearn also sought a declaratory judgment striking down the relevant Idaho statutes' criminal sanctions as unconstitutional facially and as applied to women seeking an abortion in Bannock County, Idaho, or any health provider who provides assistance to such women.

On September 11, 2012, we affirmed the district court's grant of a preliminary injunction that enjoined the Prosecuting Attorney from prosecuting McCormack under §§ 18-606 and 18-608(1), and expanded the injunction to include § 18-608(2) because McCormack faced a "genuine threat of prosecution under th[is] subsection of the statute." McCormack v. Hiedeman, 694 F.3d 1004, 1020-21 (9th Cir.2012) (McCormack I). We limited the preliminary injunction, however, to affect only McCormack (as opposed to all women affected by § 18-606), id. at 1019-20, and further held that McCormack lacked standing to seek pre-enforcement relief against the enforcement of PUCPA on the basis of future pregnancies, id. at 1022–25.

On October 16, 2012, before the district court McCormack and Dr. Hearn jointly moved for partial summary judgment to declare three Idaho statutes— § 18–606, in conjunction with § 18–608(1) or (2); § 18–605,<sup>7</sup> in conjunction with § 18–608(1) or (2); and § 18–505, in conjunction with § 18–507 or § 18–508—unconstitutional, *1024 and to permanently enjoin the Prosecuting Attorney from enforcing the statutes.

<sup>7</sup> Section 18–605 establishes civil and criminal penalties for persons who perform abortions other than as permitted by the remainder of Title 18, Chapter 6 of the Idaho Code. In particular, § 18–605(3) states that the licensed or certified health care provider must “knowingly” violate the statute to be guilty of a felony.

On March 6, 2013, the district court granted McCormack and Dr. Hearn’s joint motion for partial summary judgment and denied Prosecuting Attorney Herzog’s cross-motion for partial summary judgment. On March 20, 2013, McCormack and Dr. Hearn moved to dismiss all remaining claims against Herzog and to enter a final judgment. The district court granted the motion and entered final judgment on May 2, 2013, declaring the challenged statutes unconstitutional, and enjoining Herzog from prosecuting McCormack or Dr. Hearn under the challenged statutes.

Herzog timely appeals the district court’s final judgment.

A. This court has jurisdiction.

1. Standard of Review

2. McCormack’s challenge to § 18–606 is not moot.

Herzog asserts that McCormack’s challenge to § 18–606 is moot because the Prosecuting Attorney granted McCormack transactional immunity for the alleged 2010 abortion.

<sup>[5]</sup> <sup>[6]</sup> “A case might become moot if subsequent events make it absolutely clear that the allegedly wrongful behavior could not reasonably be expected to recur. The heavy burden of persuading the court that the challenged conduct cannot reasonably be expected to start up again lies with the party asserting mootness.” Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 189, 120 S.Ct. 693, 145 L.Ed.2d 610 (2000) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Herzog, therefore, must demonstrate that his office will never again prosecute McCormack under § 18–606, or that the court is no longer capable of “affect[ing] the rights of litigants in the case before [it].” Lewis v. Cont’l Bank Corp., 494 U.S. 472, 477, 110 S.Ct. 1249, 108 L.Ed.2d 400 (1990) (citing North Carolina v. Rice, 404 U.S. 244, 246, 92 S.Ct. 402, 30 L.Ed.2d 413 (1971)).

<sup>8</sup> Like the district court, we assume, but do not decide, that the Prosecuting Attorney’s offer to not prosecute McCormack is a transactional immunity agreement.

*1025 (1) The specific relief McCormack seeks—declaratory relief that § 18–606, interpreted with §§ 18–608(1) and 18–608(2), is facially unconstitutional—is still available.

(2) McCormack continues to assert that the provisions are unconstitutional.

(3) Prosecuting Attorney Herzog continues to assert that the provisions are not unconstitutional.

Moreover, the district court determined that “[t]here is a significant public interest in settling the legality of these provisions, and the existence of this interest ‘militates against a mootness conclusion.’ ” (citing Olagues v. Russoniello, 770 F.2d 791, 794–95 (9th Cir.1985)).

McCormack argues that her claims are not moot because they fall under three exceptions to the mootness doctrine: (a) “voluntary cessation,” (b) “collateral legal consequences,” and (c) “capable of repetition, yet evading review.”

<sup>181</sup> (a) McCormack is correct that this case falls within the “voluntary cessation” exception. Herzog acknowledges that under the “voluntary cessation” exception, it is well-settled that “a defendant claiming that its voluntary compliance moots a case bears the formidable burden of showing that it is absolutely clear the allegedly wrongful behavior could not reasonably be expected to recur.” Friends of the Earth, 528 U.S. at 190, 120 S.Ct. 693. Yet Herzog argues that the court should presume that the government is acting in good faith, that the Bannock County Prosecuting Attorney office’s decision against re-filing criminal charges was made in “the interests of justice,” and that the office’s sparse history of bringing criminal charges under § 18–606 demonstrates a lack of “biased calculus.” A presumption of good faith, however, cannot overcome a court’s wariness of applying mootness under “protestations of repentance and reform, especially when abandonment seems timed to anticipate suit, and there is probability of resumption.” United States v. W.T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 632 n. 5, 73 S.Ct. 894, 97 L.Ed. 1303 (1953) (quoting United States v. Oregon State Medical Society, 343 U.S. 326, 333, 72 S.Ct. 690, 96 L.Ed. 978 (1952)).

transactional immunity, the district court noted that Herzog has “never repudiated the statute as unconstitutional, and he did not cease McCormack’s prosecution because he believed the prosecution was unlawful.” Instead, Herzog’s office first determined that it had insufficient evidence to re-file criminal charges against McCormack. Then, Herzog’s office offered McCormack transactional immunity from prosecution after our court affirmed the district court’s decision that the Idaho statutes imposed an undue burden on a woman’s ability to terminate her pregnancy. The offer of immunity does not by itself make it “absolutely clear” that the prosecution of McCormack would never recur. Friends of the Earth, 528 U.S. at 170, 120 S.Ct. 693; see also Olagues, 770 F.2d at 795 (finding a continuing case or controversy where the government “did not voluntarily cease the challenged activity because [it] felt that the investigation *1026 was improper[, but, r]ather, [the government] terminated the investigation solely because it failed to produce evidence supporting any further investigative activities.”).

<sup>1101</sup> (b) The “collateral legal consequences” exception also applies. “[A]lthough the primary injury may have passed”—Herzog has offered transactional immunity to McCormack—there still exists “ ‘a substantial controversy, between parties having adverse legal interests, of sufficient immediacy and reality to warrant the issuance of a declaratory judgment.’ ” E.E.O.C. v. Fed. Exp. Corp., 558 F.3d 842, 847 (9th Cir.2009) (quoting In re Burrell, 415 F.3d 994, 999 (9th Cir.2005)). Herzog continues to maintain the constitutionality of § 18–606, and declaratory relief remains available and unaffected.

(c) Finally, as the district court determined, McCormack would also be eligible for the “capable of repetition, yet evading review” exception to the mootness doctrine. Like any other woman challenging a potentially applicable abortion law, McCormack may become pregnant again, and her term of pregnancy is of limited duration. Herzog counters that McCormack lacks standing to challenge § 18–606 on the basis of future pregnancies. Yet Herzog is conflating the mootness of McCormack’s claim with her standing to bring the claim. As elaborated below, McCormack may not have standing to challenge the provision on the basis of future pregnancies, but that does not moot her current action. See Friends of the Earth, 528 U.S. at 191, 120 S.Ct. 693 (explaining that a post-complaint resolution will not moot an action, “despite the fact that [the plaintiff] would have lacked initial standing had she filed the complaint after the [resolution]”).

In addition to the suspicious timing of the offer of

Thus, the district court correctly held that McCormack's claim is not moot.

3. McCormack has standing based on a lingering risk of prosecution under § 18-606.

Prosecuting Attorney Herzog asserts that McCormack lacks standing to challenge § 18-606 on the basis of future pregnancies.

<sup>[11]</sup> <sup>[12]</sup> Article III standing requires that McCormack establish (1) that she personally has suffered an "actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical" injury as a result of the allegedly illegal conduct; (2) a causal link between her injury and the challenged action; and (3) that the injury must likely be "redressed by a favorable decision" of a federal court. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61, 112 S.Ct. 2130, 119 L.Ed.2d 351 (1992) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). "A plaintiff who challenges a statute must demonstrate a realistic danger of sustaining a direct injury as a result of the statute's operation or enforcement." Babbitt v. United Farm Workers Nat'l Union, 442 U.S. 289, 298, 99 S.Ct. 2301, 60 L.Ed.2d 895 (1979) (citing O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 494, 94 S.Ct. 669, 38 L.Ed.2d 674 (1974)).

<sup>[13]</sup> In McCormack I, we held that McCormack does not have standing to challenge PUCPA "based on a possible future pregnancy" because "in McCormack's case there are too many 'possibilities that may not take place and all may not combine.'" 694 F.3d at 1025 (quoting Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 128, 93 S.Ct. 705, 35 L.Ed.2d 147 (1973)). And McCormack conceded that Roe and other related cases have held that the possibility of future pregnancy "may be too speculative and conjectural for standing."<sup>9</sup>

<sup>9</sup> Indeed, "there are circumstances in which the prospect that a [party] will engage in (or resume) [its] conduct may be too speculative to support standing, but not too speculative to overcome mootness." Friends of the Earth, 528 U.S. at 190, 120 S.Ct. 693. Therefore, even if McCormack may not have standing to challenge § 18-606 on the basis of future pregnancies, that does not moot her initial claim that she asserted when she properly had standing. Id. ("Standing doctrine functions to ensure, among other things, that the scarce resources of the federal courts are devoted to disputes in which the parties have a concrete stake. In contrast, by the time mootness is an issue, the case has been brought and litigated, often ... for years. To abandon the case at an advanced stage may prove more wasteful than frugal.")

*1027 Nevertheless, McCormack continues to have standing based on the ongoing risk of prosecution for the termination of her past pregnancy. The district court properly noted that "[a]t the outset of this litigation, McCormack had standing to challenge the constitutionality of section 18-606 in conjunction with both section 18-608(1) and section 18-608(2) ... because she faced prosecution and continued to be threatened with prosecution." And McCormack presently has standing to challenge §§ 18-606 and 18-608 because, as discussed in section A.2 above, the Prosecuting Attorney's offer of immunity does not guarantee that the prosecution of McCormack would never recur. Because McCormack currently has standing based on a lingering risk of prosecution under § 18-606, her injury is not conjectural or hypothetical.

Lastly, the risk of continued enforcement of § 18-606 against McCormack is still redressable by declaratory relief. Accordingly, McCormack has standing to challenge the enforcement of § 18-606 against her for her past alleged abortion.

B. Dr. Hearn has standing to challenge §§ 18-505 and 18-608.

<sup>[14]</sup> <sup>[15]</sup> The district court properly found that Dr. Hearn, as an Idaho licensed physician intending to provide pre-viability medical abortions, has standing to challenge §§ 18-505 and 18-608. We review the district court's standing decision de novo. Gospel Missions of America v. City of Los Angeles, 328 F.3d 548, 553 (9th Cir.2003). To determine whether a physician has third-party standing to assert the rights of patients in the abortion context, the panel must determine: (1) whether the physician alleges "injury in fact" to himself or herself; and (2) whether the physician is a proper proponent of the legal rights on which he or she bases the suit. Singleton v. Wulff, 428 U.S. 106, 112, 96 S.Ct. 2868, 49 L.Ed.2d 826 (1976).

Herzog concedes that we have held that a physician possesses standing on his own behalf and on that of his patients to challenge the validity of another Idaho abortion statute. Planned Parenthood of Idaho, Inc. v. Wasden, 376 F.3d 908, 917 (9th Cir.2004) ("[P]hysicians and clinics performing abortions are routinely recognized as having standing to bring broad facial challenges to abortion statutes."). The Supreme Court has also repeatedly held that a physician may "assert the rights of women patients as against governmental interference" in the abortion context. Singleton, 428 U.S. at 118, 96 S.Ct. 2868 (recognizing that "there seems little loss in terms of effective advocacy from allowing [an assertion of a woman's right to an abortion] by a physician"); see also Planned Parenthood of Se. Pa. v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 845, 112 S.Ct. 2791, 120 L.Ed.2d 674 (1992) (allowing abortion providers to challenge a state statute on behalf of third-party women who seek abortion services); Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 481, 85 S.Ct. 1678, 14 L.Ed.2d 510 (1965) (holding that physicians have standing to assert the constitutional rights of patients to whom they prescribed contraceptive devices).

Prosecuting Attorney Herzog attempts to distinguish Dr. Hearn from other physicians who have been recognized as having standing. Herzog asserts that Dr. Hearn cannot challenge the validity of §§ 18–505 *1028 and 18–608 because he has not established that he can provide abortions in a “medically appropriate manner.” Herzog claims that Dr. Hearn seeks to provide access to abortifacients, i.e., medication to induce abortions, under a regime that has negative health and potentially life-threatening consequences and a finding of standing cannot be “squarely adverse to the interests of the patient.”

First, Dr. Hearn has stated his clear intention to “prescribe FDA approved medications to women in Bannock County, Idaho such as Plaintiff McCormack who ... seek to medically terminate their pregnancies in violation of the restrictions contained in Idaho Code Title 18, Chapters 5 and 6 ... prior to fetal viability.” Furthermore, Dr. Hearn intends to perform medical abortions outside a clinical or hospital setting through the second trimester. We have recognized that a physician's statement of intent is sufficient to establish standing, when the physician is at risk of criminal prosecution under the relevant statutes. Wasden, 376 F.3d at 916–17 (“by stat[ing] his clear intent[ ] to continue to perform abortions ... [a physician] has alleged a sufficiently concrete and imminent injury—possible prosecution and imprisonment—to challenge the provisions that ban abortion providers from [providing medical abortions to women prior to fetal viability.]”). Further, Dr. Hearn need not even claim a “specific intent to violate the statute.” Id. at 917 (noting that a plaintiff need only “reasonable fear a statute would be enforced against it if it engaged in certain conduct”) (citation omitted).

Second, Dr. Hearn's intent to provide FDA-approved medication to women to terminate their pregnancies prior to fetal viability does not need to be supported by a demonstration of the “medical appropriateness” of his ability to provide medical abortions. Whether Dr. Hearn can provide medical abortions in “an appropriate clinical setting” is irrelevant to whether he, as an Idaho licensed physician, can effectively represent the constitutional right to terminate a pregnancy before viability. The Supreme Court has looked to the professional relationship between a physician and a patient, Griswold, 381 U.S. at 481, 85 S.Ct. 1678, the economic harm on abortion providers, Singleton, 428 U.S. at 112–13, 96 S.Ct. 2868, and a physician's “direct stake” in the abortion process, Diamond v. Charles, 476 U.S. 54, 67, 106 S.Ct. 1697, 90 L.Ed.2d 48 (1986), when determining standing. But an inquiry into the “medical appropriateness” of an abortion provider's practice is not only unprecedented, but is also too ambiguous, and thus unwarranted.

Since 1997, Dr. Hearn has continuously been registered with the Federal Drug Enforcement Agency and the Idaho State Board of Pharmacy. And his ability to legally prescribe FDA-approved abortion medication in Bannock County is sufficient to demonstrate an “actual and imminent” injury—the risk of criminal prosecution for prescribing abortion pills prior to viability.

Accordingly, the district court properly determined that Dr. Hearn has standing to assert his patients' rights in cases challenging abortion restrictions, and we will consider Dr. Hearn's claims.

C. The statutes pose an undue burden on a woman's ability to obtain an abortion, and the criminal sanctions for abortion providers are unconstitutionally vague.

<sup>[19]</sup> <sup>[20]</sup> <sup>[21]</sup> We review de novo a district court's grant of summary judgment. Nunez v. City of San Diego, 114 F.3d 935, 940 (9th Cir.1997). “[A] facial challenge to an abortion statute will succeed where, in a large fraction of the cases in which the statute is relevant, it will operate as a substantial obstacle to a woman's choice to undergo an abortion.” Wasden, 376 F.3d at 921 (internal quotation marks, brackets, and citation omitted). And the “large fraction” is computed by focusing on “those upon whom a challenged law would have some actual effect, rather than all women ... seeking an abortion.” Id. There is also a heightened need for definiteness “when the ordinance imposes criminal penalties on individual behavior or implicates constitutionally protected rights.” Nunez, 114 F.3d at 940.

<sup>122]</sup> Section 18–505 prohibits abortions of fetuses of twenty or more weeks postfertilization. The twenty-week ban applies regardless of whether the fetus has attained viability.

The Supreme Court reaffirmed in Casey that an undue burden exists if the purpose or effect of a provision of law places a substantial obstacle in the path of a woman seeking an abortion before the fetus obtains viability. Casey, 505 U.S. at 846, 112 S.Ct. 2791. In Planned Parenthood of Cent. Mo. v. Danforth, 428 U.S. 52, 64, 96 S.Ct. 2831, 49 L.Ed.2d 788 (1976), the Court further explained that “it is not the proper function of the legislature or the courts to place viability, which essentially is a medical concept, at a specific point in the gestation period.” Because § 18–505 places an arbitrary time limit on when women can obtain abortions, the statute is unconstitutional. We also recently held unconstitutional an Arizona law banning abortions after the twenty week gestational age because the law operated as a ban on a woman’s constitutional right to a pre-viability abortion. Isaacson v. Horne, 716 F.3d 1213, 1225–1227 (9th Cir.2013).

Prosecuting Attorney Herzog concedes that “[n]o dispute exists that medical induction abortions can occur between the twentieth week of pregnancy and fetal viability.” Yet Herzog attempts to reframe the issue as whether the statute imposes an undue burden on Dr. Hearn’s proposed plan to provide medical abortions in the patient’s home after the twentieth week of pregnancy. Although Dr. Hearn’s proposed plan would be detrimentally affected by the enforcement of § 18–505, the broader effect of the statute is a categorical ban on all abortions between twenty weeks gestational age and viability. This is directly contrary to the Court’s central holding in Casey that a woman has the right to “choose to have an abortion before viability and to obtain it without undue interference from the State.” Casey, 505 U.S. at 846, 112 S.Ct. 2791 (emphasis added).

3. Section 18–608(2) is facially unconstitutional because it requires hospitalizations for all second-trimester abortions.

<sup>123]</sup> Section 18–608(2) requires that all second-trimester abortions occur in a hospital. *1030 If the licensed medical provider fails to abide by § 18–608(2), he or she will be subject to civil and criminal penalties, as outlined in § 18–605.

The Supreme Court has twice invalidated requirements that physicians perform all second-trimester abortions in hospitals. See Planned Parenthood Ass’n of Kansas City, Mo., Inc. v. Ashcroft, 462 U.S. 476, 103 S.Ct. 2517, 76 L.Ed.2d 733 (1983); City of Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc., 462 U.S. 416, 103 S.Ct. 2481, 76 L.Ed.2d 687 (1983) (overturned on other grounds). “[S]uch a requirement unreasonably infringes upon a woman’s constitutional right to obtain an abortion.” Planned Parenthood Ass’n of Kansas City, Mo., Inc., 462 U.S. at 482, 103 S.Ct. 2517 (internal quotation marks omitted).

Prosecuting Attorney Herzog attempts to distinguish the present case from this controlling Supreme Court precedent by arguing that both the absolute and percentage terms of second trimester abortions in Idaho are “quite small.” Between 2007 and 2011, about 1.2 percent of abortions in Idaho were performed during or after the fourteenth week of pregnancy and only about 21.5 percent of those abortions were non-surgical. But Herzog draws the court’s attention to irrelevant figures. The percentage of non-surgical second trimester abortions is certainly small, but for “a large fraction of the cases in which [the statute] is relevant,” required hospitalization will operate as a substantial obstacle. Casey, 505 U.S. at 895, 112 S.Ct. 2791.

Herzog also asserts that Dr. Hearn is not “competent professionally” to provide medical abortions outside of a hospital setting. However, we think that an inquiry into the “medical appropriateness” of Dr. Hearn’s proposed prescriptions of abortion pills is not properly part of our analysis, especially given the vagueness of that phrase.

Therefore, the district court did not err in finding § 18–608(2) facially unconstitutional.

4. Section 18–608(1) in conjunction with § 18–605 is unconstitutionally vague.

[24] Section 18–608 outlines where certain abortions are permitted. Specifically, § 18–608(1) requires abortions during the first trimester to take place in a hospital, physician’s office, or clinic that is:

properly staffed and equipped for the performance of such procedures and respecting which the responsible physician or physicians have made satisfactory arrangements with one or more acute care hospitals within reasonable proximity thereof providing for the prompt availability of hospital care as may be required due to complications or emergencies that might arise.

Idaho Code Ann. § 18–608(1) (emphasis added).

Section 18–605 establishes civil and criminal penalties for persons who perform abortions other than as permitted by the remainder of Title 18, Chapter 6 of the Idaho Code. In particular, § 18–605(3) states that the licensed or certified health care provider must “knowingly” violate the statute to be guilty of a felony.

Herzog contests the district court’s determination that § 18–608(1) is unconstitutionally vague, arguing that: (1) whether a medical office is “properly staffed” and whether “satisfactory arrangements” with a hospital have been made “connote objectively determinable facts,” and (2) the § 18–605 enforcement provisions require the alleged violation to be performed “knowingly.” We are not persuaded.

*1031 [25] [26] [27] “To avoid unconstitutional vagueness, an ordinance must (1) define the offense with sufficient definiteness that ordinary people can understand what conduct is prohibited; and (2) establish standards to permit police to enforce the law in a non-arbitrary, non-discriminatory manner.” Nunez, 114 F.3d at 940. If a statute subjects violators to criminal penalties, the need for clear definitions “is even more exacting.” Forbes v. Napolitano, 236 F.3d 1009, 1011 (9th Cir.2000). The Supreme Court has held that “a criminal statute that fails to give a person of ordinary intelligence fair notice that his contemplated conduct is forbidden by the statute or is so indefinite that it encourages arbitrary and erratic arrests and convictions is void for vagueness.” Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. 379, 390, 99 S.Ct. 675, 58 L.Ed.2d 596 (1979) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). “[W]here the uncertainty induced by the statute threatens to inhibit the exercise of constitutionally protected rights[,]” the law is even more likely to be found unconstitutionally vague. Id. at 391, 99 S.Ct. 675.

In Gonzales v. Carhart, 550 U.S. 124, 147–48, 127 S.Ct. 1610, 167 L.Ed.2d 480 (2007), the Supreme Court considered whether the Partial–Birth Abortion Ban Act of 2003, 18 U.S.C. § 1531 (2000 ed., Supp. IV), was unconstitutionally vague. The Act defines the unlawful abortion in explicit terms and includes very specific “anatomical landmarks” to put abortion providers on notice as to what type of abortions are prohibited. Gonzales, 550 U.S. at 147–48, 127 S.Ct. 1610. The Court found that the Act sets forth “relatively clear guidelines as to prohibited conduct and provides objective criteria to evaluate whether a doctor has performed a prohibited procedure[.] ... [u]nlike the statutory language in Stenberg v. Carhart, 530 U.S. 914, 120 S.Ct. 2597, 147 L.Ed.2d 743 (2000) ] that prohibited the delivery of a substantial portion of the fetus.” Id. at 149, 127 S.Ct. 1610 (internal quotation marks omitted).

Unlike the terms in the Act at issue in Gonzales, the terms “properly” and “satisfactory,” as used in § 18–608(1), lack precise definition, and “subject[ ] physicians to sanctions based not on their own objective behavior, but on the subjective viewpoints of others.” Tucson Woman’s Clinic v. Eden, 379 F.3d 531, 555 (9th Cir.2004) (internal quotation marks omitted). Neither term is defined in the statute, nor are they terms of art with specific definitions in the medical context.

We have found a statute unconstitutionally vague that required that patients “be treated with consideration, respect, and full recognition of the patient’s dignity and individuality” because “understandings of what ‘consideration,’ ‘respect,’ ‘dignity,’ and ‘individuality’ mean are widely variable, ... [making the statute too] vague and subjective for providers to know how they should behave in order to comply, as well as too vague to limit arbitrary enforcement.” Id. at 554–55 (internal quotation marks omitted). Here, the terms “properly” and “satisfactory” are similarly subjective and open to multiple interpretations.

The district court noted that the dictionary definitions of the terms also are unhelpful in curing the statute’s vagueness. “Properly” means “suitably, fitly, rightly, correctly.” WEBSTER’S THIRD INT’L DICTIONARY 1818 (3d ed.1976). “Satisfactory” means “sufficient to meet a condition or obligation.” Id. at 2017. Instead of providing clarity, the definitions raise the same questions as the terms themselves: proper, satisfactory, fit, right, or sufficient according to whom or what standard?

Unlike the specific “anatomical landmarks” in the statute at issue in Gonzales, § 18–608(1) fails to provide a specific standard to measure or determine what is “proper” or “satisfactory.” The district *1032 court correctly recognized the “trap” of these imprecise terms:

they “could well impose criminal liability on activity that offends some people’s sense of what is ‘properly staffed and equipped’ or what arrangements are ‘satisfactory,’ but may appear to others as more than adequate.”

Moreover, the scienter requirement in § 18–605(3) (a medical provider must “knowingly violate[ ] the provision[ ]” to be guilty of a felony), does not make the widely variable definitions of “properly” and “satisfactory” any less vague. Because the enforcement of the statute relies on “wholly subjective judgments without statutory definitions,” a physician could argue that he believed he complied with § 18–608(1). United States v. Williams, 553 U.S. 285, 306, 128 S.Ct. 1830, 170 L.Ed.2d 650 (2008). Additionally, “this lack of clarity may operate to inhibit [a physician’s provision of legal abortion services] because individuals will not know whether the ordinance allows their conduct, and may choose not to exercise their rights for fear of being criminally punished.” Hunt v. City of Los Angeles, 638 F.3d 703, 713 (9th Cir.2011).

Herzog also attempts to import the “reasonable physician” standard from Idaho’s medical practice liability statute (which is not being challenged in this case) to argue that a standard of objective reasonableness for physicians generally applies to all instances of civil liability—including § 18–608. However, violators of § 18–608 are not just subject to civil penalties, but also to criminal prosecution under § 18–605. And whereas the legislature definitively outlined a reasonable physician standard in the medical malpractice statute, it failed to do so in the abortion statute. Without clear language that gives physicians adequate notice of how to comply with the statute, § 18–608(1), as interpreted with § 18–605, is unconstitutionally vague. See Colautti, 439 U.S. at 391, 99 S.Ct. 675 (finding a statute void for vagueness “where the uncertainty induced by the statute threatens to inhibit the exercise of constitutionally protected rights,” even where the law could have some constitutional applications).

Lastly, Herzog argues that if our court finds § 18–608(1) impermissibly vague, we should sever the unconstitutional words from the statute pursuant to § 18–616, the law’s severability clause. The Idaho Supreme Court has held that “when the unconstitutional portion of a statute is not integral or indispensable, it will recognize and give effect to a severability clause.” Simpson v. Cenarrusa, 130 Idaho 609, 944 P.2d 1372, 1377 (1997).

Assuming the terms “properly” and “satisfactory” are severable, striking these words from the statute would not remedy the constitutional infirmities of the statute.

Removing the ambiguous terms would result in the following language:

Abortions permitted by this subsection shall only be lawful if and when performed in a hospital or in a physician’s regular office or a clinic which office or clinic is _____ staffed and equipped for the performance of such procedures and respecting which the responsible physician or physicians have made _____ arrangements with one or more acute care hospitals within reasonable proximity thereof providing for the prompt availability of hospital care as may be required due to complications or emergencies that might arise.

The appropriate amount of staff and equipment for an abortion remains unclear, as there may be differing opinions about what is sufficient. It also is unclear what types of arrangements must be made with acute care hospitals to comply with the statute. “Given the potential for harassment of abortion providers, it is particularly important that enforcement of any unconstitutionally *1033 vague provisions of the scheme be enjoined.” Tucson Woman’s Clinic, 379 F.3d at 554. Thus, the lack of definitive standards for performing legal first trimester abortions causes § 18–608(1) to remain unconstitutionally vague.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we affirm the district court’s judgment. McCormack’s challenge to § 18–606 is not moot because her claims fall under three exceptions to the mootness doctrine: (a) “voluntary cessation,” (b) “collateral legal consequences,” and (c) “capable of repetition, yet evading review.” McCormack has standing based on the lingering risk of prosecution under § 18–606. Dr. Hearn has standing based on his intention to provide medical abortions through the second trimester outside a clinical or hospital setting and based on his possible prosecution under § 18–505 and § 18–608. Section 18–505 is facially unconstitutional because it categorically bans some abortions before viability. Section 18–608(2) is facially unconstitutional because it places an undue burden on a woman’s ability to obtain an abortion by requiring hospitalizations for all second-trimester abortions. Section 18–608(1) in conjunction with § 18-605 is unconstitutionally vague.

David and Meghan,

Here is an attempt at a "short" high-level executive summary type letter. Still some holes. Check it out and we can talk about this concept tomorrow.

[DRAFT]

The Honorable David Johnson
State Senator
PO Box 279
Ocheyedan, Iowa 51354

Dear Senator Johnson:

In your letter of February 1, 2017, you reference Governor Terry Branstad's recent nomination to serve as United States Ambassador to China and then ask nine specific questions relating to the effect of his potential resignation as Governor. I agree that your questions implicate important legal issues pertaining to Iowa's constitutional framework for the succession of executive power. Moreover, these issues have not previously been directly addressed by this office nor have they previously been decided by the Iowa Supreme Court. Thus, I provide this Letter Opinion to provide guidance on three key legal issues raised by your inquiry:

First Issue: If the Governor of Iowa resigns, does the Lieutenant Governor become Governor?

Short Answer: Yes. The Iowa Constitution provides that the executive power of the State is vested in a "chief magistrate" who shall be "styled" the "Governor of the State of Iowa." Iowa Const. art. IV section 1. The Iowa Constitution further provides that, upon the resignation of a sitting Governor, the powers and duties of the office "devolve upon" – fall or transfer down to – the Lieutenant Governor. Iowa Const. art. IV section 19. Thus, under Iowa's constitutional framework, when the Governor resigns and the executive power of the State transfers to and "vests" in the Lieutenant Governor, the Lieutenant Governor becomes Governor. Four Iowa Governors have either resigned or died while in office. In each instance, the Lieutenant Governor who assumed the powers and duties of the office was referred to as "Governor" and treated as Governor in every respect.

Second Issue: Must the Lieutenant Governor "qualify" as Governor by taking a new oath?

Short Answer: No. The powers and duties of the office of Governor – the executive power of the State – are transferred to the Lieutenant Governor as a matter of law by operation of the constitutional framework for succession of executive power. When a Lieutenant Governor is elected and qualifies by taking an oath before the general assembly to discharge the duties of the office, those duties include assuming the powers and duties of the office of Governor – that is becoming Governor – should a constitutional contingency arise. Thus, no new oath before the general assembly is required. Nevertheless, each of the four Iowa Lieutenant Governors who succeeded to the office of Governor after the resignation or death of a sitting Governor chose to take a new oath of office – in one form or another – when they assumed their new duties.

Third Issue: May the Lieutenant Governor, upon becoming Governor, appoint a new Lieutenant Governor?

Short Answer: No. Iowa's constitutional framework for the executive power of the State begins with the proposition that both the Governor and the Lieutenant Governor "shall be elected" and shall be selected "as if these two offices are one and the same." Iowa Const. Art. IV sections 2 and 3. When an elected Governor resigns and the executive powers of the State "devolve upon" – fall or transfer down to – the Lieutenant Governor, the Lieutenant Governor becomes Governor because she is the elected Lieutenant Governor. Iowa Const. art. IV section 17. There is no vacancy created in the office of Lieutenant Governor. Moreover, the Iowa Constitution specifically provides for a line of succession in the event an elected Lieutenant Governor is not able to assume the powers and duties of the office of Governor when a constitutional contingency arises – first the President of the Senate, then Speaker of the House, then a joint convention of the General Assembly elects a new Governor and a new Lieutenant Governor. Iowa Const. art. IV section 19. The appointment of a new Lieutenant Governor would violate both the elective principal that resides at the core of our constitutional framework and the constitutional line of succession for the executive power of the State. None of the four Iowa Lieutenant Governors who succeeded to the office of Governor after the resignation or death of a sitting Governor appointed a new Lieutenant Governor.

The answers provided above arise from a careful consideration of the succession framework set forth in the words and structure of the Iowa Constitution – beginning with its 1857 form the amendments in 1952 and 1988 to the pertinent sections. The historical fact that in each instance of a resignation or death of an Iowa Governor the Lieutenant Governor who succeeded to the powers and duties of the office was called Governor and treated as Governor in every respect but did not appoint a new Lieutenant Governor affirms that our reading of the Iowa Constitution aligns with a long-standing and well-accepted interpretation of the "devolve" framework. As does the historical fact that under the pre-25th Amendment framework of the United States Constitution – the powers and duties of the office shall "devolve" on the Vice President – in each of the eight cases where a President died in office the Vice President who succeeded to the powers and duties of the office was called "President" and treated as President in every respect but did not appoint a new Vice President.

Moreover, the debates of the 1857 constitutional convention fully support our reliance upon the principal that the authors of the Iowa Constitution intended a framework for succession that would guarantee – to the extent possible – that a successor to the elected Governor also be an official elected by the people of Iowa. [cite] Indeed, the convention considered abolishing the office of Lieutenant Governor, but chose not to because the office provided for succession in a manner that protected this elective principal. [cite]

Finally, while we are not bound by decisions examining the same or similar provisions in the constitutions of other states, a survey of these interpretations provides support for our reading of the "devolve" framework for succession. The majority of cases find that a lieutenant governor upon whom the powers and duties of the executive "devolve" becomes governor. [cites] The majority of cases also find that there is no vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor. [cites]

Those cases that diverge from our reading we find either unpersuasive or distinguishable. [cites].

[conclusion]

Gov. Branstad, Lt. Gov. Reynolds respond to Attorney General Miller's reversal of opinion

Gov. Terry Branstad

"Tom Miller was crystal clear last December when he said Lt. Governor Reynolds could act upon existing law and appoint a Lt. Governor when she becomes Governor upon my resignation.

'Our office has researched the law and consulted with the Governor's office. We concur with the Governor's conclusion that, upon resignation of Governor Branstad, Lt. Governor Reynolds will become Governor and will have the authority to appoint a new Lt. Governor.' – Tom Miller's Office, December 13, 2016.

No new facts or laws have changed since December 13, 2016. Tom Miller has allowed politics to cloud his judgment and is ignoring Iowa law. This politically motivated opinion defies common sense. Iowans expect a Governor and Lt. Governor working on their behalf. This is disappointing."

Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds

"In December, Attorney General Tom Miller researched the law and concurred with the Secretary of State and our office that, upon Gov. Branstad's resignation, I become Governor and have the authority to appoint a new Lt. Governor. Since then, I've been moving forward with that understanding. Now, five months later, just one day before Governor Branstad testifies before the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the Attorney General has reversed himself, but the law hasn't changed. The law still states that as Governor, I vacate my role as Lt. Governor and am able to appoint a new Lt. Governor. With the law on our side we will move forward with his first conclusion as we examine our options in light of Tom Miller's reversal."

Ben Hammes, Communications Director

"The power of a Governor to appoint a new Lt. Governor was put into the law in 2009 by the democrats. That law says: 'An appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term.' This bill passed unanimously by both parties and signed into law by a democrat Governor. Now, just because the democrats do not control the Governor's office, Attorney General Miller wants to pretend like this law does not exist, and issue a non-binding opinion. Quite frankly, this is what Iowans are sick and tired of. The Attorney General should be upholding the law, not ignoring it."

*****

Background Information:

Attorney General Miller now says that Lt. Gov. Reynolds will be both Governor and Lt. Governor at the same time and that Lt. Gov. Reynolds will not be able to appoint a new Lt. Governor. That defies common sense and the law.

- (1) When Gov. Branstad resigns, the Iowa Constitution states that his powers will devolve upon Lt. Gov. Reynolds. Lt. Gov. Reynolds will become Governor. Attorney General Miller agrees with this conclusion.
- (2) Iowa law prevents someone from holding two offices at the same time. Because Kim Reynolds will become Governor, she will automatically vacate the Office of the Lt. Governor.
- (3) In 2009, the Iowa Legislature (led by democrats) passed a statute to clarify that if there is a vacancy in the Office of Lt. Governor, the Governor appoints someone to fill that vacancy. That law is clear: "An appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term."
- (4) When Terry Branstad resigns, Kim Reynolds becomes Governor; the Office of Lt. Governor is then vacant, and under the Iowa Code (passed unanimously by the Legislature) Gov. Reynolds appoints someone to fill that vacancy.

Similar situations have occurred before in other states. For example:

- (1) In 2003, President Bush picked Utah Gov. Michael Leavitt to head the EPA. The state's Attorney General, in a thorough legal opinion, concluded that Leavitt's Lt. Governor became Governor and vacated the Lt. Governor's Office. The new Governor, then, was free to appoint a new Lt. Governor (and he did).

- (2) Similarly, when then-Gov. Bill Clinton became president in 1993, the Arkansas Supreme Court ruled — based upon constitutional provisions that are nearly identical to Iowa's — that his Lt. Governor became Governor. The Office of the Lt. Governor was then vacant, and Mike Huckabee filled that vacancy mid-term.
- (3) Finally, and most recently, the New York's highest court ruled that when Gov. Elliot Spitzer resigned, Lt. Governor David Patterson became Governor, vacated the Office of Lt. Governor, and was free to appoint a new Lt. Governor.

In December 2016, Attorney General Miller agreed with this view of the law. Since then, the Constitution hasn't changed. Neither has the Iowa Code. While Attorney General Miller's opinion is not binding on anybody, Iowans should ask why Attorney General Miller suddenly reversed course.

Lieutenant Governor to Serve as Governor, But Lacks Authority to Appoint Lieutenant, Attorney General Opinion Concludes

Formal opinion responds to request by state senator as Governor Branstad prepares to resign for ambassadorship

DES MOINES – Attorney General Tom Miller Monday issued a formal legal opinion stating that if a governor resigns, the lieutenant governor becomes governor for all intents and purposes, but does not have legal authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Sen. David Johnson, I-Ocheyedan, requested the opinion following Governor Terry Branstad’s announcement that, if confirmed by the U.S. Senate, he will serve as U.S. ambassador to China.

The 23-page opinion, following extensive legal and historical research, concludes, “...the powers and duties of the office of Governor fall upon the lieutenant governor.” The conclusion is based on an Iowa Constitution provision addressing a governor’s resignation, which states, “...the powers and duties of the office...shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.” Under that provision, the opinion adds, “The lieutenant governor takes on this authority because she is lieutenant governor.”

Significantly, according to Miller, Article IV, section 1 provides that “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.”

While the “the lieutenant governor becomes governor and has the title of Governor,” the opinion further adds that that person does not have constitutional authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor. “In other words, upon a governor’s resignation, the lieutenant governor will hold both the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. There is no vacancy to be filled,” according to the opinion.

“This opinion conveys that, in a sense, the two offices merge,” Miller said. “This is consistent with numerous cases in other states that addressed this question,” Miller added. “It is also consistent with a close reading of the Iowa governor's succession provision—Article IV, section 19 of the Iowa Constitution, which establishes a precise order of gubernatorial succession without providing for the appointment of a lieutenant governor.”

Miller's opinion notes that in all four previous instances when an Iowa governor resigned or died while in office, the lieutenant governor was always considered governor, but never appointed or named a new lieutenant governor. The opinion also concludes, “The framers intended that those in the gubernatorial line of succession be elected.”

At the federal level, prior to Congress amending the U.S. Constitution in 1967 to establish that the vice president becomes president and grants the president authority to appoint a new vice president with Congressional approval, no vice president who assumed the powers and duties of a president who died while in office appointed a new vice president.

The formal opinion departs from a public statement Miller's office issued in December, following an informal legal review in response to media inquiries, which stated the office concurred with “Governor Branstad's conclusion that...in her capacity as Governor, Governor Reynolds will have the authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor.”

The December statement was based, in part, on an Iowa Code section addressing vacancies of office holders. Miller's formal opinion concludes this statute does not apply when a governor resigns and the powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

About Attorney General Opinions

A formal attorney general opinion addresses legal questions relating to a public official's duties by interpreting laws and offering legal guidance.

While not a legal precedent, a formal attorney general opinion is similar to one and stands until a court or later opinion overrules it or new legislation is enacted to change a statute in question. Opinions are not legally binding, but courts generally give them careful consideration and deference.

Submit your ideas for court savings as Judicial Branch finalizes its budget

The 2017 Legislative Session wrapped up this past Saturday, and the final outcome of budgetary decisions was that the Iowa Judicial Branch was appropriated $175,686,612 in operational funds and $3,100,000 in jury and witness revolving funds, for a total of $178,786,612 for fiscal year 2018. This is basically the same budget of last fiscal year and will require very close management by the judicial branch to avoid significant changes in the operation of the court system.

May 16 - Waterloo (rebroadcast)
May 18 - Davenport (rebroadcast)
May 23 - South Sioux City, NE (rebroadcast)
May 24 - Council Bluffs (rebroadcast)

The ISBA is holding regional seminars this spring to help members understand the new succession planning process mandated by Iowa Court Rule 39.18 that goes into effect on Jan. 1, 2018.

Iowa Court Rule 39.18 now requires attorneys in private practice to complete their annual questionnaire, pursuant to rule 39.11, whereby the attorney identifies the attorney's designated representative to act in the attorney's stead in the event of death or disability. While attorneys are no longer required to execute a written supplemental succession plan, they are encouraged to so.

The Iowa Academy of Trust & Estate Counsel has prepared and is making available a form succession plan agreement.

I was forwarded your Monday email. The IGA has some questions and concerns regarding your suggesting to file a motion for summary judgement; that I would like to discuss with you today. Would you have time to meet this afternoon; perhaps at 4:00 p.m.? Otherwise I have a few other windows available earlier this afternoon to visit by phone.

Thank you for the opportunity to discuss this issue and strive to have a better understanding of next steps in this process.

Hi Sarah,

This discovery plan looks acceptable. I know it has kind of languished while waiting to see what action the legislature would take, if any.

Now that the legislature has acted, though, we may not need to set a trial date or go through any discovery. As I'm sure you're aware, the legislature recently passed and the governor signed HF 462, which directly addresses the types of records at issue in this case. However, the law is not retroactive.

So, after some consultation with the Commission, we anticipate filing a motion for summary judgment soon, based on the legislative change. Because the bill isn't retroactive and specifically categorizes casino audits as their own exception, that means these audits weren't confidential at the time they were requested and didn't fit into an existing exception.

Just wanted to let you know so that a filing didn't catch you by surprise. Feel free to call if you have questions.

Thanks,

Here's the court opinion. (It doesn't say much.)

<http://www.sccourts.org/opinions/HTMLFiles/SC/27699.pdf>

And here's the proposed amendment that passed in 2012 and 2014.

http://www.scstatehouse.gov/sess120\_2013-2014/bills/446.htm

It looks mostly like what we did in 1988. One weird thing I noticed is that in the laundry list of reasons why the lieutenant governor would be "removed" (impeachment, resignation, etc.), "becoming governor" is not one of them, as some other states have said.

South Carolina just went through the succession issues with Nicki Haley leaving. Could one of you find the S.C. constitution and any pertinent cases? Thanks.

Hi Jeff - I just wanted to follow-up on the ten cases you were referring to last week. If you had a minute to send the case name and citations that'd be great.

Thanks, Jeff.

South Carolina recently amended its constitution to specifically grant the governor the power to appoint a Lt governor. Currently, the law calls for a complete domino. The president pro tem of the senate was elevated to Lt. governor.

Word of caution - this is google research since I can't access westlaw on my tablet.

SECTION 11. Death, resignation, removal of Governor.

Section effective until the general election of 2018 and upon the joint election of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor. See also, section effective beginning with the general election of 2018 and upon the joint election of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor.

In the case of the removal of the Governor from office by impeachment, death, resignation, disqualification, disability, or removal from the State, the Lieutenant Governor shall be Governor. In case the Governor be impeached, the Lieutenant Governor shall act in his stead and have his powers until judgment in the case shall have been pronounced. In the case of the temporary disability of the Governor and in the event of the temporary absence of the Governor from the State, the Lieutenant Governor shall have full authority to act in an emergency. (1972 (57) 3171; 1973 (58) 48.) SECTION 11.

Interesting timing. Note that Lt govs were elected separately to two year terms back then. I don't see any appointments.

Just realized I forgot to send an update...In case you have not heard HSB 138 died in subcommittee.

It is still possible another bill could come out or something could get attached to a leadership bill so we are continuing to monitor session closely.

The first funnel deadline in Friday, which means for any bills to stay alive, it must be passed out of one committee in either House or Senate. There are some exceptions for certain kinds of bills. If you are interested, I am attaching a copy of the Session Timetable which shows some of the funnel deadlines and exceptions....

We will be able to have a discussion about it at our meeting on March 21.

Talk to you at Noon for our teleconference!

I want to give everyone an important "heads up" regarding a new study bill that came out this week. The bill can be downloaded/viewed here: <https://www.legis.iowa.gov/legislation/BillBook?ga=87&ba=HSB138>

Our understanding is the study bill was drafted by someone in the Governor's office. We just learned of it late yesterday. It does a number of things, but starting on page 37 through page 78, the bill proposes to eliminate the Plumbing and Mechanical Systems Board, and move the board functions and activities to the Dept. of Public Safety, where a new 8-member advisory council would be formed for electrical, plumbing, and mechanical systems. The bill does not eliminate the need for licensing, nor does it create inspections, etc. it just essentially moves chapter 105 to oversight by the Dept. of Public Safety.

I want to make you all aware so that you are not surprised by any calls or questions. Our current department talking points are listed below.

1. The department is reviewing HSB 138 that was released by the legislature on Feb 21st and will be working with industry partners and legislators to define and understand the potential impacts of the bill.
2. No definitive answers are available at this time, we ask for your patience over the coming days and weeks as the bill is discussed by the legislature.
3. The department is moving forward with plans for the upcoming license renewal deadline of July 1, 2017, to ensure licensees will be able to renew their licenses and continue working.
4. As more details are available the department will communicate with licensees through the website and listserv messages.

Please do not reply all to this message (need to make sure we do not violate open meetings law by having a discussion via email:). However, feel free to contact me individually if you have additional questions or concerns. We are trying to put together a list of questions for legislators as we work through reading and understanding the bill. (For example, the advisory council does not have mechanical representation.) At this point we do not know a lot but will be closely monitoring the bill as it moves through subcommittee and will keep you all apprised...

Subject: Licensing reform

FYI – There is a new licensing bill that has been introduced. The explanation is pasted below. Let me know if you have comments/feedback.

<https://www.legis.iowa.gov/docs/publications/LGI/87/HSB174.pdf>

EXPLANATION

The inclusion of this explanation does not constitute agreement with the explanation's substance by the members of the general assembly.

This bill relates to certain state regulations, including certificate of need requirements, the practice of certain professions, and the oversight of state preserves. The bill is organized into divisions.

CERTIFICATE OF NEED REQUIREMENT. This division removes the requirement for a hospital to apply to the Iowa department of public health for a certificate of need prior to the offering or development of a new or changed institutional health service unless the hospital plans to expand its swing-bed capacity above 25 beds or plans to add any nursing facility beds or skilled nursing beds. The division also requires a certificate of need for the construction, development, or other establishment of a hospital in a county with a population of less than 80,000, or a hospital in a county with a population of greater than 80,000 if the hospital is within 35 miles of a hospital located in a county with a population of less than 80,000.

The division exempts facilities that provide services to a person with a primary diagnosis of mental illness, as defined in Code section 229.1, from the certificate of need requirement.

The division takes effect upon enactment.

PRACTICE OF DENTISTRY MODIFICATION AND INTERIOR DESIGN EXAMINING BOARD REPEAL. This division eliminates the interior design examining board and removes all registration requirements for interior designers.

The division removes tooth whitening from the practice of dentistry as provided in Code section 153.13.

REPEAL OF STATE ADVISORY BOARD FOR PRESERVES. This division eliminates the state advisory board for preserves and assigns the duties of the board to the natural resource commission of the department of natural resources.

ELECTRICAL EXAMINING BOARD. This division reassigns the regulatory authority of the electrical examining board to the department of public safety, which shall regulate the licensure of electricians. The division changes the electrical examining board to an electrical examining advisory council, which shall have authority to approve administrative rules relating to professions governed by Code chapter 103 before they are adopted by the department.

LICENSING MORATORIUM AND TASK FORCE. This division prohibits an executive branch administrative unit from imposing new licensing regulations for a profession not regulated prior to July 1, 2017. The division also establishes a professional licensing task force made up of legislators, executive branch department representatives, a representative of the governor's office, and public members with professional licensure experience to review all aspects of professional licensure in the state.

IOWA CAPITAL INVESTMENT BOARD. This division of the bill eliminates the Iowa capital investment board established in Code section 15E.63 and transfers the duties and authority of that board to the economic development authority.

Statement from Attorney General Tom Miller on AFSCME Lawsuit over Collective Bargaining Law

Miller to ask Executive Council to approve outside legal counsel to defend state

DES MOINES – Attorney General Tom Miller today announced that he will ask the Iowa Executive Council to seek outside legal counsel to defend the state against the lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of House File 291, the collective bargaining bill signed into law on Friday.

The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) Iowa Council 61 filed the lawsuit Monday in Polk County District Court.

The Executive Council, comprised of the governor, secretary of state, state treasurer, secretary of agriculture and state auditor, must approve the appointment of outside counsel to represent the state.

“As the new collective bargaining law has the potential to existentially threaten the viability of public sector unions—many of the very same organizations that have supported me in the past—I am recommending that the Executive Council seek outside legal representation to defend this lawsuit in order to avoid any questions about a potential conflict,” Miller said. “While the extraordinarily professional and skilled attorneys in my office have vigorously defended Governor Branstad and the legislature in past lawsuits involving AFSCME, I think it’s most prudent in this highly charged legal dispute to avoid any appearance of politics clouding our office’s legal representation and judgment.”

Upon my quick review, it seems that the intent for the professions which will be registered is not to treat them as the department currently does for EMS providers, who are certified and required to follow competency and safety standards adopted by the department by rule, but instead to treat them like hair braiders, who simply register with the department.

You asked me to look into whether the new governor appointed a lieutenant governor after the court concluded that the lt. governor "became" governor.

Short answer – No for each state.

Arkansas – Arkansas held a special election to fill the position of lt. governor after the lt. governor became governor following the election of President Clinton. Mike Huckabee won that special election. However, Arkansas is like Iowa pre-1988, where the lt. governor is elected separately from the governor.

Oklahoma – After the court in Oklahoma determined that the lt governor became governor in 1926, the office of lt. governor was "vacant" and held open until the next election. Just a few years later, the Governor of Oklahoma was impeached and the lt. governor again became governor, leaving the lt. governor office vacant.

Oregon – The Court in Oregon determined that the SOS became governor in 1877. For over a year Chadwick held BOTH the office of governor and the SOS until the next election.

Although there is not a specific paragraph to this effect in the memo as it stands now, I also realized that article IV, section 19 states the people further down the line "act as" governor, while "devolve" applies only to the lieutenant. That provision was amended to its current form as part of the 1988 amendments. Several other states noted that the difference in language suggests the lieutenant governor is not merely acting governor.

Thanks. I agree that this distinction is important – the other people in line of succession have other “jobs” while the only real purpose for the Lt. Gov is to take over for Gov.

TRENTON -- New Jerseyans soon won't have to leave their homes to play the state lottery.

Gov. Chris Christie on Monday signed a bill into law that will allow for Garden State residents to pay to have private couriers deliver lottery tickets to their door.

Supporters of the measure (S2370/A3904) say it will make the lottery more accessible to people who are constrained to their homes or find it inconvenient to visit a store.

State Assemblyman John Burzichelli (D-Burlington), a main sponsor of the legislation, noted that many other goods -- such food, water, and clothing -- are already delivered to "make peoples' lives easier."

"This bill is aimed at saving players' time and broadening a customer base that provides revenue for services that benefit all New Jersey residents," Burzichelli said in a statement Monday.

Couriers may charge a fee for their services, but they cannot collect any portion of people's lottery winnings. Couriers can deliver only New Jersey lottery tickets.

All couriers must register with the State Lottery Commission, and those that don't face a penalty.

Christie vetoed a similar bill in 2015. At the time, the Republican governor said there is "no evidence of a demand for this service in New Jersey or that this bill would increase lottery sales."

Christie did not explain Monday why he signed this version of the measure.

The law takes effect Nov. 1.

The language in 69.8 that specifies a vacancy in LG is filled by appointment was enacted in 2009—session law is attached. The amendment is section 73 of the session law. Interestingly, the same bill also amended section 43.77, which discusses what constitutes a ballot vacancy. The amendment removed lieutenant governor from section 43.77. Most of the bill was about changes in administration of elections, so this provision appears to squeeze barely within the one-subject rule. The bill passed unanimously in both houses.

I added to the stack of papers on Jeff's chair the relevant pages from the constitutional debates preceding the 1857 Constitution.

Also attached are two older Iowa cases (in one PDF) that seem to address how we would determine whether a person who holds two offices holds incompatible offices. They may apply to 69.2(1)(h), which says a vacancy occurs if an incumbent holds more than one elective office at the same level of government. Or, they may not apply at all if we determine the gov/LG are really one office.

Okay I think I have figured out the catalyst for the 1988 amendment. In 1982 in Governor Branstad's first election, for the first time in Iowa history the people elected a republican governor and a democrat Lt. governor. Twice previously, we had elected a republican Lt. governor with a democratic governor.

I haven't found any contemporaneous evidence that anything in the 1988 amendment was designed to address the question of whether a new Lt. governor could be appointed.

The Gazette: Iowa state employees being asked to give up raises

Iowa legislators voting on bills to cut $118 million by June 30

Hundreds of state public employee union members are being asked to forego a 1.25 percent pay increase they've been receiving since Jan. 1 without getting any assurance from the state it would prevent layoffs.

About 19,000 state employees represented by AFSCME will begin voting in early February whether to accept the state's request to give up the raise agreed to in collective bargaining, according to Danny Homan, president of AFSCME Iowa Council 61.

For an AFSCME member in the midrange of the state pay scale, giving up the raise would amount to about 35 cents per hour or $61 a month, Homan estimated.

Members of the State Police Officers Council and Iowa United Professionals already have rejected the request made by Iowa Department of Administrative Services Director Janet Phipps. A decision on adjusting wages for non-contract employees will be made by the Governor's Office and the Department of Management, she said.

If all three unions had agreed to the wage adjustment, it would have saved the state about $10 million, Phipps said, about half that in the general fund.

The asks come as lawmakers are in the midst of adopting measures to cut nearly $118 Million from the state budget in the next five months because of a projected shortage of revenue.

AFSCME members will begin voting Feb. 6 on whether to concede their raise, Homan said. Just as he did when Democratic Gov. Chet Culver asked employees to take mandatory unpaid days, Homan took the state request to bargaining unit chairs. They voted unanimously to put it to a full membership vote.

The difference between the previous Culver request, and also one from Democratic Gov. Tom Vilsack, is that GOP Gov. Terry Branstad's administration is promising nothing in return, according to both Homan and Phipps.

"There is no quid pro quo," Phipps said. "We're asking them to be a part of a solution by contributing to an adjustment that has to be made."

State agencies likely are including the possibility of layoffs as they make plans to deal with budget adjustments approved Thursday by the Senate and scheduled for a vote Monday in the House, Phipps said.

However, in a letter to AFSCME members, Homan said he was told foregoing the wage increase “could potentially result in fewer layoffs this fiscal year.”

It’s a no-win situation for AFSCME members, Homan said, adding that one member described it as a choice between being shot in the foot and being shot in the head. If they approve the wage adjustment, state employees will lose that income. If not, they face layoffs in order for the state to make up a projected shortfall between now and the end of the fiscal year on June 30.

Homan was adamant the budget shortfall is not his members’ fault. It’s the fault of Branstad and House Republicans who gave a fertilizer plant in Lee County $100 million in economic development benefits, created more corporate tax cuts and privatized Medicaid, he said.

“I don’t know why they’re blaming the guys who were plowing roads last night or the correctional officers at the Iowa Medical and Classification Center who keep dangerous people off the streets and the people at mental health institutes caring for our most vulnerable people,” Homan said.

“But instead of taking money out of the rainy day fund, they are going to balance this budget on the backs of public employees,” he said.

It occurred to me that we should look at the legislative history for the 1988 amendment to see if the intention was to modernize succession as well as allow for the joint election of the governor and lieutenant governor. I've pulled the online version but will ask the state librarian to pull the complete versions tomorrow. I have a discovery conference in front of judge Hansen first thing tomorrow morning but am otherwise available.

Since the Lt governor receives the compensation for the governor when performing that offices duties, is the debate focused on the title?

Thanks,

Attachments: Category Chart.docx; Governor Succession.docx; State Chart.docx

Couple interesting things from making the charts today:

1. In Oklahoma, the provision says "the office" devolves, not just the "powers and duties." That may explain the holding in the 1926 case.
2. I double checked some provisions and discovered a few I had categorized as "shall become" actually make the distinction between permanent vacancy and temporary disability.

My count as of now is:

- 13 "devolve" or "act as governor" (including Iowa)
- 3 that use a phrase like "shall become governor" either without making a distinction between permanent vacancy and temporary disability, or that don't really have a provision covering temporary disability
- 34 that distinguish between permanent vacancy and temporary disability, and use different language for the two situations

The charts are attached along with an updated memo.

Thanks, Geoff. One more thing, historically, when an Iowa Gov has left office before the end of his term, there has not been a Lt. Gov. appointed. Most of the time, these were very short periods of time, though.

Subject: Constitutional issue re: Lt. Gov assuming Gov's powers

Eric and Geoff:

In Massachusetts, when Governor William Weld resigned in 1997, Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci became "Acting Governor" – not "Governor." When Celluci resigned to become US Ambassador to Canada during the Bush Administration in 2001, his Lt. Gov. Jane Swift became "Acting Governor."

Massachusetts Constitution has a similar provision to the Iowa Constitution:

III.--Whenever the chair of the Governor shall be vacant, by reason of his death, or absence from the Commonwealth, or otherwise, the Lieutenant-Governor, for the time being, shall, during such vacancy, perform all the duties incumbent upon the Governor, and shall have and exercise all the powers and authorities, which by this Constitution the Governor is vested with, when personally present.

Hope this is helpful.

Hi – Since the four of you are relatively new to Ad Law, I wanted to pass along the agenda for the New Board and Commission Member Orientation that the Governor's office hosts each year. It is scheduled for Dec. 20. The Governor's staff person told me they are near capacity, but they could probably accommodate us if any of you are interested in attending the orientation.

Let me know if you would like to attend, and I will pass your name along.

Thanks, Emily

Thanks, Geoff. One more thing, historically, when an Iowa Gov has left office before the end of his term, there has not been a Lt. Gov. appointed. Most of the time, these were very short periods of time, though.

Subject: Constitutional issue re: Lt. Gov assuming Gov's powers

Eric and Geoff:

In Massachusetts, when Governor William Weld resigned in 1997, Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci became "Acting Governor" – not "Governor." When Cellucci resigned to become US Ambassador to Canada during the Bush Administration in 2001, his Lt. Gov. Jane Swift became "Acting Governor."

Massachusetts Constitution has a similar provision to the Iowa Constitution:

III.--Whenever the chair of the Governor shall be vacant, by reason of his death, or absence from the Commonwealth, or otherwise, the Lieutenant-Governor, for the time being, shall, during such vacancy, perform all the duties incumbent upon the Governor, and shall have and exercise all the powers and authorities, which by this Constitution the Governor is vested with, when personally present.

Hope this is helpful.

Eric and Geoff:

In Massachusetts, when Governor William Weld resigned in 1997, Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci became "Acting Governor" – not "Governor." When Cellucci resigned to become US Ambassador to Canada during the Bush Administration in 2001, his Lt. Gov. Jane Swift became "Acting Governor."

Massachusetts Constitution has a similar provision to the Iowa Constitution:

III.--Whenever the chair of the Governor shall be vacant, by reason of his death, or absence from the Commonwealth, or otherwise, the Lieutenant-Governor, for the time being, shall, during such vacancy, perform all the duties incumbent upon the Governor, and shall have and exercise all the powers and authorities, which by this Constitution the Governor is vested with, when personally present.

Hope this is helpful.

Importance: High

To: Criminal Amicus Contacts

Vickie Wise of the Kentucky Attorney General's office has asked me to circulate the following inquiry:

Since the SCOTUS rulings in Miller and Montgomery, numerous inmates are filing declaratory actions in Kentucky claiming entitlement to relief. Most cases have the same fact pattern and are distinguishable because the defendant (although convicted as a juvenile) did not receive a mandatory Life Without Parole sentence.

However, a case has been filed that is procedurally different. In this case the juvenile defendant was initially sentenced to death but the sentence was subsequently commuted to LWOP (before Roper) because the Governor did not believe it was appropriate to sentence juveniles to death. This defendant now argues he is entitled to relief because the factors listed for consideration in Miller and Montgomery were not considered in his case. We believe this situation is still distinguishable because the LWOP sentence was not mandatory and was not imposed by a jury. Because of the Roper decision, we thought other states may have defendants similarly situated (wherein their death sentences were commuted to Life Without Parole).

We are therefore seeking the following information: Have you had any Miller/Montgomery challenges involving juveniles under death sentences when Roper was decided that subsequently became sentences of life without parole? If so, can you provide me any relevant information, including briefs you wrote and court decisions?

Thanks in advance for any assistance that you can provide. Please respond to:

Closing the loop, I am pleased to report that Connecticut AG Jepsen has appointed Assistant Attorney General Jane Rosenberg to be its new Solicitor General. Below is the announcement of the appointment.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT
ATTORNEY GENERAL GEORGE JEPSEN

AG Jepsen Names Jane Rosenberg Connecticut's New Solicitor General

For immediate release

FRIDAY, MARCH 10, 2017

HARTFORD – Attorney General George Jepsen today announced that long-time Assistant Attorney General Jane Rosenberg has been promoted within the Connecticut Office of the Attorney General to serve as an Associate Attorney General and the state's Solicitor General.

Rosenberg succeeds former Solicitor General Gregory T. D'Auria, who earlier this week was unanimously confirmed by the state Senate and House of Representatives, and was subsequently sworn in, as an Associate Judge of the Connecticut Supreme Court. As Solicitor General, Rosenberg will serve as a member of the Attorney General's senior staff and will oversee all of the office's appellate casework and the issuance of formal opinions.

"Jane Rosenberg is held in the highest regard by her colleagues in the office and across Connecticut's legal community for her intellect, temperament and accomplishments," said Attorney General Jepsen. "She has a thoughtful and deliberate approach that is extremely well-suited to the important role of Solicitor General. We're indebted to now-Justice Gregory D'Auria for his superb work as our first ever Solicitor General, and we have every confidence that Jane will continue the successful management of our appellate practice."

"I'm very grateful for this opportunity and for the confidence that Attorney General Jepsen has in me," said Rosenberg, "and I look forward to continuing to serve the people of Connecticut in this new and exciting role."

Rosenberg graduated from Yale University in 1979 and earned her juris doctorate from the University of Pennsylvania Law School in 1984. She worked for two years as an associate in the corporate law department at the Robinson & Cole law firm before first joining the Connecticut Office of the Attorney General in 1987 under former Attorney General Joseph Lieberman.

After a two-year separation, Rosenberg rejoined the Office of the Attorney General as an assistant attorney general in 1992, where she worked on numerous cases including the state's tobacco litigation. Since 2001, Rosenberg has worked in the office's Special Litigation Department, which represents and advises client agencies that include the state's constitutional offices. Rosenberg has represented state officials in both state and federal courts and has briefed, or briefed and argued, more than 70 appeals in state and federal court, including appeals challenging the constitutionality of state laws.

A native of Canton, Mass., Rosenberg and her family have lived in Glastonbury since 1986.

Closing the loop, I am pleased to report that Connecticut AG Jepsen has appointed Assistant Attorney General Jane Rosenberg to be its new Solicitor General. Below is the announcement of the appointment.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT ATTORNEY GENERAL GEORGE JEPSEN

AG Jepsen Names Jane Rosenberg Connecticut's New Solicitor General

FRIDAY, MARCH 10, 2017

HARTFORD – Attorney General George Jepsen today announced that long-time Assistant Attorney General Jane Rosenberg has been promoted within the Connecticut Office of the Attorney General to serve as an Associate Attorney General and the state's Solicitor General.

Rosenberg succeeds former Solicitor General Gregory T. D'Auria, who earlier this week was unanimously confirmed by the state Senate and House of Representatives, and was subsequently sworn in, as an Associate Judge of the Connecticut Supreme Court. As Solicitor General, Rosenberg will serve as a member of the Attorney General's senior staff and will oversee all of the office's appellate casework and the issuance of formal opinions.

"Jane Rosenberg is held in the highest regard by her colleagues in the office and across Connecticut's legal community for her intellect, temperament and accomplishments," said Attorney General Jepsen. "She has a thoughtful and deliberate approach that is extremely well-suited to the important role of Solicitor General. We're indebted to now-Justice Gregory D'Auria for his superb work as our first ever Solicitor General, and we have every confidence that Jane will continue the successful management of our appellate practice."

"I'm very grateful for this opportunity and for the confidence that Attorney General Jepsen has in me," said Rosenberg, "and I look forward to continuing to serve the people of Connecticut in this new and exciting role."

Rosenberg graduated from Yale University in 1979 and earned her juris doctorate from the University of Pennsylvania Law School in 1984. She worked for two years as an associate in the corporate law department at the Robinson & Cole law firm before first joining the Connecticut Office of the Attorney General in 1987 under former Attorney General Joseph Lieberman.

After a two-year separation, Rosenberg rejoined the Office of the Attorney General as an assistant attorney general in 1992, where she worked on numerous cases including the state's tobacco litigation. Since 2001, Rosenberg has worked in the office's Special Litigation Department, which represents and advises client agencies that include the state's -constitutional offices. Rosenberg has represented state officials in both state and federal courts and has briefed, or briefed and argued, more than 70 appeals in state and federal court, including appeals challenging the constitutionality of state laws.

A native of Canton, Mass., Rosenberg and her family have lived in Glastonbury since 1986.

Sarah currently serves on the Duke Law School Board of Visitors and is an Executive Board member for the Atlanta Chapter of the Federalist Society.

Clyde Wadsworth. Previously, Wadsworth was of counsel to Alston Hunt Floyd & Ing in Honolulu. To: Civil Amicus Contacts

I wanted to pass along some happy news. Two of our own have recently been appointed to their respective states' highest courts. And two others have been appointed to their states' appellate court. Here are the details.

On November 9, Georgia Governor Nathan Deal appointed Georgia Solicitor General Britt Grant to the Georgia Supreme Court. He also appointed Britt's predecessor as SG, Nels Peterson, to the Georgia Supreme Court.

On November 28, Arizona Governor Doug Ducey appointed Arizona Solicitor General John Lopez to serve on the Arizona Supreme Court.

In addition, this past August 31 and September 7, the Massachusetts Governor's Council confirmed Massachusetts State Solicitor Peter Sacks and Assistant Attorney General (and former NAAG Supreme Court Fellow) Sookyoung Shin to the Massachusetts Appeals Court.

We congratulate them all and wish them the best on what will surely be distinguished tenures on the bench.

Looking forward, Georgia Attorney General Chris Carr has appointed Deputy Solicitor General Sarah Warren to replace Britt at the start of the new year. And Massachusetts Attorney General Maura Healey appointed former Assistant State Solicitor Bessie Dewar to replace Peter.

South Carolina recently amended its constitution to specifically grant the governor the power to appoint a Lt governor. Currently, the law calls for a complete domino. The president pro tem of the senate was elevated to Lt. governor.

Word of caution - this is google research since I can't access westlaw on my tablet.

SECTION 11. Death, resignation, removal of Governor.

Section effective until the general election of 2018 and upon the joint election of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor. See also, section effective beginning with the general election of 2018 and upon the joint election of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor.

In the case of the removal of the Governor from office by impeachment, death, resignation, disqualification, disability, or removal from the State, the Lieutenant Governor shall be Governor. In case the Governor be impeached, the Lieutenant Governor shall act in his stead and have his powers until judgment in the case shall have been pronounced. In the case of the temporary disability of the Governor and in the event of the temporary absence of the Governor from the State, the Lieutenant Governor shall have full authority to act in an emergency. (1972 (57) 3171; 1973 (58) 48.) SECTION 11.

Death, resignation, removal of Governor, Lieutenant Governor.

Section effective beginning with the general election of 2018 and upon the joint election of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor. See also, section effective until the general election of 2018 and upon the joint election of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor.

Subject: Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Oregon

You asked me to look into whether the new governor appointed a lieutenant governor after the court concluded that the lt. governor "became" governor.
Short answer – No for each state.

Arkansas – Arkansas held a special election to fill the position of lt. governor after the lt. governor became governor following the election of President Clinton. Mike Huckabee won that special election. However, Arkansas is like Iowa pre-1988, where the lt. governor is elected separately from the governor.

Oklahoma – After the court in Oklahoma determined that the lt governor became governor in 1926, the office of lt. governor was "vacant" and held open until the next election. Just a few years later, the Governor of Oklahoma was impeached and the lt. governor again became governor, leaving the lt. governor office vacant.

Oregon – The Court in Oregon determined that the SOS became governor in 1877. For over a year Chadwick held BOTH the office of governor and the SOS until the next election.

Okay I think I have figured out the catalyst for the 1988 amendment. In 1982 in Governor Branstad's first election, for the first time in Iowa history the people elected a republican governor and a democrat lt. governor. Twice previously, we had elected a republican lt. governor with a democratic governor.

I haven't found any contemporaneous evidence that anything in the 1988 amendment was designed to address the question of whether a new lt. governor could be appointed.

It occurred to me that we should look at the legislative history for the 1988 amendment to see if the intention was to modernize succession as well as allow for the joint election of the governor and lieutenant governor. I've pulled the online version but will ask the state librarian to pull the complete versions tomorrow. I have a discovery conference in front of judge Hansen first thing tomorrow morning but am otherwise available.

Since the Lt governor receives the compensation for the governor when performing that offices duties, is the debate focused on the title?

Thanks,

Thanks, Geoff. One more thing, historically, when an Iowa Gov has left office before the end of his term, there has not been a Lt. Gov. appointed. Most of the time, these were very short periods of time, though.

Eric and Geoff:

In Massachusetts, when Governor William Weld resigned in 1997, Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci became "Acting Governor" – not "Governor." When Celluci resigned to become US Ambassador to Canada during the Bush Administration in 2001, his Lt. Gov. Jane Swift became "Acting Governor."

Massachusetts Constitution has a similar provision to the Iowa Constitution:

III.--Whenever the chair of the Governor shall be vacant, by reason of his death, or absence from the Commonwealth, or otherwise, the Lieutenant-Governor, for the time being, shall, during such vacancy, perform all the duties incumbent upon the Governor, and shall have and exercise all the powers and authorities, which by this Constitution the Governor is vested with, when personally present.

Hope this is helpful.

Is work product in the development of an attorney general's opinion subject to the open records law? How long do you expect it will take to provide the documents and how much will it cost? What does General Miller think about receiving this request from the Iowa GOP?

"First in the Nation"

Kaufmann Statement on Open Records Request from AG Miller's Office

For IMMEDIATE RELEASE

May 3, 2017

Today the Republican Party of Iowa filed an open records request with Attorney General Tom Miller's office. "In Miller's politically tainted press conference Monday where he radically reversed his position on Lt Governor Reynolds' authority to appoint a Lt. Governor herself, he repeatedly referenced the arguments of his staff in convincing him to flip flop. Iowans have a right to know all that went into this dramatic reversal," said RPI Chairman Jeff Kaufmann.

General Miller does not use email, so we have requested relevant documents from his staff, including: Jeff Thompson, Eric Tabor, Geoff Greenwood, Kevin McCarthy, Nathan Blake, Rob Sand, John McCormally, Meghan Gavin, and David Ranscht.

"Since General Miller stated "we've worked hard on this" and "A lot of research has been done" on this issue for nearly five months, we're certain there will be volumes of records responsive to this request," added Kaufmann. "With such a dramatic and coincidentally timed reversal of his opinion, the public has a right to know who lobbied him on this issue, what public officials were for and against this stunning reversal, and what outside influences leaned on him to take this politically motivated action. "

Finally, we've requested any prior drafts of his opinion. His central argument, that Lt Governor Reynolds will be both Governor and Lt. Governor simultaneously, is so ridiculous that four times since he was elected, General Miller issued formal AG opinions acknowledging the prohibition of what he is advocating now.

"AG Miller's reversal the evening before Governor Branstad's confirmation hearing is stunning, unprecedented, and reeks of politics. I look forward to the AG's prompt reply to our request," concluded Kaufmann.

Jeff & Eric:

Could you provide some clarity with these two similar questions:

1. Geoff, a number of people are telling me that the Attorney General's opinion leaves an easy out for Kim Reynolds by saying the offices of governor and lieutenant governor merge, rather than concluding that under Article IV, Section 17, she would be only "acting governor." Once she is sworn in as governor, she can formally resign the position of lieutenant governor. Then the 2009 law allows her to fill the vacancy in the lieutenant governor's office. Does your office have a comment on why this reasoning is invalid?

Thanks again for the heads up about the call-in opportunity.

I don't have their individual e-mail addresses, but please pass along my appreciation to the solicitor general and the other staff members who worked closely on today's formal opinion. It was very well-researched.

The reaction from the governor's office is disappointing but demonstrates how much political pressure was on the Attorney General's Office to reach a different conclusion. Thank you for standing up for the rule of law.

We heard a report late yesterday that the Iowa attorney general's office has been delaying the release of the opinion requested by Sen. Hi, Geoff:

I just spoke with state Sen. David Johnson, who says AG's office staff led him to believe that a response to his Feb. 1 letter about the governor's transition would come by the end of last week.

"I'm still waiting," he told me. He added that it's a critical question given that the Senate foreign relations committee is moving forward with Branstad's confirmation hearings next week.

Separately, I have also heard that a "draft opinion" has been circulated that says the lieutenant governor will become "acting governor" and will not have the authority to appoint a new No. 2.

If the draft opinion has circulated, I believe it is now an open record and urge you to release it to the public without further delay.

Thank you,

Can you give us a comment on behalf of Attorney General Miller whether you have answers to those questions at this point, or whether you plan to respond with a formal opinion to Sen. Johnson?

According to court records, it appears that Gov. Branstad is scheduled to have his deposition taken in the Larry Hedlund civil lawsuit on March 24 at 9 a.m.

Has he agreed to that date, and if so, does that mean he's still going to be around Iowa then?

Thank you,

Hi Geoff,

Per our conversation, I'm just following up on an email the station received regarding the AG's office getting involved with the Muscatine Council/Mayor legal fight. The tip said this:

"To my understanding other than the petitions that are being circulated on Facebook there is a petition that is being drafted up and will be presented to the Iowa Attorney General office as well as Branstads office. I read yesterday that the Iowa AGs office sent an order to our County Attorney and he refuses to abide what the AGs office informed him to do."

I'm just trying to sort through the weeds on this and see who has done what.

Geoff, sorry for the delay in circling back. Where does it say in Iowa Code that "the lieutenant governor, after taking office as governor, appoints a new lieutenant governor"? I see where the governor appoints a new LG if there is a vacancy in the LG position, but that says nothing about "the lieutenant governor, after taking office as governor."

In the Griffin case, Jeffrey Thompson told the Iowa Supreme Court that it was very significant Iowa lawmakers did not change the "infamous crimes" language when they amended the same part of the Iowa Constitution to remove the word "idiot." It strikes me as significant that lawmakers in the 1950s and 1980s did not change language referring to the LG performing the duties of the office of governor. They could have changed the wording to make it more like the US Constitution's language regarding the presidential succession, but they did not.

Why doesn't Attorney General Tom Miller want to ask the Iowa Supreme Court to weigh in on this issue? Doing so would allow the justices to provide a definitive interpretation of the Iowa Constitution. There is plenty of time for the justices to prepare an opinion. Governor Branstad does not intend to step down until he is confirmed as ambassador to China, which will take 4-8 months.

Thanks,

Laurie

Here's a little more explanation.

Notably, Iowa courts have never addressed this issue.

In all four historical cases of vacancies by Iowa governors, the lieutenant governor who succeeded the governor was viewed and regarded in all respects as the governor.

Our office carefully reviewed the Iowa Constitution.

A significant formal attorney general opinion from 1923 states that (in case of death, resignation or removal from office of the governor) the lieutenant governor becomes governor (I attached the opinion and highlighted the pertinent section on page 2).

Case law, statutory, and constitutional analyses from other states are consistent with this provision.

Finally, the Iowa Code supports this position. State law establishes that, the lieutenant governor, after taking office as governor, appoints a new lieutenant governor.

This research leads us to concur with Governor Branstad's conclusion that, upon his resignation, Lt. Governor Reynolds will become Governor. In her capacity as Governor, Governor Reynolds will have the authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Also, can Attorney General Miller explain why Joshua Newbold did not appoint a lieutenant governor during the nearly a year that he performed the duties of governor?

In Massachusetts, where the wording in the state constitution is similar, a lieutenant governor who assumed the duties of the governor under similar circumstances has been called "acting governor."

Hello Geoff,

What is the time frame for Attorney General Miller to issue an opinion on 1) whether Kim Reynolds will become governor or merely "acting governor" after Governor Branstad leaves for China, and 2) whether Reynolds will be able to appoint a new lieutenant governor in that scenario? I am requesting a copy of that opinion as soon as it becomes available

I saw you told Jason Noble last week, "We're going to have to review this and confer with the governor's office." Does that mean Attorney General Miller plans to clear his opinion with the governor's staff ahead of time? Or will his analysis of Iowa Constitution Section 4 be independent?

I assume the governor's office will want Kim Reynolds to have the title of governor as well as the powers of the office.

Thanks in advance for any information or clarification you can provide.

Subject: AG opinion on Reynolds as governor or "acting governor"

Hello Geoff,

What is the time frame for Attorney General Miller to issue an opinion on 1) whether Kim Reynolds will become governor or merely "acting governor" after Governor Branstad leaves for China, and 2) whether Reynolds will be able to appoint a new lieutenant governor in that scenario? I am requesting a copy of that opinion as soon as it becomes available

I saw you told Jason Noble last week, "We're going to have to review this and confer with the governor's office." Does that mean Attorney General Miller plans to clear his opinion with the governor's staff ahead of time? Or will his analysis of Iowa Constitution Section 4 be independent?

I assume the governor's office will want Kim Reynolds to have the title of governor as well as the powers of the office.

Thanks in advance for any information or clarification you can provide.

Brianne,

Sorry about the delay.

Our office has researched the law and consulted with the Governor's office. We concur with the Governor's conclusion that, upon the resignation of Governor Branstad, Lt. Governor Reynolds will become Governor and will have the authority to appoint a new Lieutenant Governor.

Thanks,

Geoff

Hi Geoff,

We spoke with the governor at his press conference this morning, and he said his office has worked with the AG's office and is confident Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds will replace Gov. Branstad as governor and will be able to appoint her own successor, per the code section we talked about. Wanted to run that by your office to see if the AG agrees, or whether you believe there is still ambiguity.

Thanks for the help!

Geoff and Eric,

Just one more thing (I promise!). I note the Iowa Constitution says upon a vacancy in the position of Governor, the Governor's power shall "devolve" to the Lt. Governor. (It does not say the Lt. Gov. assumes the office of Governor). I think this wording is important.

Note this dictionary definition of "devolve":

VERB

1. transfer or delegate (power) to a lower level, especially from central government to local or regional administration:

"measures to devolve power to the provinces" ·

"devolved and decentralized government"

synonyms: delegate · depute · pass (down/on) · download ·

[\[more\]](#)

hand down/over/on · transfer · transmit · assign · consign · convey · entrust · turn over · give · cede · surrender · relinquish · deliver · bestow · grant

- o (devolve on/upon/to)

(of duties or responsibility) pass to (a body or person at a lower level):

"his duties devolved on a comrade"

- o formal

(devolve into).

degenerate or be split into:

"the Empire devolved into separate warring states"

Massachusetts Constitution has a similar provision to the Iowa Constitution:

Geoff – quick follow up question for you. If we look at the Constitutional interpretation of this, since Reynolds stays Lt. Gov. and assumes the duties of governor, there is no vacancy to fill. Is that correct?

Give me a call back if you can, or an emailed response is fine to. On deadline, though, so would like to hear back ASAP.

Hey Brianne:

We looked up the pertinent section of the Iowa Constitution, which we didn't really discuss in the call. Here's kind of a legal flowchart that may help make things clear, including the Iowa Code sections you already looked up:

1. Resignation of the Governor – Must be made in writing to the General Assembly, if in session, if not, to the Secretary of State. Iowa Code § 69.4(1).
2. Upon resignation, the Office of Governor is considered vacant. § 69.2(1)(d).
3. The vacancy is filled by the Lieutenant Governor. Iowa Const. Art. IV, Sec. 17 (“In the case of the death, impeachment, resignation . . . of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, . . . shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.”)
4. Once the Lt. Governor becomes governor, it creates a vacancy in the Lt. Governor's office because of the prohibition against simultaneously holding more than one elective office. See Iowa Code § 69.2(1)(h).
5. In general, vacancies in state offices are filled by the governor. § 69.8(2).
6. The Code specifically provides, “an appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of the lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term.” § 69.8(2).

Accordingly, a resignation by Gov. Branstad would create a vacancy that would be filled by Lt. Gov. Reynolds. Once she assumed the office of Governor, a vacancy would be created in the Lt. Governor's office. The governor has the power and authority to appoint a new Lt. Governor who would serve for the balance of the Branstad/ Reynolds term.

Hopefully this helps.

Geoff

Dear Mr. Thompson,

As mentioned in my previous email to Ms. Madsen, the Midwestern Governors Association is currently working with the National Renewable Energy Laboratory (NREL) to expand the Department of Energy's Regulatory and Information Desktop (RAPID) Toolkit. The Toolkit is based on a wiki-platform and includes regulatory information about bulk transmission siting regulations, etc. It can be found here: <http://en.openei.org/wiki/RAPID/BulkTransmission> The purpose is to allow easy access to information for stakeholders. To that end, we need some additional information for Iowa so that we can ensure the state's entry on the Toolkit is accurate. NREL has specifically asked the following questions regarding the role of the Executive Council and we would much appreciate your help in answering them:

1. Iowa Department of Natural Resources: Iowa Code § 461A.25 states: "If the recommendation is for a lease in excess of five years, with the exception of agricultural lands specifically dealt with in Article I, section 24 of the Constitution of the State of Iowa, the council shall advertise for bids. If a bid is accepted, the lease shall be let or executed by the council in accordance with the most desirable bid." In what form must the Natural Resource Council (NRC) place its advertisement for bids (newspaper, letters, online, etc.)?
2. How long must NRC advertise for?
3. How must bidders submit their bids to NRC? What information must bidders include in their bids? How long do bidders have to submit their bids to NRC?
4. What factors does NRC use to determine which bid is "the most desirable bid"?

If you could please help us answer these questions by January 20th it would be much appreciated. Please let me know if you have any questions. Thank you.

Best Regards,
Sacha Kathuria

Dear Ms. Madsen,

The Iowa Department of Natural Resources suggested I contact you. The Midwestern Governors Association is expanding the Department of Energy's Regulatory and Information Permitting Information Desktop (RAPID) Toolkit to include the Midwestern states. The Toolkit can be found here: <http://en.openei.org/wiki/RAPID/BulkTransmission> As a part of this effort we are working with the National Renewable Energy Laboratory (NREL). NREL has a few questions about the role of the Executive Council and the NRC, which I have posted below:

1. Iowa Department of Natural Resources: Iowa Code § 461A.25 states: "If the recommendation is for a lease in excess of five years, with the exception of agricultural lands specifically dealt with in Article I, section 24 of the Constitution of the State of Iowa, the council shall advertise for bids. If a bid is accepted, the lease shall be let or executed by the council in accordance with the most desirable bid." In what form must the Natural Resource Council (NRC) place its advertisement for bids (newspaper, letters, online, etc.)?
2. How long must NRC advertise for?
3. How must bidders submit their bids to NRC? What information must bidders include in their bids? How long do bidders have to submit their bids to NRC?
4. What factors does NRC use to determine which bid is "the most desirable bid"?

I would much appreciate it if you could please help us obtain these clarifications. Please let me know if you have any questions. Thank you.

Geoff,

Can you tell me whether the Attorney General's Office is working on an expedited basis to provide the written opinion requested by Senator David Johnson?

If the answer is yes, when do you expect the opinion to be ready? Can Attorney General Miller commit to answering Senator Johnson's questions this month, or at least before Governor Branstad resigns, which seems likely to happen in April or May?

If the answer is no, can you explain why Attorney General Miller is unwilling to respond in a timely way to these questions?

The coming transfer of power is an extraordinary situation of obvious statewide importance. If Lieutenant Governor Reynolds appoints a new lieutenant governor, that person will be next in line to perform the governor's duties, in apparent contradiction to language in the Iowa Constitution placing the Iowa Senate president next in line.

I understand that legal research can take time, but you indicated in our earlier correspondence that the Attorney General's staff had thoroughly researched these matters before your December 12 announcement that Attorney General Miller concurred with the governor's reading of the Iowa Constitution.

Thanks in advance for any information you can provide about a timetable. If Attorney General Miller will not commit to issuing his written opinion before Governor Branstad resigns, I want to let my readers know. (Several have asked me what is happening on this.)

Yours,

Laurie

Lieutenant Governor to Serve as Governor, But Lacks Authority to Appoint Lieutenant, Attorney General Opinion Concludes

Formal opinion responds to request by state senator as Governor Branstad prepares to resign for ambassadorship

DES MOINES – Attorney General Tom Miller Monday issued a formal legal opinion stating that if a governor resigns, the lieutenant governor becomes governor for all intents and purposes, but does not have legal authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Sen. David Johnson, I-Ocheyedan, requested the opinion following Governor Terry Branstad’s announcement that, if confirmed by the U.S. Senate, he will serve as U.S. ambassador to China.

The 23-page opinion, following extensive legal and historical research, concludes, “...the powers and duties of the office of Governor fall upon the lieutenant governor.” The conclusion is based on an Iowa Constitution provision addressing a governor’s resignation, which states, “...the powers and duties of the office...shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.” Under that provision, the opinion adds, “The lieutenant governor takes on this authority because she is lieutenant governor.”

Significantly, according to Miller, Article IV, section 1 provides that “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.”

While the “the lieutenant governor becomes governor and has the title of Governor,” the opinion further adds that that person does not have constitutional authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor. “In other words, upon a governor’s resignation, the lieutenant governor will hold both the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. There is no vacancy to be filled,” according to the opinion.

“This opinion conveys that, in a sense, the two offices merge,” Miller said. “This is consistent with numerous cases in other states that addressed this question,” Miller added. “It is also consistent with a close reading of the Iowa governor's succession provision—Article IV, section 19 of the Iowa Constitution, which establishes a precise order of gubernatorial succession without providing for the appointment of a lieutenant governor.”

Miller's opinion notes that in all four previous instances when an Iowa governor resigned or died while in office, the lieutenant governor was always considered governor, but never appointed or named a new lieutenant governor. The opinion also concludes, “The framers intended that those in the gubernatorial line of succession be elected.”

At the federal level, prior to Congress amending the U.S. Constitution in 1967 to establish that the vice president becomes president and grants the president authority to appoint a new vice president with Congressional approval, no vice president who assumed the powers and duties of a president who died while in office appointed a new vice president.

The formal opinion departs from a public statement Miller's office issued in December, following an informal legal review in response to media inquiries, which stated the office concurred with “Governor Branstad's conclusion that...in her capacity as Governor, Governor Reynolds will have the authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor.”

The December statement was based, in part, on an Iowa Code section addressing vacancies of office holders. Miller's formal opinion concludes this statute does not apply when a governor resigns and the powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

About Attorney General Opinions

A formal attorney general opinion addresses legal questions relating to a public official's duties by interpreting laws and offering legal guidance.

While not a legal precedent, a formal attorney general opinion is similar to one and stands until a court or later opinion overrules it or new legislation is enacted to change a statute in question. Opinions are not legally binding, but courts generally give them careful consideration and deference.

Statement from Attorney General Tom Miller on AFSCME Lawsuit over Collective Bargaining Law

Miller to ask Executive Council to approve outside legal counsel to defend state

DES MOINES – Attorney General Tom Miller today announced that he will ask the Iowa Executive Council to seek outside legal counsel to defend the state against the lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of House File 291, the collective bargaining bill signed into law on Friday.

The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) Iowa Council 61 filed the lawsuit Monday in Polk County District Court.

The Executive Council, comprised of the governor, secretary of state, state treasurer, secretary of agriculture and state auditor, must approve the appointment of outside counsel to represent the state.

“As the new collective bargaining law has the potential to existentially threaten the viability of public sector unions—many of the very same organizations that have supported me in the past—I am recommending that the Executive Council seek outside legal representation to defend this lawsuit in order to avoid any questions about a potential conflict,” Miller said. “While the extraordinarily professional and skilled attorneys in my office have vigorously defended Governor Branstad and the legislature in past lawsuits involving AFSCME, I think it’s most prudent in this highly charged legal dispute to avoid any appearance of politics clouding our office’s legal representation and judgment.”

often feels pulled in a dozen directions at the same time, with the sense that I am just spinning my wheels trying to keep juggling all the balls in the air. PRESSURE.

I have learned that April, coincidentally, is Stress Awareness Month. Recognized since 1992, each April, health care professionals and health promotion experts across the country join forces to increase public awareness about both the causes and cures for our modern stress epidemic. We also see various tornado and severe weather drills at this time each spring, to try to prepare us for the possibility of a natural disaster. But what prepares us to deal with the PRESSURE of the practice of law?

While I'm sure each occupation has its stressors, we know all too well the mounting pressure we face in our practice, whether private practice, in house, government, or elsewhere. The demand for faster, less costly legal advice, coupled with the blessing and curse of technology that allows us to be connected and accessible 24/7 sends thousands of lawyers each year into a tailspin of stress and pressure. Add in family, health, community stressors and even the uncertainty of our national security and changes in politics and government—it's a recipe for disaster that no April tornado drill or disaster preparedness training can touch.

It is no surprise to scan the Iowa Supreme Court's disciplinary decisions and find that many lawyers who find themselves in front of the Grievance Commission have succumbed to the pressure and sought solace in controlled substances, only deepening the downward spiral. The ABA reports that more than 50% of all disciplinary cases involve impaired lawyers. Lawyers abuse alcohol at a 50-80% higher rate than the general

Our box office is now open

One of the many benefits of belonging to the

Polk County Bar Association is access to discounted tickets on top-quality Broadway productions at the Des Moines Civic Center. Each year, we purchase season tickets - and we will also buy group tickets if there are enough people interested for a particular show - and we pass the savings on to you!

Take a look at the shows listed below. If you are interested in attending, just email Sonja Diener and let her know which shows and how many tickets for each show you would like. You don't have to buy tickets for every show - you can pick and choose. This is not an obligation to buy. It just gives us an idea of how many group tickets, in addition to the season's tickets, we will need to buy. If you have questions, just call our office at (515) 697-7880.

Willis Broadway series tickets to be put on our very long list of people interested in tickets, just send an email to sdiener@pcbaonline.org. No more than three tickets per person please. And again, there is no guarantee that we will be able to buy more tickets.

From the President . . . .

I have a tattoo of the scales of justice on my shoulder blade. I was inspired by Robert DeNiro's tattoo sprawling across his back in Cape Fear, but I was not gutsy enough for that for my first (or any) tattoo. As a lawyer, I suppose it may seem too cutesy, or perhaps it is seen as shameless self-promotion. It is a permanent reminder, though, of the integrity of our U.S. justice system.

PCBA President Bridget Penick

The scales of justice symbolize the idea of the fair distribution of law, with no influence of bias, privilege or corruption. Given recent events in this country, I could not be more proud of our judiciary and my fellow lawyers upholding and embodying what the scales of justice represent.

I am writing this message on Valentine's Day, and I was fortunate to have a Valentine's lunch date with more than a dozen judges and justices and dozens of Polk County Bar Association lawyers. I shared a table with our speakers, Iowa Supreme

For more than 15 years, Holly has practiced in the areas of white collar criminal defense, internal investigations, and business litigation. Prior to joining Davis Brown, Holly practiced at her own boutique white collar and business litigation firm in Des Moines. She earned her J.D. from the Court Chief Justice Mark Cady and Iowa Court of Appeals Chief Judge David Danilson. As I chatted with them informally and then listened to their prepared remarks, I was reminded of how incredibly proud I am that Iowa has merit selection instead of judicial elections, to minimize politics swaying our scales of justice in one way or the other. As Chief Justice Cady noted, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce ranked Iowa's court system as 4th in the nation. The State of Nevada has adopted a court of appeals system mirrored after Iowa's mode.

As Chief Danilson (sort of) joked, the Iowa Court of Appeals is like the second chair lawyer at trial who does the majority of the work but gets none of the recognition. Read more (and see the tattoo).

Students wanted for Law Day contest

Each year, the Polk County Bar Association teams up with ARAG to give Polk County students in grades K through 12 a chance to get creative with the law as part of our Law Day celebration. Chief among the activities is the visual arts, music, essay, and poetry competitions.

This year's theme, The 14th Amendment: Transforming American Democracy, enables students to explore the many ways that the 14th Amendment has reshaped American law and society. Ratified during Reconstruction a century and a half ago, the Fourteenth Amendment serves as the cornerstone of landmark civil rights legislation, the foundation for numerous federal court decisions protecting fundamental rights, and a source of inspiration for all those who advocate for equal justice under law.

I was born on an Air Force base in Mountain Home, Idaho. We lived there for two years until we moved to Cannon Air Force Base in New Mexico. We moved to Des Moines when I was in first grade and I have lived here ever since. I went to Lincoln High School where I was All-Conference in football, ran track including a role on the team for the 1600m medley relay at the State Track Meet, participated in show choir, some small theater roles, and the State-Champion All-Male Dance Team. I was moderately successful in the academic classroom.

I received a football scholarship to play at St. Ambrose University in Davenport, IA. While I only played football for two years, it did introduce me to the next phase in my life, the law. There I majored in Political Science and Philosophy and founded the SAU Chapter of the Phi Alpha Delta Law Fraternity and re-started the Mock Trial Program as its captain. ## Students wanted for Law Day contest chance to get creative with the law as part of our Law Day celebration. Chief among the activities is the visual arts, music, essay and poetry competition for students in grades 6 through 12.

This year's theme, The Fourteenth Amendment: Transforming American Democracy, provides the opportunity for students to explore the many ways that the Fourteenth Amendment has reshaped American law and society. Through its Citizenship, Due Process and Equal Protection clauses, this transformative amendment advanced the rights of all Americans. It also played a pivotal role in extending the reach of the Bill of Rights to the states. Ratified during Reconstruction a century and a half ago, the Fourteenth Amendment serves as the cornerstone of landmark civil rights legislation, the foundation for numerous federal court decisions protecting fundamental rights, and a source of inspiration for all those who advocate for equal justice under law.

The deadline for entries is April 10. Click here for complete details. The winning students will be honored at the PCBA Annual Meeting and Law Day Luncheon on Tuesday, May 9.

Fredrikson & Byron received a nearly perfect score of 95 percent on the 2017 Corporate Equality Index (CEI), a national benchmarking survey and report on corporate policies and practices relating to lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender (LGBT) workplace equality, administered by the Human Rights Campaign (HRC). Here's the court opinion. (It doesn't say much.)

<http://www.sccourts.org/opinions/HTMLFiles/SC/27699.pdf>

And here's the proposed amendment that passed in 2012 and 2014.

http://www.scstatehouse.gov/sess119\_2011-2012/bills/3152.htm

It looks mostly like what we did in 1988. One weird thing I noticed is that in the laundry list of reasons why the lieutenant governor would be "removed" (impeachment, resignation, etc.), "becoming governor" is not one of them, as some other states have said.

Dear Jeff and Thomas,

Please see email, below. We are thinking that we likely would not need more than 2 hours, but depending on the Judge's questions, we could go longer, especially since we may need to go through the various affidavits in some detail. How long do you anticipate you might need?

Once I hear from you, I'll cc you in my response, if you like, and say that we've conferred and anticipate a total time of X hours, depending on the Judge's questions.

Thanks!

Rita

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR Governor Terry E. Branstad ★ Lt. Governor Kim Reynolds

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: Monday, May 1, 2017

Gov. Branstad, Lt. Gov. Reynolds respond to Attorney General Miller's reversal of opinion

Gov. Terry Branstad

"Tom Miller was crystal clear last December when he said Lt. Governor Reynolds could act upon existing law and appoint a Lt. Governor when she becomes Governor upon my resignation.

'Our office has researched the law and consulted with the Governor's office. We concur with the Governor's conclusion that, upon resignation of Governor Branstad, Lt. Governor Reynolds will become Governor and will have the authority to appoint a new Lt. Governor.' – Tom Miller's Office, December 13, 2016.

No new facts or laws have changed since December 13, 2016. Tom Miller has allowed politics to cloud his judgment and is ignoring Iowa law. This politically motivated opinion defies common sense. Iowans expect a Governor and Lt. Governor working on their behalf. This is disappointing."

Lt. Gov. Kim Reynolds

"In December, Attorney General Tom Miller researched the law and concurred with the Secretary of State and our office that, upon Gov. Branstad's resignation, I become Governor and have the authority to appoint a new Lt. Governor. Since then, I've been moving forward with that understanding. Now, five months later, just one day before Governor Branstad testifies before the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the Attorney General has reversed himself, but the law hasn't changed. The law still states that as Governor, I vacate my role as Lt. Governor and am able to appoint a new Lt. Governor. With the law on our side we will move forward with his first conclusion as we examine our options in light of Tom Miller's reversal."

Ben Hammes, Communications Director

"The power of a Governor to appoint a new Lt. Governor was put into the law in 2009 by the democrats. That law says: 'An appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term.' This bill passed unanimously by both parties and signed into law by a democrat Governor. Now, just because the democrats do not control the Governor's office, Attorney General Miller wants to pretend like this law does not exist, and issue a non-binding opinion. Quite frankly, this is what Iowans are sick and tired of. The Attorney General should be upholding the law, not ignoring it."

*****

Background Information:

Attorney General Miller now says that Lt. Gov. Reynolds will be both Governor and Lt. Governor at the same time and that Lt. Gov. Reynolds will not be able to appoint a new Lt. Governor. That defies common sense and the law.

- (1) When Gov. Branstad resigns, the Iowa Constitution states that his powers will devolve upon Lt. Gov. Reynolds. Lt. Gov. Reynolds will become Governor. Attorney General Miller agrees with this conclusion.
- (2) Iowa law prevents someone from holding two offices at the same time. Because Kim Reynolds will become Governor, she will automatically vacate the Office of the Lt. Governor.
- (3) In 2009, the Iowa Legislature (led by democrats) passed a statute to clarify that if there is a vacancy in the Office of Lt. Governor, the Governor appoints someone to fill that vacancy. That law is clear: "An appointment by the governor to fill a vacancy in the office of lieutenant governor shall be for the balance of the unexpired term."
- (4) When Terry Branstad resigns, Kim Reynolds becomes Governor; the Office of Lt. Governor is then vacant, and under the Iowa Code (passed unanimously by the Legislature) Gov. Reynolds appoints someone to fill that vacancy.

Similar situations have occurred before in other states. For example:

- (1) In 2003, President Bush picked Utah Gov. Michael Leavitt to head the EPA. The state's Attorney General, in a thorough legal opinion, concluded that Leavitt's Lt. Governor became Governor and vacated the Lt. Governor's Office. The new Governor, then, was free to appoint a new Lt. Governor (and he did).

- (2) Similarly, when then-Gov. Bill Clinton became president in 1993, the Arkansas Supreme Court ruled — based upon constitutional provisions that are nearly identical to Iowa's — that his Lt. Governor became Governor. The Office of the Lt. Governor was then vacant, and Mike Huckabee filled that vacancy mid-term.
- (3) Finally, and most recently, the New York's highest court ruled that when Gov. Elliot Spitzer resigned, Lt. Governor David Patterson became Governor, vacated the Office of Lt. Governor, and was free to appoint a new Lt. Governor.

In December 2016, Attorney General Miller agreed with this view of the law. Since then, the Constitution hasn't changed. Neither has the Iowa Code. While Attorney General Miller's opinion is not binding on anybody, Iowans should ask why Attorney General Miller suddenly reversed course.

Good morning Eric. My name is John Bursch, and you may remember me from the NAAG amici contacts list when I served as Michigan Solicitor General from 2011-13. I am now back in private practice, though still actively litigating on behalf of states. (I represent Indiana in defending its law prohibiting the possession or transfer of aborted fetal body parts or tissue; Arizona, Michigan, and New Jersey in federal-court, consent-decree matters; and Michigan in the presidential-election recount litigation.)

I read this morning about the Iowa Legislature's approval of a new pro-life law and wanted to pro-actively reach out to see if I might be able to assist you and General Miller in defending the litigation that is bound to come once the Governor signs the bill. A summary of my experience is available at <http://www.burschlaw.com/>, and my contact information is below; is there a good time to talk in the next week or two?

Best regards,

John

Re: HF 524 (medical use of cannabis)

Dear Senator Schneider,

HF 524 appears to set up a continuing criminal enterprise here in Iowa, in violation of federal law, 21 U.S.C. § 848 (2017). Anyone participating in the program would be in violation of federal law, 21 U.S.C. § 844 (2017). Anyone manufacturing or distributing cannabis products would be committing federal crimes carrying penalties of 10 years to life in federal prison and a fine of $10 to $50 million, 21 U.S.C. § 841 (2017). Penalties can double for conspiracy to commit any of these acts, 21 U.S.C. § 846 (2017). Because HF 524 authorizes the cultivation, manufacture, and distribution, and possession of cannabis products in the state of Iowa without explaining how any of it would be in compliance with federal law, HF 524 creates a positive conflict between federal and state law so that the two cannot consistently stand together, 21 U.S.C. § 903 (2017).

Please request an opinion from the Attorney General of Iowa, Tom Miller, on the legality of HF 524 before Governor Branstad signs HF 524 into law.

In my opinion, federal schedules of controlled substances are ordinary administrative regulations and cannot be used to interfere with state medical marijuana programs, but HF 524 does not address this matter.

Alliance for Cannabis Therapeutics v. DEA, 930 F.2d 936, 939 (D.C. Cir. 1991) (“neither the statute nor its legislative history precisely defines the term ‘currently accepted medical use’; therefore, we are obliged to defer to the Administrator’s interpretation of that phrase if reasonable.”)

Gonzales v. Oregon, 546 U.S. 243, 258 (2006) (“The Attorney General has rulemaking power to fulfill his duties under the CSA. The specific respects in which he is authorized to make rules, however, instruct us that he is not authorized to make a rule declaring illegitimate a medical standard for care and treatment of patients that is specifically authorized under state law.”)

Grinspoon v. DEA, 828 F.2d 881, 886 (1st Cir. 1987) (“Congress did not intend ‘accepted medical use in treatment in the United States’ to require a finding of recognized medical use in every state or, as the Administrator contends, approval for interstate marketing of the substance.”)

I look forward to hearing from you at your earliest convenience.

Thank you very much!

Geoff,

Can you tell me whether the Attorney General's Office is working on an expedited basis to provide the written opinion requested by Senator David Johnson?

If the answer is yes, when do you expect the opinion to be ready? Can Attorney General Miller commit to answering Senator Johnson's questions this month, or at least before Governor Branstad resigns, which seems likely to happen in April or May?

If the answer is no, can you explain why Attorney General Miller is unwilling to respond in a timely way to these questions?

The coming transfer of power is an extraordinary situation of obvious statewide importance. If Lieutenant Governor Reynolds appoints a new lieutenant governor, that person will be next in line to perform the governor's duties, in apparent contradiction to language in the Iowa Constitution placing the Iowa Senate president next in line.

I understand that legal research can take time, but you indicated in our earlier correspondence that the Attorney General's staff had thoroughly researched these matters before your December 12 announcement that Attorney General Miller concurred with the governor's reading of the Iowa Constitution.

Thanks in advance for any information you can provide about a timetable. If Attorney General Miller will not commit to issuing his written opinion before Governor Branstad resigns, I want to let my readers know. (Several have asked me what is happening on this.)

Yours,

Equal Justice After Hours 2017

Equal Justice After Hours, the Iowa Legal Aid Foundation's signature annual fundraising event, was held on March 30, and attended by over 300 people. Photos and the program from the event can be found on the Iowa Legal Aid Foundation's website at www.iowalegalaidfoundation.org.

Preliminary figures show that nearly $200,000 was raised through sponsorships, ticket sales and donations at the event. This total includes $25,000 raised through a dollar-for-dollar challenge issued by members of the Iowa State Bar Association's Board of Governors.

Litigation Highlights of the Past 40 Years:

Availability of Fee Waivers

Iowa Legal Aid has worked on behalf of vulnerable children for its entire 40 years. In the early 1990s, Iowa Legal Aid staff often received calls from parents who were not allowed to enroll their children in school because of unpaid school fees. School fees often totaled more than $100 per child, depending on the grade level and other factors. There were cases where the names of students who had not paid fees were read over the public address system at the beginning of the school day, where children's names were posted on a bulletin board, where students were denied participation in graduation ceremonies, where students were not allowed to have their report cards—all because of their parents' poverty. One year, an elementary principal actually stood in the door way, and extended his arm to block the entry of an impoverished child whose parents had not paid school fees. Iowa Legal Aid filed a request for rule making with the Department of Education. It took four years to get a rule that required school districts to waive fees for low-income families, but now, each fall, low-income families are notified of the availability of fee waivers. There were no more back-to-school calls to Iowa Legal Aid after 1996, when the rule became final.

13th Annual Dean's Cup Golf Challenge

May 15, 2017 - Finkbine Golf Course - Iowa City

This event is for all law graduates, faculty, staff and students of Drake Law School and the Iowa College of Law – of every skill level – to support their law school, and, at the same time, raise funds for Iowa Legal Aid, which provided Hope, Dignity and Justice to nearly 38,000 Iowans in 2016, but still had to turn away or underserve at least 10,000 others.

Over 110 lawyers and judges from around the state participated in the 2016 event. Drake, led by Captain Chief Justice Mark Cady, won the Cup from a spirited Iowa squad and its Captain Judge Eliza Ovrom. In addition to playing in the event, many alums and businesses supported the event by donating items for the silent auction, sponsoring a hole or making other contributions to the event. Also, a lawyer who is not a graduate of either school may participate in the best shot format by declaring temporary allegiance to one of the two schools at the time of registration.

The Registration fee is partially tax deductible. To sign up and secure your spot in this prestigious event, or indicate your desire to be a sponsor, click here.

Iowa Legal Aid:

PLEASE JOIN US!! Equal Justice After Hours 2017

For the past 40 years, Iowa Legal Aid has helped ensure that everyone is treated fairly in the justice system. The importance of access to the court system is best illustrated through the comments of an Iowa Legal Aid client:

"Thank you! For years, I didn't know how or when to get out of the situation I was in when in all reality, one phone call to Iowa Legal Aid made a huge impact on my life! I now have a nice place to live that is safe for me and my children. We can now learn to live without domestic violence in our home. My children can now grow up to respect others. Iowa Legal Aid saved my life!"

In 2017, Iowa Legal Aid is celebrating 40 YEARS OF SEEKING JUSTICE AND IMPROVING LIVES. Iowa Legal Aid will be kicking off its celebration with its annual event, Equal Justice After Hours. The event will be held Thursday, March 30 from 5:00-7:00 p.m. at American Enterprise Group, located at 601 6th Avenue in downtown Des Moines. Tickets are $50 and can be purchased at the door or online HERE.

Iowa State Bar Association Board of Governors has issued a challenge for donations made that evening!

For the fourth year the President-Elect of the Iowa State Bar Association (ISBA), Steve Eckley, has initiated a Board of Governors challenge at Equal Justice After Hours. The challenge is a dollar-for-dollar match from Steve and individual members of the Board of Governors of the ISBA for pledges and donations made at the event. Individual Board of Governors members have raised over $7,000 to initiate the challenge!!

Join us on March 30 to celebrate 40 Years of Seeking Justice and Improving Lives. If you are unable to attend, but would like to support Iowa Legal Aid, click HERE to donate.

Litigation Highlights of the Past 40 Years:

Iowa Legal Aid's Assistance to Veterans

Iowa Legal Aid helped a disabled veteran with a garnishment problem. All of the money in his bank account had been seized. As a result, he had no money to pay expenses. The money in his account was from his Army pension and the VA. His money was protected by law from garnishment. However, he did not know it was protected and did not know he could do anything about it. Iowa Legal Aid brought a lawsuit challenging the lack of notice to the veteran and lack of an opportunity to challenge the legality of taking his property. In response to his lawsuit, the Iowa Supreme Court approved an administrative directive, providing all the relief Iowa Legal Aid asked for on his behalf. In fact, the change in procedure was broader in scope than the lawsuit, as it applied to the entire state. Now, someone in this situation will receive a notice explaining exempt property, and how to assert the claim. (Burr v. Des Moines County – Federal District Court)

Iowa Legal Aid's Iowa City Regional Office

 Hawkeye Legal Aid in Iowa City was one of the "original" county legal aid offices that merged to form the Legal Services Corporation of Iowa, now Iowa Legal Aid. Hawkeye Legal Aid was formed in 1967. Iowa Legal Aid celebrates its 40th anniversary this year, but it is also the 50th anniversary of legal aid in Johnson County.

You asked me to look into whether the new governor appointed a lieutenant governor after the court concluded that the lt. governor "became" governor.
Short answer – No for each state.

Arkansas – Arkansas held a special election to fill the position of lt. governor after the lt. governor became governor following the election of President Clinton. Mike Huckabee won that special election. However, Arkansas is like Iowa pre-1988, where the lt. governor is elected separately from the governor.

Oklahoma – After the court in Oklahoma determined that the lt governor became governor in 1926, the office of lt. governor was "vacant" and held open until the next election. Just a few years later, the Governor of Oklahoma was impeached and the lt. governor again became governor, leaving the lt. governor office vacant.

Oregon – The Court in Oregon determined that the SOS became governor in 1877. For over a year Chadwick held BOTH the office of governor and the SOS until the next election.

Although there is not a specific paragraph to this effect in the memo as it stands now, I also realized that article IV, section 19 states the people further down the line "act as" governor, while "devolve" applies only to the lieutenant. That provision was amended to its current form as part of the 1988 amendments. Several other states noted that the difference in language suggests the lieutenant governor is not merely acting governor.

Thanks. I agree that this distinction is important – the other people in line of succession have other “jobs” while the only real purpose for the Lt. Gov is to take over for Gov.

Eric and Geoff:

In Massachusetts, when Governor William Weld resigned in 1997, Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci became "Acting Governor" – not "Governor." When Cellucci resigned to become US Ambassador to Canada during the Bush Administration in 2001, his Lt. Gov. Jane Swift became "Acting Governor."

Massachusetts Constitution has a similar provision to the Iowa Constitution:

III.--Whenever the chair of the Governor shall be vacant, by reason of his death, or absence from the Commonwealth, or otherwise, the Lieutenant-Governor, for the time being, shall, during such vacancy, perform all the duties incumbent upon the Governor, and shall have and exercise all the powers and authorities, which by this Constitution the Governor is vested with, when personally present.

Hope this is helpful.

Eric and Geoff:

In Massachusetts, when Governor William Weld resigned in 1997, Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci became "Acting Governor" – not "Governor." When Celluci resigned to become US Ambassador to Canada during the Bush Administration in 2001, his Lt. Gov. Jane Swift became "Acting Governor."

Massachusetts Constitution has a similar provision to the Iowa Constitution:

III.--Whenever the chair of the Governor shall be vacant, by reason of his death, or absence from the Commonwealth, or otherwise, the Lieutenant-Governor, for the time being, shall, during such vacancy, perform all the duties incumbent upon the Governor, and shall have and exercise all the powers and authorities, which by this Constitution the Governor is vested with, when personally present.

Hope this is helpful.

Perfect Orbits Once Again

THE LESSON

These are the third person singular pronouns:

she, her, herself, he, his, him, himself, it, its, and itself

These are the third person plural pronouns:

they, them, their, and themselves

These are some of the indefinite pronouns:

anyone, everyone, no one, nobody, someone, each

There are more, but you get the point.

Two Problems

Here's the situation: Both alternatives are incorrect; but you have to choose one.

In 1982, I published my first book, Victim: The Other Side of Murder. The story chronicles a family of six, two of whom had been trapped in the basement of a hi-fi shop at the mercy of a mass-murderer. The book was the first work of narrative nonfiction to illuminate the victim's side of violent crime. I dedicated it to my parents and to the surviving members of the family who had courageously opened up to me. But in expressing my gratitude, I faced a problem: three members of the family were men; the other was a woman. After I had struggled for many hours, that half of the dedication finally read:

*The story itself
Belongs to the Naisbitt family,
And I am indebted to each of them
For sharing their part of it with me*

Even though each is singular and their is plural, I saw no other solution. Fast forward to last summer, when I wrote a tip about forming possessives and how polite society in the early eighteenth century did not tolerate inanimate objects possessing things (See Tip: "Possessed"). I included this clause:

. . . so anyone caught writing 'the ship's mast' could find themselves not invited to the next garden party.

One of your colleagues, Jerry, wrote that he found it interesting that I had "fallen prey to using the third person plural as a generic pronoun." He means that anyone is singular, yet I refer to it with the plural pronoun, themselves. If Jerry had read the dedication in Victim, he would have said that each is singular and their is plural, so they don't agree either.

I could have written "each . . . for sharing his or her part" and "anyone caught . . . could find herself or himself not invited." But neither is a good alternative. I also could have gone with the royal he and cut out a little over half the world's population: "for sharing his part" and "could find himself not invited." Maybe I should have written, "And I am indebted to all of them for sharing their stories with me." But that seemed less personal.

QUICK REVIEW

The third person singular pronouns are:

she, her, herself, he, his, him, himself, it, its, and itself

The third person plural pronouns are:

they, them, their, and themselves

The indefinite pronouns include:

singular third person pronouns express both feminine and masculine, and attempt to combine she/he, his/her, and it, which is awkward.

Second, indefinite pronouns are singular in number and require a singular verb, but they are "notionally plural" when matched to other pronouns. In Sense and Sensibility (1811) Jane Austen demonstrates the indefinite pronoun followed by a singular verb but a third person plural pronoun:

"And each of them was in arranging their particular concerns. . . ."

Rule

It's okay to use the third person plural pronouns they, them, they, and themselves when referring to a singular noun of indeterminate gender (writer, governor) or a plural noun of indeterminate gender.

Any governor who raise taxes in their state could find themselves out of the governor's mansion come next election.

Nobody here seems to fall into an Author, ancient or modern, if they can avoid

ine and s to

anyone, everyone, no one, nobody, someone, each

There are more, but you get the point.

TWO PROBLEMS THAT OVERLAP

The First Problem

In the eighteenth century a group of grammarians arbitrarily decreed that indefinite pronouns should always be singular and require singular verbs: anyone is, everyone is, no one is, someone was, each has been.

The Second Problem

The grammar decree hit an especially hard stone wall when the grammarians tried to match the singular indefinite pronouns to the singular third person pronouns. You can imagine the angst when someone tried to post an ad in the Boston Bugle:

Anyone attending the candle-making class must bring ____ own wax.

Is it her or his, or is it their? That was the dilemma: If we used the plural their with the indefinite anyone, we would be wrong because anyone had been decreed singular; and if we used her or his, we would be equally wrong, because she does not include the other. Merriam-Webster's Concise Dictionary of English Usage calls these two problems "perceptible gaps in the language." And the gaps intersect right at this point: in English we have no singular third person pronoun that covers both women and men.

A THICKER PLOT

Up against that stone wall, the eighteenth-century grammarians pondered, If anyone is singular, and we have to match it to a singular third person pronoun—but we don't have one that means both genders—can we match it by decree to he or his anyway? Of course they could, and as shocking as this might seem, they decided on the masculine his (he, him, himself). Can you imagine? It might have had something to do with eighteenth-century grammarians being men. So writers followed this practice so rigidly over the next two hundred years, they produced sentences like this one from a New York politician in 1984:

"... everyone will be able to decide for himself whether or not to have an abortion."

But going back to the fourteenth century, writers and some grammarians faced with the dilemma were already using they, them, their, and themselves to refer to the indefinite pronouns.

"And every one to rest themselves. . .," wrote Shakespeare in The Rape of Lucrece, 1594.

"I would have everybody marry if they can do it properly," opined Jane Austen in Mansfield Park, 1814.

As much as we try to make language like math, with strict rules and predictable outcomes, doggone it, it just won't work properly. Faced with the works of Shakespeare, Austen, and other literary luminaries, grammarians went back, pondered some more, then rationalized: although indefinite pronouns might not be actually plural, they are notionally plural. And the planets circled the sun in perfect orbits once again.

Although a few critics disagree, I would not hesitate to use the plural they, them, their, or themselves to refer to a noun of indeterminate gender (writer, laborer, secretary, nurse, governor) or to an indefinite pronoun, as I did in my book in 1982. And the next time someone questions your doing that, raise the corners of your mouth, shake your head slightly, and knit your brow, as if to say, "That's so adorable you haven't heard: Indefinite pronouns are notionally plural."

Re: Recommendation Against Proposed Iowa "Religious Freedom Restoration Act"

Dear Attorney General Miller,

We are writing on behalf of Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund ("Lambda Legal") to express strong opposition to the possibility of the Iowa legislature taking up a bill to enact a broad Religious Freedom Restoration Act ("RFRA") because there has been no showing of need for expanded religious rights in Iowa and experience in numerous other states has shown that the rights sought to be created by such a law inevitably are invoked by those seeking to justify discrimination against lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender ("LGBT") individuals, same-sex couples, and people living with HIV. Harmful discrimination, related litigation, and business aversion to the state are the unfortunate, contentious and damaging results for the state's residents, court system, and economy.

Lambda Legal is the nation's oldest and largest legal organization working for full recognition of the civil rights of LGBT people and everyone living with HIV, through policy advocacy, impact litigation, and public education. Among many other landmark cases during its 44 year history, Lambda Legal was counsel for plaintiffs in Obergefell v. Hodges, 576 U.S. ___, 135 S.Ct. 2584 (2015); Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003); and Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620 (1996), three of the most important cases addressing sexual orientation and the law decided to date by the U.S. Supreme Court. Lambda Legal also was counsel for plaintiffs in a number of cases in Iowa resulting in significant victories for the rights of LGBT people, including Rhoades v. State, 848 N.W.2d 22 (Iowa 2014); Gartner v. Iowa Dep't of Pub. Health, 830 N.W.2d 335 (Iowa 2013); Varnum v. Brien, 763 N.W.2d 862 (Iowa 2009) and Alons v. District Court for Woodbury County, 698 N.W.2d 858 (Iowa 2005).

Iowa is home to a significant LGBT population that would be put at risk if discrimination against them were allowed to proliferate in the name of religion. According to an analysis of 2010 U.S. Census data by the Williams Institute at the UCLA School of Law, 4,093 same-sex couples make their home in Iowa, with many of those couples raising children.<sup>[1]</sup> In addition, there are many other LGBT members of same-sex couples not captured in these figures because they are not sharing one household.<sup>[2]</sup>

Lambda Legal's membership includes over 2,000 Iowans and we are committed to protecting those individuals, their families, and Iowa's entire LGBT community against discrimination. We understand and believe that the State shares our commitment to protecting this substantial but vulnerable part of Iowa's population and also to ensuring that the State itself plays no part in inviting or facilitating discrimination. Our shared interests in preventing discrimination would be threatened were a RFRA bill to advance in this state.

Constitutional protections for religious freedom are strong in Iowa and there has been no showing of legitimate need to create expansive new religious rights with an Iowa RFRA. At the same time, we all saw during the contentious debates over proposed RFRA in other states (such as in Indiana<sup>[3]</sup> and Arizona<sup>[4]</sup>), that the asserted need for state RFRA rights was expressed and perceived as a desire by businesses to be able to turn away certain types of people—namely, same-sex couples. However, facilitating exclusion of targeted classes of people from public accommodations and other aspects of civic participation is not and has never been a legitimate basis for enacting a statute (whether in the name of religion or not). Indeed, the desire to exclude same-sex couples or LGBT individuals from one's business is no more a legitimate purpose in 2017 than the desire to exclude interracial couples and people of color generally from public places in 1967.

Consequently, given the troubling reality of persistent, religiously motivated discrimination in public contexts, and elevated public concern about the harms of such discrimination, the enactment of anti-LGBT state laws is not economically advisable because they prompt strong national business opposition.<sup>[5]</sup> This is due in significant part to the fact that 91% of Fortune 500 companies now have and place great value on their own nondiscrimination protections for their LGBT employees.<sup>[6]</sup> Indeed, the Williams Institute reports that “[o]ver ninety percent of the country's largest companies . . . state that diversity policies are good for their corporate bottom line.”<sup>[7]</sup> Moreover, according to a 2015 national poll, two-thirds of small businesses surveyed reported that businesses should not be allowed to refuse service to LGBT people because of religious beliefs.<sup>[8]</sup>

In addition to major corporate opposition, consumers similarly have expressed outrage, including through boycotts with substantial economic effects, in response to legislation facilitating discrimination against LGBT people.<sup>[9]</sup> In the context of employment discrimination, the vast majority of Americans believe that every worker is important and should be given equal job opportunities.<sup>[10]</sup> As a result, a state's economy is the strongest when discrimination is not permitted to interfere with qualified workers who are contributing to the economy and when customers know they will be welcomed and treated fairly—and where everyone can participate without rejection or marginalization based on anyone else's discriminatory religious views.

Finally, laws that seem to invite religion-based discrimination can be costly for states. For example, such laws can encourage demands that public employers accommodate employees' religious harassment and refusal to interact with targeted coworkers and members of the public, which in turn can lead to discrimination lawsuits against the government. Taxpayers will be forced to foot the bill to defend the government either against lawsuits by those rejected based on others' religious beliefs, or by those who wished to discriminate and were informed that such conduct is not permissible within a government setting. Proceeding down this path promises only negative consequences.

In Burwell v. Hobby Lobby, 573 U.S. ___, 134 S. Ct. 2751 (2014), Lambda Legal submitted an amicus brief to the Supreme Court that agreed with the conclusion in the amicus brief submitted by the State of Iowa and ten other states warning of the dangers of expanded religious rights that “render[] both state and federal regulation of business activity vulnerable to claims for religions exemption, including in the areas of public safety, civil rights, social welfare, land use, housing, employment, and public health.”<sup>[11]</sup> These dangers, aptly recognized by Iowa and others in Hobby Lobby, are acute when a broad state RFRA effectively encourages individuals, companies and other organizations to demand exemptions from state civil rights protections.

The experiences of other states confirms that enactment of a state RFRA statute would create real risks for Iowans. The Iowa Civil Rights Act of 1965 has long accorded critical protections against discrimination on the basis of age, race, creed, color, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, national origin, religion, or disability, in contexts including housing, employment, and public accommodations. Today, a state RFRA would put those crucial civil rights protections at grave risk of being effectively undermined because such a law inevitably would be taken by some as an invitation to discriminate against LGBT people. Even if the courts were to hold after-the-fact that Iowa has compelling interests in enforcing the state's civil rights law, and that the ICRA is the least restrictive means for serving those interests, the harms of discrimination already would have been inflicted upon Iowans who deserve better.

As for the range of potential threats to individual Iowans, events in other states indicate that the following troubling scenarios should be anticipated:

- For-profit businesses could refuse to sell goods or services to same-sex couples, LGBT individuals, unmarried couples, single mothers, and people of minority religious faiths;
- Health care providers could refuse to treat LGBT or HIV-positive patients;
- Hospitals, nonprofit agencies and businesses could deny family health insurance benefits or family medical leave to workers with a same-sex spouse if the employer claims a religious reason for doing so;
- Nursing homes could turn away elderly same-sex couples, LGBT individuals, or anyone living with HIV;
- Commercial businesses might hire, fire, and treat employees unequally based on religious beliefs if the owners are religiously motivated—meaning women could be denied jobs, LGBT people could be fired, and African Americans could be paid less than whites, if the owners say their religious beliefs so dictate;
- Homeless shelters could refuse to house LGBT families;
- LGBTQ young people in foster care could be denied housing, medical care or other services;
- Charitable meal delivery services for the elderly could proselytize against LGBT people when they deliver meals; and
- Assisted living facilities, nursing homes and hospitals could ban transgender residents and patients from dressing, grooming and using restrooms and other facilities consistently with their gender identity.

In addition to economic and other tangible injuries caused by such refusals of services and other discriminatory treatment, such treatment often also has devastating psychological effects. Research consistently finds that social exclusion and stigmatization of LGBT people can lead to serious mental health problems, including depression, anxiety, substance use disorders, and suicide attempts.<sup>[12]</sup> The religious reinforcement of anti-LGBT bias and discrimination often increases the negative impact on mental health.<sup>[13]</sup>

Legislation enacted for the purpose of allowing businesses, social welfare agencies and organizations, health care facilities, and others to turn away people in need of services, based on the excluded persons' sexual orientation, gender identity, or other classification, is a dramatic change from how we have always understood civil rights and constitutional protections. Especially at this moment in history when strong divisions about socially contentious issues too often culminate in increased acts of discrimination against minority groups, it is more dangerous than ever for the government to facilitate such discrimination. The enactment of a RFRA law written to give cover to such prejudice-driven exclusions of persons from equal participation in society impermissibly would involve the government in the facilitation of discriminatory treatment of Iowans. Instead, it should be the State's priority to protect all Iowans from the substantial harms of discrimination by preserving and fully enforcing the Iowa Civil Rights Act, regardless of anyone's religious motivations for otherwise unlawful discrimination.

For all of these reasons, Lambda Legal urges you not to support a RFRA bill in the Iowa legislature or in any other context.

Respectfully yours,

Subject: AP question on Branstad-Reynolds Scholarship Fund

Hi, Geoff:

You may have seen my story this week about an Iowa-based nonprofit foundation, the Branstad-Reynolds Scholarship Fund, which has failed to disclose its donors as required by the IRS.

Tax experts who have reviewed the group's tax returns are also questioning whether the group has additional potential tax law violations.

In particular, they note that the fund reported its inauguration activity expenses as disbursements for "charitable purposes" in both 2010 and 2011. More than $400,000 would appear to be in question.

The IRS has held that an organization formed to conduct inauguration activities is not operated for charitable purposes, and contributions to that entity are not deductible charitable contributions. See Rev. Rul. 77-283 attached.

The fund did not report inauguration expenses as disbursements for "charitable purposes" in 2014 and 2015.

I'm wondering whether the Iowa AG's office has offered any guidance to this group on its compliance with Iowa laws and/or is looking into the lack of disclosure and potential tax issues.

Is Attorney General Miller concerned that this group hasn't disclosed up to $1 million from donors who gave in 2015? That information was due by Nov. 15 and the foundation acknowledges that what it filed on that date is incomplete.

Thank you,
Ryan Foley

Re: Volkswagen Settlement State Agency Working Group

Overview:

The Governor's Office has asked the Iowa Department of Transportation to coordinate the state of Iowa's response to the Volkswagen settlement. We are asking you to provide an agency representative to participate in this state agency working group. The purpose is to coordinate with other partner state agencies to identify/recommend potential projects and recommend a process for allocating these funds. The recommendations from this group will be prepared for the Governor's Office consideration.

Volkswagen (VW) has agreed to pay $14.7 billion to resolve litigation regarding failure to comply with emissions standards captioned the United States v. Volkswagen Group of America. Of that:

- Zero Emission Vehicle Investments (ZEV): $2 billion will be allocated to national ZEV investments ($800 million for California and $1.2 billion nationally), and
- Environmental Mitigation Trust (Trust) $2.7 billion will be allocated to Trust, which states and territories may use to invest in transportation projects that will reduce Nitrogen Oxides emissions (NOx), which contribute to ozone and raise health concerns.
- Vehicle Purchase & Upgrades: The remaining $10 billion dollars will be spent by VW purchase or upgrade faulty VW vehicles.

To access or download the partial and amended consent decree, go to the following link on the Environmental Protection Agency's website: <https://www.epa.gov/enforcement/201-partial-and-amended-consent-decree>.

National Zero Emission Vehicle (ZEV) Investments:

The $2 billion allocated to ZEV Investment will be distributed as described in the ZEV Investment Plan developed by Volkswagen and approved by EPA. The plan will focus on three primary activities:

1. Investing in electric vehicle charging infrastructure.
2. Increasing awareness and fostering education about electronic vehicles, their benefits, and charging availability.
3. Launching a Green City initiative in the state of California.

Volkswagen is required to obtain input on this plan and they are accepting project proposals through January 16, 2017. The Iowa Economic Development Authority (IEDA), in coordination with the Iowa DOT, will prepare a proposal for fast charging corridors shaped by the local interest from property owners and stakeholders primarily along high volume corridors including I-35 and I-80.

Environmental Mitigation Trust:

The state of Iowa is eligible to receive an allocation of $20,179,540.80 from the Trust, which can be spent over approximately ten years.

Timeframe for the Trust:

States (referred to as beneficiaries) must wait until a Trustee has been selected to act as a third-party to administer the funding. Selection of the trustee and determination of Trust Effective Date (TED) is expected to occur in early CY 2017. Within two months of the TED, each beneficiary will submit certification for its lead agency. Within 90 days of becoming a beneficiary, a Beneficiary Mitigation Plan is due to the Trustee broadly describing intended uses for the funding and associated emissions benefits. Each beneficiary is allowed up to 15 percent of its allocation for administration costs, which can include state staff and typical administration expenses as well as training costs.

Eligible Project Uses of Environmental Mitigation Trust:

The eligible projects described in the settlement focus on replacing or repowering older diesel vehicles with new diesel or alternative fuel vehicles. Alternative fuel vehicles listed are compressed natural gas, propane, hybrid or all-electric. We continue to advocate for biofuels-related projects, but eligibility remains uncertain. Vehicles can be government owned or non-government owned. Types of vehicles include large freight trucks, school buses, shuttle buses, transit buses, freight switchers, ferries and /or tugs, medium duty trucks, airport ground support equipment, fork lifts and port cargo handling equipment. Electric vehicle charging stations are eligible, however, it is worth noting that VW will be spending $2 billion nationally on ZEV investments. States may also use what is called the Diesel Emission Reduction Act (DERA) option, which is an existing EPA program that funds a variety of similar diesel emission reduction projects. This opens up another list of potentially eligible projects, such as idle reduction equipment, off-road equipment, and diesel generators. The Iowa Department of Natural Resources currently administers some of EPA's DERA funds in Iowa.

Timeline/Potential Next Steps (actual dates are subject to determination of Trust Effective Date):

- Set up a working group meeting late early January 2017.
- Identify project priorities by the working group (By February 2017)
  - o At present, several parties have already expressed an interest in VW settlement funding. These potential projects, as well as forthcoming broad public solicitation for potential projects will be discussed at the first working group meeting;
  - o Identify state priorities;
  - o Review submitted projects;
  - o Recommendations submitted to Governor's Office.
- Develop & Submit Beneficiary Mitigation Plan (March 2017 through May 2017 -- but not later than three months after being deemed a beneficiary).
- Begin Implementation.

If your agency would like to be part of the working group, please respond with the name of a representative to Angie Poole at the Iowa Department of Transportation by December 30, 2016. Angie can be reached at 515-239-1351 or at angela.poole@iowadot.us

Erin:

Here's a little more explanation.

Notably, Iowa courts have never addressed this issue.

In all four historical cases of vacancies by Iowa governors, the lieutenant governor who succeeded the governor was viewed and regarded in all respects as the governor.

Our office carefully reviewed the Iowa Constitution.

A significant formal attorney general opinion from 1923 states that (in case of death, resignation or removal from office of the governor) the lieutenant governor becomes governor (I attached the opinion and highlighted the pertinent section on page 2).

Case law, statutory, and constitutional analyses from other states are consistent with this provision.

Finally, the Iowa Code supports this position. State law establishes that, the lieutenant governor, after taking office as governor, appoints a new lieutenant governor.

This research leads us to concur with Governor Branstad's conclusion that, upon his resignation, Lt. Governor Reynolds will become Governor. In her capacity as Governor, Governor Reynolds will have the authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Hopefully that helps clear things up.

Again, sorry about the delay.

Sounds good, and thanks for the heads-up.

I think I'm clear except on one piece ... Iowa Code clearly states the governor fills a vacancy for lieutenant governor. But the constitution says only that the powers of the governor's office fall on the lieutenant governor ... it does not necessarily say the lieutenant governor becomes governor. And, as the code states, only a governor can name a lieutenant governor.

So that's the bridge I'm trying to cross here.

Rod,

Following up on your question from Friday.

Our office has researched the law and consulted with the Governor's office. We concur with the Governor's conclusion that, upon the resignation of Governor Branstad, Lt. Governor Reynolds will become Governor and will have the authority to appoint a new Lieutenant Governor.

Thanks,

Geoff

Hi Jeff – Thanks for taking the time to meet with me today. After we met I went down to the state archives. I found official documents for all four of the lt. governors who became governor. Attached are 3 of the governor oaths of the office of governor, proclamations, and conditions of state.

Oaths: I retrieved three of the four governors' oaths of office as governor: Newbold, Garst, and Elthon. One oath was in the Supreme Court Chamber. One was issued by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and one was issued by the Clerk of Court.

All four Governors signed official paperwork with the Secretary of State's signature.

Condition of State: Additionally – the Condition of the State for Gov. Fulton indicates he is the Governor.

There were no documents in the archives that I searched through that indicated the lt. governors who had the powers and duties of governor devolve upon them had any other title than Governor or Governor of the State of Iowa.

Thanks, Jeff

Dear Senator Schneider,

HF 524 appears to set up a continuing criminal enterprise here in Iowa, in violation of federal law, 21 U.S.C. § 848 (2017). Anyone participating in the program would be in violation of federal law, 21 U.S.C. § 844 (2017). Anyone manufacturing or distributing cannabis products would be committing federal crimes carrying penalties of 10 years to life in federal prison and a fine of $10 to $50 million, 21 U.S.C. § 841 (2017). Penalties can double for conspiracy to commit any of these acts, 21 U.S.C. § 846 (2017). Because HF 524 authorizes the cultivation, manufacture, and distribution, and possession of cannabis products in the state of Iowa without explaining how any of it would be in compliance with federal law, HF 524 creates a positive conflict between federal and state law so that the two cannot consistently stand together, 21 U.S.C. § 903 (2017).

Please request an opinion from the Attorney General of Iowa, Tom Miller, on the legality of HF 524 before Governor Branstad signs HF 524 into law.

In my opinion, federal schedules of controlled substances are ordinary administrative regulations and cannot be used to interfere with state medical marijuana programs, but HF 524 does not address this matter.

Gonzales v. Oregon, 546 U.S. 243, 258 (2006) ("The Attorney General has rulemaking power to fulfill his duties under the CSA. The specific respects in which he is authorized to make rules, however, instruct us that he is not authorized to make a rule declaring illegitimate a medical standard for care and treatment of patients that is specifically authorized under state law.")

Grinspoon v. DEA, 828 F.2d 881, 886 (1st Cir. 1987) ("Congress did not intend 'accepted medical use in treatment in the United States' to require a finding of recognized medical use in every state or, as the Administrator contends, approval for interstate marketing of the substance.")

I look forward to hearing from you at your earliest convenience.

Thank you very much!

Sincerely,

Carl Olsen

Upon my quick review, it seems that the intent for the professions which will be registered is not to treat them as the department currently does for EMS providers, who are certified and required to follow competency and safety standards adopted by the department by rule, but instead to treat them like hair braiders, who simply register with the department.

Drug company to help improve Virginia's prescription drug monitoring system

By Lenny Bernstein January 26

(Toby Talbot/Associated Press)

A major drug company is teaming up with the state of Virginia to help curb “doctor shopping” for narcotics and overprescribing of opioids by physicians.

Purdue Pharma, manufacturer of the long-acting painkiller OxyContin, said Thursday it will pay $3.1 million to upgrade the state's prescription drug monitoring program, a database that doctors and other prescribers can check before they offer a patient narcotics. The 11-year-old system is designed to curb “doctor shopping,” by showing prescribers if patients are obtaining narcotics from multiple health-care professionals.

Research has found that the systems, especially when mandatory, are effective. But doctors, who say they are already burdened by paperwork requirements, have complained about the time it takes to log into a separate database and iron out problems with the information they find on their patients.

[States are slowly forcing opioid prescribers to confront 'doctor shopping.']

The Virginia pilot program will integrate the narcotics database into electronic health records that physicians already use to keep track of their patients' medical histories. That should reduce the time it takes to check the prescription drug system and make it easier to use, officials said. It also will help them more easily view their patients' drug purchases in other states.

Mark Timney, Purdue Pharma's chief executive, said that while better systems are likely to decrease consumption of opioids such as the ones his company makes, the scale of the drug epidemic requires companies to help curb drug use. “We only want opioids, and certainly our medication, to be prescribed at the right time for the right patient and in the right doses,” he said.

More than 16,000 people died of overdoses from prescription opioids, including methadone, in 2015, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Every state except Missouri has created a prescription drug monitoring program, and most of those systems call for some form of mandatory action by prescribers. In Virginia, any prescriber who offers a patient 14 days or more of certain controlled substances must check the database, according to William A. Hazel Jr., the state's secretary of health and human resources. He said that a bill likely to be approved this year would cut that to seven days.

[Unnatural Causes: Sick and dying in small-town America]

Hazel said the prescription drug monitoring system also had reduced the total number of narcotic prescriptions written in the state.

“This to us is about helping physicians understand what their patients are doing,” said Hazel, an orthopedic surgeon. “We believe in the patient-physician relationship. We trust them and they trust us, and unfortunately it doesn't always work out.”

Purdue Pharma is widely blamed for contributing to the opioid epidemic by fraudulently marketing OxyContin for six years as a formulation of the drug oxycodone that was less prone to abuse. In 2007, the company and three of its executives pleaded guilty in federal court in Virginia to criminal charges that they had misled doctors, patients and regulators about the risk of addiction to OxyContin. The company agreed to pay a $600 million fine for “misbranding” the drug.

Purdue Pharma and Commonwealth of Virginia Partner to Improve Utilization of Prescription Monitoring Program

STAMFORD, Conn. and RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 26, 2017 – Purdue Pharma L.P., Virginia Governor Terry McAuliffe and the Virginia Secretary of Health and Human Resources today announced the formation of a public-private partnership to enhance utilization of the state prescription monitoring program (PMP) as part of the solution to address the opioid crisis. The Commonwealth of Virginia will connect the state PMP to the electronic health records (EHR) used by Virginia prescribers and pharmacists to make information from the PMP an integral part of the patient workflow when prescribing or dispensing controlled substances. The goal is to improve the performance, access and usability of the PMP program data for 18,000 prescribers and 400 pharmacies in the Commonwealth of Virginia by the end of 2017.

“The epidemic of opioid addiction is a public health emergency in Virginia, and combating it is a top priority for my administration,” said Gov. Terry McAuliffe. “The Prescription Monitoring Program is a critical prevention tool that helps curb abuse of prescription medications, and I applaud this enhancement that makes the PMP easier and more likely for physicians to use.”

The Virginia Department of Health Professions, the administrator of the Virginia PMP, selected Appriss Health to integrate the PMP information into the EHR and pharmacy management systems. This integration will help clinicians and pharmacists make more informed clinical decisions and improve patient outcomes. Appriss Health is the technology provider for the Virginia PMP and the provider of NarxCare, a leading platform to address substance use disorders. As part of the integration effort, NarxCare will deliver a variety of analytics, tools and other resources to assist clinicians and support patients.

“The PMP is an important resource to help us track prescription data and spot potential abuse,” said Virginia Secretary of Health and Human Resources Dr. Bill Hazel. “Integrating that data with electronic health records strengthens the PMP and is an important step in our ongoing battle against the epidemic of opioid abuse.”

The Virginia PMP provides to authorized users a patient’s prescription history for Schedule II – V prescriptions for the prior 12 months as reported by all Virginia pharmacies and by out-of-state pharmacies delivering to people in Virginia. Additionally, the PMP prescription report informs clinical decision-making to help prevent or stop harm from duplicate drug therapy, prescription drug misuse, abuse and diversion.

“This initiative will put information that doctor’s need to make better informed prescribing decisions at their fingertips,” said Gail Cawkwell, M.D., Ph.D., Vice President and Chief Medical Officer, Purdue Pharma L.P. “The technology provides important information about possible abuse, but also highlights patients that may have higher risks of overdose.”

Purdue Pharma will provide funding to accelerate uptake of technology that make PMPs interoperable across state lines and increase utilization of Virginia’s PMP data within EHR clinical workflows for prescribers and pharmacists.

“Purdue Pharma has a long history of supporting and funding public health initiatives like the use of prescription drug monitoring programs to help reduce the misuse and abuse of opioids,” said Mark Timney, President and Chief Executive Officer, Purdue Pharma L.P. “We recognize the immediate need for technology innovations, such as this, to improve access to the PMP data through workflow integration and enhance the effectiveness of these tools.”

Meghan, can you help with a response to Mr. Bowman?

Subject: Lt. Governor / Attorney General situation

Hi there,

My name is Beau Bowman and I have a question about the recent release by the attorney general concerning the Lt. Governor's new title and power to appoint a new Lt. Governor.

I agree with the Attorney General that Lt. Governor Kim Reynolds should not be able to appoint a new Lt. Governor.

What I do not agree with is her title "Governor Reynolds."

The Iowa Constitution (Article IV sec. 17) states: "In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor."

The legal definition of the word devolve is: "when property is automatically transferred from one party to another"

No where in the constitution does it say that Reynolds would become the Governor, but only take on the responsibility of Governor for the remainder of the term.

Therefore, Reynolds' title should stay as Lt. Governor. She should not be able to appoint a new Lt. Governor because there is no vacancy in that office.

My email and phone number are listed at the bottom of this email. Thank you for hearing me out.

In Connecticut, Governor Dannel Malloy has been instrumental in coordinating information for undocumented families in our state. The Family Preparedness Plan (available at the link below) consists of materials compiled by the Governor's Office with input from various state agencies including the Connecticut State Department of Education and the Department of Children and Families, legal services organizations, and key stakeholders. It is intended to serve as a one-stop guide for parents to use in planning for the possibility of detention or deportation.

This plan has been translated into nine different languages as of this date:

Hey folks,

Here in DC we are putting together a program for our LEAs about the rights and protections provided to undocumented children and families in the District. Many of our LEAs and public school families are very concerned about the current climate and are seeking leadership from us on the topic. I am wondering if any other state education agencies have done something like this, and if you have if you would be willing to share the materials. Below is a link to a publication that from our Mayor's office that will serve as our starting point, but am interested in what other jurisdictions are doing to address this issue.

Sanctuary Jurisdiction Policy Could Impact Disaster Recovery

By Ernest B. Abbott and Wendy Huff Ellard

On January 25, 2017, President Trump issued Executive Order 13768, "Enhancing Public Safety in the Interior of the United States." The full implications of this broadly written Executive Order are not yet known; however, it could have unanticipated consequences on how states, local governmental entities and agencies, and even some private non-profit entities respond to, and recover from, natural disasters.

The stated purpose of Executive Order 13768 is to "direct executive departments and agencies to employ all lawful means to enforce the immigration laws of the United States." Among other things, it specifically states that any state, or any political subdivision of a state, that willfully refuses to comply – a "Sanctuary Jurisdiction" – will not be eligible to receive federal grants, except as deemed necessary for law enforcement purposes by the Attorney General or the Secretary of Homeland Security. The Order directs the Secretary, "in his discretion and to the extent consistent with law," to designate Sanctuary Jurisdictions. But it is not yet clear what is intended by the Executive Order, how broadly it may be applied or how the "law enforcement" exception may be interpreted.

When a large disaster overwhelms the resources of a state and the impacted local governments, the governor of the impacted state must request that the president declare an emergency or major disaster in order to receive FEMA disaster assistance. FEMA reviews the governor's request and transmits it to the president with a recommendation, but, ultimately, whether a state receives an approved declaration is wholly within the discretion of the president. Further, even when a declaration is approved, FEMA's decision to provide funding to any specific applicant for disaster assistance – local governments, state agencies, non-profit entities and even individuals – is discretionary. The statute and regulations say that FEMA "may," but is not required to, provide supplemental federal grant assistance reimbursing disaster expenses such as debris removal; life-saving emergency protective measures; the repair, replacement or restoration of disaster-damaged facilities; and associated hazard mitigation measures.

Given this legal framework, the Executive Order signals that the President may decide not to declare disasters in states that the Secretary designates as Sanctuary Jurisdictions. Further, FEMA decisions to obligate funding reimbursing eligible disaster expenses of any designated Sanctuary Jurisdiction may be subject to the Executive Order – even for disasters declared years ago. FEMA grants are technically made to state governments managing subgrants to local and non-profit grant recipients, so the prohibition could extend to private non-profit entities that are eligible for federal disaster grants (including electric cooperatives, hospitals and other entities that provide essential services) when located in a state designated a Sanctuary Jurisdiction. Indeed, the prohibition regarding federal grants in designated jurisdictions could conceivably impact disaster funding that has been approved and obligated but not yet paid, or even affect FEMA's ability to obligate additional funds to reimburse actual costs which have exceeded initial obligated grant funds based on cost estimates.

It is not yet clear how the Secretary of Homeland Security will define Sanctuary Jurisdictions, and how FEMA might apply the Executive Order in approving new funding for pending projects. Thus, predicting the full impact of this Executive Order on disaster assistance is still speculative.

Any entity potentially impacted should watch these developments very closely.

If you have questions about the specific items covered by this alert, or would like to discuss FEMA's disaster assistance programs generally, please contact Ernest B. Abbott, Wendy Huff Ellard or any of the members of our Disaster Recovery and Government Services Team.

Hi Andrew and Meghan,

The language I asked the board to review on March 8, 2017, in SF 282, is now included in HF 524 which was passed in both chambers of the legislature on April 22, 2017, and awaiting the governor's signature. See Section 1 of the bill, on pages 1 and 2.

The purpose of my request on March 8 was to ask the board to lobby against the bill. Your response was that the board could look at the language if it became law. You said it appeared to be redundant.

I really don't have much interest in redundant language other than preventing two paragraphs that are redundant from being added to the Iowa Code which has enough pages already.

I am still curious and you told me the board could look at it later if I asked. I'd like the board to look at it and explain whether it creates any new duties for the board, or whether it is redundant.

Here are a couple of questions.

1. Can the board permanently reschedule a substance, or is the board limited to making recommendations to the legislature?

Paragraph 1 of Section 1 says:

If a cannabidiol investigational product approved as a prescription drug medication by the United States food and drug administration is eliminated from or revised in the federal schedule of controlled substances by the federal drug enforcement agency and notice of the elimination or revision is given to the board, the board shall similarly eliminate or revise the prescription drug medication in the schedule of controlled substances under this chapter. Such action by the board shall be immediately effective upon the date of publication of the final regulation containing the elimination or revision in the federal register.

2. Doesn't the board already have rules for each of the schedules of controlled substances?

Paragraph 2 of Section 1 says:

The board shall adopt rules pursuant to chapter 17A to administer this section. The board may adopt rules on an emergency basis as provided in section 17A.4, subsection 3, and section 17A.5, subsection 2, to administer this section, and the rules shall be effective immediately upon filing unless a later date is specified in the rules. Any emergency rules adopted in accordance with this section shall also be published as a notice of intended action as provided in section 17A.4, subsection 1.

Thank you!

Hi Meghan,

I'm not in a big hurry. I figured it was too late to put this on the agenda for the meeting next week, since I see the agenda is already printed.

I think meeting with staff is a good idea. Maybe that will resolve any questions I have and a formal discussion by the board won't be necessary.

If we could set up a meeting next week sometime, that would be great. Monday? Thursday? Friday?

Can I get a better idea of what you are requesting? Is this something that we can meet to discuss with staff or are you looking for a more formal discussion?

Thanks,

Subject: IERC Meeting

Good morning everyone,

First, to update everyone, the IERC bill passed both the House and Senate and is now on the Governor's desk for signature. Assuming he will sign it, the IERC will be dissolved effective July 1.

That being said, we need to have one final IERC meeting to vote, at a minimum, on the HMEP grant and the LEPC memberships. Lisa Sexton has yet to receive the grant guidance, however, has been told the grant application will be due by June 30. It is Lisa's recommendation we wait until June to convene for the grant vote.

I've spoken to Julie Waltz and decided to have this final meeting via conference call rather than face-to-face. I am recommending we schedule the conference call "meeting" for June 22.

I will email the necessary documents as well and the conference line number/PIN as the June date approaches.

If you have any questions, please don't hesitate to contact me.

Thank you.

Subject: IERC Legislation

Good morning,

Our Department (HSEMD) recently introduced Senate Study Bill 1081. This bill seeks to transfer the duties presently conducted by the Commission to HSEMD. You can find the bill on the Legislature's website, <https://www.legis.iowa.gov/legislation/BillBook?ga=87&ba=ssb1081>

Presently HSEMD does most of the work associated with the Commission's duties as defined in United States Code Title 42, Chapter 116, Emergency Planning and Community Right to Know (EPCRA). This includes development, approval, and administration of the HMEP grant dealing with hazardous material emergency preparedness.

Chapter 116 lays out the responsibilities at the state and local levels with regard to hazardous materials governance and training. One of the duties at the state level is the establishment of the state emergency response commission. Per the federal law "the Governor of each state shall appoint a State emergency response commission. The Governor may designate as the State emergency response commission one or more existing emergency response organizations that are State-sponsored or appointed." This proposed action would be in accordance with EPCRA.

We are seeing a trend with states assuming the commission's duties where the commission has matured and now has limited function and a partner agency is doing most of the work for the commission. Minnesota and Oregon have recently undertaken such an action with success. HSEMD feels that by having HSEMD officially assume these duties the function will become more efficient while reducing the overall size of state government.

This proposal would not alter the responsibilities of the Department of Natural Resources or the local emergency planning committees under this chapter.

If you have any questions, please feel free to contact me.

Subject: Your question about State plans for ESSA

Hello Rachelle,

It was nice to talk with you and Charlene yesterday. This e-mail is to reply to the pending question we have from you about State plans for ESSA. You had noted that the Feb. 10, 2017 e-mail from Secretary DeVos to chief state school officers indicates that the Department will develop a revised template for consolidated State plans that meets the “absolutely necessary” requirement by March 13, 2017 and that the Department will still accept consolidated State plans on April 3 or September 18, 2017. And, based on this, you had asked, how should a State, such as Maine, that has been working to submit its consolidated State plan on for the April 3, 2017 due date meet the 30 day public comment period requirement for a consolidated State plan if a revised template for such a plan is not available more than 30 days in advance of April 3, 2017?

In order to ensure that an SEA submits a high quality consolidated State plan that meets the needs of all students in the State, the Department encourages, but no longer requires absent the regulations, each SEA to timely and meaningfully consult with a variety of stakeholders consistent with the individual consultation requirements for each program included in its consolidated State plan.

However, under ESEA section 8540, each SEA must consult in a timely and meaningful manner with the Governor, or appropriate officials from the Governor’s office, including during the development and prior to submission of its consolidated State plan to the Department. Each SEA must provide its Governor up to 30 days to sign the consolidated State plan before submitting it to the Secretary. If an SEA consulted with the Governor on the previous consolidated State plan template based on the regulations, an SEA may not rely on that consultation. Under ESEA section 8540, each SEA must ensure that it consults with the Governor in a timely and meaningful manner on its consolidated State plan that meets the revised requirements.

We hope this helps. And, of course, if you need anything more or think it would be helpful to talk further, please just let us know.

Best,

Hi Andrew and Meghan,

The language I asked the board to review on March 8, 2017, in SF 282, is now included in HF 524 which was passed in both chambers of the legislature on April 22, 2017, and awaiting the governor's signature. See Section 1 of the bill, on pages 1 and 2.

The purpose of my request on March 8 was to ask the board to lobby against the bill. Your response was that the board could look at the language if it became law. You said it appeared to be redundant.

I really don't have much interest in redundant language other than preventing two paragraphs that are redundant from being added to the Iowa Code which has enough pages already.

I am still curious and you told me the board could look at it later if I asked. I'd like the board to look at it and explain whether it creates any new duties for the board, or whether it is redundant.

Here are a couple of questions.

1. Can the board permanently reschedule a substance, or is the board limited to making recommendations to the legislature?

Paragraph 1 of Section 1 says:

If a cannabidiol investigational product approved as a prescription drug medication by the United States food and drug administration is eliminated from or revised in the federal schedule of controlled substances by the federal drug enforcement agency and notice of the elimination or revision is given to the board, the board shall similarly eliminate or revise the prescription drug medication in the schedule of controlled substances under this chapter. Such action by the board shall be immediately effective upon the date of publication of the final regulation containing the elimination or revision in the federal register.

2. Doesn't the board already have rules for each of the schedules of controlled substances?

Paragraph 2 of Section 1 says:

The board shall adopt rules pursuant to chapter 17A to administer this section. The board may adopt rules on an emergency basis as provided in section 17A.4, subsection 3, and section 17A.5, subsection 2, to administer this section, and the rules shall be effective immediately upon filing unless a later date is specified in the rules. Any emergency rules adopted in accordance with this section shall also be published as a notice of intended action as provided in section 17A.4, subsection 1.

Thank you!

Hi there,

My name is Beau Bowman and I have a question about the recent release by the attorney general concerning the Lt. Governor's new title and power to appoint a new Lt. Governor.

I agree with the Attorney General that Lt. Governor Kim Reynolds should not be able to appoint a new Lt. Governor.

What I do not agree with is her title "Governor Reynolds."

The Iowa Constitution (Article IV sec. 17) states: "In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal from office, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office for the residue of the term, or until he shall be acquitted, or the disability removed, shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor."

The legal definition of the word devolve is: "when property is automatically transferred from one party to another"

No where in the constitution does it say that Reynolds would become the Governor, but only take on the responsibility of Governor for the remainder of the term.

Therefore, Reynolds' title should stay as Lt. Governor. She should not be able to appoint a new Lt. Governor because there is no vacancy in that office.

My email and phone number are listed at the bottom of this email. Thank you for hearing me out.

Dear Senator Schneider,

HF 524 appears to set up a continuing criminal enterprise here in Iowa, in violation of federal law, 21 U.S.C. § 848 (2017). Anyone participating in the program would be in violation of federal law, 21 U.S.C. § 844 (2017). Anyone manufacturing or distributing cannabis products would be committing federal crimes carrying penalties of 10 years to life in federal prison and a fine of $10 to $50 million, 21 U.S.C. § 841 (2017). Penalties can double for conspiracy to commit any of these acts, 21 U.S.C. § 846 (2017). Because HF 524 authorizes the cultivation, manufacture, and distribution, and possession of cannabis products in the state of Iowa without explaining how any of it would be in compliance with federal law, HF 524 creates a positive conflict between federal and state law so that the two cannot consistently stand together, 21 U.S.C. § 903 (2017).

Please request an opinion from the Attorney General of Iowa, Tom Miller, on the legality of HF 524 before Governor Branstad signs HF 524 into law.

Current federal law can be found at 21 U.S.C. §§ 801 et seq., Pub. L. 91–513, Oct. 27, 1970, 84 Stat. 1236 (“Controlled Substances Act”).

In my opinion, federal schedules of controlled substances are ordinary administrative regulations and cannot be used to interfere with state medical marijuana programs, but HF 524 does not address this matter.

Gonzales v. Oregon, 546 U.S. 243, 258 (2006) (“The Attorney General has rulemaking power to fulfill his duties under the CSA. The specific respects in which he is authorized to make rules, however, instruct us that he is not authorized to make a rule declaring illegitimate a medical standard for care and treatment of patients that is specifically authorized under state law.”)

Grinspoon v. DEA, 828 F.2d 881, 886 (1st Cir. 1987) (“Congress did not intend ‘accepted medical use in treatment in the United States’ to require a finding of recognized medical use in every state or, as the Administrator contends, approval for interstate marketing of the substance.”)

I look forward to hearing from you at your earliest convenience.

Thank you very much!

Sincerely,

Carl Olsen

South Carolina recently amended its constitution to specifically grant the governor the power to appoint a Lt governor. Currently, the law calls for a complete domino. The president pro tem of the senate was elevated to Lt. governor.

Word of caution - this is google research since I can't access westlaw on my tablet.

Dear Region 7 SSAs,

Mid-America ATTC has an opportunity for you . . .

The ATTC Network, along with the National Council for Behavioral Health and Advocates for Human Potential (AHP), are sponsoring a National Cannabis Summit. The purpose of the Summit is to provide an objective national forum for changing public policy, public health, treatment and research. The Summit is scheduled for August 28-30, 2017, in Denver, Colorado.

Mid-America ATTC is offering the following . . .

Mid-America ATTC will pay for travel for a team of 5 attendees per state to attend the Summit. We hope you or someone from your office is able to attend as well as 4 other state leaders from other departments, such as public health, criminal justice, the attorney general's office, legislators, etc. We are inviting you to put together a team of 5 persons who would benefit the most from the Summit. We'll cover the registration fee of $550 per person and flights in advance. We will reimburse for the cost of the hotel, meals at the University per diem rate, airport parking, ground transportation, etc. following the event.

There will be 4 Tracks:

- Public Health, Public Safety and Prevention
- Emerging Research and Epidemiological Data
- Regulatory Issues
- Governance, Federal Law and Emerging Policy

The summit will look at how changing cannabis policy and norms impact:

- Addictions treatment and recovery
- Public health
- Prevention programs
- Criminal justice systems
- Mental health treatment and recovery
- National, state and local policies and regulations
- Workplaces and businesses
- Harm reduction efforts

Three info flyers about the Summit are attached. The Summit website for more details is:
<https://www.nationalcannabissummit.org/>.

Please let Pat or me know who from your office is able to attend. Also, would you be able to find 4 other state leaders in other departments or in the state legislature who are interested in attending and then get me their names and contact information?

No cannabis industry entity is part of the planning for, funding of, or presentations at this event.

I look forward to hearing from you,

Jan

Subject: Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Oregon

You asked me to look into whether the new governor appointed a lieutenant governor after the court concluded that the Lt. governor “became” governor.

Short answer – No for each state.

Arkansas – Arkansas held a special election to fill the position of Lt. governor after the Lt. governor became governor following the election of President Clinton. Mike Huckabee won that special election. However, Arkansas is like Iowa pre-1988, where the Lt. governor is elected separately from the governor.

Oklahoma – After the court in Oklahoma determined that the Lt governor became governor in 1926, the office of Lt. governor was “vacant” and held open until the next election. Just a few years later, the Governor of Oklahoma was impeached and the Lt. governor again became governor, leaving the Lt. governor office vacant.

Oregon – The Court in Oregon determined that the SOS became governor in 1877. For over a year Chadwick held BOTH the office of governor and the SOS until the next election.

Okay I think I have figured out the catalyst for the 1988 amendment. In 1982 in Governor Branstad's first election, for the first time in Iowa history the people elected a republican governor and a democrat lt. governor. Twice previously, we had elected a republican lt. governor with a democratic governor.

I haven't found any contemporaneous evidence that anything in the 1988 amendment was designed to address the question of whether a new lt. governor could be appointed.

It occurred to me that we should look at the legislative history for the 1988 amendment to see if the intention was to modernize succession as well as allow for the joint election of the governor and lieutenant governor. I've pulled the online version but will ask the state librarian to pull the complete versions tomorrow. I have a discovery conference in front of judge Hansen first thing tomorrow morning but am otherwise available.

Since the Lt governor receives the compensation for the governor when performing that offices duties, is the debate focused on the title?

Thanks, Geoff. One more thing, historically, when an Iowa Gov has left office before the end of his term, there has not been a Lt. Gov. appointed. Most of the time, these were very short periods of time, though.

Subject: Constitutional issue re: Lt. Gov assuming Gov's powers
Importance: High

Eric and Geoff:

In Massachusetts, when Governor William Weld resigned in 1997, Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci became "Acting Governor" – not "Governor." When Cellucci resigned to become US Ambassador to Canada during the Bush Administration in 2001, his Lt. Gov. Jane Swift became "Acting Governor."

Massachusetts Constitution has a similar provision to the Iowa Constitution:

III.--Whenever the chair of the Governor shall be vacant, by reason of his death, or absence from the Commonwealth, or otherwise, the Lieutenant-Governor, for the time being, shall, during such vacancy, perform all the duties incumbent upon the Governor, and shall have and exercise all the powers and authorities, which by this Constitution the Governor is vested with, when personally present.

Hope this is helpful.

Hello Geoff,

Thanks again for the heads up about the call-in opportunity.

I don't have their individual e-mail addresses, but please pass along my appreciation to the solicitor general and the other staff members who worked closely on today's formal opinion. It was very well-researched.

The reaction from the governor's office is disappointing but demonstrates how much political pressure was on the Attorney General's Office to reach a different conclusion. Thank you for standing up for the rule of law.

Life in a community can change quickly, whether it's an important city council vote or a traffic accident. With so much going on, staying informed can be difficult for the average citizen.

That's where journalists like MacKenzie Elmer (BA 2012) make a difference.

Elmer writes about the city of Des Moines for the Des Moines Register, covering metro and county government. She previously covered breaking news, jumping in the car at a moment's notice to follow a fire or shooting.

One such instance came in November, when two Des Moines Police Department officers were tragically shot. Confusion broke out as others on the police force worked to find the shooter. Elmer had just switched from covering breaking news to city news, so the story was outside her required area. But instincts won over.

"I couldn't help myself – I turned on the police scanner," she said, and when she located officers pursuing the shooter in Redfield, Iowa, she jumped in her car and sped off, alerting the newsroom on the road. She reported the story and attended the funerals for the Register.

Attending the funeral of two celebrated police officers was a difficult task, she said. But she knew these stories deserved to be told.

She was prepared for this kind of reporting by her time at the School of Journalism & Mass Communication, which she described as "fantastic" experience. Also indispensable was her work writing long-form journalism for the Iowa Center for Public Affairs Journalism – IowaWatch.org, working under the mentorship of professor and Pulitzer-Prize winning former reporter Stephen J. Berry.

One skill she learned was that of interviewing, especially on difficult subjects.

"Interviewing is a huge art, and you have to find your own style," she said. "I try to show my best traits and try to be easy to talk to."

It is immensely rewarding when sources respond in a genuine and heartfelt way, she said.

"I'm always humbled when people invite me into their lives and personally share," she said. "That is truly something that I cherish and remember as I'm going throughout my career."

After graduating from the UI, Elmer landed at the Burlington Hawk Eye, where she interviewed Gov. Terry Branstad within a month of the start of her career. She also wrote for the Associated Press and the Waterloo-Cedar Falls Courier, where she won two journalism awards for a series on mental health.

She aims to change the public's perception of journalism, and she has already begun this work with regular visits to Southeast Polk Middle School, where she talks about what journalists do.

"When a change affects [people] positively or negatively, we're the deliverer of that information," she said. "Journalism is a huge component of the democratic process."

Saving for Retirement

Are you saving enough for retirement? How much is enough? Isn't IPERS enough? No, IPERS is not enough! You need to have additional retirement savings, as well as Social Security. Remember, IPERS does not have a cost-of-living adjustment. Your benefit payments are guaranteed for life but they remain level (no increases). Find out if your employer offers a deferred comp program. If not, contact a financial planner on your own so you can be prepared!

Let's Get Personal

IPERS needs your email address...your personal email address, that is. Lots of members provide only a work email, which is fine as long as they remain working with that employer. Eventually, though, it will be time for retirement. Why not update your records now? It's easy through My Account.

'Tis the Season (Tax Season!)

If you received IPERS benefits in 2016, IPERS will mail to you a 1099-R for tax purposes. These will mail on January 24, 2017. Need it earlier? Download it through My Account.

Watch Your Box... Annual Benefits Statements Mail in March

Keep your eyes peeled for your annual benefits statement, scheduled to mail in March. This important member information is mailed to all members (not retirees, unless you've returned to public employment) to show earnings to date, service accrued, and possible retirement benefits. Be sure to check it over carefully and report any corrections to IPERS.

Keeping Up With the Iowa Legislature

The Governor and the Iowa Legislature share responsibility as plan sponsors for IPERS. It's their role to ensure IPERS remains secure. (See "Legislator's Guide to IPERS" video.) During the session, IPERS tracks related bills and posts updates to the legislative page of our website, making it easy to stay informed on IPERS' issues.

Blue Gate Farm News – Volume XXXII, Number 4 – April 2017

Weather notes:

Precipitation to date in the past month: Rain: 2.75 and counting Snow: 3.00"

What's up on the farm?

Happy April from the farm! As ironic as it may seem, April 1st is an extra special day for us at BGF. It is the anniversary of our move in 2005 from big city (Houston) theatre managers to chemical-free vegetable farmers in Iowa. Isn't that the professional track everyone takes? So here we are saying hello to our 13th season. It is crazy to look back at all of the highs, lows and every-days of our lives on the farm. Thanks to all who join us on this madcap adventure!

Speaking of adventures and general craziness, we hardly know what to think of this season so far. It was one of the least snowy winters in years, with the snowfall in Marion County down more than 15" from average. However, as of last month, our soil moisture levels were right about average, due to multiple mid-winter thunderstorms. As of today, the soil moisture levels seem a bit excessive as we've had nearly 1.5" today alone. Luckily we got the all the field composting and the first round of discing done just as the rain/snow mix started last week. So as soon as the ground dries out enough we will be ready for the next round of soil prep and planting. We've got about 300 lbs of potatoes to go in and then the early round of sowing crops like spinach, salad mix, peas, radishes and other cool-loving greens. These crops are already growing in high tunnel #2 for our earliest harvesting, and they will be followed by 1-2 sowings in the field.

We had gotten a little behind in our transplant sowing in the sunroom, but as of last Friday are caught up again for another week or so. In the past month we've completed sowings on the following transplants: broccoli, cabbage, cauliflower, napa cabbage, kale, chard, head lettuce, eggplant, garden berries, peppers, peas, tomatoes, fennel, basil & other herbs. The earliest transplants (onions, leeks, shallots, broccoli, cabbage, kale & chard have all relocated to high tunnel #1 to make way for more heat-loving plants and to harden off and get ready for planting outside. So the biggest sowing push is done, with just cucumbers, okra, and winter/summer squashes left to come.

High Tunnel #1 is mostly cleared of over-wintered crops and we are renovating the beds for a quick cover crop planting to feed the soil followed by our first plantings of basil, tomatoes, peppers and eggplant. The new High Tunnel (#2) continues to house our over-wintered beds of kale, chard and lettuce mix. The remaining beds were recently sown to succession crops of spinach, salad mix, head lettuce, choy, peas and arugula.

Even though it seems early to have some of these crops growing, farmers market starts in just 4 weeks, with the CSA following 4 weeks later. Things change so fast at this time of year, we go from 20° to 70° to snow to lush green grass, seemingly overnight and then often...it snows again. I guess it keeps us from getting bored or complacent. As I write this, the boy alpacas are standing out in pouring rain grazing, because that glorious green grass is just too tasty to wait out the rain in the dry shelter. If nothing else, they are ever willing to embrace the moment.

The bi-weekly VegEmail sales continue to go well. Our storage crops are mostly sold out, but there are plenty of eggs, fresh spring greens and herbs to come, with asparagus likely starting in a couple of weeks. If you aren't receiving emails about these sales, and would like to, please let us know. Big thanks to our hosts for these sales: Peace Tree Brewing Co in Des Moines and the Grand Theater in Knoxville.

We're still hiring! Our farm crew is filling up, but we have one full-time position remaining for the upcoming season. If you know of anyone in the area who might enjoy a summer-worth of suntans, whole body workout and bonus vegetables, send them our way! These are paid positions that start as early as mid-April and possibly go through late December.

2017 CSA Season

2017 CSA slots are also filling up. The Base CSA Membership is $500 for the 20 week season. Deposits ($50) were due at the end of February with balance payments due on May 1st. We will send out invoices for those amounts in the next week or so. We anticipate the first delivery of the 2017 season to be the first week of June, weather-dependending. We do still have some memberships at all delivery locations available (Des Moines, Knoxville & on-farm); if you know of anyone who might be interested, please share this info with them. You are our best advertising.

Is a monthly newsletter not enough for you and you want to read more about our daily adventures or see pictures of the farm? You can follow us on Facebook at Blue Gate Farm.

That's about it this month, if you have any questions or comments be sure to let us know.

Lieutenant Governor to Serve as Governor, But Lacks Authority to Appoint Lieutenant, Attorney General Opinion Concludes

Formal opinion responds to request by state senator as Governor Branstad prepares to resign for ambassadorship

DES MOINES – Attorney General Tom Miller Monday issued a formal legal opinion stating that if a governor resigns, the lieutenant governor becomes governor for all intents and purposes, but does not have legal authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor.

Sen. David Johnson, I-Ocheyedan, requested the opinion following Governor Terry Branstad’s announcement that, if confirmed by the U.S. Senate, he will serve as U.S. ambassador to China.

The 23-page opinion, following extensive legal and historical research, concludes, “...the powers and duties of the office of Governor fall upon the lieutenant governor.” The conclusion is based on an Iowa Constitution provision addressing a governor’s resignation, which states, “...the powers and duties of the office...shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor.” Under that provision, the opinion adds, “The lieutenant governor takes on this authority because she is lieutenant governor.”

Significantly, according to Miller, Article IV, section 1 provides that “The supreme executive power of this state shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the state of Iowa.”

While the “the lieutenant governor becomes governor and has the title of Governor,” the opinion further adds that that person does not have constitutional authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor. “In other words, upon a governor’s resignation, the lieutenant governor will hold both the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. There is no vacancy to be filled,” according to the opinion.

“This opinion conveys that, in a sense, the two offices merge,” Miller said. “This is consistent with numerous cases in other states that addressed this question,” Miller added. “It is also consistent with a close reading of the Iowa governor's succession provision—Article IV, section 19 of the Iowa Constitution, which establishes a precise order of gubernatorial succession without providing for the appointment of a lieutenant governor.”

Miller's opinion notes that in all four previous instances when an Iowa governor resigned or died while in office, the lieutenant governor was always considered governor, but never appointed or named a new lieutenant governor. The opinion also concludes, “The framers intended that those in the gubernatorial line of succession be elected.”

At the federal level, prior to Congress amending the U.S. Constitution in 1967 to establish that the vice president becomes president and grants the president authority to appoint a new vice president with Congressional approval, no vice president who assumed the powers and duties of a president who died while in office appointed a new vice president.

The formal opinion departs from a public statement Miller's office issued in December, following an informal legal review in response to media inquiries, which stated the office concurred with “Governor Branstad's conclusion that...in her capacity as Governor, Governor Reynolds will have the authority to appoint a new lieutenant governor.”

The December statement was based, in part, on an Iowa Code section addressing vacancies of office holders. Miller's formal opinion concludes this statute does not apply when a governor resigns and the powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

About Attorney General Opinions

A formal attorney general opinion addresses legal questions relating to a public official's duties by interpreting laws and offering legal guidance.

While not a legal precedent, a formal attorney general opinion is similar to one and stands until a court or later opinion overrules it or new legislation is enacted to change a statute in question. Opinions are not legally binding, but courts generally give them careful consideration and deference.

Statement from Attorney General Tom Miller on AFSCME Lawsuit over Collective Bargaining Law

Miller to ask Executive Council to approve outside legal counsel to defend state

DES MOINES – Attorney General Tom Miller today announced that he will ask the Iowa Executive Council to seek outside legal counsel to defend the state against the lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of House File 291, the collective bargaining bill signed into law on Friday.

The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) Iowa Council 61 filed the lawsuit Monday in Polk County District Court.

The Executive Council, comprised of the governor, secretary of state, state treasurer, secretary of agriculture and state auditor, must approve the appointment of outside counsel to represent the state.

“As the new collective bargaining law has the potential to existentially threaten the viability of public sector unions—many of the very same organizations that have supported me in the past—I am recommending that the Executive Council seek outside legal representation to defend this lawsuit in order to avoid any questions about a potential conflict,” Miller said. “While the extraordinarily professional and skilled attorneys in my office have vigorously defended Governor Branstad and the legislature in past lawsuits involving AFSCME, I think it’s most prudent in this highly charged legal dispute to avoid any appearance of politics clouding our office’s legal representation and judgment.”

We do in NC have specific legislation about single sex charter schools. I have always questioned whether such a thing would survive a challenge under the Constitution and we did at least try to make the applicant justify the need for having one even given the statutory authorization. Ours in NC is an all-female charter school. The statute is NCGS 115C-218.45(e).

With regard to your juvenile question, we do not have anything specific but we have had mental health facilities that are private yet serving Special Ed kids and have had continuing issues around who has to pay and who is ultimately responsible for IDEA services - The private entity should be required to be an "LEA" for purposes of IDEA. It must defend any due process actions. I would also be careful about any other state and federal laws you want to apply to it - just like the charter schools - the entity needs to be subject to records laws, both privacy issues as well as public records issues: it needs to be subject to Open Meetings; and of course all other laws and constitutional provisions such as First, Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments, Title IX, ADA, ADEA, etc. etc. etc.

Just my two cents' worth.

OK experienced ones, I have not one, but two issues I'm hoping resonate . . .

1. Do any of you from charter school states have specific legislative authorization for single sex charter schools? If so, I'd love to hear if anyone has either challenged it or threatened to challenge it . . .

2. Maine has decided to do an RFP for a private entity to operate the school at the state's only juvenile corrections facility. I am resigned, but not enthusiastic, about this decision, particularly given that seventy five percent of the students in the facility have an IEP. Have any of your states gone the privatization route? What should I be doing in terms of what needs to be in the RFP and any other issues???

Yikes. So glad you are out there . . .

often feels pulled in a dozen directions at the same time, with the sense that I am just spinning my wheels trying to keep juggling all the balls in the air. PRESSURE.

I have learned that April, coincidentally, is Stress Awareness Month. Recognized since 1992, each April, health care professionals and health promotion experts across the country join forces to increase public awareness about both the causes and cures for our modern stress epidemic. We also see various tornado and severe weather drills at this time each spring, to try to prepare us for the possibility of a natural disaster. But what prepares us to deal with the PRESSURE of the practice of law?

While I'm sure each occupation has its stressors, we know all too well the mounting pressure we face in our practice, whether private practice, in house, government, or elsewhere. The demand for faster, less costly legal advice, coupled with the blessing and curse of technology that allows us to be connected and accessible 24/7 sends thousands of lawyers each year into a tailspin of stress and pressure. Add in family, health, community stressors and even the uncertainty of our national security and changes in politics and government-it's a recipe for disaster that no April tornado drill or disaster preparedness training can touch.

It is no surprise to scan the Iowa Supreme Court's disciplinary decisions and find that many lawyers who find themselves in front of the Grievance Commission have succumbed to the pressure and sought solace in controlled substances, only deepening the downward spiral. The ABA reports that more than 50% of all disciplinary cases involve impaired lawyers. Lawyers abuse alcohol at a 50-80% higher rate than the general

It just gives us an idea of how many group tickets, in addition to the season's tickets, we will need to buy. If you have questions, just call our office at (515) 697-7880.

From the President . . . .

I have a tattoo of the scales of justice on my shoulder blade. I was inspired by Robert DeNiro's tattoo sprawling across his back in Cape Fear, but I was not gutsy enough for that for my first (or any) tattoo. As a lawyer, I suppose it may seem too cutesy, or perhaps it is seen as shameless self-promotion. It is a permanent reminder, though, of the integrity of our U.S. justice system.

PCBA President Bridget Penick

The scales of justice symbolize the idea of the fair distribution of law, with no influence of bias, privilege or corruption. Given recent events in this country, I could not be more proud of our judiciary and my fellow lawyers upholding and embodying what the scales of justice represent.

I am writing this message on Valentine's Day, and I was fortunate to have a Valentine's lunch date with more than a dozen judges and justices and dozens of Polk County Bar Association lawyers. I shared a table with our speakers, Iowa Supreme Court Chief Justice Mark Cady and Iowa Court of Appeals Chief Judge David Danilson. As I chatted with them informally and then listened to their prepared remarks, I was reminded of how incredibly proud I am that Iowa has merit selection instead of judicial elections, to minimize politics swaying our scales of justice in one way or the other. As Chief Justice Cady noted, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce ranked Iowa's court system as 4th in the nation. The State of Nevada has adopted a court of appeals system mirrored after Iowa's mode.

As Chief Danilson (sort of) joked, the Iowa Court of Appeals is like the second chair lawyer at trial who does the majority of the work but gets none of the recognition. Read more (and see the tattoo).

Students wanted for Law Day contest

Each year, the Polk County Bar Association teams up with ARAG to give Polk County students in grades K through 12 a chance to get creative with the law as part of our Law Day celebration. Chief among the activities is the visual arts, music, essay, and poetry competitions.

This year's theme, The 14th Amendment: Transforming American Democracy, enables students to explore the many ways that the 14th Amendment has reshaped American law and society. Ratified during Reconstruction a century and a half ago, the Fourteenth Amendment serves as the cornerstone of landmark civil rights legislation, the foundation for numerous federal court decisions protecting fundamental rights, and a source of inspiration for all those who advocate for equal justice under law.

Students wanted for Law Day contest

chance to get creative with the law as part of our Law Day celebration. Chief among the activities is the visual arts, music, essay and poetry competition for students in grades 6 through 12.

This year's theme, The Fourteenth Amendment: Transforming American Democracy, provides the opportunity for students to explore the many ways that the Fourteenth Amendment has reshaped American law and society. Through its Citizenship, Due Process and Equal Protection clauses, this transformative amendment advanced the rights of all Americans. It also played a pivotal role in extending the reach of the Bill of Rights to the states. Ratified during Reconstruction a century and a half ago, the Fourteenth Amendment serves as the cornerstone of landmark civil rights legislation, the foundation for numerous federal court decisions protecting fundamental rights, and a source of inspiration for all those who advocate for equal justice under law.

The deadline for entries is April 10. Click here for complete details. The winning students will be honored at the PCBA Annual Meeting and Law Day Luncheon on Tuesday, May 9.

Fredrikson & Byron received a nearly perfect score of 95 percent on the 2017 Corporate Equality Index (CEI), a national benchmarking survey and report on corporate policies and practices relating to lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender (LGBT) workplace equality, administered by the Human Rights Campaign (HRC). Attorneys general from five states and the District of Columbia are seeking to intervene in a for-profit college accreditor's legal battle with the Education Department.

The group of attorneys general today asked a federal judge to let them join in the defense of the Obama administration's decision last year to terminate the accreditor's federal recognition — a rare move that amounts to a “death penalty” for the accrediting organization.

The accreditor, the Accrediting Council for Independent Colleges and Universities, is currently suing the department to block that decision. A federal judge last month declined to issue an emergency order halting the termination but the court is still considering the case.

The attorneys general, all Democrats, argue that they should be allowed to join the case “in order to defend important state interests.” They argue that ACICS approves for-profit schools in each of their respective states.

The motion was filed by the attorneys general of Massachusetts, Illinois, Maine, New York, Maryland and the District of Columbia — all of whom previously signed a letter last year urging the Obama administration to terminate recognition of ACICS.

The move by the attorneys general could prove significant if the Trump administration decides not to continue defending the Obama administration’s decision in court. It’s not yet clear how Trump's Education Department plans to proceed on the matter.

Attorneys for ACICS and the Education Department are due in court for a hearing in the case on Feb. 1.

Thomas/Nicole,

We get student consent under the following circumstances:

- Photographing students for our staff-produced newsletters/articles, which are distributed via email and posted to our website.
- Photographing students for pictures that will be on display in our building.
- Organizing a conference or event with student participants who may be photographed/video recorded by the media, PR people or other participants. An example would be the Governor's bullying prevention summits.
- Capturing photos or video of students as part of a recorded training for teachers/school administrators.

In the conference/event example, consent is handled through registration paperwork. In the other examples, a release form is used. Our agency's consent form has been updated in the last year and is attached.

Thanks,

Staci

Colleagues:

The Illinois State Board of Education (ISBE) is in the process of revising our media permission policy and related media consent forms and has determined that the creation and implementation of a standardized process is needed to specify an orderly means for obtaining and using photographs of people, including students and educators in print and digital media.

Specifically, we are interested in knowing whether your state education agency (SEA) has a standardized procedure for taking pictures of people attending conferences and posting pictures of students and educators participating in school-related activities in its press releases, social media, publications, and on its website? If so, would you please describe? Would your SEA have any model media permission policies or procedures that we might review as we revise our own? We would be interested to see state administrative rules as well, if available.

Finally, how does your SEA address privacy issues surrounding the use and publication of such personal images/photographs (e.g., Federal Educational Rights and Privacy Act (20 U.S.C. § 1232g)(FERPA))?

We very much appreciate any assistance you might provide regarding this matter.

If you have any questions, you may contact me at (312) 814-2227.

Here's what I have.

I also requested from the Oklahoma AG a copy of their opinion number 65-235, which is too old to be in full text on their website and also not on Westlaw. A journal article I was reading described it as answering "no" to the question "If the Lieutenant Governor succeeds to the Governorship (due to death, resignation, or impeachment of the Governor), does the then Governor have the authority to appoint another person to the Lieutenant Governorship?"

The person I talked to in Oklahoma said they would look for it and email me. I'll forward it when he does.

Here's the court opinion. (It doesn't say much.)

<http://www.sccourts.org/opinions/HTMLFiles/SC/27699.pdf>

And here's the proposed amendment that passed in 2012 and 2014.

http://www.scstatehouse.gov/sess120\_2013-2014/bills/446.htm

It looks mostly like what we did in 1988. One weird thing I noticed is that in the laundry list of reasons why the lieutenant governor would be "removed" (impeachment, resignation, etc.), "becoming governor" is not one of them, as some other states have said.
