Research

London School of Economics: Information Technology (ICT): Executive Power-Shifts and Implementation Consequences

Conducted research at LSE concluding that increased use of ICT in government departments results in shifts in executive power due to increased contact with voters and easily accessible political mandates.

American University: Senior Capstone: Executive Power Shifts: How they Effect Government Policy

Builds from research at LSE regarding the modernization and use of ICT in government, with the objective of determining whether such power shifts create incongruences between policy outputs and public opinion.
