

1 Ellen E. McLaughlin (Pro Hac Vice)
 E-mail: emcloughlin@seyfarth.com
 2 Noah Finkel (Pro Hac Vice)
 E-mail: nfinkel@seyfarth.com
 3 Brian Stolzenbach (Pro Hac Vice)
 E-mail: bstolzenbach@seyfarth.com
 4 Sharilee Smentek (Pro Hac Vice)
 E-mail: smentek@seyfarth.com
 5 SEYFARTH SHAW LLP
 233 South Wacker Drive, Suite 8000
 6 Chicago, Illinois 60606-6448
 Telephone: (312) 460-5000
 7 Facsimile: (312) 460-7000

8 Kristen M. Peters (SBN 252296)
 E-mail: kmpeters@seyfarth.com
 9 SEYFARTH SHAW LLP
 2029 Century Park East, Suite 3500
 10 Los Angeles, California 90067-3021
 Telephone: (310) 277-7200
 11 Facsimile: (310) 201-5219

12 Giovanna A. Ferrari (SBN 229871)
 E-mail: gferrari@seyfarth.com
 13 Chantelle C. Egan (SBN 257938)
 E-mail: cegan@seyfarth.com
 14 SEYFARTH SHAW LLP
 560 Mission Street, 31st Floor
 15 San Francisco, California 94105
 Telephone: (415) 397-2823
 16 Facsimile: (415) 397-8549

17 Kyllan Kershaw (Pro Hac Vice)
 E-mail: kkershaw@seyfarth.com
 18 SEYFARTH SHAW LLP
 1075 Peachtree Street, NE, Suite 2500
 Atlanta, GA 30309
 19 Telephone: (404) 885-1500
 20 Facsimile: (404) 892-7056

21 Counsel for Defendant
 U.S. SOCCER FEDERATION, INC.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
 CENTRAL DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

23 ALEX MORGAN, et al.,
 24 Plaintiffs,
 25 v.
 26 U.S. SOCCER FEDERATION, INC.,
 27 Defendant.

Case No. 2:19-cv-01717-RGK-AGR

DEFENDANT’S MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFFS’
 MOTION FOR PARTIAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Judge: Hon. R. Gary Klausner
 Hearing: March 30, 2020 at 9:00 a.m.
 Place: Courtroom 850

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

Page

I. Plaintiffs’ Motion Must Be Denied Based on the Federal Policy of Judicial Nonintervention in the Collective Bargaining Process. 1

II. Plaintiffs Have Not Established an Equal Pay Act Violation. 4

 A. Plaintiffs Have Not Established That U.S. Soccer Pays Them Wages at a Rate Less than It Pays Appropriate Male Comparators. 4

 B. Plaintiffs and MNT Players Do Not Work in the Same Establishment..... 9

 C. WNT and MNT Players Do Not Perform Equal Work Requiring Equal Skill, Effort, and Responsibility Under Similar Working Conditions. 11

 D. The Three Aspects of Compensation Referenced in Plaintiffs’ Motion Serve Only To Highlight the Differences Between the Two Jobs. 14

 E. Plaintiffs Have Not Shown That U.S. Soccer Is Incapable of Establishing an Affirmative Defense to Their EPA Claim..... 17

III. Plaintiffs Have Not Established Pay Discrimination in Violation of Title VII..... 20

 A. Because Plaintiffs Are Not Entitled To Summary Judgment on Their EPA Claim, They Also Are Not Entitled to Summary Judgment on Their Pay Discrimination Claim Under Title VII. 20

 B. The Court Should Not Entertain Plaintiffs’ New Legal Theory. 22

 C. Plaintiffs Have Not Established Discriminatory Intent..... 22

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

1		Page(s)
2
3	Federal Cases
4
5	Brennan v. Goose Creek Consol. Indep. Sch. Dist. ,
6	519 F.2d 53 (5th Cir. 1975)	9
7	Byrd v. Ronayne ,
8	61 F.3d 1026 (1st Cir. 1995).....	18
9	Campbell v. City of Los Angeles ,
10	903 F.3d 1090 (9th Cir. 2018)	4
11	Corning Glass Works v. Brennan ,
12	417 U.S. 188 (1974).....	3
13	Diamond v. T. Rowe Price Assocs., Inc. ,
14	852 F. Supp. 372 (D. Md. 1994).....	19
15	Grosz v. Boeing Co. ,
16	455 F. Supp. 2d 1033 (C.D. Cal. 2006)	3
17	Grubic v. Los Angeles Superior Court ,
18	2009 WL 10698377, No. CV 09-4729 CAS	1, 3
19	Hein v. Oregon Coll. of Educ. ,
20	718 F.2d 910 (9th Cir. 1983)	passim
21	Hodgson v. Robert Hall Clothiers ,
22	473 F.2d 589 (3rd Cir. 1973)	18, 19
23	Ledbetter v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. ,
24	550 U.S. 618 (2007).....	21
25	Marcoux v. State of Maine ,
26	797 F.2d 1100 (1st Cir. 1986).....	6, 12
27	Marshall v. Western Grain Co. ,
28	838 F.2d 1165 (11th Cir. 1988)	1, 2, 3
	Maxwell v. City of Tuscon ,
	803 F.2d 444 (9th Cir. 1986)	20

1 Perkins v. Rock-Ten Servs., Inc.,
 2 700 Fed. App’x 452 (6th Cir. 2017) 3, 19
 3 Pickern v. Pier 1 Imports (U.S.), Inc.,
 4 457 F.3d 963 (9th Cir. 2006) 22
 5 Portis v. First National Bank of New Albany, Miss.,
 6 34 F.3d 325 (5th Cir. 1994) 25
 7 Renstrom v. Nash Finch Co.,
 8 787 F. Supp. 2d 961 (D. Minn. 2011)..... 10
 9 Rizo v. Yovino,
 10 2020 U.S. App. LEXIS 6345 (9th Cir. Feb. 27, 2020) 18, 21
 11 Robinson v. Entex, Inc.,
 12 1990 WL 517060 (N.D. Tex. Aug. 10, 1990) 6, 7
 13 Sims-Fingers v. City of Indianapolis,
 14 493 F.3d 768 (7th Cir. 2007) 11
 15 Stanley v. U.S.C.,
 16 13 F.3d 1313 (9th Cir. 1994) 13
 17 Strag v. Board of Trustees,
 18 55 F.3d 943 (4th Cir. 1995) 5
 19 Weaver v. O.S.U.,
 20 71 F. Supp. 2d 789 (S.D. Ohio 1998), aff’d, 191 F.3d 1315 (6th Cir.
 21 1999) 14
 22 Federal Statutes
 23 29 U.S.C. § 171 1
 24 29 U.S.C. § 206(d) 4, 9
 25 29 U.S.C. § 255(a) 5
 26 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1)..... 21
 27 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(h) 20
 28

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

Regulations

29 C.F.R. § 531.40(c)..... 7

29 C.F.R. § 1620.9 8, 9

29 C.F.R. § 1620.10 6, 7

29 C.F.R. § 1620.15 11

29 C.F.R. § 1620.18(a)..... 14

29 C.F.R. § 1620.27 21

Other Authorities

Doraine Lambert Coleman, Sex in Sport, 80 LAW AND CONTEMPORARY PROBLEMS 63-126 (2017)..... 11, 12

1 I. Plaintiffs' Motion Must Be Denied Based on the Federal
2 Policy of Judicial Nonintervention in the Collective Bargaining Process.

3 Plaintiffs do not allege that their collective bargaining agreement (CBA) is being 4 applied in a discriminatory manner among bargaining unit members or contend that the 5 CBA includes facially discriminatory provisions; rather, Plaintiffs argue that their CBA is 6 discriminatory only by comparing a few cherry-picked contract terms to provisions in a
7 different CBA negotiated by a different union covering different employees who perform
8 a different job outside Plaintiffs' bargaining unit. Awarding Plaintiffs summary 9 judgment on their pay discrimination claims in these circumstances (or, indeed, denying 10 U.S. Soccer's own motion for summary judgment) would be unprecedented in American 11 jurisprudence and would be fundamentally inconsistent with federal labor law. 29 U.S.C.
12 § 171 (noting that "industrial peace and . . . the best interest of employers and employees
13 can most satisfactorily be secured by the settlement of issues between employers and 14 employees through the processes of conference and collective bargaining").

15 Although unionized employees do have a remedy under anti-discrimination laws when 16 their employers apply their CBA in a discriminatory manner or when their CBA includes 17 facially discriminatory provisions, courts should adopt the "federal policy of judicial 18 nonintervention in the collective bargaining process" when, as here, neither is the case.
19 Marshall v. Western Grain Co., 838 F.2d 1165, 1166-67, 1170-72 (11th Cir. 1988)
20 (unionized plaintiffs failed to state a claim under Title VII by complaining about 21 severance benefits that differed from those of employees outside the bargaining unit); see
22 also Grubic v. Los Angeles Superior Court, 2009 WL 10698377, No. CV 09-4729 CAS
23 (PJWx), *1, 5 (C.D. Cal. Dec. 21, 2009) (relying on Marshall to dismiss a Title VII
24 complaint filed by unionized court-certified interpreters who claimed to be paid less,
25 based on their race and national origin, than court reporters outside the bargaining unit).

26 In Marshall, the plaintiffs were unionized, and "[a]ll but one of the sixty-eight union 27 employees were black," but "[o]ut of the total number of non-union employees, only four 28 were black." 838 F.2d at 1167. All the non-union employees were paid severance after a

1 plant closure while the unionized employees were not. Id. at 1166-67. The court noted
2 that a facially discriminatory CBA and discriminatory application of a CBA are both
3 unlawful, but it held that “refusal to tamper with nondiscriminatory collective bargaining
4 agreements is necessary to promote respect for the collective bargaining process.” Id. at 5 1168-69. Accordingly, the court observed, a “collective bargaining agreement . . . should 6 not be set aside based upon the mere allegation that minority workers were treated 7 differently from non-minority workers,” noting that “bargaining unit employees are never 8 similarly situated with non-bargaining unit employees.” Id. at 1169-70 (emphasis in 9 original). The court further explained: “The unique treatment that employers give to 10 bargaining unit members is . . . reflected best by the collective bargaining agreement.
11 This agreement represents a culmination of often-extensive ‘give-and-take’ negotiations
12 between the employer and the employees’ designated representative. An employer’s
13 decision to pay severance or any other benefits cannot be understood without inquiring
14 into the substance of such negotiations.” Id. at 1170. Additionally, “employers’ and 15 unions’ faith in the ability of the collective bargaining process to provide solutions to 16 problems in labor relations greatly depend on [the federal policy of judicial]
17 nonintervention [in the collective bargaining process].” Id. Meanwhile, “refusing to 18 enforce collective bargaining agreements and . . . imposing contractual modifications on 19 parties to such agreements would drastically reduce the incentive of those parties to work
20 toward negotiated solutions. Under such a policy, parties to an agreement would face the 21 potential of their opposition turning to the courts for assistance in accomplishing goals
22 not achieved at the negotiating table. Such a result would be contrary to the well-23 established federal policy goal of fostering collective bargaining as the means of 24 resolving employer-union disputes.” Id. at 1171-72. For all these reasons, which are 25 directly applicable in this case, the Court should deny Plaintiffs’ motion, just as the 26 Eleventh Circuit rejected the plaintiffs’ claims in Marshall.

27 In fact, courts consistently reject attempts by unionized plaintiffs to compare
28 themselves to employees outside the bargaining unit, under both Title VII and the EPA.

1 Perkins v. Rock-Ten Servs., Inc., 700 Fed. App'x 452, 457 (6th Cir. 2017); Marshall, 838
2 F.2d at 1170; Grosz v. Boeing Co., 455 F. Supp. 2d 1033, 1045 (C.D. Cal. 2006); Grubic,
3 2009 WL 10698377 at *5.

4 Corning Glass Works v. Brennan, 417 U.S. 188 (1974), is not to the contrary. There,
5 the female plaintiffs held the exact same job in the exact same plant as their male
6 counterparts, but were paid a lower hourly rate for the work, dating back to the 1920s. Id.
7 at 191-192. The discriminatory set-up in that case started before the employees were 8 organized, but once they were organized by a union, the disparity was written into the 9 CBA, and it remained that way even after the EPA was passed. Id. at 192-94. The 10 Supreme Court rejected the notion that this blatant discrimination could be defended on 11 the mere basis that it had been written into a CBA. Id. at 209-10. That is not the fact
12 pattern presented here. This case does not involve a single CBA negotiated by a single 13 union covering a single bargaining unit, containing pay provisions which discriminate in 14 favor of men and against women who perform identical jobs within that bargaining unit.

15 Instead, Plaintiffs contend that certain provisions in their CBA are discriminatory
16 based entirely on selective comparison to another union's CBA covering a different
17 bargaining unit. No court has ever countenanced such a claim, and doing so would permit 18 Plaintiffs to do exactly what the court warned against in Marshall. Plaintiffs want the 19 Court to grant them victories they could not achieve at the bargaining table by rewriting a
20 few provisions in their CBA to give them additional compensation, without any regard 21 for the give-and-take at the bargaining table that delivered the CBA (and its many 22 beneficial terms for Plaintiffs) in the first place. Plaintiffs ask the Court to do this
23 notwithstanding the indisputable fact that Plaintiffs' CBA does not systematically pay
24 them less than the MNT CBA pays MNT players. (McCrary Dec. ¶ 1, Ex. 1 at ¶ 40-49.)
25 The Court should decline Plaintiffs' invitation to intervene in the collective bargaining
26 relationship between their union and U.S. Soccer by selectively rewriting the parties'
27 CBA. Plaintiffs' motion should be denied.

II. Plaintiffs Have Not Established an Equal Pay Act Violation.

The EPA is a formulaic statute. To prove a prima facie case under the EPA, Plaintiffs must establish (1) that U.S. Soccer pays them “wages . . . at a rate less than the rate at which [it] pays wages to employees of the opposite sex” (2) “for equal work on jobs the performance of which requires equal skill, effort, and responsibility, and which are performed under similar working conditions” and (3) that Plaintiffs and their male comparators work within the same “establishment.” 29 U.S.C. § 206(d). Even if Plaintiffs could prove all this, U.S. Soccer still would prevail by showing that “such payment is made pursuant to . . . a differential based on [a] factor other than sex.” Id. To prevail on summary judgment, Plaintiffs must establish their prima facie case even when viewing the facts in the light most favorable to U.S. Soccer while also demonstrating that U.S. Soccer is incapable of proving its affirmative defense when the facts are viewed in the same manner. Plaintiffs have not done this. They are not entitled to summary judgment.

A. Plaintiffs Have Not Established That U.S. Soccer Pays Them Wages at a Rate Less than It Pays Appropriate Male Comparators.

Plaintiffs do not even attempt to prove that they have been paid at a “rate less” than comparable male employees. Instead, they obfuscate and try to glide past the issue. Thirty-eight current and former WNT players have opted into this EPA collective action. A collective action is not a class action under Rule 23, in which the entire class is represented by specific plaintiffs approved by the court; rather, each plaintiff in a collective action possesses an individual claim. Campbell v. City of Los Angeles, 903 F.3d 1090, 1105 (9th Cir. 2018). As a result, establishing a prima facie case under the EPA for purposes of summary judgment requires each of the 38 Plaintiffs to show that “her wages are less than the average paid to [all] appropriate male comparator[s].” Hein v. Oregon Coll. of Educ., 718 F.2d 910, 917 (9th Cir. 1983). Appropriate male comparators are “all employees of the opposite sex performing substantially equal work and similarly situated with respect to any other factors, such as seniority, that affect wage scale.” Id. at 916 (emphasis added). “If it should turn out that [a particular Plaintiff] earns

1 more than males performing substantially equal work, it is axiomatic that the Equal Pay
2 Act does not afford her relief.” Id. (emphasis in original). Notwithstanding these clear
3 instructions from the Ninth Circuit, no Plaintiff has named an allegedly comparable male
4 employee, much less explained to the Court how her “wage rate” compares to her
5 purported comparator(s). Plaintiffs’ motion cannot be granted in the absence of this 6 information. Strag v. Board of Trustees, 55 F.3d 943, 948 (4th Cir. 1995) (“Additionally,
7 the plaintiff must identify a particular male ‘comparator’ for purposes of the inquiry, and 8 may not compare herself to a hypothetical or ‘composite’ male.”).

9 Instead of actually identifying male comparators, Plaintiffs try to show they are paid a 10 lesser wage rate than male employees by making broad comparative assertions about 11 three aspects of the 2017 WNT CBA and the 2011 MNT CBA.¹ The following three 12 points constitute all of Plaintiffs’ “evidence” supporting the claim that they have been 13 paid a lesser wage rate than comparable male employees: (1) “WNT players currently 14 only have the opportunity to receive lower per-game bonuses than MNT players have the 15 opportunity to receive for ‘wins’ and ‘ties’ in most ‘friendlies’”; (2) “WNT players also 16 only have the opportunity to receive lower bonuses than the MNT for winning World
17 Cup qualifying games, for qualifying as a team for the World Cup, and for making the 18 World Cup roster”; and (3) “WNT players further only have the opportunity to receive
19 lower rates of compensation for other non-World Cup tournaments.” (Dkt. 170 at 7.)

20 These three assertions are insufficient to show that Plaintiffs are paid a lesser wage 21 rate than comparable male employees. First, Plaintiffs’ compensation arrangement is 22 complex and multi-faceted, and these cherry-picked assertions ignore all kinds of other 23

24 ¹ Plaintiffs are not seeking summary judgment on their EPA claim for pay discrimination
25 under the 2013-2016 WNT CBA. This lawsuit was filed March 8, 2019, and the 26 limitations period for EPA claims is two years, so Plaintiffs’ claim addresses only the 27 2017 CBA unless they prove a willful violation, in which case the limitations period is 28 three years. 29 U.S.C. § 255(a). Plaintiffs disavow any notion that they are asking the Court to enter summary judgment finding a willful EPA violation. (Dkt. 170-42 at 4.)

1 compensation paid to them, or on their behalf, for their work as WNT players. “Under the 2 EPA, the term ‘wages’ generally includes all payments made to [or on behalf of] an
3 employee as remuneration for employment.” 29 C.F.R. § 1620.10 (brackets in original).
4 Even if the foregoing isolated elements of compensation could fairly be compared 5 between WNT and MNT players (they cannot), and even if Plaintiffs could proceed with 6 a claim without identifying actual male comparators (they cannot), Plaintiffs still provide 7 no legal authority suggesting that they may pick and choose among elements of their 8 overall compensation package to claim that they are paid a lesser wage rate than male
9 employees. On the contrary, see Robinson v. Entex, Inc., 1990 WL 517060, *9 (N.D. Tex.
10 Aug. 10, 1990), where the plaintiff alleged an EPA violation because her monthly salary 11 was lower than a male counterpart’s monthly salary but the court awarded judgment to 12 the employer because the plaintiff’s salary combined with her car allowance and 13 insurance benefits were, in total, higher than the man’s overall per-month compensation.
14 Cf. also Marcoux v. State of Maine, 797 F.2d 1100, 1102 n.1 (1st Cir. 1986) (applying
15 EPA analysis in a Title VII case involving a differential in retirement benefits, but noting 16 that there was no other wage difference).

17 Plaintiffs’ selective complaints about the WNT CBA ignore the fact that the CBA
18 requires U.S. Soccer to pay a $100,000 annual salary to a minimum number of “WNT
19 Contracted Players” each year. (1st King Dec. ¶ 15, Ex. 5 § 8.A.1 and Ex. A.) This salary
20 is paid even when the player does not play. For example, Plaintiff Mallory Pugh was not 21 selected for the team’s Olympic qualifying roster earlier this year, yet she continued to 22 receive her annual salary during the entire qualifying tournament. (2nd King Dec. ¶ 11, 23 Ex. 2.) Plaintiff Alex Morgan is receiving 75% of her $100,000 annual salary even 24 though she cannot play because she is pregnant, and Plaintiff Morgan Brian is receiving 25 her $100,000 annual salary in the form of severance through the end of March even 26 though her contract was terminated in December and she has not played with the team
27 since then. (Id.) No MNT player receives a salary from U.S. Soccer, and they are paid
28 only when they are called into camp to play. (1st King Dec. ¶ 8, Ex. 1 pp. 43-45.)

1 The WNT CBA also required U.S. Soccer to pay a $10,000 signing bonus to 23
2 individual players. (1st King Dec. ¶ 15, Ex 5 § 21.B., Ex. A; Roux Dep. 145.) The MNT
3 CBA did not require any such thing. (1st King Dec. ¶ 8, Ex. 1.)

4 The WNT CBA (as modified by the parties) also required U.S. Soccer to pay the 5 members of the 2019 Women’s World Cup roster almost $80,000 each, as additional 6 compensation for playing in five post-tournament friendlies marketed as a “Victory
7 Tour” (which otherwise would have been paid as normal friendlies). (1st King Dec. ¶ 15,
8 Ex. 5 § 19.F., Ex. A; 2nd King Dec. ¶ 14.) No such payment is called for by the MNT
9 CBA. (1st King Dec. ¶ 8, Ex. 1.)

10 The WNT CBA also requires U.S. Soccer to pay the WNT’s union: (i) $350,000
11 annually for the right to use WNT players’ likenesses in certain ways, (ii) sell-out and 12 enhanced attendance bonuses based on certain levels of paid attendance at home
13 friendlies; (iii) bonuses for improved television ratings; and (iv) bonuses based on 14 achieving certain levels of revenue from sponsorships. (1st King Dec. ¶ 15, Ex. 5 §
15 15.C.1.e., 19.A, 19.B., 19.C.2., 19.C.3.) The union (whose actions are controlled by the 16 players) can direct U.S. Soccer to pay these amounts directly to the players, (Id. § 21.C.; 17 see also Roux Dep. 31-34, Roux Ex. 5 § 6), but regardless of whether it does so, such 18 payments to the union are “wages” for EPA purposes. 29 C.F.R. § 1620.10 (“all
19 payments made . . . on behalf of” an employee constitute wages under the EPA); 29
20 C.F.R. § 531.40(c) (money paid directly to union on employees’ behalf properly
21 considered wages under the Fair Labor Standards Act, to which the EPA is an 22 amendment). There are no such payments in the MNT CBA. (1st King Dec. ¶ 8, Ex. 1.)

23 In sum, each Plaintiff fails to compare herself to even a single actual MNT player and 24 also fails to mention any of this other compensation that no MNT player receives.
25 Plaintiffs cannot win summary judgment on an EPA claim this way.² Hein, 718 F.2d at 26 917; Robinson, 1990 WL 517060 at *9; 29 C.F.R. § 1620.10.

27 _____
28 ² Plaintiffs do sneak this sentence into their brief: “WNT players receive a lower rate of pay than the MNT players even when all fringe benefits are taken into consideration,” but

1 Meanwhile, Dr. Justin McCrary, a labor economist at Columbia University Law
2 School, has considered Plaintiffs’ own (flawed) methodology for calculating what WNT
3 players supposedly would have earned if they had been covered by the MNT CBA (even 4 though Plaintiffs have not submitted the calculation in support of their motion) and has 5 performed a reverse analysis using that same methodology. (McCrary Dec. ¶ 2, Ex. 2 at ¶ 6 49.) His analysis shows that MNT players would have been paid more under the WNT
7 CBA than they received under their own. (McCrary Dec. ¶ 2, Ex. 2 ¶ 49-52.) Under 8 Plaintiffs’ own theory of the case, U.S. Soccer is somehow engaged in sex-based pay
9 discrimination against the WNT and the MNT at the very same time! This, of course, is a
10 logical impossibility and further demonstrates that Plaintiffs are not entitled to summary
11 judgment. Hein, 718 F.2d at 916 (reversing judgment for plaintiff because plaintiff
12 earned more than one male comparator but less than another: “Under this reasoning . . .
13 [the employer] prima facie discriminates against [an alleged male comparator] on the 14 basis of sex at the same time it discriminates against [the plaintiff] on the basis of sex.
15 We do not believe that the Equal Pay Act is subject to such manipulation.”)

16 Plaintiffs and the MNT players have very complex and very different compensation
17 arrangements, and Plaintiffs cannot show that they receive a “lesser wage rate” merely by 18 pointing to a few provisions in those overall agreements, especially without identifying 19 any MNT players and providing the Court with a comparative analysis of their overall 20 “wage rates.” For this reason alone, Plaintiffs’ motion should be denied.

21
22
23
24 _____
25 they cite no supporting evidence for this assertion. (Dkt. 170 at 7.) Although they drop a 26 footnote referencing an expert report filed with the Court in another context, (Dkt. 170 at 27 7 n.5), this cannot be considered in support of their summary judgment motion because it 28 is not mentioned in Plaintiffs’ Statement of Uncontroverted Facts (and it would be controverted if it had been). In any event, Plaintiffs never explain what this unsupported sentence is supposed to mean, what “benefits” they reference, or who their male comparators are.

1 B. Plaintiffs and MNT Players Do Not Work in the Same Establishment.

2 Even if Plaintiffs could show that they were paid lesser wages than appropriate male
3 comparators (which they cannot), they still cannot win summary judgment on their EPA
4 claim without also proving, based on undisputed facts, that they work in the same
5 “establishment” as those male comparators. 29 U.S.C. § 206(d). They have not done so.

6 Plaintiffs begin by mischaracterizing an EEOC regulation on the “establishment”
7 issue. (Dkt. 170 at 12-13, citing 29 C.F.R. § 1620.9(b), for the proposition that the 8 entirety of U.S. Soccer is a “single establishment” under the EPA because it is “[a]
9 central administrative unit [that] hire[s] all employees, set[s] wages, and assign[s] the 10 location of employment”.) Plaintiffs ignore the portions of that regulation stating that an 11 “establishment” under the EPA ordinarily “refers to a distinct physical place of business
12 rather than to an entire business or ‘enterprise’ which may include several separate places
13 of business.” 29 C.F.R. § 1620.9(a). Paragraph (b) of the regulation also says that while 14 “unusual circumstances may call for two or more distinct physical portions of a business 15 enterprise being treated as a single establishment[, b]arring unusual circumstances . . . the 16 term ‘establishment’ will be applied as described in paragraph (a) of this section.” Id. §
17 1620.9(b). The example of “unusual circumstances” described in Paragraph (b) is a 18 situation where a central administrative unit hires all the employees, sets their wages,
19 assigns their location of employment, frequently interchanges them, and gives them
20 daily duties that are virtually identical and performed under similar working conditions.
21 Id. Similarly, Plaintiffs cite one Fifth Circuit opinion for the proposition that a single 22 establishment exists among multiple physical locations when there is “centralized control
23 of hiring, wages, work assignments, scheduling, and daily job duties.” (Dkt. 170 at 13, 24 citing Brennan v. Goose Creek Consol. Indep. Sch. Dist., 519 F.2d 53 (5th Cir. 1975).) In 25 reality, that case involved male and female janitors working at multiple schools in a 26 district whose centralized administration hired all janitors, determined their wages, 27 assigned them to the schools where they worked, switched them back and forth from 28 one school to another, and in large part controlled their schedules and daily duties, which

1 did not differ from school to school. Id. at 56. In short, a multi-location “establishment”
2 occurs only in unusual situations involving far more centralized control than Plaintiffs
3 have shown here, along with employee interchange that is not present here.

4 Here, each team’s Head Coach decides which players make the team, players never 5 interchange between the two teams, and the day-to-day activities of each team are 6 overseen by the Head Coach and assistant coaching staff of that team. (1st Gulati Dec. ¶
7 62; 1st King Dec. ¶ 3-4.) Meanwhile, aside from the teams’ friendly matches and MNT
8 World Cup qualifiers, the “location of employment” (i.e., where the games are played)
9 and the identity of the opponent is not even determined by U.S. Soccer at all. (2nd King
10 Dec. ¶ 15.) Even with respect to friendlies, each team’s separate Head Coach and General
11 Manager gives input into the selection of venue, and selection of each team’s opponents
12 for these matches is driven largely by the Head Coach. (Id.; Hopfinger Dec. ¶ 1.)
13 Moreover, once the venue is determined, each team’s separate Team Administrator
14 generally chooses the team hotel, and along with the coaching staff, organizes the team’s
15 activities. (2nd King Dec. ¶ 4, 5.)

16 The fact that each team’s separate budget is rolled up into the organization’s overall
17 budget, the fact that the organization has a single marketing department or sells its overall
18 intellectual property rights as a bundle, and the fact that certain aspects of the two teams’
19 employment terms are ultimately approved by the same person or group of people are 20 insufficient facts to declare as a matter of law that the players all work in a single 21 establishment. Plaintiffs have not cited a single authority to support this proposition, and 22 it cannot be the case without having the exception swallow the entire rule: use of the term
23 “establishment” in the statute would lose all meaning because nearly every business
24 would be a single establishment. Renstrom v. Nash Finch Co., 787 F. Supp. 2d 961, 965
25 (D. Minn. 2011). A few ordinary commonalities in management and corporate oversight 26 do not turn physically and operationally separate business units into a single 27 establishment. For this additional reason, Plaintiffs are not entitled to summary judgment.
28

1 C. WNT and MNT Players Do Not Perform Equal Work Requiring Equal
2 Skill, Effort, and Responsibility Under Similar Working Conditions.

3 Even Plaintiffs acknowledge that the level of “skill” required for each job in question
4 (WNT player and MNT player) must be “measured by the experience, ability, education,
5 and training required to perform a job.” (Dkt. 170 at 15 (emphasis added), citing 29
6 C.F.R. § 1620.15.) The overall soccer-playing ability required to compete at the senior 7 men’s national team level is materially influenced by the level of certain physical
8 attributes, such as speed and strength, required for the job. (Morgan Dep. 212-13; Ellis
9 Dep. 291-92.) As Plaintiff Carli Lloyd’s testimony admits, the WNT could not compete
10 successfully against senior men’s national teams because competing against 16- or 17-
11 year-old boys “is about as old as [the WNT] can go.” (Lloyd Dep. 103-04, 106-07; Lloyd 12 Dep. Ex. 15.) Plaintiffs ask the Court to conclude that the ability required of an WNT
13 player is equal to the ability required of an MNT player, as a relative matter, by ignoring
14 the materially higher level of speed and strength required to perform the job of an MNT
15 player. The EPA does not allow this. Sims-Fingers v. City of Indianapolis, 493 F.3d 768, 16 771 (7th Cir. 2007) (EPA does not ensure equal pay for jobs requiring “proportional” 17 skill level). Nor is it a “sexist stereotype” to recognize the different levels of speed and 18 strength required for the two jobs, as Plaintiffs’ counsel contend. On the contrary, it is 19 indisputable “science,” as even Plaintiff Lloyd described it in her testimony. (Lloyd Dep.
20 103-05.) See also Doraine Lambert Coleman, Sex in Sport, 80 LAW AND CONTEMPORARY
21 PROBLEMS 63-126 (2017) (available at: <https://scholarship.law.duke.edu/lcp/vol80/iss4/5>)
22 (describing the scientific basis for “the average 10-12% performance gap between elite 23 male and elite female athletes,” which includes differences between males and females in 24 “skeletal structure, muscle composition, heart and lung capacity including VO2 max, red 25 blood cell count, body fat, and the absolute ability to process carbohydrates,” and noting, 26 by way of example, that “no matter how great the great Katie Ledecky gets . . . she will 27 never beat Michael Phelps or his endurance counterparts in the pool”).
28

1 Plaintiffs have cited no case (there is none) suggesting that two jobs requiring 2 materially different levels of strength and speed, where those physical attributes are 3 fundamental to the job, may constitute comparable jobs for EPA purposes. Instead,
4 Plaintiffs cite a case involving male and female prison guards, arguing that “the 5 requirements of the EPA apply just as strongly in cases involving sex-segregated jobs.”
6 (Dkt. 170 at 10, citing Marcoux, 797 F.2d at 1102.) That case is not on point. The 7 plaintiffs in Marcoux were female prison guards, but their male comparators also worked 8 side-by-side with female prison guards in the same location doing the same exact job. Id.
9 There are no women on the MNT and no men on the WNT. Regardless, the point of the 10 EPA is not to compare a plaintiff’s skills to those of her alleged male comparator(s), but 11 to compare the plaintiff’s job requirements to the job requirements of her alleged male
12 comparator(s). Hein, 718 F.2d at 914 (“A prima facie case is not made by showing that 13 the employees of opposite sex possess equivalent skills. The statute explicitly applies to 14 jobs that require equal skills, and not to employees that possess equal skills.”) Even 15 assuming there are WNT players who could perform the job of MNT player (contrary to 16 Plaintiffs’ own testimony), that is not the point. The point is that the job of MNT player 17 (competing against senior men’s national teams) requires a higher level of skill based on 18 speed and strength than does the job of WNT player (competing against senior women’s 19 national teams). In Marcoux, by contrast, while the female plaintiffs guarded female 20 prisoners and their male comparators, along with some women, guarded only male
21 prisoners, the two jobs nonetheless required the same skills. 797 F.2d at 1107. Neither set
22 of guards was required to beat the world’s most elite soccer players in a soccer match,
23 nor to do anything else requiring different levels of strength or speed; the skills required
24 for both jobs were “supervision, observation, and disciplining” prisoners. Id. at 1107 n.5.
25 There is no legal authority under the EPA supporting the proposition that a job requiring 26 employees to compete against the most elite female athletes in a sport entails equal skill
27 to a job requiring employees to compete against the most elite male athletes in that same
28 sport. This is not the proper domain of the statute.

1 All the foregoing facts about the speed and strength required for the two different jobs
2 are undisputed (which means U.S. Soccer is entitled to summary judgment), but there is
3 also evidence that MNT players face tougher competition, even on a relative basis. (2nd
4 Gulati Dec. ¶ 10.) There is a significantly deeper pool of competition in men’s 5 international soccer than there is in women’s international soccer, even when assessing
6 the issue in relative terms. (Id.) Although Plaintiffs may dispute that, their dispute means
7 only that this is not an additional reason to grant U.S. Soccer’s own motion. It
8 nonetheless provides an additional basis for denying Plaintiffs’ motion.

9 Plaintiffs also fail to demonstrate, as a matter of undisputed fact, that the job of WNT
10 player and the job of MNT player carry equal “responsibility.” In this regard, Plaintiffs 11 essentially just note that they and the MNT players are all soccer players. (Dkt. 170 at 10-12 11.) This is true, but it is not enough to meet the “equal responsibility” requirement under 13 the EPA. MNT players have responsibility for competing in multiple soccer tournaments
14 with the potential for generating a total of more than $40 million in prize money for U.S.
15 Soccer every four years. (McCrary Dec. ¶ 2, Ex. 2 at ¶ 5.) WNT players compete in only 16 one soccer tournament every four years that has the potential to generate any prize money
17 at all, and most recently that amounted to one-tenth of the amount the MNT players could 18 generate. (Id.) At the same time, the MNT plays in matches watched on television by 19 many millions more people than the WNT. (Moses Dec. Ex. 1.) The average viewership
20 for MNT matches over the first three years of the current WNT CBA was nearly five 21 times as high as that for WNT matches, excluding matches in the Women’s World Cup.
22 (Id.) As for the World Cup, when the MNT last qualified, the ratings for its four World
23 Cup matches were watched by more viewers than all the WNT matches in 2019
24 combined, Women’s World Cup included. (Id.) In games for which U.S. Soccer holds the 25 television broadcast rights (and therefore can monetize the ratings), the MNT has 26 averaged more than three times as many viewers per game since 2017. (Id.) All these 27 facts demonstrate that the job of MNT player carries more responsibility within U.S.
28 Soccer than the job of WNT player, from an EPA standpoint. Stanley v. U.S.C., 13 F.3d

1 1313, 1321-23 (9th Cir. 1994) (noting that “the relative amount of revenue generated
2 should be considered in determining whether responsibilities and working conditions are
3 substantially equal”); Weaver v. O.S.U., 71 F. Supp. 2d 789, 800-01 (S.D. Ohio 1998)
4 (plaintiff’s coaching job not equal to male coach’s job because his sport was more
5 popular and generated more revenue), aff’d, 191 F.3d 1315 (6th Cir. 1999).

6 Finally, “working conditions” under the EPA includes the “surroundings” of the job.
7 29 C.F.R. § 1620.18(a). In this respect, MNT players routinely play matches (important
8 World Cup qualifiers, in particular) throughout Mexico, Central America, and the 9 Caribbean. (1st King Dec. ¶ 69, 77, Ex. 21.) The WNT does not. (Id. at ¶ 68, 77, Ex. 20.)
10 Opposing fan hostility encountered in these MNT road environments, especially in 11 Mexico and Central America, is unmatched by anything the WNT must face while trying 12 to qualify for an important tournament. (2nd King Dec. ¶ 16.) Even the hostility of fans at 13 home crowds for the MNT in some friendlies can be unlike anything the WNT faces.
14 (Id.) This is all evidence of substantially different jobs under the EPA.

15 Plaintiffs are not entitled to summary judgment on their EPA claims because a
16 reasonable juror could conclude that the job of MNT player requires materially different
17 skill and more responsibility than Plaintiffs’ job does, while also taking place under 18 materially different working conditions. Simply put, they are materially different jobs
19 that cannot be compared under the EPA.

20 D. The Three Aspects of Compensation Referenced in Plaintiffs’

21 Motion Serve Only To Highlight the Differences Between the Two Jobs.

22 As noted previously, Plaintiffs seek summary judgment by pointing to three isolated 23 aspects of their overall compensation package, rather than their total remuneration, which 24 is not permitted under the EPA. That said, even if the Court could legitimately evaluate 25 just those three aspects of their compensation, Plaintiffs still would not have established 26 unequal pay for equal work as a matter of law.

27 To begin with, Plaintiffs point to compensation for “non-World Cup tournaments.”
28 The only “non-World Cup tournaments” addressed in the 2017 WNT CBA are the

1 Olympic Games, the SheBelieves Cup, and the Four Nations Tournament. (1st King Dec.
2 Ex. 5 at Ex. A.) The Four Nations Tournament, however, is a misnomer; it is actually
3 called the Tournament of Nations. (2nd King Dec. ¶ 17.)

4 There is no dispute that Plaintiffs “have the opportunity,” in their words, to earn more
5 from success in the Olympic Games than any MNT player can earn from any “non-World
6 Cup tournament,” and male soccer players are not paid by U.S. Soccer for playing in the 7 Olympics at all. (1st King Dec. ¶ 10; 2nd King Dec. ¶ 11, 12.) So Plaintiffs certainly do
8 not receive lesser pay when it comes to the Olympics, even assuming it is equal work.

9 Turning then to the SheBelieves Cup, it is a four-year-old, annual, four-team, three-10 game round-robin tournament of friendly matches created by U.S. Soccer in 2016 to 11 enhance the profile of women’s soccer in the United States and to arrange for the WNT to 12 play three friendly matches against solid competition. (2nd Gulati Dec. ¶ 14.)

13 The Tournament of Nations was created by U.S. Soccer in 2017 for the same
14 purposes, and it follows the same format. (Id.) Unlike the SheBelieves Cup, it is played
15 only in years when there is no Women’s World Cup or Olympic Games, so it has been 16 played only in 2017 and 2018 so far. (Id.)

17 The MNT’s non-World Cup tournaments mentioned in the 2011 CBA (the Gold Cup, 18 Copa America, and the Confederations Cup) are not at all comparable to the SheBelieves
19 Cup or Tournament of Nations. The Gold Cup and Copa America are official continental
20 championships organized by Concacaf or CONMEBOL while the FIFA Confederations
21 Cup was a tournament for which the MNT could have qualified only by first winning the 22 Gold Cup or the World Cup. (2nd Gulati Dec. ¶ 13.) To win any of these three 23 tournaments, the MNT would have needed to play at least two more matches than the 24 WNT plays in the SheBelieves Cup and Tournament of Nations and would have needed
25 to win at least two single-elimination knockout-round matches. (2nd King Dec. ¶ 18.)
26 The Gold Cup and Copa America involve twelve to sixteen participants, and the 27 Confederations Cup involved eight, compared to only four in the WNT competitions. (1st
28 Gulati Dec. ¶ 27; 2nd Gulati Dec. ¶ 11, 13-14.) Each of the MNT tournaments also pays

1 seven figures in prize money to the victor whereas no team wins prize money for the
2 SheBelieves Cup or Tournament of Nations. (2nd King Dec. ¶ 18.) Further, the MNT’s
3 tournaments weigh more heavily in FIFA rankings, and there is simply more prestige
4 involved in winning an official continental championship or the Confederations Cup than 5 there is in winning the SheBelieves Cup or Tournament of Nations. (2nd Gulati Dec. ¶
6 15.) As Plaintiff and union representative Kelley O’Hara testified, it “makes sense” that 7 she is paid more for the Women’s World Cup than the SheBelieves Cup because: (i) the 8 SheBelieves Cup occurs every year whereas the Women’s World Cup is every four years;
9 (ii) there are more teams in the latter; (iii) and the Women’s World Cup is “the most 10 prestigious tournament” she plays in because, according to her, it occurs only once every 11 four years, more teams play in it, and the team must earn qualification for it. (O’Hara 12 Dep. 173-74.) All these differentiators (and more) easily explain why playing in the 13 SheBelieves Cup and Tournament of Nations are not “equal work” requiring the same
14 pay received by MNT players for playing in their “non-World Cup tournaments.” (2nd 15 Gulati Dec. ¶ 15.)

16 In fact, no one ever suggested in collective bargaining that playing in the SheBelieves
17 Cup or Tournament of Nations should be compensated like playing in the Gold Cup,
18 Copa America, or FIFA Confederations Cup. (2nd King Dec. ¶ 19.) Indeed, while 19 Plaintiffs complained about alleged pay differentials for friendlies and the Women’s 20 World Cup in the Complaint and in their EEOC charges, these documents make no
21 mention of the idea that the SheBelieves Cup or Tournament of Nations should be 22 compensated like one of the MNT’s tournaments. (Dkt. 1; Egan Dec. Ex. 1.) Plaintiffs 23 even filed a brief with the Court earlier in this case taking the position that games in the 24 SheBelieves Cup and Tournament of Nations are equivalent to ordinary MNT friendlies, 25 not the Gold Cup, Copa America, or Confederations Cup. (Roux Dep. 163-64; Roux Dep.
26 Ex. 19 at 1-2; Dkt. 70-1.) Plaintiffs’ newly concocted argument that the SheBelieves Cup
27 and Tournament of Nations must be paid like MNT tournaments to achieve equal pay
28 under the EPA is a lawyer’s invention that should be rejected by the Court out of hand.

1 Turning then to other friendly matches, it is true that the MNT bonuses for beating a
2 Top 25 opponent and for drawing any opponent in a friendly are higher than WNT
3 bonuses for beating a Top 25 opponent or drawing a friendly, but the WNT bonus for 4 beating an opponent ranked lower than 25th in a friendly is higher than the MNT bonus
5 for beating an opponent ranked lower than 25th. (1st King Dec. ¶ 8, Ex. 1 at Ex. A p. 7-
6 11, ¶ 15, Ex. 5 at Ex. A.) Plaintiffs cannot claim that lower bonuses for friendlies
7 constitute sex-based pay discrimination when some of their friendly bonuses are actually 8 higher than the MNT's, but more than that, when one accounts for the salaries paid to 9 Contracted WNT players, which MNT players do not receive, the WNT CBA actually 10 pays players more for friendlies than the MNT CBA does, using Plaintiffs' own theory.
11 (McCrary Dec. ¶ 2, Ex. 2 ¶ 13-14.) Once again, there is no basis for Plaintiffs' claim of 12 lesser pay for equal work, even assuming the work is equal under the law (it is not).

13 Finally, there is the Women's World Cup. The MNT CBA included the possibility of 14 higher compensation for winning the 2018 World Cup than WNT players received for 15 winning the 2019 Women's World Cup. Playing in these different tournaments, however,
16 is not "equal work" under the law. The men's tournament is substantially more popular,
17 the prize money available to U.S. Soccer for winning it is $34 million higher, the process
18 for qualifying is longer and more arduous, the number of teams who participate is larger,
19 and Plaintiffs do not contend that they could win it. (1st Gulati Dec. ¶ 21, 22, 50-61, Exs.
20 1-11.) Plaintiffs are simply not entitled to summary judgment.

21 E. Plaintiffs Have Not Shown That U.S. Soccer Is Incapable
22 of Establishing an Affirmative Defense to Their EPA Claim.

23 As described in U.S. Soccer's own motion for summary judgment, there is substantial 24 evidence showing that differences in historical and potential revenue generation, along
25 with events that occurred in the course of collective bargaining negotiations, were factors
26 "other than sex" that led to the differences in compensation terms about which Plaintiffs 27 now complain in their own motion.
28

1 To begin with, it is undisputed that the prize money FIFA pays the federation that 2 wins the men’s World Cup is far larger than the prize money it pays the federation that
3 wins the Women’s World Cup, and it is undisputed that the compensation for MNT
4 players associated with the World Cup was negotiated with this substantial FIFA prize
5 money in mind. (1st Gulati Dec. ¶ 50-61, 71-72, 75-76.) It is also undisputed that when
6 the WNT’s union demanded equal bonuses for World Cup play during 2016 contract
7 negotiations, U.S. Soccer declined, not because the WNT is comprised of women, but 8 because paying such bonuses without receipt of concomitant prize money would “break”
9 U.S. Soccer financially. (1st King Dec. ¶ 30.) This is clear evidence that U.S. Soccer
10 considered the vast difference in potential revenue from winning the two different 11 tournaments when negotiating the two teams’ compensation for those tournaments, and 12 this revenue differential is a “job-related” “factor other than sex” (i.e., “a factor related to 13 the work [Plaintiffs are] currently performing”) that prevents Plaintiffs from winning 14 summary judgment. Rizo v. Yovino, 2020 U.S. App. LEXIS 6345, *26-27 (9th Cir. Feb.
15 27, 2020). As the court noted in Rizo, the EPA was not designed to address broad-based 16 societal issues, such as “fewer opportunities for training, education, skills development, 17 and experience” (or, for example, the higher global popularity of men’s soccer compared 18 to women’s soccer or the larger amount of prize money FIFA pays out as a result). Id. at 19 *23-24. “Though Congress knew the cause of [the] earnings gap was multi-factorial
20 [when it passed the EPA], it kept its solution simple. . . . The Act’s limited goal was to 21 eliminate only the purest form of sex-based wage discrimination: paying women less
22 because they are women.” Id. at *24. (emphasis in original); see also Byrd v. Ronayne, 61
23 F.3d 1026, 1034 (1st Cir. 1995) (no pay discrimination where male lawyer generated
24 more revenue for the firm than female lawyer); Hodgson v. Robert Hall Clothiers, 473
25 F.2d 589, 597 (3rd Cir. 1973) (employer lawfully paid male employees more than female 26 employees because it derived greater economic benefit from the male employees’ work).

27 Further, when it comes to friendlies, U.S. Soccer actually has paid Plaintiffs more for 28 friendlies than it has paid the MNT players, according to Plaintiffs’ own flawed theory,

1 (McCrary Dec. Ex. 2 ¶ 13-14), but even if that were not the case, substantial evidence
2 shows that U.S. Soccer initially proposed lower win and draw bonuses for certain WNT
3 friendlies because it historically generated more revenue from MNT friendlies. (1st King
4 Dec. ¶ 21, Ex. 7, 1st Gulati Dec. ¶ 70, 75, Ex. 16; 1st Irwin Dec. Ex. 1 at 10.) In fact, this
5 trend has continued during the first three years of the current WNT CBA: MNT friendlies
6 have generated, on average, an additional $200,000 per game more than WNT friendlies
7 over that period. (2nd Irwin Dec. Ex. 1 at 7.) In any event, U.S. Soccer has presented
8 evidence that no one knows whether the current WNT CBA ultimately would have 9 contained the same friendly bonus structure as the MNT agreement if the WNT’s union
10 had been willing to forego its demands for other substantially costly items the MNT
11 players do not enjoy. (Rapinoe Dep. 223; 1st Gulati Dec. ¶ 79, 80.) Given all the 12 evidence showing that the differentials in friendly bonuses resulted from revenue-
13 generation differentials and tradeoffs in bargaining, Plaintiffs cannot be granted summary
14 judgment on U.S. Soccer’s affirmative defense. Hodgson, 473 F.2d at 597; Diamond v. T.
15 Rowe Price Assocs., Inc., 852 F. Supp. 372, 396 (D. Md. 1994) (employee who 16 negotiated a salary with “little or no annual bonus” had no pay discrimination claim when 17 male employees received incentive compensation she did not).

18 Similarly, there is ample evidence in the record showing that the MNT’s “non-World
19 Cup tournaments” carry the potential for generating millions of dollars in prize money
20 whereas the WNT’s non-World Cup tournaments do not. (McCrary Dec. Ex. 2 ¶ 36.) It is 21 also undisputed that the WNTPA’s representatives (which included some Plaintiffs 22 themselves) never asked U.S. Soccer during bargaining to compensate them for friendly
23 tournaments in the same manner as the MNT players are compensated for their 24 tournaments. (2nd King Dec. ¶ 19.) Again, these facts are sufficient to warrant denial of 25 Plaintiffs’ summary judgment motion on U.S. Soccer’s affirmative defense. Perkins, 700
26 F. App’x at 457; Diamond, 852 F. Supp. at 396.

27 All told, the record evidence shows that: (1) WNT players have been paid more in 28 relationship to the revenue generated by their matches than MNT players; (2) WNT

1 players have been paid more total compensation than MNT players; (3) some WNT
2 players have been paid more under the WNT CBA than they would have been if they had
3 been paid under the MNT CBA, according to Plaintiffs’ own theory; and (4) MNT
4 players generally would have been paid more under the WNT CBA than they actually
5 were paid under their own, according to Plaintiffs’ own theory. (McCrary Dec. Ex. 1 ¶
6 35, Ex. 2 ¶ 31, 49-52, 54; 2nd Irwin Dec. Ex. 1 at 11-16.) These facts are sufficient to 7 warrant granting U.S. Soccer’s motion own for summary judgment, so they certainly are 8 sufficient to deny Plaintiffs’ motion.

9 III. Plaintiffs Have Not Established Pay Discrimination in Violation of Title VII.

10 A. Because Plaintiffs Are Not Entitled To Summary Judgment on Their 11 EPA Claim, They Also Are Not Entitled to Summary Judgment on 12 Their Pay Discrimination Claim Under Title VII.

13 A plaintiff alleging sex-based pay discrimination under Title VII is not obliged to 14 show that she is performing equal work for lesser pay, if she alleges and proves in some 15 other way that her pay is lower than it otherwise would be because of her sex. Hein, 718
16 F.2d at 916 n.5; 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1). Plaintiffs, however, pled in the Complaint
17 that U.S. Soccer violated Title VII and the EPA in the same manner—by paying them
18 “less than members of the MNT for substantially equal work.” (Dkt. 1 ¶ 4.) In such cases, 19 the Ninth Circuit instructs courts to analyze both claims using the EPA framework.
20 Maxwell v. City of Tuscon, 803 F.2d 444, 446 (9th Cir. 1986). In other words, a plaintiff
21 pursuing a pay discrimination claim based on allegedly lesser pay for purportedly equal
22 work under both statutes cannot prevail under Title VII if she cannot prevail under the 23 EPA. This makes sense, given the language of Title VII, which simply bars employers
24 from engaging in pay discrimination “because of . . . sex.” 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1).
25 Although such discrimination may take different forms, if a plaintiff contends that she is 26 paid less because of her sex on the specific ground that male employees are paid more for 27 performing substantially equal work, then her failure to prove these facts necessarily 28 defeats her claim. In addition, Title VII incorporates the EPA’s affirmative defenses.

1 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(h). In short, because Plaintiffs are not entitled to summary judgment
2 on their EPA claim (as explained in Section II, supra), they also are not entitled to 3 summary judgment on their Title VII claim.³

4 Even though the Title VII limitations period reaches back farther than the EPA
5 limitations period, this matters not for purposes of Plaintiffs' motion. Not only does their 6 motion fail to provide facts or argument about the period before the current CBA with 7 anything close to the specificity required to justify summary judgment, but all the same
8 arguments from Section II apply to that period, as well. None of the four Title VII class
9 representatives identified comparable male employees, much less compared their wages
10 to those employees under the 2013-2016 CBA, and the jobs were no more equal in skill,
11 responsibility, or working conditions back then. Furthermore, the historical revenue
12 disparities were even greater when the parties signed the CBA covering the 2015-2016
13 time period, and in bargaining for that CBA the union never (from its opening proposals
14 onward) asked for the same compensation terms as those found in the MNT CBA. (1st
15 Gulati Dec. ¶¶ 66, 68, 70-73, Ex. 14, 15; Langel Dep. 71-77, 163-64, 188-89, 201-02, Ex.
16 14, 21, 25; 1st King Dec. ¶¶ 17, 23-24, 33, 38-40, 43, Ex. 1, 6, 8, 10, 13-15, 17.) At the 17 same time, the union asked for (and obtained) many provisions the MNT players did not 18 enjoy. (1st Gulati Dec. ¶¶ 66, 68, Ex. 14, 15; Langel Dep. 71-77, 163-64, 188-89, 201-02, 19 Ex. 14, 21, 25; 1st King Dec. ¶¶ 7-8, 13, 14, 15, 17, 23-24, 33, 38-40, 43, Ex. 1, 3-6, 8, 10,
20 13-15, 17.) Plaintiffs have not established unequal pay for equal work under either CBA
21 in effect during the Title VII class period.

22
23 ³ The reverse is not true. Even a plaintiff who establishes an EPA violation may not be 24 able to establish a Title VII violation because discriminatory intent is required under Title
25 VII but not the EPA. Rizo, 2020 U.S. App. LEXIS 6345 at *13 (“Unlike Title VII, the 26 EPA does not require proof of discriminatory intent.”), quoting Ledbetter v. Goodyear 27 Tire & Rubber Co., 550 U.S. 618, 640 (2007) (“‘[T]he EPA and Title VII are not the 28 same,’ in part because ‘the EPA does not require . . . proof of intentional discrimination.’”). Plaintiffs cite 29 C.F.R. § 1620.27 for the proposition that “any violation of the Equal Pay Act is also a violation of Title VII,” (Dkt. 170 at 19), but this regulation is trumped by controlling Supreme Court and Ninth Circuit precedent.

1 B. The Court Should Not Entertain Plaintiffs’ New Legal Theory.

2 In their summary judgment papers, Plaintiffs present a new claim under Title VII for 3 the first time: “In contrast to the EPA, plaintiffs alleging sex-based compensation
4 discrimination under Title VII need not establish that they are performing equal work for 5 unequal pay.” (Dkt. 170 at 25.) They argue that they have proven an intent to pay them 6 less because they are women, regardless of whether they are paid a lesser wage rate for 7 equal work. (Dkt. 170 at 19-25.) As noted, this is not the claim alleged by Plaintiffs in the 8 Complaint, (Dkt. 1 ¶ 4), and it is not appropriate for them to raise it for the first time at 9 the summary judgment stage. Pickern v. Pier 1 Imports (U.S.), Inc., 457 F.3d 963, 969
10 (9th Cir. 2006) (affirming summary judgment for defendant where the district court
11 declined to consider alleged violations of the ADA raised for the first time in the context
12 of summary judgment, even though the plaintiff alleged other violations of the same
13 statute in her complaint). Plaintiffs’ new claim should be rejected on that basis alone.

14 C. Plaintiffs Have Not Established Discriminatory Intent.

15 Even if the Court allows Plaintiffs to proceed with their newfound theory of 16 discrimination, raised for the first time on summary judgment, they have not established
17 that they are entitled to summary judgment on that claim. To prevail on their motion,
18 Plaintiffs must show, based on the facts when viewed in the light most favorable to U.S.
19 Soccer, that any reasonable juror would conclude that U.S. Soccer intentionally paid 20 Plaintiffs less money than it otherwise would have, simply because they are women. This 21 is an impossible conclusion to reach given all the facts pointing in the opposite direction.

22 Under the current WNT CBA, U.S. Soccer has paid the WNT players and their union
23 almost 2.5 times as much as the MNT players and their union. (2nd Irwin Dec. Ex. 1 at 24 11.) Using Plaintiffs’ own methodology, multiple WNT players have been paid more 25 under the current WNT CBA than they would have been paid under the MNT collective 26 bargaining agreement. (McCrary Dec. ¶ Ex. 1 at ¶ 50-52.) Again, using Plaintiffs’ own
27 methodology, MNT players would have been paid more under the WNT CBA than under 28 their own. (McCrary Dec. ¶ 2, Ex. 2 at ¶ 50-52.) WNT players are paid more for playing

1 in the Olympics than MNT players are paid for participating in any tournament other than
2 the World Cup. (1st King Dec. ¶ 8, 15, Exs. 1, 15; 2nd King Dec. ¶ 12-13.) U.S. Soccer
3 has rejected overtures by the MNT’s union to pay male players for the Olympics at all.
4 (1st King Dec. ¶ 11.) The WNT has been paid more as a percentage of revenue generated
5 by the team than the MNT. (McCrary Dec. ¶ 2, Ex. 2 at ¶ 41-45.) An impeccably-
6 credentialed labor economist has reviewed the WNT CBAs, compared them to the MNT
7 CBA, and concluded that “the MNT CBA is not systematically better than the WNT
8 CBAs.” (McCrary Dec. ¶ 2, Ex. 2 at ¶ 61.) All four Class Representatives have been paid
9 more than any MNT player during the class period. (2nd Irwin Dec. Ex. 1 at 17-24.)

10 Meanwhile, U.S. Soccer has done much to raise the profile of women’s soccer in this 11 country and globally. (2nd Gulati Dec. ¶ 14, 16; Rapinoe Dep. 297, Ex. 32.) U.S. Soccer
12 has for years advocated to FIFA for increased prize money for the Women’s World Cup
13 and continues to do so today. (2nd Gulati Dec. ¶ 16.) U.S. Soccer also pays WNT players
14 two different annual salaries, plus benefits, for playing in the NWSL because supporting 15 the league in this way is a benefit to the players themselves. (2nd Gulati Dec. ¶ 5, 16 and 16 Ex. 1; see also Sauerbrunn Dep. Ex. 7.)

17 In the face of all these facts showing that Plaintiffs do not have a less favorable CBA
18 than the MNT players and have many contract provisions that are more favorable than 19 those found in the MNT CBA, Plaintiffs ask the Court to conclude that U.S. Soccer has 20 engaged in intentional sex discrimination as a matter of undisputed fact. This is absurd.
21 Nevertheless, Plaintiffs contend that they are entitled to summary judgment on their Title
22 VII pay discrimination claim for the following reasons, each of which has no merit.

23 First, Plaintiffs claim that current U.S. Soccer President Carlos Cordeiro has admitted
24 that WNT players do not have equal opportunities or enjoy equal pay and that U.S.
25 Soccer has done nothing about this “longstanding practice of gender discrimination.”
26 (Dkt. 170 at 20-21.) This misrepresents the content (and the relevance) of Cordeiro’s
27 statements. Cordeiro never said that U.S. Soccer denied equal opportunities to WNT
28 players; rather, he spoke about the fact that the Women’s World Cup generates less

1 revenue than the men’s World Cup and the fact that there are no other competitive
2 tournaments paying out substantial prize money for WNT players. (Cordeiro Dep. 52-55, 3 58-61.) This, too, was Cordeiro’s point when he mentioned during his campaign for 4 President a desire to work towards equal pay for the WNT—a desire to see more
5 opportunity for the WNT to play in competitive matches that generate more revenue,
6 which in turn could lead to higher compensation. (Id.) FIFA determines the prize money
7 for the Women’s World Cup, and it is FIFA and Concacaf (and, on occasion,
8 CONMEBOL) who sponsor the tournaments that carry substantial prize money for MNT
9 players, not U.S. Soccer. (1st Gulati Dec. ¶ 18, 21, 25, 31, 34, 45.) Meanwhile, as 10 evidenced by things like the very existence of the SheBelieves Cup and pushing for 11 greater prize money for the winner of the Women’s World Cup, U.S. Soccer has been at 12 the forefront of trying to create more opportunities for women’s soccer in the United
13 States and globally. (2nd Gulati Dec. ¶ 5, 14, 16; Rapinoe Dep. 297, Ex. 32.) Cordeiro’s
14 statements are not admissions that U.S. Soccer has intentionally discriminated against 15 Plaintiffs by paying them less money because of their sex. Indeed, they could not be,
16 when the facts actually show that the WNT CBA is not a less favorable CBA than the 17 one covering the MNT and has actually paid them more.

18 Second, Plaintiffs also mischaracterize former President Gulati’s testimony.
19 According to Plaintiffs, he testified that U.S. Soccer used a “sexist stereotype” (referring 20 to scientific facts about speed and strength that are acknowledged even by Plaintiffs) to 21 justify paying WNT players less than MNT players. (Dkt. 170 at 22.) Gulati never 22 testified that these differences were a reason for U.S. Soccer’s compensation decisions;
23 he merely testified that they are one reason why the two jobs in question are materially
24 different jobs for purposes of the anti-discrimination laws. (Gulati Dep. 134.) U.S. Soccer
25 continues to advocate that point. (Section II.C., supra.) This is not a Title VII violation.

26 Finally, Plaintiffs contend that U.S. Soccer outside counsel Russell Sauer once told 27 the WNT’s union that “the specific reason” U.S. Soccer “would not agree to an equal 28 system of compensation between the WNT and the MNT was that ‘market realities are

1 such that women do not deserve equal pay,” while at the time, U.S. Soccer supposedly 2 knew the WNT had generated more revenue than the MNT over the prior year, such that
3 “market realities” could not, in fact, support the “discriminatory treatment” of WNT
4 players. (Dkt. 170 at 22-23.) Plaintiffs contend that Sauer’s remark was an “unabashed 5 discriminatory statement” akin to telling a female employee that “she would never be 6 worth as much as a man to the bank because she was a woman,” and telling her “she 7 would be paid less because she was a woman,” Portis v. First National Bank of New
8 Albany, Miss., 34 F.3d 325, 329 (5th Cir. 1994). (Dkt. 170 at 29.) This is wrong as both a
9 factual and a legal matter. Sauer and Tom King (who also was present) both deny that 10 Sauer made the remark attributed to him by Plaintiffs (and even Plaintiff Megan Rapinoe 11 could not say for certain that Sauer made it), so this allegedly “uncontroverted fact” is 12 very much controverted. (Sauer Dec. ¶ 3-4; King Dep. 54-56; Rapinoe Dep. 110-15.)
13 Regardless, when Sauer referenced “market realities” as an explanation for the friendly
14 and World Cup bonuses contained in U.S. Soccer’s mid-2016 “pay-for-play” proposal, he 15 cited historical differences in revenue generation, attendance, and television ratings
16 between the two teams. (Sauer Dec. ¶ 4.) This is a far cry from saying that a “woman
17 would never be worth as much as a man . . . because she [is] a woman,” as Plaintiffs’
18 allege. It is merely pointing to undisputed factors other than sex as a basis for U.S.
19 Soccer’s contract proposals, and the existence of these factors is undisputed. (1st Gulati
20 Dec. ¶ 70-72, 75-77, Ex. 16; Moses Dec. Ex. 1.)

21 Plaintiffs’ argument that U.S. Soccer engaged in sex-based pay discrimination as a 22 matter of undisputed fact is without merit. Plaintiffs’ motion should be denied in its 23 entirety.

24 Dated: March 9, 2020

Respectfully submitted,

U.S. SOCCER FEDERATION, INC.

27 By: /s/Brian Stolzenbach